1. The Devil uſually beginneth with the fantaſie and appetite, and repreſenteth ſome worldly, fleſhly thing, as very pleaſant and deſirable. 2. Next that, he cauſeth this complacency to intice the thoughts; ſo that they are much and oft in thinking on this pleaſure. 3. Next, that the will is drawn into a liking of it, and he wiſheth he might injoy it (whether it be riches, or pleaſant dwellings, or pleaſant company, or pleaſant meats or drinks, or fleſhly accommodations, or apparel, or honor, or command, or eaſe, or luſt, or ſports and recreations, or whatever elſe.) 4. Next that, the underſtanding is drawn into the deſign, and is caſting and contriving how it may be obtained, and all lawful means are firſt conſidered of, that if poſſible, the buſineſs might be accompliſhed without the hazard of the Soul. 5. Next to that, Endeavours are uſed to that end, by ſuch means as are ſuppoſed lawful, and the Conſcience quieted with the conceit of the harmleſneſs and ſecurity. 6. By this time the man is ingaged in his carnal cauſe and courſe, and ſo the difficulty of returning is increaſed: And the inclination of the heart groweth ſtronger to the ſenſual pleaſure than before. 7. And then he is drawn to proſecute his deſign by any means, how ſinful ſoever; if it be poſſible, making himſelf believe by ſome reaſonings or other, that all is lawful ſtill, or if the caſe be too palpable to be ſo cloaked, Conſcience, at laſt, is caſt aſleep, and ſeared, and ſtupified, that it may be ſilent under all; till either Grace or Vengeance awake the Sinner, and make him amazed at his madneſs and ſtupidity. This is the moſt uſual method of the Hearts relapſe to poſitive evil.

§. 10. 2. And by ſuch degrees doth the Heart decline from the love of God and Goodneſs: As 1. The thoughts are diverted to ſome carnal vanity that is overloved. And the thoughts of God are ſeldomer and ſhorter, than they were wont to be. 2. And at the ſame time the thoughts of God do grow leſs ſerious and pleaſing, and more dead and lifeleſs. 3. And then the means which ſhould kindle love, are uſed with more dulneſs, and remiſneſs, and indifferency. 4. And then Conſcience being galled with the guilt of wilful omiſſions and commiſſions (being acquainted with the fleſhly deſigns of the heart,) doth raiſe a ſecret fear of Gods diſpleaſure. And this being not ſtrong enough to reſtrain the man from ſin, doth make his ſin greater, and maketh him very backward to draw near to God, or ſeriouſly to think of him, or call upon him; and turneth love into terror and averſation. 5. And if God do not ſtop and recover the Sinner, he will next grow quite aweary of God, and out of love with a holy life, and change him for his worldly fleſhly pleaſures. 6. And next that, he will entertain ſome Infidel, or Atheiſtical, or Libertine Doctrine, which may quiet him in his courſe of ſin, by juſtifying it, and will conform his judgment to his heart. 7. And next that, he will hate God, and his ways, and Servants, and turn a Perſecutor of them; till vengeance lay him in Hell, where pain and deſperation will increaſe his hatred; but his fleſhly pleaſure, and malicious perſecution ſhall be for ever at an end.

§. 11. 3. Backſliders in Life and practice, do receive the firſt infection at the heart, and the life declineth no further than the heart declineth: But yet I diſtinguiſh this ſort from the other, as the effect from the cauſe, and the rather, becauſe ſome few do much decline in heart, that yet ſeem to keep much blameleſneſs of life in the eye of Men. And it is uſually done by theſe degrees.

§. 12. 1. In the Mans backſliding into poſitive ſin (as ſenſuality or worldlineſs) the heart being prepared as before. 1. The judgment doth reaſon more remiſly againſt ſin, than it did before; and the will doth oppoſe it with leſs reſolution, and with greater faintneſs and indifferency. 2. Then the ſinner taſteth of the bait, and firſt draweth as near to ſin as he dare, and imbraceth the occaſions and opportunities of ſinning, while yet he thinketh to yield no further. And in this caſe, he is ſo long diſputing with the Tempter, and hearkening to him, and gazing on the bait, till at laſt he yieldeth; and having long been playing at the pits brink, his violent luſt or appetite doth thruſt him in. 3. When he hath once ſinned (againſt knowledge) he is troubled a while, and this he taketh for true Repentance: And when he is grown into ſome hope, that the firſt ſin is forgiven him, he is the bolder to venture on the like again; and thinketh, that the ſecond may be as well forgiven as the firſt. 4. In the ſame order he falleth into it again and again, till it come to a cuſtom. 5. And by this time he loveth it more, and wiſheth it were lawful, and there were no danger by it. 6. And then he thinketh himſelf concerned to prove it lawful to quiet Conſcience, that it may not torment him; and therefore he gladly heareth what the juſtifiers of his ſin can ſay for it, and he maketh himſelf believe that the Reaſons are of weight. 7. And then he ſinneth without remorſe.

§. 13. 2. So in Mens backſliding from the practice of Religion. 1. The heart is alienated and undiſpoſed as aforeſaid. 2. And then the life of the duty doth decay, and it dwindleth towards a dead Formality; like a Body in a Conſumption, the vivid complexion, and ſtrength, and activity decay. 3. Next this, he can frequently omit a duty, eſpecially in ſecret where no man knoweth it; till by degrees he grow more ſeldom in it. 4. All this he taketh for a pardoned infirmity, which conſiſteth with a ſtate of Grace; and therefore he is little troubled about it. 5. Next this, he loſeth all the life and comfort of Religion, and miſſeth not any duty when he hath omitted it, but is glad that he ſcapeth it, and when it is at an end, as an Ox is when he is out of the Yoak. 6. Next he beginneth to hearken to them that ſpeak againſt ſo much ado in Religion, as if it were a needleſs unprofitable thing. 7. And if God forſake him, he next repenteth of his former diligence, and ſetleth himſelf, either in a dead courſe of ſuch cuſtomary lip-ſervice as doth coſt him nothing, or elſe in utter worldlineſs and ungodlineſs, and perhaps at laſt in malignity and perſecution.

§. 14. III. Though the Signs or Symptoms of Declining may be gather'd from what is ſaid already, I ſhall add ſome more. 1. You are declining when you grow bolder with ſin, or with the occaſions of it, and temptations to it, than you were in your more watchful ſtate. 2. When you make a ſmall matter of thoſe inward corruptions and infirmities, which once ſeemed grievous to you, and almoſt intollerable. 3. When you ſettle in a courſe of Profeſſion or Religiouſneſs, that putteth your fleſh to little coſt, in labor, reproach or ſuffering from the ungodly, but leave out the hard and coſtly part, and ſeem to be very Religious in the reſt. 4. When you are quiet and contented in the daily cuſtomary uſe of Ordinances, tho' you find no profit or increaſe in

Signs of declining.

Grace by it, or Communion with God. 5. When you grow ſtrange to God and Jeſus Chriſt, and have little converſe with him in the Spirit; and your thoughts of him are few and cold, and lifeleſs, and your Religion lieth all in converſing with good Men, and good Books, and outward duties. 6. When you grow neglecters of your hearts, and ſtrangers to them, and find little work about them from day to day, either in trying them, or watching them, or ſtirring them up, or mortifying their corruptions; but your buſineſs in Religion is moſt abroad, and in outward exerciſes. 7. Yea, though your own hearts, and duties be much of your care and thoughts, you are on the loung hand, if the Wonders of Love and Grace in Chriſt have not more of your thoughts, or if you ſet not your ſelves more to the ſtudy of a Crucified and Glorified Chriſt, than of your own diſtempered hearts. 8. All is not well with you, when Spiritual helps and advantages are leſs reliſhed and valued, and you grow more indifferent to the Sermons, and Prayers, and Sacraments, which once you could not live without; and uſe them but as bare Duties for neceſſity, and not as Means, with any great hope of benefit and ſucceſs. 9. When you grow too regardful of the eye of man, and too regardleſs of the Eye of God; and are much more careful about the words and outſide of your Prayers and Diſcourſes, than the Spirit, and inward part and manner of them; and dreſs your ſelves accurately when you appear abroad, as thoſe that would ſeem very good to men, but go at home in the ſordidſt garb of a cold and careleſs heart and life. 10. When you grow hotteſt about ſome controverted ſmaller Matters in Religion, or ſtudious of the intereſt of ſome private opinion and party which you have choſen, more than of the intereſt of the common Truths and cauſe of Chriſt. 11. When in joyning with others, you reliſh more the fineneſs of the ſpeech, than the Spirit, and weight, and excellency of the Matter, and are impatient of hearing of the wholſomeſt Truths, if the Speaker manifeſt any perſonal infirmity in the delivery of them. And are weary and tired, if you be not drawn on with novelty, variety, or elegancy of Speech. 12. When you grow more indifferent for your company, and ſet leſs by the company of ſerious godly Chriſtians than you did, and are almoſt as well pleaſed with common company and diſcourſe. 13. When you grow more impatient of reproof for ſin, and love not to be told of any thing in you that is amiſs; but love thoſe beſt that highlieſt applaud you; 14. When the renewing of your Repentance is grown a lifeleſs curſory work: When in preparation for the Lords day, or Sacrament, or other occaſions, you call your ſelves to no conſiderable account, or make no greater a matter of the ſins which you find on your account, than if you were almoſt reconciled to them. 15. When you grow more uncharitable and cenſorious to Brethren that differ from you in tolerable points; and leſs tender of the names or welfare of others, and love not your Neighbour as your ſelves, and do not as you would be done by. 16. When you grow leſs compaſſionate to the ungodly World, and leſs regardful of the common intereſt of the Univerſal Church, and of Jeſus Chriſt throughout the Earth, and grow more narrow private ſpirited, and confine your care to your ſelves, or to your party. 17. When the hopes of Heaven, and the love of God cannot content you, but you are thirſty after ſome worldly contentment and grow eager in your deſires, and the World groweth more ſweet to you, and more amiable in your eyes.

1 Cor. 7. 31. 18. When ſenſe, and appetite, and fleſhly pleaſure is grown more powerful with you, and you make a great matter of them, and cannot deny them, without a great deal of ſtriving and regret, as if you had done ſome great exploit, if you live not like a Beaſt. 19. When you are more proud and impatient, and are leſs able to bear diſeſteem, and ſlighting, and injuries from Men, or Poverty, or Sufferings for Chriſt; and make a greater matter of your loſſes, or croſſes, or wrongs, than beſeemeth one that is dead to the fleſh, and to the World. 20. Laſtly, When you had rather dwell on Earth than be in Heaven, and are more unwilling to think of death, or to prepare for it, and expect it, and are leſs in love with the coming of Chriſt, and are ready to ſay of this ſinful life in fleſh, It is good to be here. All theſe are ſigns of a declining ſtate, tho' yet you are not come to apoſtacy.

§. 15. But the ſigns of a mortal damnable ſtate indeed, are found in theſe following degrees. 1. When a man had rather have worldly proſperity, than the favor and fruition of God in Heaven. 2. When the intereſt of the fleſh can do more with him, than the intereſt of God and his Soul, and doth more rule and diſpoſe of his heart and life. 3. When he had rather live in ſenſuality, than in holineſs: And had rather have leave to live as he liſt, than have a Chriſt and holy Spirit to ſanctifie and cure him, or at leaſt, will not be cured on the terms propoſed in the Goſpel. 4. When he loveth not the means that would recover him (as ſuch.) The nearer you come to this, the more dangerous is your caſe. Signs of a graceleſs ſtate.

§. 16. And theſe following ſigns, are therefore of a very dangerous ſignification. 1. When the pleaſure of ſinful proſperity and delights, doth ſo far over-top the pleaſures of holineſs, that you are under trouble and wearineſs in holy duties, and at eaſe and merry, when you have your ſinful delights. 2. When no perſwaſion of a Miniſter or Friend, can bring you ſo throughly to repent of your open ſcandalous ſins, as to take ſhame to your ſelves in a free confeſſion of them (even in the open Aſſembly, if you are juſtly called to it) to condemn your ſelves, and give warning to others, and glorifie the moſt holy God: But you will not believe that any ſuch diſgraceful confeſſion is your duty, becauſe you will not do it. 3. When you cannot bring your hearts to a full reſolution to let go your ſin; but though Conſcience worry and condemn you for it, you do but ſleightly purpoſe hereafter to amend, but will not preſently reſolve. 4. When you will not be perſwaded to conſent to the neceſſary effectual means of your recovery, as to abſtain from the bait and temptation and occaſion of ſin. Many a drunkard hath told me, he was willing to be reformed; but when I have deſired them then to conſent to drink no Wine or Ale for ſo many Months, and to keep out of the place, and to commit the Government of themſelves for ſo many Months to their Wives, or ſome other Friend that liveth with them, and to drink nothing but what they give them, they would not conſent to any of this, and ſo ſhewed the hypocriſie of their profeſſed willingneſs to amend. 5. When ſin becometh eaſie, and the Conſcience groweth patient with it, and quiet under it. 6. When the judgment taketh part with it, and the tongue will plead for it, and juſtifie or extenuate it, inſtead of repenting of it. Dangerous ſigns of impenitency.

Theſe are dangerous ſigns of an impenitent unpardoned miſerable Soul. And the Man is in a dangerous way to this, 1. When he hath plunged himſelf into ſuch ingagements to ſin, that he cannot leave it, but it will coſt him very dear: As it will be his ſhame to confeſs it, or his undoing in the World to forſake it, or a great deal of coſt and labor muſt be loſt, which his ambitious or covetous projects have coſt him: It will be hard breaking over ſo great difficulties. 2. When God letteth him alone in ſin, and proſpereth him in it, or doth not much diſturb him, or afflict him. This alſo is a dangerous caſe.

§. 17. By all this you may perceive, that thoſe are no ſigns of a Backſliding ſtate, which ſome poor Chriſtians False ſigns of declining.

Christians are afraid are such. As, 1. When poverty necessitateth them to lay out more of their time, and thoughts, and words about the labors of their Callings, than some richer persons do. 2. When age or sickness causeth their memories to decay; so that they cannot remember a Sermon so well as hereto fore. 3. When age or sickness taketh off the quickness and vigor of their spirits, so that they have not the lively affections in Prayer, or holy Conference, or Meditation, or Reading, or Hearing, as formerly they had. But (though they are as much as ever resolved for God against sin and vanity, yet) they are colder and duller, and have less zeal and fervency, and delight in holy exercises. 4. When age, or weakness, or melancholy, hath decayed or confounded their Imaginations, and ravelled their Thoughts, so that they cannot order them, and command them, as formerly they could. 5. And when age or melancholy hath weakned their parts and gifts; so that they are of slower Understandings, and unabler in Prayer, or Preaching, or Conference to express themselves than heretofore. All these are but bodily changes, and such hinderances of the Soul as depend thereon, and not to be taken for signs of a Soul that declineth in holiness, and is less accepted of God.

Dir. 2. §. 18. Direct. 2. When you know the marks of a Backslider, come into the light, and be willing to know your selves, whether this be your condition, or not, and do not foolishly cover your disease. Inquire whether it be with you, as in former times, when the Light of God did shine upon you, and you delighted in his ways: When you hated sin, and loved holiness, and were glad of the company of the heirs of life; When the Word of God was pleasant to you, and when you poured out your Souls to him in Prayer and Thanksgivings: When you were glad of the Lords day, and were quickned and confirmed under the Teaching and Exhortation of his Ministers: When you took worldly wealth and pleasures, as childish toys and fooleries, in comparison of the Contents of holy Souls: When you hungred and thirsted after Christ and Righteousness; and had rather have been in Heaven to injoy your God, and be free from sinning, than to injoy all the pleasures and prosperity of this World. And when it was your daily business to prepare for death, and to live in expectation of the Everlasting Rest, which Christ hath promised. If this were once your case, inquire whether it be so still? Or, what alterations are made upon your hearts and lives?

Dir. 3. §. 19. Direct. 3. If you find your selves in a Backsliding case, by all means indeavor the awakening of your Souls, by the serious consideration of the danger and misery of such a state. To which end I shall here set some such awakening thoughts before you (for security is your greatest danger.)

§. 20. 1. Consider that to fall back from God, was the sin of the Devils. They are Angels that kept not their first estate, but left their own habitations, and are now reserved in chains under darkness, to the judgment of the great day, Jude 6. And shall they entice you into their own condemnation?

§. 21. 2. It was the sin of our first Parents Adam and Eve, to revolt from God, and lose their holiness. And is there any sin that we should more carefully avoid, than that which all the World hath so much suffered by? Every one of the Creatures that you look on, and every pain and misery you feel, doth mind you of that sin, and call to you to take heed by the warning of your first Parents, that you suffer not your hearts to be drawn from God.

§. 22. 3. It is a part of Hell that you are chusing upon Earth. Depart from me ye cursed, is the sentence on the damned, Matth. 25. 41. & 7. 23. And will you damn your selves by departing from God, and that when he calleth you and obligeth you to him? To be separated from God, is one half the misery of the damned.

§. 23. 4. You are drawing back toward the case that you were in, in the days of your unconverted state. And what a state of darkness, and folly, and delusion, and sin, and misery was that? If it were good or tolerable, why turned you from it? And, why did you so lament it? And why, did you so earnestly cry out for deliverance? But if it were as bad as you then apprehended it to be, Why do you again turn towards it? Would you be again in the case you were? Would you perish in it? Or, would you have all those heart-breakings and terrors to pass through again? May I not say to you, as Paul to the Galatians? O foolish sinners! who hath bewitched you? that you are so soon turned back? Who have seen that of sin, and of God, and of Christ, and of Heaven, and of Hell as you have done? Gal. 3. 1, 2, 3, 4.

§. 24. 5. Yea, it is a far more doleful state that you are drawing towards, than that which you were in before. For the guilt of an apostate is much greater than if he had never known the Truth. And his recovery is more difficult, and of smaller hope: Because he is twice dead, and plucked up by the root, Jude 12. 2 Pet. 2. 20, 21, 22. For if after they have escaped the pollutions of the World, through the knowledge of the Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, they are again intangled thereon and overcome, the later end is worse with them than the beginning: For it had been better for them, not to have known the way of righteousness, than after they have known it, to turn from the holy Commandment delivered unto them. But it is happened unto them, according to the true Proverb: The Dog is turned to his own vomit again, and the Sow that was washed to her wallowing in the mire, Heb. 10. 26, 27. For if we sin wilfully (by Apostacy) after that we have received the knowledge of the truth, there remaineth no more sacrifice for sins, but a certain fearful looking for of judgment, and fiery indignation which shall devour the adversaries I know this speaketh only of total apostacy from Christ (such being worthy of far sorer punishment, than he that despised Moses Law, v. 28, 29.) But it is a terrible thing to draw towards so desperate a state. A habit is easier introduced upon a negation than a privation; in him that never had it, than in him that hath totally lost it.

§. 25. 6. What abundance of experience do you sin against in your Backsliding? You have had experience of the evil of sin, and of the smart of Repentance, and of the deceitfulness of all that can be said for sinning; and of the goodness of God, and of the safety and sweetness of Religion: And will you sin against so great experience? If your horse fall once into a Quicksand, he will scarce be forced into it again. And will you be less wise?

§. 26. 7. What abundance of Promises and Covenants, which you have made to God, do you violate in your Backsliding? How often in your fears, and dangers, and sicknesses, at Sacraments and days of humiliation, have you bound your selves afresh to God! And will you forget all these, and sin against them?

§. 27. 8. By what multitudes of Mercies hath God obliged you? Mercies before your Repentance, and Mercies that drew you to repent, and Mercies since? How mercifully hath he kept you out of Hell? How mercifully hath he born with you in all your sins? And maintained you while you provoked him? And pardoned all that you have done against him (if you were truly penitent Believers!) How mercifully hath he taught you, and sanctified you, and comforted you, and plentifully provided for you? And yet do you forsake him, and return to folly? For which of all his Mercies is it, that you thus unworthily requite him? Can you remember how he hath dealt with you, and not be ashamed of your Back- Mic. 6. 5, 6, 7.

ſlidings? Doth it not melt your heart to look back on his Love, and to think of your ungrateful dealing?

§. 28. 9. Nay what a multitude of preſent Mercies doſt thou run away from? Doth not thy Conſcience tell thee, that it is ſafer and better for thee to be true to Chriſt, than to return to ſin? Wilt thou take thy leave of thy God, and thy Redeemer, and thy Comforter? Wilt thou quit thy title to pardon and protection, and all the promiſes of Grace? Wilt thou bid farewel to all the comforts of a Saint? Doſt thou not tremble to think of ſuch a day? Thou forſakeſt all theſe when thou forſakeſt God.

§. 29. 10. Yea, look before thee Man, and conſider what greater things are promiſed thee, than yet thou ever didſt enjoy. Chriſt is conducting thee to eternal happineſs in the ſight of God. And wilt thou forſake thy Guide, and break away from him, and quit all thy hopes of everlaſting life?

§. 30. 11. Conſider for what it is, that thou art about to run ſo great a hazard? Is it not for ſome worldly gain or honour, or ſome fleſhly pleaſure, ſport or eaſe? And haſt thou not known long ago what all theſe are? What have they done for thee? Or what will they ever do? Can any thing in the World be more cauſleſs and unreaſonable, than thy forſaking God, and turning back from the way of holineſs. Will the world or ſin give more for thee, than God will? Or be better to thee here and hereafter? What wouldſt thou have in God, or in thy Saviour, that thou thinkeſt wanting in him? Is it any thing that the world can make up? Which hath nothing in it ſelf but what is from him? What wrong hath God, or his ſervice done thee, that thou ſhouldſt now forſake him and turn back? For thy Souls ſake, Man, think of ſome reaſonable anſwer to ſuch Queſtions, before thou venture thy ſelf upon a courſe which thou haſt found ſo bad and perilous heretofore? Let all the malice of Earth or Hell, ſay the worſt it can againſt God and Holineſs, it ſhall never juſtifie thy revolt!

§. 31. 12. Conſider what abundance of labor and ſuffering is all loſt, if thou fall away from Chriſt. Is all thy hearing, and meditation, and Prayer, come to this? Is all thy ſelf-denial and ſufferings for Chriſt and godlineſs come to this. Heb. 10. 32, 33, 34. Call to remembrance the former days, in which after ye were illuminated, ye indured a great fight of afflictions, partly, while ye were made a gazing ſtock both by reproaches and afflictions, and partly, whilſt ye became companions of them that were ſo uſed.—Caſt not away therefore your confidence, which hath great recompence of reward. You ſhould have let Chriſt alone, if you would not follow him to the end: He is leſs fooliſh that ſitteth ſtill, than he that firſt tireth himſelf, and then turneth again. The idle beggar is not ſo fooliſh, as the Husbandman that will Plough and Sow, and at laſt loſe his crop for want of the labor to reap it, and carry it home. Shall all thy pains and ſufferings be loſt at laſt, for nothing.

§. 32. 13. God is not ſo forward to caſt you off, who hath juſt cauſe: And why then ſhould you be forward to turn from him? If he had, what had become of you long ago? Yea what abundance occaſion have you given him, when he never gave you any at all? Thy ſins have teſtified and cryed againſt thee? Abuſed mercies have witneſſed againſt thee? And yet he hath not caſt thee off. Satan hath ſtood up before God to accuſe thee, and glad he would be to ſee thee utterly forſaken of God, and yet he hath not utterly forſaken thee: Even while thou art forſaking him, he is protecting and ſupporting thee, and providing for thee? Did he forſake thee when thou waſt in ſickneſs, want and danger? If he had, thou hadſt not now been here. And wilt thou begin and run away from him? What if Chriſt ſhould offer thee a Bill of Divorce, and ſay [Seeing thou haſt ſo little mind of me, or of thy ſervice, take thy courſe, and ſeek another Maſter, I diſcharge thee from all thy Relations to me, follow thy own way, and take what thou getteſt by it.] Would this be welcome tidings to thee? Or durſt thou accept of it, and be gone?

§. 33. 14. If thou do turn back for the pleaſures of the fleſh, or the preferments or profits of the World, thou wilt have leſs pleaſure in them now, than thou hadſt heretofore, or than the unconverted have. For they that ſin in the dark, do not know their danger, and therefore ſin not with ſo much terror, as thou wilt hereafter. Thou haſt known the danger, thou haſt confeſt the folly; the Reaſons of Gods Word will never be forgotten, nor thy convictions ever totally blotted out: Thou wilt be remembring the ancient kindneſſes of Chriſt, and thy former purpoſes, and promiſes, and ways; and thou wilt be thinking both of the days that are paſt, and the days that are to come, and foreſeeing thy terrible account: So that thou wilt ſin in ſuch terrors, that thou wilt have a taſte of Hell in the very exerciſe of thy ſin, and be tormented before the time. And will the World and Sin, be worth the injoying on ſuch terms as theſe.

In the Vandals Perſecution, Epidophorus an Apoſtate was the moſt cruel Perſecutor; at laſt it came at his turn to torment Merita, that had Baptized him, who ſpred before them all the Linnens in which he was Baptized, ſaying, Hæc te accuſabunt dum majeſtas venerit judicantis. Cuſtodientur diligentia mea ad teſtimonium tuæ perditiones, ad mergendum te in abyſſum putei ſulphurantis. Hæc te acrius perſequentur flammantem gehennam cum cæteris poſſidentem—— Quid facturus es miſer cum jervi Patris familias ad cænam regiam congregare cœperint invitatos? Ligate eum manibus pedibuſque, &c. Hæc & alia Merita dicente, igne conſcientiæ ante ignem æternum obmuteſcens Epidophorus torrebatur. Victor. Utic. p. 466.

§. 34. 15. Either thou hopeſt to recover from thy Backſliding by a ſecond Repentance, or elſe thou purpoſeſt to go on. If thou ſhouldſt be ſo happy, as to be recovered, doſt thou know with how much pain and terror it is like to be accompliſhed? When thou thinkeſt of thy Backſlidings, and what thou haſt done in revolting after ſuch Convictions, and Promiſes, and Mercies, and Experiences, thou wilt be very hardly kept from deſperation. Thou wilt read ſuch paſſages, as Heb. 6. 4, 5, 6. & 10. 26, 27, 28, 29. with ſo much horror, that thou wilt hardly be perſwaded that there is any hope: Thou wilt be ready to think that thou haſt ſinned againſt the Holy Ghoſt, and that thou haſt trampled underfoot the Blood of the Covenant, and done deſpite to the Spirit of Grace. And thou wilt think, that there is no being twice born again! Or, if thou be reſtored to life, thou wilt hardly ever be reſtored to thy comforts here, if thy Backſliding ſhould be very great. But indeed, the danger is exceeding great, leſt thou never be recovered at all, if once thou be twice dead, and plucked up by the roots, Jude 6. And leſt God do finally forſake thee! And then how deſperate will be thy caſe?

§. 35. 16. Is not the example of Backſliders very terrible, which God hath ſet up for the warning of his Servants, as Monuments of his wrath? Luke 17. 32. Remember Lots wife, ſaith Chriſt, to them that are about to loſe their eſtates, or goods, or lives, by ſaving them? How frightful is the remembrance of a Cain, a Judas, a Saul, a Joas, 2 Chron. 24. 2. a Julian? How ſad is it to hear but ſuch a one as Spira, eſpecially at his death, crying out of his Backſliding in the horror of his Soul? and to ſee ſuch ready to make away themſelves?

§. 36. 17. Conſider, that there is none that ſo much diſhonoreth God as a Backſlider, others are ſuppoſed to ſin in ignorance. But you do by your lives as bad as ſpeak ſuch blaſphemy as this againſt the Lord: As if you ſhould ſay [I thought once that God had been the beſt Maſter, and his Servants, the wiſeſt and happieſt Men; and godlineſs the beſt and ſafeſt life: But now I have tried both, and I find by experience, that the Devil is a better maſter, and his ſervants ſervants are the happieſt men, and the World, and the Fleſh, do give the trueſt contentment of the mind.] This is the plain Blaſphemy of your lives. And bethink thee how God ſhould bear with this?

§. 37. 18. There is none that ſo much hardneth the wicked in his ſin, and furthereth the damnation of Souls, as the Backſlider: If you would but drive your Sheep or Cattle into a houſe, thoſe that go in firſt, do draw the reſt after them, but thoſe that run out again, make all the reſt afraid, and run away: One apoſtate that hath been noted for Religion, and afterwards turneth off again, doth diſcourage many that would come in: For he doth, as it were, ſay to them by his practice. [Keep off, and meddle not with a Religious Life; for I have tryed it, and found that a life of Worldlineſs, and Fleſhlineſs, is better.] And people will think with themſelves, [Such a Man hath tried a Religious life, and he hath forſaken it again; and therefore he had ſome reaſon for it, and knew what he did.] Wo to the World, becauſe of Luk. 17. 1. offences, and wo to him by whom the offence ſhall come, Matth. 18.7. How dreadful a thing is it to think that Mens Souls ſhould lie in Hell, and you be the cauſe of it? It were good for that Man, that a Milſtone were hanged about his Neck, and he were drowned in the depth of the Sea, Matth. 18. 6, 7. Luke 17. 2.

§. 38. 19. There is none that are ſo great a terror to weak Chriſtians, as theſe Backſliders. For they are thinking how far ſuch went before they fell away, and thoſe that think that true Grace may be loſt, are ſaying [Alas, how ſhall I ſtand, when ſuch that were better and ſtronger than I, have faln away.] And thoſe that think true Grace cannot be loſt, are as much perplexed, and ſay [How far may an Hypocrite go, that after falleth away! How piouſly did this Man live? How ſorrowfully did he repent? How blameleſly did he walk? How fervently and conſtantly did he pray? How favorily did he ſpeak? How charitably and uſefully did he live? And I that come far ſhort of him, as far as I can diſcern, can have no aſſurance that I am ſincere, till I am ſure that I go further than ever he did.] Wo to thee, that thus perplexeſt the Conſciences of the weak, and hindereſt the comforts of Believers.

§. 39. 20. Thou art the greateſt grief to the Faithful Miniſters of Chriſt. Thou canſt not conceive what a wound it giveth to the heart and comforts of a Miniſter, when he hath taken a great deal of pains for thy Converſion, and after that rejoyced when he ſaw thee come to the flock of Chriſt; and after that labored many a year to build thee up, and ſuffered many a frown from the ungodly, for thy ſake, to ſee all his labor at laſt come to nought, and all his glorying of thee, turned to his ſhame, and all his hopes of thee diſappointed? I tell thee this is more doleful to his heart, than any outward loſs or croſs that could have befaln him: It is not perſecution that is his greateſt grief, as long as it hindereth not the good of Souls: It is ſuch as thou that are his foreſt perſecutors, that fruſtrate his labours, and rob him of his joys; and his ſorrows ſhall one day coſt thee dear. The Life and Comforts of your Faithful Paſtors, is much in your hands, 2 Cor. 7. 3. 1 Theſ. 3. 8. Now we live, if ye ſtand faſt in the Lord.

§. 40. 21. Thou art more treacherous to Chriſt, than thou wouldſt be to a common Friend. Wouldſt thou forſake thy friend without a cauſe: eſpecially an old and tried friend? And eſpecially, when in forſaking him, thou doſt forſake thy ſelf? Prov. 27. 10. Thy own friend, and thy Fathers friend forſake not, Prov. 17. 17. A friend loveth at all times; and a Brother is born for adverſity. If thy friend were in diſtreſs, wouldſt thou forſake him? And wilt thou forſake thy God that needs thee not, but ſupplieth thy needs? Ruth was more faithful to Naomi, Ruth 1. 16, 17. that reſolved, Whither thou goeſt, I will go, and where thou lodgeſt, I will lodge: Where thou dieſt, I will die.— And hath God deſerved worſe of thee?

§. 41. 22. Nay, thou dealeſt worſe with God, than the Devils ſervants do with him: Alas, they are too conſtant to him. Reaſon will not change them, nor the Commands of God, nor the offers of Everlaſting Life, nor the fears of Hell; nothing will change them, till the Spirit of God do it. And wilt thou be leſs conſtant to thy God?

§. 42. 23. Conſider alſo that thy end is ſo near, that thou hadſt but a little while longer to have held out, and thou mightſt have known that thou couldſt keep thy worldly pleaſures but a little while. And it is a pitiful thing to ſee a man that hath born the foreſt brunt of the battle, and run till he is almoſt at the end of the race, to loſe all for want of a little more, and to ſee a man ſell his God, and Soul, and Heaven for fleſhly pleaſure, when perhaps he hath not a year, or month, or for ought he knoweth a day more to injoy it. For a man to be weary and give over Prayer, juſt when the mercy is at hand! and to be weary and give over a holy life, when his labor and ſufferings are almoſt at an end! How ſad will this day be to thee, if Death this night be ſent to fetch away thy Soul! Then whoſe will all thoſe pleaſures be, that thou ſoldſt thy Soul for, Luke 12. 19. 20, 21. If thou kneweſt that thou hadſt but a month or year to live, wouldſt thou not have held out that one year? Thou knoweſt not that it ſhall be one week. This is like the ſad ſtory of a Student in one of our Univerſities, who wanting money, and his Father delaying to ſend it him, he ſtaid ſo long, till at laſt he reſolved to ſtay no longer, but ſteal for it rather than be without: And ſo went out, and robbed, and murthered the firſt man he met, who proved to be his Fathers meſſenger, that was bringing him the money that he robbed and killed him for, which when he perceived by a Letter which he found in his Pocker, he confeſt it through remorſe of Conſcience and was hanged when a few hours patience more might have ſaved his innocency, and his life. And ſo is it with many a Backſliding wretch, that is cut off, if not like Zimri and Cosbi in the act of their ſin, yet quickly after; and injoy the pleaſure which they forſook their God for, but a little while.

§. 43. Direct. 4. When you are awakened to ſee the terribleneſs of a relapſed ſtate, preſently return and fly to Chriſt, to reconcile your guilty Souls to God, and make a ſtop and go not one ſtep further in your ſin, nor make no delays in returning to your fidelity. It is too ſad a caſe to be continued in. If thou dareſt delay yet longer and wilfully ſin again, thou are yet impenitent, and thy heart is hardened; and if the Lord have not mercy on thee, to recal thee ſpeedily, thou art loſt for ever. Dir. 4.

§. 44. Direct. 5. Make haſte away from the occaſions of thy ſin, and the company which inſnareth thee in it. If thou kneweſt that they were Robbers that intended to murder thee, thou wouldſt be gone: If thou kneweſt that they had plague ſores running on them, thou wouldſt be gone. And wilt thou not be gone, when thou knoweſt that they are the ſervants of the Devil, that would infect thee with this ſin, and cheat thee of thy Salvation? Say not, Is not this company lawful, and that pleaſure lawful, &c. If it be like to intice thy heart to ſin, it is unlawful to thee, whatever it is to others: It is not lawful to undo thy Soul. Dir. 5.

§. 45. Direct. 6. Come off by ſound and deep repentance, and ſhame thy ſelf by free confeſſion, and mince not the matter, and deal not gently with thy ſin, and be not tender of thy fleſhly intereſt, and ſkin not over the ſore, but go to the bottom, and deceive not thy ſelf with a ſeeming cure. Many a one is undone, by repenting by the halfs, and refuſing to take ſhame to themſelves Dir. 6. Jam. 5. 16. Nehem. 9. 2. 3. Matt. 3. 6. Acts 19. 18.

themselves by a free confession, and to ingage themselves to a through reformation by an openly professed resolution. Favouring themselves and sparing the flesh, when the sore should be lanced and searched to the bottom, doth cause many to perish, while they supposed that they had been cured.

Dir. 7. §. 46. Direct. 7. Command thy senses, and at least forbear the outward acts of sin, while thy Conscience considereth further of the matter. The Drunkard cannot say, that he hath not power to shut his mouth; Let the forbidden cup alone; no one compelleth you; You can forbear it if you will. The same I may say of other such sins of sensuality. Command thy hand, thy mouth, thy eye, and guard these entrances and instruments of sin.

Dir. 8. §. 47. Direct. 8. Ingage some faithful Friend to assist thee in thy watch. Open all thy case to some one, that is fit to be thy guide or helper; and resolve that whenever thou art tempted to the sin, thou wilt go presently and tell them before thou do commit it; and intreat them to deal plainly with you; and give them power to use any advantages that may be for your good.

Dir. 9. §. 48. Direct. 9. Do your first works, and set your selves seriously to all the duties of a holy life: And incorporate your selves into the Society of the Saints. For holy imployment and holy company, are very great preservatives against every sin.

Dir. 10. Matth. 26. 75. Luke 22. 62. §. 49. Direct. 10. Go presently to your companions in sin, and lament that you have joyned with them, and earnestly warn and intreat them to repent; and if they will not, renounce their course and company, and tell them what God hath shewed you of the sin and danger. If really you will return, as with Peter you have faln, so with Peter, Go out and weep bitterly; and when you are converted, strengthen your Brethren, and help to recover those that you have sinned with, Luke 22. 32.

§. 50. I have suited most of these Directions to those that relapse into sins of sensuality, rather than to them that fall into Atheism, Infidelity, or Heresie; because I have spoken against these sins already; and the Directions there given, shew the way for the recovery of such.

Tit. 2. Directions for preventing Backsliding, or for Perseverance.

APostacy and Backsliding is a state that is more easily prevented than cured: And therefore I shall desire those that stand, to use these following Directions lest they fall.

Dir. 1. §. 1. Direct. 1. Be well grounded in the nature and reasons of your Religion. For it is not the highest zeal and resolution, that will cause you to persevere, if your judgments be not furnished with sufficient Reasons, to confute gainsayers, and evidence the Truth, and tell you why you should persevere. I speak that with grief and shame which cannot be concealed: The number of Christians is so small that are well seen in the Reasons and Methods of Christianity, and are able to prove what they hold to be true, and to confute opposers, that it greatly afflicteth me to think, what work the Athiests and Infidels would make, if they once openly play their game, and be turned loose to do their worst! If they deride and oppose the immortality of the Soul, and the life to come, and the truth of the Scriptures, and the work of Redemption, and office of Christ; alas how few are able to withstand them, by giving any sufficient reason of their hope? We have learnt of the Papists, that he hath the strongest faith that believeth with least reason; and we have been (truly) taught that to deny our foundations, is the horrid crime of Infidelity: And therefore because it is so horrid a crime to deny or question them, we thought we need not study to prove them: And so most have taken their Foundation upon trust (and indeed are scarce able to bear the tryal of it,) and have spent their days about the superstructure, and in Learning to prove the Controverted lets necessary Points. Insomuch, that I fear there are more that are able to prove the Points which an Antinomian, or an Anabaptist do deny, than to prove the Immortality of the Soul, or the Truth of Scripture or Christianity; and to dispute about a Ceremony, or Form of Prayer, or Church Government, than to dispute for Christ against an Infidel. So that their work is prepared to their hands, and it is no great victory to overcome such raw unsettled Souls.

Dir. 2. §. 2. Direct. 2. Get every sacred Truth which you believe, into your very hearts and lives; and see that all be digested into holy love and practice. When your food is turned into vital nutriment, into flesh and blood, it is not cast up by every thing that maketh you sick, and turneth your Stomachs; as it may be before it is concocted, distributed and incorporated. Truth that is but barely known, is but like meat that is undigested in the Stomach: But Truth, which is turned into the love of God, and of a holy Life, is turned into a new Nature; and will not so easily be let go.

Dir. 3. §. 3. Direct. 3. Take heed of Doctrines of Presumption and Security, and take heed lest you fall away, by thinking it so impossible to fall away, that you are past all danger. The Covenant of Grace doth sufficiently incourage you to obey and hope against Temptations to despair and casting off the means: But it incourageth no man to presume or sin, or to cast off means as needless things. Remember, that if ever you stand, the fear of falling must help you to stand: And if ever you will persevere, it must be by seeing the danger of Back-sliding, so far as to make you afraid, and quicken you in the means which are necessary to prevent it. It is no more certain that you shall persevere, than it is certain that you shall use the means of persevering: And one means is, by seeing your danger, to be stirred up to fear and caution to escape it. Because it is my meaning in this Direction, to save men from perishing by security upon the abuse of the Doctrine of Perseverance, I hope none will be offended that I lay down these Antidotes.

Virtutem amitti posse, Cleanthes vero non posse ait: Ille posse amitti per ebrietatem & atrom bilem; se ob firmas ac stabiles comprehensiones, &c. Laert. in Zenone.

§. 4. 1. Consider, That the Doctrine of Perseverance hath nothing in it to incourage Security. The very Controversies about it, may cause you to conclude, That a certain sin is not to be built upon a Controverted Doctrine. Till Augustines time, it is hard to find any Ancient Writers, that clearly asserted the certain Perseverance of any at all. Augustine and Prosper maintain the certain Perseverance of all the Elect, but deny the certain Perseverance of all that are Regenerated, Justified, or Sanctified: For they thought that more were Regenerate and Justified than were Elect, of whom some stood (even all the Elect) and the rest fell away: So that I confess, I never read one Ancient Father, or Christian Writer, that ever maintained the certainty of the Perseverance of all the Justified, of many hundred, if not a thousand Years after Christ. And a Doctrine, that to the Church was so long unknown, hath not that certainty, or that necessity, as to incourage you to any Presumption or Security. The Churches were saved many hundred Years without believing it.

§. 5. 2. The Doctrine of Perseverance is against Security, because it uniteth together the End and the Means: For they that teach, that the Justified shall never totally fall from Grace, do also teach, that they shall never totally fall into Security, or into any reigning sin. For this is to fall away from Grace. And they teach that they shall never totally fall from the use of the necessary means of their Preservation; nor nor from the cautelous avoiding of the danger of their Souls: God doth not ſimply Decree that you ſhall perſevere; but that you ſhall be kept in perſeverance by the fear of your danger, and the careful uſe of means, and that you ſhall perſevere in theſe, as well as in other graces. Therefore if you fall to Security and Sin, you fall away from Grace, and ſhew that God never decreed or promiſed, that you ſhould never fall away.

§. 6. 3. Conſider how far many have gone that have faln away: The inſtances of our times are much higher than any I can name to you out of Hiſtory. Men that have ſeemed to walk humbly and holily, fearing all ſin, blameleſs in their lives, zealous in Religion twenty or thirty years together, have faln to deny the truth, or certainty of the Scriptures, the Godhead of Chriſt, if not Chriſtianity it ſelf. And many that have not quite faln away, have yet faln into ſuch grievous ſins, as make them a terrible warning to us all, to take heed of Preſumption and carnal Security.

§. 7. 4. Grace is not in the nature of it a thing that cannot periſh or be loſt. For, 1. It is a ſeparable quality. 2. Adam did loſe it. 3. We loſe a great degree of it too oft; and the remaining degrees are of the ſame nature. It is not only poſſible in it ſelf to loſe it, but too eaſie; and not poſſible without co-operating Grace to keep it.

Nature as not lapſed, and Nature as reſtored, incline the Soul to the Love of God; but not Nature as corrupt; nor is it an act performed Per modum naturæ, i.e. neceſſario.

§. 8. 5. Grace is not Natural to us: To love our eaſe, and honor, and friends, is natural, but to love Chriſt, and his holy ways and ſervants, is not natural to us: Indeed when we do it, it is our natural powers that do it; but not as naturally diſpoſed to it, but as inclined by the cure of Supernatural Grace. Eating, and drinking, and ſleeping we forget not, becauſe nature it ſelf remembreth us of them; but Learning and acquired habits may be loſt, if not very deeply radicated, and its commonly concluded as to the nature of them, that Habitus infuſi habent ſe ad modum acquiſitorum: Infuſed habits are like to acquired ones.

§. 9. 6. Grace is, as it were, a ſtranger, or new comer in us. It hath been there but a little while, and therefore we are but raw and too unacquainted with the right uſage and improvement of it, and are the apter to forget our duty, or to neglect it, or ignorantly to do that which tendeth to its deſtruction.

§. 13. 7. Grace dwelleth in a heart which is not wholly diſpoſſeſſed of thoſe Objects which are againſt its work, nor delivered from thoſe Principles which have an enmity againſt it. The love of the world and fleſh was in the heart, before the love of God and Holineſs, and ignorance was before knowledge, and pride before humility, and ſelfiſhneſs before ſelf-denial. And theſe are not wholly rooted out; we have dealt ſo gently with them (as the Iſraelites with the Canaanites, Jebuſites, and other Inhabitants of the Land) that they are left to try us, and to be thorns in our ſides. And the Garriſon is not free from danger, that hath an enemy always lodged within: Our enemies are in the houſe with us, they lie down and riſe up with us, and are as near us as our fleſh and bones: We can never be where they are not, nor leave them behind us, whitherſoever we go, or whatever we do. No marvel, if Brother be againſt Brother, and the Father againſt the Son, when we are ſo much againſt our ſelves. And are we yet ſecure?

Matth. 13. 12. & 10. 11.

§. 11. 8. And the number of the ſnares that are ſtill before us, and of the ſubtle malicious enemies of our Souls, may eaſily convince us, that we are wholly free from danger. How ſubtile and diligent is the Devil? How much do his ſervants imitate him? Every creature or perſon that we have to do with, and every common mercy which we receive, hath matter of danger in it, which calleth us to fear and watch.

§. 12. 9. Perſeverance is nothing elſe but our continuance in the grace which we received: And this grace conſiſteth in Act as well as in Habit: And the Habit is for Action, and the Act is it that increaſeth and continueth the Habit: And the fear of God, and the belief of his threatnings, and repentance, and watchfulneſs, and diligent obedience, are a great part of this grace? And the Acts are ours, performed by our ſelves by the help of God: God doth not believe, and Repent, and obey in us, but cauſeth us our ſelves to do it. Therefore to grow cold, and ſecure, and ſinful, upon pretence that we are ſure to perſevere, this is to ceaſe perſevering, and to fall away, becauſe we are ſure to perſevere, and not to fall away, which is a meer contradiction.

§. 13. 10. Laſtly, Bethink you well what is the meaning of all theſe Texts of Scripture, and the Reaſon that the Holy Ghoſt doth ſpeak to us in this manner, Col. 1. 21, 22, 23. And you —— hath he reconciled——to preſent you holy —— if ye continue in the faith grounded and ſettled, and be not moved away from the hope of the Goſpel. ——John 15. 4. Abide in me, and I in you. 6. If a man abide not in me, he is caſt forth as a branch and withered——— 7. *If ye abide in me, and my words abide in you, ye ſhall ask what ye will———*Heb. 4. 1. Let us therefore fear, leſt a promiſe being left us of entring into his reſt, any of you ſhould ſeem to come ſhort of it, Jude 21. Keep your ſelves in the love of God, 1 Cor. 10. 4, 5, 12. They drank of that ſpiritual rock that followed them, and that rock was Chriſt; But with many of them God was not well pleaſed; wherefore let him that thinketh he ſtandeth take heed leſt he fall, Rom. 11. 20, 21. Be not high-minded, but fear; For if God ſpared not the natural branches, take heed leſt he ſpare not thee, Gal. 5. 4. Ye are fallen from grace——— Matth. 10. 22. He that endureth to the end ſhall be ſaved, Matth. 24. 13. Heb. 3. 6. 14. Whoſe houſe are we, if we hold faſt the confidence and rejoycing of hope firm unto the end. For we are partakers of Chriſt, if we hold the beginning of our confidence ſtedfaſt unto the end, Heb. 4. 11. Let us labour therefore to enter into that reſt, leſt any man fall after the ſame example of unbelief, Rev. 2. 25. Hold faſt till I come. 26. And he that overcometh and keepeth my words unto the end, to him will I give power over the Nations—— Rev. 3. 2, 3. & 2. 4.

§. 14. Take heed therefore of that Doctrine which telleth you, that ſins to come are all pardoned to you before they are committed, and that you are Juſtified from them, and that it is unlawful to be afraid of falling away, becauſe it is impoſſible, &c. For no ſin is pardoned before it is committed (though the Remedy be provided) For it is then no ſin; And you are Juſtified from no ſin, any further than it is pardoned; Suppoſe God either to decree, or but to foreknow the freeſt moſt contingent act, and there will be a Logical impoſſibility in order of Conſequence, that it ſhould be otherwiſe than he ſo decreeth or foreſeeth: But that inferreth no natural impoſſibility in the thing it ſelf: For God doth not decree or foreſee that ſuch a mans fall ſhall be impoſſible, but only non futurum.

§. 15. Direct. 4. In a ſpecial manner take heed of the company and doctrine of deceivers: yea, though they ſeem moſt Religious men, and are themſelves firſt deceived, and think they are in the right: And take heed of falling into a dividing party, which ſeparateth from the generality of the truly wiſe and godly people. For this hath been an ordinary introduction to backſliding; Falſe doctrine hath a mighty power on the heart? And he that can ſeparate one of the ſheep from the reſt of the flock, hath a fair advantage to carry him away. See Rom. 16. 16, 17. Dir. 4. Eph. 4. 14. 1 Theſſ. 5. 12, 13.

§. 16. Direct. 5. Be very watchful againſt the ſin of Pride, eſpecially pride of gifts, or knowledge, or holineſs, Dir. 5.

holiness, which some call spiritual Pride; For God is engaged to cast down the Proud, Prov. 16. 18. Pride goeth before destruction, and an haughty spirit before a fall. Satan assaulted our first Parents by that way that he fell himself; and his success encourageth him to try the same way with their posterity; And alas, how greatly hath he succeeded thro' all the ages of the World till now!

Dir. 6. §. 17. Direct. 6. Take heed of a divided hypocritical heart, which never was firmly resolved for God, upon expectation of the worst, and upon terms of self-denial; nor was ever well loosed from the Love of this present world, nor firmly believed the life to come; For it is no wonder that he falleth from grace, who never had any grace but common, which never renewed his Soul. It is no wonder that false-hearted friends forsake us, when their interest requireth it; Nor that the seed which never had depth of earth, do bring forth no fruit, but what will wither when persecution shall arise, or that which is sown among thorns be choaked, Matth. 13. Sit down and count what it will cost you to be Christians, and receive not Christ upon mistakes, or with reserves.

Luke 14. 26, 29, 33.

Dir. 7. §. 18. Direct. 7. Take heed lest the world or any thing in it steal again into your hearts, and seem too sweet to you. If your friends, or dwellings, or lands and wealth, or honors begin to grow too pleasant and be over-loved, your thoughts will presently be carried after them, and turned away from God, and all holy affection will be damped and decay, and grace will fall into a consumption. It is the love of money that is the root of all evil; and the love of this world which is the mortal enemy of the love of God. Keep the world from your hearts, if you would keep your graces.

Dir. 8. §. 19. Direct. 8. Keep a strict Government and watch over your fleshly appetite and sense. For the looseing of the reins to carnal lusts, and yielding to the importunity of sensual desires, is the most ordinary way of wasting grace, and falling off from God.

Rom. 8. 13, Rom. 13. 13, 14.

Dir. 9. §. 20. Direct. 9. Keep as far as you can from Temptations, and all occasions and opportunities of sinning. Trust not to your own strength; And be not so foolhardy as to thrust your selves into needless danger. No man is long safe that standeth at the brink of ruine; If the fire and straw be long near together, some spark is like to catch at last.

Dir. 10. §. 21. Direct. 10. Incorporate your selves into the Communion of Saints, and go along with them that go towards Heaven, and engage your selves in the constant use of all those means, which God hath appointed you to use for your perseverance; Especially take heed of an idle slothful unprofitable life; And keep your graces in the most lively exercise; For the slothful is brother to the waster; And idleness consumeth or corrupteth our spiritual health and strength, as well as our bodily. Set your selves diligently to work while it is day, and do all the good in your places, that you are able? For it is acts that preserve and increase the habits; And a Religion which consisteth only in doing no hurt, is so lifeless and corrupt, that it will quickly perish.

Dir. 11. §. 22. Direct. 11. Keep always in thine eye the doleful case of a back-slider, (which I opened before). O what horror is waiting to seize on their Consciences? How many of them have we known that on their death beds have lain roaring in the anguish of their Souls, crying out, [I am utterly forsaken of God, because I have forsaken him? There is no mercy for such an Apostate wretch; O that I had never been born, or had been any thing rather than a man! Cursed be the day that ever I hearkened to the counsel of the wicked, and that ever I pleased this corruptible flesh, to the utter undoing of my Soul! O that it were all to do again! Take warning by a most hypocrited sinner, that have lost my Soul for that which I knew would never make me satisfaction, and have turned from God when I had found him to be good and gracious]. O prepare not for such pangs as these, or worse than these in endless desperation.

§. 23. Direct. 12. Make not a smaller matter of the beginnings of your back sliding. There are very few that fall quite away at once, the misery creepeth on by insensible degrees. You think it a small matter to cut short one duty, and omit another, and be negligent at another; and to entertain some pleasing thoughts of the world; or first to look on the forbidden fruit, and then to touch it, and then to taste it; but these are the ways to that which is not small; A thought, or a look, or a taste, or a delight hath begun that with many, which never stopt, till it had shamed them here, and damned them for ever. Dir. 12.

CHAP. XXVII.

Directions for the POOR.

THere is no condition of life so low or poor, but may be sanctified and fruitful, and comfortable to us, if our own mis-understanding, or sin and negligence, do not pollute it or imbitter it to us: If we do the duty of our condition faithfully, we shall have no cause to murmur at it: Therefore I shall here direct the Poor in the special duties of their condition; and if they will but conscionably perform them, it will prove a greater kindness to them, than if I could deliver them from their poverty, and give them as much riches as they desire. Though I doubt this would be more pleasing to the most, and they would give me more thanks for money, than for teaching them how to want it.

Dir. 1. §. 1. Direct. 1. Understand first the use and estimate of all earthly things: that they were never made to be your portion and felicity, but your provision and helps in the way to Heaven. And therefore they are neither to be ettimated nor desired simply for themselves (for so there is nothing good but God) but only as they are means to the greatest good. Therefore neither Poverty nor Riches, are simply to be rejoiced in for themselves, as any part of our happiness; But that condition is to be desired and rejoiced in which affordeth us the greatest helps for Heaven, and that condition only is to be lamented and disliked, which hindereth us most from Heaven, and from our duty.

Prov. 28. 6. Jam. 2. 5.

Dir. 2. §. 2. Direct. 2. See therefore that you really take all these things, as matters in themselves indifferent, and of small concernment to you; and as not worthy of much love, or care, or sorrow, further than they conduce to greater things. We are like runners in a race, and Heaven or Hell will be our End; and therefore wo to us, if by looking aside, or turning back, or stopping, or trifling about these matters, or burdening our selves with worldly trash, we should lose the race, and lose our Souls. O Sirs, what greater matters than Poverty or Riches have we to mind? Can those Souls that must shortly be in Heaven or Hell, have time to bestow any serious thoughts upon these impertinences? Shall we so much as Look at the temporal things which are seen, instead of the things eternal that are unseen? 2 Cor. 4. 18. Or shall we whine under those light Afflictions, which may be so improved, as to work for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory? v. 17. Our present life is not in the abundance of the things which we possess; much less is our eternal life, Luke 12. 15.

Dir. 3. §. 3. Direct. 3. Therefore take heed that you judge not of Gods Love, or of your happiness or misery by your Riches or Poverty, Prosperity or Adversity, as knowing ing that they come alike to all, and love or hatred is not to be discerned by them; except only Gods common love as they are common mercies, to the body. If a Surgeon is not to be taken for a hater of you, because he letteth you blood, nor a Physician because he purgeth his Patient, nor a Father because he Correcteth his Child; much less is God to be judged an enemy to you or unmerciful, because his wisdom and not your folly disposeth of you, and proportioneth your estates. A carnal mind will judge of its own Happiness and the love of God by carnal things, because it savoureth not spiritual mercies: But Grace giveth a Christian another judgment, relliſh and desire: As nature setteth a man above the food and pleasures of a Beast.

Dir. 4. §. 4. Direct. 4. Stedfastly believe that God is every way fitter than you to dispose of your estate and you; He is infinitely wise, and knoweth what is best and fittest for you; He knoweth before hand what good or hurt any state of plenty or want will do you; He knoweth all your corruptions, and what condition will most conduce to strengthen them or destroy them, and which will be your greatest temptations and snares, and which will prove your safest state; Much better than any Physician or Parent knoweth how to dyet his Patient or his Child. And his love and kindness is much greater to you, than yours is to your self; And therefore he will not be wanting in willingness to do you good; And his Authority over you is absolute, and therefore his disposal of you must be unquestionable. It is the Lord: let him do what seemeth him good, 1 Sam. 3. 18. The will of God should be the rest and satisfaction of your wills, Acts 21. 14.

Pſal. 10. 15. 1 Sam. 2. 7.

Dir. 5. §. 5. Direct. 5. Stedfastly believe that ordinarily Riches are far more dangerous to the Soul than Poverty, and a greater hinderance to mens salvation. Believe experience; How few of the Rich and Rulers of the earth, are holy, heavenly, self-denying, mortified men? Believe our Saviour, Luke 18. 24, 25, 27. How hardly shall they that have Riches enter into the Kingdom of God? For it is easier for a Camel to go thro' a Needles eye, than for a Rich Man to enter into the Kingdom of God; And they that heard it said, who then can be saved? And he said, The things which are impossible with men, are possible with God. So that you see that the difficulty is so great of saving such as are Rich, that to men it is a thing impossible, but to Gods Omnipotency only it is possible. So 1 Cor. 1. 26. For ye see your calling, Brethren, how that not many wise men after the flesh, not many mighty, nor many noble are called. Believe this, and it will prevent many dangerous mistakes.

Dir. 6. §. 6. Direct. 6. Hence you may perceive, that tho' no man must pray absolutely either for Riches or Poverty, yet of the two it is more rational ordinarily to pray against Riches than for them, and to be rather troubled when God maketh us Rich, than when he maketh us Poor. (I mean it, in respect to our selves, as either of them seemeth to conduce to our own good or hurt: Tho' to do good to others Riches are more desirable.) This cannot be denied by any man that believeth Christ: For no wise man will long for the hinderance of his Salvation, or pray to God to make it as hard a thing for him to be saved, as for a Camel to go through a Needles eye: When salvation is a matter of such unspeakable moment, and our strength is so small, and the difficulties so many and great already.

Object. But Christ doth not deny but the difficulties to the Poor may be as great. Answ. To some particular persons upon other accounts it may be so; But it is clear in the Text, that Christ speaketh comparatively of such difficulties as the Rich had more than the Poor.

Object. But then how are we obliged to be thankful to God for giving us Riches, or blessing our labours? Answ. 1. You must be thankful for them, because in their own nature they are good, and it is by accident, through your own corruption, that they become so dangerous. 2. Because you may do good with them to others, if you have hearts to use them well. 3. Because God in giving them to you rather than to others, doth signifie (if you are his Children) that they are fitter for you than for others. In Bedlam and among foolish Children, it is a kindness to keep Fire, and Swords, and Knives out of their way: But yet they are useful to People that have the use of reason. But our folly in spiritual matters is so great, that we have little cause to be too eager for that which we are inclined so dangerously to abuse, and which proves the bane of most that have it.

Saith Aristippus to Dionysius, Quando sapientia egebam adii Socratem? nunc pecuniarum egens, ad te veni. Laert. in Arist.

Dir. 7. §. 7. Direct. 7. See that your poverty be not the fruit of your idleness, gluttony, drunkenness, pride, or any other flesh-pleasing sin. For if you bring it thus upon your selves, you can never look that it should be sanctified to your good, till sound Repentance have turned you from the sin: Nor are your objects worthy of much pity from man, (except as you are miserable sinners.) He that rather chooseth to have his ease and pleasure, tho' with want, than to have plenty, and to want his ease and pleasure, it is pity that he should have any better than he chooseth.

1 Cor. 7. 35.

§. 8. 1. Slothfulness and idleness is a sin that naturally tendeth to want, and God hath caused it to be punished with poverty: as you may see, Prov. 12. 24, 27. & 18. 9. & 21. 25. & 24. 34. & 26. 14, 15. & 6. 11. & 20. 13. Yea, he commandeth, that if any (that is able) will not work, neither should he eat, 2 Thess. 3. 10. In the sweat of their face must they eat their bread, Gen. 3. 19. And six days must they labour, and do all that they have to do. To maintain your idleness is a sin in others. If you will please your flesh with ease, it must be displeased with want; and you must suffer what you choose.

§. 9. 2. Gluttony and Drunkenness are such beastly devourers of mercy, and abusers of mankind, that shame and poverty are their punishment and cure: Prov. 23. 20, 21. Be not among Wine bibbers, amongst riotous eaters of flesh: for the Drunkard and the Glutton shall come to Poverty, and drowsiness shall cloath a man with Rags. It is not lawful for any man to feed the greedy appetites of such: If they choose a short excess berore a longer competency, let them have their choice.

§. 10. 3. Pride also is a most consuming wasteful sin: It sacrificeth Gods mercies to the Devil, in serving him by them, in his first-born sin. Proud persons must lay it out in Pomp and Gawdiness, to set forth themselves to the eyes of others: In building, and entertainments, and fine clothes, and curiosities: And Poverty is also both the proper punishment and cure of this sin; And it is cruelty for any to save them from it, and resist God that by abasing them, takes the way to do them good, Prov. 11. 2. & 29. 23. & 16. 18.

§. 11. 4. Falshood also and deceit, and unjust getting tend to Poverty; For God doth often even in this present life, thus enter into judgment with the unjust; Ill-gotten Wealth is like fire in the thatch, and bringeth oft-times a secret curse and destruction upon all the rest. The same may be said of unmercifulness to the Poor; which is oft cursed with poverty, when the liberal are blest with plenty, Prov. 11. 24, 25. Isa. 32. 8. Psal. 73. 21, 22, 25, 26, 34, 35.

Dir. 8. §. 12. Direct. 8. Be acquainted with the special Temptations of the Poor, that you may be furnished to resist them. Every condition hath its own Temptations, which persons in that condition must specially be fortified and watch against; And this is much of the wisdom and safety of a Christian.

Tem. 1. §. 13. Tempt. 1. One Temptation of Poverty will be to draw you to think highlier of Riches and Honours than you ought; To make you think that the Rich are much happier than they are; For the world is like all other deceivers; it is most esteemed where it is least known; They that never tryed a life of wealth, and plenty, and prosperity, are apt to admire it, and think it braver and better than it is. And so you may be drawn as much to over-love the world by want, as other men by plenty. Against this remember, that it is folly to admire that which you never tryed and knew; and mark whether all men do not vilifie it, that have tryed it to the last; Dying men call it no better than vanity and deceit. And it is rebellious pride in you so far to contradict the wisdom of God, as to think most highly of that condition, which he hath judged worst for you; and to fall in Love with that which he denyeth you.

Tem. 2. Luke 10. 41. §. 14. Tempt. 2. The Poor will also be tempted to over-much care about their wants and worldly matters; They will think that necessity requireth it in them, and will excuse them. So much care is your duty as is needful to the right doing of your work; Take care how to discharge your own duties; but be not too careful about the event, which belongs to God. If you will care what you should be and do, Matth. 6. God will care sufficiently what you shall have. And 1 Pet. 5. 7. Phil. 4. 6. so be it you faithfully do your business, your other care will add nothing to the success, nor make you any Richer, but only vex and disquiet your minds. It is the Poor as well as the Rich, that God hath commanded to be careful for nothing, and to cast all their care on him.

Tem. 3. §. 15. Tempt. 3. Poverty will also tempt you to repining, impatience and discontent and to fall out with others; which because it is one of the chief Temptations, I will speak to by it self anon.

Tem. 4. Prov. 23. 4. §. 16. Tempt. 4. Also you will be tempted to be Coveting after more; Satan maketh Poverty a snare to draw many needy creatures, to greater Covetousness than many of the Rich are guilty of; None thirst more eagerly after more; And yet their Poverty blindeth them, so that they cannot see that they are covetous, or else excuse it as a justifiable thing. They think that they desire no more but necessaries, and that it is not Covetousness, if they desire not superfluities. But do you not covet more than God allotteth you? And are you not discontent with his allowance? And doth not he know best what is necessary for you, and what superfluous? What then is Covetousness, if this be not?

Tem. 5. §. 17. Tempt. 5. Also you will be tempted to envy the Rich, and to censure them in matters where you are incompetent Judges. It's usual with the Poor to speak of the Rich with Envy and Censoriousness; They call them Covetous, meerly because they are Rich, especially if they give them nothing; when they know not what ways of necessary expence they have, nor know not how many others they are liberal to, that they are unacquainted with. Till you see their accounts you are unfit to censure them.

Tem. 6. Prov. 30. 8, 9. John 6. 27. §. 18. Tempt. 6. The Poor also will be tempted to use unlawful means to supply their wants; How many by the temptation of necessity have been tempted to comply with sinners, and wound their Consciences, and lie and flatter for favour or preferment, or to cheat, or steal, or over-reach! A dear price! to buy the food that perisheth, with the loss or hazard of everlasting life; and lose their Souls to provide for their flesh!

Tem. 7. §. 19. Tempt. 7. Also you will be tempted to neglect your Souls and omit your spiritual duties, and as Martha to be troubled about many things, while the one thing needful is forgotten; And you will think that necessity will excuse all this; Yea, some think to be saved, because they are poor, and say, God will not punish them in this life and another too? But alas, you are more unexcusable than the Rich, if you are ungodly and mindless of the life to come. For he that will love a life of poverty and misery better than Heaven, deserveth indeed to go without it, much more than he that preferreth a life of plenty and prosperity before it. God hath taught you by his providence to know, that you must either be happy in Heaven, or no where; If you would be worldlings, and part with Heaven for your part on earth, how poor a bargain are you like to make? To love Rags, and toil, and want, and Sorrow, better than eternal Joy and Happiness, is the most unreasonable kind of Ungodliness in the world. It's true, that you are not called to spend so many hours of the Week days in Reading and Meditation, as some that have greater leisure are; But you have reason to seek Heaven, and set your hearts upon it, as much as they; And you must think of it when you are about your labor, and take those Opportunities for your spiritual duties, which are allowed you. Poverty will excuse ungodliness in none! Nothing is so necessary as the service of God and your salvation; and therefore no necessity can excuse you from it, Luke 10. 41, 42. Read the case of Mary and Martha: One would think that your hearts should be wholly set upon Heaven, who have nothing else but it to trust to. The Poor have fewer hinderances than the Rich, in the way to life eternal! And God will save no man because he is Poor; but condemn Poor and Rich that are ungodly.

Tem. 8. §. 20. Tempt. 8. Another great Temptation of the poor, is to neglect the holy education of their Children; so that in most places, there are none so ignorant, and rude, and heathenish, and unwilling to learn, as the poorest People and their Children; They never teach them to read, nor teach them any thing for the saving of their Souls; and they think that their poverty will be an excuse for all. When reason telleth them, that none should be more careful to help their Children to Heaven, than they they can give them nothing upon earth.

Dir. 9. §. 21. Direct. 9. Be acquainted with the special Duties of the Poor; and carefully perform them: They are these.

Duty 1. 1. Let your sufferings teach you to contemn the world; It will be a happy poverty if it do but help to wean your affections from all things below; that you set as little by the world as it deserveth.

Duty 2. Phil. 3. 18, 20, 21. 2 Cor. 5. 7, 8. 2. Be eminently Heavenly minded; The less you have or hope for in this life, the more fervently seek a better. You are at least as capable of the Heavenly treasures as the greatest Princes; God purposely straitneth your condition in the world, that he may force up your hearts unto himself, and teach you to seek first for that which indeed is worth your seeking, Mat. 6. 33, 19, 20, 21.

Duty 3. Gal. 2. 20 Psal. 73. 25, 26, 27, 28. 2 Cor. 1. 10. 3. Learn to live upon God alone; Study his goodness, and faithfulness, and all-sufficiency; when you have not a place nor a friend in the world, that you can comfortably betake your selves to for relief, retire unto God, and trust him, and dwell the more with him. If your poverty have but this effect, it will be better to you than all the Riches in the world.

Duty 4. Ephes. 4. 28. Prov. 21. 25. 1 Sam. 15. 22. 2 Thess. 3. 8, 10. 4. Be laborious and diligent in your Callings; Both precept and necessity call you unto this; And if you cheerfully serve him in the labour of your hands, with a heavenly and obedient mind, it will be as acceptable to him, as if you had spent all that time in more spiritual exercises; For he had rather have Obedience than Sacrifice; and all things are pure and sanctified to the pure; If you cheerfully serve God in the meanest work, it is the more acceptable to him, by how much the more subjection and submission there is in your obedience.

Duty 5. Prov. 18. 23. 5. Be humble and submissive unto all. A poor man proud is double hateful: And if Poverty cure your your Pride, and help you to be truly humble, it will be no ſmall mercy to you.

Duty 6. 6. You are ſpecially obliged to mortifie the fleſh, and keep your ſenſes and appetites in ſubjection; becauſe you have greater helps for it than the Rich: You have not ſo many baits of luſt, and wantonneſs, and gluttony, and voluptuouſneſs as they.

Duty 7. 7. Your corporal wants muſt make you more ſenſibly remember your ſpiritual wants; and teach you to value ſpiritual bleſſings; Think with your ſelves, If a hungry, cold and naked body, be ſo great a Calamity, how much greater is a guilty, graceleſs Soul! a dead or diſeaſed heart? If bodily food and neceſſaries are ſo deſirable, O how deſirable is Chriſt, and his Spirit, and the love of God and life eternal?

Duty 8. 8. You muſt above all men be careful Redeemers of your time; eſpecially of the Lords day; your Labours take up ſo much of your time, that you muſt be the more careful to catch every opportunity for your Souls! Riſe earlier to get half an hour for holy duty; and meditate on holy things in your Labours, and ſpend the Lords day in ſpecial diligence, and be glad of ſuch ſeaſons; and let ſcarcity preſerve your appetites.

Duty 9. 9. Be willing to dye; Seeing the world giveth you ſo cold entertainment, be the more content to let it go, when God ſhall call you; For what is here to detain your hearts?

Duty 10. 10. Above all men, you ſhould be moſt fearleſs of ſufferings from men, and therefore true to God and Conſcience: For you have no great matter of Honour, or Riches, or pleaſure to loſe: As you fear not a Thief, when you have nothing for him to rob you of.

Duty 11. 11. Be ſpecially careful to fit your Children alſo for Heaven: Provide them a portion which is better than a Kingdom: For you can provide but little for them in the Wotld.

Duty 12. 12. Be exemplary in Patience and Contentedneſs with your ſtate: For that Grace ſhould be the ſtrongeſt in us, which is moſt exerciſed; and Poverty calleth you to the frequent exerciſe of this.

Dir. 10. §. 22. Direct. 10. Be ſpecially furniſhed with thoſe Reaſons which ſhould keep you in a chearful contentedneſs with your ſtate; and may ſuppreſs every thought of anxiety and diſcontent. As, 1. Conſider as aforeſaid, That that is the beſt condition for you which helpeth you beſt to Heaven; and God beſt knoweth what will do you good, or hurt. 2. That it is rebellion to grudge at the Will of God; which muſt diſpoſe of us, and ſhould be our Reſt. 3. Look over the Life of Chriſt, who choſe a life of Poverty for your ſakes; and had not a place to lay his head. He was not one of the rich and voluptuous in the World; and are you grieved to be conformed to him? Phil. 3. 7, 8, 9. 4. Look to all his Apoſtles, and moſt holy Servants and Martyrs. Were not they as great ſufferers as you? 5. Conſider that the Rich will ſhortly be all as Poor as you. Naked they came into the World, and naked they muſt go out; and a little time makes little difference. 6. It's no more comfort to die rich than poor; but uſually much leſs: Becauſe the pleaſanter the World is to them, the more it grieveth them to leave it. 7. All men cry out, that the World is vanity at laſt. How little is it valued by a dying Man? And how ſadly will it caſt him off? 8. The time is very ſhort and uncertain, in which you muſt injoy it: We have but a few days more to walk about, and we are gone. Alaſs, of how ſmall concernment is it, whether a Man be rich or poor, that is ready to ſtep into another World? 9. The love of this World drawing the heart from God, is the common cauſe of Mens damnation: And is not the World liker to be overloved, when it entertaineth you with proſperity, than when it uſeth you like an enemy? Are you diſpleaſed, that God thus helpeth to ſave you from the moſt damning ſin? And that he maketh not your way to Heaven more dangerous? 10. You little know the troubles of the Rich. He that hath much, hath much to do with it, and much to care for; and many perſons to deal with, and more vexations than you imagine. 11. It is but the fleſh that ſuffereth; and it furthereth your mortification of it. 12. You pray but for your daily Bread, and therefore ſhould be contented with it. 13. Is not God, and Chriſt, and Heaven, enough for you? Should that Man be diſcontent that muſt live in Heaven? 14. Is it not your luſt, rather than your well informed Reaſon that repineth? I do but name all theſe Reaſons for brevity: You may inlarge them in your Meditations.

CHAP. XXVIII.

Directions for the Rich.

I Have ſaid ſo much of this already Tom. 1. about Covetouſneſs or Worldlineſs, and about good Works, and in my Book of Self-denial, and that of Crucifying the World; that my Reaſon commandeth me brevity in this place. See more in my Life of Faith.

Direct. 1. Remember that Riches are no part of your felicity; or, that if you have no better, you are undone Men. Dare you ſay, that they are fit to make you happy? Dare you ſay, that you will take them for your part? and be content to be turned off when they forſake you? They reconcile not God; they ſave not from his wrath; they heal not a wounded Conſcience; they may pleaſe your fleſh, and adorn your Funeral, but they neither delay, nor ſanctifie, nor ſweeten Death, nor make you either better, or happier than the Poor. Riches are nothing but plentiful Proviſion for tempting corruptible fleſh. When the fleſh is in the duſt, it is rich no more. All that abounded in wealth, ſince Adams days, till now, are levelled with the loweſt in the duſt. Dir. 1.

Direct. 2. Yea, remember that Riches are not the ſmalleſt Temptation and danger to your Souls. Do they delight and pleaſe you? By that way they may deſtroy you. If they be but loved above God, and make Earth ſeem better for you than Heaven, they have undone you. And if God recover you not, it had been better for you to have been Worms or Bruits, than ſuch deceived miſerable Souls. It is not for nothing, that Chriſt giveth you ſo many terrible warnings about Riches, and ſo deſcribeth the folly, the danger, and the miſery of the worldly Rich, Luke 12. 17, 18, 19, 20. & 16. 19, 20, 21, &c. & 18. 21, 22, 23, &c. And telleth you how hardly the Rich are ſaved. Fire burneth moſt, when it hath moſt fewel; and Riches are the fewel of worldly love, and fleſhly luſt, 1 John 2. 15, 16. Rom. 13. 13, 14. Dir. 2.

Direct. 3. Underſtand what it is to love and truſt in worldly proſperity and wealth. Many here deceive themſelves, to their deſtruction. They perſwade themſelves, that they deſire and uſe their Riches but for neceſſity, but that they do not love them, nor truſt in them, becauſe they can ſay that Heaven is better, and Wealth will leave us to a Grave? But do you not love that eaſe, that greatneſs, that domination, that fulneſs, that ſatisfaction of your Appetite, Eye, and Fancy, which you cannot have without your Wealth? It is fleſhly Luſt, and Will, and Pleaſure, which carnal Worldlings love for it ſelf; and then they love their Wealth for theſe. And to truſt in Riches, is not to truſt that they will never leave you; for every Fool doth know the contrary: But it is to reſt, and quiet, and comfort your minds in them, as that which moſt pleaſeth you, and maketh you well, or to be as you would be. Like him in Luke 12. 18, 19. that ſaid, Soul take Dir. 3.

take thy ease, eat, drink, and be merry, thou hast enough laid up for many years. This is to love and trust in Riches.

Dir. 4. Heb. 10. 34. Luk. 18. 22. Matth. 13. 20, 21, 22. Acts 5. 1. &c. & 2. 45. Luk. 14. 33.

Direct. 4. Above all the deceits and dangers of this World, take heed of a secret hypocritical hope of reconciling the World to Heaven, so as to make you a felicity of both; and dreaming of a compounded portion, or of serving God and Mammon. The true state of the Hypocrites heart and hope is, [To love his worldly prosperity best, and desire to keep it as long as he can, for the injoyment of his fleshly pleasures; and when he must leave this World against his will, he hopeth then to have Heaven as a reserve; because he thinketh it better than Hell, and his Tongue can say, It is better than Earth, though his Will and Affections say the contrary.] If this be your case, the Lord have mercy upon you, and give you a more believing Spiritual mind, or else you are lost, and you and your treasure will perish together.

Dir. 5.

Direct. 5. Accordingly take heed, lest when you seem to resign your selves, and all that you have to God, there should be a secret purpose at the heart, that you will never be undone in the World for Christ, nor for the hopes of a better World. A knowing Hypocrite is not ignorant, that the terms of Christ, proposed in the Gospel, are no lower than forsaking all, and that in Baptism, and our Covenant with Christ; all must be designed and devoted to him, and the Cross taken up instead of all, or else we are no Christians, as being not in Covenant with Christ. But the Hypocrites hope is, that though Christ put him upon these promises, he will never put him to the tryal for performance, nor never call him to forsake all indeed: And therefore, if ever he be put to it, he will not perform the promise which he hath made. He is like a Patient that promiseth to be wholly ruled by his Physician, as hoping that he will put him upon nothing which he cannot bear. But when the bitter Potion or the Vomit cometh, he saith, I cannot take it, I had hoped you would have given me gentler Physick.

Luk. 14. 26, 27, 28, 33.

Dir. 6.

Direct. 6. And accordingly take heed lest while you pretend to live to God, and to use all that you have as his Stewards for his service, you should deceitfully put him off with the leavings of your lusts, and give him only so much as your flesh can spare. It is not likely that the damned Gentleman, Luke 16. was never used to give any thing to the poor; else what did Beggars use his doors for? When Christ promiseth to reward Men for a Cup of cold Water, the meaning is, when they would give better if they had it. There are few rich men of all that go to Hell, that were so void of humane compassion, or of the sense of their own reputation, as to give nothing at all to the Poor: But God will have all, though not all for the Poor, yet all imployed as he commandeth, and will not be put off with your Tithes or Scraps. His Stewards confess that they have nothing of their own.

Dir. 7.

Direct. 7. Let the use of your riches in prosperity shew, that you do not dissemble when you promise to forsake all for Christ in trial, rather than forsake him. You may know whether you are true or false in your Covenant with Christ, and what you would do in a day of trial, by what you do in your daily course of life. How can that man leave all at once for Christ, that cannot daily serve him with his riches, nor leave that little which God requireth, in the discharge of his duty in pious and charitable works? What is it to leave all for God, but to leave all rather than to sin against God? And will he do that, who daily sinneth against God by omission of good works, because he cannot leave some part? Study as faithful Stewards, to serve God to the utmost with what you have now, and then you may expect that his Grace should enable you to leave all in trial, and not prove withering Hypocrites and Apostates.

Dir. 8. Luk. 12. 21. Acts 10. 1, 2, 3.

Direct. 8. Be not rich to your selves, or to your fleshly Wills and Lusts: But remember that the rich are bound to be Spiritual, and to mortifie the flesh, as well as the poor. Let Lust fare never the better for all the fulness of your Estates! Fast and humble your Souls nevertheless; please an inordinate appetite never the more in meat or drink, live never the more in unprofitable idleness. The rich must labor as constantly as the poor, though not in the same kind of work. The rich must live soberly, temperately and heavenly, and must as much mortifie all fleshly desires as the poor. You have the same Law and Master, and have no more liberty to indulge your Lusts, but if you live after the flesh, you shall die as well as any other. O the partiality of carnal minds! They can see the fault of a poor man, that goeth sometime to an Alehouse, who perhaps drinketh Water (or that which is next it) all the Week: When they never blame themselves, who scarce miss a meal without Wine, and strong Drink, and eating that which their Appetite desireth? They think it a crime in a poor man, to spend but one day in many, in such idleness, as they themselves spend most of their lives in. Gentlemen think that their riches allow them to live without any profitable labor, and to gratifie their flesh, and fare deliciously every day: As if it were their priviledge to be sensual, and to be damned? Rom. 8. 1, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 13.

Dir. 9.

Direct. 9. Nay, remember that you are called to far greater self-denial, and fear, and watchfulness against sensuality, and wealthy vices than the poor are. Mortification is as necessary to your salvation, as to theirs; but much more difficult. If you live after the flesh, you shall die as well as they. And how much stronger are your temptations! Is not he easilier drawn to gluttony or excess in quality or quantity, who hath daily a Table of Plenty, and inticing delicious Food before him, than he that never seeth such a temptation once in half a year? Is it not harder for him to deny his appetite, who hath the baits of pleasant meats and drinks daily set upon his Table, than for him that is seldom in sight of them, and perhaps in no possibility of procuring them; and therefore hath nothing to sollicit his Appetite or Thoughts? Doubtless the rich, if ever they will be saved, must watch more constantly, and set a more resolute guard upon the flesh, and live more in fear of sensuality than the poor, as they live in greater temptations and dangers?

Dir. 10.

Direct. 10. Know therefore particularly what are the Temptations of Prosperity, that you may make a particular prosperous resistance. And they are especially these,

Jam. 5. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6.

1. Pride. The foolish heart of man is apt to swell upon the accession of so poor a matter as wealth; and men think they are got above their neighbors, and more honor and obeisance is their due, if they be but richer.

Ezek. 16.

2. Fulness of Bread. If they do not eat till they are sick, they think the constant and costly pleasing of their Appetite in Meats and Drinks, is lawful.

3. Idleness. They think he is not bound to labor, that can live without it, and hath enough.

4. Time wasting Sports and Recreations. They think their hours may be devoted to the flesh, when all their lives are devoted to it: They think their wealth alloweth them to play, and Court, and complement away that precious time, which no men have more need to redeem: They tell God, that he hath given them more time than they have need of, and and God will shortly cut it off, and tell them that they shall have no more.

Rom. 13. 13, 14. 5 Lust and Wantonness, Fulness and Idleness, Cherish both the Cogitations and Inclinations unto filthiness: They that live in Gluttony and Drunkenness, are like to live in Chambering and Wantonness.

6. Curiosity, and wasting their lives in a multitude of little ceremonious unprofitable things, to the exclusion of the great businesses of life. Well may we say, that Mens own Lusts are their Jaylors, and their Fetters, when we see to what a wretched kind of life, a multitude of the rich (especially Ladies and Gentlewomen) do condemn themselves. I should pity one in Bridewel, that were but tied so to spend their time: When they have poor, ignorant, proud, worldly, peevish, hypocritical, ungodly Souls to be healed, and a life of great and weighty business to do for eternity, they have so many little things all day to do, that leave them little time to converse with God, or with their Consciences, or to do any thing that is really worth the living for: They have so many fine Cloaths and Ornaments to get and use, and so many rooms to beautifie and adorn, and so many Servants to talk with, that attend them, and so many Dishes and Sawces to bespeak, and so many Flowers to plant, and dress, and walks, and places of pleasure to mind; and so many Visitors to entertain with whole hours of unprofitable talk; and so many great persons accordingly to visit; and so many Laws of Ceremony and Complement to observe, and so many Games to Play (perhaps) and so many hours to sleep, that the day, the year, their lives are gone, before they could have while to know what they lived for? And if God had but damned them to spend their days in picking Straws, or filling a bottomless Vessel, or to spend their days as they chuse themselves to spend them, it would have tempted us to think him unmerciful to his Creatures.

Luke 10. 40, 41, 42.

7. Tyranny and Oppression: When Men are above others, how commonly do they think that their wills must be fulfilled by all men, and none must cross them, and they live as if all others below them were as their Beasts, that are made for them, to serve and please them.

Dir. 11. Joh. 15. 5. Mark 12. 41. Luke 12. 48. Direct. 11. Let your fruitfulness to God, and the publick good, be proportionable to your possessions. Do as much more good in the World than the Poor, as you are better furnished for it than they. Let your Servants have more time for the learning of Gods Word, and let your Families be the more religiously instructed and governed. To whom God giveth much, from them he doth expect much.

Dir. 12. Matth. 5. 16. Gal. 6. 7, 8, 9, 10. 1 Pet. 2. 12. Heb. 10. 24. Tit. 3. 8, 14. & 2. 7. Eph. 2. 10. 1 Tim. 2. 10. & 5. 10. Act 9. 36. Direct. 12. Do not only take occasions of doing good when they are thrust upon you; but study how to do all the good you can, as those that are zealous of good works, Tit. 2. 14. Zeal of good works will make you. 1. Plot and contrive for them. 2. Consult and ask advice for them. 3. It will make you glad when you meet with a hopeful opportunity. 4. It will make you do it largely, and not sparingly, and by the halfs. 5. It will make you do it speedily, without unwilling backwardness and delay. 6. It will make you do it constantly to your lives end. 7 It will make you pinch your own flesh, and suffer somewhat your selves to do good to others. 8. It will make you labor in it as your Trade, and not only consent that others do good at your charge. 9. It will make you glad when good is done, and not to grudge at what it cost you. 10. In a word, it will make your Neighbors to be to you as your selves, and the pleasing of God to be above your selves, and therefore to be as glad to do good, as to receive it.

Direct. 13. Do good both to Mens Souls and Bodies; but always let bodily benefits be conferred in order to those of the Soul, and in due subordination, and not for the Body alone. And observe the many other Rules of good Works, more largely laid down, Tom. 1. Chap. 3. Direct. 10. Dir. 13.

Direct. 14. Ask your selves often, How you shall wish at death and judgment, your estates had been laid out; and accordingly now use them. Why should not a Man of Reason do that which he knoweth before hand he shall vehemently wish that he had done? Dir. 14.

Direct. 15. As your care must be in a special manner for your Children and Families; so take heed of the common Error of Worldlings, who think their Children must have so much, as that God and their own Souls have very little. When selfish Men can keep their Wealth no longer to themselves, they leave it to their Children, who are as their surviving selves. And all is cast into this Gulf, except some inconsiderable parcels. Dir. 15.

Direct. 16. Keep daily account of your use and improvement of your Masters Talents. Not that you should too much remember your own good works, but remember to do them; and therefore ask your selves, What good have I done with all that I have, this day or week? Dir. 16. Matth. 25. 14, 15.

Direct. 17. Look not for long life; for then you will think that a long journy needeth great provisions, but die daily, and live as those that are going to give up their account: And then Conscience will force you to ask, Whether you have been faithful Stewards, and to lay up a Treasure in Heaven, and to make you Friends of the Mammon that others use to unrighteousness, and to lay up a good Foundation for the time to come, and to be glad that God hath given you that, the improvement of which may further the good of others, and your Salvation. Living and dying, let it be your care and business to do good. Dir. 17. 1 Tim. 6. 18. 1 Cor. 4. 1, 2. Luke 16. 10. 1 Tim. 1. 25.

CHAP. XXIX.

Directions for the Aged (and Weak.)

HAving before opened the Duties of Children to God and to their Parents, I shall give no other particular Directions to the Young, but shall next open the special Duties of the Aged.

§. 1. Direct. 1. The old and weak have a louder call from God than others, to be accurate in examining the state of their Souls, and making their calling and election sure. Whether they are yet regenerate and sanctified or not? Is a most important Question for every Man to get resolved; but especially for them that are neareſt to their end. Ask counsel therefore, of some able faithful Minister or Friend, and let your selves diligently to try your title to Eternal Life, and to cast up your accounts, and see how all things stand between God and you: And if you should find your selves in an unrenewed state, as you love your Souls, delay no longer, but presently be humbled for your so long and sottish neglect, of so necessary and great a work. Go, open your case to some able Minister, and lament your sin, and flie to Christ, and set your hearts on God, as your felicity, and change your company and course, and rest not any longer in so dangerous and miserable a case: The more full directions for your Conversion I have given before, in the beginning of the Book and in divers others; and therefore shall say no more to such, it being others that I am here especially to direct. Dir. 1.

In Augustines Speech to the People of Hippo, for Eradius his Succession, he saith [In Infantia speratur meritia, & in puritia speratur adolescentia, in adolescentia speratur inventus, in juventute speratur gravitas, & in gravitate speratur senectus: Verum contingat incertum est; est tamen quod speretur. Senectus autem aliam gratiam quam speret, non habet.] Vid. Papor. Minor. in vita Cœlesti. fol. 48.

Dir. 2. §. 2. Direct. 2. Cast back your eyes upon the sins of all your life, that you may perceive how humble those Souls should be, that have sinned so long as you have done: And may feel what need you have of Christ to pardon so long a life of sin. Though you have repented and been justified long ago, yet you have daily sinned since you were justified, and though all be forgiven that is repented of, yet must it be still before your eyes, both to keep you humble, and continue the exercise of that Repentance, and drive you to Christ, and make you thankful! Yea, your forgiveness and justification, are yet short of perfection (whatever some may tell you to the contrary) as well as your sanctification. For, 1. Your justification is yet given you, but conditionally as to its continuance, even upon condition of your perseverance. 2. And the temporal chastisement, and the pains of death, and the long absence of the Body from Heaven, and the present wants of Grace, and comfort, and communion with God, are punishments which are not yet forgiven executively. 3. And the final sentence of justification at the day of judgment (which is the perfectest sort) is yet to come: And therefore you have still reason enough to review and repent of all that is past, and still pray for the pardon of all the sins that ever you committed, which were forgiven you before. So many years sinning should have a very serious repentance, and lay you low before the Lord.

Dir. 3. §. 3. Direct. 3. Cleave closer now to Christ than ever. Remembring that you have a life of sin, for him to answer for, and save you from. And that the time is near, when you shall have more sensible need of him, than ever you have had. You must shortly be cast upon him as your Saviour, Advocate, and Judge to determine the Question; What shall become of you unto all eternity, and to perfect all that ever he hath done for you, and accomplish all that you have sought and hoped for. And now your natural life decayeth, it is time to retire to him that is your Root, and to look to the Life that is hid with Christ in God, Col. 3. 4. And to him that is preparing you a Mansion with himself; and whose office it is to receive the departing Souls of true Believers. Live therefore in the daily thoughts of Christ, and comfort your Souls in the belief of that full supply and safety which you have in him.

Dir. 4. §. 4. Direct. 4. Let the ancient Mercies and experiences of Gods love through all your lives, be still before you, and fresh upon your minds, that they may kindle your love and thankfulness to God, and may feed your own delight and comfort, and help you the easier to submit to future weaknesses and death. Eaten Bread must not be forgotten: A thankful remembrance preserveth all your former Mercies still fresh and green, the sweetness and benefit may remain, tho' the thing it self be past and gone. This is the great priviledge of an aged Christian; that he hath many years Mercy more to think on, than others have. Every one of those Mercies was sweet to you by it self, at the time of your receiving it (except afflictions, and misunderstood and unobserved Mercies:) And then how sweet should all together be? If unthankfulness have buried any of them, let thankfulness give them now a Resurrection. What delightful work is it for your thoughts, to look back to your Childhood, and remember how mercy brought you up, and conducted you to every place that you have lived in, and provided for you, and preserved you, and heard your Prayers, and disposed of all things for your good: How it brought you under the Means of Grace, and blest them to you; and how the Spirit of God began and carried on the Work of Grace upon your hearts? I hope you have recorded the wonders of Mercy ever upon your hearts, with which God hath filled up all your lives? And is it not a pleasant work in old Age to ruminate upon them? If a Traveller delight to talk of his travels, and a Soldier or Seaman, upon his Adventures, how sweet should it be to a Christian to peruse all the conduct of Mercy through his life, and all the operations of the Spirit upon his heart. Thankfulness taught Men heretofore, to make their Mercies, as it were, attributes of their God. As the God that brought them out of the Land of Egypt, was the Name of the God of Israel. And Gen. 48. 15. Jacob delighteth himself in his old age, in such reviews of Mercy [The God which fed me all my life long unto this day. The Angel which redeemed me from all evil, bless the lads.] Yea, such thankful reviews of ancient Mercies, will force an ingenuous Soul, to a quieter submission, to infirmities, sufferings and death; and make us say as Job, Shall we receive good at the hands of God, and not evil; and as old Simeon, Lord, now lettest thou thy servant depart in peace. It is a powerful rebuke of all discontents, and maketh death it self more welcome, to think how large a share of mercy we have had already in the World.

Dir. 5. §. 5. Direct. 5. Draw forth the treasure of wisdom and experience, which you have been so long in laying up, to instruct the ignorant, and warn the unexperienced and ungodly that are about you, Job 32. 7. Days should speak, and multitude of Years should teach wisdom: The aged women must teach the young women to be sober, to love their Husbands and Children, to be discreet, chaste, keepers at home, good, obedient to their own Husbands, that the word of God be not blasphemed, Tit. 2. 3, 4, 5. It is supposed that time and experience hath taught you more than is known to raw and ignorant youth. Tell them what you have suffered by the deceits of sin: Tell them the method and danger of temptations: Tell them what you lost by delaying your Repentance: and how God recovered you? and how the spirit wrought upon your souls: Tell them what comforts you have found in God? what safety and sweetness in a holy life? how sweet the holy Scriptures have been to you? how prayers have prevailed? how the promises of God have been fulfilled? and what mercies and great deliverances you have had. Tell them how good you have found God; and how bad you have found sin, and how vain you have found the world. Warn them to resist their fleshly lusts, and to take heed of the ensnaring flatteries of sin: Acquaint them truly with the History of publick sins and judgments and mercies in the times which you have lived in. God hath made this the duty of the aged, that the Fathers should tell the wonders of his works and mercies to their children, that the ages to come may praise the Lord, Deut. 4. 10. Psal. 78. 4, 5, 6.

Dir. 6. §. 6. Direct. 6. The aged must be examples of wisdom, gravity and holiness unto the younger. Where should they find any virtues in eminence, if not in you, that have so much time and helps and experiences? It may well be expected that nothing but savoury, wise and holy, come from your mouths: and nothing unbeseeming wisdom and godliness, be seen in your lives. Such as you would have your Children after you to be, such shew your selves to them in all your Conversation.

Dir. 7. §. 7. Direct. 7. Especially it belongeth to you, to repress the heats, and dividing, contentious, and censorious disposition, of the younger sort of professors of Godliness. They are in the heat of their blood, and want the knowledge and experience of the aged, to guide guide their zeal. They have not their ſenſes yet exerciſed in diſcerning good and evil, Heb. 5. 12. They are not able to try the ſpirits: They are yet but as children, apt to be toſſed to and fro, and carried up and down with every wind of Doctrine, after the craft and ſubtilty of deceivers, Eph. 4. 14. The Novices are apt to be puffed up with pride, and fall into the condemnation of the Devil, 1 Tim. 3. 6. They never ſaw the iſſue of errors and ſects and parties, and what diviſions and contentions tend to, as you have done. And therefore it belongeth to your gravity and experience, to call them into Unity, Charity, and Peace, and to keep them from proving firebrands in the Church, and raſhly over-running their underſtandings and the truth.

Dir. 8. §. 8. Direct. 8. Of all men, you muſt live in the greateſt contempt of earthly things, and leaſt entangle your ſelves in the love or needleſs troubles of the world. You are like to need it and uſe it but a little while? A little may ſerve one that is ſo near his journies end? You have had the greateſt experience of its vanity; You are ſo near the great things of another World, that methinks you ſhould have no leiſure to remember this, or room for any unneceſſary thoughts or ſpeeches of it. As your bodies are leſs able for worldly employment than others, ſo accordingly you are allowed to retire from it more than others, for your more ſerious thoughts of the life to come. It is a ſign of the bewitching power of the world, and of the folly and unreaſonableneſs of ſin, to ſee the Aged uſually as Covetous as the young; and men that are going out of the world, to love it as fondly, and ſcrape for it as eagerly, as if they never looked to leave it. You ſhould rather give warning to the younger ſort, to take heed of Covetouſneſs, and of being inſnared by the world, and while they labour in it faithfully with their hands, to keep their

Dir. 9. hearts entirely for God.

§. 9. Direct. 9. You ſhould highly eſteem every minute of your time, and loſe none in idleneſs or unneceſſary things, but be always doing or getting ſome good; and do what you do with all your might. For you are ſure now that your time will not be long; How little have you left, to make all the reſt of your preparation in for eternity? The young may dye quickly, but the old know that their time will be but ſhort. Though nature decay, yet grace can grow in life and ſtrength; and when your outward man periſheth, the inner man may be renewed day by day, 2 Cor. 4. 16. Time is a moſt precious commodity to all; but eſpecially to them that have but a little more, to determine the queſtion in, Whether they muſt live in Heaven or Hell for ever. Though you cannot do your worldly buſineſſes as heretofore, yet you have variety of holy exerciſes to be imployed in; Bodily eaſe may beſeem you, but Idleneſs is

Dir. 10. worſe in you than in any.

§. 10. Direct. 10. When the decay of your ſtrength or memory or parts, doth make you unable to read or pray or meditate by your ſelves, ſo much or ſo well as heretofore, make the more uſe of the more lively gifts and help of others. Be the more in hearing others, and in eyning with them in prayer, that their memory and zeal and utterance may help, to lift you

Dir. 11. up and carry you on.

§. 11. Direct. 11. Take not a decay of nature, and of thoſe gifts and works which depend thereon, for a decay of grace. Though your memory and utterance and fervor of affection, abate as your natural heat abateth, yet be not diſcouraged, but remember that you may for all this grow in grace; if you do but grow in holy wiſdom, in judgment, and a higher eſteem of God and holineſs, and a greater diſeſteem of all the vanities of the world, and a firmer reſolution to cleave to God and truſt on Chriſt, and never to turn to the world and ſin; This is your growth in grace.

§. 12. Direct. 12. Be patient under all the infirmities and inconveniences of old age. Be not diſcontented at them, nor repine not, nor grow peeviſh and froward to thoſe about you. This is a common temptation which the aged ſhould carefully reſiſt. You knew at firſt that you had a body that muſt decay; If you would not have had it till a decaying age, why were you ſo unwilling to dye? If you would, who do you repine? Bleſs God for the days of youth and ſtrength and health and eaſe which you have had already! and grudge not that corruptible fleſh decayeth. Dir. 12.

§. 13. Direct. 13. Underſtand well that paſſive obedience is that which God calleth you to in your age and weakneſs, and in which you muſt ſerve and honour him in the concluſion of your labour. When you are unfit for any great or publick works, and active obedience hath not opportunity to exerciſe it ſelf as heretofore, it is then as acceptable to God that you honour him by patient ſuffering: And therefore it is a great error of them that wiſh for the death of all that are impotent, decripit and bed-rid, as if they were utterly unſerviceable to God? I tell you, it is no ſmall ſervice that they may do, not only by their prayers, and their ſecret Love to God, but by being examples of faith and patience and heavenly-mindedneſs, and confidence and joy in God, to all about them. Grudge not then if God will thus imploy you. Dir. 13.

§. 14. Direct. 14. Let your thoughts of death, and preparations for it, be as ſerious as if death were juſt at hand. Though all your life be little enough to prepare for death, and it be a work that ſhould be done as ſoon as you have the uſe of Reaſon, yet age and weakneſs call lowder to you, preſently to prepare without delay. Do therefore all that you would fain find done, when your laſt ſickneſs cometh: that unreadineſs to dye may not make death terrible, nor your age uncomfortable. Dir. 14.

§. 15. Direct. 15. Live in the joyful expectations of your change, as becometh one that is ſo near to Heaven, and looketh to live with Chriſt for ever. Let all the high and glorious things, which faith apprehendeth, now ſhew their power in the love and joy and longings of your ſoul. There is nothing in which the weak and aged can more honour Chriſt and do good to others, than in joyful expectation of their change, and an earneſt deſire to be with Chriſt. This will do much to convince unbelievers, that the promiſes are true, and that Heaven is real, and that a holy life is indeed the beſt, which hath ſo happy an end: When they ſee you higheſt in jour joys, at the time when others are deepeſt in diſtreſs; and when you rejoyce as one that is entring upon his happineſs, when all the happineſs of the ungodly is at an end; this will do more than many Sermons, to perſwade a ſinner to a holy life. I know that this is not eaſily attained; But a thing ſo ſweet and profitable to your ſelves, and ſo uſeful to the good of others, and ſo much tending to the honour of God, ſhould be laboured after with all your diligence: and then you may expect Gods bleſſing on your labour. Read to this uſe the fourth part of my Saints Reſt. Dir. 15.

CHAP. XXX.

Directions for the Sick.

THough the chief part of our preparation for Death be in the time of Health, and it is a work for which the longeſt life is not too long; yet beeauſe the folly of unconverted ſinners is ſo great as to forget what they were born for, till they ſee death at hand, and becauſe there is a ſpecial preparation neceſſary for the beſt, I ſhall here lay down ſome Directions for the Sick: And I ſhall reduce them to theſe four heads. 1. What muſt be done to make Death safe to us, that it may be our passage to Heaven and not to Hell. 2. What must be done to make sickness profitable to us? 3. What must be done to make Death comfortable to us, that we may dye in Peace and Joy? 4. What must be done to make our sickness profitable to others about us?

Tit. 1. Directions for a safe Death, to secure our Salvation.

THe Directions of this sort are especially necessary to the unconverted impenitent sinner; yet needful also to the Godly themselves: and therefore I shall distinctly speak to both.

I. Directions for an unconverted sinner in his sickness.

It is a very dreadful case to be found by sickness in an unconverted state. There is so great a work to be done, and so little time to do it in, and soul and body so unfit and undisposed for it, and the misery so great (even everlasting torment) that will follow so certainly and so quickly if it be undone, that one would think it should overwhelm the understanding and heart of any man with astonishment and horror, to foresee such a condition in the time of his health; much more to find himself in it in his sickness. And though one would think that the near approach of Death, and the nearness of another world, should be unresistibly powerful to convert a sinner; so that few or none should dye unconverted, however they lived, yet Scripture and sad experience declare the contrary, that most men dye as well as live, in an unsanctified and miserable state. For, 1. A life of sin doth usually settle a man in ignorance or unbelief or both: so that sickness findeth him in such a dungeon of Darkness, that he is but lost and confounded in his fears, and knoweth not whither he is going, nor what he hath to do. 2. And also sin wofully hardeneth the heart, and the long resisted spirit of God forsaketh them, and giveth them over to themselves in sickness, who would not be ruled and sanctified by him in their health: And such remain like blocks or beasts even to the last. 3. And the nature of sickness and approaching death, doth tend more to affright, than to renew the soul, and rather to breed fear and trouble than love. And though grief and fear be good preparatives and helps, yet it is the love of God and holiness in which the souls Regeneration and Renovation doth consist; and there is no more holiness than there is love and willingness. And many a one that is affrighted into strong Repentings and cryes and prayers and promises, and seem to themselves and others to be Converted, do yet either dye in their sins and misery, or return to their unholy lives when they recover, being utter strangers to that true Repentance which reneweth the heart, as sad experience doth too often testifie. 4. And many poor sinners finding that they have so short a time, do end it in meer amazement and terror, not knowing how to compose their thoughts, to examine their hearts and lives, nor to exercise faith in Christ, nor to follow any Directions that are given them; but lye in trembling and astonishment, wholly taken up with the fears of Death, much worse than a beast that is going to be butchered. 5. And the very pains of the body, do so divert or hinder the thoughts of many, that they can scarce mind any spiritual things, with such a composedness as is necessary to so great a work. 6. And the greatest number being partly confounded in ignorance, and partly withheld by backwardness and undisposedness, and partly disheartned by thinking it impossible to become new creatures, and get a regenerate heavenly heart on such a sudden, do force themselves to hope that they shall be saved without it, and that though they are sinners, yet that kind of Repentance which they have, will serve the turn and be accepted, and God will be more merciful than to damn them. And this false hope they think they are necessitated to take up: For there is but two other ways to be taken: The one is utterly to despair, and both Scripture and Reason, and Nature it self are against that: The other way is to be truly converted and won to the Love of God and Heaven by a lively faith in Jesus Christ: And they have no such faith: and to this they are strange and undisposed, and think it impossible to be done: And if they must have no hopes but upon such terms as these, they think they shall have none at all: Or else if they hear that there is no other hope, and that none but the holy can be saved; they will force themselves to hope that they have all this, and that they are truly converted, and become new creatures, and do love God and holiness above all: not because indeed it is so, but because they would have it so, for fear of being damned: And instead of finding that they are void of Faith, and love and holiness, and labouring to get a renewed soul, they think it a nearer way to make themselves believe that it is so already. And thus in their presumption, self-deceiving and false hopes, they linger out that little time that is left them to be converted in, till death open their eyes, and Hell do undeceive them. 7. And the same Devil, and wicked men his Instruments, that kept them in health from true Repentance, will be as diligent to keep them from it in their sickness; and will be loth to lose all at the last cast, which they had been winning all the time before. And if the Devil can but keep them in his power, till sickness come and take them up with pain and fear, he will hope to keep them a few days longer, till he have finished that which he had begun and carried on so far. And if there be here and there one, that will be held no longer by false hopes and presumption, he will at last think to take them off by desperation, and make them believe that there is no remedy.

§. 4. And indeed it is a thing so difficult, and unlikely, to convert a sinner in all his pain and weakness at the last, that even the Godly friends of such do many times, even let them alone, as thinking that there is little or no hope. But this is a very sinful course: As long as there is life, there is some hope. And as long as there is hope, we must use the means. A Physician will try the best remedies he hath, in the most dangerous disease which is not desperate: For when it is certain that there is no hope without them, if they do no good, they do no harm. So must we try the saving of a poor soul, while there is life and any hope; For if once death end their time and hopes, it will be then too late; and they will be out of our reach and help for ever. To those that sickness findeth in so sad a case, I shall give here but a few brief Directions, because I have done it more at large in the first Tome and first Chapter, whither I refer them.

§. 5. Direct. 1. Set speedily and seriously to the Judging of your selves, as those that are going to be judged of God. And do it in the manner following. For examination.

Dir. 1.

1. Do it willingly and resolvedly, as knowing that it is now no time to remain uncertain of your everlasting state, if you can possibly get acquainted with it. Is it not time for a man to know himself, whether he be a sanctified believer or not, when he is just going to appear before his maker, and there be judged as he is found? 2. Do it impartially; as one that is not willing to find himself deceived, as soon as death hath acquainted him with the truth: O take heed, as you love your souls, of being foolishly tender of your selves, and resolving for fear of being troubled at your misery, to believe that you are safe, whether it be true or false. This is the way that Thousands are undone by. Thinking that you are sanctified will neither prove you so, nor make you so: no more than thinking that you are well, will prove or make you well. And what good will it do you to think you are pardoned and ſhall be ſaved, for a few days longer, and then to find too late in Hell that you were miſtaken? Is the caſe of ſo ſhort a deceit worth all the pain and loſs that it will coſt you? Alaſs poor Soul! God knoweth it is not needleſly to affright thee, that we deſire to convince thee of thy miſery! We do not cruelly inſult over thee or deſire to torment thee? But we pity thee in ſo ſad a caſe: To ſee an unſanctified perſon ready to paſs into another world, and to be doomed unto endleſs miſery, and will not know it till he is there? Our principal reaſon of opening your danger is becauſe it is neceſſary to your eſcaping it: If Soul Diſeaſes were like Bodily Diſeaſes which may ſometimes be cured without the Patients knowing them and the danger of them, we would never trouble you at ſuch a time as this. But it will not be ſo done: You muſt underſtand your danger if you will be ſaved from it: Therefore be impartial with your ſelf if you are wiſe, and be truly willing to know the worſt. 3. In judging your ſelves proceed by the ſame Rule or Law that God will judge you by; that is, by the word of God revealed in the Goſpel. For your work now is not to ſteal a little ſhort-lived quiet to your Conſciences, but to know how God will judge your ſouls, and whether he will doom you to endleſs joy or miſery: And how can you know this, but by that Law or Rule that God will judge you by? And certainly God will judge you, by the ſame Law or Rule by which he Governed you, or which he gave you to live by in the world. It will go never the better or worſe there with any man, for his good or bad conceits of himſelf, if they were his miſtakes; But juſt what God hath ſaid in his word, that he will do with any man, that will he do with him in the day of judgment. All ſhall be juſtified whom the Goſpel juſtifieth; and all ſhall be condemned that it condemneth: And therefore judge your ſelf by it: By what ſigns you may know an unſanctified man, I have told you before, Tom. 1. Chap. 1. Dir. 8. And by what ſigns true grace may be known I told you before, in preparation for the Sacrament. 4. If you cannot ſatisfie your ſelf about your own condition, adviſe with ſome Godly able Miniſter or other Chriſtian that is beſt acquainted with you: That knoweth how you have lived towards God and man; or at leaſt open all your heart and life to him that he may know it; And if he tell you that he feareth you are yet unſanctified, you have the more reaſon to fear the worſt. But then be ſure that he be not a carnal ungodly worldly man himſelf; For they that flatter and deceive themſelves, are not unlike to do ſo by others: Such blind deceivers will dawb over all, and bid you never trouble your ſelf; but even comfort you as they comfort themſelves, and bid you believe that all is well, and it will be well; or will make you believe that ſome forced confeſſion and unſound Repentance, will ſerve inſtead of true Converſion. But a man that is going to the bar of God, ſhould be loth to be deceived by himſelf or others.

§. 6. Direct. 2. If by a due examination you find your ſelf unſanctified, bethink you ſeriouſly of your caſe, both what you have done, and what a condition you are in, till you are truly humbled, and willing of any conditions that God ſhall offer you for your deliverance. Conſider how fooliſhly you have done, how rebelliouſly, how unthankfully, to forſake your God, and forget your Souls, and loſe all your time, and abuſe all Gods mercies, and leave undone the work that you were made and preſerved and redeemed for! Alaſs, did you never know till now that you muſt dye? and that you had all your time to make preparation for an endleſs life which followeth death? Were you never warned by Miniſter or Friend? Were you never told of the neceſſity of a holy heavenly life; and of a regenerate ſanctified ſtate, till now? O what could you have done more unwiſely, or wickedly, than to caſt away a life that eternal life ſo much depended on? and to refuſe your Saviour and his grace and mercies, till your laſt extremity? Is this the time to look after a new birth and to begin your life, when you are at the end of it? O what have you done to delay ſo great a work till now! And now if you die before you are regenerate, you are loſt for ever. O humble your Souls before the Lord! Lament your folly; and preſently condemn your ſelves before him, and make out to him for mercy while there is hope.

Dir. 2. For Humiliation and Repentance.

§ 7. Direct. 3. When you are humbled for your ſin and miſery, and willing of mercy upon any terms, believe that yet your caſe is not Remedileſs, but that Jeſus Chriſt hath given himſelf to God a Sacrifice for your ſins, and is ſo ſure and All-ſufficient a Saviour, that yet nothing can hinder you from pardon and ſalvation, but your own impenitence and unbelief? Come to him therefore as the Saviour of Souls, that he may teach you the will of God, and reconcile you to his Father, and pardon your ſins, and renew you by his Spirit, and acquaint you with his Fathers Love, and ſave you from damnation, and make you heirs of life eternal. For all this may yet poſſibly be done, as ſhort as your time is like to be: And it will yet be long of you, if it be not done. The Covenant of Grace doth promiſe pardon and ſalvation to every penitent Believer whenever they truly turn to God, without excepting any hour, or any perſon in all the world. Nothing but an unbelieving hardned heart, reſiſting his grace, and unwilling to be holy, can deprive you of pardon and ſalvation, even at the laſt. It was a moſt fooliſh wickedneſs of you to put it off till now: But yet for all that, if you are not yet ſaved, it ſhall not be long of Chriſt but you: Yet he doth freely offer you his mercy? and he will be your Lord and Saviour if you will not refuſe him: Yet the matchſha ll not break on his part: See that it break not on your part and you ſhall be ſaved. Know therefore what he is, as God and Man, and what a bleſſed work he hath undertaken, to Redeem a ſinful miſerable world, and what he hath already done for us in his life and doctrine, in his death and ſufferings by his Reſurrection and his Covenant of Grace, and what he is now doing at his Fathers right hand, in making interceſſion for Penitent Believers, and what an endleſs Glory he is preparing for them, and how he will ſave to the uttermoſt, all that come to God by him. O yet let your heart even leap for Joy, that you have an all-ſufficient willing gracious Saviour? whoſe Grace aboundeth more than ſin aboundeth? If the Devils and poor damned Souls in Hell were yet but in your caſe, and had your offers and your hopes, how glad do you imagine they would be? Caſt your ſelves therefore in Faith and Confidence upon this Saviour: Truſt your Souls upon his Sacrifice and Merit, for the pardon of your ſins, and peace with God: Beg of him yet the renewing grace of his Spirit: Be willing to be made holy, and a new Creature, and to live a holy life if you ſhould ſurvive: Reſolve to be wholly ruled by him; and give up your ſelf abſolutely to him as your Saviour, to be juſtified and ſanctified and ſaved by him, and then truſt in him for everlaſting happineſs! O happy Soul, if yet you can do thus, without deceit.

Dir. 3. For Faith in Chriſt.

§. 8. Direct. 4. Believe now and conſider what God is and will be to your Soul, and what Love he hath ſhewed to you by Chriſt, and what endleſs Joy and Glory you may have with him in Heaven for ever, not only in loving all the ſins that you have done: And think what the world and the fleſh hath done for you, in comparſon of God: Think of this till you fall in Love with God, and

Dir. 4. For a new heart, and the love of God, and a reſolution for a holy obedient life.

and till your hearts and hopes are set on Heaven, and turned from this world and flesh, and till you feel your self in Love with holiness, and till you are firmly Resolved in the strength of Christ to live a holy life, if God recover you: and then you are truly sanctified, and shall be saved if you dye in this condition. Take heed that you take not a Repentance and good purposes which come from nothing but fear, to be sufficient: If you recover, all this may dye again, when your fear is over; You are not sanctified, nor God hath not your hearts, till your Love be to him; that which you do thro' fear alone, you had rather not do if you might be excused; And therefore your hearts are still against it. When the feeling of Gods unspeakable Love in Christ, doth melt and overcome your hearts; when the infinite goodness of God himself, and his mercies to your Souls and Bodies, do make you take him as more lovely and desirable than all the world; when you so believe the Heavenly Joys above, as to desire them more than earthly pleasures, when you Love God better than worldly prosperity, and when a life of such Love and Holiness seemeth better to you, than all the merriments of sinners, and you had rather be a Saint, than the most prosperous of the ungodly, and are firmly resolved for a holy life, if God recover you then are you indeed in a state of grace, and not till then; This must be your case, or you are undone for ever. And therefore meditate on the Love of Christ, and the Goodness of God, and the Joys of Heaven, and the happiness of Saints, and the misery of worldlings, and ungodly men; meditate on these till your eyes be opened, and your hearts be touched with a holy love, and Heaven and Holiness be the very things that you desire above all; and then you may boldly go to God, and believe that all your sins are pardoned; And it is not bare terrour, but these believing thoughts, of God and Heaven and Christ and Love, that must change your hearts and do the work.

§. 9. These four Directions truly practised, will yet set you on safe ground, as sad and dangerous as your condition is; But it is not the hearing of them, or the bare approbation of them that will serve the turn, to find out your sinful miserable state, and to be truly humbled for it, and to discern the Remedy which you have in Christ, and penitently and believingly to enter into his Covenant, and to see that your happiness is wholly in the love and fruition of God, and to believe the Glory prepared for the Saints, and to prefer it before all the prosperity of the world, and love it and set your hearts upon it, and to resolve on a holy life if you should recover, forsaking this deceitful world and flesh; all this is a work that is not so easily done as mentioned, and requireth your more serious fixed thoughts; and indeed had been fitter for your youthful vigor, than for a painful weak distempered state. But necessity is upon you; It must needs be yet done, and throughly and sincerely done, or you are lost for ever. And therefore do it as well as you can, and see that your hearts do not trifle and deceive you. In some respect you have greater helps than ever you had before; you cannot now keep up your hard-heartedness and security, by looking at Death as a great way off. You have now fuller experience, than ever you had before; what the flesh, and all its pleasures will come to, and what good your sinful sports, and recreations, and merriments will do you; and what all the riches, and greatness, and gallantry, and honors of the World are worth, and what they will do for you in the day of your necessity. You stand so near another World, and must so quickly appear before the Lord, that methinks a dead and senseless heart, should no longer be able to make you slight your God, your Saviour, and your endless life: And one would think that the flesh, and world, should never be able to deceive you any more. O happy Soul, if yet at last, you are not only frightned into an unsound Repentance, but can hate all sin, and love the Lord, and trust in Christ, and give up your self intirely to him, and set your heart upon that blessed Life, where you may see and love him perfectly for ever!

§. 10. Quest. But will so late Repentance serve the turn, for one that hath been so long ungodly? Quest. 1. Of late Repentance.

Answ. Yes, if it be sincere: But there is all the doubt; and that is it, that your Salvation now dependeth on.

Quest. But how may I know, whether it be sincere? Quest. 2.

Answ. 1. If you be not only frighted into it; but your very heart, and will, and love is changed. 2. If it extend both to the end, and the necessary means: So that you love God, and the Joys of Heaven, above all Earthly prosperity and pleasure; and also you had rather be perfectly holy, than live in all the delights of sin. And if you hate every known sin, and love the holy Ways and Servants of God, and this unfeignedly: This is a true change. 3. And if this Repentance and change be such as will hold, if God should recover you, and would shew it self in a new and holy and self-denying life; (which certainly it will do, if it come not only from fear, but from love:) But if you renounce the World, and the Flesh, against your Wills, because you know there is no remedy; and if you bid farewel to your worldly sinful pleasures, not because you love God better, but because you cannot keep them, though you would; and if you take not God, and Heaven as your Best, but only for better than Hell; but not as better than worldly prosperity, which yet you would chuse, if you had your choice. This kind of Repentance will never save you, and if you should recover, it would vanish away, and come to nothing, as soon as your fears of death are over, and you are returned to your worldly delights again. Though now in your extremity, you cry out never so confidently, O I had rather have Heaven than Earth, and I had rather have Christ and holiness, than all the pleasures and prosperity of sinners; yet if it be not from a renewed sanctified heart, that had rather be such indeed, but from meer necessity, and fear, and against the habit of your hearts and wills. This is but such a Repentance as Judas had, that is neither sincere at present, nor if you recover, will hold you to a holy life.

II. Directions to the Sanctified, for a safe departure.

§. 1. When the Soul is truly Converted and Sanctified, the principal business is dispatched, that is necessary to a safe departure: But yet I can't say that there is no more to be done. They were Godly Persons that are exhorted, 2 Pet. 1. 10. To give diligence to make their calling and election sure. Which being (as the Greek importeth) not only to make it known or certain; but to make it firm, doth signifie more than barely to discern it. These following duties are yet further necessary.

§. 2. Direct. 1. Satisfie not your selves that once you found your selves sincere; but, if your understandings be clear and free, renew the tryal; and if you are insufficient for it of your self, make use of the help of a faithful judicious Minister or Friend. For when a Man is going to the Bar of God, it concerneth him to make all as sure as possibly he can. Dir. 1.

§. 3. Direct. 2. Review your lives, and renew your Universal Repentance, for all the sins that ever you committed; and also let your particular Repentance extend to every particular sin which you remember; but especially repent of your most aggravated Soul-wounding sins. For if your Repentance be universal and Dir. 2.

and true, it will also be particular; and you will be specially humbled for your special sins: And search deep, and see that none escape you. And think not that you are not called to repent of them, or ask forgiveness, because you have repented of them long ago, and received a Pardon: For this is a thing to be done even to the last.

Dir. 3. §. 4. Direct. 3. Renew your Faith in Jesus Christ, and cast your Souls upon his Merits and Mediation. Satisfie not your selves that you have a habit of Faith, and that formerly you did believe; but flie to your trusty Rock and Refuge, and continue the exercise of your Faith, and again give up your Souls to Christ.

Dir. 4. §. 5. Direct. 4. Make it your chief work to stir up in your hearts, the love of God, and a desire to live with Christ in glory. Let those comforting and incouraging objects which are the instruments of this, be still in your thoughts: And if you can do this, it will be the surest proof of your title to the Crown.

Dir. 5. §. 6. Direct. 5. If you have wronged any by word or deed, be sure that you do your best to right them, and make them satisfaction; and if you have faln out with any, be reconciled to them. Leave not other Mens Goods to your Heirs or Executors: Restore what you have wrongfully gotten, before you leave your Legacies to any. Confess your faults, where you can do no more; and ask those forgiveness, whom you have injured; and leave not Mens names, or estates, or souls, under the effects of your former wrongs, so far as you are able to make them reparation.

Dir. 6. §. 7. Direct. 6. Be still taken up in your duty to God, even that which he now calleth you to, that you may not be found idle, or in the sins of omission; but may be most holy and fruitful at the last. Though sickness call you not to the all same duties, which were incumbent on you in your health; yet think not therefore, that there is no duty at all expected from the sick. Every Season and State hath its peculiar Duties (and its peculiar Mercies) which it much concerneth us to know. I shall anon tell you more particularly what they are.

Dir. 7. §. 8. Direct. 7. Be specially fortified and vigilant against the most dangerous temptations of Satan, by which he useth to assault the sick. Pray now especially, that God would not lead you into temptation, but deliver you from the evil one: For in your weakness you may be less fit to wrestle with them, than at another time. O beg of God, that as he hath upheld you, and preserved you till now, he would not forsake you at last in your extremity. Particularly,

Tem. 1. Hic labor extremus, longarum, hæc meta viarum est. Virgil. §. 9. Tempt. 1. One of the most dangerous temptations of the Enemy, is, To take the advantage of a Christians bodily weakness, to shake his Faith, and question his Foundations, and call him to dispute over his Principles again, Whether the Soul be immortal? And there be a Heaven, and a Hell? And whether Christ be the Son of God, and the Scriptures be Gods Word, &c. As if this had never been questioned, and scanned, and resolved before! It is a great deal of advantage that Satan expecteth by this malicious course. If he could, he would draw you from Christ to infidelity; but Christ prayeth for you, that your Faith may not fail: If he cannot do this, he would at least weaken your Faith, and hereby weaken every Grace: and he would hereby divert you from the more needful thoughts, which are suitable to your present state; and he would hereby distract you, and destroy your comforts, and draw you in your perplexities to dishonor God. Away therefore with these blasphemous and unseasonable motions; cast them from you, with abhorrence and disdain: It is no time now to be questioning your Foundations; you have done this more seasonably, when you were in a fitter case. A pained languishing Body, and a disturbed discomposed Mind, is unfit upon a surprise, to go back and dispute over all our Principles. Tell Satan, you owe him not so much service, nor will you so cast away those few hours and thoughts, for which you have so much better work. You have the witness in your selves, even the Spirit, and Image, and Seal of God. You have been converted and renewed by the power of that Word, which he would have you question; and you have found it to be owned by the Spirit of Grace, who hath made it mighty to pull down the strongest holds of sin. Tell Satan, you will not gratifie him so much, as to turn your holy heavenly desires, into a wrangling with him about those Truths which you have so often proved. You will not question now, the Being of that God who hath maintained you so long, and witnessed his Being and Goodness to you by a Life of Mercies; nor will you now question the Being or Truth of him that hath redeemed you, or of the Spirit or Word that hath sanctified, guided, comforted, and confirmed you. If he tell you, that you must prove all things, tell him, that this is not now to do; you have long proved the Truth and Goodness of your God, the Mercy of your Saviour, and the power of his holy Spirit and Word. It is now your work to live upon that Word, and fetch your hopes and comforts from it; and not to question it.

Tem. 2. §. 10. Tempt. 2. Another dangerous Temptation of Satan is, When he would perswade you to Despair, by causing you to misunderstand the tenor of the Gospel, or by thinking too narrowly and unworthily of Gods Mercy, or of the satisfaction of Christ. But because this Temptation doth usually tend more to discomfort the Soul, than to damn it, I shall speak more to it under Tit. 3.

Tem. 3. §. 11. Tempt. 3. Another dangerous Temptation is, When Satan would draw you to overlook your sins, and overvalue your Graces, and be proud of your good works; and so lay too much of your comfort upon your selves, and lose the sense of your need of Christ, or usurp any part of his Office, or his Honor. I shall afterward shew you how far you must look at any thing in your selves; but certainly, that which lifteth you up in Pride, or incroacheth on Christs Office, or would draw you to undervalue him, is not of God. Therefore keep humble, in the sense of your sinfulness and unworthiness, and cast away every motion which would carry you away from Christ, and make your selves, and your works, and righteousness, as a Saviour to your selves.

Tem. 4. §. 12. Tempt. 4. Another perillous Temptation is, by causing the thoughts of Death, and the Grave, and your doubts and fears about the World to come, to overcome the love of God, and (not only the comforts, but also) the desires and willingness of your hearts, to be with Christ. It will abate your love to God and Heaven, to think on them with too much estrangedness and terror. The Directions under Tit. 3. will help you against this Temptation.

Tem. 5. §. 13. Tempt. 5. Another dangerous Temptation is fetcht from the remnants of your worldly mindedness; when your Dignity, or Honor, your House, or Lands, your Relations and Friends, or your Pleasures and Contentments, are so sweet to you, that you are loth to leave them; and the thoughts of Death are grievous to you, because it taketh you from that which you over-love; and God and Heaven are the less desired, because you are loth to leave the World. Watch carefully against this great Temptation: Observe how it seeketh the very destruction of your Grace and Souls; and how it fighteth against your love to God and Heaven, and would undo all that Christ and his Spirit have been doing so long? Observe what a root of matter it findeth in your selves; ſelves; and therefore be the more humbled under it. Learn now what the world is, and how little the accommodations of the fleſh are worth, when you perceive what the end of all muſt be. Would you never die? Would you injoy your worldly things for ever? Had you rather have them, than to live with Chriſt in the Heavenly glory of the New Jeruſalem? If you had, it is your grievous ſin and folly; and yet you know that it is a deſire that you can never hope to attain. Die you muſt, whether you will or not! What is it then that you would ſtay for? Is it till the World be grown leſs pleaſant to you, and your love and minds be weaned from it? When ſhould that rather be than now? And what ſhould more effectually do it, than this dying condition that you are in? It is time for you to ſpit out theſe unwholſome pleaſures: and now to look up to the true, the holy, the unmeaſurable Everlaſting Pleaſures.

Tit. 2. Directions how to profit by our Sickneſs.

WHether it ſhall pleaſe God to recover you, or not, it is no ſmall benefit which you may get by his viſitation, if you do your part, and faithfully improve it, according to theſe Directions following.

Dir. 1. §. 1. Direct. 1. If you hear Gods call to a cloſer tryal of your hearts, concerning the ſincerity of your converſion; and thereby are brought to a more exact examination, and come to a truer acquaintance with your ſtate (be it good or bad) the benefit may be exceeding great. For if it be good, you may be much comforted, and confirmed, and fitted to give thanks and praiſe to God: And if it be bad, you may be awakened ſpeedily to look about you, and ſeek for a recovery.

Dir. 2. §. 2. Direct. 2. If in the review of your lives, you find out thoſe ſins which before you overlooked, or perceive the greatneſs of thoſe ſins which you before accounted ſmall, the benefit may be very great. For it helps to a more deep and ſound Repentance, and to a ſtronger Reſolution againſt all ſins, if you recover. And Affliction is a very great help to us in this. Many a Man hath been aſhamed and deeply humbled for that ſame ſin, when ſickneſs did awake him, which he could make his play fellow before, as if there had been neither hurt nor danger in it.

Dir. 3. §. 3. Direct. 3. There is many a deep corruption in the heart, which affliction openeth and diſcovereth, which deceitfulneſs hid in the time of proſperity: And the detecting of theſe is no ſmall benefit to the Soul. When you come to part with wealth and honour, you ſhall better know how much you loved them, than you could before. Mark therefore what corruptions appear in your affliction, and how the heart diſcloſeth its deceits, that you may know what to repent of, and reform.

Dir. 4. §. 4. Direct. 4. When affliction calleth you to the uſe and exerciſe of your Graces, you have a great help to be better acquainted with the ſtrength or weakneſs of them. When you are called ſo loudly to the uſe of Faith, and love, and patience, and heavenly-mindedneſs, you may better know what meaſure of every one of theſe you have, than you could when you had no ſuch help. Mark therefore what your hearts prove in the trial, and what each Grace doth ſhew it ſelf to be, in the exerciſe.

Dir. 5. §. 5. Direct. 5. You have a very great help now to be throughly acquainted with the vanity of the World, and ſo to mortifie all affections unto the things below. Now judge of the value of wealth, and honor, of plenty, and high places. Are they a comfort to a dying man that is parting with them? Or is it any grief to a poor man when he is dying, that he did not injoy them? Is it not eaſie now to rectifie your errors, if ever you thought highly of theſe tranſitory things? O ſettle it now in your firm reſolution, That if God ſhould reſtore you, you would value this World at a lower rate, and ſet by it, and ſeek it, but as it deſerveth.

Dir. 6. §. 6. Direct. 6. Alſo you have now a ſpecial help to raiſe your eſtimation of the happineſs of the Saints in Heaven, and of the neceſſity and excellency of a holy life, and of the wiſdom of the Saints on Earth; and to know who maketh the wiſeſt choice. Now you may ſee that it is nothing but Heaven that is worth our ſeeking, and that is finally to be truſted to, and will not fail us in the hour of our diſtreſs. Now you may diſcern between the righteous, and the wicked; between thoſe that ſerve God and thoſe that ſerve him not, Mal. 3. 17, 18. Now judge whether a looſe and worldly life, or a holy heavenly life be better? And reſolve accordingly. Luke 10. 42. Phil. 1. 19, 23.

Dir. 7. §. 7. Direct. 7. You have alſo now a very great help to diſcern the folly of a voluptuous life, and to mortifie the deeds and deſires of the fleſh: When God is mortifying its natural deſires, it may help you in mortifying its ſinful deſires. Now judge what Luſt, and Plays, and Gaming, and Feaſting, and Drunkenneſs, and Swaggering are worth? You ſee now the end of all ſuch pleaſures. Do you think them better than the Joys of Heaven, and worthy the loſs of a Mans ſalvation to attain them? Or better than the pleaſures of a holy life?

Dir. 8. §. 8. Direct. 8. Alſo now you have a great advantage, for the quickning of your hearts that have loſt their zeal, and are cold in Prayer, and dull in Meditation, and regardleſs of holy Converſe. If ever you will pray earneſtly, ſure it will be now; if ever you will talk ſeriouſly of the matters of Salvation, ſure it will be now. Now you do better underſtand the reaſon of fervent Prayer, and ſerious Religion, and circumſpect walking than you did before: And you can eaſily now confute the ſcorns, or railings of the looſe ungodly enemies of holineſs; even as you confute the dotage of a Fool, or the ravings of a man beſide himſelf.

Dir. 9. §. 9. Direct. 9. You have a great advantage more ſenſibly to perceive your dependance upon God alone: And what reaſon you have to pleaſe him before all the World, and to regard his favour or diſpleaſure more, than all the things or perſons upon Earth. Now you ſee how vain a thing is Man! And how little the favour of all the World, can ſtand you in ſtead in your greateſt neceſſity: Now you ſee that it is God, and God alone, that is to be truſted to at laſt; and therefore it is God that is to be obeyed and pleaſed, whatever become of all things in the World.

Dir. 10. §. 10. Direct. 10. You have now a great advantage to diſcern the preciouſneſs of time, and to ſee how carefully it ſhould be redeemed, and to perceive the diſtractedneſs of thoſe men, that can waſte it in Paſtimes, and curioſity of dreſſings, and needleſs Complements and Viſits, and a multitude of ſuch Vanities as rob the World, of that which is more precious than Gold or Treaſure. Now what think you of idling and playing away your time? Now do you not think that it is wiſer to ſpend it in a holy preparation for the life to come, than to caſt it away upon Childiſh fooleries, or any unneceſſary worldly things?

Dir. 11. §. 11. Direct. 11. Alſo you have now a ſpecial help to be more ſerious than ever in your preparations for death, and in your thoughts of Heaven; and ſo to be readier than you were before: And if ſickneſs help you to be readier to die, and more to ſet your hearts above, whether you live or die, it will be a profitable ſickneſs to you.

Dir. 12. §. 12. Direct. 12. Let your friends about you be the witneſſes of your open Confeſſions and Reſolutions, and ingage them, if God ſhould reſtore you to your health, to remember you of all the promiſes which you made, and to watch over you, and tell you of them whenever there is need. By theſe means ſickneſs may be improved, and be a mercy to you.

Directions to them that recover.

§. 13. I might next have given ſome ſpecial Directions to them that are recovered from ſickneſs; but becauſe I would not be needleſly tedious, I refer ſuch to what is here ſaid already. 1. Let them but look over theſe Twelve Directions, and ſee whether theſe Benefits remain upon their hearts. 2. Let them call to their lively remembrance, the ſenſe which they had, and the frame they were in, when they made theſe reſolutions. 3. Let them remember that ſickneſs will come again, even a ſickneſs which will have no cure. And 4. Let them bethink themſelves, how terribly Conſcience will be wounded, and their Souls diſmayed, when the next ſickneſs cometh, to remember that they were unthankful for their laſt recovery, and how falſly they dealt with God in the breaking of their Promiſes. Foreſee this, that you may prevent it.

Tit. 3. Directions for a Comfortable or Peaceable Death.

Comfort is not deſirable only as it pleaſeth us, but alſo as it ſtrengthneth us, and helpeth us in our greateſt Duties: And when is it more needful than in ſickneſs, and the approach of Death? I ſhall therefore add ſuch Directions as are neceſſary to make our departure comfortable or peaceful at the leaſt, as well as ſafe.

Dir. 1. §. 1, Direct. 1. Becauſe I would make this Treatiſe no longer than I needs muſt; in order to overcome the fears of Death, and get a chearful willingneſs to die, I deſire the ſick to read over thoſe Twenty Conſiderations, and the following Directions which I have laid down in my Book of Self-denial. And when the fears of Death are overcome, the great impediment of their comfort is removed.

Dir. 2. §. 2. Direct. 2. Miſunderſtand not ſickneſs, as if it were a greater evil than it is; but obſerve how great a mercy it is, that Death hath ſo ſuitable a Harbinger or Fore-runner. That God ſhould do ſo much before he taketh us hence, to wean us from the World, and make us willing to be gone; that the unwilling fleſh hath the help of pain; and that the ſenſes and appetite languiſh and decay, which did draw the mind to earthly things, and that we have ſo loud a call, and ſo great a help to true Repentance, and ſerious Preparation? I know to thoſe that have walked very cloſe with God, and are always ready, a ſudden death may be a Mercy; as we have lately known divers holy Miniſters and others, that have died either after a Sacrament, or in the Evening of the Lords-Day, or in the midſt of ſome holy exerciſe with ſo little pain, that none about them perceived when they died: But ordinarily it is a Mercy to have the fleſh brought down and weakned by painful ſickneſs, to help to conquer our natural unwillingneſs to die.

Mr. Vines, Mr. Capel, Mr. Holtingworth, Mr. Aſhburſt, Mr. Ambroſe, Mrs. Burdet, &c.

Dir. 3. §. 3. Direct. 3. Remember whoſe meſſenger ſickneſs is, and who it is that calleth you to die. It is he, that is the Lord of all the World, and gave us the lives which he taketh from us: And it is he, that muſt diſpoſe of Angels and Men, of Princes and Kingdoms, of Heaven and Earth; and therefore there is no reaſon that ſuch Worms, as we, ſhould deſire to be excepted. You cannot deny him to be the diſpoſer of all things, without denying him to be God: It is he that loveth us, and never meant us any harm in any thing that he hath done to us; that gave the life of his Son to redeem us; and therefore thinketh not life too good for us: Our ſickneſs and death are ſent by the ſame love, that ſent us a Saviour, and ſent us the powerful Preachers of his Word, and ſent us his Spirit, and ſecretly and ſweetly changed our hearts, and knit them to himſelf in love, which gave us a life of precious mercies for our Souls and Bodies, and hath promiſed to give us Life eternal: And ſhall we think, that he now intendeth us any harm? Cannot he turn this alſo to our good, as he hath done many an affliction which we have repined at?

Dir. 4. §. 4. Direct. 4. Look by Faith to your dying, buried, riſen, aſcended, glorified Lord. Nothing will more powerfully overcome both the poyſon, and the fears of Death, than the believing thoughts of him that hath triumphed over it. Is it terrible, as it ſeparateth the Soul from the Body? So it did by our Lord, who yet overcame it. Is it terrible as it layeth the Body in the Grave? So it did by our Saviour; though he ſaw not corruption, but quickly roſe by the power of his Godhead. He died to teach us believingly and boldly to ſubmit to death. He was buried, to teach us not overmuch to fear a Grave. He roſe again to conquer death for us, and to aſſure thoſe that riſe to newneſs of life, that they ſhall be raiſed at laſt by his power unto glory, and being made partakers of the firſt Reſurrection, the ſecond death ſhall have no power over them. He liveth as our Head, that we might live by him, and that he might aſſure all thoſe that are here riſen with him, and ſeek firſt the things that are above, that though in themſelves they are dead, yet their life is hid with Chriſt in God; and when Chriſt who is our life ſhall appear, then ſhall we alſo appear with him in glory, Col. 3. 1, 2, 4, 5. What a comfortable word is that, John 14. 19. Becauſe I live, ye ſhall live alſo. Death could not hold the Lord of life; nor can it hold us againſt his will, who hath the keys of Death and Hell, Rev. 1. 18. He loveth every one of his ſanctified ones much better, than you love an eye, or a hand, or any other member of your body, which you will not loſe, if you are able to ſave it. When he aſcended, he left us that meſſage full of comfort for his followers, Joh. 20. 17. Go to my Brethren, and ſay unto them, I aſcend unto my Father, and your Father; to my God, and your God. Which, with theſe two following, I would have written before me on my ſick bed, Joh. 12. 26. If any man ſerve me, let him follow me; and where I am, there alſo ſhall my ſervant be. And Luk. 23. 43. Verily, I ſay unto thee, to day ſhalt thou be with me in Paradiſe. O what a joyful thought ſhould it be to a Believer, to think when he is a dying, that he is going to his Saviour, and that our Lord is riſen and gone before us, to prepare a place for us, and take us in ſeaſon to himſelf, John 14. 2, 3, 4. As you believe in God, believe thus in Chriſt, and then your hearts will be leſs troubled, verſ. 1. It is not a ſtranger that we talk of to you; but your Head and Saviour that loveth you better than you love your ſelves, whoſe Office it is there to appear continually for you before God, and at laſt to receive your departing Souls; and into his hand it is, that you muſt then commend them, as Stephen did, Acts 7. 59.

Dir. 5. §. 5. Direct. 5. Chuſe out ſome Promiſes moſt ſuitable to your condition, and roll them over and over in your mind, and feed and live on them by Faith. A ſick man is not (uſually) fit to think of very many things; and therefore two or three comfortable promiſes, to be ſtill before his eyes, may be the moſt profitable matter of his thoughts; ſuch as thoſe three which I named before. If he be moſt troubled with the greatneſs of his ſin, let it be ſuch as theſe, Joh. 3. 16. God ſo loved the World, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whoſoever believeth in him, ſhould should not perish, but have everlasting life, Acts 13. 39. And by him all that believe, are justified from all things, from which ye could not be justified by the Law of Moses, Heb. 8. 12. For I will be merciful to their unrighteousness, and their sins and iniquities will I remember no more. If it be the weakness of his Grace that troubleth him, let him chuse such passages as these, Isa. 40. 11. He shall gather the Lambs with his Arm, and carry them in his bosom, and shall gently lead those that are with young, Gal. 5. 17. The flesh lusteth against the spirit, and the spirit against the flesh, and these are contrary one to the other, so that ye cannot do the things that ye would, Matth. 26. 41. The spirit is willing, but the flesh is weak, Joh. 6. 37. All that the Father giveth me, shall come to me, and him that cometh to me, I will in no wise cast out. Luk. 17. 5. The Apostles said unto the Lord, Increase our Faith. If it be the fear of Death, and strangeness to the other World that troubleth you, remember the words of Christ before cited, and 2 Cor. 5. 1, 2. 4, 5, 6, 8. For we know, that if our earthly house of this Tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building of God, an house not made with hands, eternal in the Heavens. For in this we groan earnestly, desiring to be cloathed upon with our house which is from Heaven. For we that are in this Tabernacle do groan being burdened, not for that we would be uncloathed, but cloathed upon, that mortallity might be swallowed up of life: —We are confident, and willing rather to be absent from the Body, and present with the Lord, Phil. 1. 23. For I am in a strait between two, having a desire to depart, and to be with Christ, which is far better, Revel. 14. 13. Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord, from henceforth: Yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors, and their works do follow them, 1 Cor. 15. 55. O death, where is thy sting! O Grave where is thy victory, Acts 17 59. Lord Jesus receive my spirit. Fix upon some such word or promise which may support you, in your extremity.

Dir. 6. §. 6. Direct. 6. Look up to God, who is the Glory of Heaven and the light and life and joy of souls, and believe that you are going to see his face, and to live in the perfect everlasting fruition of his fullest love among the glorified. If it be delectable here to know his works, what will it be to see the cause of all? All Creatures in Heaven and Earth conjoyned, can never afford such content and joy to holy souls, as God alone! O if we knew him whom we must there behold, how weary should we be of this dungeon of Mortality? and how fervently should we long to see his face? The Chicken that cometh out of the shell, or the Infant that newly cometh from the Womb, into this illuminated world of humane converse, receiveth not such a joyful change, as the soul that is newly loosed from the flesh, and passeth from this mortal life to God. One sight of God by a blessed soul, is worth more than all the Kingdoms of the earth. It is pleasant to the eyes to behold the Sun: But the Sun is as darkness and useless in his Glory. Rev. 21. 23. And the City had no need of the Sun, nor of the Moon to shine in it: For the Glory of God did lighten it, and the Lamb is the light thereof, Rev. 22 3, 4, 5. And there shall be no more curse, but the Throne of God and of the Lamb shall be in it, and his servants shall serve him, and they shall see his face, and his name shall be in their foreheads: and there shall be no night there, and they need no Candle, nor light of the Sun; for the Lord God giveth them light, and they shall reign for ever and ever. If David in the Wilderness so impatiently thirsted, to appear before God, the living God, in his Sanctuary at Jerusalem, Psal. 42. How earnestly should we long to see his Glory in the Heavenly Jerusalem? The glimpse of his back parts, was as much as Moses might behold, Exod. 34. yet that much put a shining glory upon his face, v. 29, 30. The sight that Stephen had when men were ready to stone him, was a delectable sight, Act. 7. 55, 56. The glimpse of Christ in his transfiguration ravished the three Apostles that beheld it, Mat. 17. 2. 6. Paul's Vision which rapt him up into the third Heavens, did advance him above the rest of Mankind! But our Beatifical sight of the glory of God, will very far excell all this. When our perfected bodies shall have the perfect glorious body of Christ to see, and our perfected souls shall have the God of Truth, the most perfect uncreated light to know, what more is a created understanding capable of? And yet this is not the top of our felicity; For the understanding is but the passage to the heart or will, and Truth is but subservient to goodness: And therefore though the understanding be capable of no more than the Beatifical Vision, yet the man is capable of more, even of receiving the fullest communications of Gods love, and feeling it poured out upon the heart, and living in the returns of perfect love, and in this entercourse of love will be our highest Joys, and this is the top of our heavenly felicity. O that God would make us foreknow by a lively faith, what it is to behold him in his Glory, and to dwell in perfect love and joy, and then death would no more be able to dismay us, nor should we be unwilling of such a blessed change! But having spoken of this so largely in my Saints Rest, I must stop here, and refer you thither.

Dir. 7. §. 7. Direct. 7. Look up to the blessed Society of Angels, and Saints with Christ, and remember their blessedness and joy, and that you also belong to the same society and are going to be numbred with them. It will greatly overcome the fears of death, to see by faith the Joys of them that have gone before us; and withal to think of their Relation to us; As it will encourage a man that is to go beyond Sea, if the far greatest part of his dearest friends be gone before him, and he heareth of their safe arrival, and of their joy and Happiness. Those Angels that now see the face of God are our special friends and guardians, and entirely love us, better than any of our friends on earth do! They rejoyced at our Conversion, and will rejoyce at our Glorification; And as they are better, and love us better, so therefore our love should be greater to them, than to any upon earth, and we should more desire to be with them. Those blessed souls that are now with Christ, were once as we are here on earth; They were compassed with temptations, and clogg'd with flesh and burdened with sin, and persecuted by the world, and they went out of the world by sickness and death, as we must do, and yet now their tears are wiped away, their pains and groans and fears are turned into unexpressible blessedness and joy; And would we not be with them? Is not their company desirable? and their felicity more desirable? The glory of the new Jerusalem is not described to us in vain, Rev. 21. & 22. God will be all in all there to us, as the only Sun and Glory of that world, and yet we shall have pleasure, not only to see our Glorified Redeemer, but also to converse with the Heavenly society, and to sit down with Abraham, Isaac and Jacob in the Kingdom of God, and to love and praise him in Consort and Harmony with all those holy blessed spirits. And shall we be afraid to follow, where the Saints of all Generations have gone before us? And shall the company of our best and most and happiest friends, be no inducement to us? Though it must be our highest joy to think that we shall dwell with God, and next that we shall see the Glory of Christ, yet it is no small part of my comfort to consider, that I shall follow all those holy persons, whom I once conversed with, that are gone Reader, bear with this mixture: for God will own his image when pievish contenders do deny it, or blaspheme it; and will receive those whom faction and proud domination would cast out, and vilifie with scorn and slanders.

before me, and that I shall dwell with such as Henoch and Elias, and Abraham, and Moses, and Job, and David, and Peter, and John, and Paul, and Timothy, and Ignatius, and Polycarp, and Cyprian, and Nazianzene, and Augustine, and Chrysostome, and Bernard, and Gerson, and Savonarola, and Mirandula, and Taulerus, and Kempisius, and Melancthon, and Alasco, and Calvin, and Bucholtzer, and Bullinger, and Musculus, and Zanchy, and Bucer, and Paræus, and Grynæus, and Chemnitius, and Gerhard, and Chamier, and Capellus, and Blondel, and Rivet, and Rogers, and Bradford, and Hooper, and Latimer, and Hildersham, and Amesius, and Langley, and Nicolls, and Whitaker, and Cartwright, and Hooker, and Bayne, and Preston, and Sibbes, and Perkins, and Dod, and Parker, and Ball, and Usher, and Hall, and Gataker, and Bradshaw, and Vines, and Ash, and millions more of the family of God: I name these for my own delight and comfort, it being pleasant to me to remember what companions I shall have in the heavenly joys, and praises of my Lord. How few are all the Saints on earth, in comparison of those that are now with Christ? And alas, how weak and ignorant and corrupt, how selfish and contentious and froward, are Gods poor infants here in flesh, when above there is nothing but Holiness and Perfection? If knowledge or goodness, or any excellency do make the creatures truly amiable, all this is there in the highest degree, but here alas, how little have we? If the love of God, or the love of us, do make others lovely to us, it is there and not here that these and all perfections flourish. O how much now, do I find the company of the wise and learned, the godly and sincere, to differ from the company of the ignorant, bruitish, the proud and malicious, the false-hearted and ungodly rabble? How sweet is the converse of a holy, wise, experienced Christian? O then what a place is the new Jerusalem? and how pleasant will it be with Saints and Angels to see and love and praise the Lord.

Dir. 8. §. 8. Direct. 8. That sickness and death may be comfortable to you, as your passage to eternity, take notice of the seal and earnest of God, even the spirit of grace which he hath put into your hearts. That which emboldned Paul and such others to groan after immortallity, and to be most willing to be absent from the body and present with the Lord, was because God himself had wrought or made them for it, and given them the earnest or pledge of his spirit, 2 Cor. 5. 4, 5, 8. For this is Gods mark upon his chosen and justified ones by which they are sealed up to the day of their Redemption, Ephes. 4. 30. Ephes. 1. 13. In whom also after ye believed, ye were sealed with that holy Spirit of promise, 2 Cor. 1. 21, 22. God hath anointed us, and sealed us, and given us the pledge or earnest of his spirit into our hearts. This is the pledge or earnest of our inheritance, Ephes. 1. 14. And what a comfort should it be to us, when we look towards Heaven to find such a pledge of God within us? If you say, I fear I have not this earnest of the Spirit: whence then did your desires of holiness arise? what weaned you from the world, and made you place your hopes and happiness above? whence came your enmity to sin, and opposition to it, and your earnest desires after the glory of God, the prosperity of the Gospel, and the good of souls? The very love of holiness and holy persons, and your desires to know God and perfectly love him, do shew that heavenly nature or spirit within you, which is your surest evidence for eternal life: For that spirit was sent from Heaven, to draw up your hearts, and fit you for it: And God doth not give you such natures and desires and preparations in vain. This also is called, The witness of the spirit, with (or to our spirit,) that we are the children of God: and if children then heirs; heirs of God, and joynt-heirs with Christ, Rom. 8. 15, 16, 17. It witnesseth our Adoption, by evidencing it, as a seal or pledge doth witness our title to that which is so confirmed to us. The nature of every thing is suited to its use and end; God would not have given us a heavenly nature or desire, if he had not intended us for Heaven.

Dir. 9. So Hezekiah. §. 9. Direct. 9. Look also to the testimony of a holy life, since grace hath employed you in seeking after the heavenly inheritance. It is unlawful and perillous to look after any works or righteousness of your own, so as to set it in whole or in part, instead of Christ, or to ascribe to it any honour that is proper to him; As to imagine that you are innocent, or have fulfilled the Law, or have made God a compensation by your merits or sufferings, for the sin you have committed; But yet you must judge your selves on your sick beds as near as you can, as God will judge you; And he will judge every man according to his work; and will recompence and reward men according to their works, Matth. 25. 39, 40, &c. Well done good and faithful servant! Thou hast been faithful over a little, I will make thee Ruler over much; Come ye blessed of my father, inherit the Kingdom prepared for you—for I was hungry and ye fed me, &c.—— Heb. 5. 9. He is the Author of eternal salvation to all them that obey him, Matth. 7. 24, 25. Whosoever heareth these sayings of mine and doth them, I will liken him to a wise man that built his house upon a Rock——Rev. 22. Blessed are they that do his commandments, that they may have right to the Tree of life, and may enter in by the gate into the City, for without are dogs, &c. Thus must you rejoyce in the Cross of our Lord Jesus Christ, not only as he was Crucified on it for you, but also as you are crucified by it to the world, and the world to you, Gal. 6. 14. He that as a Benefactor will give you that Glory which you could never deserve of him, on terms of commutative Justice (for so no Creature can deserve any thing of God) will yet as a Righteous Governour and judge, deliver it you only on the terms of his Paternal governing distributive justice, and all shall receive according to what they have done in the body: And therefore you may take comfort in that Evangelical Righteousness, which consisteth in your fulfilling the conditions of the new Covenant, though you have no Legal Righteousness (which consisteth in innocency, or freedom from the Curse of the Law) but only in the Merits and Sacrifice of Christ. If you are accused as being Impenitent Unbelievers, or Hypocrites: Christs Righteousness will not justifie you from that accusation; but only your Repentance, Faith and sincerity (wrought in you by the spirit of Christ.) But if you can but shew the evidence of this Evangelical Righteousness, Christ then will justifie you against all the other accusations of guilt that can be charged on you. (Of which more anon.) Seeing therefore the spirit hath given you these Evidences, to difference you from the wretched world, and prove your title to eternal life, if you over-look these, you resist your Comforter, and can see no other ground of Comfort, than every graceless Hypocrite may see. Imitate holy Paul, 2 Cor. 1. 12. For our rejoycing is this, the testimony of our Conscience, that in simplicity and godly sincerity, not in fleshly wisdom, but by the grace of God, we have had our conversation in the world——2 Tim. 4. 7, 8. I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith, henceforth there is laid up for me a Crown of Righteousness, which the Lord the righteous judge shall give me at that day: and not to me only, but to all them also that love his appearing. To look back and see that in sincerity you have gone the way to Heaven, is a just and necessary ground of assurance, that you shall attain it. If you say, I have been been a grievous ſinner? I anſwer, ſo was Paul that yet rejoyced after in this evidence? Are not thoſe ſins repented of, and pardoned? If you ſay [But I cannot look back upon a holy life with comfort, it hath been ſo blotted and uneven?] I anſwer, Hath it not been ſincere, though it was imperfect? Did you not firſt ſeek the Kingdom of God and his Righteouſneſs? Matth. 6. 33. If you ſay, [My whole life hath been ungodly, till now at laſt that God hath humbled me.] I anſwer, It is not the length of time, but the ſincerity of your hearts and ſervice that is your evidence; If you came in at the laſt hour, if now you are faithfully devoted to God, you may look with comfort on this change at laſt, though you muſt look with Repentance on your ſinful lives.

Dir. 10. §. 10. Direct. 10. When you ſee any of this evidence of your intereſt in Chriſt, appeal to him to acquit you from all the ſin that can be charged on you: For all that believe in him are juſtified from all things, from which they could not be juſtified by the law of Moſes, There is no condemnation to them that are in Chriſt Jeſus, that walk not after the fleſh, but after the Spirit, Rom. 8. 1. Whatever ſin a penitent believer hath committed, he is not chargeable with it; Chriſt hath undertaken to anſwer for it, and juſtifie him from it; and therefore look not on it with terror, but with penitent ſhame, and believing thankfulneſs, as that which ſhall tend to the honour of the Redeemer, and not to the condemnation of the ſinner. He hath born our tranſgreſſions and we are healed by his ſtripes.

Iſa. 53. 10, 11, 12, &c.

Dir. 11. §. 11. Direct. 11. Look back upon all the Mercies of your lives, and think whence they came and what they ſignifie; Love tokens are to draw your hearts to him that ſent them; Theſe are dropt from Heaven, to entice you thither? If God have been ſo good to you on earth, what will he be in Glory? If he ſo bleſſed you in this Wilderneſs, what will he do in the land of promiſe? It greatly emboldneth my ſoul to go to that God, that hath ſo tenderly loved me, and ſo graciouſly preſerved me, and ſo much abounded in all ſorts of mercies to me, through all my life. Surely he is good that ſo delighteth to do good! And his preſence muſt be ſweet, when his diſtant mercies have been ſo ſweet! What love ſhall I enjoy when perfection hath fitted me for his love, who have taſted of ſo much in this ſtate of ſin and imperfection? The ſenſe of mercy will baniſh the fears and miſ-givings of the heart.

Dir. 12. §. 12. Direct. 12. Remember (if you have attained to a declining age) what a competent time you have had already in the world. If you are grieved that you are mortal, you might on that account have grieved all your days; But if it be only that you dye ſo ſoon, if you have lived well, you have lived long. When I think how many years of mercy I have had, ſince I was near to death, and ſince many younger than I are gone, and when I think what abundance of mercy I have had in all that time, ingenuity forbiddeth me to grudge at the ſeaſon of my death, and maketh me almoſt aſhamed to ask for longer life. How long would you ſtay, before you would be willing to come to God? If he deſired our company no more than we do his, and deſired our happineſs in Heaven, no more than we deſire it our ſelves, we ſhould linger here as Lot in Sodom! Muſt we be ſnatch'd away againſt our wills, and carried by force to our Fathers preſence?

Dir. 13. §. 13. Direct. 13. Remember that all mankind is mortal, and you are to go no other way, than all that ever came into the world, have gone before you (except Henoch and Elias.) Yea, the poor brute creatures muſt dye at your pleaſure, to ſatisfie your hunger or delight. Beaſts and Birds and Fiſhes, even many to make one meal, muſt dye for you; And why then ſhould you ſhrink at the entrance of ſuch a trodden path; which leadeth you not to Hell as it doth the wicked, nor meerly to corruption as it doth the bruits, but to live in joy with Chriſt and his Church Triumphant?

Dir. 14. §. 14. Direct. 14. Remember both how vile your body is, and how great an enemy it hath proved to your ſoul; And then you will the more patiently bear its diſſolution? It is not your dwelling houſe, but your Tent or Priſon that God is pulling down. And yet even this vile body, when it is corrupted ſhall at laſt be changed into the likeneſs of Chriſts glorious body, by the working of his unreſiſtible power, Phil. 3. 20, 21. And it is a fleſh that hath ſo rebelled againſt the ſpirit, and made your way to Heaven ſo difficult, and put the ſoul to ſo many conflicts, that we ſhould the eaſilier ſubmit it to the will of Juſtice, and let it periſh for a time, when we are aſſured that mercy will at laſt recover it.

Dir. 15. §. 15. Direct. 15. Remember what a world it is that you are to leave, and compare it with that which you are going to, and compare the life which is near an end, with that which you are next to enter upon. Was it not Henoch's reward when he had walkt with God, to be taken to him from a polluted world? 1. While you are here, you are your ſelves defiled, ſin is in your natures, and your graces are all imperfect; ſin is in your lives, and your duties are all imperfect; You cannot be free from it one day or hour? And is it not a mercy to be delivered from it? is it not deſirable to you to ſin no more? and to be perfect in holineſs? to know God and love him as much and more than you can now deſire? You are here every day lamenting your darkneſs and unbelief and eſtrangedneſs from God, and want of love to him? How oft have you prayed for a cure of all this? And now would you not have it, when God would give it you? why hath God put that ſpark of Heavenly life into you, but to fight againſt ſin, and make you weary of it? And yet had you rather continue ſinning, than have the victory and be with Chriſt? 2. It is a life of grief as well as ſin? And a life of cares and doubts and fears? When you are at the worſt, you are fearing worſe? if it were nothing but the fears of death it ſelf, it ſhould make you the willinger to ſubmit to it, that you might be paſt thoſe fears. 3. You are daily afflicted with the infirmities of that fleſh, which you are ſo loth ſhould be diſſolved. To ſatisfie its hunger and thirſt, to cover its nakedneſs, to provide it a habitation, and ſupply all its wants, what care and labour doth it coſt you? Its infirmities, ſickneſſes and pains, do make you oft aweary of your ſelves, ſo that you groan being burdened as Paul ſpeaketh, 2 Cor. 5. 3, 4, 6. And yet is it not deſirable to be with Chriſt; 4. You are compaſſed with temptations, and are in continual danger through your weakneſs? And yet would you not be paſt the danger? Would you have more of thoſe horrid and odious temptations? 5. You are purpoſely turned here into a Wilderneſs, among wild beaſts; you are as Lambs among Wolves, and through many tribulations you muſt enter into Heaven; You muſt deny your ſelves and take up your Croſs, and forſake all that you have, and all that will live godly in Chriſt Jeſus, muſt ſuffer perſecution, in the world you muſt have trouble: the ſeed of the Serpent muſt bruiſe your heel, before God bruiſe Satan under your feet! And is ſuch a life as this more deſirable than to be with Chriſt? Are we afraid to land after ſuch ſtorms and tempeſts? Is a wicked world, a malicious world, a cruel world, an implacable world more pleaſing to us than the joy of Angels, and the ſight of Chriſt, and God himſelf in the Majeſty of his Glory? Hath God on purpoſe made the world ſo bitter to us, and per-permitted it to use us unjustly and cruelly, and all to make us love it less, and to drive home our hearts unto himself? and yet are we so unwilling to be gone?

Dir. 16. §. 16. Direct. 16. Settle your Estates betime, that worldly matters may not distract or discompose you. And if God have endowed you with Riches, dispose of a due proportion to such pious or charitable uses, in which they may be more serviceable to him that gave them you. Tho' we should give what we can in the time of life and health, yet many that have but so much as will serve to their necessary maintenance, may well part with that to good uses at their death, which they could not spare in the time of their health: Especially they that have no Children, or such wicked Children, as are like to do hurt with all that is given them above their daily Bread.

Dir. 17. §. 17. Direct. 17. If it may be, get some able faithful Guide and Comforter to be with you in your sickness; to counsel you, and resolve your doubts, and pray with you, and discourse of heavenly things, when you are disabled by weakness for such exercises your selves. Let not carnal persons disturb you with their vain bablings. Tho' the difference between good company and bad, be very great in the time of health, yet now in sickness it will be more discernable. And tho' a faithful Friend and spiritual Pastor be always a great mercy, yet now especially in your last necessity.

Therefore make use of them as far as your pain and weakness will permit?

Dir. 18. §. 18. Direct. 18. Be fortified against all the Temptations of Satan by which he useth to assault men in their extremity: Stand it out in the last conflict, and the Crown is yours. I shall instance in particulars.

Directions for resisting the Temptations of Satan, in the time of sickness.

Tem. 1. §. 19. Tempt. 1. The most ordinary Temptation against the comfort of Believers (for I have already spoken of those that are against their safety) is, to doubt of their own sincerity, and consequently of their part in Christ: Saith the Tempter [All that thou hast done, hath been but in hypocrisie; Thou wast never a true Believer, nor never didst truly Repent of sin, nor truly love God; and therefore thou art unjustified, and shalt speedily be condemned.]

§. 20. Against this Temptation a Believer hath two Remedies: The first is to confute the Tempter by those evidences which will prove that he hath been sincere (such as I have often mentioned before.) And by refelling those reasonings by which the Tempter would prove him to have been an Hypocrite: As when it is objected, Thou hast repented and been humbled but slightly and by the halves; Answ. Yet was it sincerely; and weak Grace is not no Grace. Obj. Thou hast been a lover of the world, and a neglecter of thy Soul, and cold in all that thou didst for thy Salvation. Answ. Yet did I set more by Heaven than Earth, and I first sought the Kingdom of God and his Righteousness, as esteeming it above all the Riches of the World. Object. Thou hast kept thy sins while thou wentest on in a profession of Religion. Answ. I had no sin but what in the habitual ordinary temper of my Soul, I hated more than I loved it, and had rather have been delivered from it, than have kept it, and none but what I unfeignedly repented of. Object. Thou didst not truly believe the Promises of God, and the Life to come; or else thou wouldst never have doubted as thou hast done, nor sought such a Kingdom with such weak desires. Answ. Tho' my faith was weak, it overcame the world; I so far believed the Promise of another life, as that I preferred it before this life, and was resolved rather to forsake all the World, than to part with my hopes of that promised blessedness: And that faith is sincere (how weak soever) that can do this. Object. But thou hast done thy works to be seen of men, and been troubled when men have not approved thee, nor honoured thee; and what was this but mere hypocrisie? Answ. Tho' I had some hypocrisie, yet was I not an hypocrite, because it was not in a reigning and prevalent degree; Tho' I too much regarded the esteem of men, yet I did more regard the esteem of God. Thus if a Christian discern his evidences, the false reasonings of Satan are to be refused.

§. 21. 2. But ordinarily it is a readier way to take the second course, which is, At present, to believe, and Repent, and so confute Satan that saith you are not penitent Believers. But then you must truly understand what believing and repenting is; or else you may think that you do not believe and repent when you do. Believing in Christ, is [a believing that he is the Saviour of the World, and a consent of will that he be your Saviour] to justifie you by his blood, and sanctifie you by his Spirit; To Repent is [to be so sorry that you have sinned, that if it were to do again, you would not do it; (as to gross sin and a state of sin) and the smallest infirmities, your will is so far set against, that you desire to be delivered from them.] Believing to Justification, is not the believing that you are already justified, and your sins forgiven you; And Repenting consisteth not in such degrees of sorrow as some expect; but in the change of the mind and will, from a life of sensuality to a life of holiness. When you know this, then answer the Tempter thus, [If I should suffer thee to deprive me of the comfort of all my former uprightness, yet shalt thou not so deprive me of the comfort of my present sincerity, and of my hopes; I am now too weak and distempered to try all that is past and gone. Past actions are now known but by remembring them; And they are seldom judged of, as indeed they then were; but according to the temper and apprehension of the mind when it revieweth them; And I am now so changed and weakned my self, that I cannot tell whether I truly remember the just temper and thoughts of my heart in all that's past or not. Nor doth it most concern me now, to know what I have been, but to know what I am. Christ will not judge according to what I was, but according to what he findeth me; Never did he refuse a penitent believing soul, because he repented and believed late; I do now unfeignedly repent of all my sins, and am heartily willing to be both pardoned, and cleansed, and sanctified by Christ, and here I give up my self to him as my Saviour, and to this Covenant I will stand; And this is true Repenting and Believing.] Thus a poor Christian in the time of sickness, may oft-times much easier clear up to himself, that he Repenteth now, than that he Repented formerly; And it is his surest way. John 1. 10, 11, 12. & 3. 16. 19, 20. Rom. 7, 22 21, 22, 24. 25. Phil. 1 1, 4, c

Tem. 2. §. 25. Tempt. 2. And yet sometimes he cometh with the quite contrary Temptation, and must be resisted by the contrary way. When he findeth a Christian so perplexed, and distempered with sickness, that his understanding is disabled from any composed thoughts, then he asketh him, [Now where is thy Faith and Repentance? If thou hast any or ever hadst any, let it now appear.] In this case a Christian is to take up with the remembrance of his former sincerity, and tell the Tempter, [I am sure that once I gave up my self unfeignedly to my Lord; and those that come to him, he will in no wise cast out; And if now I be disabled from a composed exercise of Grace, he will not impute my sickness to me as my sin.]

Tem. 3 §. 26. Tempt. 3. Another ordinary Temptation is, that [Its now too late; God will not now accept Repentance; the day of grace is past and gone; or at leaſt a death-bed Repentance is not ſincere.] To this the tempted Soul muſt reply, 1. That if Faith and Repentance were not accepted at any time in this life, then Gods Promiſe were not true. which ſaith, that whoſoever believeth in him ſhall not periſh, but have everlaſting life, John 3. 16. So Luke 24. 47. Acts 5. 31. & 11. 18. & 20. 21. 2 Tim. 2. 25. 2 Pet. 3. 9. There is a time in this life, in which ſome reſiſters of the Truth, are given up to their own Luſts, to the love of Sin, and hatred of Holineſs, ſo that they will not Repent; But there was never a time in this life, in which God refuſed to juſtifie a true repenting Sinner upon his belief in Chriſt. 2. That if a death-bed Repentance do truly the heart from the World to God, and from Sin to Holineſs, ſo that the penitent Perſon, if he ſhould recover, would lead a new and holy Life, then that Repentance hath as ſure a Promiſe of Pardon and Salvation, as if it had been ſooner; And yet delay muſt be confeſſed to be dangerous to all, and caſteth men under very great difficulties, and their Loſs is exceeding great, though at laſt they repent and are forgiven.

Tem. 4. §. 27. Tempt. 4. Sometime the Tempter ſaith, [Thou art not elected to ſalvation; and God ſaveth none but his Elect] and ſo puzzleth the ignorant by ſetting them on doubting of their Election. To this we muſt anſwer, that every Soul is choſen to Faith, and Repentance, and Perſeverance is certainly choſen to ſalvation; And I know that God hath choſen me to Faith and Repentance, becauſe he hath given them me: And I have reaſon enough to truſt on him, for that upholding Grace, which will cauſe me to perſevere.

Tem. 5. §. 28. Tempt. 5. But, ſaith the Tempter, [Chriſt did not die for thee; and no one can be ſaved, that Chriſt did not die for.] To this it muſt be anſwered, That Chriſt died for all men, ſo far as to be a ſufficient Sacrifice for their Sins, and to make a Promiſe of Pardon and Salvation to all that will accept him and his Gift; and he intreateth all that hear the Goſpel to accept it; and accordingly he will ſave all that conſent unto his Covenant. I am a ſinful Child of Adam, and therefore am one that Chriſt became a Sacrifice for; and I conſent unto his Covenant, and therefore I am one that Chriſt by that Covenant doth juſtifie, and will ſave.

Tem. 6. §. 29. Tempt. 6. Sometime the Tempter troubleth the Soul with Temptations to Blaſphemy and Infidelity: And asketh him, How knoweſt thou, that there is a God, or a life to come, or that Souls are immortal, or that the Scripture is true? Of this I ſpake before. To this we muſt then anſwer, I abhor thy ſuggeſtions: Theſe things I have ſeen proved long ago, and I will not ſo far gratifie thee in my weakneſs and extremity, as to queſtion and diſpute theſe ſealed fundamental Truths, no more than I will diſpute, whether there be a Sun or Earth.

Tem. 7. §. 30. Tempt. 7. Sometimes the Tempter will ſay, At beſt, thou haſt no aſſurance of Salvation, and how canſt thou chuſe but tremble to think of dying, when thou knoweſt not whether thou ſhalt go to Heaven or Hell? To this, the Soul that hath not aſſurance, muſt anſwer, It's my own miſtake or weakneſs that keepeth me unaſſured: And I will neither take part with my infirmities, nor increaſe them by their effects: My hopes are ſuch as ſhould draw up my deſires, tho' I want full aſſurance: The Child delighteth in the company of the Mother, and every Man of his Friend; tho' he is not certain, that the Mother or Friend will not hurt him or take away his life. Why ſhould I trouble my ſelf with imaginities? Or fear that which I have no ſound reaſon to fear? Rather I ſhould be glad to die, that Death may perfect my aſſurance, and put an end to all my Doubts and Fears.

§. 31. Tempt. 8. But, ſaith the Tempter, how ſtrange art thou to God, and the life to come? Thou never ſaweſt it: Is it not dreadful to enter upon an unchangeable life, in a World which thou art ſo great a ſtranger to? Anſw. But Chriſt is not a ſtranger to it; he ſeeth it for me, and I will implicitely truſt him. Where ſhould my Eyes be, but in my head? I ſhall never ſee it till I come thither. When I have been there a while, this darkneſs, and fear, and ſtrangeneſs will be gone. I was as ſtrange to this World before I came into it, and more: And all thoſe holy Souls in Heaven, were ſtrange to it once, as well as I. I ſhould therefore long to be with Chriſt, that I may be ſtrange to him no more. Tem. 8.

§. 32. Tempt. 9. But, ſaith the Tempter, thy fear and unwillingneſs is a ſign that thou haſt no love to God, nor heavenly mind; and how then canſt thou hope to come to Heaven. Anſw. My Fears come from ſtrangeneſs, and weakneſs of Faith, and a natural enmity to Death. If I could come to Chriſt in Joy and Glory, and be perfected in Holineſs, without dying, I ſhould not be unwilling of it. God looketh not that my Nature ſhould be willing to die; but that Grace make me willing to be with Chriſt; and patiently ſubmit to ſo dark a paſſage. Even Chriſt himſelf prayed, that if it were poſſible, that Cup might paſs from him. Tem. 9.

§. 33. Tempt. 10. But what will thy Wife and Children do, when thou art gone? Anſw. God hath more intereſt in them, than I have; he will look to his own without my care: Doth all the World depend upon him, and is he not to be truſted with my Wife and Children? Tem. 10.

§. 34. Tempt. 11. But thou wilt never be more ſerviceable to the Church: All thy work will for ever be at an end; and there are many things which thou mighteſt have done before thou dieſt; which will all be loſt. Anſw. 1. I ſhall have higher, and holier, and ſweeter work, whether it will any thing conduce to the good of thoſe on Earth, I know not; but I know it will more conduce to the higheſt moſt deſirable ends. 2. As my work will be done, ſo my trouble, and wearineſs, and fears, and ſufferings, from a malignant unthankful World, will all be done. 3. And when my work is done, my reward and Everlaſting Reſt begin. 4. And God needeth not ſuch a Worm as I! The work is his, and it is reaſon that he ſhould chuſe his Workmen. Tem. 11.

§. 35. Tempt. 12. But when thou haſt ſaid all, Death will be Death, the King of Terrors. Anſw. And when thou haſt ſaid all, God will be God, and Heaven will be Heaven, and Chriſt will be Chriſt, that hath conquered Death, and hath the Keys of Power of Death and Hell: And the Promiſe will be ſure; and thoſe that truſt on him ſhall never be aſhamed or confounded. And therefore the Spirit is willing, tho' the Fleſh be weak. Tem. 12. Matth. 28. 19, 20. 2. Joh. 17. Rev. 1. 18. Rom. 10. 9, 10, 11, 12.

Tit. 4. Directions for doing good to others in our Sickneſs.

§. 1. THe whole life of a Chriſtian ſhould be a ſerving of his God; and tho' his Body in ſickneſs ſeem to be unſerviceable, yet it is not the leaſt or loweſt of his Services, which he is then at laſt to do: Partly by his holy example, and partly by his Speeches; which are both more obſerved in dying men, than in any others. For now all ſuppoſe, that if there were before any mask of hypocriſie, it is laid aſide, and the Soul that is going to the Bar of God, will deal ſincerely. And now it is ſuppoſed, that we are delivered much from all the befooling Deluſions of Proſperity, and therefore fitter to be Counſellors to others. And every Chriſtian ſhould be be very deſirous to do good to the laſt, and be found ſo doing.

Dir. 1. §. 2. Direct. 1. Shew not a diſtempered impatient mind. Though pain will be pain, and fleſh will be fleſh, yet ſhew men that you have alſo Reaſon and Spirit. And that it calmeth your Soul, tho' it eaſe not your Body. Speak good of God, as beſeemeth one that indeed believeth, that it is good for us, when we are afflicted by him, and that all ſhall work together for good to us: Speak not a repining word againſt him, Job 1. 22. In all this Job ſinned not, nor charged God fooliſhly. And ſpeak not too peeviſhly and impatiently to thoſe about you; tho' weakneſs incline you to it, yet let the power of Grace appear.

Heb. 12. 7, 8, 9. Rom. 8. 28.

Dir. 2. §. 3. Direct. 2. Let thoſe that are about you ſee that you take the life to come for a reality, and that you verily expect to live with Chriſt in joys for ever. Let them ſee this in your holy joy and confidence, and your thankfulneſs to God for the grace and hopes which he hath given through Chriſt. I know that a pained languiſhing Body, is undiſpoſed to expreſs the comforts of the Soul: But yet as long as the Soul is the Commander, they may be expreſſed in ſome good meaſure, though not with ſuch vivacity and alacrity as in health. Behave your ſelves before all, as thoſe that are going to dwell with Chriſt. If you ſhew them that you take Heaven for a real felicity, it will do much to draw them to do ſo too; ſhew them the difference between the death of the Righteous, and of the Wicked; and that may ſo draw them to deſire to die the death of the righteous, that it may draw them alſo to reſolve to live their lives. How many Souls might it win to God, if they ſaw in his dying Servants, ſuch confidence and joy, as beſeemeth Men that are entring into a World of Joy, and Peace, and Bleſſedneſs? If we went out of the Body, as from a Priſon into Liberty; and from a tedious Journey, to our deſired home, it would invite Sinners to ſeek after the ſame felicity, and be a powerful Sermon to convert the inconſiderate.

Dir. 3. §. 4. Direct. 3. Now tell poor Sinners of the Vanity of the World, and of all its Glory, Wealth, and Pleaſure; and of the miſchief and deceitfulneſs of Sin. Say to them, [O Sirs, you may ſee in me, what the World is worth: If you had all the Wealth and Pleaſure that you deſire, thus it would turn you off, and forſake you in the end: It will eaſe no pain: It will bring no Peace to a troubled Soul: It will not lengthen your lives an hour: It will not ſave you from the wrath of God. It maketh your death the ſadder, becauſe you muſt be taken from it: Your account will be the more dreadful. O Love not ſuch a vain deceitful World; ſell not your Souls for ſo poor a price. Forſake it before you are forſaken by it. O make not light of any ſin! Tho' the wanton fleſh would have you take it for a harmleſs thing, you cannot imagine, when the pleaſure is gone, how ſharp a ſting is left behind. Sin will then be no jeſting matter, when your Souls are going hence, into the dreadful preſence of the moſt Holy God.]

Dir. 4. §. 5. Direct. 4. Now tell thoſe about you of the excellency and neceſſity of the Love of God, of Heaven, of Chriſt, and of a holy Life. Though theſe may be made light of at a diſtance, yet a Soul that is drawing near them, will be more awakned to underſtand their worth. Say to them, [O Friends, I find now more than ever I did before, that it is only God, that is the end and happineſs of Souls: Nothing but his Favour through Jeſus Chriſt, can comfort and content a dying Man; and none but Chriſt can reconcile us to God, and anſwer for our Sins, and make us acceptable; and no way but that of Faith and Holineſs will end in Happineſs. Opinions and cuſtomary Forms in Religion, will not ſerve the turn; to be of this or that Party, or Church, or Communion, will not ſave you. It is only the Soul that is juſtified by Chriſt, and ſanctified by his Spirit, and brought up to the Love of God and Holineſs, that ſhall be ſaved. Whatever Opinion, or Church, you are of, without Holineſs you ſhall never ſee God to your comfort, as without Faith it is impoſſible to pleaſe him. Heb. 12. 14. & 11. 6. Rom. 8. 6, 7, 9. O now what a miſerable caſe were I in, if I had all the Wealth and Honour in the World, and had not the Favour of God, and a Chriſt to Purchaſe it, and his Spirit to witneſs it, and prepare me for a better life. Now I ſee the difference between ſpending time in Holineſs, and in Sin; between a godly, and a worldly, fleſhly, careleſs Life. Now I would not for a thouſand Worlds, that I had ſpent my life in ſenſuality and ungodlineſs, and continued a ſtranger to the Life of Faith. Now if I had a World, I would give it to be more holy? O Sirs, believe it, when you come to die, Sin will be then Sin indeed, and Chriſt, and Grace, will be better than Riches, and to die in an unregenerate, unſanctified ſtate, will be a greater miſery than any heart can now conceive.]

Dir. 5. § 6. Direct. 5. Indeavour alſo to make Men know the difference between the Godly, and the Wicked. Tell them, [I now ſee who maketh the wiſeſt choice: O happy Men, that chuſe the Joys which have no end, and lay up their Treaſure in Heaven, where Ruſt and Moths do not corrupt, and Thieves do not break through and ſteal, and labour for the Food that never periſheth, Mat. 6. 19, 20. Joh. 8. 27. O fooliſh Sinners, that for an inch of fleſhly filthy Pleaſure, do loſe Everlaſting Reſt and Joy! What ſhall it profit them that win all the World, and loſe their Souls?]

Dir. 6. §. 7. Direct. 6. Labour alſo to convince Men of the preciouſneſs of time, and the folly of putting off Repentance, and a holy Life, till the laſt. Say to them, [O Friends, it is hard for you in the time of Health and Proſperity, to judge of time according to its worth: But when time is gone, or near an end, how precious doth it then appear! Now if I had all the time again, which ever I ſpent in unneceſſary Sleep, or Sports, or Curioſities, or Idleneſs, or any needleſs thing; how highly ſhould I value it, and ſpend it in another manner than I have done. Of all my Life that is paſt and gone, I have no comfort now in the remembrance of one hour, but what was ſpent in obedience to God. O take time to make ſure of your Salvation, before its gone, and you are left under the tormenting feeling of your loſs.]

Dir. 7. §. 8. Direct. 7. Labour alſo to make them underſtand the ſinfulneſs of ſloth, and of loytering in the Matters of God, and their Salvation; and ſtir them up to do it with all their might. Say to them, [I have often heard ungodly People, deride or blame the Diligence, and Zeal, and ſtrictneſs of the Godly; but if they ſaw, and felt, what I ſee and feel, they could not do it. Can a Man that is going into another World, imagine that any thing is ſo worthy of his greateſt Zeal and Labour, as his God and his Salvation? Or blame Men for being loth to burn in Hell? Or for taking more pains for their Souls, than for their Bodies. O Friends, let Fools talk what they will, in their ſleep and frenzy, as you love your Souls, do not think any care, or coſt, or pains too great for your Salvation! If they think not their labour too good for this World, do not you think yours too good for a better World. Let them now ſay what they will, when they come to die, there is none of them all, that is not quite forſaken of Senſe and Reaſon, but will wiſh that they had loved God, and ſought and ſerved him, not formally in hypocritical complement, but with all their Heart, and Soul and Might.]

Dir. 8. §. 9. Direct. 8. Labour also to fortifie the Minds of your Friends, against all fears of Suffering for Christ, and all impatience in any of their Afflictions. Say to them, [The sufferings as well as the pleasures of this life are so short, that they are not worthy once to be compared with the durable things of the life to come. If I have past through a life of want and toil, if my Body hath indured painful sickness, if I have suffered never so much from Men, and been used cruelly for the sake of Christ, what the worse am I now when all is past? Would an easie, honourable, plentiful life, have made my death either the safer or the sweeter? O no! It is the things eternal that are indeed significant and regardable. Neither pleasure nor pain that is short, is of any great regard. Make sure of the Everlasting Pleasures, and you have done your work. O live by Faith, and not by Sense, look not at the Temporal Things which are seen. It is not your concernment, whether you are Rich or Poor, in Honour or Dishonour, in Health or Sickness, but whether you be Justified, and Sanctified, and shall live with God in Heaven for ever.] Such serious Counsels of dying Men, may make their Sickness more fruitful than their Health.

CHAP. XXXI.

Directions to the Friends of the Sick, that are about them.

Dir. 1. §. 1. Direct. 1. When you see the Sickness or Death of Friends, take it as Gods warning to you, to prepare for the same your selves. Remember that thus it must be with you: Thus are you like to lie in pain; and thus will all the World forsake you, and nothing of all your Honour or Wealth, will afford you any comfort. This will be the end of all your pleasures, of your greatness, and your Houses, and Lands, and Attendance; and of your delicious Meats and Drinks; and of all your Mirth, and Play, and Recreations. Thus must your Carkasses be forsaken of your Souls, and laid in a Grave, and there lie rotting in the dark; and your Souls appear before your Judge, to be sentenced to their endless State. This certainly will be your case! And, O how quickly will it come! Then, what will Christ and Grace be worth? Then, nothing but the favor of God can comfort you. Then, whether will it be better to you, to look back on a holy well-spent life, or upon a life of fleshly ease and pleasure? Then had you rather be a Saint, or a Sensualist? Lay this to heart, and let the House of Mourning make you better, and live as one that looks to die.

Dir. 2. §. 2. Direct. 2. Use the best means for the recovery of the sick, which the ablest Physicians shall advise you to, as far as you are able. Take heed of being guilty of the Pride and Folly of many self-conceited ignorant persons, who are ready to thrust every Medicine of their own, upon their Friends in sickness, when they neither know the nature of the sickness, or the cure. Many thousands are brought to their death untimely, by the folly of their nearest Friends, who will needs be medicining them, and ruling them, and despising the Physician; as if they were themselves much wiser than he, when they are meerly ignorant of what they do. As ignorant Sectaries despise Divines, and set up themselves as better Preachers, so many silly Women despise Physicians; and when they have got a few Medicines, which they know not the nature of, nor how to use, they take themselves for the better Physicians, and the lives of their poor Friends must pay for their Pride and Folly. No means must be trusted to instead of God, but the best must be used in subservience unto God. And one would think that a small measure of wit and humility might serve to make silly Women understand, that they that never bestowed one Year in the study of Physick, are not so likely to understand it, as those that have studied and practised it a great part of their lives. It is sad to see People kill their dearest Friends in kindness; even by that ignorance and proud self-conceitedness, which also maketh them the destroyers of their own Souls.

Quest. §. 3. Quest. But seeing God hath appointed all mens time, what good can Physick do? If God hath appointed them to live, they shall live; and if he have appointed them to die, it is not Physick that can save them.

Answ. Answ. This is the foolish reasoning of wicked people about their Salvation. If God have appointed me to Salvation, I shall be saved; if he have not, all my diligence will do no good. But such people know not what they talk of. God hath made your duty more open and known to you, than his own Decrees. And you separate those things which he hath joyned together. As God hath appointed no man to Salvation simply without respect to the means of Salvation; so God hath appointed no man to live but by the means of life. His Decree is not [Such a Man shall be saved] or [Such a Man shall live so long] only: But this is his Decree, [Such a Man shall be saved, in the way of Faith and Holiness, and in the diligent use of means] and [Such a Man shall live so long, by the use of those means which I have fitted for the preservation of his life.] So that as he that liveth a holy life may be sure he is chosen to Salvation (if he persevere) and he that is ungodly may be sure that he is in the way to Hell; so he that neglecteth the means of his Health and Life, doth shew that it is unlike that God hath appointed him to live: And he that useth the best means is liker to recover, (though the best will not cure uncurable Diseases, nor make a Man immortal.) The reasoning is the same, as if you should say, [If God have appointed me to live so long, I shall live though I neither eat nor drink. But if he have not, eating and drinking will not prolong my life.] But you must know, that God doth not only appoint you to live, (that is but half his Decree) but he decreeth [That you shall live by eating and drinking.]

Dir. 3. §. 4. Direct. 3. Mind your Friends betimes to make their Wills, and prudently by good advice to settle their Estates, that they may leave no occasion of contending about it, when they are dead. This should be done in Health, because of the uncertainty of life: But if it be undone till sickness, it should then be done betimes. The neglect of it, oft causeth much sinful contending about worldly things, even among those near Relations, who should live in the greatest amity and peace.

Dir. 4. §. 5. Direct. 4. Keep away vain company from them, as far as you can conveniently, (except it be such as must needs be admitted, or such as are like to receive any good by the holy counsel of the sick.) It is a great annoyance to one that is near death, to hear People talk to little purpose about the World or some Impertinences; when they are going speedily to their endless state, and have need of no more impediments in their way; but of the best assistance that their Friends can afford them. Procure some able faithful Minister to be with them, to counsel them about the state of their Souls. And get some holy able

Christians,

Christians, to be much about them, who are fit to pray with them, and instruct them.

Dir. 5. §. 6. Direct. 5. Bear with their impatience, and grudge not at any trouble that they put you to. Remember that weakness is froward, and as you bear with the crying of Children, so must you with the peevishness of the sick: and remember, that shortly it is like to be your own case, and you must be a trouble to others, and they must bear with you. Be not weary of your Friends in sickness; but loving, and tender, and compassionate, and patient.

Dir. 6. §. 7. Direct. 6. Deal faithfully and prudently with them about the state of their Souls. Your faithfulness must be shewed in these two points. 1. That you do not flatter them with vain hopes of life, when they are more likely to die. 2. That you do not flatter them with false perswasions, that their state is safe, when they are yet unsanctified, nor put them in hopes of being saved without Regeneration.

Your Prudence must be manifested, 1. In suiting your Counsel, and Speeches, and Prayers to their state; and not using the same words to the ungodly, as you would to the Godly. 2. In so contracting your Counsel for the Conversion of the ungodly, as not to overwhelm them with more than they can bear; and yet not to leave out any point of absolute necessity to Salvation. Alas, how much skill doth such a work require? And how few Christians, (that I say not, Pastors,) are fit for it.

Quest. 1. §. 8. Quest. But is it a duty when the sick are like to die, to make it known to them?

Answ. Answ. Sometime it is, and sometimes not. 1. Some sicknesses are such, as will be so increased with fear, that the Patient that before was in hope of a recovery, will be put almost past hope. And some sicknesses are much different, and are not like to be so increased by it. And some are past all hope already. 2. Some are so prepared to die, that they have the less need to be acquainted with their danger: And some are unconverted, and in so dangerous a case, that the absolute necessity of their Souls may require it. When the Soul is in so sad a case, and yet the Body may be indangered by the fear of the Sentence of Death, it is the safest course to tell them, That tho' God may recover them, yet their disease is so dangerous, as calleth for their speedy and serious preparation for Death; which will not be lost, if God restore them. So that they may have so much hopes, as to keep their fear from killing them, and so much acquaintance with their danger, as may put them upon their duty. But in case there be already little or no hope, or in case the Disease will be but little increased by the fear (which is the case of the most) the danger should not at all be hid.

Quest. 2. §. 9. Quest. Am I always bound to tell a wicked man of his sin and misery, when it may exasperate his disease, and offend his mind?

Answ. Answ. If it were a sickness that is void of danger, in case his mind be quiet, and be like to kill him, if his mind be disturbed, then were it the most prudent course to call him so far to Repentance and Faith, as you can do it without any dangerous disturbance of him; because it is most Charity to his Soul, to help him to a longer time of Repentance, rather than to lay all the hopes of his Salvation upon the present time. But this is not an ordinary case; therefore ordinarily it is a duty to acquaint the sick person, that is yet in his sin, and unregenerate state, with the truth of his danger, and the necessity of renovation. Alas, it is a lamentable kind of friendship, to flatter a poor Soul into damnation, or to hide his danger till he is past recovery. When he is in a state of unexpressible misery, and hath but a few Days or Weeks time left, to do all that ever must be done for his Salvation. What horrid cruelty is it then, to let him to go to Hell for fear of displeasing or disquieting him?

§. 10. Object. But I am afraid I shall cast him into despair, if I tell him plainly that he is in a state of damnation.

Answ. If you let him alone a little longer, he will be in remediless despair. There is no despair remediless, but that in Hell. But now you may help to save him, both from present and endless desperation. He must needs despair of ever being saved without a Christ, or without the Regeneration of the holy Spirit, or without true Faith and Repentance, and love to God, and Holiness. But need he despair of attaining all these, while Christ is offered him so freely, and a full remedy is at hand? He must know his sin and misery, or else he is never like to scape it: But he must also be acquainted with the true remedy; and that is your way to keep him from despair, and not by flattering him into Hell.

§. 11. Quest. But what should one do in so short a time, and with dead hearted sinners? Alas, what hope is there? If it were nothing but their ignorance, it cannot be cured in a moment. And is there then any hope in so short a space, to bring them to knowledge, and repentance, and a changed heart, to love God and holiness; and that when pain and weakness do disable them? Quest. 3.

Answ. The case indeed is very sad; but yet while there is life there is some hope: And while there is any hope, we should do our best, when it is for the saving of a Soul; and the difficulty should but stir us up to use our utmost skill and diligence. But as it is the misery of such to delay Conversion till so unfit a time, so is it too frequently the sin of Believers, that they delay their serious endeavours to convert men, till such a time as they almost despair of the success. Answ.

§. 12. Quest. But what shall we do in a doubtful case, when we know not whether the person be renewed and truly penitent, or not; which is the case of most that we have to deal with? Quest. 4

Answ. You can tell whether the grounds of your hope, or of your fear, concerning them, be the greater; and according your speech must be mixed and tempered, and your Counsels or Comforts given with the Conditions and Suppositions express. Answ.

§. 13. Quest. But what order would you have us observe in speaking to the ignorant and ungodly, when the time is so short? Quest. 5.

Answ. 1. Labor to awaken them to a lively sense of the change which is at hand, that they may understand the necessity of looking after the state of their Souls. 2. Then shew them what are the terms of Salvation, and who they are that the Gospel doth judge to Salvation or Damnation. 3. Next advise them to try which of these is their condition, and to deal faithfully, seeing self-flattery may undo them, but can do them no good. 4. Then help them in the trial. q.d. [If it have been so or so with you, then you may know that this is your case.] 5. Then tell them the Reasons of your fears, if you fear they are unconverted, or of your hopes, if you hope indeed, that it is better with them. 6. Then exhort them conditionally (if they are yet in a carnal unsanctified state,) to lament it and be humbled and penitent, for their sinful and ungodly life. 7. And then tell them the remedy in Christ and the Holy Answ.

Ghost,

Ghoſt, and the Promiſe or Covenant of Grace. 8. And laſtly, tell them their preſent duty, that this remedy may prove effectual to their Salvation. And if you have ſo much intereſt or authority as maketh it fit for you, excite them by convenient Queſtions ſo far to open their caſe, as may direct you, and as by their Anſwers may ſhew, whether they truly reſolve for a holy life, if God reſtore them, and whether their hearts indeed be changed, or not.

Dir. 7. §. 14. Direct. 7. If you are not able to inſtruct them as you ſhould, read ſome good Book to them, which is moſt ſuitable to their caſe, Such as Mr. Perkins Right art of Dying well: The Practice of Piety in the Directions for the Sick: Mr. Ed. Lawrences Treatiſe of Sickneſs, or what elſe is moſt ſuitable to them. And becauſe moſt are themſelves unable for counſelling the ſick aright, and you may not have a fit Book at hand, I ſhall here ſubjoyn a brief Form or two for ſuch to Read to the Sick that can endure no long diſcourſe. And other Books will help you to forms of Prayer with them, if you cannot pray without ſuch help.

Dir. 8. §. 15. Direct. 8. Judge not of the ſtate of mens Souls, by thoſe carriages in their ſickneſs, which proceed from their Diſeaſes or bodily diſtemper. Many ignorant People judge of a man by the manner of his dying: If one dye in calmneſs and clearneſs of underſtanding, and a few good words, they think that this is to dye like a Saint. Whereas in Conſumptions, and oft in Dropſies, and other ſuch Chronical Diſeaſes, this is ordinary with good and bad: And in a Feaver that's violent, or a Phrenſie or Diſtraction, the beſt man that is, may dye without the uſe of Reaſon: Some Diſeaſes will make one blockiſh and heavy and unapt to ſpeak: And ſome conſiſt with as much freedom of ſpeech, as in time of health. The ſtate of mens Souls muſt not be judged of, by ſuch accidental unavoidable things as theſe.

Dir. 9. §. 16. Direct. 9. Be neither unnaturally ſenſleſs at the death of Friends, nor exceſſively dejected or afflicted. To make light of the Death of Relations and Friends, be they good or bad, is a ſign of a very vitious nature; that is ſo much ſelfiſh, as not much to regard the lives of others: And he that regardeth not the life of his friends is little to be truſted in his lower concernments! I ſpeak not this of thoſe perſons whoſe temper alloweth them not to weep: For there may be as deep a regard and ſorrow in ſome that have no tears, as in others that abound with them. But I ſpeak of a naughty ſelfiſh nature, that is little affected with any ones concernments but its own.

§. 17. Yet your grief for the death of Friends, muſt be very different both in degree and kind. 1. For ungodly Friends you muſt grieve for their own ſakes, becauſe if they dyed ſuch, they are loſt for ever. 2. For your Godly Friends, you muſt mourn for the ſake of your ſelves and others, becauſe God hath removed ſuch as were bleſſings to thoſe about them. 3. For choice of Magiſtrates and Miniſters and other Inſtruments of publick good, your ſorrow muſt be greater, becauſe of the common loſs, and the judgment thereby inflicted on the World. 4. For old tryed Chriſtians that have overcome the World, and lived ſo long till age and weakneſs make them almoſt unſerviceable to the Church, and who groan to be unburdened and to be with Chriſt, your ſorrow ſhould be leaſt, and your joy and thanks for their happineſs ſhould be greateſt. But eſpecially abhor that nature that ſecretly is glad of the death of Parents, (or little ſorrowful) becauſe that their Eſtates are faln to you, or you are enriched, or ſet at liberty by their death. God ſeldom leaveth this ſin unrevenged, by ſome heavy judgments even in this life.

§. 18. Direct. 10. To overcome your inordinate grief for the Death of your Relations, conſider theſe things following. 1. That exceſs of ſorrow is your ſin: And ſinning is an ill uſe to be made of your affliction. 2. That it tendeth to a great deal more: It unfitteth you for many duties which you are bound to, as to Rejoyce in God, and to be thankful for mercies, and cheerful in his love and praiſe and ſervice: And is it a ſmall thing to unfit your ſelves for the greateſt duties? If you are ſo troubled at Gods diſpoſal of his own, what doth your Will but riſe up againſt the will of God; as if you grudged at the exerciſe of his Dominion and Government, that is, that he is God! Who is wiſeſt and beſt and fitteſt to diſpoſe of all mens lives? Is it God or you? Would you not have God to be the Lord of all, and to diſpoſe of Heaven and Earth, and of the Lives and Crowns of the greateſt Princes? If you would not, you would not have him to be God. If you would, is it not unreaſonable that you or your friends only ſhould be excepted from his diſpoſal? 4. If your friends are in Heaven, how unſuitable is it, for you to be overmuch mourning for them, when they are rapt into the higheſt Joys with Chriſt; and Love ſhould teach you to rejoyce with them that rejoyce, and not to mourn as thoſe that have no hope. 5. You know not what mercy God ſhewed to your friends, in taking them away from the evil to come, you know not what ſuffering the Land, or Church is faln into; or at leaſt might have faln upon themſelves; nor what ſins they might have been tempted to. But you are ſure that Heaven is better than Earth; and that it is far better for them to be with Chriſt. 6. You always knew that your Friends muſt dye; To grieve that they were mortal, is but to grieve that they were but Men. 7. If their mortality or death be grievous to you, you ſhould rejoyce that they are arrived at the ſtate of Immortality, where they muſt live indeed and dye no more. 8. Remember how quickly you muſt be with them again. The expectation of living long your ſelves, is the cauſe of your exceſſive grief for the death of Friends. If you looked your ſelves to die to morrow, or within a few weeks, you would leſs grieve that your Friends are gone before you. 9. Remember that the World is not for one Generation only; Others muſt have our places when we are gone; God will be ſerved by ſucceſſive Generations, and not only by one. 10. If you are Chriſtians indeed, it is the higheſt of all your deſires and hopes to be in Heaven; And will you ſo grieve that your Friends are gone thither, where you moſt deſire and hope to be.

Dir. 10. Help againſt exceſſive grief for the Death of Friends

Iſa. 57. 1. Phil. 1. 21. 23.

§. 19. Object. All this is reaſon, if my Friend were gone to Heaven: But he dyed impenitently, and how ſhould I be comforted for a Soul that that I have cauſe to think is damned?

Object.

Anſw. Their miſery muſt be your grief; But not ſuch a grief as ſhall deprive you of your greater Joys, or diſable you for your greater duties. 1. God is fitter than you to judge of the meaſures of his mercy and his judgments, and you muſt neither pretend to be more merciful than he, nor to reprehend his Juſtice. 2. All the works of God are good; and all that is good is aimable, though the miſery of the creature be bad to it, yet the works of Juſtice declare the Wiſdom and Holineſs of God; and the perfecter we are, the more they will be aimable to us. For, 3. God himſelf, and Chriſt who is the merciful Saviour of the World, approves of the damnation of the finally ungodly. 4. And the Saints and Angels in Heaven do know more of the miſery of the Souls in Hell, than we do; and yet it abateth not their Joys? And the perfecter any is, the more he is like-minded unto God. 5. How glad and thankful ſhould you be to think that God hath delivered your ſelves from thoſe eternal flames? The Miſery of others ſhould excite your Thankfulneſs. 6. And ſhould not the Joys of all the Saints and Angels be your Joy, as well as the Sufferings of the wicked be your ſorrows? But above all the thoughts of the Bleſſedneſs and Glory of God himſelf, ſhould over-top all the concernments of the Creature with you. If you will mourn more for the Thieves and Murderers that are hanged, then you will rejoyce in the Juſtice, Proſperity and Honor of the King, and the wel-fare of all his faithful Subjects, you behave not your ſelves as faithful Subjects. 7. Shortly you hope to come to Heaven; Mourn now for the damned, as you ſhall do then; or at leaſt, let not the difference be too great; when that and not this is your perfect ſtate.

A Form of Exhortation to the UNGODLY in their SICKNESS (or thoſe that we fear are ſuch.)

Dear Friend: The God that muſt diſpoſe of us and all things, doth threaten by this ſickneſs, to call away your Soul, and put an end to the time of your Pilgrimage; and therefore your Friends that love and pity you, muſt not now be ſilent, if they can ſpeak any thing for your preparation and ſalvation, becauſe it muſt be now or never; When a few days are paſt, they muſt never have any ſuch opportunity more: If now we prevail not with you, you are likely to be quickly out of hearing, and paſt our advice and help for ever. And becauſe I know your weakneſs bids me to be but ſhort, and your memory is not to be burdened with too much, and yet your neceſſity muſt not be neglected, I ſhall reduce all that I have to ſay to you, to theſe four heads: 1. Of the change which you ſeem near to, and the World which you are going to. 2. Of the preparation that muſt be made by all that will be ſaved, and who they be that the Goſpel doth juſtifie or Condemn. 3. I would fain help you to underſtand which of theſe conditions you are in, and what will become of your Soul, if it thus goeth hence: And, 4. If your caſe be bad, I would direct you how you may come out of it, and what is yet to be done while there remaineth any time and hope. And I pray you ſet your heart to what I ſay; for I will ſpeak nothing but the certain truth of God, revealed to the world by his Son and Spirit, expreſſed in the Scripture, and believed by all the Church of Chriſt.

I. God knoweth the change is great, which you are near. You are leaving this World, where you have ſpent the Days of your preparation for Eternity, and leaving this Fleſh to corrupt and turn to common Earth, and muſt here converſe with Man no more: You are going now to ſee that World, which the Goſpel told you of, and you have often heard of, but neither you nor we did ever ſee. Before your Friends have laid your Body in the Grave, your Soul muſt enter into its endleſs ſtate, and at the Reſurrection your Body be joyned with it. Either Heaven or Hell muſt be your lot for ever. If it be Heaven, you will there find a World of Light and Love and Peace; a World of Angels and glorified Souls, who are all made perfect in Knowledge and Holineſs; living in the perfect flames of Love to their glorious Creator, Redeemer and Regenerate: And with them you will be thus perfected your ſelf: your Soul will ſee the Glory of God, and be rapt up in his Love, and filled with his Joys, and employed triumphantly in his Praiſes, and this for ever. If Hell ſhould be your Portion, you will there be thruſt away as a hated thing, from the face of God; and there you will find a World of Devils and unholy damned miſerable Souls; among whom you muſt dwell, in the flames of the wrath of God, and the horrors of your own Conſcience, remembring with anguiſh the mercy which you once rejected, and the warnings and time which once you loſt: And that the Reſurrection your Soul and Body muſt be re-united, and live there in torment and deſpair for ever. I know theſe things are but half believed, by the ungodly World, while they profeſs to believe them: And therefore they muſt feel that which they refuſed to believe: But God hath revealed it to us; and we will believe our Maker. You are now going to ſee the great difference between the end of Holineſs and of Sin; between the Godly and the Ungodly; and to know by your own experience thoſe Joys or Torments, which the Wicked will not know by Faith. And O what a preparation doth ſuch a change require! Matth. 13. 2 Theſſ. 1. 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11.

II. You are next to know what Perſons they are, and how they differ, who muſt abide for ever in theſe different ſtates. As we are the Children of Adam, we are all corrupted; our Minds are carnal, and ſet upon this World, and ſavour nothing but the things of the fleſh; And the further we go in ſin, the worſe we are; being ſtrangers to the Life of Faith, and to the Love of God and the Life to come, taking the Proſperity and Pleaſure of the Fleſh, for the Felicity which we moſt deſire and ſeek! The name of this ſtate in Scripture is, Carnal, and Ungodly and Unholy; becauſe ſuch Men live in a mere fleſhly nature or diſpoſition for fleſhly ends, in a fleſhly manner, and are not at all devoted to God, and carried up to Heavenly Deſires and Delights; but live chiefly for this Life, and not for the Life to come: And though they may take up ſome kind of Religion, in a ſecond place and upon the by, for fear of being damned when they can keep the World no longer; yet is it this World which they principally value, love and ſeek, and their Religion is ſubject to their worldly and fleſhly intereſt and Delights: And though God hath provided and offered them a Saviour, to teach them better, and reclaim and ſanctifie them by his Word and Spirit, and forgive them if they will believe in him and return, yet do they ſottiſhly neglect this Mercy, or obſtinately refuſe it, and continue their worldly fleſhly lives, till time be paſt, and Mercy hath done, and there is no remedy. Theſe are the Men that God will condemn, and this is the true deſcription of them. And it will not ſtand with the Governing-Juſtice, and Holineſs and Truth of God to ſave them.

But

But on the other side, all those that God will save, do heartily believe in Jesus Christ, who is sent of God to be the Saviour of Souls; and he maketh them know (by his Word and Spirit) their grievous sin and misery in their state of corrupted nature; and he humbleth them for it, and bringeth them to true Repentance, and maketh them loath themselves for their iniquities; and seeing now they have cast away and undone themselves, and are no better than the slaves of Satan, and the heirs of Hell, they joyfully accept of the remedy that is offered them in Christ: They heartily take him for their Saviour and King, and give up themselves in Covenant to him, to be justified and sanctified by him; whereupon he pardoneth all their sin, and further enlighteneth and sanctifieth them by his spirit: He sheweth them by faith, the infinite Love of God, and the sure everlasting holy Joys, which they may have in Heaven with him: And how blessed a life they may there obtain (through his purchase and gift) with all the blessed Saints and Angels: He maketh them deliberately to compare this offer of Eternal Happiness, with all the pleasures and seeming commodities of sin, and all that this deceitful world can do for them: And having considered of both, they see that there is no comparison to be made, and are ashamed that ever they were so mad as to prefer Earth before Heaven, and an inch of Time before Eternity, and a dream of pleasure before the Everlasting Joys, and to love the Pleasures of a transitory World, above the Presence and Favour and Glory of God! And for the time to come, they are firmly Resolved what to do, even to take Heaven for their only Happiness, and there to lay up their Hopes and Treasure, and to live to God, as they have done to the flesh; and to make sure of their Salvation, whatever become of their worldly interest. And thus the spirit doth dwell and work in them, and renew their Hearts, and give them a hatred to every sin, and a Love to every holy thing, even to the holy Word, and Worship and Ways and Servants of the Lord: And in a word, he maketh them New Creatures, and tho' they have still their sinful imperfections, yet the bent of their Hearts and Lives is Holy and Heavenly, and they long to be perfect, and are labouring after it, and seek first the Kingdom of God and his Righteousness, and live above the world and flesh; And shortly Christ will make them perfect, and Justifie them in the Day of their Judgment, and give them the glorious end of all their Faith, Obedience and Patience. These are the Persons, and none but these (among us, that have the use of Reason) that shall live with God.

III. Now this being the infallible Truth of the Gospel, and this being the true difference between the Righteous and the Wicked, the Justified and Condemned Souls, O how nearly doth it now concern you, to try which of these is your own condition? Certainly it may be known: For God will judge the World in Righteousness, by the same Law or Covenant by which he Governeth them. Know but whom the Law of Christ condemneth or justificeth, and you may soon know whom the Judge will condemn and justifie. For he will proceed according to this Law. If you should die in an unrenewed state, in your Sins, your Hopes of Heaven would all dye with you: And if you should think never so well of your self till Death, and pretend never so confidently to trust on Christ and the mercy of God, one hour will convince you to your everlasting woe that Gods mercy and Christs merits did never bring to Heaven an unsanctified Soul. Self-flattery is good for nothing, but to keep you from Repenting till time be past, and to quiet you in Satans snares till there be no remedy: Therefore presently, as you love your Soul, examine your self, and try which of these is the condition that you are in, and accordingly judge your self before God judge you. May you not know if you will, whether you have most minded Earth or Heaven, and which you have preferred and sought with the highest esteem, and Resolution, and whether your Worldly or Heavenly interest have born sway; and which of them it is that gave place unto the other? Cannot a man tell if he will, what it is which his very Soul hath practically taken for his chief concernment? and what it is that hath had most of his Love and Care? and what hath been next his heart, and which he hath preferred when they came to the parting, and one was set against the other? Cannot you tell whether you have lived principally to the flesh, for the Prosperity of this World, and the Pleasures of Sin, or whether the Spirit of Christ by his Word hath enlightned you, and shewed you your Sin and Misery and humbled you for it, and shewed you the Glory of the Life to come, and the Happiness of living in the Love of God, and hereupon hath united your heart unto himself, and turned it from Sin to Holiness, from the World to God, and from Earth to Heaven, and made you a new Creature, to live for Heaven as you did for Earth: Surely this is not so small and indiscernable a work or change, but he that hath felt it on himself may know it. It is a good work to bring a Sinner to feel his unrighteousness and Misery, and to apply himself to Christ for Righteousness and Life: It's a great work to take off the heart from all the Felicity of this World, and to set it unfeignedly upon God, and to cause him to place and seek his Happiness in another World, whatever become of all the Prosperity or Pleasure of the Flesh. It is thus with every true Believer, for all the remnant of his Sins and Weaknesses: And may you not know whether it be thus, or not, with you? One of these is your case: And it's now time to know which of them it is; when God is ready to tell you by his judgment. If indeed you are in Christ, and his Spirit be in you, and hath renewed you, and sanctified you, and turned your Heart and Life to God, I have then nothing more than Peace and Comfort to speak to you (as in the following Exhortation:) But if it be otherwise, and you are yet in a carnal state, and were never renewed by the Spirit of Christ, will you give me leave to deal faithfully with you, as is necessary with one in your condition, and to set before you at once your Sin and your Remedy, and to tell you what yet you must do if you will be saved.

Mat. 18. 3 Heb. 12. 14. Joh 3. 3. 5, 6

IV. And first, will you here lay to heart your folly, and unfeignedly lament your sinful life before the Lord? Not only this or that particular sin; but principally your fleshly heart and life: That in the main, you have lived to this corruptible flesh, and loved and sought and served the World, before your God and the Happiness of your Soul. Alas, friend, did you not know that you had an Immortal Soul, that must live in Joy or Misery for ever? Did you not know that you were made to Love and serve and honour your Maker? and that you had the little time of this life given you, to try and prepare you for your endless life? and that as you lived here it must go with you in Heaven or Hell for ever? If you did not believe these things, why did you not come, and give your reasons against them, to some judicious Divine that was able to have shewed you the Evidence of their truth? If you did believe them, alas, how was it possible that you could forget them? Could you believe a Heaven and a Hell, and not regard them, or suffer any transitory worldly vanity, to be more regarded by you? Did you know what you had to do in the World, and yet is it all undone till now? Were you never warned of this Day?

Did

Did never Preacher, nor Scripture, nor Book, nor Friend, nor Conſcience, tell you of your end? and tell you what would be the fruit of ſin, and of your contempt and ſlighting of Chriſt and of his Grace? Did you know that you muſt love God above the World, if ever you would be ſaved, and that you muſt to that end be partaker of Chriſt and renewed by his Spirit, and yet would you let out your hearts upon the world, and follow the bruitiſh Pleaſures of the fleſh, and never earneſtly ſeek after that Chriſt and ſpirit that ſhould thus renew and ſanctifie you? Do you not now think that it had been wiſer to have ſought Chriſt and grace and ſet your affections firſt on the things above, and to have made ſure work for your Soul againſt ſuch a day as this, than to have hardned your heart againſt Gods Grace, and deſpiſed Chriſt and Heaven and your ſalvation, for a thing of naught? You ſee now what it was that you preferred before Heaven? What you have now got by all your ſinful love of the World? where now is all your fleſhly pleaſure? Will it all now ſerve turn to ſave you from death, or the wrath of God, and everlaſting miſery? Will it now go with you to another World? Or do you think it will comfort a Soul in Hell, to remember the Wealth which he gathered and left behind him upon earth? Would it not now have been much more comfortable to you, if you could ſay [My days were ſpent in Holineſs? in the love of my dear Redeemer? and in the hearty ſervice of my God? in praiſing him and praying to him, in learning and obeying his holy word and will; My buſineſs in the World was to pleaſe God and ſeek a better World? and while I followed my lawful Trade or Calling, my eye was chiefly on eternal life? Inſtead of pleaſing the fleſh, I delighted my Soul in the Love and Praiſe and Servrce of my Redeemer, and in the hopes of my eternal Bleſſedneſs; and now I am going to enjoy that God and happineſs which I believ'd and ſought.] Would not this be more comfortable to you now, than to look back on your time as ſpent in a worldly, fleſhly life, which you preferred before your God and your ſalvation? Chriſt would not have forſaken you in the time of your extremity, as the world doth, if you had cleaved faithfully to him. You little know what peace and comfort you might have found, even on earth, in a holy life! How ſweet would the word of God have been to you? How ſweet would prayer and meditation and holy conference have been? Do you think it is not more pleaſant to a true Believer, to read the promiſes of eternal life, and to think and talk of that bleſſed ſtate, when they ſhall dwell with God in Joy for ever, then it was to you to think and talk of worldly traſh and vanity? If you had uſed the world as a Traveller doth the neceſſaries of his journy, the thought of Heaven would have afforded you ſolid rational comfort, all the way. O little do you know the ſweetneſs of the love of God in Chriſt! and how good a Chriſtian findeth it, when he can but exerciſe & increaſe his knowledge and faith and love to God, and thankfulneſs for mercy, and hopes of Heaven, and walk with God in a heavenly converſation! Do you not wiſh now that this had been your courſe? But that which is done cannot be undone? and time that is paſt can never be called back: But yet there is a ſure remedy for your ſoul, if you have but a heart to entertain and uſe it. God ſo loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whoſoever believeth in him ſhould not periſh, but have everlaſting life. Jeſus Chriſt being God and Man is the Mediator between God and man! His death is a ſufficient Sacrifice for our ſins: It is his Office to ſave all thoſe that come to God by him: Do but unfeigned Repent of your ſinful life, and yet ſet your heart upon the life to come, and love God and Holineſs, better than the world and fleſhly pleaſure, and truſt your ſoul on Chriſt as your Redeemer, and he will certainly forgive you, and reconcile you unto God, and preſent you juſtified and ſpotleſs in his ſight. Think of your ſin till you abhor your ſelf, and think of your ſin and miſery till you feel that you are undone if you have not a Saviour: and then think what love God hath ſhewed you in Chriſt, in giving him to be incarnate and die for ſinners, and offering you freely to pardon all that ever you have done, and to juſtifie and ſave you, and bring you to endleſs glory with himſelf, if yet at laſt you will but give up your ſelves to Chriſt, and accept his mercy and return to God. What joyful tidings is here now for a ſinful miſerable ſoul! Yet this is the certain truth of God? This is his very Covenant of grace which is founded in the blood of Chriſt, and which he is now ready to make with you and ſeal to you by his ſpirit within, and his Sacrament without, if you do but heartily and unfeignedly conſent, believe in Chriſt, and turn to God, from the world and the fleſh, and reſolve upon a holy life if you ſhould recover, and then I can aſſure you from the word of God, that he will freely pardon you, and take you for his Child, and ſave your ſoul in endleſs glory. As late as it is, he will certainly receive you, if you return to him by Chriſt with all your heart. And doth not your heart now rejoice in this unſpeakable mercy, which is willing to ſave you after all the ſin that you have committed, and after all the time that you have loſt? Do you not love that God that is ſo abundant in goodneſs and in love? and that Saviour who hath purchaſed you this pardon and ſalvation? Is it not better think you, to love and praiſe and ſerve him, than to live in fleſhly luſts and pleaſures? And is it not better to dwell in Heaven with him, in endleſs Joys, than to live a while in the vain delights of ſinners and thence to paſs to endleſs miſery? O beg of God now to give you a new heart to believe in Chriſt, and repent of ſin and love him that is moſt holy, good and gracious: And take heed that you ſlight his grace no longer; and that you do not now take on you in a fear, to be that which you are not, or to do that which you would not hold to, if you ſhould recover. And to make all ſure, will you now ſincerely enter into a Covenant with Chriſt; I mean but the ſame Covenant which you made in Baptiſm and the Sacraments of the Lords Supper; and which would have ſaved you, if you had ſincerely made and kept it. Let me therefore help you both to underſtand it, and to do it by theſe queſtions, which I intreat you to anſwer ſincerely as one that is going to the preſence of God.

Joh. 3. 16. 18.

Queſt. 1. Do you truly believe that you are a rational creature, differing from bruits, being made to love and ſerve your Maker, and have an immortal ſoul, which muſt live in Heaven or Hell for ever? And that there is indeed a Heaven of Joys, and a Hell of puniſhments when this life is ended?

Queſt. 2. Do you believe that in Heaven, the ſouls of the juſtified at death, and the body alſo at the Reſurrection, ſhall be joyned with the Angels, and ſhall dwell with Chriſt, and ſee the glory of God, and be perfected in holineſs, and filled with the ſenſe of the love of God, and with the greateſt joys that our nature can receive, and ſhall live in the moſt delightful love and praiſe of God for ever.

Queſt. 3. Seeing you are certain that all the pleaſures of this life are ſhort, and will end in death, and leave the fleſh which deſired them, in corruption, do you not firmly believe that the joys of Heaven are infinitely better and more to be deſired and ſought, than all the pleaſures and profits of this life? And that it is moſt reasonable that we should love God above all Creatures, even with all our heart and soul and might?

Quest. 4. Seeing then that the love of God is both our duty and our happiness, is it not reason that we should be kept from the love of any thing in the World, which would steal away our hearts from God, and hinder us from loving him, and desiring, and seeking him? And that we should mortifie the love of worldly riches, honors, and delights; so far as they are against the love of God?

Quest. 5. Seeing God is the absolute Lord and Ruler of the World, is it not reason that we obey him, whatsoever he commandeth us, though we did not see the reason why he doth command it? And yet is it not plainly reasonable, that he commands us to love and honor and worship him; and to love one another, and to deal justly with all, and do as we would be done by, and to be careful of our Souls, and temperate for our Bodies; and not to neglect or dishonor our Maker, nor to neglect our own Salvation, nor abuse our Bodies by beastly filthiness or excess, nor to wrong our Neighbors, nor deny to do them any good that is in our power. This is the sum of all Gods Laws, and this is the nature of Holiness and Obedience. And do you not from your heart believe, that all this is very reasonable and good?

Quest. 6. When the sinful World was faln from Happiness into misery, by turning away from God and Holiness to sensuality, and God sent his Son to be their Redeemer and Saviour, to be a Sacrifice for Sin, and a Teacher and Pattern of a holy and obedient Life, and to make a new Covenant with them, in which he giveth them the pardon of all sin, and Everlasting Happiness, if they will but give up themselves to him as their Saviour, and Sanctifier, and by true Repentance turn to God: Do you not verily believe that miserable sinners should gladly and thankfully accept of such an offer? And abundantly love that God and Saviour, that hath so tenderly loved them, and so freely redeemed them from the flames of Hell, and so freely offered them Everlasting Life? And do you not believe that he, who after all this, shall slight all this Mercy, and refuse to be renewed by sanctifying Grace, and shall neglect his God, and Soul, and this Salvation, and rather chuse to keep his sins; doth not deserve to be utterly forsaken, and to be punished more than if a Saviour and Salvation had never been offered to him?

Quest. 7. Hath not this been your own case? Have you not lived a fleshly, worldly life; neglecting God, and your Salvation? And minding more these lower things? And have you not refused the Word and Spirit of Christ, which would have brought you to Repentance, and a holy Life? And consequently rejected Christ as a Saviour, and the Holy Ghost as a Sanctifier, and all the Mercy which he offered you on these terms?

Quest. 8. If this hath been your case, are you now unfeignedly grieved for it? Not only because it hath brought you so near to Hell, but also because it hath displeased God, and deprived you of that holy and comfortable life, which you might all this while have lived, and indangered all your hopes of Heaven? Do you so far repent, as that your very heart and love is changed: So that now you had rather have a holy life on Earth, and the sight and injoyment of God in the Heavenly Joys for ever, than to have all the pleasure [illegible] Are you sorry for your sins, [illegible] them, and truly desire to [illegible] That if God do recover you to health, you will live a new and holy life? That you will forsake your fleshly, worldly life, and all your wilful sins? And will set your your self to learn the Will of God, and call upon him, and live in the holy Communion of Saints, and make it your chief care to please God, and to be saved?

Quest. 9. Are you willing to these ends, to give up your selves absolutely now to God the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, as your Reconciled Father, your Saviour and your Sanctifier, to be sanctified and justified, and saved from your sins, and from the wrath of God, and live to God in love and holiness? And are you willing to bind your self to this, by entring into this Covenant with God, renouncing the Flesh, the World and the Devil? Either your heart is willing and sincere in this Resolution and Covenant, or it is not. If it be not, there is no hope that your sin should be pardoned, and your Soul be saved upon any other, or easier terms! And for all that God is merciful, and Christ died for sinners, it was never his intent to save one impenitent unsanctified Soul! But if your heart unfeignedly consent to this, I have the Commission of Christ himself to tell you, That God will be your Reconciled God and Father; and Christ will be your Saviour, and the holy Spirit will be your Sanctifier and Comforter, and your sins are pardoned, and your Soul shall be saved, and you shall dwell in Heaven with God for ever: God did consent before you consented. He shewed his consent in purchasing, and making; and offering you this Covenant. Shew your unfeigned consent now by accepting it, and giving up your self unreservedly to him, and you have Christs Blood, and Spirit, and Sacrament, to seal it to you. The Flesh and the World have deceived you; but trust in Christ upon his Covenant terms, and he will never deceive you.

Matth. 28. 19, 20. 2 Cor. 6. 16, 17, 18.

And now, alas, what pity it is, That a Soul that is in so miserable a case, and is lost for ever, if it have not help, and speedy help, should be deprived of all this Grace and Glory, and only for want of repenting and consenting? What pity is it that a Soul, that is ready to go into another World, where Mercy shall never more be offered it, should rather go stupidly on to Hell, than return to God, and accept his Mercy? Do but truly repent and consent to this Covenant, and all the Mercies of it are certainly yours. God will be your God, and Christ, and the Spirit, and Pardon, and Heaven, and all are yours. The Lord open and perswade your heart, that you may not be undone, and lost for ever, for want of accepting the Mercy that is offered you!

And now I know it would be comfortable to you, if you could be fully assured that you are forgiven, and shall be saved. In a matter of such unspeakable moment, how joyful would a well-grounded certainty be, to any man that hath the right use of his understanding? I tell you therefore from God, that there is no cause of your doubting on his part, but only on your own. There is no doubt to be made, whether God be merciful, nor whether Christ be a sufficient Saviour, and Sacrifice for your sins; nor whether the Covenant be sure, and promise of Pardon and Salvation to all true penitent Believers be true? All the doubt is, whether your Faith and Repentance be sincere or not. And for that, I can but tell you how you may know it, and I shall open the truth to you, that I may neither deceive you, nor causlesly discomfort you.

If this Repentance and Change which you now professs, and this Covenant which you have made with God, 1. Do come only from a present fear, and not from a changed renewed heart. 2. And if your Resolutions be such as would not hold you to a holy life, if you should recover; but would die and fade Matth. 13. 19, 20, 21, 22, 23. Rom. 8. 7, 8, [illegible] Heb. 12. 14.

Joh. 3. 3. 5, 6. Matth. 18. 3. 2 Cor. 5. 17. Eph. 6. 24. 1 Cor. 10. 22 Luk. 14. 26, 27.

fade away, and leave you as you were before, when the fear is paſt, then is it but a forced Hypocritical repentance, and will not ſave you, if you ſo die. Though a Miniſter of Chriſt ſhould abſolve you of all your ſins, and ſeal it by giving you the Sacrament of the Body and Blood of Chriſt; for all this you are loſt for ever, if you have no more: For Abſolution and the Sacrament, are given you but on ſuppoſition, that your Faith and Repentance be ſincere: And if this condition fail in you, the action of the holieſt Miniſter in the World, will never ſave you.

But, 1. If your Repentance and Covenant come not only from a preſent fear, but from a renewed heart, which now loveth God, and Chriſt, and Heaven, and Holineſs, better than all the Honors, and Riches, and Pleaſures of the Fleſh, and World, and had rather have them, even on Gods terms. 2. And if this change be ſuch, as if you ſhould recover, would hold you to a holy life, and not die, or dwindle into hypocritical formality, when the fright is over, then I can aſſure you from the Word of God, That if you die in this Repentance, you ſhall certainly be ſaved. And though late Repentance have ſo many difficulties that it too ſeldom proveth true and ſound, and it is an unſpeakable madneſs to caſt our Salvation on ſo great a hazard, and to defer that, till ſuch a day as this, which ſhould be the quickeſt work of all our lives, and for which, the greateſt care and diligence is not too much: Yet for all that, when Converſion is indeed ſincere, it is always acceptable how late ſoever. And a returning prodigal ſhall find better entertainment with God, than he could poſſibly expect, and never will Chriſt caſt out one Soul that cometh to him in ſincerity of heart. The Lord give you ſuch a heart, and all is yours. Amen. Jer. 31. 34. Epheſ. 1. 7. Acts 5. 31. Epheſ. 5. 26. Revel. 1. 5. 2 Cor. 6. 16. Mal. 3. 17. Joh. 1. 12. & 3. 16. Epheſ. 2. 14. Rom. 8. 1, 17. Luk. 4. 18. Rom 5. 1, 5. Luk. 1. 74. Joh. 10. 28. Luk. 23. 43. 1 Cor. 15. 8. Tit. 3. 3, 4. Acts 4. 4, 5, 6. 1 Tim. 1. 13, 14, 15, 16.

Luk. 15. 19, 20, 22. Joh. 6. 37.

A Form of Exhortation to the GODLY in their SICKNESS.

Dear Friend: Though Nature teacheth us to have compaſſion on your Fleſh, which lieth in pain; yet Faith teacheth us to ſee the nearneſs of your Happineſs, and to rejoyce with you in hope of your endleſs joys, which ſeem to be at hand. We muſt rejoyce with you as your Friends that love you, and therefore are partakers of your welfare: And we muſt rejoyce with you as your Fellow-travellers and Fellow-ſoldiers, that are going along with you to the ſame Felicity; and if we are left behind for a little while, yet hope ere long to overtake you, and never to be ſeparated from you more. This is the day for which Chriſt hath been ſo long preparing you, and which you have ſo long foreſeen, and have been ſo long preparing for your ſelf. This is the day which you thought on in all your Prayers, and Patience, in all your Labors and Sufferings, your Self-denial and Mortification, ſince God did bring you to your ſelf and him. Now you are going to ſee the things which you have believed; and to poſſeſs the things which you have ſought and hoped for: To ſee the final difference between the righteous and the wicked, between a holy, and a worldly life, between the Veſſels of Mercy, and of Wrath. Your time is haſting to an end, and endleſs Bleſſedneſs muſt ſucceed it. O now, what a Mercy is it to have a Chriſt? That you are not to encounter an unconquered Death, nor to go to God without a Mediator: But that Death is by Chriſt diſarmed of its Sting; and that you may boldly reſign your Soul into the hands of your Redeemer, and commend it to him as a Member of himſelf? Now, what a caſe had your Soul been in, if you had no Interceſſor? If you had been to anſwer for your ſins, your ſelf only; and had not a Saviour to be your Advocate, and anſwer for you? Now you may better perceive than ever you have done, what God did for you when he opened your eyes, and humbled, and changed, and renewed your heart? And how great a Mercy it is to be a penitent Believer? You may now ſee more fully than ever heretofore, what God intended for you when he converted you! When he forgave all your ſins, and juſtified you by his Grace, and adopted you for his Child, and an heir of Life, and ſealed you with his Spirit, and ſanctified and ſeparated you to himſelf. Now what a caſe were you in, if you were yet in your ſins, and in the bondage of Satan, and had not this evidence of your title to Eternal Life? If you had your heart to ſoften, and to humble and to convert, and your Faith and Juſtification all to ſeek, and all your Preparations for Heaven to make? If you had all this to do, with a pained Body, and a diſtracted Mind, in ſo ſhort a time, with God, and Eternity, and Death, before you, ready with terror to overwhelm your Souls? If now you were to ſeek for an intereſt in Chriſt, and for the pardon of all your ſins, and your peace with God were yet to make? If you had all your life paſt to look back upon, as conſumed in ſin; and when Time is at an end, muſt cry out of all that is paſt, as loſt? This is the caſe, that God in juſtice might have left you to. But what an unſpeakable Mercy is it, that you have already been reconciled to that God that you are going to! And that the ſins which now would have been your terror, are all forgiven thro' the Blood of Chriſt! That you can look back upon your time, ſince the day of your Converſion, as ſpent in faithful devotedneſs to God, and in a believing preparation for your endleſs life; and in godly ſincerity, notwithſtanding your manifold ſinful imperfections, which Chriſt hath undertaken to anſwer for himſelf. Though you have nothing of your own to boaſt of, and no works that will juſtifie you according to the Law, at the Bar of God, but you need a Saviour, and a Pardon, for the failings, even of the beſt that ever you did; yet muſt you with thankfulneſs remember that Grace which hath begun Eternal Life within you, and prepared and ſealed you to the full poſſeſſion of it. For all the Mercy that is in God, and for all the glory that is in Heaven, and for all the Merits and Satisfaction of Chriſt, and for all the fulneſs and freeneſs of the Promiſe; if God had not given you a believing penitent heart, and ſanctified and ſealed you by the Spirit of his Son, all this could have afforded you little comfort, but would have aggravated your miſery, as it did your ſin. Seeing then that many of the wicked, would be glad to die the death of the righteous, and when it is too late, they would all be glad, if their latter end might be like his; How glad ſhould you be, that God by ſuch a life, hath prepared you for ſuch an end? And tho' a humble Soul hath ſtill an eye upon its own unworthineſs, and Satan is ready to aggravate, Gal. 4. 4, 6. Rom. 8. 16, 17. & 8, 9. 1 Pet. 3. 7.

our ſins, in order to our diſcouragement and fear; yet muſt you remember what an honourable Victory Grace hath had over them: And look on them as Chriſt did, as the advantage of his Grace; that where ſin abounded, there grace hath ſuperabounded. You have had ſomething to humble you, and to ſhew you that you were a Child of Adam; and you have had ſomething for Grace to contend with, and to Conquer; and for Chriſt to pardon! Bleſs him through whom you have had the Victory. Had you not deſerved Hell, Chriſt could not have ſaved you from a deſerved Hell, and the Song of the Lamb would not have been ſo ſweet to you, in the Everlaſting Remembrance, and Experience of his Grace. You have ſinned as a Man, and he hath pardoned as God; you have been weak and nothing: But his Grace hath been ſufficient for you, and by his ſtrength you can do all things. He hath as dear a love to you now in his Exaltation, as he had upon the Croſs, when he was bleeding for your ſins. And will he ſuffer a choſen Soul to periſh, for whom he hath paid ſo dear a price? A Chriſt in Heaven that had never been on Earth, would have ſeemed a ſtranger to us, and one that never was acquainted with our miſeries, nor had teſtified his love at ſo dear a rate, as might have convinced, and incouraged, and won our hearts. And a Chriſt on Earth, that had not paſſed for us into Heaven, would have ſeemed to us but an inſufficient conquered Friend! And were unfit to provide us a Manſion with the Father, and to receive our Souls, when they are ſeparated from the Fleſh. But now we have a great High Prieſt that is paſſed into the Heavens, and was in all points tempted like as we are, yet without ſin; and therefore can be touched with the feeling of our infirmities: And therefore we may come boldly to the Throne of Grace, that we may obtain Mercy, and find Grace to help in time of need, Heb. 4. 14, 15, 16. This is your time of need; and here is a ſupply for all your needs. As we may come boldly through our High Prieſt to the Throne of Grace, ſo may we boldly paſs by his conduct into the preſence of God in glory. For he is purpoſely gone before to prepare a place for us, that where he is, there we may be alſo. Joh. 14. 1, 2, 3. O what a joy is it to our departing Souls, that we have our Head and Saviour already in poſſeſſion of the Kingdom, which we are paſſing to! What a ſupport and joy is it, to receive this meſſage from our Aſcending Head, Say to my Brethren, I aſcend to my Father, and your Father; to my God, and your God? Joh. 20. 17. What a joy is it to read his Promiſe. Joh. 12. 26. If any man ſerve me, and let him follow me: And where I am, there ſhall alſo my ſervant be? You have ſerved him, and are following him, and now are going to be with him where he is.

There you ſhall be delivered from the darkneſs of this World. How dimly did we ſee through the Lanthorn of the Fleſh? How little did we know? And how much were we ignorant of? And what pains did our little knowledge coſt us? But there one ſight of the Face of God, will put an end to this longſome night; and will ſhew you that which all the reading and ſtudy of a thouſand years, could never ſatisfactorily have ſhewn you. There you ſhall underſtand the Works of God; the frame of the Creation; the place, and office, and reaſon of all things, which here you knew not. The Myſteries of the Goſpel, which Angels pry into, will be there much more unfolded to you, than the cleareſt Divines were able to explain them. All Sciences there ſhall be one Panſophy; and all things knowable ſhall appear to you in their wondrous perfect harmony. What welcome will thoſe Bleſſed Angels give you, that here diſdained not to miniſter for you, and bear you up in all your ways, and intereſſed themſelves in your concernments, rejoycing before God at your Converſion? How glad then will they be of your ſafe arrival at the promiſed Harbor of Felicity with themſelves? What joy will it be to you to be preſently entertained, and welcomed into the acquaintance of thoſe Bleſſed Spirits, and of all the holy Souls that are delivered from this Fleſh and World; and to ſee their order, and be numbred with their Society, and to be imployed in their joyful Work. O how much better company is that than the beſt below? There is no ignorance and therefore no error; no want of love, and no contention; nor narrow private intereſts to contend for, but all made happy in perfect love in him that is their univerſal end, and happineſs. There is no diſſention, nor perverſe diſputes; no ignorant zeal, nor blinding paſſions; no proud or covetous deſigns, and therefore no hurtful means to proſecute them; no ſeeming neceſſity to hurt our Brethren to advance, or inrich, or ſave our ſelves. No ſlanderers there condemn the Souls whom Chriſt doth juſtifie, nor take away the righteouſneſs of the righteous from him; no cruel mockings, impriſonments, or baniſhments; no wandring, deſtitute, afflicted or tormented; no more ſuffering for the ſake of Righteouſneſs, but having ſuffered with Chriſt, they are now reigning with him; and thoſe, of whom the World was not worthy, are taken to God from an unworthy World. There are no troubleſome mutations or confuſions; no Wars, nor rumors of Wars; becauſe no Luſt to War in their Members; but united Souls in the harmony of Love, do without any diſcord, Praiſe the Lord. The Church is not there divided into Sects and Factions, either through the Pride or Peeviſhneſs of its Members, none ſcrupleth communion with the reſt; none ſilence others from ſpeaking the Praiſes of their Redeemer; nor drive away others from their Brotherhood and Communion. There is neither unrighteous Law, nor diſobedient Subject, nor unpeaceable Neighbor, nor unfaithful Friend, nor hurtful or malicious Enemy! There is no afflicted Friend to mourn for; nor no diſconſolate Soul to grieve with! No ignorant perſon to inſtruct, nor obſtinate heart, to perſwade or pray for; no fearful doubting Chriſtian to be comforted, nor weak and wavering Soul to be confirmed; no imprudent, ſcandalous actions of the Godly to be lamented; no remnants of Pride, Self-conceitedneſs, or any deluſion to keep out the Light! No blemiſhes in them for the Enemies to reproach, nor no malignant Enemies to reproach them. No miſrepreſentations of things or Perſons; no raiſing or receiving falſe Reports; no ſin of our own to grieve for, or to ſtrive againſt; and no ſin of others to trouble the Society, or be lamented. There we ſhall have no ſuffering Friend to ſuffer with! None labouring of want, while you have plenty; nor any groaning in pain and ſickneſs, while you are well. As no want or pain of your own will afflict you; ſo no ſuffering of your Friends will interrupt your joy: Your comforts ſhall not be turned into lamentations, for the madneſs and obſtinate wickedneſs of a Sodomitical Generation about you: Nor your righteous Soul be vexed with their filthy and ſottiſh converſation. You ſhall not dwell in a World, where the moſt part is drowned in Heatheniſm and Infidelity, nor in a Church defiled with Papal Tyranny, Cruelty, Covetouſneſs, or Prophaneneſs. The whole Society will ſhine in Light, and flame in Love, and none through any weakneſs or corruption, will be a clog or hinderance to another!

You ſhall above all this, behold the Perſon of your Glorified Redeemer! You ſhall ſee that Body, in its Glorious Change, which once was humbled to the Virgins Womb, and to a life of Poverty, and to the Scorns of Sinners; to be ſpit upon, and buffetted, and crowned with Thorns, and firſt made a laughing ſtock, and then hanged up to die upon a Croſs, at the Will of proud malicious Perſecutors. You ſhall there ſee that Perſon whom God hath choſen to advance, above the whole Creation; and in whom he will be more glorified than all the Saints. The wonderful Condeſcenſion of his Incarnation, and the wonderful Myſtery of the Hypoſtatical Union, will there be better underſtood.

John 17. 2. 4. Phil. 2. 7, 8, 9, 10.

And, which is all in all, you ſhall ſee the moſt Bleſſed God himſelf; whether in his Eſſence, or not, yet undoubtedly in his Glory, in that ſtate or place, which he hath prepared to reveal his Glory in, for the glorifying of holy Spirits. You ſhall ſee him whoſe ſight will perfect your underſtandings, and love him, and feel the fulneſs of his love, which is the higheſt felicity that any created Being can attain! Tho' this will be in different meaſures, as Souls are more or leſs aimable and capacious (or elſe the Humane Nature of Chriſt would be no happier than we,) yet none ſhall have any ſinful or troubleſome imperfection, and all their capacities ſhall be filled with God.

Mat. 5. 8. Heb. 12. 14.

O dear Friend, I am even confounded and aſhamed to think, that I mention to you ſuch high and glorious things, with no more ſenſe and admiration! And that my Soul is not drawn up in the flames of a more fervent love; nor lifted up in higher joys, nor yet drawn out into more longing deſires, when I ſpeak of ſuch tranſcendent happineſs and joy! O had you and I, but a glimpſe with Bleſſed Stephen or Paul, of theſe unutterable pleaſures, how deeply would it affect us! And how ſhould we abhor this life of ſin! And be aweary of this dark and diſtant ſtate; and be glad to be gone from this Priſon of Fleſh; and to be delivered from this preſent evil World.

Acts 7. 56. 2 Cor. 12. 3, 4, 5. Gal. 1. 4.

This is the life that you are going to live; though a painful Death muſt open the Womb of Time, and let you into Eternity, how quickly will the pain be over! And though Nature make Death diſmal to you, and Sin have made it penal, and you look at it now with Backwardneſs and Fear; yet this will all be quickly paſt, and your Souls will be born into a World of Joy, which will make you forget all your Fears and Sorrows. It is meet that as the Birth of Nature had its pains, and the Birth of Grace had its penitent Sorrows; ſo the Birth of Glory ſhould have the greateſt difficulties, as it entereth us into the happieſt ſtate. O what a change will it be to a humbled, fearful Soul, to find it ſelf in a moment diſlodged from a ſinful painful Fleſh, and entred into a World of Light, and Life, and holy Love, unſpeakably above all the Expreſſions and Conceptions, of this preſent life! Alas, that our preſent ignorance and fear ſhould make us draw back from ſuch a change? That whilſt all our Brethren that died in Faith, are triumphing in theſe Joys with Chriſt, our trembling Souls ſhould be ſo loth, to leave this Fleſh, and be afraid to be called to the ſame felicity? O what an Enemy is the remnant of Unbelief, to our impriſoned and imperfect Souls! That it can hide ſuch a deſirable Glory from our Eyes, that it ſhould no more effect us, and we ſhould no more deſire it, but are willing to ſtay ſo long from God? How wonderful is that Love and Mercy, that brings ſuch backward Souls to Happineſs! And will drive us away from this beloved World, by its afflicting miſeries? And from this beloved Fleſh, by pain and wearineſs? And will draw us to our joyful Bleſſedneſs, as it were, whether we will, or not? And will not leave us out of Heaven ſo long, till we are willing our ſelves to come away.

John 16. 21. & 3. 3, 5, 7, 8.

You ſeem now to be almoſt at your journeys end! But how many a foul ſtep have thoſe yet to go, whom you leave behind you in this dirty world! You have fought a good fight, and kept the Faith; and ſhall never be troubled with an Enemy or Temptation, when this once concluding brunt is over! You ſhall never be ſo much as tempted to unbelief, or pride, or worldly mindedneſs, or fleſhly luſts, or to any defects in the ſervice of your Lord! But how many Temptations do you leave us incompaſſed with? And how many Dangers and Enemies to overcome? And alas, how many Falls and Wounds may we receive! You ſeem to be near the end of your Race, when thoſe behind you have far to run. You are entring into the Harbour, and leave us toſſed by Tempeſts on the Waves. Fleſh will no more intice or clog your Soul! You will no more have unruly Senſes to command, nor an unreaſonable appetite to govern; nor a ſtragling fantaſie, or wandring Thoughts, or head-ſtrong Luſts, or boiſterous Paſſions, to reſtrain. You will no longer carry about a Root of Corruption, nor a Principle of Enmity to God! It will no more be difficult or weariſome to you to do good? Your ſervice of God will no more be mixed and blemiſhed with Imperfections? You ſhall never more have a cold, or hard, or backward hearr, or a careleſs cuſtomary duty, to lament! That Primitive Holineſs, which conſiſteth in the love of God, and the exerciſe and delights thereof, will be perfected: And thoſe ſubſervient Duties of Holineſs, which conſiſt in the uſe of recovering Means, will ceaſe as needleſs. Preaching, and Studying, and Books, will be neceſſary no more. Sacraments, and Church-Diſcipline, and all ſuch Means have done their Work. Repentance and Faith have attained their end. As your Bodies after the Reſurrection will have no need of Food, or Rayment, or Care, or Labour; ſo your Souls will be above the uſe of ſuch Creatures and Ordinances, as now we cannot be without? For the Glaſs will be unneceſſary, when you muſt ſee the Creator face to face. Will it not be a joyful day to you, when you ſhall know God as much as you deſire to know him? And love him as much as you deſire to love him? And be loved by him as much as you can reaſonably deſire to beloved? And rejoyce in him as much as you deſire to rejoyce? Yea, more than you can now deſire? I open to you but a Caſement into the Everlaſting Manſions; and ſhew you but a dark and diſtant Proſpect of the Promiſed Land, the Heavenly Jeruſalem. The ſatisfying ſight is reſerved for the time, when thereby we ſhall have that ſatisfying fruition.

2 Cor. 5. 18. & 4. 6. 1 Cor. 13. 12.

And is there any ſuch thing to be hoped for on Earth? Will health or wealth, will the higheſt places, or the greateſt pleaſures make men happy? You know it will not! Or if it would, the Happineſs would be ſo ſhort, as maketh it little worthy of our regard. Have you not ſeen an end of all perfection! Have you not obſerved and tryed what a deluding dream, and ſhadow of felicity, the World puts off its followers with? How they act their parts as Players on a Stage, and they that in a Dream or Maſk, did yeſterday ſeem Princes, Lords, or Conquerors, to day are buried in a darkſome Grave, I and they that yeſterday ſeemed great and rich, to day have no more of their furniture or poſſeſſions, than a Coffin and a Winding-ſheet, and a place to hide their loathſome fleſh. And they that yeſterday were merry, and jovial, and in health, and honor, to day lie groaning in painful miſery, and are leaving their dear-bought beloved riches, never to be delightful to them any more. How little doth it concern them, that muſt dwell in Heaven or Hell for ever, whether they live in wealth or poverty, in honor or ſhame, in a Palace or a Cottage, in pain or pleaſure, for ſo ſhort a time as this tranſitory life, which is almoſt at an end as ſoon as it is begun! How many millions of dying Parents, have cryed out of the world as VANITY and VEXATION? and yet their beſorted Poſterity admire it, and through the love of it, loſe their ſouls and everlaſting hopes! They boaſt or rejoyce in the multitude of their Riches, as if their houſes would continue for ever; Though in their honour they abide not, but are like the beaſts that periſh, and death feedeth on them, when like Sheep they are laid in the grave; And though this their way is their folly, yet their poſterity approve their ſayings, and follow them by the ſame ſin to the ſame Perdition, Pſal. 49. 6, 7, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 17, 19, 20. And is this a world for a holy ſoul to be in love with? Hath it merited our affections? Doth it love us ſo much, or uſe us ſo well, that we ſhould be loth to leave it? John 15. 18, 19, 20. As it loved our Lord, it will love his followers; As it uſed him, it will uſe us, if he reſtrain it not. Is a blinded Bedlam world, a malitious, cruel and ungodly world, a falſe, perfidious, deceitful world, a place for a Saint to be loth to leave?

1 John 2. 15. John 15. 17, 18, 19, 20.

O bleſſed be that love, that blood, that grace, which hath provided better for us! And ſhall we be unwilling to go to ſo ſweet a Feaſt? and to partake of a happineſs which coſt ſo dear?

Poſt illam pugnam triumphabimus Vincente cum noſtro Signifero in vitâ æternâ: Diu in Chriſtum credidi: Deſidero jam finem fidei, ut non amplius credam in eum, ſed videam eum in quem credidi; ut guſtem quam ſuavis ſit Dominus, palpem manibus Dominum meum, & Deum meum. Ibi vocabor Abraham, qui lætatur videns diem Chriſti: Expertus ſum quod in hâc vitâ peccatum ſit omnia in omnibus: Experiar etiam aliam vitam, ubi eſt Dominus omnia in omnibus. Abr. Bucholizer, referente Abr. Scultero in Curric. vitæ ſuæ. pag. 15.

Come on then, Dear friend, and faint not at the laſt; and fear not to encounter with the King of fears! It is the laſt Enemy, and it is a conquered Enemy! Conquer this, and you have no more to conquer. Lift up your head, and look to your Victorious Reigning Lord; Gird up the loyns of your mind, and let faith and patience hold out yet a little while, and play well this laſt part, and all's your own.

If the Tempter now aſſault your faith, and ſinking fleſh do give him any advantage, abhor his Blaſphemies, and cry for help to him that conquered him! Do you think yonder high and ſpacious manſions, are uninhabited? When every part of Sea and Land hath its Inhabitants? Why have thoſe bleſſed Angels been ſo long employed in miniſtring for you, but to let you know, that your ſouls are not ſo diſtant from them, but that they are glad of familiarity with you, and you may be like them, or equal with them in felicity? Nature hath put you out of doubt, that there is a God of infinite eternal Being, Power, Wiſdom and Goodneſs, who is the Efficient, Dirigent and Final cauſe of all; the Creator and Governor of the world. And the ſame nature hath put you out of doubt, that all that his Creatures have or can do, is due to him from whom they have it; and that ſo far as you are capable to know, and love and ſerve him, that you ſhould employ your faculties herein: And nothing is more undenyable to you, than that it is our duty to love and ſerve our God, with all our heart, and ſoul, and might. And it is as clear to you, that neither are theſe powers given us in vain, nor this duty required of us in vain, nor yet that mans natural higheſt duty, is made to be the way of his miſery and undoing! And ſure that way, which turneth the mind from ſenſual pleaſures, and caſteth a man on the malice and cruelty of the world, and engageth him in ſo much duty, which both the fleſh and the world are utter Enemies to, would be his miſery and torment, if there were no rewards and puniſhments hereafter and no future Judgment to ſet all ſtraight, that ſeemed crooked in the judgments of men. If all the intrinſick evidences of credibility, in the Sacred Word, were not ſufficient; If all the antecedent Evidences of Prophecy were too little: If the concomitant evicence of all the Miracles of Chriſt, and his Apoſtles, and other of his ſervants, with his own Reſurrection, and Aſcenſion did ſeem too diſtant from you; yet mark what ſubſequent continued evidences, it hath pleaſed God to bring even to your very ſenſe, to aſſure you of the truth of this Goſpel, and of the life to come. Whence cometh that Univerſal unreaſonable enmity, which in all Generations and Nations of the world, from Cain and Abel till this day, is found in the carnal againſt the ſpiritual holy ſeed? Even a Seneca telleth us of it among Heathens, againſt that remnant of virtue, and temperance and ſobriety that was found in the better ſort of men. Could all mankind be thus infected, and hate a Saint that never hurt them, much more than thoſe that themſelves confeſs to be moſt vitious if the fall of Adam were not true? Have we a whole world before our eyes, that are viſibly polluted with that irrational Leproſie, and yet ſhall we doubt whether our common Father was ſick of that diſeaſe? And do you not ſee that the Goſpel, where ever it is heartily entertained, doth renew the ſoul, and change the life, and make the man to be another man; not only amending ſome little things that were amiſs; but making us new creatures, and turning the bent of heart and life another way? Though the carnal nominal Chriſtian, that never heartily received the Goſpel, do differ from a Heathen but in opinion and formality; yet ſerious Chriſtians are other men; and ſo transformed, as that their holy deſires and endeavors do contain the ſeed of life eternal, and are ſuch a preparation for it as cannot be in vain. Would God concur thus with any word, which is not true, and holy, and good, to make it effectual for the renovation of ſo many millions of ſouls? Have you not found, that his work of grace is carried on by heavenly Wiſdom, Love and Power? and is a witneſs of his ſpecial providence? and containeth his own Image upon the ſoul? And ſhall we then queſtion the Author of the ſeal, when we ſee that the Image and Superſcription which it imprinteth, is Divine? And have you not had ſuch experiences your ſelf of the fulfilling of this word, in the anſwer of prayers, manifeſt both on mens ſouls and bodies, which are enough to confute the Tempter that would ſhake your faith, (when he ſeeth you in your weakneſs, unfit to call up all thoſe Evidences, which at another time you have diſcerned?) For my own part, I muſt bear this witneſs to the truth, that I have known, and felt, and ſeen, and heard ſuch wonders wrought upon fervent prayer, as have many a time convinced me of the truth of the promiſes, and the ſpecial providence of God to his poor Petitioners. I have oft known the Acute and Chronicle Diſeaſes of afflicted ones relieved by prayer without any natural means. Some of the moſt violent cured in an hour; and ſome by more ſlow degrees. Beſides the effects upon mens ſouls, and eſtates, and publick affairs, which plainly demonſtrated the means and cauſe. And ſhall a promiſe thus ſealed to us, be ever queſtioned again? Nay, have you not the Witneſs in your ſelf, 1 John 5, 10, 11, 12. Even the Spirit of Chriſt, which is the pledge and earneſt of your inheritance, and the ſeal and mark of God upon you? In a word, it is an unqueſtionable truth, that the rational world neither is, nor ever was, nor can be governed agreeable to its nature, without an end to move and rule them which is beyond this life; and without the hopes and fears of a Reward and Puniſhment hereafter. Were this but taken out of the world, man would would no longer live like man, but as the moſt odious noxious creature upon earth. And it is as ſure that it agreeth not with the Omnipotence, Wiſdom and Goodneſs of God, to govern ſo noble a Creature by a lye, and to make a nature that muſt be ſo governed. And it is as certain that all other Revelation is defective, and that Life and Immortality, the end and the way, were never ſo brought to light, as they are in the Goſpel, by Chriſt and by his Spirit.

My God, thou haſt encouraged my fearful ſoul, by the multitude of thy mercies, as well as by thy promiſes, to truſt thee and yield it ſelf to thee. Thou haſt filled up all my days with mercy! Every place that I have lived in, and every Relation, and all that I have had to do with in the world, are the witneſſes of thy love and mercy to me. Thy eyes beheld my ſubſtance being yet imperfect, and all my Members were written in thy Book; My Parents were inſtructed by thee to educate me, and all things commanded by thee to ſerve for my preſervation, comfort and ſalvation. Thou haſt brought me forth in a land and age of mercies, and cauſed me to hear and ſee the things which others have not ſeen or heard. The lines have fallen to me in pleaſant places; My life hath not been ſpent in a howling wilderneſs, nor in baniſhment from thy Sanctuary, or the communion of thy Saints; nor hath it been wholly conſumed in darkneſs, and ſorrow, and unſerviceable barrenneſs. But often have I heard the joyful ſound, and I have gone with the multitude to the houſe of God, and there have ſeen the light of thy countenance, and drank of the Rivers of thy pleaſure, even of the waters of life, and have been ſolaced with the voice of joy and praiſe; How oft have I cryed unto thee in my trouble, and thou haſt delivered me out of my diſtreſſes? When for my folly and tranſgreſſion I was afflicted, thou broughtſt me out of darkneſs and the ſhadow of death. Thou renewedſt my age as* Hezekiahs, and cauſedſt the ſhadow of my Dyal to go back! and haſt ſet me at liberty to praiſe thee for thy goodneſs, and declare thy works to the children of men. In the day of trouble I called upon thee, and thou didſt deliver me that I might glorifie thee. Thou cauſedſt me to receive the ſentence of death, that I might truſt in God that raiſed the dead. My Shepherd hath led me in his pleaſant Paſtures, by the ſilent ſtreams; He reſtored my ſoul, and conducted me in the paths of Righteouſneſs. How pretious are thy thoughts unto me O God! How great is the ſum of them? If I ſhould count them, they are more in number than the Sand. And will that mercy now forſake me, which hath abounded to me, and ſupported me ſo long? Thou haſt ſaid, I will never fail thee nor forſake thee? Having loved thy own, that are in the world, thou wilt love them to the end; For thy mercy is great and reacheth to the Heavens, and it endureth for ever. O therefore when I awake, let me be with thee! And as thy loving kindneſs is better than life; and to depart and be with Chriſt, is far better than the beſt condition upon earth; ſo let thy Servant depart in peace, his eye of Faith beholding thy ſalvation; And when my earthly houſe of this Tabernacle is diſſolved, let me have that building of God, the houſe not made with hands, eternal in the Heavens: Let my preſent burden of Sin and Suffering make me more earneſtly to groan, not to be unclothed, but to be clothed upon, that mortality may be ſwallowed up of life; that being abſent from the body, I may be preſent with the Lord. And ſeeing this Cup may not paſs from me, and I muſt not look for the Chariot of Elias, to carry me unto Heaven; let thy Will be done, and let me reſt therein, and let death be the gain and advantage of my Soul; And while this outward man is periſhing let the inner man be renewed from day to day; For what am I better than my Fathers, and all thy Saints, and the Generations of mankind, that I ſhould think of another paſſage, than this of Death, to the world of immortality? O let this fainting heart be glad, and let my glory rejoyce, and in love and joy, in thankfulneſs and praiſe, let me paſs into the World of love and joy, where thanksgiving and praiſe ſhall be my work for ever. And tho' my fleſh and heart will fail, be thou the ſtrength of my heart, O God, and I my portion for ever. Tho' I muſt walk thro' the valley of the ſhadow of death, let me fear no evil; But be thou ſtill with me, and let me be comforted by thy Rod and Staff: Let the goodneſs and mercy which hath followed me thus far all my days, receive me at the last, that I may dwell with thee for ever. For it is the will of my Redeemer, that those which thou hast given him, be with him where he is, to behold the glory which thou hast given him! And that his Servants should follow him, that where he is, there also may his Servants be. Amen, Lord Jesus! Good is thy Will and the Word which thou hast spoken! Into thy hands I commend my Spirit which thou hast Redeemed. Receive it, and let me be with thee in Paradise; O thou that hast called us thy Brethren, when thou didst ascend to thy Father and our Father, and to thy God and our God, take up this poor unworthy Soul, to the mansions which thou hast prepared for us, that I may be with thee where thou art. And tho' this flesh must perish, let it rest in hope, and be but sowed as a grain of Wheat till thy powerful Call shall raise it from the dust, and this corruptible shall put on incorruption, and this mortal shall put on immortality, and this natural Body shall raised a spiritual Body, and death shall be swallowed up in Victory. For tho' I be dead, my life is hid with Christ in God; And when thou appearest who art my life, then let me appear with thee in Glory. O hasten that appearance, and come with thy holy glorious Angels, to be glorified in thy Saints, and admired in and by believers. When thou wilt change our vile Bodies, and make them like to thy glorious Body, by the mighty working, by which thou canst subdue even all things to thy self. Hast thou not said, Behold I come quickly! Even so come Lord! and let the great Marriage day of the Lamb make haste, when thy Spouse shall be presented spotless, unblameable and glorious; and the Glory of God in the New Jerusalem, shall be revealed to all his holy ones, to delight and glorifie them for ever. In the mean time, Remember Lord thy promise: Because I live, therefore shall ye live also: And let the dead that dye in thee be blessed: And thou that art made a quickning Spirit, and art the Lord and Prince of life, and hast said that not a hair of our heads shall perish; Gather our departing Souls unto thy self, into the Heavenly Jerusalem and Mount Zion, the City of the living God, and to the Myriads of holy Angels, and to the general Assembly and Church of the first born, and to the perfected Spirits of the just; where thou wilt make us Kings and Priests to God, whom we shall see, and love and praise for ever. For of him, and thro' him, and to him are all things; and for his pleasure they are, and were created. And O thou the blessed God of Love, the Father of Spirits and King of Saints, receive this unworthy Member of thy Son, into the Heavenly Choire which sing thy praise! who rest not saying, Night and Day, Holy, Holy, Holy, Lord God Almighty, who is, and was, and is to come! For thine is the Kingdom, the Power and the Glory, for ever and ever, Amen.

CHAP. I.

Of the Worship of God in general.

Qui totos dies precabantur & immolabant, ut sui liberi sibi superstites essent, Superstitiosi sunt appellati, quod nomen patuit postea latius. Qui autem omnia quæ ad cultum Deorum pertinerent, diligenter pertractarent & tanquam religerent, sunt dicti Religiosi, ex relegendo: ut elegantes ex elegendo, à diligendo diligentes, ex intelligendo intelligentes. Superstitiosi & Religiosi, alterum vitii nomen, alterum laudis. Cicer. nat. Deor. lib. 2. pag. 73, 74.

§. 1. THAT God is to be worshipped solemnly by Man, is confessed by all that acknowledge that there is a God. But about the Matter and Manner of his Worship, there are no small Dissensions and Contentions in the World. I am not now attempting a Reconciliation of these Contenders: The sickness of Mens Mind and Wills doth make that impossible to any but God, which else were not only possible, but easie, the terms of Reconciliation being in themselves so plain and obvious as they are. But it is Directions to those that are willing to worship God aright, which I am now to give.

§. 1. Direct. 1. Understand what it is to worship God aright, lest you offer him Vanity and Sin for Worship. The worshipping of God is the direct acknowledging of his Being and Perfections to his Honour. Indirectly or consequentially he is acknowledged in every obediential Act by those that truly obey and serve him: And this is individually and participatively to worship him: And therefore all things are Holy to the Holy, because they are Holy in the use of all, and Holiness to the Lord is as it were, written upon all that they possess or do (as they are holy.) But this is not the worship which we are here to speak of; but that which is primarily and directly done to glorifie him by the acknowledgment of his Excellencies. Thus God is worshipped either inwardly by the Soul alone, or also outwardly by the Body expressing the worship of the Soul. For that which is done by the Body alone without the concurrence of the Heart, is not true worship, but an Hypocritical Image or

If they that serve their God with meer words, and ceremony, and ritual actions, were so served themselves, they might be silenced with Aristippus his defence of his gallantry and sumptuous fare, Si vitupe-randum, ait, hoc esset, in celebritatibus deorum profectò non fieret. Laert. in Aristip. So Plato allowed drunkenness only in the Feasts of Bacchus.

shew of it, (equivocally called Worship.) The inward worship of the Heart alone, I have spoken of in the former Tome. The outward or expressive worship, is simple or mix'd; simple when we only intend God's worship in the action: And this is found chiefly in Praises and Thanksgiving, which therefore are the most pure and simple sort of expressive worship. Mix'd worship is that in which we join some other intention, for our own benefit in the action: As in Prayer where we worship God by seeking to him for Mercy: And in reverent hearing or reading of his Word, where we worship him by a holy attendance upon his Instructions and Commands: And in his Sacraments where we worship him by receiving and acknowledging his Benefits to our Souls: And in Oblations where we have respect also to the use of the thing offered: And in holy Vows and Oaths; in which we acknowledge him our Lord and Judge. All these are acts of Divine Worship, though mix'd with other uses.

§. 3. It is not only worshipping God, when our acknowledgments (by word or deed) are directed immediately to himself; but also when we direct our speech to others, if his Praises be the subject of them, and they are intended directly to his Honour: Such are many of David's Psalms of Praise. But where God's Honour is not the thing directly intended, it is no direct worshipping of God, tho' all the same words be spoken as by others.

Dir. 2. §. 4. Direct. 2. Understand the true Ends and Reasons of our worshipping God; lest you be deceived by the impious who take it to be all in vain. When they have imagined some false Reasons to themselves, they judge it vain to worship God, because those Reasons of it are vain. And he that understandeth not the true Reasons why he should worship God, will not truly worship him, but be prophane in neglecting it, or hypocritical in dissembling, and heartless in performing it. The Reasons then are such as these.

§. 5. 1. The first ariseth from the Use of all the World, and the nature of the Rational Creature in special. The whole World is made and upheld to be expressive and participative of the Image and Benefits of God. God is most perfect and blessed in himself, and needeth not the World to add to his felicity. But he made it to please his blessed Will, as a communicative Good, by communication and appearance: That he might have Creatures to know him, and to be happy in his Light; and those Creatures might have a fit Representation or Revelation of him that they might know him. And Man is specially endowed with Reason and Utterance, that he might know his Creator appearing in his Works, and might communicate this Knowledge, and express that Glory of his Maker with his Tongue, which the inferior Creatures express to him in their being. So that if God were not to be worshipped, the end of Man's faculties, and of all the Creation must much be frustrated. Man's Reason is given him that he may know his Maker: His Will, and Affections, and executive Powers are given him, that he may freely love him and obey him: And his Tongue is given him principally to acknowledge him and praise him: Whom should God's work be serviceable to, but to him that made it?

Read Mr. Herbert's Poem called Providence.

§. 6. 2. As it is the natural Use, so it is the highest Honour of the Creature to worship and honour his Creator: Is there a nobler or more excellent Object for our Thoughts, Affections, or Expressions? And Nature, which desireth its own perfection, forbiddeth us to choose a sordid, vile, dishonourable work, and to neglect the highest and most hononrable.

§. 7. 3. The right worshipping of God doth powerfully tend to make us in our measure like him, and so to sanctifie and raise the Soul, and to heal it of its sinful Distempers and Imperfections. What can make us good so effectually as our Knowledge, and Love, and Communion with him that is the chiefest Good? Nay, what is Goodness it self in the Creature if this be not? As nearness to the Sun giveth Light and Heat, so nearness to God, is the way to make us Wise and Good: For the Contemplation of his Perfection is the means to make us like him. The Worshippers of God do not exercise their bare Understandings upon him in barren Speculations; but they exercise all their Affections towards him, and all the faculties of their Souls, in the most practical and serious manner, and therefore are likeliest to have the livelyest impressions of God upon their Hearts: And hence it is that the true Worshippers of God are really the wisest and the best of Men, when many that at a distance are employ'd in meer Speculations about his Works and him, remain almost as vain and wicked as before, and professing themselves wise, are (practically) fools. Rom. 1. 21, 22.

§. 8. 4. The right worshipping of God, by bringing the Heart into a cleansed, holy and obedient Frame, doth prepare it to command the Body, and make us upright and regular in all the Actions of our Lives: For the Fruit will be like the Tree; and as Men are, so will they do. He that honoureth not his God, is not like well to honour his Parents or his King: He that is not moved to it by his Regard to God, is never like to be universally and constantly just and faithful unto Men. Experience telleth us that it is the truest Worshippers of God that are truest and most conscionable in their dealings with their Neighbours. This windeth up the Spring, and ordereth and strengtheneth all the Causes of a good Conversation.

§. 9. 5. The right worshipping of God is the highest and most rational Delight of Man. Though to a sick corrupted Soul it be unpleasant, as Food to a sick Stomach yet to a wise and holy Soul there is nothing so solidly and durably contentful. As it is God's damning Sentence on the wicked, to say, Depart from me, Matth. 25. 41. and 7. 23. So holy Souls would lose their Joys, and take themselves to be undone, if God should bid them, Depart from me, worship me, and love me, and praise me no more. They would be weary of the World, were it not for God in the World; and weary of their Lives, if God were not their Life.

§. 10. 6. The right worshipping of God prepareth us for Heaven, where we are to behold him, and love and worship him for ever. God bringeth not unprepared Souls to Heaven: This Life is the time that's purposely given us for our Preparation; as the Apprenticeship is the time to learn your Trades. Heaven is a place of Action and Fruition, of perfect Knowledge, Love, and Praise: And the Souls that will enjoy and praise God there, must be disposed to it here; and therefore they must be much employed in his Worship.

§. 11. 7. And as it is in all these respects necessary as a means, so God hath made it necessary by his Command. He hath made it our Duty to worship him constantly; and he knoweth the reason of his own Commands. It is written, Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and him only shalt thou serve, Matth. 4. 10. If God should command us nothing, how is he our Governour and our God? And if he command us any thing, what should he command us more fitly than to worship him? And he that will will not obey him in this, is not like to obey him well in any thing: For there is nothing that he can with leſs ſhew of Reaſon except againſt; ſeeing all the Reaſon in the World muſt confeſs, that worſhip is moſt due to God from his own Creatures.

Object. §. 12. Theſe Reaſons for the Worſhip of God being undeniable, the Objections of the Infidels and Ungodly are unreaſonable: As, Obj. 1. That our worſhip doth no good to God; for he hath no need of it. Anſw. It pleaſeth and honoureth him, as the making of the World, and the Happineſs of Man doth: Doth it follow that there muſt be no World nor no Man happy, becauſe God hath no need of it, or no addition of Felicity by it? It is ſufficient that it is neceſſary and good for us, and pleaſing unto God.

Object. §. 13. Obj. 2. Proud Men are unlikeſt unto God: And it is the Proud that love to be honoured and praiſed. Anſw. Pride is the affecting of an undue Honour, or the undue affecting of that Honour which is due. Therefore it is that this affectation of Honour in the Creature is a Sin, becauſe all Honour is due to God, and none to the Creature but derivatively and ſubſerviently. For a Subject to affect any of the Honour of his King, is diſloyalty: And to affect any of the Honour of his Fellow Subjects is injuſtice. But God requireth nothing but what is abſolutely his due. And he hath commanded us even towards Men to give Fear and Honour to whom they are due, Rom. 13. 7.

Dir. 3. §. 14. Direct. 3. Labour for the trueſt Knowledge of the God whom you worſhip. Let it not be ſaid of you, as Chriſt ſaid to the Samaritan Woman, Joh. 4. 22. Ye worſhip ye know not what: Nor as it is ſaid of the Athenians, whoſe Altar was inſcribed, To the unknown God, Act. 17. 23. You muſt know whom you worſhip; or elſe you cannot worſhip him with the Heart, nor worſhip him ſincerely and acceptably, though you were at never ſo great labour and coſt. God hath no pleaſure in the Sacrifice of Fools, Eccl. 5. 1, 4. Though no Man know him perfectly, you muſt know him truly. And though God taketh not every Man for a Blaſphemer, and Denier of his Attributes, whom contentious peeviſh Wranglers call ſo, becauſe they conſequentially croſs ſome eſpouſed Opinions of theirs; yet real miſunderſtanding of God's Nature and Attributes is dangerous, and tendeth to corrupt his worſhip by the corrupting of the Worſhippers. For ſuch as you take God to be, ſuch Worſhip you will offer him: For your worſhip is but the honourable acknowledgment of his Perfections: And miſtakingly to praiſe him for ſuppoſed Imperfections, is to diſhonour him and diſpraiſe him. If to know God be your eternal Life, it muſt needs be the Life of all your worſhip. Take heed therefore of ignorance and error about God.

Dir. 4. Heb. 8. 3. §. 15. Direct. 4. Underſtand the office of Jeſus Chriſt as our Great High Prieſt, by whoſe Meditation alone we muſt have acceſs to God. Whether there ſhould have been any Prieſthood for Sacrifice or Interceſſion if there had been no Sin, the Scripture telleth us not expreſly; but we have great reaſon to conjecture there would have been none, becauſe there would not have been any reaſons for the exerciſe of ſuch an Office. But ſince the Fall, not only the Scriptures, but the practice of the whole World doth tell us that the ſinful People are unmeet immediately thus to come to God, but that they muſt come by the Mediation of the Prieſt, as a Sacrificer and Interceſſor. So that either Nature teacheth Sinners the neceſſity of ſome Mediator, or the Tradition of the Church hath diſperſed the Knowledge of it through the World. And certainly no other Prieſt but Chriſt can procure the acceptance of a ſinful People upon his own account; nor be an effectual Mediator for them to God, unleſs in ſubſerviency to an effectual Mediator who can procure us acceſs and acceptance for his own ſake. For all other Prieſts are Sinners as well as the People, and have as much need of a Mediator themſelves. 1. See therefore that you never appear before God, but as Sinners, that have offended him, and have deſerved to be caſt out of his Favour for ever, and ſuch as are in abſolute neceſſity of a Mediator to procure their acceſs and acceptance with God: Come not to God without the ſenſe of Sin and Miſery. 2. See alſo that ye come as thoſe that have a Mediator in the Preſence of God; even Jeſus our High Prieſt who appeareth before God continually to make Interceſſion for us: Come therefore with holy Boldneſs and Confidence and Joy, having ſo ſure and powerful a Friend with God, the beloved of the Father, whom he heareth always.

Dir. 5. §. 16. Direct. 5. Look carefully to the ſtate of thy Soul, that thou bring not an unholy Heart to worſhip the moſt Holy God. Come not in the love of Sin; nor in the hatred of Holineſs: For otherwiſe thou hateſt God, and art hated of him, as bringing that before him which he cannot but hate. And it's eaſie to judge how unfit they are to worſhip God, that hate him; and how unlike they are to be accepted by him whom he hateth. Pſal. 5. 3, 4, 5, 6, 7. My voice ſhalt thou hear in the morning, O Lord: in the morning will I direct my prayer unto thee, and will look up: For thou art not a God that hath pleaſure in wickedneſs, neither ſhall evil dwell with thee. The fooliſh ſhall not ſtand in thy ſight; thou hateſt all the workers of iniquity —— Thou ſhalt deſtroy them that ſpeak leaſing: the Lord will abhor the bloody and deceitful man. But as for me I will come into thy houſe in the multitude of thy mercies, and in thy fear will I worſhip towards thy holy Temple. Pſal. 66. 18. If I regard iniquity in my heart, the Lord will not hear me. Pſal. 15. 1, 2. Who ſhall abide in Gods tabernacle, but he that walketh uprightly and worketh righteouſneſs? God will be ſanctified in them that come nigh him; and are unſanctified Perſons fit for this? And can the unholy offer him holy worſhip? The carnal mind is enmity againſt God; is it fit then to ſerve and honour him? Rom. 1. 7, 8. See 2 Cor. 6. 15, 16, 17, 18. Let him that nameth the name of Chriſt depart from iniquity. 2 Tim. 2. 19. It is a purified, peculiar, holy people that Chriſt hath redeemed to be the Worſhippers of God, and as Prieſts to offer him acceptable Sacrifice, Tit. 2. 14. 1 Pet. 2. 5. 9. If you will receive the Kingdom that cannot be moved, you muſt have grace in your Hearts to ſerve God acceptably with reverence and godly fear: for our God is a conſuming Fire, Heb. 12, 28, 29. I know an ungodly Perſon as ſoon as he hath any repenting thoughts, muſt expreſs them in Confeſſion and Prayer to God: But as no Prayers of an ungodly Man are profitable to him, but thoſe which are acts of his penitent Return towards God; ſo no worſhip of God hath a promiſe of Divine Acceptance, but that which is performed by ſuch as ſincerely return to God: (and ſuch are not ungodly:) The ſacrifice of the wicked is abomination to the Lord, but the prayer of the upright is his delight, Prov. 15 8. I know the wicked muſt ſeek the Lord while he may be found, and call upon him while he is near: But it muſt be in forſaking his way and thoughts and turning to the Lord, Iſa. 55. 6, 7. Simon Magus muſt firſt repent of his Wickedneſs, and then pray that the thoughts of his Heart may be forgiven him, Act. 8. 22. sery, that thou mayeſt be ſanctified and reconciled and fit to worſhip him.

Dir. 6. §. 17. Direct. 6. Yet take it not as ſufficient that thou art in a ſtate of Sanctification, but alſo particularly ſanctifie thy ſelf to every particular Addreſs to God in holy worſhip. Even the Child of a King will not go rudely in dirt and filthineſs into his Father's Preſence. Who would not ſearch his Heart and Life, and cleanſe his Soul from his particular Pollution, by renewed repentance and purpoſes of Reformation, before he venture to ſpeak to God? Particular Sins have made ſad breaches between God and his Children, and made foul work in Souls that the Blood of Chriſt had cleanſed. Search therefore with fear, leſt there ſhould be any reviving Sin, or any hidden root of Bitterneſs, or any Tranſgreſſion which thou winkeſt at or wilfully cheriſheſt in thy ſelf; that, if there be ſuch, thou mayeſt bewail and hate it, and not come to God as if he had laid by his hatred of Sin.

Dir. 7. §. 18. Direct. 7. Whenever thou comeſt to worſhip God, labour to awaken thy Soul to a reverent apprehenſion of the Preſence and Greatneſs and Holineſs of his Majeſty, and to a ſerious apprehenſion of the greatneſs and excellency of the holy Work which thou takeſt in hand. Remember with whom thou haſt to do, Heb. 4. 13. To ſpeak to God, is another kind of work, than to ſpeak to the greateſt Prince on Earth, yea or the greateſt Angel in Heaven. Be holy, for the Lord your God is holy. To ſanctifie the Name of God, and come in Holineſs before him, is to apprehend him as infinitely advanced above the whole Creation, and to come with Hearts that are ſeparated from common things to him, and elevated above a common frame. A common frame in worſhip (ſuch as we have about our common buſineſs) is meer Prophaneneſs. If it be common it is unclean. Look to your feet when you go to the houſe of God, Eccl. 5. 1. Put off the ſhoes of earthly common unhallowed Affections, whenever you tread on holy ground, that is, when you are about holy Work, and when you draw near the Holy God. In reverent adoration ſay as Jacob, Gen. 28. 17. How dreadful is this place? this is none other but the Houſe of God, and this is the gate of Heaven. See Iſa. 6. 1, 3, 5.

Dir. 8. Luk. 20. 36. See Eccl. 5. 1. Pſ. 138. 1. Iſa. 6. 2. §. 19. Direct. 8. In the worſhip of God, remember your communion with the holy Angels, and with all the Hoſts of Heaven. You are the Servants of the ſame God, and though you are yet far below them, you are doing that which tendeth towards their Dignity; for you muſt be equal with them. Your work is partly of the ſame kind with theirs: It is the ſame Holy Majeſty that you admire and praiſe, though you ſee him yet but as in a glaſs. And the Angels are ſome of them preſent with you, and ſee you though you ſee not them: 1 Cor. 11. 10. You are commanded to reſpect them in your Behaviour in God's worſhip. If the Eye of Faith were ſo far opened, as that in all your worſhipping of God, you ſaw the bleſſed Companies of Angels, though not in the ſame place and manner with you, yet in the ſame worſhip and in communion with you, admiring, magnifying, extolling and praiſing the moſt Glorious God, and the Glorified Redeemer, with flaming, fervent, holy Minds, it would ſure do much to elevate your Souls, and raiſe you up to ſome imitation or reſemblance of them. You find that in God's pub lick worſhip it is a great help to the Soul, in holy cheerfulneſs and fervour, to join with a full Aſſembly of holy, fervent, chearful Worſhippers: And that it is very difficult to the beſt, to keep up Life and fervent chearfulneſs in ſo ſmall, or ignorant, or prophane a Company, as where there is no conſiderable number to concur with us. O then what a raiſing help would it be, to praiſe God as within the ſight and hearing of the Heavenly Praiſes of the Angelical Chore! You ſee how apt Men are to be conformed to the company that they are in! They that are among Dancers, or Gameſters, or Tiplers, or filthy Talkers, or Scorners, or Railers, are apt to do as the company doth, or at leaſt to be the more diſpoſed to it: And they that are among Saints, in holy worſhip or diſcourſe, are apt to imitate them much more than they would do in other company. And what likelier way is there, to make you like Angels in the worſhipping of God, than to do it as in the Communion of the Angels? And by Faith to ſee and hear them in the Conſort? The Angels diſdain not to ſtudy our ſtudies, and to learn by the Church the manifold Wiſdom of God, Eph. 3. 10. 1 Pet. 1. 12. They are not ſo far from us, nor ſo ſtrange to us and our Affairs, as that we ſhould imagine our ſelves to be out of their Communion. Though we may not worſhip them, (Col. 2. 18.) we muſt worſhip as with them.

See Mr. Ambroſe his Book of Communion with Angels; And Zanchy on the ſame ſubject: and Mr. Lawrence and Dr. Hammond's Annotat. on 1 Cor. 11.

Dir. 9. §. 20. Direct. 9. Take ſpecial care to the Matter of your Worſhip, that it be ſuch as is agreeable to the will of God; to the Holineſs of his Nature, and the Directions of his Word; and ſuch as hath a promiſe of his acceptance. Offer him not the Sacrifice of Fools who know not that they do evil, and are adding to their Sins, while they think they are pleaſing him. Bring no falſe Fire unto his Altars: Let your Zeal of God be according to knowledge. For no Zeal will make a corrupt unlawful kind of Worſhip, to be acceptable unto God.

Direct. 10. See that you perform every part of Worſhip to the proper end to which it is appointed: both as to the ultimate, remote, and neareſt end. The End is eſſential to theſe Relative Duties. If you intend not the right end, you make another thing of it: As the preaching of a Sermon to edifie the Church, or putting up a Prayer to procure God's Bleſſings, is not the ſame thing as a Stage-players prophane repeating the ſame words in ſcorn of Godlineſs, or an Hypocrites uſing them for commodity or applauſe. The ultimate end of all worſhip and all moral actions is the ſame, even the pleaſing and glorifying God, 1 Cor. 10. 31. 2 Tim. 2. 4. Beſides which every part of Worſhip hath its proper neareſt end. Theſe muſt not only be diſtinctly known, but actually intended. It is God in Chriſt, that a holy Worſhipper thirſteth after and ſeeketh for in every part of worſhip: Either to know more of God, and of his Will; and Bleſſings; or to have ſome more Communion with him, or ſome further Grace communicated from him, to receive his pardoning, or cleanſing, or quickening, or confirming, or comforting, or exalting Grace; to be honoured or delighted in his holy Service, or to make known his Grace and Glory for the good of others, and the honour of his Name. Here it is that God proclaimeth his Name, as Exod. 34. 6. The Ordinances of God's Worſhip are like the Tree in which Zaccheus climbed up (being of himſelf too low) to have a ſight of Chriſt. Here we come to learn the Will of God for our Salvation; and muſt enter the Aſſembly with ſuch reſolutions as Cornelius and his Company met, Act. 10. 33. We are all here met to hear all things commanded thee of God: And as Act. 2. 37. and Act. 16. 30. to learn what we muſt do to be ſaved. Hither we come for that holy Light, which may ſhew us our Sin, and ſhew us the Grace which we have received, and ſhew us the unſpeakable Love of God, till we are humbled for Sin, and lifted up by Faith in Christ, and can with Thomas as it were put our Fingers into his Wounds, and say in assurance, My Lord and my God: And as Psal. 48. 14. This God is our God for ever and ever: he will be our guide unto death. Here we do as it were with Mary sit at the Feet of Jesus, to hear his word, Luke 10. 39. That Fire from Heaven may come down upon our Hearts, and we may say, Did not our Hearts burn within us while he spake to us, and while he opened to us the holy Scriptures? Luke 24. 32. Here we cry to him as the blind Man, Lord that I may receive my sight: We cry here to the Watchmen, Cant. 3. 3. Saw ye him whom my Soul loveth? Here we are in his Banqueting House, under the Banner of his Love, Cant. 2. 4. We have here the sealing and quickenings of his Spirit, the mortification of our Sin, the increase of Grace, and a prospect into eternal Life, and a foresight of the endless Happiness there. See then that you come to the Worship of God with these intentions and expectations: That if God or Conscience call to you (as God did sometime to Elias) what dost thou here? You may truly answer, I came to seek the Lord my God, and to learn his Will that I might do it. And that your sweet delights may make you say, Psal. 84. 4. Blessed are they that dwell in thy house, they will be still praising thee! If thou come to the worship of God in meer custom, or to make thy carnal Heart believe that God will forgive thee because thou so far servest him, or to quiet thy Conscience with the doing of a formal task of duty, or to be seen of Men, or that thou mayest not be thought ungodly, if these be thy ends thou wilt speed accordingly. A holy Soul cannot live upon the air of Man's applause, nor upon the shell of Ordinances, without God who is the kernel and the life of all: It is the Love of God that brings them thither, and it is Love that they are exercising there, and the end of Love, even the nearer approach of the Soul to God, which they desire and intend. Be sure then that these be the true an real intentions of thy Heart.

Mar. 10. 51.

How to know that we have right ends in Worship.

§. 22. Quest. But how shall I know whether indeed it be God himself that I am seeking, and that I perform his worship to the appointed ends?

Answ. In so great a business it is a shame to be unacquainted with your intentions. If you take heed what you do, and look after your Hearts, you may know what you come for, and what your business is there. But more particularly you may discern it by these marks. 1. He that hath right ends, and seeketh God, will labour to suit all his Duties to those ends, and will like that best which is best suited to them: He will strive so to preach and hear and pray, not as tends most to preferment or applause, but as tendeth most to please and honour God, and to attain his Grace: And he will love that Sermon or that Prayer best, that is best fitted to bring up his Soul to God, and not that which tickleth a carnal Ear. Mark what you fit the means to, and you may perceive what is your end. 2. If it be God himself that you seek after in his Worship, you will not be satisfied without God: It is not the doing of the task that will satisfie you, nor yet the greatest Praise of Men, no not of the most godly Men! But so far as you have attained your end, in the cleasing, or quickening, or strengthening of the Soul, or getting somewhat nearer God, or pleasing or honouring him, so far only you will be contented. 3. If God be your end, you will be faithful in the use of that more private and spiritual worship, where God is to be found, though no human applause be there to be attained. 4. And you will love still the same substantial necessary Truth and Duty, which is to your Souls as Bread and Drink is to your Bodies; when those that have carnal ends will be looking after variety and change, and will be weary of the necessary Bread of Life. By observing these things you may discern what are your ends in Worship.

§. 23. And here I must not let go this necessary Direction, till I have driven on the Reader with some more importunity to the serious practice of it. It is lamentable to see, how many turn the Worship of God into vile Hypocrisie, and dead Formality; and offer God a Carrion for a Sacrifice, and yet their Consciences are so far from checking them for this hainous Sin, that they are much pleased and quieted by it, as if they had deserved well of God, and proved themselves very godly People, and by this Sin had made him amends for the common Sins of their Lives. Is it God himself, and his sanctifying Grace that those Men seek after in his Worship, who hate his Grace and scorn Sanctification, and can leave God to be enjoyed by others, if they may but enjoy their fleshly Pleasures, and Riches and Honours in the World? Even the Haters of God and Holiness are so blinded, as to perswade themselves that in his Worship they are truly seeking that God and Holiness which they hate. And O what a deal of pains is many a formal Hypocrite at to little purpose; in spending many Hours in outside, heartless, lifeless worship, while they never thirsted after God, nor after a holy conformity to him, communion with him, or fruition of him, in all their Lives. O what a deal of labour do these Pharisees lose in bodily exercise which profiteth nothing, for want of a right end in all that they do? Because it is not God that they seek? When Godliness is profitable to all things, 1 Tim. 4. 8. And what is Godliness but the Souls devotedness to God, and seeking after him? We have much ado to bring some Men from their Diversions to God's outward worship: But O how much harder is it to bring the Soul unfeignedly to seek God in that Worship where the Body is present? When David in the Wilderness was driven from the Sanctuary, he crieth out in the bitterness of his Soul, [As the Hart panteth after the water Brooks, so panteth my soul after thee O God: My soul thirsteth for God, for the living God: when shall I come and appear before God? My tears have been my meat day and night while they continually say unto me, where is thy God?] You see here that it was God himself that David thirsted after in his Worship. Alas, what is all the outward pomp of Worship, if God be not the end and life of all? Without him how vain a thing would the words of prayer and preaching, and the administration of the Sacraments be? It is not the dead Letter, but the quickening Spirit, that maketh the dead in Sin to live; that conviceth or comforteth the Soul; or maketh the Worshipper holy or happy. Nay it is some aggravation of your Misery, to be destitute of true Communion with God, while you seem to worship him, and to be far from him in the Heart, while you draw so near him with the Lips: To boast of the Temple of the Lord, and be forsaken by the Lord of the Temple! That Capernaum shall be cast down to Hell, that is but thus lifted up to Heaven: And it will be easier for Sodom in the day of judgment, than for such as had the publick Ordinances without God. David left the Ark with Absalom at Hierusalem; but God was not with Absalom but with David. No marvel if such Hypocrites grudge at all that is costly in God's service, even the necessary maintenance of the Ministers: For if they have only the shell of Ordinances without God, it will scarce requite them for their cost. No marvel if they think all their pains too much, when they take up with the Chaff which is scarcely worth their pains: No wonder if they find small pleasure in God's Service: For what pleasure is there in the husks or chaff, or in a deaf Nut? No wonder if they grow no better, no holier or stronger by it; for what strength will chaff and shadows breed? No marvel if they are quickly weary, and if a little of such Religion seem enough, when the life and spirits and strength and sweetness is neglected. O Sinners, remember, that God desireth not yours but you, and all your wealth, and service is as nothing to him, if he have not your selves (when yet you are so little worth the having:) Nay how earnestly doth he sue to have you! How dearly hath he bought you! He may challenge you as his own. Answer this kindness of God aright: Let no Ordinance nor no common Mercy satisfie you, if you have not God himself: And to encourage you let me further tell you,

Luke 10. 42. §. 24. 10. If it be God himself that thou seekest in his worship (sincerely) thou shalt find him: Because thou hast chosen the better part, it shall not be taken from thee. Because thou hungrest and thirstest after him thou shalt be satisfied. What joyful news is this to the thirsty Soul! 2. Thou art more welcome to God with these high Desires: This holy ambition and aspiring of Love is only acceptable to him: If all Ordinances be nothing to thee without God, he will see that thou understandest the true use of Ordinances, and put down thy Name among his Lovers, whom he cannot despise. He loveth not to see Men debase their Souls, to feed on Husks and Chaff with Hypocrites, no more than to feed on filth and dirt, with Sensualists and Worldlings.

1 Chr. 1. 11,12,13. As he accepted Solomon's Prayer because he asked not for little things, but for great, so he is very much pleased with the Soul, that is unsatisfied with all the World, and can be content with nothing lower or worse than God himself. 3. Nay because thou seekest God himself, thou shalt have all things with him that are worth the having, Mat. 6. 33. Rom. 8. 28. When Hypocrites have but the Carcass and Shadow, it's thou that shalt have the substantial Food and Joy. As they that were with Paul when he was converted, did hear the Voice but saw no Man, Acts 9. 7. So others shall hear the Sound of the Word, and the Name of God; but it is thou that shalt see him by Faith that is invisible, and feel the Power and Efficacy of all. Thou shalt hear God speak to thee, when he that sitteth in the same Seat with thee, shall hear no more than the Voice of Man: It is he that seeketh after God in his Ordinances, that is religious in good Sadness, and is employed in a work, that is worthy of an immortal rational Soul. The delights of Ordinances as they are performed by Man, will savour of his imperfections, and taste of the instrument, and have a bitterness often mixed with the sweet; when the delight that cometh from God himself will be more pure: Ordinances are uncertain: You may have them to day, and lose them to morrow! When God is everlasting, and everlastingly to be enjoyed. O therefore take not up short of God, in any of his worship, but before you set upon it, call up your Souls to mind the end, and tell them what you are going to do, that you miss not of the end for want of seeking it. The Devil will give hypocritical Worldlings leave to play them with the most excellent Ordinances, if he can but keep God out of sight, even as you will let your Children play them with a Box of Gold, as long as it is shut, and they not see what's within.

§. 25. Direct. 11. Be laborious with your hearts in all God's worship to keep them employed on their duty; and be watchful over them, lest they slug or wander. Remember that it is Heart-work that you are principally about. And therefore see that your Hearts be all the while at work. Take your selves as idle when your Hearts are idle. And if you take not pains with them, how little pains will they take in duty? If you watch them not, how quickly will they lye down, and forget what they are doing, and fall asleep when you are in treaty with God? How easily will they turn aside, and be thinking of impertinent Vanities! Watch therefore unto Prayer and every Duty, 1 Pet. 4. 7. 2 Tim. 4. 5. Dir. 11. Eph. 6. 18. Luke 21. 36. Rev. 3. 3. Col. 4. 2. Mar. 20. 38 40. 41. Mat. 13. 33, 34, 35, 37.

§. 26. Direct. 12. Look up to Heaven as that which all your Duties tend to, that from thence you may fetch your encouraging motives. Do all as a means to Life eternal: Separate no Duty from its reward and end. As the Traveller remembreth whither he is going all the way, and a desired end doth make the foulest steps seem tolerable; so think in every Prayer you put up, and in every Duty, that it is all for Heaven. Dir. 12.

§. 27. Direct. 13. Depend upon the Spirit of God for help. You cannot seek God spiritually and acceptably without him. Think not that you are sufficient to worship God aright without his help. Where this is despited or neglected, you see what lamentable work is made by blind corrupted Nature in God's Service. Sensual Wretches that have not the Spirit, are fitter for any thing than to worship God. If he that hath not the Spirit of Christ be none of his, Rom. 8. 9 Then he that pretends to worship God without the Spirit of Christ, can ill think to be heard for the sake of Christ. Dir. 13. Jude 19.

§. 28. Direct. 14. Look also to your tongues and the deportment of your bodies, that the whole Man may worship God in holiness, as he requireth. Pretend not your good meanings, nor the spirituality of your worship, to excuse you from worshipping also with your Bodies. Your Hearts must be first look'd to; but your Words and Bodies must be next look'd to: And if you regard not these, it is hardly credible that you regard your Hearts. 1. Your words and gestures are the due expression of your Hearts: And the Heart will desire to express it self as it is: Many would express their Hearts to be better than they are; and therefore good expressions are oft to be suspected: But few would express their Hearts as worse than they are, and therefore bad appearances do seldom lie. 2. Your Words and Actions are needful to the due honouring of God: As evil Words and Actions do dishonour him, and the unseemly disorderly performance of his Service, is very injurious to such holy things; so your meet and comely words and gestures are the external Beauty of the Worship which you perform: And God should be served with the best. 3. Your words and gestures reflect much on your own Hearts: As Acts tend to the increase of the Habits; so the external Expressions tend to increase the internal Affections, whether they be good or evil. 4. Your words and gestures must be regarded for the good of others, who see not your Hearts, but by these Expressions: And where many have Communion in worshipping God, such acts of Communion are of great regard. Dir. 14.

CHAP. II.

Directions about the Manner of Worſhip, to avoid all Corruptions, and falſe unacceptable Worſhipping of God.

THE lamentable Contentions that have ariſen about the Manner of God's worſhip, and the Cruelty, and Blood, and Diviſions, and uncharitable Revilings which have thence followed, and alſo the neceſſary Regard that every Chriſtian muſt have to worſhip God according to his Will, do make it needful that I give you ſome Directions in this Caſe.

Dir. 1. §. 1. Direct. 1. Be ſure that you ſeriouſly and faithfully practiſe that inward worſhip of God in which the life of Religion doth conſiſt: As to love him above all, to fear him, believe him, truſt him, delight in him, be zealous for him: And that your Hearts be ſanctified unto God, and ſet upon Heaven and Holineſs: For this will be an unſpeakable help to ſet you right in moſt Controverſies about the worſhipping of God. Nothing hath ſo much filled the Church with Contentions, and Diviſions, and Cruelties about God's worſhip, as the agitating of theſe Controverſies by unholy unexperienced Perſons: When Men that hate a holy Life, and holy Perſons, and the Holineſs of God himſelf, muſt be they that diſpute what manner of worſhip muſt be offered to God by themſelves and others; and when the Controverſies about God's Service are fallen into the hands of thoſe that hate all ſerious ſerving of him, you may eaſily know what work they will make of it. As if ſick Men were to determine or diſpute what Meat and Drink themſelves and all other Men muſt live upon, and none muſt eat but by their Preſcripts, moſt healthful Men would think it hard to live in ſuch a Country. As Men are within, ſo will they incline to worſhip God without. Outward worſhip is but the expreſſion of inward worſhip: He that hath a Heart repleniſhed with the Love and Fear of God, will be apt to expreſs it by ſuch manner of worſhip, as doth moſt lively and ſeriouſly expreſs the Love and Fear of God. If the Heart be a Stranger or an Enemy to God, no marvel if ſuch worſhip him accordingly. O could we but help all Contenders about worſhip, to the inward Light, and Life, and Love, and experience of holy ſerious Chriſtians, they would find enough in themſelves, and their Experiences, to decide abundance of Controverſies of this kind: (Though ſtill there will be ſome, that require alſo other helps to decide them.) It is very obſervable in all times of the Church, how in Controverſies about God's worſhip the generality of the godly ſerious People, and the generality of the ungodly and ludicrous Worſhippers, are ordinarily of differing judgments! And what a ſtroke the temper of the Soul hath in the determination of ſuch caſes!

Read on this ſubject a ſmall Book which I have written, called Catholick Unity.

Dir. 2. §. 2. Direct. 2. Be ſerious and diligent alſo in all thoſe parts of the outward worſhip of God that all ſober Chriſtians are agreed in. For if you be negligent and falſe in ſo much as you confeſs, your judgment about the controverted part is not much to be regarded. God is not ſo likely to direct prophane ones and falſe-hearted Hypocrites, and bleſs them with a ſound judgment in holy things, (where their Lives ſhew that their practical judgments are corrupt,) as the ſincere that obey him in that which he revealeth to them. We are all agreed that God's Word muſt be your daily meditation and delight: Pſal. 1. 2. And that you ſhould ſpeak of it lying down and riſing up, at home and abroad, Deut. 6. 6, 7, 8. And that we muſt be conſtant, and fervent, and importunate in Prayer, both in publick and private, 1 Theſſ. 5. 17. Luke 18. 1. Jam. 5 16. Do you perform this much faithfully or not? If you do, you may the more confidently expect, that God ſhould further reveal his Will to you, and reſolve your doubts, and guide you in the way that is pleaſing to him. But if you omit the Duty which all are agreed on, and be unfaithful and negligent in what you know, how unmeet are you to diſpute about the controverted circumſtances of Duty? To what purpoſe is it, that you meddle in ſuch Controverſies? Do you do it wilfully to condemn your ſelves before God, and ſhame your ſelves before Men? By declaring the Hypocriſie which aggravateth your Ungodlineſs? What a loathſom and pitiful thing is it, to hear a Man bitterly reproach thoſe that differ from him in ſome circumſtances of worſhip, when he himſelf never ſeriouſly worſhippeth God at all? When he meditateth not on the Word of God, and inſtead of delighting in it, maketh light of it, as if it little concerned him; and is acquainted with no other Prayer than a little cuſtomary Lip ſervice? Is ſuch an ungodly neglecter of all the ſerious worſhip of God, a fit Perſon to fill the World with Quarrels about the Manner of his worſhip?

Dir. 3. §. 3. Direct. 3. Differ not in God's worſhip from the common ſenſe of the moſt faithful godly Chriſtians, without great ſuſpicion of your own underſtandings, and a moſt diligent tryal of the caſe. For if in ſuch practical caſes the common ſenſe of the faithful be againſt you, it is to be ſuſpected that the teaching of God's Spirit is againſt you: For the Spirit of God doth principally teach his Servants in the matter of Worſhip and Obedience.

There are ſeveral Errors that I am here warning you to avoid: 1. The error of them that rather incline to the judgment of the ungodly Multitude, who never knew what it was to worſhip God in Spirit and Truth: Conſider the great diſadvantages of theſe Men to judge aright in ſuch a caſe: 1. They muſt judge then without that teaching of the Spirit, by which things ſpiritual are to be diſcerned, 1 Cor. 2, 13, 15. He that is blind in Sin muſt judge of the Myſteries of Godlineſs. 2. They muſt judge quite contrary to their Natures and Inclinations, or againſt the diſeaſed habits of their Wills: And if you call a Drunkard to judge of the evil of Drunkenneſs, or a Whoremonger to judge of the evil of Fornication, or a covetous, or a proud, or a paſſionate Man to judge of their ſeveral Sins, how partial will they be? And ſo will an ungodly Man be in judging of the Duties of Godlineſs. You ſet him to judge of that which he hateth. 3. You ſet him to judge of that which he is unacquainted with: It's like he never throughly ſtudied it: But it's certain he never ſeriouſly tryed it, nor hath not the experience of thoſe, that have long made it a great part of the buſineſs of their Lives. And would you not ſooner take a Man's judgment in Phyſick, that hath made it the ſtudy and practice of his Life, than a ſick Man's that ſpeaketh againſt that which he never ſtudied or practiſed, meerly becauſe his own Stomach is againſt it? Or will you not ſooner take the judgment of an ancient Pilot about Navigation, than ones that was never at Sea? The difference is as great in this preſent Caſe.

The diſadvantages of ungodly men in judging of holy worſhip.

§. 4. 2. And I ſpeak this alſo to warn you of another Error, that you prefer not the judgment of a Sect or Party, or ſome few godly People, againſt the common ſenſe of the generality of the Faithful: For the Spirit of God is likelier to have forſaken a ſmall part of godly People, than the generality, in ſuch particular Opinions, which even good Men may may be forsaken in: Or if it be in greater things, it is more unreasonable and more uncharitable for me to suspect that most that seem godly are Hypocrites and forsaken of God, than that a Party, or some few are so.

Dir. 4. §. 5. Direct. 4. Yet do not absolutely give up your selves to the judgment of any in the worshipping of God, but only use the advice of Men in a due subordination to the Will of God, and the teaching of Jesus Christ. Otherwise you will set Man in the place of God, and will reject Christ in his Prophetical Office, as much as using Co-ordinate Mediators, is a rejecting him in his Priestly Office. None must be called Master, but in subordination to Christ, because he is our Master, Matth. 22. 8, 9, 10.

Dir. 5. See Rom. 14. & 15. & 1 Cor. 8. 13. §. 6. Direct. 5. Condemn not all that in others which you dare not do your selves; and practise not all that your selves, which you dare not condemn in others. For you are more capable of judging in your own cases, and bound to do it with more exactness and diligent enquiry, than in the case of others. Oft times a rational doubt may necessitate you to suspend your practice, as your belief or judgment is suspended; when yet it will not allow you to condemn another whose judgment and practice hath no such suspension. Only you may doubt whether he be in the right, as you doubt as to your self. And yet you may not therefore venture to do all that you dare not condemn in him; for then you must wilfully commit all the Sins in the World, which your weakness shall make a doubt or controversie of.

Dir. 6. Lev. 19. 2. & 20. 7. 1 Pet. 1. 16. §. 7. Direct. 6. Offer God no worship that is clearly contrary to his nature and perfections, but such as is suited to him as he is revealed to you in his Word. Thus Christ teacheth us, to worship God as he is: and thus God often calleth for holy Worship, because he is Holy. 1. God is a Spirit: Therefore they that worship him, must worship him in Spirit and in Truth: (which Christ opposeth to meer external Ceremony or Shadows) John. 4. 23, 24. For the Father seeketh such to worship him. 2. God is Incomprehensible, and Infinitely distant from us: Therefore worship him with Admiration, and make not either visible or mental Images of him, nor debase him not by undue resemblance of him to any of his Creatures. 3. God is Omnipresent, and therefore you may every where lift up holy hands to him, 1 Tim. 2. 8 And you must always worship him as in his sight. 4. God is Omniscient, and knoweth your Hearts, and therefore let your Hearts be employed and watched in his worship. 5. God is most wise, and therefore not to be worshipped ludicrously with Toyes, as Children are pleased with to quiet them, but with wise and rational worship. 6. God is most great, and therefore to be worshipped with the greatest reverence and seriousness; and not presumptuously, with a careless Mind, or wandring Thoughts, or rude Expressions. 7. God is most good and gracious, and therefore not to be worshipped with Backwardness, Unwillingness and Weariness, but with great Delight. 8. God is most merciful in Christ, and therefore not to be worshipped despairingly, but in joyful Hope. 9. God is true and faithful, and therefore to be worshipped believingly and confidently, and not in distrust and unbelief. 10. God is most holy, and therefore to be worshipped by holy Persons, in a holy Manner, and not by unholy Hearts or Lips, nor in a common manner, as if we had to do but with a Man. 11. He is the Maker of your Souls and Bodies, and therefore to be worshipped both with Soul and Body. 12. He is your Redeemer and Saviour, and therefore to be worshipped by you as Sinners in the humble sense of your Sin and Misery, and as Redeemed ones in the thankful sense of his Mercy, and all in order to your further cleansing, healing and recovery. 13. He is your Regenerater and Sanctifier, and therefore to be worshipped not in the confidence of your natural sufficiency, but by the Light, and Love, and Life of the Holy Ghost. 14. He is your absolute Lord, and the Owner of you and all you have; and therefore to be worshipped with the absolute resignation of your self and all, and honoured with your Substance, and not Hyocritically with exceptions and reserves. 15. He is your Sovereign King, and therefore to be worshipped according to his Laws, with an obedient kind of worship, and not after the Traditions of Men, nor the Will or Wisdom of the Flesh. 16. He is your Heavenly Father, and therefore all these Holy Dispositions, should be summed up into the strongest Love, and you should run to him with the greatest readiness, and rest in him with the greatest Joy, and thirst after the full fruition of him with the greatest of your Desires, and press towards him for himself with the most fervent and importunate Suits. All these the very Being and Perfections of God will teach you in his worship. And therefore if any controverted worship be certainly contrary to any of these, it is certainly unwarranted and unacceptable unto God.

Mat. 15. 2, 3, 6. Mar. 7. 3. to 14. Col. 2. 8, 18, 22.

Dir. 7. §. 8. Direct. 7. Pretend not to worship God by that which is destructive, or contrary to the Ends of worship. For the aptitude of it as a means to its proper end, is essential to it. Now the Ends of worship are, 1. The Honouring of God: 2. The edifying of our selves in Holiness, and delighting our Souls in the Contemplation and Praises of his Perfections: 3. The communicating this Knowledge, Holiness and Delight to others, and the increase of his actual Kingdom in the World. 1. Avoid then all that pretended Worship which dishonoureth God, (not in the opinion of carnal Men that judge of him by their own misguided Imaginations, but according to the discovery of himself to us in his Works and Word.) Many Travellers that have conversed with the soberer Heathen and Mahometan Nations, tell us, that it is not the least hindrance of their Conversion, and cause of their contempt of Christianity, to see the Christians that live about them, to worship God so ignorantly, irrationally and childishly as many of them do. 2. Affect most that manner of worship (cæteris paribus) which tendeth most to your own right information, and holy resolutions and affections, and to bring up your Souls into nearer Communion and Delight in God: And not that which tendeth to deceive, or flatter, or divert you from him, nor to be in your Ears as sounding Brass, or a tinkling Cymbal, or as one that is playing you a Lesson of Musick; and tendeth not to make you better. 3. Affect not that manner of worship which is an Enemy to Knowledge, and tendeth to keep up Ignorance in the World: Such as is a great part of the Popish Worship, especially their reading the Scriptures to the People in an unknown Tongue, and celebrating their publick Prayers, and Praises, and Sacraments, in an unknown Tongue, and their seldom Preaching, and then teaching the People to take up with a multitude of toyish Ceremonies, instead of Knowledge and rational Worship. Certainly that which is an Enemy to Knowledge, is an Enemy to all Holiness and true Obedience, and to the Ends of worship, and therefore is no acceptable worshipping of God. 4. Affect not that pretended worship which is of it self destructive of true Holiness: Such as is the preaching of false Doctrine, not according to Godliness, and the opposition and reproach-

See Ezek. 22. 26. and 44. 23. Jer. 15. 19. If thou take forth the precious from the vile, thou ſhalt be as my Mouth, Mal. 3. 18. Pſal. 1. & 15. 4. Affect not a dead and heartleſs way of Worſhip, which tendeth not to convince and waken the ungodly, nor to make Men ſerious as thoſe that have to do with God.

Dir. 8. § 9. Direct. 8. Let the manner of your worſhipping God, be ſuited to the Matter that you have in hand. Remember that you are ſpeaking either to or of the Eternal God: That you are employed about the everlaſting Salvation of your own or others Souls: That all is high and holy that you have to do: See then that the Manner be anſwerable hereunto.

And when the Certainty of all Mens Senſes is renounced, then all Certainty of Faith, and all Religion is renounced; for all preſuppoſe the Certainty of Senſe.

Dir. 10. § 11. Direct. 10. Worſhip not God in a manner that is contrary to the true Nature, and Order, and Operations of a rational Soul. I mean not to the corrupted Nature of Man, but to Nature as Rational in it ſelf conſidered. As 1. Let not your meer Will and Inclination over-rule your Underſtandings; and ſay not as blind Lovers do, I love this, but I know not why: Or as Children that eat unwholſom Meat, becauſe they love it. 2. Let not Paſſion over-top your Reaſon: Worſhip God with ſuch a Zeal as is according to Knowledge. 3. Let not your Tongues lead your Hearts, much leſs over-go them: Words may indeed reflect upon the Heart, and warm it more; but that is but the ſecondary uſe: The firſt is to be the Expreſſions of the Heart: You muſt not ſpeak without or againſt your Hearts (that is, falſly) that by ſo ſpeaking you may better your Hearts (and make the words true, that at firſt were not true): Unleſs it be when your Words are but reading-recitations or narratives, and not ſpoken of your ſelves. The Heart was made to lead the Tongue, and the Tongue to expreſs it, and not to lead it. Therefore ſpeak not to God either the Words of a Parrot, which you do not underſtand, or the Words of a Liar or Hypocrite, which expreſs not the meaning, or deſires, or feeling of your Hearts: But firſt underſtand and feel what you ſhould ſpeak, and then ſpeak that which you underſtand and feel.

Read Plutarch of Superſtition.

§. 12. Queſt. How then can a Prayer be lawful, that is read or heard from a Book?

Anſw. There is in Reading the Eye, and in Hearing the Ear that is firſt to affect the Heart, and then the Tongue is to perform its office. And though it be ſudden, yet the paſſage to the Heart is firſt, and the paſſage from the Heart is laſt: And the Soul is quick, and can quickly thus both Receive, and be affected and expreſs it ſelf. And the caſe is the ſame in this, whether it be from a Book, or from the Words of another without Book: For the Soul muſt do the ſame, as quickly, in joining with another that ſpeaketh before us, without a Book as with it.

§. 13. Direct. 11. Underſtand well how far Chriſt hath given a Law and a Rule for worſhip to his Church in the Holy Scripture, and ſo far ſee that you take it as a perfect Rule, and ſwerve not from it by adding or diminiſhing. This is a matter of great importance by reaſon of the danger of erring on either ſide. 1. If you think that the Scripture containeth not any Law or Rule of Worſhip at all, or not ſo much as indeed it doth, you will deny a principal part of the Office of Chriſt, as the King and Teacher of the Church, and will accuſe his Laws of inſufficiency, and be tempted to worſhip him with a humane kind of worſhip, and to think your ſelves at Liberty to Worſhip him according to your own Imaginations, or change his worſhip according to the faſhion of the Age or the Country where you are. And on the other ſide, if you think that the Scripture is a Law and Rule of Worſhip, more particular than Chriſt intended it, you will involve your ſelves and others in endleſs Scruples and Controverſies, and find fault with that which is lawful and a Duty, becauſe you find it not particularly in the Scriptures: And therefore it is exceeding needful to underſtand how far it is intended to be herein our Law and Rule, and how far not: To handle this fully would be a Digreſſion, but I ſhall briefly anſwer it.

Dir. The Scripture is the Law of Worſhip, and Diſcipline, and how far not.

§ 14. 1. No doubt but Chriſt is the only Univerſal Head and Law-giver to his Church: And that Legiſlation is the firſt and principal part of Government: And therefore if he had made no Laws for his Church, he were not the full Governour of it. And therefore he that arrogates to himſelf to be Law-giver to the Church univerſal (as ſuch) doth uſurp the Kingly Office of Chriſt, and committeth Treaſon againſt his Government, unleſs he can prove that Chriſt hath delegated to him this chief part of his Government, which none can do): There being no Univerſal Law-giver to the Church but Chriſt (whether Pope or Council), no Law that is made by any meer Man can be univerſally obligatory. Therefore ſeeing the making of all Univerſal Laws doth belong only to Chriſt, we may be ſure that he hath perfectly done it; and hath left nothing out of his Laws that was fit to be there, nor nothing at liberty that was fit to be determined and commanded. Therefore whatſoever is of equal Uſe or Conſideration to the Univerſal Church, as it is to any one part of it, and to all Times as it is to any Time of the Church, ſhould not be made a Law by Man to any part of the Church, if Chriſt have not made it a Law to the whole: Becauſe elſe they accuſe him of being defective in his Laws, and becauſe all his Subjects are equally dependant on him as their King and Judge. And no Man muſt ſtep into his Throne pretending to amend his Work which he hath done amiſs, or to make up any wants, which the chief Law-giver ſhould have made up.

§. 15. 2. Theſe Laws of Chriſt for the Government of his Church, are fully contained in the Holy Scriptures: For ſo much as is in Nature, is there alſo more plainly expreſſed than nature hath expreſt it. All is not Chriſts Law that is any way expreſt in

Mat. 28. 20. ☞ in Scripture; but all Christs Laws are expreſt in the Scriptures: Not written by himſelf, but by his Spirit in his Apoſtles, whom he appointed and ſent to Teach all Nations to obſerve what ever he commanded them: Who being thus commiſſioned and enabled fully by the Spirit to perform it, are to be ſuppoſed to have perfectly executed their Commiſſion; and to have taught whatſoever Chriſt commanded them, and no more as from Chriſt: And therefore as they taught that preſent Age by Voice, who could Hear them, ſo they taught all Ages after to the end of the World by writing, becauſe their Voice was not by them to be heard.

§. 16. 3. So far then as the Scripture is a Law and Rule, it is a perfect Rule: But how far it is a Law or Rule, its own contents and expreſſions muſt determine. As 1. It is certain that all the Internal Worſhip of God (by love, fear, truſt, deſire, &c.) is perfectly commanded in the Scriptures. 2. The Doctrine of Chriſt which his Miniſters muſt read and preach is perfectly contained in the Scriptures. 3. The grand and conſtantly neceſſary points of Order in Preaching, are there alſo expreſſed: As that the opening of Mens Eyes, and the converting of them from the Power of Satan to God be firſt endeavoured, and then their Confirmation and further Edification, &c. 4. Alſo that we humble our ſelves before God in the Confeſſion of our Sins. 5. And that we pray to God in the name of Chriſt for Mercy for our ſelves and others. 6. That we give God Thanks for his Mercies to the Church, our ſelves and others. 7. That we Praiſe God in his Excellencies manifeſted in his Word and Works of Creation and Providence. 8. That we do this by ſinging Pſalms with holy joyfulneſs of Heart. 9. The matter and order of the ordinary Prayers and Praiſes of Chriſtians is expreſſed in the Scripture, (As which parts are to have precedency in our eſtimation and deſire, and ordinarily in our expreſſions). 10. Chriſt himſelf hath determined that by Baptizing them into the Name of the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghoſt, Men be ſolemnly entered into his Covenant, and Church, and State of Chriſtianity. 11. And he hath himſelf appointed that his Churches hold Communion with him and among themſelves, in the Euchariſtical adminiſtration of the Sacrament of his Body and Blood, repreſented in the breaking, delivering, receiving and eating the conſecrated Bread, and in the pouring out, delivering, receiving and drinking the conſecrated Wine. 12. And as for the mutable ſubſervient circumſtances and external expreſſions, and actions, and orders, which were not fit to be, in particular, the matter of an Univerſal Law, but are fit in one Place, or at one Time, and not another, for theſe he hath left both in Nature and Scripture ſuch General Laws, by which upon emergent Occaſions they may be determined; and by particular Providences he fitteth Things, and Perſons, and Times, and Places, ſo as that we may diſcern their agreeableneſs to the Deſcriptions in his General Laws: As that all things be done Decently, in Order and to Edification, and in Charity, Unity, and Peace. And he hath forbidden Generally doing any thing undecently, diſorderly, to the hurt or Deſtruction of our Brethren, even the weak, or to the Diviſion of the Church. 13. And many things he hath particularly forbidden in Worſhip: As making to our ſelves any graven Image, &c. and Worſhipping Angels, &c.

Second commandment, Col. 2. 18. &c. 1 Joh. 5. 21. Rev. 2. 14.

§ 20. And as to the Order and Government of the Church (for I am willing to diſpatch all here together) this much is plainly determined in Scripture. 1. That there be Officers or Miniſters under Chriſt to be the ſtated Teachers of his People, and to Baptize, and Adminiſter the Sacrament of his Body and Blood, and be the Mouth and Guide of the People in publick Prayers, Thankſgiving and Praiſes, and to bind the impenitent and looſe the penitent, and to be the Directors of the Flocks according to the Law of God, to Life Eternal. And their Office is deſcribed and determined by Chriſt. 2. It is required that Chriſtians do ordinarily Aſſemble together for God's publick Worſhip; and be Guided therein by theſe their Paſtors. 3. It is required that beſides the unfixed Miniſters, who employ themſelves in converting Infidels, and in an itinerant ſervice of the Churches, there be alſo ſtated fixed Miniſters, having a ſpecial Charge of each particular Church: And that they may know their own Flocks, and from Houſe to Houſe, and the People may know their own Paſtors that are over them in the Lord, and honour them and obey them in all that they teach them from the Word of God for their Salvation. 4. The Miniſters that Baptize are to judge of the capacity and fitneſs of thoſe whom they Baptize; whether the Adult that are admitted upon their perſonal Profeſſion and Covenanting, or Infants that are admitted upon their Parents Profeſſion and entering them into Covenant. 5. The Paſtors that Adminiſter the Lord's Supper to their particular Flocks, are to diſcern or judge of the fitneſs of thoſe Perſons whom they receive newly into their Charge, or whom they admit to Communion in that Sacrament as members of their Flock. 6. Every ſuch Paſtor is alſo perſonally to watch over all the members of his Flock as far as he is able; leſt falſe Teachers ſeduce them, or Satan get Advantage of them, or any corruption or root of bitterneſs ſpring up among them and defile them. 7. It is the Duty of the ſeveral Members of the Flock, if a Brother treſpaſs againſt them, to tell him his faults between them and him; and if he hear not to take two or three, and if he hear not them to tell the Church. 8. It is the Paſtors Duty to admoniſh the unruly, and call them to Repentance, and pray for their Converſion. 9. And it is the Paſtors Duty to declare the obſtinately impenitent uncapable of Communion with the Church, and to charge him to forbear it, and the Church to avoid him. 10. It is the Peoples Duty to avoid ſuch accordingly, and have no familiarity with them that they may be aſhamed; and with ſuch no not to eat. 11. It is the Paſtors Duty to Abſolve the Penitent, declaring the Remiſſion of their Sin, and re-admitting to the Communion of the Saints. 12. It is the Peoples Duty to re-admit the abſolved to their Communion with Joy, and to take them as Brethren in the Lord. 13. Though every Paſtor hath a General Power to exerciſe his Office in any part of the Church, where he ſhall be truly called to it; yet every Paſtor hath a ſpecial Obligation (and conſequently a ſpecial Power) to do it over the Flock, of which he hath received the ſpecial charge and over-ſight. 14. The Lords Day is ſeparated by Gods appointment for the Churches ordinary holy Communion in Gods Worſhip under the conduct of theſe their Guides. 15. And it is requiſite that the ſeveral particular Churches do maintain as much Agreement among themſelves, as their capacity will allow them; and keep due Synods and Correſpondences to that end. Thus much of Gods Worſhip, and Church Order and Government at leaſt is of Divine Inſtitution, and determined by Scripture, and not left to the Will or Liberty of Man. Thus far the Form of Government (at leaſt) is of Divine Right.

§. 21. But on the contrary, 1. About Doctrine and Worſhip; the Scripture is no Law in any of theſe following Caſes, but hath left them undetermined. 1. There are many natural Truths, which the Scripture meddleth not with: As Phyſicks, Metaphyſicks, Logick, &c. 2. Scripture telleth not a Miniſter niſter what particular Text or Subject he ſhall preach on this Day or that. 3. Nor what method his Text or Subject ſhall be opened and handled in 4. Nor what Day of the Week beſides the Lord's Day he ſhall preach, nor what Hour on the Lord's Day he ſhall begin. 5. Nor in what particular place the Church ſhall meet. 6. Nor what particular Sins we ſhall moſt confeſs: Nor what perſonal Mercies we ſhall at this preſent time, firſt ask: Nor for what we ſhall now moſt copiouſly give thanks: For ſpecial occaſions muſt determine all theſe. 7. Nor what particular Chapter we ſhall now read: Nor what particular Pſalm we ſhall now ſing. 8. Nor what particular Tranſlation of the Scripture, or Verſion of the Pſalms we ſhall now uſe. Nor into what Sections to diſtribute the Scripture, as we do by Chapters and Verſes. Nor whether the Bible ſhall be printed or written, or in what Characters, or how bound. 9. Nor juſt by what ſign I ſhall expreſs my conſent to the Truths or Duties which I am called to expreſs conſent to, (beſides the Sacraments and ordinary Words.) 10. Nor whether I ſhall uſe written Notes to help my Memory in Preaching, or preach without. 11. Nor whether I ſhall uſe a writing or Book in Prayer, or pray without. 12. Nor whether I ſhall uſe the ſame words in Preaching and Prayer, or various new Expreſſions. 13. Nor what Utenſils in holy Adminiſtration I ſhall uſe; as a Temple or an ordinary Houſe, a Pulpit, a Font, a Table, Cups, Cuſhions and many ſuch, which belong to the ſeveral parts of Worſhip. 14. Nor in what particular geſture we ſhall preach, or read, or hear. 15. Nor what particular Garments Miniſters or People ſhall wear in time of Worſhip. 16. Nor what natural or artificial helps to our natural faculties we ſhall uſe: As Medicaments for the Voice, Tunes, Muſical Inſtruments, Spectacles, Hour glaſſes: Theſe and ſuch like are undetermined in Scripture, and are left to be determined by human Prudence, not as Men pleaſe; but as means in order to the proper end, according to the General Laws of Chriſt. For Scripture is a General Law for all ſuch circumſtances, but not a particular Law.

Of which I have ſpoke more fully in my Diſput 5. of Church Government, p. 400. &c.——

So alſo for Order and Government, Scripture hath not particularly determined, 1. What individual Perſons ſhall be the Paſtors of the Church. 2. Or of juſt how many Perſons the Congregation ſhall conſiſt. 3. Or how the Paſtors ſhall divide their work where there are many. 4. Nor how many every Church ſhall have. 5. Nor what particular People ſhall be a Paſtors ſpecial charge. 6. Nor what individual Perſons he ſhall baptize, receive to Communion, admoniſh, or abſolve. 7. Nor in what words moſt of theſe ſhall be expreſſed. 8. Nor what number of Paſtors ſhall meet in Synods, for the communion and agreement of ſeveral Churches, nor how oft, nor at what time or place, nor what particular order ſhall be among them in their Conſultations; with many ſuch like.

§. 22. When you thus underſtand how far Scripture is a Law to you in the Worſhip of God, it will be the greateſt Direction to you. to keep you both from diſobeying God, and your Superiours: That you may neither pretend Obedience to Man for your Diſobedience to God, nor pretend Obedience to God againſt your due Obedience to your Governours, as thoſe will do that think Scripture is a more particular Rule than ever Chriſt intended it: And it will prevent abundance of unneceſſary Scruples, Contentions, and Diviſions.

Dir. 12. What comm ands of God are not univerſal nor perpetual.

§. 23. Direct. 12. Obſerve well in Scripture the difference between Chriſt's Univerſal Laws, (which bind all his Subjects in all times and places) and thoſe that are but local, perſonal or alterable Laws; leſt you think that you are bound to all that ever God bound any others to. The Univerſal Laws and unalterable are thoſe which reſult from the Foundation of the univerſal and unalterable nature of Perſons and Things, and thoſe which God hath ſupernaturally revealed as ſuitable conſtantly to all. The particular, local or temporary Laws are thoſe, which either reſulted from a particular or alterable nature of Perſons and Things as mutually related (as the Law of Nature bound Adam's Sons to marry their Siſters, which bindeth others againſt it) or thoſe which God ſupernaturally enacted only for ſome particular People or Perſon, or for the time. If you ſhould miſtake all the Jewiſh Laws for Univerſal Laws (as to Perſons or Duration) into how many Errors would it lead you? So alſo if you miſtake every perſonal mandate ſent by a Prophet or Apoſtle to a particular Man, as obliging all, you would make a ſnare of it. Every Man is not to abſtain from Vineyards and Wine as the Rechabites were: Nor every Man to go forth to preach in the Garb as Chriſt ſent the Twelve and Seventy Diſciples: Nor every Man to adminiſter or receive the Lord's Supper in an upper Room of a Houſe, in the Evening, with Eleven or Twelve only, &c. Nor every one to carry Paul's Cloak and Parchments, nor go up and down on the Meſſages which ſome were ſent on. And here (in Precepts about Worſhip) you muſt know what is the thing primarily intended in the Command, and what it is that is but a ſubſervient means: For many Laws are univerſal and immutable as to the matter primarily intended, which are but local and temporary as to the matter ſubſervient and ſecondarily intended. As the command of ſaluting one another with a holy Kiſs and uſing Love Feaſts in their ſacred Communion primarily intended the exerciſing and expreſſing holy Love by ſuch convenient ſigns as were then in uſe, and ſuitable to thoſe times: But that it be done by thoſe particular ſigns, was ſubſervient, and a local alterable Law; as appeareth, 1. In that it is actually laid down by God's allowance. 2. In that in other places and times the ſame ſigns have not the ſame ſignification, and aptitude to that uſe at all, and therefore would be no ſuch expreſſion of Love; or elſe have alſo ſome ill ſignification. So it was the firſt way of Baptizing to dip them over-head; Which was fit in that hot Country; which in colder Countries it would not be, as being deſtructive to health, and more againſt modeſty: Therefore it is plain that it was but a local alterable Law: The ſame is to be ſaid of not eating things ſtrangled and blood, which was occaſioned by the offence of the Jews; and other the like. This is the caſe in almoſt all Precepts about the external worſhipping geſtures: The thing that God commandeth univerſally is a humble reverent adoration of him by the Mind and Body. Now the adoration of the Mind is ſtill the ſame; but the bodily expreſſion altereth according to the cuſtom of Countries: In moſt Countries kneeling or proſtration are the expreſſions of greateſt veneration and ſubmiſſion: In ſome few Countries it is more ſignified by ſitting with the Face covered with their Hands: In ſome it is ſignified beſt by ſtanding: Kneeling is ordinarily moſt fit, becauſe it is the moſt common ſign of humble Reverence: But where it is not ſo, it is not fit. The ſame we muſt ſay of other geſtures and of habits: The Women among the Corinthians were not to go uncovered becauſe of the Angels, 1 Cor. 11. 10. And yet in ſome places where long Hair or covering may have a contrary ſignification, the caſe may be contrary. The very fourth Commandment however it was a perpetual Law as to the proportion of time, yet was alterable as to the ſeventh Day. Thoſe which I call Univerſal Laws, ſome call Moral: But that's no term of diſtinction;

but signifieth the common nature of all Laws, which are for the governing of our Manners. Some call them Natural Laws, and the other Positive: But the truth is, there are some Laws of Nature which are Universal, and some that are particular, as they are the Result of Universal or Particular Nature: And there are some Laws of Nature that are perpetual, which are the result of an unaltered Foundation: And there are some that are Temporary, when it is some Temporary alterable thing in Nature from whence the Duty doth result: So there are some Positive Laws that are Universal or unalterable, (during this World) and some that are local, particular, or temporary only.

☞ See the Advertisement before my Book against Infidelity.

Dir. 13. See Mr. Truman's Book of Natural and Moral Impotency.

§. 24. Direct. 13. Remember that whatever duty you seem obliged to perform, the obligation still supposeth that it is not naturally impossible to you, and therefore you are bound to do it as well as you can: And when other Mens force, or your natural disability hindreth you from doing it as you would, you are not therefore disobliged from doing it all: But the total omission is worse than the defective performance of it, as the defective performance is worse than the doing of it more perfectly. And in such a case the Defects which are utterly involuntary are none of yours imputatively at all, but his that hindreth you (unless as some other Sin might cause that.) As if I were in a Country where I could have liberty to read and pray but not to preach, or to preach only once a Month and no more: It is my duty to do so much as I can do, as being much better than nothing, and not to forbear all, because I cannot do all.

Obj. 1. Object. But you must forbear no part of your duty? Answ. True: But nothing is my Duty which is naturally impossible for me to do. Either I can do it, or I cannot: If I can I must (supposing it a Duty in all other respects) but if I cannot I am not bound to it.

Object. 2. Object. But it is not suffering that must deter you, for that is a carnal reason: and your suffering may do more good than your preaching. Answ. Suffering is considerable either as a pain to the Flesh, or as an unresistable hindrance of the Work of the Gospel: As it is meerly a pain to the Flesh, I ought not to be deterred by it from the Work of God: But as it forcibly hindreth me from that Work, (as by Imprisonment, Death, cutting out the Tongue, &c.) I may lawfully foresee it, and by lawful means avoid it, when it is sincerely for the Work of Christ, and not for the saving of the Flesh. If Paul foresaw that the preaching of one more Sermon at Damascus was like to hinder his preachiug any more, because the Jews watch'd the Gates Day and Night to kill him, it was Paul's Duty to be let down by the Wall in a Basket, and to escape, and preach elsewhere, Acts 9. 25. And when the Christians could not safely meet publickly they met in secret, as Joh 19. 38. Acts 12. 12. &c. Whether Paul's suffering at Damascus for preaching one more Sermon, or his preaching more elsewhere, was to be chosen, the interest of Christ and the Gospel must direct him to resolve: That which is best for the Church, is to be chosen.

Dir. 14. §. 25. Direct. 14. Remember that no material duty is formally a duty at all times: That which is a duty in its season, is no duty out of season. Affirmative Precepts bind not to all times, (except only to habits, or the secret intention of our ultimate end, so far as is sufficient to animate and actuate the means, while we are waking and have the use of reason.) Praying and Preaching that are very great Duties, may be so unseasonably performed as to be Sins: If forbearing a Prayer or Sermon or Sacrament one Day or Month, be rationally like to procure your Help or Liberty to do it afterward, when that once or few times doing it were like to hinder you from doing it any more, it would be your Duty then to forbear it for that time (unless in some extraordinary case:) For even for the life of an Ox or an Ass, and for Mercy to Mens Bodies, the rest and holy work of a Sabbath might be interrupted; much more for the Souls of many. Again I warn you, as you must not pretend the interest of the end against a peremptory absolute Command of God, so must you not easily conclude a Command to be absolute and peremptory to that which certainly contradicts the End: Nor easily take that for a Duty which certainly is no means to that good which is the end of Duty, or which is against it. Though yet no seeming aptitude as a means, must make that seem a Duty, which the prohibition of God hath made a Sin.

§. 26. Direct. 15. It is ever unseasonable to perform a lesser duty of Worship, when a greater should be done: Therefore it much concerneth you to be able to discern when two Duties are inconsistent, which is then the greater and to be preferred: In which the Interest of the end must much direct you: That being usually the greatest which hath the greatest tendency to the greatest good. Dir. 15.

§. 27. Direct. 16. Pretend not one part of God's Worship against another, when all in their place and order may be done. Set not Preaching and Praying against each other: Nor publick and private Worship against each other: Nor internal Worship against external; but do all. Dir. 16

§. 28. Direct. 17. Let not an inordinate respect to Man, or common custom be too strong a Byas to pervert your judgments from the Rule of Worship: Nor yet any groundless prejudice make you distaste that which is not to be disliked. The Error on these two extreams doth fill the World with Corruption and Contentions about the worship of God. Among the Papists, and Russians and other ignorant sort of Christians, abundance of Corruptions are continued in God's Worship by the meer power of Custom, Tradition and Education: And all seemeth right to which they have been long used: And hence the Churches in South, East and West continue so long overspread with Ignorance and refuse Reformation. And on the other side meer Prejudice makes some so much distaste a prescribed form of Prayer, or the way of Worship which they have not been used to, and which they have heard some good Men speak against, whose judgments they highliest esteemed, that they have not room for sober impartial reason to deliberate, try and judge. Factions have engaged most Christians in the World into several Parties, whereby Satan hath got this great advantage, that instead of worshipping God in Love and Concord, they lay out their zeal in an envious, bitter, censorious, uncharitable reproaching the manner of each others Worship. And because the interest of their Parties requireth this, they think the interest of the Church and Cause of God requireth it: And that they do God Service when they make the Religion of other Men seem odious: When as among most Christians in the World, the errors of their modes of Worship are not so great as the adverse Parties represent them (except only the two great Crimes of the Popish Worship: 1. That it's not understood, and so is Soulless. 2. They worship Bread as God himself, which I am not so able as willing to excuse from being Idolatry.) Judge not in such Cases by Passion, Partiality and Prejudice. Dir. 17. Majus fidei impedimentum ex inveterati consuetudine proficiscitur: Ubique consuetudo magnas vires habet; sed in barbaris longe maximas: quippe ubi rationis est minimum, ibi consuetudo radices profundissimas agit. In omni natura motio est diuturnior ac vehementior, quo magis est idonea determinata. Jos. Acosta de Ind. l. 2. p. 249. See Bishop Jer. Taylor's late Book against Popery.

§. 29. Direct. 18 Yet judge in all such Controversies with that reverence and charity which is due to the Universal and the Primitive Church. If you find any thing in God's Worship which the primitive or universal Church agreed in, you may be sure that it is nothing but what is consistent with Dir. 18.

acceptable Worship: For God never rejected the Worship of the primitive or universal Church. And it is not so much as to be judged erroneous without great deliberation and very good proof. We must be much more suspicious of our own understandings.

Dir. 19. § 30. Direct. 19. In circumstances and modes of Worship not forbidden in the Word of God, affect not singularity, and do not easily differ from the practice of the Church in which you hold Communion, nor from the commands or directions of your lawful Governours. It's true if we are forbidden with Daniel to pray, or with the Apostles to speak any more in the Name of Christ, or are commanded as the Three Witnesses, Dan. 3. To worship Images, we must rather obey God than Man; and so in case of any Sin that is commanded us: But in case of meer different modes and circumstances and order of Worship, see that you give authority and the consent of the Church where you are their due.

Dan. 3. Act. 4. 17, 18. & 5. 28.

Dir. 20. §. 31. Direct. 20. Look more to your own Hearts than to the abilities of the Ministers, or the Ceremonies or Manner of the Churches Worship in such lesser things. It is Heart-work and Heaven-work that the sincere Believer comes about; and it is the corruption of his Heart that is the heaviest Burden, which he groaneth under with the most passionate Complaints: A hungry Soul, enflamed with Love to God and Man, and tenderly sensible of the excellency of common Truths and Duties, would make up many defects in the manner of publick Administration, and would get nearer God in a defective imperfect mode of Worship, than others can do with the greatest helps: When Hypocrites find so little work with their Hearts and Heaven, that they are taken up about Words and Forms, and Ceremonies and external Things, applauding their own way, and condemning other Mens, and serving Satan under pretence of worshipping God.

CHAP. III.

Directions about the Christian Covenant with God, and Baptism.

§. 1. THough the first Tome of this Book is little more than an explication of the Christian Covenant with God, yet being here to speak of Baptism as a part of God's Worship, it is needful that I briefly speak also of the Covenant it self.

§. 2. Direct. 1. It is a matter of great importance that you well understand the nature of the Christian Covenant, what it is. I shall therefore here briefly open the nature of it, and then speak of the Reasons of it: And then of the solemnizing it by Baptism, and next of renewing it, and lastly of our keeping it.

The Covenant what?

§. 3. The Christian Covenant is a Contract between God and Man, through the Mediation of Jesus Christ, for the return and reconciliation of Sinners unto God, and their Justification, Adoption, Sanctification and Glorification by him, to his Glory.

§. 4. Here we must first consider, who are the Parties in the Covenant: 2. What is the matter of the Covenant on God's Part: 3. What is the matter on Man's Part: 4. What are the terms of it propounded on God's Part. 5. Where and how he doth express it. 6. What are the necessary Qualifications on Man's Part. 7. And what are the Ends and Benefits of it.

§. 5. I. The Parties are GOD and MAN: GOD the FATHER, SON and HOLY GHOST on the one part, and REPENTING BELIEVING SINNERS on the other part. Man is the party that needeth it; but God is the party that first offereth it: Here note, 1. That God's part of the Covenant is made Universally and Conditionally with all Mankind (as to the tenour enacted,) and so is in Being before we were born. 2. That it is not the Father, Son and Holy Ghost considered simply as Persons in the Godhead; but as related to Man for the ends of the Covenant. 3. That it is only Sinners that this Covenant is made with, because the Use of it is for the Restoration of those that broke a former Covenant in Adam. It is a Covenant of Reconciliation, and therefore supposeth an Enmity antecedent. 4. When I say that it is repenting and believing Sinners that are the Party, I mean, 1. That taking the Covenant in its first Act, it is Repentance and Faith themselves that are the Act, and are our very Covenanting. But taking the Covenant in its external Expression, so it is a repenting believing Sinner that must take it, it being but the expression of his Repentance and Faith, by an explicite contract with God. 5. Note, that though God's Covenant be by one Universal Act, (of which more anon,) yet Mans is to be made by the several acts of the individual Persons each one for himself, and not by the Acts of Societies only.

§ 6. II. The matter of the Covenant on God's Part is in general, that He will be our God: More particularly, that God the Father will be our Reconciled God and Father in Jesus Christ; that God the Son will be our Saviour; and God the Holy Ghost will be our Sanctifier. And the Relation of a God to us essentially containeth these three parts: 1. That as on the title of Creation and Redemption he is our Owner, so he doth take us as his own peculiar People: 2. That as he hath title to be our Absolute King or Governour, so he doth take us as his Subjects: 3 That he will be our Grand Benefactor and Felicity, or our most Loving Father (which comprizeth all the rest.) And as he will be thus related to us, so he will do for us, all that these Relations do import. As, 1. He will do all that belongeth to a Creator for his Creature, in our preservation and supplies. 2. He will save us from our Sins, and from his Wrath and Hell. 3. And he will sanctifie us to a perfect Conformity to our Head. Also, 1. He will use and defend us as his own peculiar ones: 2. He will govern us by a Law of Grace and Righteousness: 3. He will make us fully happy in his Love for ever.

§. 7. III. The Matter on Man's part of the Covenant is, 1 In respect of the Terminus à quo, that we will forsake the Flesh, the World and the Devil as they are adverse to our Relations and Duties to God: 2. In regard of the Terminus ad quem, that we will take the Lord for our God: and more particularly, 1. That we do take God the Father for our Reconciled Father in Jesus Christ, and do give up our selves to him as Creatures to their Maker. 2. That we do take Jesus Christ for our Redeemer, Saviour, and Mediator, as our High-Priest, and Prophet, and King, and do give up our selves to him as his redeemed ones to be reconciled to God, and saved by him. 3. That we do take the Holy Ghost for our Regenerater and Sanctifier, and do give up our selves to be perfectly renewed and sanctified by him, and by his operations carried on to God in his holy Service. Also. 1. That we do take God for our Absolute Lord or Owner, and do give up our selves to him as his own. 2. That we take him for our Universal Sovereign Governour, and do give up our selves unto him as his Subjects. 3. That we do take him for our most bountiful Benefactor, and loving Father, and Felicity, and do give up our selves to him as his his Children, to ſeek him, and pleaſe him, and perfectly to Love him, Delight in him, and Enjoy him for ever in Heaven as our Ultimate End. And in conſenting to theſe Relations, we Covenant to do the Duties of them in Sincerity.

§ 8. IV. The Terms or Conditions which God requireth of Man in his Covenant are Conſent, and Fidelity or Performance: He firſt conſenteth conditionally, if we will conſent: And he conſenteth to be actually our God, when we conſent to be his People: So that as bare Conſent, without any performance doth found the Relation between Husband and Wife, Maſter and Servant, Prince and People; but the ſincere performance of the Duties of the Relation which we conſent to, are needful afterward to continue the Relation, and attain the Benefits and Ends; ſo is it alſo between God and Man. We are his Children in Covenant as ſoon as we conſent; but we ſhall not be glorified but on Condition of ſincere Performance and Obedience.

§. 9. V. Gods Covenant with Man is nothing elſe but the Univerſal Promiſe in the Goſpel; and (to the Solemnization,) the Declaration, and Application, and ſolemn Inveſtiture or Delivery by his authorized Miniſters. 1. The Goſpel as it relateth the Matters of Fact in and about the Work of our Redemption, is a Sacred Hiſtory: 2. As it containeth the Terms on which God will be ſerved, and commandeth us to obey them for our Salvation, it is called The Law of Chriſt or Grace. 3. As it containeth the Promiſe of Life and Salvation conditionally offered, it is called Gods Promiſe, and Covenant, (viz. on his part, as it is Propoſed only.) 4. When by our Conſent the Condition is ſo far performed, or the Covenant accepted, then Gods Conditional Univerſal Promiſe or Covenant, becometh actual and particular as to the Effect; and ſo the Covenant becometh Mutual between God and Man: As if a King make an Act or Law of Pardon and Oblivion, to a Nation of Rebels, ſaying, Who ever cometh in by ſuch a Day, and confeſſeth his fault, and ſueth out his Pardon, and promiſeth Fidelity for the future ſhall be pardoned: This Act is a Law in one reſpect, and it is an Univerſal Conditional Pardon of all thoſe Rebels: Or a Promiſe of Pardon; and an offer of Pardon to all that it is revealed to: But it is an Actual Pardon to thoſe that come in, and conferreth on them the Benefits of the Act as if they were named in it, and is their very Title to their Pardon, of which their Conſent is the Condition; and the Condition being performed, the Pardon or Collation of the Benefit becometh particular and actual, without any new act; it being the ſenſe of the Law it ſelf, or Conditional Grant, that ſo it ſhould do. So as to the reality of the Internal Covenant-intereſt and benefits, Juſtification and Adoption, it is ours by vertue of this Univerſal Conditional Covenant, when we perform the Condition. But as to our Title in foro Eccleſiæ, and the due Solemnization and Inveſtiture, it is made ours when Gods Miniſter applieth it to us in Baptiſm by his Commiſſion. As the Rebel that was fundamentally pardoned by the Act of Oblivion, muſt yet have his Perſonal Pardon delivered him by the Lord Chancellor under the Great Seal. In this ſenſe Miniſters are the inſtruments of God, not only in declaring us to be pardoned, but in Delivering to us the pardon of our Sins, and ſolemnly inveſting us therein: As an Attorney delivereth Poſſeſſion to one that before had his fundamental Title. Thus God entreth into Covenant with Man

§. 10. VI. The Qualifications of abſolute Neceſſity to the Validity of our Covenant with God in foro interiori are theſe, 1. That we underſtand what we do as to all the Eſſentials of the Covenant: For ignorantis non eſt conſenſus. 2. That it be our own Act, performed by our Natural, or Legal Selves, that is, ſome one that hath Power ſo far to diſpoſe of us (as Parents have of their Children.) 3. That it be deliberate, ſober and rational, done by one that is compos mentis, in his wits, and not in Drunkenneſs, madneſs or incogitancy. 4. That it be ſeriouſly done with a real Intention of doing the thing, and not hiſtrionically, ludicrouſly or in jeaſt. 5. That it be done entirely as to all eſſential Parts; for if we leave out any eſſential Part of the Covenant, it is no ſufficient Conſent: (As to Conſent that Chriſt ſhall be our Juſtifier, but not the Holy Ghoſt our Sanctifier.) 6. That it be a Preſent Conſent to be preſently in Covenant with God: For to Conſent that you will be his Servants to morrow or hereafter, but not yet, is but to purpoſe to be in Covenant with him hereafter, and is no preſent covenanting with him. 7. Laſtly, It muſt be a Reſolved and Abſolute Conſent without any open or ſecret Exceptions or Reſerves.

Quis vero non doleat Baptiſmo pleroſque adultos initio paſſim & noſtro tempore non raro ante perfundi quam Chriſtianam Catechiſin vel mediocriter teneant, neque an flagitioſæ & ſuperſtitioſæ vitæ pœnitentiæ tangantur, neque vero id ipſum quod accipiunt, an velint accipere, ſatis conſtet. Acoſta l. 6. c. 2. p. 520. Niſi petant & inſtent, Chriſtianæ vitæ Profeſſione donandi non ſunt. Idem p. 521. And again, While ignorant or wicked Men do haſten any how, by right or wrong, by guile or force, to make the barbarous People Chriſtians, they do nothing elſe but make the Goſpel a ſcorn, and certainly deſtroy the deſerters of a raſhly undertaken Faith. Id. ibid. p. 522.

§. 11. VII. The Fruits of the Covenant which God reapeth (though he need nothing) is the Pleaſing of his Good and Gracious Will, in the exerciſe of his Love and Mercy, and the Praiſe and Glory of his Grace, in his Peoples Love and Happineſs for ever. The fruits or Benefits which accrew to man are unſpeakable, and would require a Volume competently to open them: Eſpecially that God is our God, and Chriſt, our Saviour, Head, Interceſſour and Teacher, and the Holy Ghoſt is our Sanctifier, and that God will regard us as his own, and will protect us, preſerve us, and provide for us, and will govern us, and be our God and Joy for ever: That he will pardon us, Juſtifie and Adopt us, and Glorifie us with his Son in Heaven.

§. 12. Direct. 2. When you thus underſtand well the Nature of the Covenant, labour to underſtand the ſpecial Reaſons of it. The Reaſons of the Matter of the Covenant you may ſee in the fruits and benefits now mentioned. But I now ſpeak of the Reaſon of it as a Covenant in genere, and ſuch a Covenant in ſpecie. 1. In General, God will have man to receive Life or Death as an Accepter and Keeper, or a Refuſer or Breaker of his Covenant, becauſe he will do it not only as a Benefactor, or Abſolute Lord, but alſo as a Governour, and will make his Covenant to be alſo his Law, and his Promiſe and Benefits to promote obedience. And becauſe he will deal with man as with a free Agent, and not as with a bruit that hath no chooſing and refuſing Power, conducted by Reaſon: Mans Life and Death ſhall be in his own hands, and ſtill depend upon his own will, though God will ſecure his own Dominion, intereſt and ends, and put nothing out of his own Power by putting it into Mans; nor have ever the leſs his own Will, by leaving Man to his own Will. God will at laſt as a Righteous Judge, determine all the World to their final Joy or Puniſhment, according to their own choice while they were in the fleſh, and according to what they have done in the Body whether it be good or evil, Mat. 25 Therefore he will deal with us on Covenant-terms. Dir. 2.

§. 13. 2. And he hath choſen to Rule and Judge men according to a Covenant of Grace, by a Redeemer, and not according to a rigorous Law of works, that his Goodneſs and Mercy may be the fullier manifeſted to the Sons of Men; and that it may be eaſier for Men to Love him, when they have

ſo wonderful demonſtrations of his Love: And ſo that their ſervice here, and their Work and Happineſs hereafter, may conſiſt of Love, to the Glory of his Goodneſs, and the Pleaſure of his Love for ever.

§. 14. Direct. 3. Next underſtand rightly the nature, uſe and end of Baptiſm. Baptiſm is to the mutal Covenant between God and Man, what the ſolemnization of Marriage is to them that do before Conſent; or what the Liſting a Souldier by giving him Colours, and writing his name, is to one that Conſented before to be a Souldier. In my Univerſal Concord, p. 29, 30. I have thus deſcribed it [Baptiſm is a holy Sacrament inſtituted by Chriſt, in which a perſon Profeſſing the Chriſtian faith (or the Infant of ſuch) is Baptized in Water into the Name of the Father, the Son, and Holy Ghoſt, in ſignification and ſolemnization of the Holy Covenant, in which as a Penitent Believer (or the ſeed of ſuch) he giveth up himſelf (or is by the Parent given up) to God the Father, Son and Holy Ghoſt, forſaking the Devil, the World and the Fleſh, and is ſolemnly entered a viſible Member of Chriſt and his Church, a pardoned regenerate Child of God, and an Heir of Heaven.]

§. 15. As the Word [Baptiſm] is taken for the meer Adminiſtration or external Ordinance, ſo the Internal Covenanting or Faith and Repentance of the (adult) Perſon to be baptized, is no eſſential part of it, nor requiſite to the Being of it; but only the Profeſſion of ſuch a Faith and Repentance, and the external entring of the Covenant: But as [Baptiſm] is taken for the Ordinance as performed in all its eſſential parts, according to the true intent of Chriſt in his Inſtitution (that is, in the firſt and proper meaning of the Word;) ſo the Internal Covenanting of a Penitent ſincere Believer is neceſſary to the Being of it. And indeed the Word [Baptiſm] is taken but equivocally or Analogically at moſt, when it is taken for the meer external Adminiſtration and Action: For God doth not inſtitute Worſhip-Ordinances for bodily motion only; when he ſpeaketh to man and requireth Worſhip of man, he ſpeaketh to him as to a Man, and requireth humane Actions from him, even the Work of the Soul, and not the Words of a Parrot, or the motion of a Poppet. Therefore the Word [Baptiſm] in the firſt and proper ſignification, doth take in the inward Actions of the Heart, as well as the outward Profeſſion and Actions. And in this proper ſenſe [Baptiſm is the mutual Covenant between God the Father, Son and Holy Ghoſt, and a penitent Believing ſinner, ſolemnized by the waſhing of Water, in which as a Sacrament of his own appointment God doth engage himſelf to be the God and reconciled Father, the Savi our and the Sanctifier of the Believer, and taketh him for his reconciled Child in Chriſt, and delivereth to him by ſolemn inveſtiture, the pardon of all his Sins, and title to the mercies of this Life and of that which is to Come.] What I ſay in this Deſcription of a Penitent Believer is alſo to be underſtood of the Children of ſuch that are dedicated by them in Baptiſm to God, who thereupon have their portion in the ſame Covenant of Grace.

§. 16. The Word [Baptiſm] is taken in the firſt ſenſe when Simon Magus is ſaid to be Baptized, Act. 28. And when we ſpeak of it only in the eccleſiaſtick ſenſe, as it is true Baptiſm in foro eccleſiæ: But it is taken in the later ſenſe when it is ſpoken of as the compleat ordinance of God, in the ſenſe of the Inſtitution, and as reſpecting the proper ends of Baptiſm, as pardon of ſin and Life Eternal; and in foro cœli.

§. 17. In this full and proper ſenſe it is taken by Chriſt when he ſaith, Mark 16. 16. He that believeth and is Baptized ſhall be ſaved; that is, He that Believeth, and is by Baptiſm entred into the Covenant of God: And in this ſenſe the Ancients took it, when they affirmed that all that were Baptized were Regenerated, pardoned and made the Children of God. And in this ſenſe it is moſt true, that he that is Baptized (that is, is a ſincere Covenanter) ſhall be ſaved if he die in that Condition that he is then in. All that the Miniſter warrantably Baptizeth are ſacramentally Renegerate, and are in foro eccleſiæ members of Chriſt and Children of God and Heirs of Heaven: But it is only thoſe that are ſincerely delivered up in Covenant to God in Chriſt, that are ſpiritually and really Regenerate, and are ſuch as ſhall be owned for Members of Chriſt and Children of God in foro cœli. Therefore it is not unfit that the Miniſter call the Baptized, Regenerate and pardoned Members of Chriſt, and Childdren of God and Heirs of Heaven, ſuppoſing that in foro eccleſiæ they were the due ſubjects of Baptiſm. But if the perſons be ſuch as ought not to be Baptized, the ſin then is not in calling Baptized perſons Regenerated, but in Baptizing thoſe that ought not to have been Baptized, and to whom the ſeal of the Covenant was not due.

Read the Propoſitions of the Synod in New England, and the Defence of them againſt Mr. Davenport about the ſubject of Baptiſm.

§. 18. None ought to be Baptized but thoſe that either perſonally Deliver up themſelves in Covenant to God the Father, Son, and Holy Ghoſt, profeſſing a true Repentance, and faith and conſent to the Covenant; or elſe are thus delivered up and dedicated and entred into Covenant in their Infancy, by thoſe that being Chriſtians themſelves have ſo much Intereſt in them and power of them, that their act may be eſteemed as the Infants act, and legally imputed to them as if themſelves had done it. If any others are unduly Baptized they have hereby no title to the pardon of ſin or Life Eternal, nor are they taken by God to be in Covenant, as having no way conſented to it.

§. 19 Direct 4. When you enter a Child into the Chriſtian Covenant with God, addreſs your ſelves to it as to one of the greateſt Works in the World: As thoſe that know the Greatneſs of the Benefit, of the Duty, and of the Danger. The Benefit to them that are ſincere in the Covenant, is no leſs than to have the pardon of all our ſins, and to have God himſelf to be our God and Father, and Chriſt our Saviour, and the Holy Ghoſt our Sanctifier, and to have title to the Bleſſings of this Life and of that to come. And for the Duty, how Great a Work is it, for a ſinner to enter into ſo ſolemn a Covenant with the God of Heaven, for Reconciliation and Newneſs of Life, and for Salvation? And therefore if any ſhould abuſe God by Hypocriſie, and take on them to conſent to the terms of the Covenant, (for themſelves, or their Children) when indeed they do not, the Danger of ſuch prophaneneſs and abuſe of God muſt needs be great. Do it therefore with that due preparation, reverence and ſeriouſneſs, as beſeemeth thoſe that are tranſacting a buſineſs of ſuch unſpeakable importance with God Almighty. Dir. 4.

§. 20. Direct. 6. Having been entered in your Infancy into the Covenant of God by your Parents, you muſt at years of diſcretion, review the Covenant which by them you made, and renew it perſonally your ſelves; and this with as great ſeriouſneſs, and reſolution, as if you were now firſt to enter and ſubſcribe it, and as if your everlaſting Life or Death, were to depend on the ſincerity of your conſent, and performance. For your Infant Baptiſmal Covenanting will ſave none of you that live to Years of Diſcretion, and do not as heartily own it in their own Perſons, as if they had been now to be baptized. But this I paſs by, having ſaid ſo much of it in my Book of Confirmation. Dir. 5.

of your lives. As, 1. Your first consent must be habitually continued all your days; for if that ceaseth, your Grace and title to the benefits of Gods Covenant ceaseth. 2. This Covenant is virtually renewed in every act of Worship to God: For you speak to him as your God in Covenant, and offer your selves to him as his Covenanted people. 3. This Covenant should be actually renewed frequently in Prayer and Meditation, and other such Acts of Communion with God. 4. Especially when after a fall we beg the pardon of our Sins, and the Mercies of the Covenant, and on Days of Humiliation and Thanksgiving, and in great distresses, or exhilarating Mercies. 5. And the Lord's Supper is an Ordinance instituted to this very end. It is no small part of our Christian diligence and watchfulness, to keep up and renew our Covenant-consent.

Dir. 7. § 22. Direct. 7. And as careful must you be to keep or perform your Covenant, as to enter it, and renew it: Which is done, 1. By continuing our consent, 2. By sincere Obedience, 3. And by perseverance. We do not (nor dare not) promise to obey perfectly, nor promise to be as obedient as the Higher and better sort of Christians, though we Desire both: But to obey sincerely we must needs Promise, because we must needs per orm it.

§ 23. Obedience is sincere, 1. When the radical consent or subjection of the Heart to God in Christ is Habitually and heartily continued. 2. When God's interest in us is most predominant, and his authority and law can do more with us, than any fleshly lust or Worldly interest, or than the authority, word or perswasions of any man whosoever. 3. When we unfeignedly Desire to be perfect, and habitually and ordinarily have a Predominant Love to all that is good, and a hatred to that which is evil, and had rather do our duty than be excused from it, and rather be saved from our sin than keep it.

Dir. 8. § 24. Direct. 8. While you sincerely consent unto the Covenant, live by Faith upon the Promised Benefits of it, believing that God will make Good on his part all that he hath Promised. Take it for your Title to Pardon, Sonship and Eternal Life. O think what a Mercy it is to have God in Covenant with you to be your God, your Father, Saviour, Sanctifier and felicity! And in this continually rejoice.

CHAP. IV.

Directions about the Profession of our Religion to others.

Dir. 1. § 1. Direct. 1. Understand first how great a Duty the Profession of true Religion is, that you may not think as some foolish People, that every Man should conceal his Religion, or keep it to himself. Observe therefore these Reasons following which require it.

infamiam (mentiar; nemo aliud existimet: quin nec [illegible]

[illegible] Ex eo enim quod aliud à se coli dicit quam colit, [illegible] in alterum transferendo, jam non colit quod negavit: Dicimus, & palam dicimus & vobis torquentibus lacerati & cruenti vociferamur, Deum colimus per Christum: Tertul. Apolog. c. 11.

§. 2. 1. Our Tongues and Bodies are made to exercise and shew forth that acknowledgment and adoration of God which is in our Hearts. And as he denieth God with the Heart, who doth not Believe in him and worship him in his Heart; so he denieth God imputatively with his Tongue and Life, who doth not profess and honour him with his Tongue and Life: And so he is a practical Atheist, Isa. 45. 23,24,25. I have sworn by my self: the word is gone out of my mouth in righteousness and shall not return, that to me every knee shall bow, every tongue shall swear; surely shall one say, In the Lord have I righteousness and strength——In the Lord shall all the seed of Israel be justified and shall glory. So Phil. 2. 9, 10, 11. Wherefore God also hath highly exalted him, and given him a name above every name, that at the name of Jesus every knee should bow —— and that every tongue should confess that Jesus Christ is the Lord, to the Glory of God the Father. Isa. 44. 5. One shall say, I am the Lords: and another shall call him by the name of Jacob: and another shall subscribe with his hand unto the Lord, and surname himself by the name of Israel.

§. 3. 2. The publick Assemblies, and Worship of God, are purposely appointed by him, that in them we might make open Profession of our Religion. He that denieth Profession denieth the publick Faith and Worship of the Church, and denieth Baptism and the Lords Supper, which are Sacraments appointed for the solemn Profession of our Faith.

§. 4. 3. Our Profession is needful to our Glorifying God: Men see not our Hearts, nor know whether we believe in God or not, nor what we believe of him, till they hear or see it in our Profession and Actions. Paul's Life and Death was a Profession of Christ, that in his boldness Christ might be magnified in his body, Phil. 1. 20. Matth. 5. 14, 15, 16. Ye are the light of the world! A City that is set on an hill cannot be hid: Neither do men light a candle to put it under a bushel, but on a candlestick, and it giveth light to all that are in the house: Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorifie your Father which is in Heaven.

§. 5. 4. Our Profession is the means of saving others: That which is secret, is no means to profit them. They must see our good Works that they may Glorifie God, Phil. 1. 12, 13, 14.

§. 6. 5. God hath required our open and bold Profession of him, with the strictest commands, and upon the greatest penalties. 1 Pet. 5. 3. Sanctifie the Lord God in your Hearts, and be ready alway to give an answer to every Man that asketh you a reason of the hope that is in you with Meekness and Fear. Rom. 10. 9, 10. If thou shalt confess with thy Mouth the Lord Jesus, and shalt believe in thy Heart that God hath raised him from the Dead, thou shalt be saved: For with the heart man believeth unto Righteousness, and with the mouth confession is made unto Salvation. Mark. 8. 38. Whosoever shall be ashamed of me and of my Words, in this 2 Tim. adulterous and sinful Generation, of him also shall the Mat. 10 Son of Man be ashamed, when he cometh in the Glory of 32, 33. his father with the holy Angels. Luk. 9.2

§. 7. Direct. 2. Next, Understand what it is in Dir. 2 Religion that you most principally Profess. It is not 1 Cor. 8 every lesser truth, much lets every opinion of your 2 Cor. 1 own, in which you are confident that you are wiser Rom. 1 than your Brethren. This is the meaning of Rom. 1 Tim. 14. 22. Hast thou faith? Have it to thy self before God. By [faith] here is not meant the substance of the Christian belief, or any one necessary Article of it. But a Belief of the indifferency of such thing as Paul spake of, in meats and drinks: If thou know these things to be lawful when thy weak brother doth not, and so thou be wiser than he, thank God for thy knowledge, and use it to thy own Salvation, but do not proudly or uncharitably contend for it, and use it uncharitably to the danger of anothers Soul: Much less to the wrong of the Church and Gospel, and the hinderance of greater truths. 2 Tim. 2. 14. Of these things put them in remembrance (that is, of the Saints hope in Gods faithfulness) charging them before the Lord that they strive not about Words to no Profit, but the subverting of the hearers. Yet for the faith we must earnestly contend, Jude 2, 3. So 2 Tim. 2. 23, 24. But foolish and unlearned questions avoid, knowing that they do gender strife. And the servant of the Lord must not strive, but be gentle to all men.

§. 8. But

§. 8. But that which is the chiefest matter of our Profession is, The being and perfections of God himself: His love to Man and power over him, and Mans Subjection and Obligations unto God: The Person Office and Works and Benefits of our Redeemer; with all the Duty that we owe to him in perfect Holiness, and all the hopes that we have in him: The happiness of the Saints, the odiousness of Sin, and the misery of the Wicked: These and such as these are things that we are called to Profess: Yet so as not to deny or renounce the smallest Truth.

§ 9. Direct. 3. Understand also the manner, how we must make Profession of Religion. 1. There is a Professing by Words, and a professing by Actions. 2. There is a solemn Profession by Gods publick Ordinances, and an occasional or privater Profession by Conference, or by our Conversations. And all these ways must Religion be professed.

Dir. 4. §. 10. Direct. 4. Understand also the season of each sort of Profession, that you omit not the season, nor do it unseasonbly 1. Profession by Baptism, Lord's-Supper and Church-assemblies, must be done in their Season, which the Church-guides are the Conductors of. 2. Profession by an innocent, blameless, obedient Life is never out of Season. 3. Profession by private Conference, and by occational Acts of Piety, must be when opportunity inviteth us, and they are likely to attain their Ends. 4. The whole frame of a Believers Life should be so Holy and Heavenly and mortified and above the World, as may amount to a serious Profession that he liveth in confident Hope of the Life to come, and may shew the World the difference between a Worldling and an Heir of Heaven; between corrupted Nature and true Grace. The Professors of Godliness must be a peculiar People zealous of 10. good Works, and adorned with them.

Dir. 5 §. 11. Direct. 5. Take special care that your Profession be sincere, and that you be your selves as good as you profess to be. Otherwise, 1. Your Profession will condemn your selves. 2. And it will dishonour the Truth which you deceitfully profess. There can scarce a greater Injury befal a good Cause, than to have a bad and shameful Patron to defend it. Rom. 2. 3. And thinkest thou this O man, that judgest them which do such things, and dost the same, that thou shalt escape the judgment of God. Verse 13. to 25. Thou that makest thy boast of the Law, through breaking the Law dishonourest thou God? For the name of God is blasphemed among the Gentiles through you. ——

Dir. 6. §. 12. Direct. 6. Let not your Profession be so much of your own sincerity, as of God and his Excellencies: Boast not of your selves, but of God and Christ, and the Promise, and the Hope of true Believers: And do it to God's Praise and not for your own. Be sure that in all your Profession of Religion, you be seeking Honour to God, and not unto your selves. And then in this manner he that doubteth of his own sincerity, yet may and must make Profession of Christ and true Religion: When you cannot proclaim the uprightness of your own Hearts, you may boldly proclaim the excellencies of Religion, and the happiness of Saints.

Dir. 7. § 13. Direct. 7. Live upon God alone, and trust his Allsufficiency, and abhor that pusillanimity and basebaseness of Spirit which maketh Men afraid or ashamed openly to own the Truth. Remember the Example of your Lord, who before Pontius Pilate, witnessed a good Confession, 1 Tim. 6. 13. who came for this end John 18. into the World, to bear witness to the Truth. Fear not 37. the Face of Man, whose breath is in his Nostrils, and The Arri- is perishing even while he is threatning. Hunner. in Victore Uticens. p. 414.

Man, thou believest not indeed in Christ: If thou believe not that Heaven will satisfie for all that by scorns or cruelties thou suffer'st from Sinners, thou hast not indeed the Hope of a Believer. And no wonder if thou profess not that which thou believest not: But if thou believe that God is God, and Christ is Christ, and Heaven is Heaven, and the Gospel is true, thou hast enough in thy Belief to secure thee against all the scorns and cruelties of Man, and to tell thee that Christ will bear thy Charges, in all that thou suffer'st for his sake. O what abundance are secretly convinced of the Truth, and their Consciences bear witness to the Wisdom of the Saints, and a holy Life; and yet they dare not openly own and stand to the Truth which they are convinced of for fear of being mockt by the Tongues of the profane, or for fear of losing their Places and Preferments! O wretch, dost thou not tremble when thou art ashamed of Christ, to think of the day when he will be ashamed of thee? Then when he comes in Glory none will be ashamed of him! Then where is the Tongue that mockt him and his Servants? Who then will deride his holy Ways? Then that will be the greatest Glory, which thou art now ashamed of. Canst thou believe that day, and yet hide thy Profession, through cowardly fear or shame of Man? Is Man so great, and is Christ no greater in thine Eyes than so? If he be not more regardable than Man, believe not in him: If he be, regard him more; and let not a worm be preferred before thy Saviour.

§. 14. The difference between them and you is but this, whether we should be Christians hypocritically, in jeast, or in good earnest.

CHAP. V.

Directions about Vows and particular Covenants with God.

Tit. 1. Directions for the right making such Vows and Covenant.

§. 1. Direct. 1. Understand the Nature of a Vow, and the Use to which it is appointed. Dir. 1. What a Vow is.

A Vow is a Promise made to God. 1. It is not a bare Assertion or Negation. 2. It is not a meer Pollicitation; or Expression of the Purpose, or Resolution of the Mind: For he that saith or meaneth no more than [I am purposed or resolved to do this] may upon sufficient Reason do the contrary: For he may change his Mind and Resolution, without any untruth or injury to any. 3. It is not a meer Devoting of a thing to God for the present by actual Resignation. For the present actual Delivery of a thing to sacred Uses is no Promise for the future. Though we usually join them both together, yet Devovere may be separated from Vovere. 4. It must be therefore a Promise, which is, A voluntary obliging ones self to another de futuro for some Good. 5. It is therefore implyed that it be that Act of a Rational Creature, and of one that in the act hath some competent use of Reason, and not a Fool, or Ideot, or mad Man, or a Child that hath not reason for such an Act, no nor of a Brainsick or melancholy Person, who (though he be cætera sanus) is either delirant in that business, or is irresistibly born down and necessitated by his Disease to vow against the sober deliberate Conclusion of his Reason at other times, having at the time of Vowing reason enough to strive against the Act, but not Self-government enough to restrain a passionate melancholy Vow. 6. Whereas some Casuists make Deliberation necessary, it must be understood that to the Being of a Vow so much Deliberation is requisite as may make it a rational human Act, it must be an Act of Reason: But for any further Deliberation, it is necessary only to the well-being, and not to the being of a Vow, and without it it is a Rash Vow, but not No Vow. 7. When we say, it must be a Voluntary Act, the meaning is not that it must be totally and absolutely Voluntary, without any fear or threatning to induce us to it; but only that it be really Voluntary, that is, an act of choice, by a free agent, that considering all things doth choose so to do. He that hath a Sword set to his Breast, and doth Swear or Vow to save his Life, doth do it Voluntarily, as choosing rather to do it, than to die. Man having free will may choose rather to die, than Vow, if he think best: His will may be moved by fear, but cannot be forced by any one, or any means whatsoever. 8. When I say that a Vow is a Promise, I imply that the Matter of it is necessarily some real or supposed good; to be good, or to do good, or not to do evil. Evil may be the matter of an Oath; but it is not properly a Vow, if the matter be not supposed good. 9 It is a promise made to God, that we are now speaking of: Whether the name of a Vow belong to a Promise made only to Man, is a question de nomine which we need not to stop at.

Viris gravibus vehementer displicere animadverti, quod ab Indis testimonium jurejurando exigitur, non conster eos facillime pejerare, utpote qui neque juramenti vim sentiant neque veritatis studio tangantur, sed testimonium eo modo dicant, quo credunt fusci, i gratissimum fore, aut à primo suæ factionis homine edocti sunt. Hos igitur jurare compellere & ipsis exitiosum propter perjuria, &c. Acosta p. 345.

The sorts of Vows.

§. 2. A Vow is either a simple Promise to God, or a Promise bound with an Oath or Imprecation. Some would appropriate the Name of a Vow to this last sort only, (when Men swear they will do this or that.) Which indeed is the most formidable sort of vowing, but the true nature of a Vow is found also in a simple self obliging Promise.

The use of Vows.

§. 3. The true Reason and Use of Vows is but for the more certain and effectual performance of our Duties: Not to make new Laws, and Duties, and Religions for us: But to drive on the backward lingring Soul to do its Duty; and to break over Difficulties and Delays: That by strengthning our Bonds, and setting the Danger before our Eyes, we may be excited to escape it.

The Obligation of Vows.

§ 4 It is a great question, whether our own Vows can add any new obligation to that which before lay upon us from the command of God. Amesius saith (Cas. Conf. l. 4. c. 16.) Non additur propriè in istis nova obligatio, neque augetur in se prior: sed magis agnoscitur & recipitur à nobis: Passivis in istis æque fuimus antea obligati: sed activa recognitione arctius nobis applicatur à nobismetipsis. Others commonly speak of an additional obligation. And indeed there is a double obligation added by a Vow, to that which God before had laid on us, to the Matter of that Vow. Premising this distinction between Obligatio imponentis, a governing Obligation (which is the effect of governing Right or Authority) and obligatio consentientis, a self-obliging by voluntary consent (which is the effect of that Dominion which a rational free agent hath over his own Actions,) I say, 1. He that voweth doth oblige himself who before was obliged by God only. And that a Man hath a power to oblige himself, is discerned by the light of Nature, and is the ground of the Law of Nations, and of humane Converse. And though this is no Divine Obligation, yet it is not therefore none at all. 2. But moreover he that voweth doth induce upon himself a new divine Obligation by making himself the subject of it. For example; God hath said, Honour the Lord with thy substance: This command obligeth me to obey it whether I vow it or not. The same God hath said, Pay thy Vows to the Most High, Psal. 50. 14. And, When thou vowest a Vow to God, defer not to pay it, Eccles. 5. 4. This layeth no obligation upon me till I vow: But when I have vowed it doth: So that now I am under a double divine Obligation, (one to the matter of the Duty, and another to keep my Vow,) and under a Self-obligation of my own Vow. Whence also a greater penalty will be due, if I now offend, than else would have been.

§ 5. Hence you may see what to think of the common determination of Casuists concerning Vows materially sinful, when they say, A Man is not obliged to keep them. It is only thus far true, that God obligeth him not to do that particular thing which he voweth: For God had before forbidden it: And he changeth not his Laws, upon Man's rash Vowings: But yet there is a self-obligation which he laid upon himself to do it: And this self-obligation to a sinful act was it self a Sin, and to be repented of, and not performed: But it bringeth the Person under a double obligation to penalty, as a perjured Person, even God's obligation who bindeth the perjured to penalty, and the obligation of his own consent to the punishment, if there was any Oath or Imprecation in the Vow. If it were true that such a Person had brought himself under no obligation at all, then he could not be properly called Perjured, nor punished as Perjured. But he that sweareth and voweth to do evil (as the Jews to kill Paul) though he ought not to do the thing (because God forbiddeth it) yet he is a perjured Person for breaking his Vow, and deserveth the penalty, not only of a rash Vower, but of one perjured. Thus Error may make a Man sinful and miserable, though it cannot warrant him to sin.

§. 6. Direct. 2. Try well the matter of your Vows, and venture not on them till you are sure that they are not things forbidden: Things sinful or doubtful are not fit matter for a Vow: In asserting, subscribing and witnessing, you should take care, that you know assuredly that the matter be true, and venture not upon that which may prove false: Much more should you take care that you venture not doubtingly in Vows and Oaths. They are matters to be handled with dread and tenderness, and not to be played with, and rashly ventured on, as if it were but the speaking of a common word. Be not rash with thy Mouth, and let not thy heart be hasty to utter any thing before God, Eccles. 5. 2. It is a grievous snare that Men are oft brought into by ignorant and rash Vows. As the case of Jephtha, and Herod, and many another tell us for our warning: An error in such case is much more safely and cheaply discerned before, than afterward. To have a rash Vow, or Perjury to repent of, is to set a Bone in joint, or pull a Thorn out of your very Eye, and who would choose such pain and smart? Suffer not thy mouth to cause thy flesh to sin; neither say thou before the Angel that it was an error: Wherefore should God be angry at thy voice, and destroy the work of thy hands, Eccles. 5. 6. It is a snare to the man who devoureth that which is holy, and after vows to make enquiry, Prov.

Dir. 2.

Vid. Sanderson de Juram. Prælect. 7. Sect. 14. Juramentum oblatum reluctante vel dubitante conscientia non est suscipiendum: 1. Quia quod non est ex fide procedit non est. 2. Quid jurandum est in judicio & quod certe is non facit qui contra conscientiæ suæ judicium facit, &c. ad finem.

Prov. 20. 25. Be careful and deliberate to prevent such Snares.

Dir. 3. § 7. Direct. 3. Vow not in a Passion: Stay till the storm be over: Whether it be anger or desire, or whatever the Passion be, delay and deliberate before you vow: For when Passion is up, the judgment is upon great disadvantage. In your Passion you are apt to be most peremptory and confident when you are most deceived. If it be your Duty to Vow, it will be your duty to morrow when you are calm. If you say, that [Duty must not be delayed, and that you must do it while the Spirit moveth you:] I answer, Was it not as much a Duty before your Passion was kindled as now? It is no sinful delaying of so great a Duty, to stay till you have well proved whether it be of God. If it be the Spirit of Christ that moveth you to it, he will be willing that you deliberate and try it by that Word which the same Spirit hath endited to be your Rule. God's Spirit worketh principally upon the judgment and the will, by settled Convictions, which will endure a rational Tryal: It is liker to be your own Spirit which worketh principally on the Passion, and will not endure the Tryal, nor come into the Light, John 3. 18, 19. Isa. 8. 20.

Dir. 4. §. 8. Direct. 4. Make not a Vow of things indifferent and unnecessary: If they be not good, in a true comparing practical judgment, which considereth all accidents and circumstances, they are no fit matter for a Vow. Some say, [Things indifferent are the fittest matter both for Vows and humane Laws] But either they speak improperly or untruly, and therefore dangerously at the best. If an idle word be a Sin, then an idle action is not a thing to be vowed, because it is not a thing to be done; being as truly a Sin as an idle word. And that which is wholly indifferent is idle; for if it be good for any thing, it is not wholly indifferent. And because it is antecedently useless, it is consequently sinful to be done.

Object. 1. §. 9. Object. 1. But those that say things indifferent may be Vowed, mean not, things useless or unprofitable to any good end; but only those things that are good and useful, but not commanded: Such as are the matter of God's Counsels, and tend to Man's perfection, as to Vow Chastity, Poverty and absolute Obedience.

Answ. There are no such things, as are morally good and not commanded: This is the fiction of Men that have a mind to accuse God's Laws and Government of imperfection, and think sinful Man can do better than he is commanded, when none but Christ ever did so well.

See the fourteenth Article of the Church of England against VoluntaryWorks, over and above God's Commandments, as impious.

Quest. 1. What is moral goodness in any creature and subject, but a conformity to his Rulers will expressed in his Law? And if this Conformity be its very form and being, it cannot be that any thing should be morally good that is not commanded.

Quest. 2. Doth not the Law of God command us to love him with all our Heart, and Soul, and Strength, and accordingly to serve him? And is it possible to give him more than all? Or can God come after and counsel us to give him more than is possible!

Quest. 3. Doth not the Law of Nature oblige us to serve God to the utmost of our Power? He that denieth it, is become unnatural, and must deny God to be God, or deny himself to be his rational Creature. For nothing is more clear in nature, than that the Creature who is nothing, and hath nothing but from God, and is absolutely his own, doth owe him all that he is able to do.

Quest. 4. Doth not Christ determine the Case to his Disciples? Luke 17. 10.

5. A middle between Good and Evil in Morality is a contradiction: There is no such thing. For Good and Evil are the whole of Morality: Without these species there is no Morality.

Object. 2. §. 10. Object. 2. It seems then you hold that there is nothing indifferent, which is a Paradox.

Ans. No such matter: There are Thousands and Millions of things that are indifferent; but they are Things Natural only, and not Things Moral. They are indifferent as to Moral Good and Evil, because they are neither: But they are not Indifferentia Moralia: The Indifferency is a Negation of any Morality in them in genere, as well as of both the species of Morality. Whatsoever participateth not of Virtue or Vice, and is not eligible or refusable by a moral agent as such, hath no morality in it. There may be two words so equal as it may be indifferent which you speak; and two Eggs so equal, as that it may be indifferent which you eat: But that is no more than to say, the choosing of one before the other, is not actus moralis: There is no matter of Morality in the choice.

Whether any things be indifferent?

Stoici indifferentia distinguunt: 1. Ea quæ neque ad felicitatem neque ad infelicitatem [illegible] rem [illegible] runt, ut sunt divitiæ, honores [illegible] vires, gloria, &c. Nam & sine his contingit felicem esse; vel rectus felicitatis, vel pravus infelicitatis author sit. [illegible] neque appetitum neque occasionem movent, ut pares vel impares habere capillo [illegible] Laert. in Zenone.

Obj. 3. §. 11. Object 3. But if there may be Things Natural that are indifferent, why not things Moral?

Answ. As Goodness is convertible with Entity, there is no Natural Being but is good: As Goodness signifieth Commodity, there is nothing but is profitable or hurtful, and that is good to one that is hurtful to another: But if it were not so, yet such Goodness or Badness is but accidental to Natural Being; but Moral Goodness and Badness is the whole Essence of Morality.

Obj. 4. § 12. Object. 4. But doth not the Apostle say, He that marrieth doth well, and he that marrieth not doth better? Therefore all is not Sin, which is not best.

Whether Maarying be Indifferent?

Answ. The Question put to the Apostle to decide, was about Marrying or not Marrying, as it belonged to all Christians in general, and not as it belonged to this or that individual Person by some special reason differently from others. And so in respect to the Church in general, the Apostle determineth that there is no Law binding them to marry, or not to marry: For a Law that is made for many must be suited to what is common to those many. Now Marriage being good for one and not for another, is not made the matter of a common Law, nor is it fit to be so, and so far is left indifferent: But because that to most it was rather a hindrance to good in those times of the Church, than a help, therefore for the present necessity the Apostle calleth marrying, doing well, because it was not against any Universal Law, and it was a state that was suitable to some: But he calls not marrying, doing better, because it was then more ordinarily suited to the ends of Christianity. Now God maketh not a distinct Law for every individual Person in the Church; but one Universal Law for all: And this being a thing variable according to the various Cases of individual Persons, was unfit to be particularly determined by an Universal Law. But if the question had been only of any one individual Person, then the decision would have been thus: Though marrying is a thing not directly commanded or forbidden, yet to some it is helpful as to Moral Ends, to some it is hurtful, and to some it is equal or indifferent, that it is neither discernably helpful nor hurtful: Now by the general Laws or Rules of Scripture, to them that (consideratis considerandis) it is discernably helpful, it is not indifferent, but a Duty: To them that it is discernably hurtful, it is not indifferent, but a Sin: To them that it is neither discernably helpful or hurtful as to Moral Ends, it is indifferent, as being neither Duty nor Sin; for it is not a thing of moral choice or nature at all. But the Light of Nature telleth us that God hath not left it indifferent to Men to hinder themselves, or to help themselves as to Moral Ends: Else why pray we, Lead us not into temptation? And Marriage is so great a help to some, and so great a hurt to others, that no Man can say that it is morally indifferent to all Men in the World: And therefore that being none of the Apostles meaning, it followeth that his meaning is as aforesaid.

Obj. 5. § 13. Object. 5. But there are many things indifferent in themselves, though not as cloathed with all their accidents and circumstances: And these actions being good in their accidents, may be the matter of a Vow.

Answ. True: But those actions are commanded Duties, and not things indifferent as so circumstantiated. It is very few actions in the World that are made simply Duties or Sins, in their simple nature without their circumstances and accidents: The commoneſt matter of all God's Laws, is Actions or Dispositions which are good or evil in their circumstances and accidents. Therefore I conclude, Things wholly indifferent are not to be Vowed.

Dir. 5. §. 14. Direct. 5. It is not every Duty that is the matter of a lawful Vow. Else you might have as many Vows as Duties: Every good thought, and word, and deed might have a Vow. And then every Sin which you commit would be accompanied and aggravated with the guilt of Perjury. And no wise Man would run his Soul into such a Snare. Object. But do we not in Baptism Vow Obedience to God? And doth not Obedience contain every particular duty? Answ. We vow sincere Obedience, but not perfect Obedience. We do not vow that we will never sin, nor neglect a Duty (nor ought we to do so.) So that as sincere Obedience respecteth every known Duty as that which we shall practise in the bent of our Lives, but not in perfect constancy or degree, so far our Vow in Baptism hath respect to all known Duties, but no further.

Dir. 6. § 15. Direct. 6. To make a Vow lawful, besides the goodness of the thing which we Vow, there must be a rational discernable probability, that the Act of Vowing it will do more good than hurt: And this to a wise foreseeing judgment. For this Vowing is not an ordinary worship to be offered to God (except the Baptismal Vow renewed in the Lord's Supper and at other Seasons:) But it is left as an extraordinary Means, for certain ends which cannot by ordinary Means be attained: And therefore we must discern the season, by discerning the necessity or usefulness of it: Swearing is a part of the Service of God, but not of his daily worship, nor frequently and rashly to be used, by any that would not be held guilty of taking the Name of God in vain: And so it is in the case of Vowing. Therefore he that he will make a Lawful Vow, must see before hand, what is the probable Benefit of it, and what is the probable hurt or danger: And without this foresight it must be rash, and cannot be lawful. And therefore no one can make a lawful Vow, but wise foreseeing Persons, and those that advise with such, and are guided by them, if they be not such themselves: Unless in a case where God hath prescribed by his own determining Commands (as in the Covenant of Christianity.) Therefore to one Man the same Vow may be a Sin, that to another may be a Duty: Because one may have more reason for it, or necessity of it, and less danger by it than another. One Man may foresee that Vowing (in case where there is no necessity) may ensnare him either in perplexing Doubts, or Terrors, which will make all his Life after more irregular or uncomfortable. Another Man may discern that he is liable to no such danger.

Amarch. Quest. Roman. 44. Why may not Priests swear? Resp. Is it because an Oath put to free-born men, is as it were the rack and torture offered them? For certain it is that the Soul as well as the Body of the Priest, ought to continue free, and not to be forced by any torture. Or that we must not distrust them in small matters, who are to be believed in great and divine things? Or because the peril of Perjury would reach in common to the whole Common-wealth, if a wicked, and ungodly, and forsworn Person should have the charge and superintendency of the Prayers, Vows and Sacrifices made in behalf of the City? pag. 866.

§. 16. Direct. 7. No Man should pretend danger or scruple against his renewing the Vow of Christianity, or any one essential part of it; viz. To take God the Father, Son and Holy Ghost for my God, and Saviour, and Sanctifier, my Owner, Governour and Father; renouncing the Devil, the World and the Flesh. Because there is an absolute necessity (præcepti & medii) of performing this, and he that doth it not shall certainly be damned: And therefore no worse matter can stand up against it: He that denieth it, giveth up himself despairingly to Damnation. Yet I have heard many say, I dare not promise to turn to God, and live a holy Life, lest I break this Promise, and be worse than before: But dost thou not know, that it must be both made and kept, if thou wilt be saved? Wilt thou choose to be damned, for fear of worse? There is but one Remedy for thy Soul, and all the hope of thy Salvation lyeth upon that alone: And wilt thou refuse that one, for fear lest thou cast it up and die? When thou shalt certainly die unless thou both take it, and keep it, and digest it. Dir. 7.

§. 17. Direct. 8. About particular sins and duties deliberate resolutions are the ordinary means of governing our Lives; and Vows must not be used where these will do the work without them. For extraordinary means must not be used, when ordinary will serve turn. Nor must you needlesly draw a double guilt upon your selves in case of sinning. And in mutable or doubtful cases, a Resolution may be changed, when a Vow cannot: Try therefore what deliberate Resolutions will do, with the help of other ordinary means, before you go any further. Dir. 8.

§. 18. Direct. 9. When ordinary Resolutions and other helps will not serve the turn, to engage the will to the forbearance of a known Sin, or the performance of a known Duty, but temptations are so strong as to bear down all, then it is seasonable to bind our selves by a solemn Vow, so it be cautelously and deliberately done, and no greater danger like to follow. In such a case of necessity, 1. You must deliberate on the benefits and need: 2. You must foresee all the assaults that you are like to have to tempt you to Perjury, that they come not unexpected: 3. You must join the use of all other means for the keeping of your Vows. Dir. 9.

§. 19. Direct. 10. Make not a Law and Religion to your selves by your voluntary Vows which God never made you by his Authority: Nor bind your selves for futurity to all that is a duty at present, where it is possible that the change of things may change your duty. God is our King and Governour and not we our selves: It is not we, but he that must give Laws to us. We have work enough to do of his appointing: We need not make more to our selves, as if he had not given us enough. Vows are not to make us New Duties or Religions, but to further us in the obedience of that which our Lord hath imposed on us. It is a self-condemning Sin of foolish Will-worshippers, to be busie in laying more burdens on themselves, when they know, they cannot do so much as God requireth of them. Yea, some of them murmur at God's Laws as too strict, and at the observers of them as too precise, (though they come far short of what is their Duty;) and yet will be cutting out more work for themselves. Dir. 10.

§ 20. And it is not enough that what you Vow be your Duty at the present, but you must bind your selves to it by Vows no longer than it shall remain your Duty. It may be your Duty at the present to live a single Life: But if you will Vow therefore that you will never marry, you may bind your selves to that which may prove your Sin: You know not what alterations may befal you in your Body or Estate, that may invite you to it. Are you sure that no change shall make it necessary to you? Or will you presume to bind God himself by your Vows, that he shall make no such alteration? Or if you were never so ſo confident of your own unchangeableneſs, you know not what fond and violent affections another may be poſſeſſed with, which may make an alteration in your Duty. At the preſent it may be your Duty to live retiredly, and avoid Magiſtracy and publick Employments: But you may not vow it therefore for continuance: For you know not but God may make ſuch Alterations, as may make it ſo great and plain a Duty, as without flat Impiety or Cruelty, you cannot refuſe: Perhaps at the preſent it may be your Duty to give half your yearly Revenews to charitable and pious uſes: But you muſt not therefore vow it for continuance (without ſome ſpecial cauſe to warrant it:) For perhaps the next Year it may be your Duty to give but a fourth or a tenth part, or none at all, according as the Providence of God ſhall diſpoſe of your Eſtate and you. Perhaps God may impoſe a clear neceſſity on you, of uſing your eſtate ſome other way.

Dir. 11. §. 21. Direct. 11. If you be under Government, you may not lawfully vow without your Governours conſent, to do any thing which you may not lawfully do without their conſent, in caſe you had not Vowed it. For that were, 1. Actually to diſobey them at the preſent, by making a Vow without the direction and conſent of your Governours: 2. And thereby to bind your ſelves to diſobey them for the future, by doing that without them, which you ſhould not do without them. But if it be a thing that you may do, or muſt do, though your Governours forbid you, then you may Vow it though they forbid you, (if you have a call from the neceſſity of the Vow.)

Dir. 12. § 22. Direct. 12. If Oaths be commanded us by Uſurpers that have no authority to impoſe them, we muſt not take them in formal obedience to their commands. For that were to own their Uſurpation and encourage them in their Sin: If we owe them no obedience in any thing, we muſt not obey them in ſo great a thing. Or if they have ſome authority over us in other matters, but none in this (as a Conſtable hath no power to give an Oath) we muſt not obey them in the point where they have no authority. But yet it is poſſible that there may be other reaſons that may make it our duty to do it, though not as an act of formal Obedience: As I may take an Oath when a Thief or Murderer requireth it, not to obey him, but to ſave my Life. And if any Man command me to do that which God commandeth me, I muſt do it, becauſe God commandeth it.

Dir. 13. §. 23. Direct. 13. If a lawful Magiſtrate impoſe an Oath or Vow upon you, before you take it you muſt conſult with God, and know that it is not againſt his Will. God muſt be firſt obeyed in all things: But eſpecially in matters of ſo great moment, as Vows and Promiſes.

§. 24. Queſt. 1. What if I be in doubt whether the Oath or Promiſe impoſed be lawful! Muſt I take it or not? If I take an Oath which I judge unlawful or falſe, I am a perjured or a prophane Deſpiſer of God: And if a Man muſt refuſe all Oaths or Promiſes, which the Magiſtrate commandeth, if he do but doubt whether they be lawful, then Government and Juſtice will be injured, while every Man that hath ignorance enough to make him dubious, ſhall refuſe all Oaths and Promiſes of Allegiance, or for witneſs to the truth.

See before Chap. 3. Gr. Dir. 10. pag. 106. &c.

§. 25. 1. The Queſtion de eſſe muſt firſt be reſolved, before the Queſtion of Knowing or Opinion. Either the thing is really lawful which is doubted of, or denied, or it is not. If it be not, then it is a Sin to ſwear or promiſe to it; and here there is no caſe of error. But if it be really lawful, and the vowing of it lawful, then the obligation that lies upon this Man are theſe, and in this order. 1. To have a humble ſuſpicion of his own underſtanding: 2. To ſearch, and learn and uſe all means to diſcern it to be what it is. 3. In the uſe of theſe means to acknowledge the truth: 4. And then to promiſe and obey accordingly. Now this being his duty, and the order of his duty, you cannot ſay that he is not obliged to any one part of it, though he be obliged to do it all in this order, and therefore not to do the laſt firſt without the former: For though you queſtion an hundred times, [What ſhall he do as long as he cannot ſee the truth?] The Law of God is ſtill the ſame: And his error doth not diſoblige him: Nemini debetur commodum ex ſua culpa. So many of theſe acts as he omitteth, ſo much he ſinneth: It is his Sin if he obey not the Magiſtrate; and it is his Sin that he miſjudgeth of the thing, and his Sin that he doth not follow the uſe of the means till he be informed. So that his erring Conſcience entangleth him in a neceſſity of ſinning: But diſobligeth him not at all from his obedience. 2. But yet this is certain, that in ſuch a caſe, he that will ſwear becauſe Man biddeth him, when he taketh it to be falſe, is a perjured prophane Deſpiſer of God; but he that forbeareth to ſwear for fear of ſinning againſt God, is guilty only of a pardonable involuntary weakneſs.

§. 26. Direct. 14. Take heed leſt the ſecret prevalency of carnal ends or intereſt, and of fleſhly wiſdom do byaſs byaſs your judgment, and make you ſtretch your conſciences to take thoſe Vows or Promiſes, which otherwiſe you would judge unlawful and refuſe. Never good cometh by following the reaſonings and intereſts of the fleſh, even in ſmaller matters: Much leſs in caſes of ſuch great importance. Men think it fitteth them at the preſent, and doth the buſineſs which they feel moſt urgent; but it payeth them home with troubles and perplexities at the laſt: It is but like a draught of cold Water in a Feaver: You have ſome preſent charr to do, or ſome ſtrait to paſs through, in which you think that ſuch an Oath, or Promiſe, or Profeſſion would much accommodate you; and therefore you venture on it, perhaps to your perdition: It is a fooliſh courſe to cure the parts (yea, the more ignoble parts) with the neglect and detriment of the whole: It is but like thoſe that cure the Itch by anointing themſelves with Quickſilver: Which doth the charr for them, and ſendeth them after to their Graves, or caſteth them into ſome far worſe Diſeaſe. Remember how deceitful a thing the Heart is, and how ſubtilly ſuch poiſon of carnal ends will inſinuate it ſelf. O how many Thouſands hath this undone! That before they are aware, have their Wills firſt charmed and inclined to the forbidden thing, and fain would have it to be lawful; and then have brought themſelves to believe it lawful, and ſo to commit the Sin; and next to defend it; and next to become the Champions of Satan, to fight his Battles, and vilifie and abuſe them, that by holy wiſdom and tenderneſs have kept themſelves from the deceit.

Tit. 2. Directions againſt Purjury and Perfidiouſneſs: And for keeping Vows and Oaths.

Dir. 1. See Tom. 1. Ch. 9. Ii. 2 & 3.

§. 1. Direct. 1. BE ſure that you have juſt apprehenſions of the Greatneſs of the ſin of Perjury. Were it ſeen to men in its proper ſhape, it would more affright them from it than a ſight of the Devil himſelf would do. I ſhall ſhew it you in part in theſe particulars.

The heinouſneſs of Perjury. See Caſaubons Exer. p. 202.

§. 2. 1. It containeth a Lye, and hath all the malignity in it which I before ſhewed to be in Lying, with much more. 2. Perjury is a denial or contempt of God. He that appealeth to his Judgment by an Oath, and doth this in falſhood, doth ſhew that either he believeth not that there is * a God, or that he believeth not that he is the righteous Governour of the World, who will juſtly determine all the cauſes that belong to his Tribunal. The Perjured Perſon doth as it were bid defiance to God; and ſetteth him at nought, as one that is not able to be avenged on him. 3. Perjury is a calling for the Vengeance of God againſt your ſelves. You invite God to plague you, as if you bid him do his worſt: You appeal to him for judgment in your guilt, and you ſhall find that he will not hold you guiltleſs. Imprecations againſt your ſelves are implyed in your Oaths: He that ſweareth doth ſay in effect, Let God judge and puniſh me as a perjured Wretch, if I ſpeak not the Truth. And it is a dreadful thing to fall into the hands of the Living God, Heb. 10. 31. For Vengeance is his and he will recompence, v. 30. And when he judgeth the wicked, he is a Conſuming fire, Heb. 12. 29. 4. Perjury and perfidiouſneſs is a ſin that leaveth the conſcience no eaſe of an extenuation or excuſe; but it is ſo heinous a villany, that it is the ſeed of ſelf-tormenting deſperation. Some ſins conſcience can make ſhift a while to hide, by ſaying, [It is a Controverſie:] and [Many wiſe men are of another mind] But perjury is a ſin which Heathens and Infidels bear as free a Teſtimony againſt, (in their way) as Chriſtians do. Some ſins are ſhifted off by ſaying, [They are little ones.] But † Chriſtians and Heathens are agreed that Perjury is a ſin almoſt as great as the Devil can teach his ſervants to commit. Saith Plutrach, * He that deceiveth his enemy by an Oath, doth confeſs thereby that he feareth his enemy, and deſpiſeth God. Saith Cicero, the penalty of Perjury is deſtruction from God and ſhame from Man. Saith Q. Curtius, Perfidiouſneſs is a Crime which no Merits can mitigate. Read Cic. de Offic. l. 3. Saith Ariſtotle, He that will extenuate an Oath, muſt ſay, that thoſe villanous wretches that think God ſeeth not, do think alſo to go away with their Perjury unpuniſhed. In a word, the Heathens commonly take the revenge of Perjury to belong in ſo ſpecial a manner to the Gods, that they conclude that Man, and uſually his Poſterity, to be deſtinated to ruin, that is Perjured and perfidious: In ſo much that it is † written of Ageſilaus (and many others) that when their enemies were Perjured and broke their Covenants, they took it for a ſign of Victory, and the beſt prognoſtick of their ſucceſs againſt them. Plutrach recorded this ſtory of Clemens, that having made a truce for ſeven Days with the Argives, he ſet upon them, and killed and took many of them in the night; and when he was charged with perfidiouſneſs, anſwered, I made not a truce with them for ſeven Nights, but for ſeven Days: But the Women fetcht Arms out of the Temples of the Gods, and repulſed him with ſhame, and he ran mad, and with his Sword did mangle his own body, and dyed in a moſt hideous manner. When Conſcience is awakened to ſee ſuch a ſin as Perjury, no wonder if ſuch run mad, or hang themſelves; as perfidious Achitophel and Judas did. No doubt but Everlaſting horror and deſperation will be the end of ſuch, if true Converſion do not prevent it. 5. It is * a ſin that ruineth families and ſocieties, like fire that being kindled in the thatch, never ſtoppeth till it have conſumed all the Houſe. Though the curſe of the Lord is in the Houſe of the Wicked, (but he bleſſeth the Habitation of the Juſt, Prov. 3. 33.) Yet among all the wicked, there are few ſo commonly marked out with their families to ſhame and ruine, as the Perjured. What ever Nation is ſtigmatized with a fides Punica vel Græca, with the brand of Perjury, it is not only their greateſt infamy, but like [Lord have Mercy on us] written on your doors, a ſign of a deſtroying plague within. Saith Pauſanias, The fraud that is committed by Perjury, falleth upon Poſterity. 6. Perjury and perfidiouſneſs are virtually Treaſon, Rebellion and Murder againſt Kings and Magiſtrates, and no more to be favoured in a Kingdom, by a King that loveth his Life and ſafety, than the Plague in a City, or poiſon to the body. Triſtiſſimum & domeſticum regibus omnibus pharmacum, liberorum, amicorum & exercitus perfidia, ſaith Appian. What ſecurity have Princes of their Crowns or lives, where Oaths and Covenants ſeem not obligatory? There is then nothing left but fear of Puniſhment to reſtrain the violence of any one that would do them miſchief: And Craft or ſtrength will eaſily break the bonds of fear. He that would diſſolve the bond of Oaths, and teach men to make light of Perjury, is no more to be endured in a Kingdom, than he that openly inviteth the Subjects to kill their King, or riſe up in rebellion againſt him. If he that breaketh the leaſt of Gods commands, and teacheth Men ſo to do, ſhall be called Leaſt in the Mat. 5. 29. Kingdom of God, then ſurely he that breaketh the Great commands by the moſt odious ſin of Perjury, and teacheth Men ſo to do, ſhould neither be Great, nor any thing, in the Kingdoms of men. 7. Perjury is the poyſon of all Societies, and of friendſhip, and of humane converſe, and turneth all into a ſtate of enmity or hoſtility, and teacheth all Men to live together like foes. He that is not to be believed when he ſweareth, is never to be believed: And when Oaths and Covenants ſignifie nothing, and no Man can believe another, what are they but as ſo many foes to one another? How can there be any Relations of Governours and Subjects? Of Husband and Wife? Of Maſter and Servants? Or how can there be any trading or commerce, when there is no truſt? Perjury diſſolveth all ſocieties by looſening all the bonds of aſſociation: Well might Dionyſ. Halic. l. 3. ſay, (The Perfidious are far worſe than open enemies, and worthy of far greater Puniſhment. For a man may more eaſily avoid the ambuſhments of foes, and repel their aſſaults, then eſcape the perfidiouſneſs of ſeeming Friends] Saith Val. Max. (l. 9. c. 6.) [Perfidiouſneſs is a hidden and enſnaring miſchief; whoſe effectual force is in lying and deceiving: its fruit conſiſteth in ſome horrid villany; which is ripe and ſure when it hath compaſſed cruelty with wicked Hands; bringeth as great miſchief to Mankind, as fidelity bringeth good and ſafety.] He that teacheth the Doctrine of Perjury and perfidiouſneſs, doth bid every man ſhift for himſelf, and truſt no more his Friend or Neighbour, but all take heed of one another as ſo many Serpents or Wild Beaſts. Lyons and Bears may better be ſuffered to live looſe among men, than thoſe that teach men to make light of Oaths. 8. Thus alſo it deſtroyeth perſonal Love, and teacheth all men to be haters of each other: For it can be no better, when Men become ſuch hateful creatures to each other, as not at all to be credited or ſociably converſed with. 9. Perjury and perfidiouſneſs do proclaim Men deplorate; and ſtigmatize them with this character, that they are Perſons that will ſtick at the commiting of no kind of Villany in the World, further than their fleſhly intereſt hindereth them: No charity bindeth a man to think that he will make Conſcience of Murder, Rebellion, Deceit, Adultry, or any imaginable Wickedneſs, who maketh no Conſcience of Perjury and perfidiouſneſs, Such a perſon alloweth you to judge that if the Temptation ſerve, he will do any thing that the Devil bids him: And that he is virtually a compound of all iniquity, and prepared for every evil Work. 10. Laſtly, As Perjury doth thus diſſolve ſocieties, and turn mankind into enmity with each other, ſo it would make the miſery uncurable, by making even Penitents incredible: Who will believe him, even while he profeſſeth to Repent, that hath ſhewed that when he ſweareth he is not to be believed? He that dare forſwear himſelf, dare lye when he pretendeth Repentance for his Perjury. It muſt be ſome deeds that are more credible than Words and Oaths that muſt recover the credit of ſuch a Mans Profeſſions. If Perjury have violated any Relations, it leaveth the breach almoſt uncurable, becauſe no profeſſions of Repentance or future Fidelity can be truſted. Thus I have partly ſhewed you the Malignity of Perjury and Covenant breaking.

Dir. 2. §. 3. Direct. 2. Be ſure that you make no Vow or Covenant which God hath forbidden you to keep. It is raſh vowing and ſwearing which is the common cauſe of Perjury. You ſhould at the making of your Vow, have ſeen into the bottom of it, and foreſeen all the evils that might follow it, and the Temptations which were like to draw you into Perjury. He is virtually Perjured as ſoon as he hath ſworn, who ſweareth to do that which he muſt not do: The preventive means are here the beſt.

Dir. 3. § 4. Direct. 3. Be ſure you take no Oath or Vow which you are not ſincerely reſolved to perform. They that Swear or Vow with a ſecret reſerve, that rather than they will be ruined by keeping it, they will break it, are Habitually and Reputatively Perjured Perſons, even before they break it: Beſides that, they ſhew a baſe hypocritical profligate Conſcience, that can deliberately commit ſo great a ſin.

Lege diſtinctionem Grotii inter ἐπιορκεῖν & ἐφιορκεῖν, Annot. in Matth. 5. 33. Modern Policy (ſuppoſed Dr. Sanderofts) Prince. 7. 1. Some are frighted into theſe bonds by threats and loſſes, and temporal Concernments, and then they pleaſe themſelves that they ſwear by Dureſs: And ſo are diſengaged: 4. Some are Oath proof, &c.

Dir. 4. §. 5. Direct. 4. See that all fleſhly Worldly intereſt be fully ſubdued to the intereſt of your Souls, and to the will of God. He that at the Heart ſets more by his body than his Soul, and loveth his worldly Proſperity above God, will lye, or ſwear, or forſwear, or do any thing, to ſave that carnal intereſt which he moſt valueth: He that is carnal and worldly at the Heart, is falſe at the Heart: The Religion of ſuch an Hypocrite will give place to his temporal ſafety or commodity, and will carry him no further than the way is fair: It is no wonder that a proud Man, or a worldling will renounce both God and his true felicity for the World, ſeeing indeed he taketh it for his God and his felicity: Even as a Believer will renounce the World for God.

It is one of Solons ſaying, in Laertius, p. 51. Probitatem jure-jurando certiorem habe. What will not an Atheiſtical impious Perſon ſay or ſwear, for advantage?

Dir. 5. § 6 Direct. 5. Beware of inordinate fear of Man, and of a diſtruſtfully withdrawing of your Hearts from God. Elſe you will be carryed to comply with the will of Man, before the will of God, and to avoid the wrath of Man before the wrath of God. Read and Fear that heavy curſe, Jer. 17. 5, 6. God is unchangeable, and hath commanded you ſo far to imitate him, as [If a man Vow a Vow unto the Lord, or ſwear an Oath to bind his Soul with a bond he ſhall not break his Word; he ſhall do according to all that proceedeth out of his Mouth, Numb. 30. 2.] But man is mutable, and ſo is his intereſt and his affairs; And therefore if you are the Servants of Men, you muſt ſwear one Year, and forſwear it, or ſwear the contrary the next: When their intereſt requireth it, you muſt not be thought worthy to live among Men if you will not promiſe or ſwear as they command you: And when their intereſt altereth and requireth the contrary, you muſt hold all thoſe bonds to be but ſtraws, and break them for their ends.

Dir. 6. §. 7. Direct. 6. Be ſure that you loſe not the fear of God, and the tenderneſs of your Conſciences. When theſe are loſt, your Underſtanding and Senſe and Life is loſt; and you will not ſtick at the greateſt Wickedneſs; nor know when you have done it, what you did. If faith ſee not God continually preſent, and foreſee not the great approaching Day, Perjury or any Villany will ſeem tolerable, for worldly Ends; For when you look but to Mens preſent caſe, you will ſee that the Righteous and the Wiſe and their Works are in the Hands of God: No Man knoweth love or hatred by all that is before them: All things come alike to all: There is one event to the Righteous and the Wicked: To the good, and to the clean and to the unclean; to him that ſacrificeth and to him that ſacrificeth not: As is the Good, ſo is the ſinner; and he that ſweareth as he that feareth an Oath, Eccleſ. 9. 1, 2. But in the end, Men ſhall diſcern between the Righteous and the Wicked, Mal. 3. 18. Therefore it is the believing foreſight of the end, that by preſerving the fear of God and tenderneſs of Conſcience, muſt ſave you from this, and all other heinous ſin.

Dir. 7. §. 8. Direct. 7. Be not bold and rash about such dreadful things as Vows. Run not as fearlesly upon them as if you were but going to your dinner: The wrath of God is not to be jeasted with: Usque ad aras, was the bounds even of a Heathens Kindness to his Friend. Meddle with Oaths with the greatest fear and caution and circumspection. It's terrible here to find that you were mistaken, through any temerity or negligence or secret seduction of a carnal interest.

Dir. 8. Nunc nunc qui fœdera rumpit, Ditatur: Qui servat eget. Claudian. §. 9. Direct. 8. Especially be very fearful of owning any publick doctrine, or doing any publick act, which tendeth to harden others in their Perjury, or to encourage Multitudes to commit the Sin. To be forsworn your selves is a dreadful case; but to teach whole Nations or Churches to forswear themselves, or to plead for it, or justifie it as a lawful thing, is much more dreadful: And though you teach not or own not Perjury under the Name of Perjury, yet if first you will make plain Perjury to seem no Perjury, that so you may justifie it, it is still a most inhuman horrid act. God knoweth I insult not over the Papists, with a delight to make any Christians odious: But with grief I remember how lamentably they have abused our holy Profession, while not only their great Doctors, but their approved General Council at the Lateran under P. Innocent the third, in the third Canon hath decreed that the Pope may depose Temporal Lords from their Dominions, and give them unto others, and discharge their Vassals from their Allegiance, and Fidelity, if they be Hereticks, or will not exterminate Hereticks (even such as the holy Men there condemned were; in the Pope's account) To declare to many Christian Nations, that it is lawful to break their Oaths and Promises to their lawful Lords and Rulers: Or their Vows to God, and to undertake by defending or owning this, to justifie all those Nations that shall be guilty of this Perjury and Perfidiousness, O what a horrid crime is this? What a shame even unto humane Nature! And how great a wrong to the Christian Name!

Dir. 9. §. 10. Direct. 9. Understand and remember these following Rules, to acquaint you how far a Vow is obligatory: Which I shall give you for the most part out of Dr. Sanderson, because his decisions of these cases are now of best esteem.

Rule 1. §. 11. Rule 1. The general Rule laid down, Num. 30. 2, 3. doth make a Vow as such to be obligatory, though the party should have a secret equivocation or intent that though he speak the words to deceive another, yet he will not oblige himself. Such a reserve not to oblige himself hindreth not the obligation, but proveth him a perfidious Hypocrite. D. Sanders. pag. 23. Juramentum omne ex suâ naturâ est obligatorium: Ita ut si quis juret non intendens se obligare, nihilominus tamen suscipiendo juramentum ipso facto obligetur: That is, If he so far understand what he doth as that his words may bear the definition of an Oath or Vow: Otherwise if he speak the words of an Oath in a strange Language, thinking they signifie something else, or if he speak in his sleep, or deliration, or distraction, it is no Oath, and so not obligatory.

Rule 2. See Dr. Sanders. p. 47. & 197. §. 12. Rule. 2. Those conditions are to be taken as intended in all Oaths (whether expreſt or no) which the very nature of the thing doth necessarily imply (unless any be so brutish as to express the contrary:) And these are all reducible to two heads, 1. A natural, and 2. A moral Impossiblity. 1. Whoever sweareth to do any thing, or to give any thing, is supposed to mean [If I live; and if I be not disabled in my body, faculties, estate; If God make it not impossible to be, &c. For no Man can be supposed to mean, [I will do it whether God will or not, and whether I live or not, and whether I be able or not.] 2. Whoever Voweth or sweareth to do any thing, must be understood to mean it [If no change of Providence make it a Sin: Or if I find it not contrary to my present supposition, that God forbiddeth it.] For no Man that is a Christian is to be supposed to mean when he Voweth, [I will do this though God forbid it, or though it prove to be a Sin] especially when Men therfore vow it because they take it to be a duty. Now as that which is sinful is morally impossible, so there are divers ways by which a thing may appear or become sinful to us. 1. When we find it forbidden directly in the Word of God, which at first we understood not. 2. When the change of things doth make that a Sin, which before was a duty: Of which may be given an hundred instances: As when the change of a Man's Estate, of his Opportunities, of his Liberty, of his Parts and Abilities, of Objects, of Customs, of the Laws of Civil Governours, doth change the very matter of his Duty.

Quest. Answ. §. 13. Quest. But will every change disoblige us? If not, what change must it be? Seeing Casuists use to put it as a condition in general, Rebus sic stantibus. Answ. No: It is not every change of things that disobligeth us from the bonds of a Vow. For then Vows were of no considerable signification. 2. But, 1. If the very Matter that was Vowed, or about which the Vow was, do cease, Cessante materiâ cessat obligatio: As if I promise to teach a Pupil, I am disobliged when he is dead. If I promise to pay so much Money in Gold, and the King should forbid Gold and change his Coin, I am not obliged to it. 2. Cessante termino vel correlato cessat obligatio: If the Party die to whom I am bound, my personal obligation ceaseth. And so the conjugal bond ceaseth at death, and civil bonds by civil death. 3. Cessante fine, cessat obligatio. If the use and end wholly cease, my obligation which was only to that use and end, ceaseth. As if a Physician promise to give Physick for nothing for the cure of the Plague, to all the Poor of the City; when the Plague ceaseth, his end, and so his obligation ceaseth. 4. Cessante personâ naturali relatâ cessat obligatio personalis. When the natural Person dieth the obligation ceaseth. I cannot be obliged to do that when I am dead which is proper to the living. The subject of the obligation ceasing, the Accidents must cease. 5. Cessante relatione vel personâ civili, cessat obligatio talis, quâ talis: The obligation which lay on a Person in any Relation meerly as such, doth cease when that Relation ceaseth. A King is not bound to govern or protect his Subjects if they trayterously depose him, or if he cast them off and take another Kingdom (as when H. 3. of France left the Kingdom of Poland;) nor are Subjects bound to Allegiance and Obedience to him that is not indeed their King: A Judge, or Justice, or Constable, or Tutor, is no longer bound by his Oath to do the Offices of these Relations, than he continueth in the Relation: A divorced Wife is not bound by her conjugal Vow to her Husband as before: Nor Masters and Servants when their Relations cease: Nor a Soldier to his General by his military Sacrament when the Army is disbanded, or he is cashiered or dismist.

Cicero de Leg. lib. 1. proveth that Right is founded in the Law of Nature, more than in man's Laws: else, saith he, men may make evil good and good evil, and make Adultery, Perjury, &c. just by making Law for them.

Rule 3. §. 14. Rule 3. No Vows or Promises of our own can dissolve the obligation, laid upon us by the Law of God. For we have no co ordinate, much less superior authority over our selves; our self-obligations are but for the furthering of our obedience.

Rule 4. §. 15. Rule 4. Therefore no Vows can disoblige a Man from any present duty, nor justifie him in the committing of any Sin. Vows are to engage us to God, and not against him: If the matter which we vow be evil, it is a Sin to vow it, and a Sin to do it upon pretence of a Vow. Sin is no acceptable Sacrifice to God.

Rule 5. §. 16. Rule 5. If I vow that I will do some duty better, I am not thereby disobliged from doing it at all, when I am disabled from doing it better. Suppose a Magistrate seeing much amiss in Church and Commonwealth,

How often Perjury hath ruined Christian Princes and States all History doth testifie. The ruin of the Roman Empire by the Goths was by this means. Alaricus having leave to live quietly in France, Stilico comes in perniciem Reipub. Gothos pertentans, dum eos insidiis aggredi cuperet, belli summum Saulo pigno duci commisit: qui ipso sacratissimo die Paschæ, Gothis nil tale suspicantibus, super eos irruit, magnamq; eorum partem prostravit. Num primum perturbati Gothi, ac propter Religionem cedentes, demum arma corripiunt, victoremque virtute postea profligarunt exercitum: Hinc in rabiem furoris excitantur. Cœptum iter deferentes, Romam contendunt petere, cuncta igne ferroque vastantes: Nec mora; venientes urbem capiunt, devastant, incendunt, &c. Paul. Diaconus lib. 3.

monwealth, doth Vow a Reformation, and Vow against the abuses which he findeth; if now the Peoples obstinacy and rebellion disable him to perform that Vow, it doth not follow that he must lay down his Scepter, and cease to govern them at all, because he cannot do it as he ought, if he were free. So if the Pastors of any Church do Vow the Reformation of Church abuses, in their Places, if they be hindred by their Rulers, or by the People, it doth not follow that they must lay down their Callings, and not Worship God publickly at all, because they cannot do it as they would, and ought if they were free; as long as they may worship him without committing any Sin. God's first obligation on me is, to worship him, and the second for the manner, to do it as near his order as I can: Now if I cannot avoid the imperfections of Worship, though I vowed it, I must not therefore avoid the Worship itself (as long as Corruptions destroy not the very nature of it, and I am put my self upon no actual Sin) for I was bound to worship God before my Vows, and in order of nature before my obligation de modo: And my Vow was made with an implyed condition, that the thing were possible and lawful: And when that ceaseth to be possible or lawful which I vowed, I must nevertheless do that which still remaineth possible and lawful. To give over God's solemn Worship with the Church, is no Reformation. To prefer no worship, before Imperfect-worship, is a greater Defamation and Corruption, than to prefer Imperfect-worship, before that which is more perfect. And to prefer a worship imperfect in the manner, before no-church worship at all, is a greater Reformation than to prefer a more perfect manner of worship before a more imperfect and defective. To worship God decently and in order, supposeth that he must be worshipped: And he that doth not worship at all, doth not worship him decently. If a Physician vow that he will administer a certain effectual Antidote to all his Patients that have the Plague, and that he will not administer a certain less-effectual Preparation, which some Apothecaries through Covetousness or Carelessness had brought into common use, to the injury of the sick: His Vow is to be interpreted with these exceptions [I will do it if I can, without dishonesty or a greater mischief: I will not administer the sophisticated antidote when I can have better: I vow this for my Patients benefit, and not for their destruction.] Therefore if the Sophisticated Antidote is much better than none, and may save Mens Lives, and the Patients grow wilful, and will take no other, or Authority forbid the use of any other, the Physician is neither bound to forsake his Calling rather than use it, nor to neglect the Life of his Patients: (If their lives indeed lie upon his care, and they may not be in some good hopes without him, and the good of many require him not to neglect a few:) But he must do what he can, when he cannot do what he would, and only shew that he consenteth not to the Sophistication.

Rule 6. §. 17. Rule 6. Though he that voweth a lawful thing, must be understood to mean, if it continue possible and lawful; yet if he himself be the culpable cause that afterwards it becometh unpossible or unlawful, he violateth his Vow. He that voweth to give so much to the Poor, and after prodigally wasteth it, and hath it not to give, doth break his Vow; which he doth not if Fire or Thieves deprive him of it against his will. He that voweth to preach the Gospel, if he cut out his own Tongue, or culpably procure another to imprison, silence or hinder him, doth break his Vow; which he did not if the hindrance were involuntary (and insuperable;) Consent doth make the impedition his own act.

§. 18. Rule 7. In the taking and keeping of Oaths and Vows we must deal simply and openly without equivocations and deceit. Psal. 84. 3. 4. Who shall ascend into the hill of the Lord? And who shall stand in his holy place? He that hath clean hands and a pure heart, who hath not lift up his soul to vanity, nor sworn deceitfully: He shall receive the blessing from the Lord, and righteousness from the God of his Salvation. Rule 7. Sanders. p. 30, 31.

§. 19. Rule 8. He that jugleth or stretcheth his Conscience by fraudulent shifts and imprecations afterward, is as bad as he that dissembleth in the taking of the Oath. To break it by deceit, is as bad as to take it in deceit. Psal. 15. 1, 4. Lord who shall abide in thy Tabernacle—He that sweareth to his own hurt and changeth not. Saith Dr. Sanderson [Ista mihi aut non cogitare, &c.] "It seemeth to me that the greater part "of the Men of these times either think not of these "things, or at least not seriously: Who fear not, at large "and in expres words, without going about, to swear "to all that, whatever it be, which is proposed to them "by those that have power to hurt them: Yea and "they take themselves for the only wise Men, and not "without some disdain deride the simplicity and needless "fear of those, that lest they hurt their Consciences for-"sooth, do seek a knot in a rush, and oppose the forms "prescribed by those that have power to prescribe them. "And in the mean time they securely free themselves "from all crime and fear of Perjury, and think they "have looked well to themselves and their Consciences, "if either when they swear, like Jesuits they can defend "themselves by the help of some tacite equivocation, or "mental reservation, or subtile interpretation which is "strained and utterly alien from the words; or else af-"ter they have sworn can find something to slip through, "some cunning evasion, as a wise remedy, by which they "may so elude their Oath, as that keeping the words, the "sense may by some Sophism be eluded, and all the "force of it utterly enervated. The ancient Christians "knew not this Divinity: Nor the founder Heathens "this moral Philosophy. For otherwise saith Augustine "[They are perjured, who keeping the words, deceive "the expectation of those they swear to.] And otherwise "saith Cicero, &c. He goeth on to confirm it at large by argument. Sanders. p. 32, 33, 34, 35, ad 41.

§. 20. Rule 9. An Oath is to be taken and interpreted strictly. Sanderson saith, Juramenti obligatio est stricti juris; that is, non ut excludat juris interpretationem æquitate temperatam; sed ut excludat juris interpretationem gratia corruptam: Not as excluding an equitable interpretation, but as excluding an interpretation corrupted by partiality: That it be a just interpretation, between the extreams of rigid, and favourable or partial; and in doubtful cases it is safer to follow the strict than the benign or favourable sense. It is dangerous stretching and venturing too far in matters of so sacred a nature, and of such great importance as Vows and Oaths. Rule 9. Sand. p. 41, 42, 43, 44. Ubi de justo sensu ambigitur, longe justius est & naturæ rei accommodatius, stricliore quam benigniore uti interpretatione, San. p 44.

§. 21. Rule 10. In the exposition of such doubtful Oaths and Vows, 1. We must specially watch against self interest or commodity that it corrupt not our understandings. 2. And we must not take our Oaths or any part of them in such a sense, as a pious prudent stander-by that is impartial and no wit interested in the business, cannot easily find in the words themselves. Rule 10. Sand. p. 45.

§ 22. Rule 11. In doubtful cases the greatest danger must be most carefully avoided, and the safer side preferred: But the danger of the soul by perjury is the greatest, and therefore no bodily danger should so carefully be avoided: And therefore an Oath that in the common and obvious sense seemeth unlawful should not be taken, unless there be very full evidence that it hath another Sense. Sand. p. 46. Nititur autem, &c. This reason leaneth on that general and most useful rule, that in doubtful cases we must follow the safer side: But it is safer not to swear, where the words of the Oath proposed, do seem according to the common and obvious Sense of the words to contain in them something unlawful; than Rule 11. Sand. p. 46.

by a looſe interpretation ſo to lenifie them for our own ends, that we may the more ſecurely ſwear them. For it is plain that ſuch an Oath may be refuſed without the peril of perjury; but not that it can be taken without ſome danger or fear. The ſame Rule muſt guide us alſo in keeping Vows.

Rule 12. §. 23. Rule 12. It is ordinarily reſolved that impoſed Oaths muſt be kept according to the ſenſe of the impoſer. See Sanderſ. p. 191, 192. But I conceive that aſſertion muſt be more exactly opened and bounded. 1. Where juſtice requireth that we have reſpect to the will or right of the impoſer, there the Oath impoſed muſt be taken in his ſenſe. But whether it muſt be kept in his ſenſe is further to be conſidered. 2. When I have done my beſt to underſtand the ſenſe of the impoſer in taking the Oath, and yet miſtake it, and ſo take it (without fraud) in another ſenſe, the Queſtion then is ſomewhat hard, whether I muſt keep it in the ſenſe I took it in, or in his ſenſe, which then I underſtood not. If I muſt not keep it in my own ſenſe, which I took it in, then it would follow that I muſt keep another Oath, and not that which I took: For it is the ſenſe that is the Oath. And I never obliged my ſelf to any thing, but according to my own Senſe: And yet on the other ſide, if every Man may take Oaths in their private Senſe, then Oaths will not attain their ends, nor be any ſecurity to the impoſers.

§ 24. In this caſe you muſt carefully diſtinguiſh between the formal obligation of the Oath or Vow as ſuch, and the obligation of Juſtice to my Neighbour which is a conſequent of my Vow. And for the former, I conceive (with ſubmiſſion) that an Oath or Vow cannot bind me, formally as ſuch, in any ſenſe but my own in which bonâ fide I took it. Becauſe formally an Oath cannot bind me which I never took: But I never took that which I never meant, nor thought of; if you ſo define an Oath as to take in the Senſe which is the Soul of it.

§. 25. But then in regard of the conſequential obligation in point of Juſtice unto Man, the queſtion I think muſt be thus reſolved. 1. We muſt diſtinguiſh between a lawful Impoſer or Contracter, and a violent Uſurper or Robber that injuriouſly compelleth us to ſwear. 2. Between the obvious uſual ſenſe of the words and an unuſual forced ſenſe. 3. Between a ſincere, involuntary miſunderſtanding the Impoſer, and a voluntary fraudulent reſervation or private ſenſe. 4. Between one that I owe ſomething to antecedently, and one that I owe nothing to but by the meer ſelf-obligation of my Vow. 5. Between an Impoſer that is himſelf the culpable cauſe of my miſunderſtanding him, and one that is not the cauſe, but my own weakneſs or negligence is the cauſe. 6. Between a caſe where both Senſes may be kept, and a caſe where they cannot, being inconſiſtent. Upon theſe diſtinctions, I thus reſolve the queſtion.

§. 26. Prop. 1. If I fraudulently and wilfully take an Oath in a ſenſe of my own, contrary to the ſenſe of the Impoſer and the common and juſt ſenſe of the words themſelves, I am guilty of Perfidiouſneſs and Prophaneneſs in the very taking of it.

They were ill times that Abbas Uſpergenſis deſcribeth Chron. pag. 320. Ut omnis homo jam ſit perjurus, & prædictis facinoribus implicatus, ut vix excuſari poſſit, quin ſit in his, ſicut populus, ſic & ſacerdos: O that this calamity had ended with that Age! Et pag. 321. Principes terrarum & Barones, arte diabolicâ edacti, nec curabunt juramenta infringere, nec fidem violare, & jus omne confundere.

Prop. 2. If it be long of my own culpable ignorance or negligence that I miſunderſtood the Impoſer, I am not thereby diſobliged from the publick ſenſe.

Prop. 3. When the Impoſer openly putteth a Senſe on the words impoſed contrary to the uſual obvious ſenſe, I am to underſtand him according to his own expreſſion, and not to take the Oath, as impoſed, in any other ſenſe.

Prop. 4. If the Impoſer refuſe or neglect to tell me his ſenſe any otherwiſe than in the impoſed words, I am to take and keep them according to the obvious Senſe of the words, as they are commonly uſed in the time and place which I live in.

Prop. 5. If it be long of the Impoſers obſcurity, or refuſing to explain himſelf, or other culpable cauſe, that I miſtook him, I am not bound to keep my Oath in his ſenſe, as different from my own (unleſs there be ſome other reaſon for it.)

Prop. 6. If the Impoſer be a Robber, or Uſurper, or one that I owe nothing to in juſtice, but what I oblige my ſelf to by my Oath, I am not then bound at all to keep my Oath in his Senſe, if my own Senſe was according to the common uſe of the words.

Prop. 7. Though I may not lye to a Robber or Tyrant that unjuſtly impoſeth Promiſes or Oaths upon me, yet if he put an Oath or Promiſe on me which is good and lawful in the proper uſual Senſe of the Words, though bad in his Senſe, (which is contrary to the plain words,) whether I may take this to ſave my Liberty or Life, I leave to the conſideration of the judicious: That which may be ſaid againſt it is, that Oaths muſt not be uſed indirectly and diſſemblingly: That which may be ſaid for it is: 1. That I have no obligation to fit my words to his perſonal private Senſe: 2. That I deceive him not, but only permit him to deceive himſelf, as long as it is he and not I that miſuſeth the words. 3. That I am to have chief reſpect to the publick Senſe: And it is not his Senſe, but mine that is the publick Senſe. 4. That the ſaving of a Man's Life or Liberty is cauſe enough for the taking a lawful Oath.

Prop. 8. In caſe I miſunderſtood the impoſed Oath through my own default, I am bound to keep it in both ſenſes (my own and the Impoſers) if both be conſiſtent and lawful to be done. For I am bound to it in my own Senſe, becauſe ii was formally my Oath or Vow which I intended. And I am bound to it in his Senſe, becauſe I have in Juſtice made the thing his due. As if the King command me to Vow that I will ſerve him in Wars againſt the Turk: And I miſunderſtand him as if he meant only to ſerve him with my Purſe: And ſo I make a Vow with this intent, to expend part of my eſtate to maintain that War: Whereas the true ſenſe was that I ſhould ſerve him with my Perſon: In this caſe, I ſee not but I am bound to both.

Indeed if it were a promiſe thas obliged me only to the King, then I am obliged no further, and no longer than he will: For he can remit his own right: But if by a Vow I become obliged directly to God himſelf as a Party, then no Man can remit his right, and I muſt perform my Vow as made to him.

§. 27. Rule 13. If any impoſe an ambiguous Oath, and refuſe to explain it, and require you only to ſwear in thoſe words, and leave you to your own ſenſe, Dr. Sanderſon thinketh that an honeſt Man ſhould ſuſpect ſome fraud in ſuch an Oath, and not take it at all till all Parties are agreed of the Senſe, pag. 193, 194. And I think he ſhould not take it at all, unleſs there be ſome other cauſe that maketh it his duty. But if a lawful Magiſtrate command it, or the intereſt of the Church or State require it, I ſee not but he may take it, on condition that in the plain and proper ſenſe of the Words the Oath be lawful, and that he openly profeſs to take it only in that ſenſe. Rule 13. Sand. p. 193. Caſ. 48.

§. 28. Rule 14. If any Power ſhould impoſe an Oath or Vow or Promiſe, which in the proper uſual Senſe were downright impious or blaſphemous or ſinful, and yet bid me take it in what Senſe I pleaſed, though I could take it in ſuch a Senſe as might make it no real Conſent to the impiety, yet it would be impious in the Senſe of the World, and of ſuch heinous Conſequence as will make it to be unlawful. As if I muſt ſubſcribe or ſay or ſwear theſe Words [There is no God, or Scripture is untrue] though it's eaſie to uſe theſe or any Words in Rule 14.

a good Senſe, if I may put what Senſe I will upon them, yet the publick Senſe of them is Blaſphemy; and I may not publickly Blaſpheme, on pretence of a private right Sence and Intention.

Rule 15. § 29. Rule 15. If the Oath impoſed be true in the ſtrict and proper Senſe, yet if that Senſe be not vulgarly known, nor ſufficiently manifeſt to be the impoſers Senſe, and if the Words are falſe or blaſphemous in the vulgar Senſe of thoſe that I have to do with, and that muſt obſerve and make uſe of my Example, I muſt not take ſuch an Oath, without leave to make my Senſe as publick as my Oath. As if I were commanded to ſwear that [God hath no foreknowledge, no knowledge, no will, &c.] It were eaſie to prove that theſe Terms are ſpoken primarily of Man, and that they are attributed to God but analogically or metaphorically, and that God hath no ſuch humane Acts formaliter, but eminenter, and that forma dat nomen, and ſo that ſtrictly it is not Knowledge and Will in the primary proper Notion, that God hath at all, but ſomething infinitely higher, for which Man hath no other Name. But though thus the Words are true and juſtifiable in the ſtricteſt proper Senſe, yet are they unlawful, becauſe they are blaſphemy in the vulgar Senſe: And he that ſpeaks to the Vulgar is ſuppoſed to ſpeak with the Vulgar: Unleſs he as publickly explain them.

Rule 16. § 30. Rule 16. If the Supream Power ſhould impoſe an Oath or Promiſe, which in the ordinary obvious Senſe were ſinful, and an inferiour Officer would bid me take it in what Senſe I pleaſed, I might not therefore take it: Becauſe that ſuch an Officer hath no Power to interpret it himſelf; much leſs to allow me to take it in a private Senſe. But if the Lawgiver that impoſeth it bid me take it in what Senſe I will, and give me leave to make my Senſe as publick as my Oath, I may take it, if the Words be but dubious, and not apparently falſe or ſinful: (So there be no Reaſon againſt it, aliunde, as from ill Conſequents, &c.)

Rule 17. § 31. Rule 17. If any Man will ſay in ſuch a Caſe, (when he thinketh that the Impoſers Senſe is bad) I take not the ſame Oath or Engagement which is impoſed, but another in the ſame Words, and I ſuppoſe not inferiour Officers authorized to admit any Interpretation, but I look at them only as Men that can actually execute or not execute the Laws upon me; and ſo I take a Vow of my own according to my own Senſe, though in their Words, as a means of my avoiding their Severities: As this is a Colluſion in a very high and tender buſineſs; ſo that Perſon (if the publick Senſe of the Oath be ſinful) muſt make his profeſſed Senſe as publick as his Oath or Promiſe; it being no ſmall thing to do that which in the publick Senſe is impious, and ſo to be an example of Perfidiouſneſs to many.

Rule 18. Sand. p. 122. ad P. 133. §. 32. Rule 18. Though an Oath impoſed by an Uſurper or by violence is not to be taken in formal Obedience, nor at all, unleſs the greatneſs of the Benefit require it, yet being taken it is nevertheleſs obligatory (ſuppoſing nothing elſe do make it void.) Man is a free Agent and cannot be forced, though he may be frightned: If he ſwear to a Thief for the ſaving of his Life, he voluntarily doth chooſe the inconveniences of the Oath, as a means to ſave his Life. Therefore being a voluntary Act it is obligatory. Elſe there ſhould be no Obligation on us to ſuffer for Chriſt, but any thing might be ſworn or done to eſcape Suffering: See of this Dr. Sanderſon largely Prælect. 4. Sect. 14, 15, 16. The Impoſition and the Oath are different Things. In the Impoſition, a Thief or Tyrant is the party commanding, and I am the party commanded: And his having no Authority to command me, doth nullifie only his command, and maketh me not obliged to obey him, nor to take it in any Obedience to him: But yet if I do take it without any Authority obliging me (as private Oaths are taken) it is ſtill an Oath or Vow, in which the Parties are God and Man: Man Vowing and making himſelf a Debtor to God: And God hath Authority to require me to keep my Vows, when Men have no Authority to require me to make them. All Men confeſs that private Vows bind: And the nullity of the Impoſers Authority, maketh them but private Vows. This Caſe is eaſie and commonly agreed on.

§. 33. Rule 19. If in a complex Vow or Promiſe there be many Things which prove materially unlawful, and one or more that are lawful, the Conjunction of the Things unlawful doth not diſoblige me from the Vow of doing the lawful Part. Otherwiſe a Man might make void all his Vows to God, and Oaths and Covenants with Men, by putting in ſomething that is Evil with the Good: And ſo God and the King and our Neighbours would have their Debts paid by our Sin and Injury done them on the by. Rule 19.

§. 34. Rule 20. If ſome Part of that which you Vowed become impoſſible, that doth not diſoblige you from ſo much as remaineth poſſible. As if you vow Allegiance to the King, and Tyrants or diſability hinder you from ſerving him as Subjects in ſome one particular way, you remain ſtill obliged to ſerve him by thoſe other ways in which you are yet capable to ſerve him, So if yon had taken an Oath againſt Popery, to Preach againſt it, and reject the Practice of it, and for ever renounce it; this would not bind you from the common Truths and Duties of Chriſtianity which Papiſts hold in common with all other Chriſtians: Nor could you Preach againſt Popery, if you were hindered by Impriſonment, Baniſhment or Reſtraint: But you have ſtill Power to forbear approving, conſenting, ſubſcribing, or practiſing their Errors: And this you are ſtill bound to do. Rule 20.

§. 35. Rule 21. Though you are not bound to do that of your Vow which changes have made impoſſible or unlawful, yet if another Change make them poſſible and lawful again, your Obligation doth return afreſh (unleſs you made it with ſuch Limitation.) It is not a temporary Ceſſation of the Matter or end or correlate that will perpetually diſcharge you from your Vow. If your Wife be taken Captive many Years, when ſhe returneth, you are bound to the Duties of a Husband. If the King be expelled by Uſurpers, you are bound at preſent to ſo much Duty as is poſſible, and to obey him as your actual Governour when he returneth. But in the Caſe of Servants and Souldiers and other temporary Relations, it is otherwiſe; for a removal may end the Relation it ſelf. If you promiſe to Preach the Goſpel, to medicate the Sick, to relieve the Poor, to reform your Families, &c. You are not hereby obliged to do it, while any unreſiſtible Impediment maketh it impoſſible: But when the hinderance ceaſeth, you are obliged to do it again; the matter and your capacity being reſtored. Rule 21.

§. 36. Rule 22. Therefore many a Vow and Promiſe may be lawfully unperformed, which may not be renounced or diſclaimed. When you are taken Captives you muſt forbear your Duty to your King, your Father, your Husband or Wife: But you may not therefore renounce them, and ſay I have no Obligation to them: No not to the Death: Becauſe they are Relations for Life: And how improbable ſoever it may ſeem that you ſhould be returned to them, yet God can do it, and you muſt wait on him. Rule 22.

§. 33. Rule 23. A former Vow or Promiſe is not nullified by a latter that contradicteth it. Otherwiſe a Man might diſoblige himſelf at his Pleaſure. Yet he that maketh contrary Vows, obligeth himſelf to contraries and impoſſibles: And bringeth a neceſſity of Perjury on himſelf, for not doing the Things impoſſible which he vowed. And in ſome Caſes a later Promiſe to Men may null a former, when we made the former with the reſerve of ſuch a Power or Liberty, or are juſtly ſuppoſed to have Power, to recal a former Promiſe: Or when it is the Duty of a mutable Relation which we Vow, (as of a Phyſician, a School-maſter, &c.) and by a later Vow we change Rule 23. Sanderſ. p. 50.

change the Relation it self: (Which we may still lawfully Change.)

Rule 24. §. 38. Rule 24. The Actus jurandi must still be distinguished from the materia juramenti: And it very often cometh to pass, that the Act of Swearing (or the Oath as our Act) is unlawfully done, and was a Sin from the beginning, and yet it is nevertheless obligatory as long as the res jurata, the matter sworn is lawful or necessary. Dr. Sanderson instanceth in Joshua's Oath to the Gibeonites. The Nature of the Thing is proof enough: For many a Thing is sinfully done, for want of a due call, or manner or end, that yet is done, and is no nullity. A Man may sinfully enter upon the Ministry, that yet is bound to do the Duty of a Minister: And many Marriages are sinful that are no nullities.

Sanderf. p. 55, 56. In quo casu locum habet quod vulgo dicitur, Fieri non debet, factum valet: Possumus ergo distinguere, Juramentum dici illicitum duobus modis. Vel respectu rei juratæ, vel respectu actus jurandi: Juramentum illicitum respectu rei juratæ nullatenus obligat: Juramentum illicitum respectu actus jurandi obligat, nisi aliunde impediatur.

Rule 25. What is the Nullity of an Oath. §. 39. Rule 25. The nullity of an Oath ab initio is quando realiter vel reputative non juravimus: When really or reputatively we did not swear: The sinfulness of an Oath is, when we did swear really, but unlawfully as to the ground or end or matter or manner or circumstances. Really that Man did not swear, 1. Who spake not (mentally nor orally) the words of an Oath: 2. Who thought those Words had signified no such thing, and so had no intent to swear either mentally or verbally. As if an Englishman be taught to use the Words of an Oath in French, and made believe that they have a contrary Sense. 3. Who only narratively recited the Words of an Oath, as a Reporter or Historian, without a real or professed intent of swearing. 2. Reputatively he did not swear, 1. Who spake the Words of an Oath in his sleep, or in a deliration, distraction, madness, or such prevalent melancholy as mastereth Reason: When a Man is not compos mentis, his Act is not actus humanus. 2. When a Mans hand is forcibly moved by another against his Will to subscribe the Words of an Oath or Covenant. For if it be totally involuntary it is not a moral Act. But Words cannot be forced. For he that sweareth to save his Life, doth do it voluntarily to save his Life. The will may be moved by fear, but not forced. Yet the Person that wrongfully frighteneth another into consent, or to swear, hath no right to any Benefit which he thought to get by force or fraud, and so in foro civili such Promises, or Covenants or Oaths may quoad effectum be reputatively null: And he that by putting his Sword to another Mans Breast doth compel him to swear or subscribe and seal a deed of Gift, may be judged to have no right to it, but to be punishable for the force: But though this Covenant or Promise be Null in foro humano, because the Person cannot acquire a right by violence, yet the Oath is not a Nullity before God: For when God is made a Party, he hath a right which is inviolable: And when he is appealed to, or made a Witness, his Name must not be taken in vain. 3. It is a nullity reputatively, when the Person is naturally uncapable of Self-obligation: As in Infancy when Reason is not come to so much Maturity as to be naturally capable of such a Work: I say [Naturally uncapable] for the Reasons following.

Rule 26. §. 40. Rule 26. We must distinguish between a natural incapacity of Vowing or Swearing at all, and an incapacity of doing it lawfully: And between a true Nullity, and when the Oath is only quasi nullum, or as Null quoad effectum; or such as I must not keep. There are many real Oaths and Vows which must not be kept, and so far are quasi nulla as to the effecting of the thing Vowed: But they are not simply Null. For they have the Effect of making the Man a Sinner and perjured. They are sinful Vows, and therefore Vows. A natural incapacity proveth it no Vow at all. But if I am naturally capable, and only forbidden (by God or Man, this maketh it not no Vow, but a sinful Vow, of which some must be kept, and some must not.

Cases in which a Vow must not be kept.

§. 41. In these following Cases a real Vow is quasi nullum, or must not be kept.

1. In Case the thing Vowed (all things considered) be a thing which God hath forbidden to be done: That is, in Case it be a thing in it self evil: But if the thing in it self be a duty, though there be some inseparable Sins which we shall be guilty of in the performance, we must not therefore leave the Duty it self undone which we have vowed: As if I vow to Praise God, and yet am sure that I cannot praise him without a sinful defect of that Love and Delight in him which is due, I must not therefore forbear to praise him: Else we must cast off all other Duty, because we cannot do it without some Sin. But yet, though in Case of unwilling infirmity, we must thus do the Duty though we are sure to Sin in it, yet in Case of any chosen voluntary Sin, which we have an immediate Power to avoid, we must rather forbear the Duty it self (Vowed or not Vowed) than commit such a Sin. As if I vow to preach the Gospel, and am forcibly hindred unless I would voluntarily tell one Lye, or commit one Sin wilfully for this Liberty; I ought rather never to preach the Gospel: Nor is it then a Duty, but become morally impossible to me: As if in France or Spain I may not preach unless I would take Pope Pius his Trent Confession or Oath. Nay, if those very defects of Love, and wandering thoughts, which now inseparably cleave to my best Performances, were morally and immediately in my Power, and I could avoid them, I ought not Electively and by Consent to commit them, for any Liberty of Duty, but rather to forbear the Duty it self, as no Duty to me when it cometh upon such Conditions: For then it is supposed that I could serve God better without that Duty, because I could Love him more, &c.

Yet here is observable a great deal of difference between Omissions and Commissions. A man may never commit a Sin that good may come by it, though he vowed the good: But a man may oft times omit that which else would have been his Duty, to do some good which he hath vowed: For Negative commands bind semper & ad semper: But the Affirmative do not (at least as to outward duty:) Therefore in case of necessity a man may himself Consent to the present Omission of some good, for the escaping of greater unavoidable omissions another time, or for the performing of a Vow or greater duty which is to be perferred.

§. 42. 2. A Vow is not to be kept, when the matter of it is unjust and injurious to another (unless you have his consent:) As if you Vow to give away another Mans Lands or Goods, or to do him wrong by Word or Deed! Or if you Vow to forbear to pay him his due, or to do that which you owe him: As if a servant Vow to forbear his Masters Work (unless it be so small an injury as he can other ways repair;) or a Husband, or Wife, or Parents, or Children, or Prince, or Subjects should Vow to deny their necessary Duties to each other. Here Mans right together with Gods Law doth make it unjust to perform such Vows.

§. 43. 3. A Vow is as Null or not to be kept, when the matter is something that is morally or civilly out of our Power to do: As if a Servant, or Child, or Subject Vow to do a thing, which he cannot do lawfully without the consent of his superiour: This Vow is not simply Null: For it is a sinful Vow: (unless it was conditional:) Every rational creature is so far sui Juris as that his Soul being immediately subject to God, he is capable of obliging himself to God; and so his Vow is a real sinful Vow, when he is not so far sui Juris to be capable of a Lawful Vowing ing, or doing the thing which he voweth. Such a one is bound to endeavour to get his ſuperiours conſent, but not without it to perform his Vow: No though the thing in it ſelf be lawful. For God having antecedently bound me to obey my Superiours in all lawful things, I cannot diſoblige my ſelf by my own Vows.

§. 44. Yet here are very great difficulties in this caſe, which cauſeth difference among the learnedſt pious Caſuiſts, 1. If a Governour have before hand made a Law for that which I Vow againſt, it is ſuppoſed by many that my Vow is not to be kept (the thing being not againſt the Law of God:) Becauſe the firſt obligation holdeth: 2. Yet ſome think that Magiſtrates Penal Laws binding but aut ad obedientiam aut ad pœnam, to obedience or Puniſhment, I am therefore obliged in indifferent things to bear his penalty, and to keep my Vow. 3. But if I firſt make an Abſolute Vow in a thing indifferent (as to drink no Wine, or to wear no Silks, &c.) and the Magiſtrate afterwards command it me, ſome think I am bound to keep my Vow; becauſe though I muſt obey the Magiſtrate in all things lawful, yet my Vow hath made this particular thing to be to me unlawful before the Magiſtrate made it a duty: 4. Though others think that even in this caſe the general obligation to obey my ſuperiours preventeth my obliging my ſelf to any particular which they may forbid in caſe I had not vowed it, or againſt any particular which they may command. 5. Others diſtinguiſh of things lawful or indifferent, and ſay that ſome of them are ſuch as become accidentally ſo uſeful or needful to the common good, the end of Government, that it is fit the Magiſtrate make a Law for it, and the breaking of that Law will be ſo hurtful, that my Vow cannot bind me to it, as being now no indifferent thing: But other indifferent things, they ſay, belong not to the Magiſtrate to determine of (as what I ſhall eat or drink, whether I ſhall marry or not, what Trade I ſhall be of, how each Artificer, Tradeſman, or Profeſſour of Arts and Sciences ſhall do the buſineſs of his Profeſſion, &c.) And here the Magiſtrate they think cannot bind them againſt their Vows, becauſe their power of themſelves in ſuch private caſes is greater than his power over them in thoſe caſes. All theſe I leave as ſo many Queſtions unfit for me to reſolve in the midſt of the contentions of the Learned. The great Reaſons that move on both ſides you may eaſily diſcern. 1. Thoſe that think an Oath in lawful things, obligeth not contrary to the Magiſtrates antecedent or ſubſequent command, are moved by this reaſon, that elſe ſubjects and children might by their Vows exempt themſelves from obedience, and null God's command of obeying our ſuperiors. 2. Thoſe that think a Vow is obligatory againſt a Magiſtrates command, are moved by this reaſon, becauſe elſe, ſay they, a Magiſtrate may at his pleaſure diſpenſe with all Vows, except in things commanded before by God: For he may come after and croſs our Vows by his commands, which, againſt the Popes pretenſions, Proteſtants have denyed to be in the Power of any mortal Man: And God, ſay they, hath the firſt right, which none can take away. I muſt not be forward in determining where Rulers are concerned: Only to thoſe that may and muſt determine it, I add theſe further materials to be conſidered of.

Sanderſon p. 72, 73. Dico ordinarie: quia fortaſſis poſſunt dari caſus in quibus juramentum quod videtur alicui legi communitatis aut vocationis adverſari, etſi non debuerit ſuſcipi, ſuſceptum tamen poteſt obligare: Ut e. g. in lege pœnali diſjunctiva. See the inſtances which he addeth. Joſeph took an Oath of the Iſraelites, to carry his Bones out of Æ*gypt*, Gen. 50. 25. What if Pharaoh forbid them? Are they acquit? The Spies ſwore to Rahab, Joſh. 2. 12, 18. Had they been quit if the Rulers had acquit them?

§. 45. 1. It is moſt neceſſary to the deciſion of of this caſe, to underſtand how far the Inferiour that voweth was ſui Juris, and had the Power of himſelf when he made the Vow, as to the making of it, and how far he is ſui Juris as to the act which he hath vowed: And to that end to know, in a caſe where there is ſome Power over his act, both in his ſuperiour and in himſelf, whether his own power, or his ſuperiours, as to that act, be the greater.

2. It is therefore needful to diſtinguiſh much between thoſe acts that are of Private uſe and ſignification only, and thoſe that (antecedently to the Rulers command) are of publick uſe and nature, or ſuch as the Ruler is as much concerned in as the inferiour.

3. It is needful to underſtand the true intent and ſenſe of the command of our ſuperiour; whether it be really his intent to bind inferiours to break their Vows, or whether they intend only to bind thoſe that are not ſo entangled and pre-engaged by a Vow, with a tacite exception of thoſe that are. And what is moſt juſt muſt be preſumed, unleſs the contrary be plain. Read of this at large, Amſii Caſ. Conſ. l. 5. c. 5. Qu. 4.

4. It muſt be diſcerned whether the commands of ſuperiours intend any further penalty than that which is affixed in their Laws: As in our Penal Laws about uſing Bow and Arrows; and about fiſhing, hunting, &c. Whether it be intended that the offender be guilty of damnation, or only that the threatned temporal penalty do ſatisfie the Law: And whether God bind us to any further Penalty than the ſuperiour intendeth.

5. The End of the Laws of Men muſt be diſtinguiſhed from the Words: And a great difference muſt be put between thoſe forbidden acts that do no further harm than barely to croſs the Letter of the Law, or Will of a Superiour, and thoſe that croſs the juſt end of the Command or Law; and that either more or leſs, as it is more or leſs hurtful to others, or againſt the Common good: For then the matter will become ſinful in it ſelf.

6. Whether Perjury, or the unwilling violation of humane Laws, be the greater ſin, and which in a doubtful caſe ſhould be moſt feared and avoided, it is eaſie to diſcern.

§. 46. Rule 27. A Vow may be conſequently made Null or Void, 1. By ceſſation of the Matter, or any thing eſſential to it, (of which before §. 13.) or by a Diſpenſation or diſſolution of it by God to whom we are obliged. No doubt, it is in Gods Power to diſoblige a Man from his Vow: But how he ever doth ſuch a thing, is all the doubt: Extraordinary revelations being ceaſed, there is this way yet ordinary, viz. by bringing the matter which I vowed to do, under ſome prohibition of a General Law, by the Changes of his Providence. Rule 27.

§ 47. Rule 28. As to the Power of Man to diſpenſe with Oaths and Vows, there is a great and moſt remarkable difference between thoſe Oaths and Vows where Man is the only party that we are primarily bound to, and God is only appealed to as Witneſs or Judge, as to the keeping of my word to Man; and thoſe Oaths or Vows where God is alſo made (either only or conjunct with Man) the party to whom I primarily oblige my ſelf. For in the firſt caſe Man can diſpenſe with my Oath or Vow, by remitting his own right, and releaſing me from my Promiſe; but in the ſecond caſe no created power can do it. As e. g. if I Promiſe to pay a Man a ſumm of Money, or to do him ſervice, and ſwear that I will perform it Faithfully; if upon ſome after bargain or conſideration he releaſe me of that Promiſe, God releaſeth me alſo; as the Witneſſes and Judge have nothing againſt a Man, whom the Creditor hath diſcharged. But if I Swear or Vow that I will amend my Life, or reform my family of ſome great abuſe, or that I will give ſo much to the poor, or that I will give up my ſelf to the Work of the Goſpel, or that I will never Marry, or never drink Wine or never conſent to Popery or Errour, &c. No man can diſpenſe with my Vow, nor directly diſoblige me in any ſuch caſe; becauſe no man can give away God's right: All that man can do in any ſuch caſe is, to become an occaſion of Gods diſobliging me: If he can ſo change the caſe, or my condition, as to bring me under ſome Law of God, which commandeth me the contrary to my Vow, then God diſobligeth me (or maketh it unlawful to keep that Vow. And here be- Rule 28.

cauſe a Vow is commonly taken for ſuch a Promiſe to God, in which we directly bind our ſelves to him, therefore we ſay, that a Vow (thus ſtrictly taken) cannot be diſpenſed with by man; though in the ſenſe aforeſaid, an Oath ſometimes may.

§. 48. The Papiſts deal moſt perverſly in this point of Diſpenſing with Oaths and Vows: For they give that Power to the Pope over all the Chriſtian World, who is a Uſurper, and none of our Govern our, which they deny to Princes and Parents that are our undoubted Governours: The Pope may diſoblige Vaſſals from their Oaths of Allegiance to their Princes (as the Council of Lateran before cited,) but no King or Parent may diſoblige a Man from his Oath to the Pope: Nay, if a child vow a Monaſtical life, and depart from his Parents, they allow not the Parents to diſoblige him.

Rule 29. § 49. Rule 29. In the determining of controverſies about the Obligation of Oaths and Vows, it is ſafeſt to mark what Scripture ſaith, and not to preſume, upon uncertain pretence of Reaſon, to releaſe our ſelves, where we are not ſure that God releaſeth us.

Rule 30. §. 50. Rule 30. That obſervable Chapter, Numb. 30. about diſpenſations, hath many things in it that are plain for the deciſion of divers great and uſual doubts: But many things which ſome do collect and conclude as conſequential or implyed, are doubtful and controverted among the moſt judicious Expoſitors and Caſuiſts.

§. 51. 1. It is certain that this Chapter ſpeaketh not of a total Nullity of Vows ab initio, but of a Relaxation, or diſannulling of them by ſuperiours. For, 1. Bare ſilence (which is no efficient cauſe) doth prove them to be in force. 2. It is not ſaid, [She is bound, or not bound:] but [Her Vow and Bond ſhall ſtand, v. 4, 7, 9, 11. or ſhall not ſtand, v. 5, 12. and He ſhall make it of none effect: v. 8. The Hebrew verſ. 5. ſignifieth Quia annihilavit pater ejus illud. And v. 8. Et ſi in die audire virum ejus, annihilaverit illud, & infregerit votum ejus——] 3. It is expreſly ſaid, that ſhe had (bound her ſoul] before the diſſolution. 4. It is ſaid, The Lord ſhall forgive her, v. 5, 8, 12. Which ſignifieth a Relaxation of a former bond. Or at the moſt, the Parents ſilence is a Confirmation, and his diſowning it hindereth only the Confirmation: So the Chaldee Paraphraſe, the Samaritan and Arabick [Non erunt confirmata] The Syriack [Rata vel irrita erunt.]

And ſi infringendo infregerit ea vir ejus v. 12. Vir ejus infregit ea. v. 13.

2. It is certain that a Father hath the Power of Relaxation here mentioned as to an unmarried Daughter in her youth living in his Houſe, and a Husband over his Wife: For it is the expreſs Words of the Text.

3. It is certain that this Power extendeth to Vows about all things in which the inferiour is not ſui Juris, but is under the ſuperiours care and overſight, and cannot perform it (in caſe there had been no Vow) without the ſuperiours conſent.

4. It is certain that it extendeth not only to matters concerning the Governours themſelves, but concerning Vows to God, as they are good or hurtful to the Inferiours.

5. It is certain that there are ſome Vows ſo neceſſary and clearly for the Inferiours good, that in them he is ſui Juris, and no ſuperiour can ſuſpend his Vows: As to have the Lord for his God: And not to commit Idolatry, Murder, Theft, &c. No ſuperiour can diſoblige us here: For the Power of ſuperiours is only for the Inferiours indemnity and good.

6. It is certain that the ſuperiours recall muſt be ſpeedy or in Time, before ſilence can ſignifie conſent, and make a confirmation of the Vow.

7. It is certain that if the ſuperiour have once ratified it by ſilence or conſent, he cannot afterwards diſannul it.

8. It is agreed, that if he a while diſſent and diſannul it, and afterward both Inferiour and ſuperiour conſent again, that it remaineth ratified.

9. It is agreed that the ſuperiour that can diſcharge the Vow of the Inferiour, cannot releaſe himſelf from his own Vows (If the Pope could releaſe all Men, who ſhall releaſe him?)

§ 52. 2. But in theſe points following there is no ſuch Certainty or Agreement of judgments, becauſe the Text ſeemeth ſilent about them, and Men conjecture variouſly as they are prepared. 1. It is uncertain whether any but Women may be releaſed by vertue of this Text: 1. Becauſe the Text expreſly diſtinguiſhing between a Man and a Women doth firſt ſay, [Si Vir——If a Man Vow a Vow unto the Lord, or ſwear an Oath to bind his Soul with a bond; he ſhall not break his Word; he ſhall do according to all that proceedeth out of his Mouth.] And 2. Becauſe Women are only inſtanced in; when Scripture uſually ſpeaketh of them in the Maſculine Gender, when it includeth both Sexes, or extendeth it to both. 3. And in the recapitulation in the end, it is ſaid by way of recital of the contents, v. 16. [Theſe are the Statutes which the Lord Commanded Moſes between a Man and his Wife; between the Father and his Daughter —— in her Youth in her Fathers Houſe.] As if he would caution us againſt extending it any further: And though many good Expoſitors think that it extendeth equally to Sons as to Daughters, in their minority, becauſe there is a parity of reaſon, yet this is an uncertain conjecture, 1. Becauſe God ſeemeth by the expreſſion to bound the ſenſe. 2. Becauſe God acquainteth not Man with all the reaſons of his Laws. 3. Becauſe there may be ſpecial reaſons for an indulgence to the weaker Sex in ſuch a weighty caſe. And though ſtill there is a probability it may extend to Sons, it is good keeping to Certainties in matters of ſuch dreadful importance as Oaths and Vows to God.

2. It is uncertain, whether this power of diſannulling Vows do belong alſo to other Superiors, to Princes, to inferiour Magiſtrates, to Paſtors, Maſters, to Commanders, as to their Soldiers, as well as to Parents and Husbands: Some think it doth, becauſe there is, ſay they, a parity of reaſon. Others think it is dangerous diſanulling Oaths and Vows upon pretences of parity of reaſon, when it is uncertain whether we know all God's reaſons: And they think there is not a parity, and that it extendeth not to others. 1. Becauſe Parents and Husbands are ſo emphatically named in the Contents in the end, v. 16. 2. Becauſe it had been as eaſie to God to name the reſt. 3. Becauſe there is no inſtance in Scripture of the exerciſe of ſuch a power, when there was much occaſion for it. 4. Becauſe elſe Vows ſignifie no more in a Kingdom than the King pleaſe, and in an Army than the General and Officers pleaſe: And among Servants than the Maſter pleaſe, which is thought a dangerous Doctrine. 5. Becauſe there will be an utter uncertainty when a Vow bindeth and when it doth not to almoſt all the People in the World: For one Superior may contradict it, and another or an Hundred may be ſilent: The King and moſt of the Magiſtrates through diſtance will be ſilent, when a Maſter or a Juſtice or a Captain that is at hand may diſannul it: One Officer may be for it and another againſt it: A Maſter or a Paſtor may be for it, and the Magiſtrate againſt it: And ſo Perjury will become the moſt controverted Sin and a matter of jeaſt. 6. Becauſe publick Magiſtrates and Commanders and Paſtors have not the near and natural intereſt in their Inferiours as Parents and Husbands have in their Children and Wives: And therefore Parents have not only a reſtraining Power (as Husbands here alſo have) but alſo a diſpoſing power of the Relation of their Infant Children, and may enter them in

Dr. Sanderſ. Prælect. 4. Sect. 5. p. 104, 105. limiteth it to [De his rebus in quibus ſubeſt:] in thoſe ſame things in which one is under anothers Government: Adding Sect. 6. a double exception: [Of which one reſpecteth the perſon of the ſwearer, the other the conſent of the ſuperiour: The firſt is that [As to the perſon of the ſwearer, there is ſcarce any one that hath the uſe of Reaſon that is ſo fully under anothers Power, but that in ſome things he is ſui juris, at his own Power: And there every one may do as pleaſe himſelf, without conſulting his Superiour, ſo as that by his own Act, without his Superiours licence he may bind himſelf.—— 2. As to the conſent of a Superiour —— A tacite conſent, antecedent or conſequent, ſufficeth —— Quaſi dicerit, ſi diſſenſum ſuum vel uno die diſſimulet, votum in perpetuum ſtabilivit.——

Baptiſm

Baptiſm into the Vow and Covenant of Chriſtianity, the will and act of the Parents ſtanding for the Child's till he come to age: But if you ſay that upon a Parity of Reaſon, all Princes and Rulers and Paſtors may do ſo with all that are their inferiours, it will ſeem incredible to moſt Chriſtians. 5. Becauſe publick Magiſtrates are juſtly ſuppoſed to be ſo diſtant from almoſt all their individual Subjects, as not to be capable of ſo ſpeedy a diſowning their perſonal Vows. Whatever this Text doth, it is certain that other Texts enough forbid Covenants and Combinations againſt the Perſons or Power or Rights of our Governours, and not only againſt them but without them, in caſes where our place and calling alloweth us not to act without them. But it is certain that God who commanded all Iſrael to be entered ſucceſſively into the Covenant of Circumciſion with him, would not have held them guiltleſs for refuſing that Covenant, if the Prince had been againſt it. And few Divines think that a Subject or Soldier or Servant that hath vowed to forbear Wine or Feaſting or Marriage is diſcharged, if his Prince or Captain or Maſters be againſt it. Jonathan and David were under an Oath of friendſhip; (called the Lord's Oath, 2 Sam. 21. 7.) Saul as a Parent could not diſcharge Jonathan as being a Man at full age. Quære whether Saul as a King being againſt it, did null the Oath to David and Jonathan? No, the Scripture ſheweth the contrary. 8. Becauſe elſe that benefit which God extendeth only to a weaker ſort, would extend to any, the wiſeſt and moſt learned Perſons through the World, whoſe Vows to God even for the afflicting of their own Souls, may be nulled by the King or other Superiours. Many ſuch reaſons are urged in this caſe.

3. It is uncertain whether this Chapter extend to aſſertory or teſtimonial Oaths, if not certain that it doth not:) It ſpeaketh but of binding their Souls to God, which is to offer or do ſomething which by error may prove prejudicial to them. But if a Parent or Husband (much more a King or General) might nullifie all the teſtimonial Oaths of their Inferiors that are given in judgment, or diſcharge all their Subjects from the guilt of all the Lies or falſe Oaths which they ſhall take, it would make a great change in the morality of the World.

4. It is not paſt all Controverſie how far this Law is yet in force: Seeing the Moſaical Law as ſuch is abrogated; this can be now no further in force than as it is the Law of nature, or ſome way confirmed or revived by Chriſt. The equity ſeemeth to be natural.

Rule 31. §. 53. Rule 31. It is certain that whoever this power of diſannulling Vows belongeth to, and to whomſoever it may be given, that it extendeth not to diſcharge us from the Promiſe or Vow of that which is antecedently our neceſſary duty by the Law of God. Elſe they ſhould diſpenſe with the Law of God, when none but the Law-giver can relax or diſpenſe with his Laws, (unleſs it be one ſuperior to the Law-giver:) Therefore none can diſpenſe with the Laws of God. But I ſpeak this but of a Duty neceſſary alſo as a means to our Salvation or the good of others, or the honouring of God: For otherwiſe as to ſome ſmaller things, the Duty may be ſuch as Man cannot diſpenſe with, and yet a Vow to do that duty may be unneceſſary and ſinful. As if I ſwear to keep all the Law of God, and never to ſin, or never to think a ſinful thought: To do this is good, but to Vow it is bad, becauſe I may foreknow that I ſhall break it.

Rule 32. §. 54. Rule 32. In ſome caſes a Vow may oblige you againſt that which would have been your duty if you had not vowed, and to do that which would elſe have been your ſin: viz. If it be ſuch a thing as is ſin or duty but by ſome leſſer accident, which the accident of a Vow may preponderate or prevail againſt. As if you ſwear, to give a Penny to a wandring Beggar, or to one that needeth it not, which by all circumſtances would have been an unlawful miſ-employing of that which ſhould have been better uſed; yet it ſeemeth to me your duty to do it when you have moved it. To caſt away a Cup of Drink is a Sin, if it be cauſeleſly: But if you vow to do it, it is hard to ſay that a Man ſhould rather be perjured than caſt away a Cup of Drink, or a Penny or a Pin: The Jeſuits think it lawful to exerciſe the Obedience of their Novices by bidding them ſometime caſt a Cup of Wine into the ſink, or do ſome ſuch action which cauſeleſly done were Sin: And ſhall not a Vow require it more ſtrongly? Suppoſe it would be your duty to pray or read at ſuch or ſuch an hour of the Day (as being fitteſt to your body and occaſions:) yet if you have (fooliſhly) vowed againſt it, it ſeemeth to me to be your duty to put it off till another time. For Perjury is too great a thing to be yielded to on every ſuch ſmall occaſion. Dr. Sanderſon (ubi ſupra) giveth this inſtance. If there be a Law that no Citizen elected to it, ſhall refuſe the office of a Prætor: And he that doth refuſe it ſhall be fined: Cajus ſweareth that he will not bear the Office: His Oath is unlawful (and Diſobedience would have been his Sin if he were free) yet it ſeems he is bound to pay his fine, and diſobey the precept of the Law, rather than break his Vow. Sanderſ. pag. 73.

§. 55. Rule 33. There are ſo great a number of Sins and Duties that are ſuch by accidents and circumſtantial alterations, and ſome of theſe greater and ſome leſs, that it is a matter of exceeding great difficulty in morality to diſcern when they are indeed Sins and Duties and when not, which muſt be by diſcerning the preponderancy of accidents; and therefore it muſt be exceeding difficult to diſcern when a Vow ſhall weigh down any of theſe accidents and when not. Rule 33.

§. 56. Rule 34. The exceeding difficulty and frequency of ſuch caſes maketh it neceſſary to thoſe that have ſuch entanglements of Vows, to have a very wiſe and faithful Counſellor to help them better to reſolve their particular Caſes, upon the knowledge of every circumſtance, than any Book or general Rules can do, or any that are not ſo perfectly acquainted with the caſe. And O what a great ability is neceſſary in Divines that are employed in ſuch works! Rule 34.

§ 57. Rule 35. Thus alſo the caſe muſt be reſolved whether an Oath bindeth that hindreth a greater good which I might do if I had not taken it. In ſome caſes it may bind: As if I ſwear to acquaint none with ſome excellent Medicine which I could not have known my ſelf unleſs I had ſo ſworn: Or in caſe that the breaking of the Oath, will do more hurt to me or others than the good comes to which I omit: Or in caſe all things conſidered, the doing of that good hic & nunc is not my Duty: See Dr. Sanderſ. of the difficulties here alſo, pag. 78, 79. Rule 35. Sanderſ. Præl. 3. Sect. 12.

§. 58. Rule 36. No perſonal hurt or temporal loſs is any ſufficient cauſe for the violation of an Oath. He that taketh a falſe Oath, or breaketh a promiſſory Oath for the ſaving of his Life or a Thouſand Mens Lives, or for Lands or Riches or Crowns and Kingdoms, hath no conſiderable excuſe for his Perfidiouſneſs and Perjury, all temporal things being ſuch inconſiderable trifles in compariſon of the will and pleaſure of God, and Life everlaſting: That which will not juſtifie a Lye, will much leſs juſtifie Perjury. Rule 36. Pſal. 15. 5. Sanderſ. pag. 80, 81.

§. 59. Rule 37. If the matter of an Oath prove only a Temptation to ſin, and not Sin it ſelf, it muſt be kept: But with the greater vigilancy and reſolution! As if a Man have married a froward Wife that will be a Temptation to him all his Life, he is not diſobliged from her. Rule 37.

§. 60. Rule 38. If the matter of an Oath be ſuch as maketh me directly the Tempter of my ſelf or others, it is a Sin, and not to be kept, unleſs ſome greater good Rule 38.

preponderate that evil. For though it be no Sin to be tempted, yet it is a Sin to Tempt: Though it be no Sin to tempt by a neceſſary tryal (as a Maſter may lay Money before a ſuſpected Servant to try whether he be a Thief,) nor no Sin to tempt accidentally by the performance of a Duty (as a holy Life doth accidentally tempt a malignant Perſon to hatred and perſecution;) yet it is a Sin to be directly and needleſly a Tempter of our ſelves or others unto Sin; and therefore he that voweth it muſt not perform it. As if you had vowed to perſwade any to Unchaſtity, Intemperance, Error, Rebellion, &c.

Rule 39. Of Accidental Evil or Temptation vowed.

§. 61. Rule 39. If the matter of an Oath be ſuch as accidentally layeth ſo ſtrong a temptation before Men (eſpecially before a multitude,) as that we may foreſee it's exceeding likely to draw them into Sin, when there is no greater good to preponderate the evil of ſuch a Temptation, it is a Sin to do that thing, though in performance of a Vow. When actions are good or evil only by accident, then Accidents muſt be put in the ballance againſt each other, and the weightieſt muſt preponderate. As in matter of temporal Commodity or Diſcommodity, it is lawful to do that action which accidentally bringeth a ſmaller hurt to one Man, if it bring a greater good to many; or which hurteth a private Perſon to the great good of the Commonwealth: But it is not lawful to do that which clearly tendeth (though but by accident) to do more hurt than good. As to ſell Powder and Arms, when we foreſee it will be uſed againſt the King and Kingdom; or to ſell Ratsbane when you foreſee it is like to be uſed to poiſon Men. Much more ſhould the Salvation of many or one be preferred before our temporal commodity; and therefore for a leſſer good, we may not tempt Men to evil, though but accidentally: As he that liveth where there is but little need of Taverns or Alehouſes, and the common uſe of them is for Drunkenneſs, it is unlawful for him there to ſell Ale or Wine, unleſs he can keep Men from being drunk with it: (As if they take it home with them, or be unruly he cannot.) For thus to be a foreknowing Tempter and occaſion, unneceſſarily, is to be a Moral cauſe. Two things will warrant a Man to do that which by accident tempeth or occaſioneth other Men to ſin: One is a command of God: When it is a duty which we do: The other is a greater good to be attained by the action, which cannot be attained in a leſs dangerous way. As in a Country where there is ſo great a neceſſity of Alehouſes and Taverns that the good that is done by them is greater than the hurt is like to be, though ſome will be drunk; it is lawful to uſe theſe Trades though ſome be hurt by it: It is lawful to ſell Fleſh though ſome will be gluttonous: It is lawful to uſe moderate decent Ornaments though ſome vain Minds will be tempted by the ſight to luſt. As it is lawful to go to Sea though ſome be drowned. To act a Comedy, or play at a lawful Game, with all thoſe cautions, which may ſecure you that the good of it is like to be greater than the hurt, is not unlawful: But to ſet up a common Play-houſe or Gaming-houſe, where we may foreſee that the miſchief will be far greater than the good (though the acts were lawful in themſelves,) this is but to play the Devil's part, in laying ſnares for Souls: Men are not thus to be tiſed to Hell and damned in ſport, though but accidentally, and though you vowed the act.

Rule 40. Of Scandal. Sanderſ. pag. 82.

§. 62. Rule 40. Thus alſo muſt the caſe of ſcandal be reſolved: As ſcandal ſignifieth an action that occaſioneth another to ſin, or a ſtumbling block at which we foreſee he is like to fall to the hurt of his Soul, (which is the ſenſe that Chriſt and his Apoſtles uſually take it in) ſo it is the ſame caſe with this laſt handled, and needs no other reſolution: But as ſcandal ſignifieth (in the late abuſive ſenſe) the meer diſpleaſing of another, or occaſioning him to cenſure you for a Sinner, ſo you muſt not break a Vow to eſcape the cenſure or diſpleaſure of all the World. Otherwiſe Pride would be ſtill producing Perjury, and ſo two of the greateſt Sins would be maintained.

Rule 41.

§. 63. Rule 41. Though in the Queſtion about the obligation of an Oath that is taken ignorantly, or by deceit, there be great difficulties, yet this much ſeemeth clear, 1. That he that is culpably ignorant is more obliged by his Vow or Contract while he uſeth all the outward form, than he that is inculpably ignorant. 2. That though the deceit (as the force) of him that I ſwear to, do forfeit his right to what I promiſe him, yet my Oath or Vow obligeth me to do or give the thing, having intereſſed God himſelf in the cauſe. 3. That all ſuch errors of the eſſentials of an Oath or Vow as nullifie it (of which I ſpake before) or make the matter ſinful, do infer a nullity in the obligation (or that it muſt not be kept) but no ſmaller error (though cauſed by Deceit) doth diſoblige.

Queſt.

The commoneſt doubt is, Whether an error about the very Perſon that I ſwear to, and this cauſed by his own deceit doth diſoblige me?

Anſw.

All grant that I am obliged notwithſtanding any circumſtantial error, (as if I think a Woman rich whom I marry, and ſhe prove poor, or wiſe and godly, and ſhe prove fooliſh or ungodly: Yea if the error be about any integral part; as if I think ſhe had two Eyes or Legs, and ſhe have but one:) And all grant that an error about an eſſential part, that is, which is eſſential to the Relation or thing Vowed, (if inculpable at leaſt) diſobligeth: As if I took a Man in Marriage thinking he had been a Woman! Or if I took a Perſon for a Paſtor, a Phyſician, a Councellor, a Pilot, that hath no tolerable ability or skill in the eſſentials of any of thoſe profeſſions. But whether I am bound if I ſwear to Thomas thinking it was John, or if I marry Leah thinking ſhe is Rachel, is the great doubt. And moſt Caſuiſts ſay I am not: And therefore I dare not be bold to contradict them. But I much ſuſpect that they fetch'd their deciſion from the Lawyers; who truly ſay, that in foro civili it inferreth no obligation: But whether it do not oblige me Ethically and in foro conſcientiæ & cœli I much doubt, 1. Becauſe it ſeemeth the very caſe of Joſhua and the Iſraelites, who by the guile of the Gibeonites were deceived into an error perſonarum, taking them to be other Perſons than they were: And yet that this Oath was obligatory, ſaith Dr. Sanderſon, is apparent, 1. In the Text itſelf, Joſh. 9. 19. 2. In the miracle wrought for that Victory which Joſhua obtained in defending the Gibeonites when the Sun ſtood ſtill, Joſh. 10. 8, 13. 3. In the ſevere revenge that was taken on the Lives of Saul's poſterity for offering to violate it, 2 Sam. 21. 2. And this ſeemeth to be the very caſe of Jacob who took not himſelf diſobliged from Leah notwithſtanding the miſtake of the Perſon through deceit. And though the Concubitus was added to the contract, that obliged moſt as it was the perfecting of the Contract, which an Oath doth as ſtrongly. 3. And the nature of the thing doth confirm my doubt; becauſe when I ſee the Perſon before me there is the individuum determinatum, in the hac homo, and ſo all that is eſſential to my Vow is included in it: If I miſtake the name or the quality, or birth or relations of the Perſon, yet my Covenant is with this determinate Perſon that is preſent, though I be induced to it by a falſe ſuppoſition that ſhe is another. But this I leave to the diſcuſſion of the judicious.

Sanderſ. p. 122.

Sanderſ. p. 120, 121

This ſeemeth the caſe of Iſaac in bleſſing Jacob: The error perſonæ cauſed by Jacob's own deceit did not nullifie the bleſſing, bleſſing it was fixed on the determinate Perſon that it was ſpoken to.

Rule 42.

§. 64. Rule 42. The queſtion alſo is weighty and of frequent uſe, if a Man vow a thing as a duty in obedience to God and Conſcience, which he would not have done if he had taken it to be no duty, and if he afterward find that it was no duty, is he obliged to keep this Vow? And the true anſwer is, that the diſcovery of his error doth only diſcover the nullity of his obligation to make make that Vow, and to do the thing antecedently to the Vow: But if the thing be lawful, he is bound to it by his Vow notwithſtanding the miſtake which induced him to make it.

Rule 43. Sanderſ. p. 84. §. 65. Rule 43. Vows about trifles (not unlawful) muſt be kept though they are ſinfully made. As if you vow to take up a Straw, or to forbear ſuch a bit or ſort of Meat, or Garment, &c. But to make ſuch is a great Prophanation of God's Name, and a taking it in vain as common Swearers do.

Rule 45. §. 66. Rule 44. A general Oath though not taken upon a particular occaſion muſt be generally or ſtrictly interpreted (unleſs there be ſpecial reaſons for a reſtraint) from the Matter, End, or other Evidence.) As if you are afraid that your Son ſhould marry ſuch a Woman, and therefore ſwear him not to marry without your conſent: He is bound thereby neither to marry that Woman nor any other. Or if your Servant haunt one particular Alehouſe, and you make him forſwear all Houſes in general, he muſt avoid all other. So Dr. Sanderſon inſtanceth in the Oath of Supremacy, p. 195.

Rule 45. §. 67. Rule 45. He that abſolutely voweth or implicitely to obey another in all things, is bound to obey him in all lawful things, where neither God, nor other Superiour or other Perſon is injured; unleſs the nature of the relation, or the ends or reaſons of the Oath, or ſomething elſe infer a limitation as implied.

Rule 46. §. 68. Rule 46. Still diſtinguiſh between the falſhood in the words as diſagreeing to the thing ſworn, and the falſhood of them as diſagreeing from the Swearers Mind. The former is ſometime excuſable, but the latter never.

Rule 47. There are many other Queſtions about Oaths that belong more to the Chapter of Contracts and Juſtice between Man and Man; and thither I refer them.

CHAP. VI.

Directions to the People concerning their Internal and Private Duty to their Paſtors, and the Improvement of their Miniſterial Office and Gifts.

THE Peoples Internal and Private Duty to their Paſtors (which I may treat of without an appearance of encroachment upon the work of the Canons, Rubricks and Dioceſans) I ſhall open to you in theſe Directions following.

Dir. 1. §. 1. Direct. 1. Underſtand firſt the true Ground, and Nature, and Reaſons of the Miniſterial Office, or elſe you will not underſtand the Grounds, and Nature, and Reaſons of your Duty to them. The Nature and Works of the Miniſterial Office I have ſo plainly opened already that I ſhall refer you to it to avoid repetition. Here are two ſorts of Reaſons to be given you: 1. The Reaſons of the neceſſity of the Miniſterial work: 2. Why certain Perſons muſt be ſeparated to this work. and it muſt not be left to all in common.

Diſput. 2. of Church Government, Ch. 1. And Univerſal Concord.

Of the difference between fixed and unfixed Miniſters ſee my Diſp. 2. & 3. of Church-Government, and Joſ. Acoſta l. 5. c. 21, 22. de Miſſionibus.

§. 2. 1. The neceſſity of the work it ſelf appeareth in the very Nature of it, and enumeration of the parts of it. Two ſorts of Miniſters Chriſt hath made uſe of for his Church: The firſt ſort was for the Revelation of ſome new Law or Doctrine, to be the Churches Rule of Faith or Life: And theſe were to prove their authority and credibility by ſome Divine Atteſtation; which was eſpecially by Miracles; and ſo Moſes revealed the Law to the Jews, and (Chriſt and) the Apoſtles revealed the Goſpel. The ſecond ſort of Miniſters are appointed to guide the Church to Salvation by opening and applying the Rule thus already ſealed and delivered: And theſe as they are to bring no new Revelations or Doctrines of Faith, or Rule of Life, ſo they need not bring any Miracle to prove their call or authority to the Church: For they have no power to deliver any new Doctrine or Goſpel to the Church, but only that which is confirmed by Miracles already. And it is impudency to demand that the ſame Goſpel be proved by new Miracles by every Miniſter that ſhall expound or preach it: That would make Miracles to be no Miracles.

The work of the Miniſtry.

§. 3. The work of the ordinary Miniſtry (ſuch as the Preiſts and Teachers were under the Law, and ordinary Paſtors and Teachers are under the Goſpel) being only to gather and govern the Churches, their work lay in explaining and applying the Word of God, and delivering his Sacraments, and now containeth theſe particulars following: 1. To preach the Goſpel for the Converſion of the unbelieving and ungodly World. And that is done, partly by expounding the words by a Tranſlation into a Tongue which the hearers or readers underſtand; and partly by opening the Senſe and Matter. 2. In this they are not only Teachers, but Meſſengers ſent from God the Father, Son, and Holy Ghoſt to charge, and command, and intreat Men in his Name to repent, and believe, and be reconciled to God; and in his Name to offer them a ſealed pardon of all their Sins, and title to eternal Life. 3. Thoſe that become the Diſciples of Chriſt, they are (as his Stewards) to receive into his Houſe, as Fellow Citizens of the Saints, and of the Houſhold of God; and as his Commiſſioned Officers, to ſolemnize by Baptiſm their entrance into the holy Covenant, and to receive their engagement to God, and to be the Meſſengers of God's engagement unto them, and by Inveſtiture to deliver them by that Sacrament, the pardon of all their Sin, and their Title by Adoption to eternal Life: As a Houſe is delivered by the delivery of a Key, or Land, by a Twig and Turfe, or Knighthood by a Sword or Garter, &c. 4. Theſe Miniſters are to gather theſe Converts into ſolemn Aſſemblies, and ordered Churches for their ſolemn worſhipping of God, and mutual Edification, Communion and ſafe proceeding in their Chriſtian Courſe. 5. They are to be the ſtated Teachers of the Aſſemblies, by expounding and applying that Word which is fit to build them up. 6. They are to be the Guides of the Congregation in publick Worſhip, and to ſtand between them and Chriſt in things pertaining to God, ſubſervient to Chriſt in his Prieſtly Office: And ſo both for the People, and alſo in their names, to put up the publick Prayers and Praiſes of the Church to God. 7. It is their Duty to adminiſter to them as in the Name and ſtead of Chriſt, his Body and Blood as broken and ſhed for them, and ſo in the frequent renewals of the holy Covenants to ſubſerve Chriſt eſpecially in his Prieſtly Office, to offer and deliver Chriſt and his Benefits to them, and to be their Agent in offering themſelves to God. 8. They are appointed to overſee and govern the Church, in the publick ordering of the ſolemn Worſhip of God, and in rebuking any that are there diſorderly, and ſeeing that all things be done to Edification. 9. They are appointed as Teachers for every particular Member of the Church to have private and perſonal recourſe to (as far as may be,) for the reſolving of their weighty doubts, and inſtruction in caſes of difficulty and neceſſity, and for the ſettling of their Peace and Comfort. 10. They are appointed as Phyſicians under Chriſt, to watch over all the individual Members of their charge, and take care that they be not infected with Hereſie, or corrupted by Vice; and to admoniſh the Offenders, and reduce them unto the way of Truth and Holineſs, and if they continue after publick admonition, to reject them from the Communion of the Church, and command the Church to avoid them. 11. They are as to bind over the impenitent to anſwer their contumacy at the Bar of Chriſt, ſo to abſolve the penitent, and comfort them, and require the Church to re-admit them to their Communion. 12. They are appointed, as Stewards in the houshold of Christ, to have a tender Care of the very bodily welfare of their Flocks, so as to endeavour the supplying of their wants, and stirring up the Rich to relieve the Poor, and faithfully (by themselves or the Deacons) to distribute what is intrusted with them for that use. 13. They are especially to visit the Sick, and when they are sent for, to pray for them and with them, and to instruct them in their special Preparations for Death, and confirm them against those last Assaults. 14. They are appointed to be the publick Champions of the Truth, to defend it against all Heretical and prophane Opposers, and thereby to preserve the Flock from being seduced 15. They are appointed to be (under Christ the Head) the Nerves and Ligaments of the several Churches, by which they are kept not only in vigor by Communication of Nutriment, but also in Concord, and such Communion as they are capable of, by the Correspondencies and Consultations, and Councils of their Pastors. All these are the distinct and special uses to which Christ hath appointed the Office of the sacred Ministry: Which having but named to you, I need to say no more to shew you the Excellency, and Necessity, and Benefits of it.

§ 4. Herein also the Reasons are apparent, why Christ did institute this Sacred Office. 1. Because it was meet his Kingdom should have Officers, suited to his work in the Administration of it: 2. It was meet that they be Men, like our selves, that we can familiarly converse with. 3. The great necessity of his Church required it, where the most are weak, and insufficient to perform all these Offices for themselves; and cannot well subsist without the support of others. It was meet therefore that the Pastors were selected Persons, wiser, and holier, and stronger than the People, and fit for so great and necessary a Work. 4. It was requisite also to the Order of the Church: For if it were like an Army without Officers, there would be nothing but Confusion, and neither Order nor Edification.

§. 5. By this you may also see the Nature and Reasons of your Obedience to your Pastors: As they are not appointed to govern you by * force, but willingly, † not for filthy lucre, but of a ready mind, not as being Lords over Gods Heritage, but as ensamples to the flock, so you must willingly and chearfully obey them in their work. As their * Government is not by any bodily penalties or mulcts (for that is the Magistrates work and not theirs) but a Government by the force of TRUTH and LOVE; so your Obedience of them consisteth in the Loving and Thankful Reception of the Truth which they teach you, and the Mercies which they offer you from Christ.

* Princes may force their subjects by the temporal Sword which they bear: Bishops may not force their flock with any corporal or external Violence: † Bilson Christ. Subjection, Page 525. † 1 Pet. 5, 1, 2, 3. * Dr. Hammond Annot. q. d. The Bishops of your several Churches, I exhort —— Take care of your several Churches, and Govern them, not as Secular Rulers, by force, but as Pastors do their Sheep, by calling and going before them, that so they may follow of their own accord. If you would know the true Nature and extent of the Bishops Work and Office, read carefully the said Dr. Hammonds Paraphrase on Acts 20. 20, 28. Heb. 13. 7, 17. 1 Tim. 5. 17. 1 Thess. 5. 12. Heb. 13. Annot. a. Tit. 3. 10. 1 Cor. 12. 28. Annot. e. James 5. 14. Annot. Acts 11. 30. Annot. b. Acts 14. 23.

§ 6. You see then that the Reasons of your Obedience are manifold: 1. Some of them from God: He hath sent his Messengers to you, and set his Officers over you; and Christ hath told you that he that Luke 10. 16. heareth them heareth him, and he that despiseth them despiseth him, and him that sent him: He commandeth you to hear and obey them as his Officers. 2. From themselves: They have Authority by their Commission, and they have Ability in their Qualifications, which require your Obedience and Improvement. 3. From your selves: Have you Reason to obey your natural Parents on whom your livelihood in the World dependeth? Have you Reason to obey him that tendreth you a Pardon from the King when you are condemned? Or that offereth you Gold or Riches in your want? Or that inviteth you to a Feast in a time of Famine? Or that offereth to defend and save you from your Enemies? Much more have you reason to obey Christs Ministers when they call you to Repentance, and offer you Pardon of Sin, and Peace, and Salvation, and Eternal Life. Did you ever hear a Man so mad or churlish, as to say to one that offered him Riches, or Liberty, or Life, I am not bound to obey you: Offer them to those that you have Authority over! When the Office of the Ministry is as well subservient to Christ as a Saviour and Benefactor, as to Christ as your Teacher and your King, the very Nature of their Work engageth you to obey them as you Love your selves. If you were in Hell, and Christ should send for you out, you would not refuse to go, till the Messenger had proved his Authority: And when you are the Heirs of Hell, condemned by the Law, and going thither, will you refuse to turn back, and yield to the offers and commands of Grace, till you have skill enough to read the Ministers Commission?

§. 7. By this also you see, that the Power of your Pastors is not absolute, nor coercive and Lordly but Ministerial: And though the Papists make a scorn of the word [Minister] it is but in that Pride, and Passion, and Malice which maketh them speak against their Knowledge: For their Pope himself calleth himself the Servant of Gods Servants; and Paul saith, 1 Cor. 4. 1. Let a man so account of us as of the Ministers of Christ, and Stewards of the Mysteries of God, 1 Cor. 3. 5. Who then is Paul, and who is Apollo, but Ministers by whom ye believed, 2 Cor. 3. 6. Who made us able Ministers of the New Testament. 2 Cor. 6. 4. In all things approving our selves as the Ministers of God: Even Magistrates, yea, and Angels are not too good to be called (and used as) the Ministers of God for the good of his Servants, Rom. 13. 3, 6. Heb. 1. 7. and to minister for them who shall be heirs of Salvation, Heb. 1. 14. Yea Christ himself is so called, Rom. 15. 8. And therefore you have no more excuse for your disobedience, than for refusing his help that would pull you out of Fire or Water when you are perishing. You see here that your Pastors cannot command you what they list, nor how they list. They have nothing to do with the Magistrates work; nor can they usurp the Power of a Master over his Servants, nor command you how to do your work and worldly Business (except in the Morality of it). In the fifteen particulars before mentioned their Work and Office doth consist, and in those it is that you owe them a rational Obedience.

Chrysost. cited by Bilson, p. 525. But if any Man wander from the right path of the Christian Faith, the Pastor must use great pains, care and patience: For he may not be forced, nor constrained with terrour, but only perswaded to return entirely to the Truth. A Bishop cannot cure Men with such Authority as a Shepherd doth his sheep.

It is very obſervable that Acoſta ſaith l. 6. c. 12. That they found it an old cuſtom among the Indians to confeſs their Sins to the Prieſts before the Goſpel came thither.

5. You muſt hear your Biſhops and Repent, when in Meekneſs and Love they convince and admoniſh you againſt your Sins, and not reſiſt the Word of God which they powerfully and patiently lay home to your Conſciences, nor put them with grief to cut you off, as impenitent in ſcandalous Sins, from the Communion of the Church.

6. You muſt after any ſcandalous Sin which hath brought you under the Cenſure of the Church, go humble your ſelves by penitent Confeſſion, and crave Abſolution and Reſtoration to the Communion of the Church.

8. You muſt ſend for him in your ſickneſs to pray with you and adviſe you: See Dr. Hammond on James 5. 14. And on 1 Cor. 12. 28. he ſaith, [Polycarp himſelf ſpeaking of the Elders or Biſhops ſaith, They viſit and take care of all that are ſick, not neglecting the Widows, the Orphans or the Poor:] And Dr. Hammond on James 5. 14. ſheweth out of Antiquity, that [One part of the Biſhops Office is ſet down, that they are thoſe that viſit all the Sick:] Not but that a Stranger may be made uſe of alſo: But ordinarily and eſpecially your own Biſhop muſt be ſent for: Becauſe as you are his ſpecial Charge, and he watcheth for your Souls as one that muſt give account, Heb. 13. 17. So it is ſuppoſed that he is better acquainted with your ſpiritual State and Life than others are, and therefore in leſs danger of wronging you by miſtake and miſapplications: For it's ſuppoſed that you have acquainted him with your perſonal Condition in your Health, having taken him as your ordinary Counſellour for your Souls, and that he hath acquainted himſelf with your Condition, and confirmed you, and watcht over you by Name, as Ignatius to Polycarp Biſhop of Smyrna ſaith [Sæpe Congregationes fiant: Ex nomine omnes quære: Servos & ancillas ne deſpicias] (as Biſhop Uſhers old Latine Tranſlation hath it) [Let Congregations be often held: Enquire after all by Name: Deſpiſe not Servants and Maids.] The Biſhop took notice of every Servant and Maid by Name; and he had opportunity to ſee whether they were in the Congregation.

9. You muſt uſe him as your Leader or Champion againſt all Hereticks, Infidels and ſubtle Adverſaries of the Truth, with whom you are unable to contend your ſelves, that your Biſhops may clear up and defend the Cauſe of Chriſt and Righteouſneſs, and by irreſiſtible Evidence, ſtop the Mouths of all gain-ſayers. It is for your own Benefit, and not for theirs, that you are required in all theſe Works of their Office to uſe them and readily obey them. And what hurt can it do you to obey them in any of theſe?

I hope all this will tell you what a Biſhop indeed is.

§. 9. Direct. 3. Underſtand how it is that Chriſt doth authorize and ſend forth his Miniſters, leſt Wolves and Deceivers ſhould either obtrude themſelves upon you as your lawful Paſtors, or ſhould alienate you from thoſe that God hath ſet over you by puzzling you in ſubtle queſtioning or diſputing againſt their call. Not only Pauls warnings, Acts 20. 30. and 2 Tim. 3. 6. but lamentable Experience telleth us what an eager deſire there is in Proud and Self conceited Men, to obtrude themſelves as Teachers and Paſtors on the Churches, to creep into Houſes and lead People captive, and draw away Diſciples after them, and ſay (and perhaps think) that others are Deceivers, and none are the true Teachers indeed but they. And the firſt part of the Art and Work of Wolves, is to ſeparate you from your Paſtors, and catch up the ſtraglers that are thus ſeparated: The malice, and ſlanders, and lies, and railing of hirelings and deceivers, and all the Powers of Hell, are principally poured out on the faithful Paſtors and Leaders of the Flocks: The principal Work of the Jeſuits againſt you, is to make you believe that your Paſtors are no true Paſtors, but uncalled private Perſons, and meer Uſurpers: And the Reaſon muſt be, becauſe they have not an Ordination of Biſhops ſucceſſively from the Apoſtles without Interruption. I confeſs if our Interruptions had been half as lamentable as theirs (by their Schiſms, and variety of Popes at once; and Popes accuſed, or condemned by General Councils, for Hereticks; and their variety of Ways of electing Popes, and their incapacities by Simony, Uſurpation, &c.) I ſhould think at leaſt that our Anceſtors had cauſe to have queſtioned the calling of ſome that were then over them. But I will help you in a few Words to diſcern the juggling of theſe Deceivers, by ſhewing you the Truth concerning the way of Chriſts giving his Commiſſion to the Miniſters that are truly called, and the needleſneſs of the Proof of an uninterrupted Succeſſion of regular Ordination, to your Reception of your Paſtors and their Miniſtrations.

ſtables are annually made in Corporations: The King by his Charter ſaith that [ever year at a certain time the Freemen or Burgeſſes ſhall meet, and chooſe one to be their Mayor, and the Steward or Town Clark ſhall give him his Oath, and thus or thus he ſhall be inveſted in his place, and this ſhall be his power, and work, and no other:] So the King by his Law appointeth that Conſtables and Church-wardens ſhall be choſen in every Pariſh. Now let our two queſtions be here decided: 1. Who it is that giveth theſe Officers their Power? 2. Whether an uninterrupted ſucceſſion of ſuch Officers through all generations ſince the enacting of that Law be neceſſary to the validity of the preſent Officers authority? To the firſt, It is certain that it is the King by his Law or Charter that giveth the Officers their Power; and that the Corporations and Pariſhes do not give it them by electing or inveſting them: Yea tho' the King hath made ſuch election and inveſtiture to be in a ſort his inſtrument in the conveying it, it is but, as the opening of the door to let them in, ſine quo non; but it doth not make the Inſtruments to be at all the Givers of the Power, nor were they the receiving, or containing mediate cauſes of it. The King never gave them the Power which the Officers receive, either to uſe, or to give: But only makes the Electors his Inſtruments to determine of the Perſon that ſhall receive the Power immediately from the Law or Charter; and the Inveſters he maketh his Inſtruments of ſolemnizing the Tradition and Admiſſion: Which if the Law or Charter make abſolutely neceſſary ad eſſe officii, it will be ſo: But if it make it neceſſary only ad melius eſſe, or but for order and regular admittance when no neceſſity hindreth it, the neceſſity will be no more. And to the ſecond queſtion, It is plain that the Law which is the Fundamentum juris remaining ſtill the ſame, if a Pariſh omit for divers Years to chooſe any Conſtable or Church-warden, yet the next time they do chooſe one according to Law, the Law doth authorize him, nevertheleſs, though there was an interruption or vacancy ſo long: And ſo in Corporations, (unleſs the Law or Charter ſay the contrary:) ſo is it in the preſent caſe. 1. It is the eſtabliſhed Law of Chriſt, which deſcribeth the Office, determineth of the degree and kind of Power, and granteth or conveyeth it, when the Perſon is determined of by the Electors and Ordainers, though by Ordination the Delivery and Admiſſion is regularly to be ſolemnized; which actions are of juſt ſo much neceſſity as that Law hath made them, and no more. 2. And if there were never ſo long an interruption or vacancy, he that afterward entereth lawfully, ſo as to want nothing which the Law of Chriſt hath made neceſſary to the being of the Office, doth receive his Power nevertheleſs immediately from the Law of Chriſt. And Bellarmine himſelf ſaith that it is not neceſſary to the People, and to the validity of Sacraments and Offices to them, to know that their Paſtors be truly called or ordained: And if it be not neceſſary to the validity of Sacraments, it is not neceſſary to the validity of Ordination. And W. Johnſon confeſſeth to me that Conſecration is not abſolutely neceſſary ad eſſe officii to the Pope himſelf: No nor any one ſort of Electors in his Election (p. 133.) And in his Repl. Term. Expl. p. 45. he ſaith [Neither Papal nor Epiſcopal juriſdiction (as all the Learned know) depends of Epiſcopal or Papal Ordination: Nor was there ever interruptions of ſucceſſions in Epiſcopal Juriſdiction in any See, for want of that alone, that is neceſſary for conſecrating others validly, and not for juriſdiction over them.] You ſee then how little ſincerity is in theſe Mens Diſputations, when they would perſwade you to reject your lawful Paſtors as no true Miniſters of Chriſt, for want of their Ordination or Succeſſion.

See my Diſput. with him of the ſucceſſive Viſibility of the Church, p. 336.

§. 11. Dir. 4. Though the Sacraments and other Miniſterial Offices are valid, when a Miniſter is qualified (in his abilities and call) but with ſo much as is eſſential to the Office, though he be defective in degree of parts and faithfulneſs, and have perſonal faults which prove his own deſtruction; yet ſo great is the difference between a holy, heavenly, learned, judicious, experienced, skilful, zealous, laborious, faithful Miniſter, and an ignorant, ungodly, idle, unskilful one; and ſo highly ſhould every wiſe Man value the beſt means and advantages to his eternal Happineſs, that he ſhould uſe all lawful means in his power to enjoy and live under ſuch an able, godly, powerful Miniſtry, though he part with his worldly wealth and pleaſure to attain it. I know no evil muſt be done for the attainment of the greateſt helps: For we cannot expect that God ſhould bleſs a ſinful courſe, or that our Sin ſhould tend to the ſaving of our Souls.) And I know God can bleſs the weakeſt means, when they are ſuch as he appointeth us to uſe; and can teach us by Angels when he denieth us the help of Men: But Scripture, Reaſon and Experience telleth us, that ordinarily he worketh morally by means, and fitteth the means to the work which he will do by them: And as he doth not uſe to light Men by a clod or ſtone, but by a Candle, nor by a rotten Poſt or Glow-worm ſo much as by a Torch or Luminary; ſo he doth not uſe to work as much, by an ignorant, drunken, idle Perſon; who deſpiſeth the God, the Heaven, the Chriſt, the Spirit, the Grace, the ſacred Word which he preacheth, and vilifieth both his own, and other Mens Souls; as he doth by an able and compaſſionate Miniſter. And the Soul is of ſo much more worth than the Body, and eternal things than Temporal, that a little commodity to the Soul in order to the ſecuring of our Salvation, muſt be preferred before a great deal of worldly Riches: He that knoweth what his Soul, his Saviour, and Heaven is worth, will not eaſily ſit down contented, under ſuch a dark and dull and ſtarving Miniſter, as he feeleth he can but little profit by, if better may be had on lawful terms. He that feeleth no difference between the Miniſtry of theſe two ſorts of Men, it is becauſe he is a ſtranger to the work of the Goſpel on the Soul: And if the Goſpel (in its truth or worth or uſe) be hid, it is hid to them that are loſt, the † God of this World having blinded their minds. It

And that you conſider as well where you may do moſt good, as where you may get moſt: For the way of greateſt Service, is the way of greateſt Gain.

Dir. 5. §. 12. Direct. 5. Underſtand what ſort and meaſure of Belief it is that you owe to your Teachers, that ſo your incredulity hinder not your faith in Chriſt, nor your overmuch credulity betray you not to Hereſie, nor make you the Servants of Men, contrary to Matth. 23. 8, 9, 10. Epheſ. 4. 13. 2 Cor. 1. 24. Acts 20. 30. We ſee on one ſide how many poor Souls are cheated into Schiſm and dangerous Errors, by forſaking their Teachers and refuſing their neceſſary help, and all upon this pretence, that [they muſt not make Men the Lords of their Faith, nor pin their Faith on the Miniſter's ſleeve, nor take their Religion upon truſt.] And on the other ſide we ſee among the Papiſts, and in every Sect, what lamentable work is made by an over-much credulity and implicite belief of ambitious, worldly, factious, proud and erroneous Guides. That you may eſcape both theſe extreams you muſt obſerve the truth of theſe concluſions following, which ſhew you what it is that your Teachers have to reveal unto you, and in what Order, and how far the ſeveral particulars are, or are not to be taken upon their words.

The Order and Credit of Miniſterial teaching the doctrin of ſalvation.

§. 13. And firſt, as a preparative, it is preſuppoſed, 1. That you find your ſelf ignorant, and one that needeth a Teacher: For if you think you know all that you need to know already, you are like a full Bottle that will hold no more. 2. It is preſuppoſed that you take the Man that you learn of to be wiſer than your ſelf and fit to teach you: Either becauſe Fame or other Mens Reports have told you ſo (as the Woman Joh. 4 drew the Samaritans to Chriſt,) or becauſe his own Profeſſion of skill doth make you think ſo (as you will hearken to him that profeſſeth to be able to teach you any Art or Science:) Or elſe becauſe your preſent hearing his diſcourſe doth convince you of his Wiſdom: By one of theſe means you are brought to think that he is one that you may learn of, and is fit for you to hear: (ſo that here is no need that firſt you take him to be infallible, or that you know which is the true Church, as the Papiſts ſay) theſe are ſuppoſed.

1 To know your ſelf. §. 14. The Doctrines which he is to teach you are theſe, and in this method to be taught. 1. He will teach you the natural knowledge of your ſelf; that being a Man, you are a rational free agent, made by another for his will and uſe, and by him to be ruled in order to your ultimate end, being wholly his, and at his diſpoſe.

2 To know God and Holineſs. §. 15. 2. He will next teach you that there is a God that made you, and what he is, and what relation he ſtandeth in to you, and you to him, as your Creator, your Owner, your Ruler and your Benefactor and your End: And what duty you owe him in theſe Relations, to ſubmit to him and reſign your ſelves to him as his own, to be obedient to all his Laws, and to love him and delight in him: And this with all your Heart and Soul and Might; even to ſerve him with all the Powers of your Soul and Body, and with your Eſtates and all his Bleſſings.

§. 16. 3. He will next teach you that this God hath made your Souls immortal, and that there is a Life after this where everlaſting Happineſs or Miſery will be your part, and where the great Rewards and Puniſhments are executed by the Judge of all the World as Men have behaved themſelves in this preſent Life. That your End and Happineſs is not here, but in the Life to come, and that this Life is the way and time of Preparation, in which everlaſting Happineſs is won or loſt. 3 To know the Life to come.

§. 17. Thus far he needeth no ſupernatural Proof of what he ſaith; but can prove it all to you from the Light of Nature: And theſe things you are not primarily to receive of him as a Teſtifier by meer believing him; but as a Teacher by learning of him the Evidences by which you may by degrees come to know theſe things your ſelves.

§. 18. Yet it is ſuppoſed that all along you give him ſo much credit as the difference between his Knowledge and yours doth require, ſo far as it appeareth to you. As you will hear a Phyſician, a Lawyer, a Philoſopher, or any Man with reverence, while he diſcourſeth of the matters of his own profeſſion; as confeſſing his judgment to be better than yours, and therefore more ſuſpecting your own apprehenſions than his. Not but that the Truth may compel you diſcern it, though you ſhould come with no ſuch reverence or reſpect to him; but then you caſt your ſelf upon much diſadvantage irrationally. And this humane belief of him is but a medium to your Learning, and ſo to the knowledge of the matter: So that you do not ſtop and reſt in his authority or credibility, but only uſe it in order to your diſcovery of that evidence which you reſt in, which as a Teacher he acquaints you with.

§. 19. Theſe things being thus far revealed by natural Light are (uſually) at firſt apprehended by natural Reaſon, not ſo as preſently to put or prove the Soul in a ſtate of ſaving Grace; but ſo as to awaken it to make further enquiry; and ſo when the Soul is come ſo far as to ſee the ſame truths by ſupernatural Grace in the ſupernatural Revelation of the Holy Scriptures, then they become more effectual and ſaving, which before were known preparatorily: And ſo the ſame Truths are then both the objects of Knowledge and of Faith.

§. 20. 4. Having acquainted you with Man's ultimate End and Happineſs in the Life to come, the next thing to be taught you by the Miniſters of Chriſt is, that [Chriſt as our Saviour, and Faith and Repentance and ſincere Obedience to be performed by us through his Grace, is the way to Heaven, or the means by which we muſt attain this end.] Though the Knowledge of the Preacher's Wiſdom, Piety and Credibility remove ſome impediments which would make the receiving of this the more difficult to you, yet you are not to take it barely on his word, as a point of humane Faith; but you are to call for his Proof of it, that you may ſee better Reaſons than his affirmations for the entertainment of it. 4 To know that Chriſt Faith, Repentance and Obedience is the way to it.

§. 21. 5. The proof that he will give you is in theſe two Propoſitions, 1. God's Revelations are all true: 2. This is one of God's Revelations: This is an argument [Whatſoever God ſaith is true: But this God ſaith, Therefore this is true.] The firſt Propoſition you are not to take upon the truſt of his word, but to learn of him as a Teacher to know it in its proper evidence: For it is the formal object of your Faith: The veracity of God is firſt known to you, by the ſame evidence and means as you know that there is a God: And then it is by the force of this that you believe the particular truths which are the material object of Faith. 2. And the ſecond Propoſition [that God hath revealed this] is orderly to be firſt proved, and ſo received upon its proper evidence; and not taken meerly upon your Teacher's word: Yet if you do believe him by a humane Faith as 5 To know that this is True becauſe God hath revealed it: or it is his Word.

as a Man that is likely to know what he ſaith, and this in order to a divine Faith, it will not hinder, but help your divine Faith and Salvation; and is indeed no more than is your Duty.

§. 22. Here note, 1. That primarily theſe two great Principles of Faith, [God is true, and this is God's Revelation] are not themſelves Credenda, the Material Objects of Divine Faith, but of Knowledge. 2. That yet the reſult of both is de fide, matter of Faith. 3. And the ſame Principles are ſecondarily de fide, as it is that there is a God. For though they are firſt to be known by natural evidence, yet when the Scripture is opened to us, we ſhall find them there revealed: And ſo the ſame thing may be the object both of Knowledge and of Faith. 4. And Faith it ſelf is a ſort of Knowledge: For though humane Faith have that uncertainty in its Premiſes (for the moſt part,) as forbiddeth us to ſay (properly) I know this to be true, becauſe ſuch a Man ſaid it: Yet Divine Faith hath that certainty which may make it an excellent ſort of Knowledge: (as I have proved copiouſly elſewhere.) In believing Man we argue thus [Whatſoever ſo wiſe and honeſt a Man ſaith, is credible, that is, moſt likely to be true: But this he ſaith: Therefore, &c.) But in believing God we argue thus:] Whatever God ſaith is credible, that is, as infallible Truth: But this God ſaith, Therefore, &c. [So that the word Credible, ſignifieth not the ſame thing in the two arguments; nor is Divine Faith and Humane Faith the ſame.

6 To know that the Goſpel is his Word.

§. 23. 6. The next thing that the Preacher hath to teach you is the proof of the foreſaid Minor Propoſition (for the Major was proved in the proof of a Deity) And that is thus: The Goſpel which Chriſt and his Apoſtles firſt preached, and is now delivered in the ſacred Scriptures is the Word (or infallible Revelation of God:) But this Doctrine, that Chriſt, with Faith and Repentance and Obedience on our parts, are the way to Life Eternal, is the Goſpel which Chriſt and his Apoſtles firſt preached, &c. Therefore it is the Word of God. For the Minor you need not take your Teachers word, if you can read; for you may ſee it in the Bible: (of which more anon:) But the Major is that which all Men deſire to be aſſured of (that the Goſpel is God's Word) And for that, though a belief of your Teacher is a help and good preparatory, yet you are not there to ſtop, but to uſe him as a Teacher to ſhew you the truth of it in the Proofs: (or elſe you muſt take any thing for God's Word, which your Teacher affirmeth to be ſuch.) And the proof which he will give you, muſt be ſome Divine Atteſtation which may be ſhewed to thoſe whom we would convince.

7. The Divine atteſtation of the Goſpel.

§ 24. 7. The Divine Atteſtation, which he is next to ſhew you, hath many parts, that it may be compleat and ſatisfactory.) 1. God's antecedent Teſtimony. 2. His inherent or impreſſed Teſtimony. 3. His adherent concomitant Teſtimony. 4. His ſubſequent Teſtimony. 1. God's Antecedent Teſtimony by which he atteſted the Goſpel, is the train of Promiſes, Prophecies, Types, and the preparing Miniſtery of John, which all foretold Chriſt, and were fulfilled in him. 2. God's impreſſed Teſtimony, is that Image and Superſcription of God (in his governing Wiſdom, Holineſs and Love) which is unimitably engraven on the Goſpel; as an Image upon a Seal, which is thereby made the Inſtrument to imprint the ſame on other things. Thus as the Sun, the Goſpel ſhineth, and proveth it ſelf by its proper Light. 3. The concomitant atteſtation of God is that of [multitudes of certain uncontrouled Miracles;] done by Chriſt and his Apoſtles, which proved the approving Hand of God, and oblige all rational Creatures to believe a Teſtimony ſo confirmed to them. Among theſe Chriſt's own Reſurrection and Aſcenſion, and the Gifts of his Apoſtles are the chief. 4. The ſubſequent atteſtation of God is, the power and efficacy of the Goſpel, in calling and ſanctifying unto Chriſt a peculiar People zealous of good Works, and directing and confirming them againſt all Temptations and Torments to the end: Producing that ſame Image of God on the Souls of his Elect, which is (more perfectly) engraven on the word it ſelf: Making ſuch changes, and gathering ſuch a People unto God, as no other Doctrine ever did. And all theſe four atteſtations are but one, even the Holy Spirit, who is become the great witneſs of Chriſt and his Goſpel in the World: viz. 1. The ſpirit of Prophecy is the antecedent atteſtation. 2. The Holy Image which the Spirit hath printed on the Goſpel it ſelf, is the inherent evidence. 3. The miracles of the Spirit, is the concomitant atteſtation or evidence. 4. And the ſanctifying work of the Spirit is the ſubſequent atteſtation, renewed and accompanying it to the end of the World. So that the Argument runs thus [That doctrine which hath this witneſs of the Holy Ghoſt, antecedently in ſuch Prophecies, inherently bearing his image ſo unimitably, accompanied by ſo many certain uncontrouled miracles, and followed and attended with ſuch matchleſs ſucceſs in the ſanctification of the Body of Chriſt, is fully atteſted by God to be his own: But ſuch is the doctrine of the Goſpel?] Therefore, &c. The Major you are not to take upon truſt from your Teachers (though your eſteem of their judgment may the better diſpoſe you to learn;) but you are to diſcern the evidences of truth which is apparent in it. For he that denieth this muſt by force of argument be driven to deny; 1. Either that God is the Governour of the World; or that he is the ſupreme; but ſay he is controuled by another. 2. Or that he is good and true; and muſt affirm that he either governeth the World by meer Deceits, and undiſcernable Lies, or that he hath given up the Power to ſome one that ſo governeth it: All which is but to affirm that there is no God (which is ſuppoſed to be proved before.)

8 To know the matters of fact ſubſervient to our Faith.

§. 25. 8. There now remaineth nothing to be taught you, as to prove the truth of the Goſpel, but only thoſe matters of fact which are contained and ſuppoſed in the Minor of the two laſt arguments: And they are theſe particulars. 1. That there were ſuch Perſons as Chriſt and his Apoſtles, and ſuch a Goſpel preached by them. 2. That ſuch miracles were done by them, as are ſuppoſed. 3. That both Doctrine and Miracles were committed to writing by them, in the Scriptures, for the certainer preſerving them to the Churches uſe. 4 That Churches were planted, and Souls converted and confirmed by them in the firſt Ages, many of whom did ſeal them with their Blood. 5. That there have been a ſucceſſion of ſuch Churches as have adhered to this Chriſt and Goſpel. 6. That this which we call the Bible is that very Book containing thoſe ſacred Writings fore-mentioned. 7. That it hath been ſtill copyed out, and preſerved without any ſuch depravation or corruption as might fruſtrate its ends. 8 That the Copies are ſuch out of which we have them tranſlated, and which we ſhew. 9. That they are ſo truly tranſlated as to have no ſuch corruptions or miſtakes, as to fruſtrate their ends, or make them unapt for the work they were appointed to. 10 That theſe particular words are indeed here written which we read; and theſe particular Doctrines containing the Eſſentials of Chriſtianity, together with the reſt of the material objects of Faith.

Eſt enim mirabilis quædam continuatio ſerieſque rerum, ut alia ex alia nexa, & omnes inter ſe aptæ colligataque videantur. Cic. de Natur. deor. pag. 6.

§. 26. All theſe ten particulars are matters of fact that are meerly ſubſervient to the conſtituting-principles of our Faith, but yet very needful to be known. Now the queſtion is, How theſe muſt be known, and received by us, ſo as not to invalidate our Faith? And how far our Teachers muſt be here believed? And firſt it is very uſeful to us to enquire, how ſo many of theſe matters of fact as were then exiſtent were known to the firſt Chriſtians? As how knew they in thoſe days that there were ſuch Perſons as Chriſt and his Apoſtles? That they preached ſuch Doctrines, and ſpake ſuch Languages, and did ſuch Works, and that they wrote ſuch Books, and ſent ſuch Epiſtles to the Churches, and that Churches were hereby converted and confirmed, and Martyrs ſealed this with their Blood; &c. It's eaſie to tell how they were certain of all theſe: Even by their own Eyes, and Ears, and ſenſible obſervation, as we know that there are Engliſhmen live in England: And thoſe that were remoter from ſome of the matters of fact, knew them by ſuch report of thoſe that did ſee them, as thoſe among us that never ſaw the King, or Court, or his Reſtoration, do know that ſuch a thing there was, and ſuch a Perſon there is. Thus they knew it then.

§. 27. From whence I note, 1. That in thoſe Days it was not neceſſary to the being of true Faith, that any ſupernatural teſtimony of the Spirit, or any other ſort of proof, than their very ſenſes and reaſon, ſhould acquaint them with thoſe matters of fact which they were eye-witneſſes of. 2. That credible Report or Hiſtory was then the means for any one that ſaw not a matter of fact to know as much as they that ſaw it. 3. That therefore this is now the way alſo of producing Faith: Some things we have yet ſight and ſenſe for: As that ſuch Bibles, and ſuch Churches are exiſtent; that ſuch holy effects this Doctrine hath upon the Soul (which we ſee in others by the Fruits; and after feel in our ſelves:) The reſt we muſt know by Hiſtory, Tradition, or Report.

§. 28. And in the reception of theſe hiſtorical Paſſages note further, 1. That human belief is here a naturally neceſſary means to acquaint us with the matter of our divine Belief: 2. That there are various degrees of this belief, and ſome need more of it by far than others, according to the various degrees of their ignorance: As he that cannot read himſelf, muſt know by humane belief (in great part) that the Preacher readeth truly, or that ſuch words indeed are in the Goſpel as he ſaith are there: But a literate Perſon may know this by his eye-ſight, and not take it upon truſt. So he that underſtandeth not Hebrew and Greek, muſt take it upon truſt that the Scripture is truly tranſlated: But another that underſtandeth thoſe Tongues, may ſee it with his Eyes. 3. Hiſtory being the proper means to know matters of fact that are done in times paſt, and out of our ſight, the ſame induſtry that is neceſſary to a through acquaintance with other Hiſtory, is neceſſary to the ſame acquaintance with this: 4. That the common beginning of receiving all ſuch hiſtorical truths, is firſt by believing our Teachers ſo far as becometh Learners, and in the mean time going on to learn till we come to know as much as they, and upon the ſame hiſtorical Evidence as they. 5. That if any Man be here neceſſitated to take more than others upon the truſt or belief of their Teachers, it is long of their Ignorance: And therefore if ſuch cry out againſt their taking things on truſt, it is like a mad Mans raving againſt them that would order him: Or as if one ſhould reproach a Nurſe for feeding Infants, and not letting them feed themſelves. Oportet diſcentem credere: He that will not believe his Teacher will never learn. If a Child will not believe his Maſter, that tells him which are the Letters, the Vowels and Conſonants, and what is their power, and what they ſpell, and what every word ſignifieth in the Language which he is teaching him, will he be ever the better for his teaching? 6. That he that knoweth theſe hiſtorical matters no otherwiſe than by the belief of his particular Teacher, may nevertheleſs have a divine and ſaving Faith: For though he believe by a humane Faith that theſe things were done, that this is the ſame Book, &c.) yet he believeth the Goſpel it ſelf (thus brought to his knowledge) becauſe God is true that hath atteſted it. Even as it was a ſaving Faith in Mary and Martha that knew by their Eyes and Ears, and not only by Belief, that Lazarus was raiſed, and that Chriſt preached thus and thus to them: But believed his Doctrine to be true, becauſe of God's Veracity who atteſted it. 7. That it is the great Wiſdom and Mercy of God to his weak and ignorant People, to provide them Teachers to acquaint them with theſe things, and to vouchſafe them ſuch a help to their Salvation; as to make it a ſtanding Office in his Church to the end of the World, that the Infants and ignorant might not be caſt off, but have Fathers, and Nurſes, and Teachers to take care of them. 8. But ſpecially mark, that yet theſe Infants have much diſadvantage in compariſon of others, that know all theſe matters of fact by the ſame convincing evidence as their Teachers: And that he that followeth on to learn it as he ought, may come to prove theſe ſubſervient matters of fact, by ſuch a concurrence of evidences, as amounteth to an infallibility or moral certainty, beyond meer humane faith as ſuch: As e. g. an illiterate Perſon that hath it but from others, may be certain that it is indeed a Bible which is ordinarily read and preached to him; and that it is ſo truly tranſlated as to be a ſufficient Rule of Faith and Life, having no miſtake which muſt hazzard a Man's Salvation: Becauſe the Bible in the Original Tongues is ſo commonly to be had, and ſo many among us underſtand it, and there is among them ſo great a contrariety of judgments and intereſts, that it is not poſſible but many would detect ſuch a publick Lye, if any ſhould deal falſly in ſo weighty and evident a caſe. There is a Moral certainty (equal to a Natural) that ſome actions will not be done by whole Countries which every individual Perſon hath Power and natural Liberty to do: As e. g. there is no Man in the Kingdom but may poſſibly kill himſelf, or may faſt to morrow, or may lie in Bed many Days together. And yet it is certain, that all the People in England will do none of theſe: So it is poſſible that any ſingle Perſon may lye even in a palpable publick caſe, as to pretend that this is a Bible when it is ſome other Book, or that this is the ſame Book that was received from the Apoſtles by the Churches of that age, when it is not it, &c. But for all the Country, and all the World that are competent Witneſſes, to agree to do this, is a meer impoſſibility, I mean ſuch a thing as cannot be done without a Miracle, yea, an univerſal Miracle. And more than ſo, it is impoſſible that God ſhould do a Miracle to accompliſh ſuch an univerſal Wickedneſs and Deceit; whereas it is poſſible that natural cauſes by a Miracle may be turned out of courſe, where there is nothing in the Nature of God againſt it (as that the Sun ſhould ſtand ſtill, &c.) We have a certainty that there was a Julius Caſar, a William the Conqueror, an Ariſtotle, a Cicero, an Auguſtine, a Chryſoſtome, and that the Laws and Statutes of the Land were really enacted by the Kings and Parliaments whoſe names they bear; becauſe the Natural and Civil Intereſts of ſo many Thouſands that are able to detect it, could never be reconciled here to a deceit. When Judges and Counſellors, Kings and Nobles, and Plaintiffs and Defendants utter Enemies are all agreed in it, it is more certain to a ſingle Perſon than if he had ſeen the paſſing of them with his Eyes. So in our caſe, when an Office was eſtabliſhed in the Church, to read and preach this Goſpel in the Aſſemblies; and when all the Congregation took it as the Charter of their Salvation, and

By all this it is eaſie to gather whether a Paſtor may do his work per alium. Saith Grotius de imp. p. 290. 291 Nam illud [Quodquis per alium facit per ſe facere videtur] ad eas demtaxat pertinet actiones quarum cauſa efficiens proxima à jure indefinita eſt. Yet people ſhould labour after ſuch maturity and ſtedfaſtneſs, that they might be able to ſtand if their Paſtors be dead or taken from them by perſecution, yea, or forſake the truth themſelves.

Victor. utic. ſaith of the People in Africk when their Paſtors were baniſhed, and others might not be ordained in their ſteads: Inter hæc tamen Dei populus in fide conſiſtens, ut examina apum cereas ædificantia manſiones, creſcendo melleis fidei claviculis firmabatur. Quanto magis affligebantur, tanto magis multiplicabantur. Victor. p. 382.

and the Rule of their Faith and Life; and when these Pastors and Churches were dispersed over all the Christian World, who thus worshipped God from day to day; and all Sects and Enemies were ready to have detected a Falsification or Deceit, it is here as impossible for such a kind of History, or Tradition, or Testimony to be false, in such material points of fact, as for one Man's senses to deceive him, and much more.

§. 29. Thus I have at once shewed you the true order of the preaching, and proofs, and receiving of the several matters of Religion, and how and into what our Faith must be resolved; and how far your Teachers are to be believed? And here you must specially observe two things, 1. That there can be no danger in this Resolution of Faith, of derogating either from the work of the Holy Ghost, or the Scriptures self-evidence, or any other cause whatever: Because we ascribe nothing to History or Tradition which was ascribed to any of these causes by the first Christians; but only put our Reception by Tradition instead of their Reception immediately by sense: Our receiving by infallible History, is but in the place of their receiving by sight; and not in the place of self evidence of Scripture, or any testimony or teaching of the Spirit. The method is exactly laid down, Heb. 2. 3, 4. How shall we escape if we neglect so great salvation, which at the first began to be spoken by the Lord, and was confirmed to us by them that heard him: God also bearing them witness both with signs and wonders and divers miracles, and gifts of the Holy Ghost according to his own will. Here is the sum of what I have been saying.

§. 30. 2. Observe also the great difference between us and the Papists in this controversie of using Tradition in the resolution of our Faith. 1. They decide the main question in gross by Tradition, viz. Whether the Scripture be the Word of God? But we only decide the questions about History or matters of fact by it, which are subservient to the other. 2. The Tradition which most of them plead is nothing but the authoritative judgment of the successive Pastors of the Church in a General Council confirmed by the Pope, and as another faction among them saith, The reception of the whole Church both Laity and Clergy; and this Church must be only the Roman Faction: But the Tradition which we plead is the concurrent Testimony of Friends and Foes, Orthodox and Hereticks; and of all the Churches throughout the World, both Greek and Latin, Ethiopian, Armenian, Protestants, &c. And this Testimony we plead, not meerly as a humane testimony (much less as such as is credible chiefly for the meer Power (real or pretended) of the Testifiers: But as such as by a concurrence of Testimonies and Circumstances hath (besides the Teachers authority) the evidences of infallible moral certainty) in the very History; as we have of the Statutes of the Realm.

Dir. 6. § 31. Direct. 6. Understand what kind and measure of Obedience it is that you owe your lawful Pastors, that you neither prove schismatical and unruly, nor yet have a hand in setting up Idols and Usurpations in the Church. This you may learn from the foregoing description of the Pastor's work. The kind of your obedience is commensurate to the kind of his Office and Work. You are not to obey your Pastors, as Civil Magistrates that bear the Sword; nor as Physicians to tell you what you must do for your health, nor as Artificers to command you how to Plow, and Sow, and Trade, &c. (except in the Morality of these:) But it is as your Teachers and Guides in matters of Salvation that you must obey them. And that not as Prophets or Law-givers to the Church; but as the stated Officers of Christ to open and apply the Laws that he hath given, and determine of such Circumstances as are subservient thereunto. Not as those that have dominion of your Faith, or may preach another Gospel, or contradict any truth of God, which by Scripture or Nature he hath revealed, or can dispence with any duty which he hath commanded: But as those that have all their power from God, and for God and your Salvation, and the good of other Mens Souls; to edification only, and not to destruction: Particular cases I here purposely forbear.

We may not offer any violence, but only perswade: We have not so great authority given us by the Laws, as to repress offenders: And if it were lawful for us so to do, we have no use of any such violent Power: For that Christ crowneth them which abstain from sin, not of a forced, but of a willing mind and purpose. Cypr. citante Baluz. of Subjection, p. 526. Et ibid. ex Hilar. If this violence were used for the true faith, the Doctrine of Bishops would be against it: God needeth no forced service: He requireth no constrained confession. I cannot receive any man but him that is willing: I cannot give ear, but to him that intreateth, &c. Ita & Origen. ibid. citat. 2 Cor. 1. 24. Gal. 1. 7, 8. 2 Cor. 10. 8. & 13. 10.

§. 32. Direct. 7. Be sure that you look on them as the Officers of Christ in all that they do as such; and see not only their Natural, but their Ecclesiastical Persons, that through them you may have to do with God. Especially in preaching and administring the Sacraments, and binding the impenitent, and absolving the penitent, and comforting the sad and humbled Souls. All the Holiness, and Life, and Power of your spiritual converse with them consisteth in your seeing and conversing with God in them, and using them as his Messengers or Officers, that deliver his message and do his work, and not their own. If you disobey them in his work, it is God that you disobey: And if they teach you his Word, or deliver you Christ and his Benefits in the Sacraments, it is Christ himself that doth it by them as his instruments, so far as they do it according to his Commission and his Will. This observing Christ in their teaching will possess you with due Reverence and Care, and cause you to do it as a holy work: And to see Christ in them, delivering and sealing his Covenant to you, will very much increase your joy: When Man as Man is but a shadow. Dir. 7.

§. 33. Direct. 8. Make use of their help in private, and not in publick only: As the use of a Physician is not only to read a Lecture of Physick to his Patients, but to be ready to direct every Person according to their particular case (there being such variety of temperatures, diseases and accidents, that in dangerous cases the direction of the judicious is needful in the application:) So here, it is not the least of the Pastoral work, to oversee the individuals, and to give them personally such particular advice as their case requireth. Never expect that all thy Books, or Sermons, or Prayers, or Meditations should serve thy turn without the counsel of thy Pastors, in greater cases: For that were but to devise how to prove God's Officers needless to his Church. If thou be an ignorant or unconverted Sinner, go to the Minister, and ask him, what thou must do to be saved? And resolve to follow his sound advice. If thou be in doubt of any weighty point of Faith or Godliness, or assaulted perilously by any adversary, or need his advice for thy settled Peace, thy assurance of Pardon and Salvation, and thy Preparation for Death; go ask counsel of thy Pastors, and receive their help with readiness and thankfulness: Or if thou live where there is none that is able and willing thus to help thee, remove to them that are such, if lawfully thou canst. Dir. 8.

§. 34. Direct. 9. Assist you Pastors in the work of God, by the duties of your places which tend thereto: Labour by your holy serious conference, to instruct the ignorant, and convince the unbelieving, and convert the ungodly, and strengthen the weak, with whom you have fit opportunity for such work. Labour by your holy Examples, by Love and Concord, and Meekness, and Sobriety, and contempt of the World, and a heavenly Life, to shine as lights Dir. 9. Acts 18. 24, 26, 27. Rom. 16 3 John 3. 8. lights in the midst of a dark and crooked Generation. Preach all of you, by the Examples of your blameless, humble holy Lives: O how abundantly would this course promote the success of the publick Preaching of the Gospel? If you would cause those Men to see the Glory and Power of the Gospel in your holy and heavenly Lives, who cannot see it in it self: Then many that would not be won by the Word, might be won without it (to seek after it at least) by your Conversations. Thus all must preach and be helpers of the Ministers of Christ.

§. 35. Direct. 10. Forsake not your faithful Pastors to follow Deceivers; but adhere to them who spend and are spent for you: Defend their innocency against false Accusers; and refuse them not such maintenance as is needful to their entire giving up themselves to that holy Work to which they are devoted: Read and Study well Ephes. 4. 13, 14, 15. Acts 20. 30. It is for your sakes that your faithful Pastors are singled out in the World to bear the Slanders and Contradictions of the Wicked; and to lead the way in the fiery Tryal. If they would forsake you, and that sacred Truth and Duty that is needful to your Salvation, and sell you up into the Hands of cruel and deceitful Men, it were as easie for them to have the applause of Men, and the Prosperity of the World as others: It is perfidious ingratitude to forsake them in Tryal, that must lose their Lives and all the World, rather than forsake you or betray your Souls: Or to grudge them food and raiment that lay by the gainful Employments of the World, that they may attend continually on the Service of your Souls.

CHAP. VII.

Directions for the discovery of the Truth among Contenders, and the escape of Heresie and Deceit.

Nitebatur Socrates summi ingenii acumine non tam illos ex sententia refellere, quam ipse quid verum esset invenire. Laert. in Socrat.

§. 1. THough Truth be naturally the Object of Mans Understanding, to which it hath a certain Inclination, and though it be a delightful Thing to know the Truth: Yet that which is saving meeteth with so much Opposition in the Flesh, and in the World, that while it is applauded in the General, it is resisted and rejected in Particulars: And yet while the Use of holy Truth is hated and obstinately cast away, the name and the barren Profession of it is made the Matter of the glorying of Hypocrites, and the occasion of reproaching Dissenters as Hereticks, and the World is filled with bloody Persecutions, and inhumane implacable Enmities and Divisions, by a wonderful Zeal for the Name of Truth, even by those Men that will rather venture on Damnation, than they will obey the Truth which they so contend for: Multitudes of Men have tormented or murdered others as Hereticks, who themselves must be tormented in Hell, for not being Christians. It concerneth us therefore to deal very wisely and cautelously in this Business.

Dir. 1.

§. 2. Direct. 1. Take heed lest there be any carnal Interest or Lust which maketh you unwilling to receive the Truth, or inclineth you to Errour, that it may serve that Interest or Lust. It is no small number of Men that are strangers or enemies to the Truth, not because they cannot attain the Knowledge of it, but because they would not have it to be Truth. And Men of great Learning and natural Parts are frequently thus deceived and led into Error by a naughty carnal byassed Heart: Either because that Error is the vulgar Opinion, and necessary to maintain their popular Reputation, and avoid Reproach; or because it is the way of Men in Power, and necessary to their preferment and greatness in the World: Or because the Truth is contrary to their fleshly Lusts and Pleasures, or contrary to their honour and worldly Interest; and would hazard their Reputations or their Lives. How loth is a sensual ungodly Man to believe, that without Holiness none shall see God, and that he that is in Christ is a new Creature, and that if any Man have not the Spirit of Christ, the same is none of his, and that if they live after the Flesh they shall die? How loth is the ambitious Minister to believe that the way of Christs service lieth not in worldly Pomp, or Ease, or Pleasures, but in taking up the Cross, and following Christ in Self-denial, and in being as the Servant of all, in the unwearied Performance of careful over-sight, and compassionate Exhortations unto all the Flock. Let a Controversie be raised about any of these Points, and the mind of lazy ambitious Men doth presently fall in with that part which gratifieth their fleshly Lusts, and excuseth them from that toilsome way of Duty which they already hate. The secret Lusts and Vices of a false hypocritical Heart, are the commonest and the powerfullest Arguments for Error: And such Men are glad, that great Men, or learned Men will give so much ease to their Consciences, and shelter to their Reputations, as to Countenance, or make a Controversie at least of that which their Lusts desire to be true. Above all therefore see that you come not to enquire after Truth with an unsanctified Heart, and unmortified Lusts, which are a byas to your Minds, and make you warp from the Truth which you enquire after: For if the carnal Mind neither is nor can be subject to the Law of God, you may easily perceive that it will be loth to believe it; when in so doing they believe their own Condemnation. An honest sanctified Heart is fittest to entertain the Truth.

Heb. 12. 14. 2 Cor. 5. 17. Rom. 8. 9, 13.

Dir. 2. Socrates de Ethice, & in officinis, & in publico quotidie Philosophans, ex potius inquirenda hortabatur, quæ mores instruerent, & quorum usus nobis domi esset necessarius. Laert. in Socrat.

§. 3. Direct. 2. Seek after the Truth for the love of Truth, and love it especially for its special use, as it formeth the Heart and Life to the Image and Will of God; and not for the fanciful delight of knowing; much less for carnal worldly Ends. No means are used at all as means, where the End is not first determined of. And to do the same thing materially to another end, is not indeed to do the same: For thereby it's made another thing. Your Physician will come to you if you seek to him as a Physician; but not if you send to him to mend your Shooes. So if you seek Knowledge for the true Ends of Knowledge, to fill your Hearts with the Love of God, and guide your Lives in Holiness and Righteousness, God is engaged to help you in the search: But if you seek it only for to please your pride or fansie, no wonder if you miss of it; and it is no great matter whether you find it or not, for any good it's like to do you: Every Truth of God is appointed to be his Instrument, to do some holy Work upon your Heart: Let the Love of Holiness be it that maketh you search after Truth, and then you may expect that God should be your Teacher.

Dir. 3.

§. 4. Direct. 3. Seek after Truth without too great or too small regard to the Judgment of others: Neither contemn them, nor be captivated to them: Use the help of the wise, but give not up your Reason absolutely to any. Engage not your selves in a Party, so as to espouse their Errors, or implicitly to believe whatever they say: For this breedeth in you a secret desire to please your Party, and interesteth you in their dividing Interest, and maketh you betray the Truth to be accounted Orthodox by those you value.

Non tam auctoritatis in disputando, quam rationis momenta quærenda sunt. Cic. Nat. Deo. p. 6. Obest plerumque iis qui discere volunt, autoritas eorum qui se docere profitentur. Desinunt enim suum judicium adhibere. Id habent ratum, quod ab eo quem probant, judicatum vident. Cic. de Nat. Deo. p. 7.

§. 5. Direct. 4. Take heed of Pride, which will make you dote upon your own Conceits, and cause you to slight the weightiest Reasons that are brought by others, for your Conviction. And if once you have espoused an Error it will engage all your Wit, and Zeal, and Diligence

Diligence to maintain it: It will make you uncharitable and furious against all that Cross you in your way: And so make you either Persecutors (if you stand on the higher ground) or Sect-leaders, or Church-dividers and turbulent and censorious if you are on the lower Ground. There is very great Reason in Paul's Advice for the choice of a Bishop, 1 Tim. 3.6. Not a Novice; lest being lifted up with Pride, he fall into the Condemnation of the Devil. It is no more wonder to see a proud Man erroneous, and in the Confidence of his own Understanding, to rage against all that tell him he is mistaken, than to hear a drunken Man boasting of his Wit, to the increase of his Shame.

Dir. 5. § 6. Direct. 5. Take heed of slothfulness and impatience in searching after Truth, and think not to find it in difficult Cases, without both hard and patient Studies, and ripeness of Understanding to enable you therein: And suspect all Opinions which are the off-spring of idleness and ease, what ever Divine Illumination they may pretend (except as you take them from others upon trust (in a slothful way) who attained them by diligent Studies:) For God that hath called Men to labour, doth use to give his Blessing to the laborious: And he that hath said by his Spirit, 1 Tim. 4. 15. Meditate upon these things: Give thy self wholly to them, that thy profiting may appear to all, doth accordingly cause those Men to Profit, who seek it in this laborious way of his Appointment: And he that hath said, The desire of the slothful killeth him, doth not use to bless the slothful with his Teachings. He that will say to him in Judgment, Thou wicked and slothful Servant, will not encourage the slothfulness which he condemneth. My Son, if thou wilt receive my Words, and hide my Commandments with thee; so that thou incline thine Ear to Wisdom, and apply thine Heart to Understanding. Yea, if thou criest after Knowledge, and liftest up thy voice for Understanding: If thou seekest her as Silver, and searchest for her as for hid Treasures; then shalt thou understand the fear of the Lord, and find the Knowledge of God: For the Lord giveth Wisdom: Prov. 2. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6. Mark here to whom God giveth Wisdom: All the Godly are taught of God: But mark here how it is that he teacheth them. Not while they scorn at Studies and Universities, and look that their Knowledge should cost them nothing, or that the Spirit should be instead of serious Studies, or that their Understandings should discern what's true or false at the first Appearance: But while they think no pains or patience too great to learn the Truth in the School of Christ.

Prov. 24. 30. Prov. 21. 25. Matth. 25. 26.

Dir. 6. §. 7. Direct. 6. Keep out Passion from your Disputes, and in the Management of all your Controversies in Religion. For though Passion be useful both antecedently to the Resolution of the Will, and consequently to the effectual Execution of its Resolutions, yet it is commonly a very great seducer of the Understanding, and strangely blindeth and perverteth Judgment: So that a passionate Man is seldom so far from the Truth, as when he is most confident he is defending it. When Passion hath done boyling, and the Heart is cooled, and leaveth the Judgment to do its Work without any Clamour and Disturbance, its strange to see how things will appear to you, to be quite of another tendency and reason, than in your Passion you esteemed them.

Quæ duæ virtutes in Disputatore primæ sunt, eas ambas in Hubero deprehendi, Patientiam adversarium prolixe sua explicantem audiendi, & lenitatem etiam aspere dicta perferendi, inq. Sculterus post-disp. Curric. p. 33.

Dir. 7. §. 8. Direct. 7. Keep up a sense of the evil and danger of both extreams; and be not so wholly intent upon the avoiding of one extream, as to be fearless of the other. The narrow Minds of unexperienced Men are hardly brought to look on both sides them, and to be duly sensible of the danger of both extreams: But while they are taken up only with the hating and opposing one sort of Errors, they forget those on the other side: And usually the Sin or Error which we observe not, is more dangerous to us than that which we do observe (if the wind of Temptation sit that way).

§. 9. Direct. 8. When you detect any ancient Error or Corruption, enquire into its Original; and see whether Reformation consist not rather in a Restitution of the Primitive State, than in an Extirpation of the whole. Even in Popery it self there are many Errors and ill Customs, which are but the Corruption of some weighty Truth, and the degenerating of some Duty of Gods Appointment: And to reduce all in such Cases, to the Primitive Verity, is the way of wise and true Reformation; and not to throw away that which is Gods, because it is fallen into the dirt of humane Depravation. But in Cases where all is bad, there all must be rejected. Dir. 8.

§. 10. Direct. 9. Pretend not Truth and Orthodoxness against Christian Love and Peace: And so follow Truth, as that you lose not Love and Peace by it; (as much as in you lieth live peaceably with all Men). Charity is the End of Truth: And it is a mad use of Means, to use them against the End. Make sure of the sincerity of your Charity, and hold it fast; and and then no Error that you hold will be destructive to you: But if you know more than others, and use your Knowledge to the weakning of your Love, you are but (as our first Parents) deceived and destroyed by a desire of fleshly uneffectual Knowledge. Such knowledge puffeth up, but charity edifieth, 1 Cor. 8. 1. To contend for Truth, to the loss of Love, in your selves, and the Destruction of it among others, is but to choak your selves with excellent Food, and to imitate that Orthodox Catholick Physician, that gloried that he killed his Patients secundum artem, by the most accurate Method, and excellent Rules of Art that Men could die by. Dir. 9. Rom. 12. 18. 1 Cor. 13.

§. 11. Direct. 10. Pretend no Truth against the Power and Practice of Godliness. For this also is its proper End: If it be not Truth that is according to Godliness, it is no Truth worthy our seeking or contending for. And if it be contrary to Godliness in it self, it is no Truth at all: Therefore if it be used against Godliness, it is used contrary to the Ends of Truth. Those Men that suppress or hinder the means of Knowledge, and Holiness, and Concord, and Edification, under pretence of securing, defending or propagating the Orthodox belief, will find one Day, that God will give them as little thanks for their blind prepostrous zeal for Truth, as a tender Father would do to a Physician, that killed his Children, because they distasted or spit out his Medicines. It is usually a pitiful defence of Truth, that is made by the Enemies of Godliness. Dir. 10. 1 Tim. 6. 3. Tit. 1. 1. 1 Tim. 4. 7, 8. 1 Tim. 6. 5, 6, 11. 2 Pet. 1. 3. & 3. 11.

More near and particular Directions against Error.

§. 12. Direct. 1. Begin at the Greatest, most Evident, Certain and Necessary Truths, and so proceed orderly to the Knowledge of the less, by the help of these. As you climb by the Body of the Tree unto the Branches. If you begin at those Truths, which spring out of greater common Truths, and know not the Premises, while you plead for the Conclusion, you abuse your Reason and lose the Truth and your Labour both: For there is no way to the Branches, but by ascending from the Stock. The Principles well laid, must be your help to all your following Knowledge. Dir. 1. See Ch. 2. D. 3.

§. 13. Direct. 2. The two first Things which you are to learn are, what Man is, and what God is: The Nature and Relation of the two Parties is the first thing to be known in order to the Knowledge of the Covenant it self, and all following Transactions between God and Man: One Error here will introduce abundance. A Thousand other Points in Natural Philosophy you Dir. 2.

may ſafely be ignorant of; but if you know not what Man is, what Reaſon is, what Natural Free-will is, and what the inferiour ſenſitive Faculties are, as to their Uſes, it will lay you open to innumerable Errors. In the Nature of Man, you muſt ſee the Foundation of his Relations unto God: And if you know not thoſe Great Relations, the Duties of which muſt take up all our Lives, you may eaſily foreſee the conſequents of ſuch Ignorance or Error. So if you know not what God is, and what his Relations to us are, ſo far as is neceſſary to our living in the Duties of thoſe Relations, the conſequents of your Ignorance will be ſad. If learned Men be but perverted in their Apprehenſions of ſome one Attribute of God (as thoſe that think his Goodneſs is nothing but his Benignity, or proneneſs to do good, or that he is a neceſſary Agent doing good ad ultimum poſſe, &c.) what abundance of horrid and impious conſequents will follow?

Dir. 3. Nulla erga Deos pietas eſt, niſi honeſta de numine Deorum ac mente opinio ſit. Cicero pro Planc.

§. 14. Direct. 3. Having ſoundly underſtood both theſe and other Principles of Religion, try all the ſubſequent Truths hereby, and receive nothing as Truth that is certainly inconſiſtent with any of theſe Principles. Even Principles that are not of Senſe, may be diſputed till they are well received; and with thoſe that have not received them: But afterward they are not to be called in Queſtion; for then you would never proceed nor build higher, if you ſtill ſtand queſtioning all your Grounds. Indeed no Truth is inconſiſtent with any other Truth: But yet when two dark or doubtful Points are compared together, it is hard to know which of them to reject. But here it is eaſie: Nothing that contradicteth the true Nature of God or Man, or any Principle muſt be held.

Dir. 4. §. 15. Direct. 4. Believe nothing which certainly contradicteth the End of all Religion. If it be of a natural or neceſſary tendency to Ungodlineſs, againſt the Love of God, or againſt a holy and heavenly Mind and Converſation, it cannot be Truth what ever it pretend.

Dir. 5. ☞ §. 16. Direct. 5. Be ſure to diſtinguiſh well betwixt revealed and unrevealed Things: And before you diſpute any Queſtion, ſearch firſt whether the Reſolution be revealed or not: And if it be not, lay it by; and take it as part of your neceſſary Submiſſion, to be ignorant of what God would have you ignorant, as it is part of your Obedience to labour to know what God would have you know. And when ſome Things unrevealed are mixed in the Controverſie, take out thoſe and lay them by, before you go any further, and ſee that the Reſolution of the reſt be not laid upon them, nor twiſted with them, to entangle the whole in Uncertainty or Confuſion. Thus God inſtructed Job, by convincing him of his Ignorance, and ſhewing him how many things were paſt his Knowledge. Thus Chriſt inſtructed Nicodemus about the Work of Regeneration, ſo as to let him know, that though the Neceſſity of it muſt be known, yet the manner of the Spirits acceſſes to the Soul cannot be known, John 3. 7, 8. And Paul in his Diſcourſe of Election, takes notice of the unſpeakable Depths, and the Creatures unfitneſs to diſpute with God, Rom. 9. When you find any diſputes about Predetermination or Predeſtination reſolved into ſuch Points as theſe: Whether God do by Phyſical premoving influx, or by concourſe, or by moral Operation ut finis, determine or ſpecifie moral Acts of Man? Whether a Poſitive Decree quoad actum be neceſſary to the Negation of Effects, (as that ſuch a one ſhall not have Grace given him, or be converted or ſaved; that all the Millions of poſſible Perſons, names and things ſhall not be future:) What Underſtanding, Will or Power are formally in God? How he knoweth future Contingents? With a hundred ſuch like; then remember that you make uſe of this Rule, and ſay with Moſes, Deut. 29. 29. The ſecret things belong to the Lord our God, but thoſe things that are revealed, unto us and to our Children for ever, that we may do all the Words of his Law. There are many rare profound diſcoveries much gloried of by the Maſters of ſeveral Sects, of which you may know the Sentence of the Holy Ghoſt, by that inſtance, Col. 2. 18. Let no Man beguile you of your Reward, in a voluntary Humility and worſhipping of Angels, intruding into thoſe things which he hath not ſeen, vainly puft up by his fleſhly Mind. Reverently withdraw from things that are unrevealed, and diſpute them not.

Job 38. & 39. & 40. & 41. Non ii ſumus quibus nihil verum eſſe videatur; ſed ii qui omnibus veris falſa quædam adjuncta eſſe dicamus, tanta ſimilitudine ut, &c. Cic. de Nat. Deor. l. 1.

§. 17. Direct. 6. Be a careful and accurate (though not a vain) Diſtinguiſher: And ſuffer not Ambiguity and Confuſion to deceive you: Suſpect every Word in your Queſtion, and anatomize it, and agree upon the Senſe of all your common Terms, before you diſpute with any Adverſary: It is not only in many Words, but in one Word or Syllable that ſo much Ambiguity and Confuſion may be contained, as may make a long diſpute to be but a vain and ridiculous wrangling. Is it not a ridiculous Buſineſs to hear Men diſpute many Hours about the Cur credis, and into what Faith is to be reſolved? And in the End come to underſtand, that by [Cur] one of them, ſpeaks of the Principium or Cauſa Veritatis, and the other of the Principium patefactionis, or the Evidentia Veritatis, or ſome other cauſe? And when one ſpeaks of the Reſolution of his Faith as into the formal Object, and another into the ſubſervient Teſtimony or Means, or into the Proofs of Divine Atteſtation, or many other Cauſes? Or to hear Men diſpute, Whether Chriſt died for all: When by [for] one Man meaneth [for the Benefit of all,] and another means [in the place or ſtead of all, or for the Sins of all as the procuring Cauſe, &c.] Yet here is but a Syllable to contain this Confuſion? What a tedious thing is it to read long diſputes between many Papiſts and Proteſtants, about Juſtification, while by Juſtification one meaneth one thing, and another meaneth quite another thing? He that cannot force every word to make a plain Confeſſion of its proper Signification, that the Thing intended may be truly diſcerned in the Word, he will but deceive himſelf and others, with a wordy inſignificant Diſpute. Dir. 6. ☞ See my Preface before the ſecond Part of the Saints Reſt. Edit. 3, &c. A Man of Judgment ſhall hear ignorant Men differ, and know that they mean one thing: And yet they themſelves will never agree. L. Bacon Eſſ. 3.

§. 18, Direct. 7. Therefore be ſpecially ſuſpicious of Metaphors; as being all but ambiguities till an explication hath fixed or determined the ſenſe. It is a noiſome thing to hear ſome diſpute upon an unexplained Metaphorical word, when neither of them have enucleated the ſenſe, and when there are proper words enough. Dir. 7. ☞

§. 19. Direct. 8. Take ſpecial notice of what kind of beings your enquiry or diſputation is, and let all your terms be adapted and interpreted according to the kinds of beings you diſpute of. As if you be enquiring into the nature of any Grace, as Faith, Repentance, Obedience, &c. remember that it is in genere moris, a moral act: And therefore the terms are not to be underſtood as if you diſputed about meer Phyſical acts, which are conſidered but in genere entis. For that Object which muſt eſſentiate one Moral act, containeth many Phyſical Particles, which will make up many Phyſical Acts. If you take ſuch a Man for your King, your Commander, your Maſter, your Phyſician, &c. If you ſhould at the Bar when you are queſtioned for unfaithfulneſs, diſpute upon the word [take] whether it be an act of the Phantaſie, or Senſe, or Intellect, or Will, &c. would you not be juſtly laugh'd at? So when you ask, What act Faith or Repentance is? Which contain many particular Phyſical acts. When you diſpute of Divinity, Policy, Law, War, &c. you muſt not uſe the ſame terms in the ſame ſenſe, as when you diſpute of Phyſicks or Metaphyſicks, Dir. 8. ☞ As I have ſhewed in my Diſpute of Saving Faith with Dr. Barlow, and of Juſtification.

§. 20. Direct. 9. Be ſure in all your diſputes that you ſtill keep diſtinguiſhed before your eyes, the Order of Being, and the Order of Knowing: That the queſtions Dir. 9. ☞ de esse lying undetermined in your way, do not frustrate all your dispute about the question de cognoscere. As in the question, Whether a man should do such or such a thing when he thinketh that it is God's Command? How far Conscience must be obeyed? It must first be determined de esse, whether indeed the thing be commanded, or lawful, or not? Before the case can be determined about the obligation that followeth my apprehension. For, what ever my Conscience or Opinion say of it, the thing either is lawful, or it is not: If it be lawful, or a Duty, the case is soon decided: But if it be not lawful, the error of my Conscience altereth not God's Law, nor will it make it lawful unto me. I am bound first to know and then to do what God revealeth and commandeth; And this I shall be bound to, what ever I imagine to the contrary; and to lay by the error which is against it.

Dir. 10. §. 21. Direct. 10. Be sure when you first enter upon an enquiry or dispute, that you well discover how much of the controversie is verbal de nomine, and how much is material de re: And that you suffer not your adversary to go on upon a false supposition, that the Controversie is de re, when it is but de nomine. The difference between names and things is so wide, that you would think no reasonable Man should confound them: And yet so heedless in this point are ordinary disputers, that it is a usual thing to make a great deal of stir about a controversie before they discern whether it be de nomine or de re. Many a hot and long dispute I have heard, which was managed as about the very heart of some material cause (as about Man's Power to do good, or about the sufficiency of Grace, or about Justification, &c.) when the whole contest between the Disputers was only or principally de nomine, and neither of them seemed to take notice of it. Be sure as soon as you peruse the terms of your question, to sift this throughly, and dispute verbal controversies, but as verbal, and not as real and material. We have real differences enough: We need not make them seem more by such a blind or heedless manner of disputing.

It is a noble work that Mr. Le Blanck of Sedan is about to this purpose, stating more exactly than hath yet been done all the Controversies between us and the Papists: which how excellently he is like to perform I easily conjecture by the Disputes of his upon Justification, &c. which I have seen.

Dir. 11. §. 22. Direct. 11. Suffer not a rambling mind in study, nor a rambling talker in Disputes, to interrupt your orderly procedure, and divert you from your argument before you bring it to the natural issue. But deceiving Sophisters, and giddy headed Praters, will be violent to start another game, and spoil the chase of the point before you: But hold them to it, or take them to be unworthy to be disputed with, and let them go (except it be where the weakness of the Auditors requireth you to follow them in their Wild-goose Chase.) You do but lose time in such rambling Studies or Disputes.

Dir. 12. §. 23. Direct. 12. Be cautelous of admitting false suppositions: or at least of admitting any inference that dependeth upon them. In some cases a supposition of that which is false may be made, while it no way tends to infer the truth of it: But nothing must be built upon that falshood, as intimating it to be a truth. False suppositions cunningly and secretly work'd into arguments, are very ordinary instruments of deceit.

Dir. 13. §. 24. Direct. 13. Plead not uncertainties against certainties: But make certain points the measure to try the uncertain by. Reduce not things proved and sure to those that are doubtful and justly controverted: But reduce points disputable to those that are past doubt.

Dir. 14. §. 25. Direct. 14. Plead not the darker Texts of Scripture against those that are more plain and clear, nor a few Texts against many that are as plain: For that which is interpreted against the most plain and frequent expressions of the same Scripture is certainly mis-interpreted.

Dir. 15. §. 26. Direct. 15. Take not obscure Prophecies for Precepts: The obscurity is enough to make you cautelous how you venture your self in the practice of that which you understand not; but if there were no obscurity, yet Prophecies are no warrant to you to fulfil them; no though they be for the Churches good. Predictions tell you but de eventu what will come to pass, but warrant not you to bring it to pass: God's Prophecies are oft-times fulfilled by the wickedest Men, and the wickedest Means. As by the Jews in killing Christ, and Pharoah in refusing to let Israel go, and Jehu in punishing the House of Ahab. Yet many self-conceited Persons think that they can fetch that out of the Revelations or the Prophecies of Daniel, that will justifie very horrid crimes, while they used wicked means to fulfil God's Prophecies.

Dir. 16. §. 27. Direct. 16. Be very cautelous in what cases you take Mens practice or example to be instead of precept, in the sacred Scriptures. In one case a Practice or Example is obligatory to us as a Precept: And that is when God doth give Men a Commission to establish the form or orders of his Church and Worship (as he did to Moses and to the Apostles,) and promiseth them his Spirit to lead them into all truth in the matters which he employeth them in, here God is engaged to keep them from miscarrying; for if they should, his work would be ill done, his Church would be ill constituted and framed, and his Servants unavoidably deceived: The Apostles were authorized to constitute Church Officers, and Orders for continuance, and the Scripture which is written for a great part historically, acquaints us what they did (as well as what they said and wrote) in the building of the Church in obedience to their commission (at least in declaring to the World what Christ had first appointed.) And thus if their practice were not obligatory to us, their words also might be avoided by the same pretences. And on this ground (at least) the Lord's Day is easily proved to be of Divine appointment and obligation. Only we must see that we carefully distinguish between both the Words and Practices of the Apostles which were upon a particular and temporary occasion (and obligation) from those that were upon an universal or permanent ground.

Dir. 17. §. 28. Direct. 17. Be very cautelous what Conclusions you raise from any meer works of Providence. For the bold and blind exposition of these, hath led abundance into most heinous Sin: No Providence is instead of a Law to us: But sometimes and oft-times Providence changeth the Matter of our Duty, and so occasioneth the change of our Obligations: (As when the Husband dieth, the Wife is disobliged, &c.) But Men of worldly Dispositions, do so over-value worldly things, that from them they venture to take the measure of God's love and hatred, and of the causes which he approveth or disapproveth in the World. And the Wisdom of God doth seem on purpose, to cause such wonderful unexpected mutations in the affairs of Men, as shall shame the Principles or Spirits of these Men, and manifest their giddiness and mutability to their confusion. One Year they say, This is sure the cause of God, or else he would never own it as he doth: Another Year they say, If this had been God's cause he would never have so disowned it: Just as the Barbarians judged of Paul when the Viper seized on his hand. And thus God is judged by them to own or disown by his prospering or afflicting, more than by his Word.

Dir. 18. §. 29. Direct. 18. In controversies which much depend on the sincerity or experience of godly Men, take heed that you affect not singularity, and depart not from the common sense of the godly. For the workings of God's Spirit are better judged of, by the ordinary tenour of them, than by ſome (real or ſuppoſed) caſe that is extraordinary.

Dir. 19. §. 30. Direct. 19. In Controverſies which moſt depend on the teſtimony of Antiquity, depart not from the judgment of the ancients. They that ſtood within view of the Days of the Apoſtles could better tell what they did, and what a condition they left the Churches in, than we can do. To appeal to the Ancients in every cauſe, even in thoſe where the later Chriſtians do excel them, is but to be Fools in reverence of our Fore-fathers Wiſdom. But in points of Hiſtory, or any thing which they had the advantage of their poſterity, their teſtimony is to be preferred.

Dir. 20. §. 31. Direct. 20. In Controverſies which depend on the Experience of particular Chriſtians or of the Church, regard moſt the judgment of the moſt experienced, and prefer the judgment of the later ages of the Church before the judgment of leſs experienced ages: (except the Apoſtolical Age that had the greater help of the Spirit.) An ancient experienced Chriſtian or Divine is more to be regarded in many points, which require experience, than many of the younger ſort, that are yet more zealous and of quicker underſtanding and expreſſion than the elder. So thoſe that we call the Father or Ancients were indeed in the younger ages of the Church, and we that are faln into the later and more experienced Age, have all the helps of the Wiſdom and Experience of the Ages that were before us: And therefore God will require at our hands an account of theſe greater talents which we have received: As it were unexcuſable now in a Phyſician, that hath the help of ſuch voluminous Inſtitutions, Obſervations and Experiments of former Ages, to know no more than thoſe former times that had no ſuch helps; ſo would it be as unexcuſable for this preſent Age of the Church to be no wiſer than thoſe former Ages. When Aquinas, Scotus, Ariminenſis and other Schoolmen, delivered the Doctrine of Chriſtianity to the Church in a dreſs ſo far different from Ignatius, Irenæus, Tertullian, Cyprian, or any of thoſe former ages, they certainly thought that they had attained to a far greater excellency and accurateneſs in the knowledge of Divinity than thoſe their Anceſtors had attained: And whatever they ſwear in the Trent Oath, of not expounding any Scripture otherwiſe than their Fathers do, I doubt not but Suarez, and Vaſquez, and others of their modern Schoolmen thought ſo too, and would have been loth to be accounted wiſe in the meaſure only of thoſe ancients. The later and elder ages of the Church have had abundant experience, e. g. of the tendency of Ambition and Papal Aſpirings and Uſurpations; of the miſchiefs of compoſing and impoſing the Popiſh Miſſals and numerous Ceremonies, and of their implicite Faith, and their concealment of the Scriptures from the vulgar, and many ſuch points; and if we are never the wiſer for all this experience, we are the more unexcuſable; and may be judged as the neglecters of ourgreater helps.

Dir. 21. § 32. Direct. 21. In Controverſies which depend moſt upon skill in the Languages, Philoſophy, or other parts of common learning, prefer the judgment of a few that are the moſt learned in thoſe matters, before the judgment of the moſt ancient, or the moſt godly, or of the greateſt numbers, even whole Churches, that are unlearned: In this caſe neither Numbers, nor Antiquity, nor Godlineſs will ſerve turn: But as one clear Eye will ſee further than Ten Thouſand that are purblind, ſo one Hierome or Origen may judge better of a Tranſlation, or the Grammatical ſenſe of a Text than a Hundred of the other Fathers could. One Man that underſtandeth a Language is fitter to judge of it, than a whole Nation that underſtand it not. One Philoſopher is fitter to judge of a Philoſophical Queſtion, than a Thouſand illiterate Perſons. Every Man is moſt to be regarded in the matters which he is beſt acquainted with.

§. 33. Direct. 22. In Controverſies of great difficulty where Divines themſelves are diſagreed, and a clear and piercing wit is neceſſary, regard more the judgment of a few acute, judicious, well-ſtudied Divines that are well vers'd in thoſe Controverſies, than of a multitude of dull and common wits that think to carry it by the reputation of their number. It is too certainly atteſted by experience, that judicious Men are very few, and that the multitude of the injudicious that have not wit enough to underſtand them, nor humility enough to confeſs it, and to learn of them, have yet pride and arrogancy enough to contradict them, and often malice enough to vilifie them. In ſuch differences it is not only a ſign of a wiſe Man to be content with the approbation of a few, but alſo to have but few approvers: (except where the injudicious do implicitly believe thoſe few that are judicious.) Commonly a very few that are wiſer than the multitude, are fain to ſtand by, and compaſſionate not only the World but the Church, and ſee the diſeaſe, and the eaſie remedy, and all in vain; while they are but neglected or deſpiſed by the reſt, that will not be made wiſer by them. Dir. 22. Satis triumphat Veritas ſi apud paucos bonoſq; accepta: nec indoles ejus eſt placere multis. Lipſius.

§ 34. Direct. 23. In all contentions hold cloſe to that which all ſides are agreed in: There is ſo much agreed on, even between the Papiſts and the Proteſtants, as would certainly ſave them all, if all of them did ſincerely believe, love and practice it. For they all confeſs that the whole Canonical Scripture is true. Therefore be more ſtudious ſincerely to hold and improve thoſe common truths which they all profeſs, than to oppoſe the particular opinions of any, further than that common truth requireth it. See that the Articles of the common Creed which all profeſs, be unfeignedly believed by you; and that the Petitions in the Lord's Prayer be ſincerely and earneſtly put up to God; and that the Ten Commandments be heartily and entirely obeyed; and then no error or difference will be damning to you. Dir. 23.

§. 35. Direct. 24. Take nothing as neceſſary to Salvation in point of faith, nor as univerſally neceſſary in point of practice, which the univerſal Church in every age ſince Chriſt did not receive: For if any thing be neceſſary to Salvation which the Church received not in every age, then the Church it ſelf of that age could not be ſaved; and then the Church was indeed no Church: For Chriſt is the Saviour of his Body. But certainly Chriſt had in every age a Church of ſaved-ones, who openly profeſſed all that was of common neceſſity to Salvation. An opinion may be true which accuſeth the generality in the Church of ſome error or imperfection: For it is moſt certain that the Church on Earth is compoſed of none (that have the uſe of reaſon) but erring and imperfect members: But no opinion can be true that condemneth all the Church to Hell, in any one age: For the Head and Husband of the Church muſt be her Judge. Dir. 24.

§. 36. Direct. 25. Be not born down by the cenſoriouſneſs of any, to over-run your own underſtanding and the truth, and to comply with them in their errors and extreams: But hold to the truth and keep your ſtation: Jer. 15. 19. Let them return unto thee, but return not thou unto them. It is too uſual for the younger and more injudicious ſort of Chriſtians to be moſt zealous about ſome little Opinions, Ceremonies and Words, and to cenſure all thoſe that differ from them, with ſuch bitter cenſures, (as ungodly, falſhearted, &c.) that hereupon ſome of the more judicious forſake the truth and ſimplicity of the Goſpel, to comply with theſe Cenſurers meerly to eſcape them, (or as ſome ſay, that they may keep an intereſt in them to do them good:) But ſuch carnal Compliances, though with the moſt zealous Men, will bring nothing home at laſt but repentance and ſhame: Truth which is the means of the good of Souls, muſt not be betrayed as for the good of Souls. Dir. 25. Thus Peter and Barnabas erred, Gal. 2.

Dir. 26. §. 37. Direct. 26. Doubt not of well-proved Truths, for every difficulty that appeareth againſt them: There is ſcarce any truth in the World ſo plain, but in your own thoughts, or in the cavils of a wrangling wit, there may ſuch difficulties be raiſed as you can hardly anſwer: And there is ſcarce any thing ſo evident, that ſome will not diſpute againſt. You ſee that even the learnedſt Jeſuits, and all the Clergy of the Roman Kingdom, will not ſtick to diſpute all the World (if they could) out of the belief of all their ſenſes, while they maintain that Bread is not Bread, and Wine is not Wine. And yet how many Princes, Lords and Rulers follow them, and many Millions of the People; becauſe they be not able to confute them. If they had ſaid that a Man is no Man but a Worm, Pſal. 22. 6. They might in reaſon have expected as much belief.

Dir. 27. Mat. 25. 29. Rom. 14. 22. §. 38. Direct. 27. Abuſe not your own knowledge by ſubjecting it to your carnal intereſt or ſenſuality: He that will ſin againſt his Conſcience, and will not obey the Knowledge which he hath, doth deſerve to be given over to blindneſs and deceit, and to loſe even that which he hath, and to be forſaken till he believe and defend a Lye: That all they might be damned who obeyed not the truth, but had pleaſure in unrighteouſneſs, 2 Theſ. 2. 10, 11, 12. God will not hold him guiltleſs who debaſeth his ſacred truth ſo far, as to make it ſtoop to his commodity and luſt: Where he is a Teacher he will be a King, and ſendeth his Truth as the Inſtrument of his Government, and not as a Slave or Pandor to the Fleſh: He that will do Gods will ſhall know it, Joh. 7. 17. But the carnal mind that cannot be ſubject to Gods Law, is unfit to receive it, becauſe it is ſpiritually diſcerned, Rom. 8. 7. 1 Cor. 2. 14.

Directions for the Union and Communion of Saints, and the avoiding Unpeaceableneſs and Schiſm.

Of this ſubject I have written already, 1. My Univerſal Concord, 2. My Catholick Unity, 3. Of the True Catholick Church. 4. My Chriſtian Concord.

THE PEACE and CONCORD of Believers is a thing that almoſt all thoſe plead for, who call themſelves Believers; and yet a thing that almoſt all Men hinder and reſiſt while they commend it. The Diſcord and DIVISIONS of believers, are as commonly ſpoken againſt, and by the ſame Men, as commonly fomented. The few that are ſincere (both Rulers and private Men) deſire Concord and hate Diviſions in Love to Holineſs which is promoted by it, and in love to the Church, and good of Souls, and the Honour of Religion and the Glory of God: And the few of thoſe few that are experienced, wiſe, judicious Perſons, do chooſe the means that is fitteſt to attain theſe ends, and do prudently and conſtantly proſecute them accordingly: But theſe being in the World as a ſpoonful of freſh Water caſt into the Sea, or a ſpoonful of Water caſt into the Flames of a Houſe on fire, no wonder if the briniſh Sea be not ſweetned by them, nor the conſuming raging Fire quenched by them. The other Rulers of the World and of the Churches, are for Concord and againſt Diviſion, becauſe this tendeth to the quieting of the People under them, and the making of Men ſubmiſſive and obedient to their wills, and ſo to confirm their Dignities, Dominions and Intereſts: And all Men that are not Holy, being predominantly SELFISH, they would all be themſelves the Center of that Union, and Bond of that Concord which they deſire: And they would have it accompliſhed upon ſuch terms, and by ſuch means as are moſt agreeable to their Principles and Ends: In which there are almoſt as many Minds as Men: So that among all the Commenders of UNITY and Concord, there are none that take the way to attain it, but thoſe that would center it all in GOD, and ſeek it upon his terms, and in his way. The reſt are all tearing Unity and Peace in pieces, while they commend it; and they fight againſt it while they ſeek it: Every Man ſeeking it for himſelf, and upon his own terms and in his own way: Which are ſo various and inconſiſtent, that Eaſt and Weſt may ſooner meet than they.

§. 2. Yet muſt the Sons of God be ſtill the Sons of Peace, and continue their Prayers and Endeavours for UNITY, how ſmall ſoever be the hopes of their ſucceſs: If it be poſſible, as much as in us lyeth, we muſt live peaceably with all Men: So far muſt they be from being guilty of any Schiſms or unlawful Diviſions of the Church, that they muſt make it a great part of their care and work to preſerve the Unity and Peace of Chriſtians. In this therefore I ſhall next direct them. Rom. 12. 18.

Dir. 1. In veſte Chriſti varietas ſit; ſciſſura non ſit: They be two things, Unity and Uniformity. L. Bacon Eſſay 3.

§. 3. Direct. 1. Underſtand firſt wherein the Unity of Chriſtians and Churches doth conſiſt: Or elſe you will neither know how to preſerve it, nor when you violate it. Chriſtians are ſaid to be united to Chriſt, when they are entered into Covenant with him, and are become his Diſciples, his Subjects and the Members of his (Political) Body: They are united to one another when they are united to Chriſt their common Head, and when they have that Spirit, that Faith, that Love which is communicated to every living member of the Body. This Union is not the making of many to be One Chriſtian; but of many Chriſtians to be one Church: Which is conſiderable either as to its internal Life, or its external Order and Profeſſion. In the former reſpect the Bonds of our Union are, 1. The Heart-Covenant (or Faith;) 2. And the Spirit; the Conſent of Chriſt and of our ſelves concurring, doth make the match or marriage between us; and the Spirit communicated from him to us is as the Nerves or Ligaments of the Body, or rather as the Spirits which paſs through all. The Union of the Church conſidered viſibly in its outward Policy, is either that of the whole Church, or of the particular Churches within themſelves, or of divers particular Churches accidentally united. 1. The Union of the whole, is eſſential, integral or accidental: The Eſſential Union is that Relation of a Head and Members, which is between Chriſt and all the viſible Membert of his Church: The Foundation of it is the mutual Covenant between Chriſt and them, conſidered on their part as made externally, whether ſincerely or not: This is uſually done in Baptiſm, and is the chiefeſt act of their Profeſſion of the Faith. Thus the Baptiſmal Covenant doth conſtitute us Members of the viſible Church. The integral and accidental Union I paſs by now. 2. Beſides this Union of the Univerſal Church with Chriſt the Univerſal Head, there is in all particular organized Churches a ſubordinate Union, 1. Between the Paſtor and the Flock, 2. Between the People one towards another: Which conſiſteth in theſe their ſpecial Relations to each other. 3. And there is an accidental Union of many particular Churches: As when they are united under one Civil Government; or conſociated by their Paſtors in one Synod or Council. Theſe are the ſeveral ſorts of Church Union. 1 Theſ. 5. 12, 13.

Dir. 2. §. 4. Direct. 2. Underſtand alſo wherein the Communion of Chriſtians and Churches doth conſiſt: That you may know what it is that you muſt hold to. In the Univerſal Church your Internal Communion with Chriſt conſiſteth in his communication of his Spirit and Grace, his Word and Mercies unto you; and in your returns of Love, and Thanks and Obedience unto him; and in your ſeeking to him, depending on him, and receivings from him: Your internal Communion with the Church or Saints, conſiſteth in mutual Love, and other conſequent affections, and in praying for, and doing good to one another as your ſelves, according to your abilities and opportunities. Your external Communion with Chriſt and with moſt most of the Church in Heaven and Earth, is not mutually visible and local: For it is but a small number comparatively that we ever see: But it consisteth in Christ's visible communication of his Word, his Officers, and his Ordinances and Mercies unto you, and in your visible learning and reception of them, and obedience to him, and expressions of your Love and Gratitude towards him. Your external communion with the Universal Church, consisteth in the Prayers of the Church for you, and your Prayers for the Church: In your holding the same Faith, and professing to love and worship the same God, and Saviour and Sanctifier, in the same holy Ordinances, in order to the same eternal end.

§. 5. Your external Communion in the same particular Congregations consisteth in your assembling together to hear the preaching of God's Word, and to receive the Sacrament of the Body and Blood of Christ, and pray and praise God, and to help each other in Knowledge and Holiness, and walk together in the Fear of the Lord.

§. 6. Your Communion with other neighbour Churches, lyeth in praying for and counselling each other, and keeping such correspondencies as shall be found necessary to maintain that Love and Peace and Holiness which all are bound to seek, according to your abilities and opportunities.

§. 7. Note here that Communion is one thing, and subjection is another: It is not your subjection to other Churches that is required to your Communion with them: The Churches that Paul wrote to at Rome, Corinth, Galatia, Ephesus, Philippi, &c. had Communion together according to their capacities in that distance: But they were not subject one to another (any otherwise than as all are commanded to be subject to each other in humility, 1 Pet. 5. 5.) The Church of Rome now accuseth all the Christians in the World of separating from their Communion, unless they will take them for their Rulers, and obey them as the Mistress Church: But Paul speaketh not one syllable to any of the Churches of any such thing, as their obedience to the Church of Rome. To your own Pastors you owe subjection statedly as well as Communion; and to other Pastors of the Churches of Christ (fixed or unfixed) you owe a temporary Subjection so far as you are called to make use of them (as sick Persons do to another Physician, when the Physician of the Hospital is out of the way:) But one Church is not the Ruler of another, or any one of all the rest, by any appointment of the King of the Church.

Dir. 3. §. 8. Direct. 3. By the help of what is already said you are next distinctly to understand how far you are bound to Union or Communion with any other Church or Person, and what distance, separation or division is a sin, and what is not: That so you may neither causelessly trouble your selves with scruples, nor trouble the Church by sinful Schism.

What Unity is among all Christians

§. 9. I. There must be a Union among all Churches and Christians in these following particulars. 1. They have all but one God. 2. And one Head and Saviour, Jesus Christ. 3. And one Sanctifier, the Holy Ghost. 4. And one ultimate End and Hope, even the fruition of God in Heaven. 5. And one Gospel to teach them the Knowledge of Christ, and contain the Promise of their Salvation. 6. And one kind of Faith that is wrought hereby. 7. And one and the same Covenant (of which Baptism is the seal) in which they are engaged to God. 8. And the same instrumental Founders of our Faith, under Jesus Christ, even the Prophets and Apostles. 9. And all Members of the same Universal Body. 10. And all have the same new Nature and Holy Disposition, and the same Holy Affections, in loving God and Holiness, and hating Sin. 11. They all own as to the essential parts, the same Law of God, as the Rule of their Faith and Life, even the sacred Canonical Scriptures. 12. Every Member hath a Love to the whole, and to each other, especially to the more excellent and useful Members; and an inclination to holy Communion with each other. 13. They have all a propensity to the same holy means and employment, as Prayer, learning the Word of God, and doing good to others. All these things the true living Members of the Church have in Sincerity, and the rest have in Profession.

What Diversity will be in the Church.

§. 10. II. There will be still a diversity among the Churches and particular Christians in these following points, without any dissolution of the fore-described Unity. 1. They will not be of the same Age or standing in Christ; but some Babes, some young Men and some Fathers. 2. They will not have the same degrees of strength, of Knowledge and of Holiness: Some will have need to be fed with Milk, and be unskilful in the word of Righteousness. 3. They will differ in the kind and measure of their gifts: Some will excel in one kind, and some in another, and some in none at all. 4. They will differ in their natural temper, which will make some to be more hot and some more mild, some more quick and some more dull, some of more regulated wits and some more scattered and confused. 5. They will differ in spiritual health and soundness: One will be more orthodox and another more erroneous: One will have a better appetite to the wholsome word than others that are inclining to novelties and vain janglings: One will walk more blamelesly than another: Some are full of Joy and Peace, and others full of Grief and Trouble. 6. They differ much in usefulness and service to the Body: Some are Pillars to support the rest, and some are burdensome and troublers of the Church. 7. It is the will of Christ that they differ in Office and Employment: Some being Pastors and Teachers to the rest. 8. There may be much difference in the manner of their worshipping God; some observing Days and difference of Meats and Drinks, and Forms and other Ceremonies, which others observe not: And several Churches may have several Modes. 9. These differences may possibly by the temptation of Satan, arise to vehement Contentions, and not only to the censuring and despising of each other, but to the rejecting of each other from the Communion of the several Churches, and forbidding one another to preach the Gospel, and the banishing or imprisoning one another, as Constantine himself did banish Athanasius; and as Chrysostome and many another have felt. 10. Hence it followeth that as in the visible Church some are the Members of Christ, and some are indeed the Children of the Devil, some shall be saved and some be damned, even with the sorest Damnation, (the greatest difference in the World to come being betwixt the visible Members of the Church,) so among the godly and sincere themselves they are not all alike amiable or happy, but they shall differ in Glory as they do in Grace: All these differences there have been, are, and will be in the Church, notwithstanding its unity in other things.

Schism what and of how many sorts. The true placing the Bonds of Unity importeth exceedingly.

§. 11. III. The word [Schism] cometh from σχίζω, disseco, lacero, and signifieth any sinful Division among Christians: Some Papists (as Johnson) will have nothing called Schism, but a dividing ones self from the Catholick Church: Others maintain that there is nothing in Scripture called Schism, but making Divisions in particular Churches. The Truth is, (obvious in the thing it self) that there are several sorts of Schism or Division. 1. There is a causing Divisions in a particular Church, when yet no Party divideth from that Church, much less from the

Which will be done if the Points fundamental, and of substance in Religion were truly discerned and distinguished from points not meerly of Faith, but of Opinion, Order or good Intention. This is a thing that may seem to many a matter trivial, and done already: But if it were done less partially it would be embraced more generally: L. Bacon Essay 3.

Univer-

Univerſal. Thus Paul blameth the Diviſions that were among the Corinthians, while one ſaid I am of Paul, and another, I am of Apollo, &c. 1 Cor. 3. 3. And 1 Cor. 11. 18. I hear that there be diviſions among you: Not that they ſeperated from each others Communion, but held a diſorderly Communion. Such diviſions he vehemently diſſwadeth them from, 1 Cor. 1. 10. And thus he perſwadeth the Romans (16. 17.) to mark them which cauſe diviſions and offences among them, contrary to the doctrine which they had learned, and avoid them; which it ſeems therefore were not ſuch as had avoided the Church firſt. He that cauſeth differences of judgment and practice, and contendings in the Church, doth cauſe Diviſions, though none ſeparate from the Church.

2. And if this be a fault, it muſt be a greater fault to cauſe Diviſions from, as well as in, a particular Church, which a Man may do that ſeparateth not from it himſelf: As if he perſwade others to ſeparate; or if he ſow thoſe Tares of Error which cauſe it, or if he cauſeleſly excommunicate or caſt them out.

3. And then it muſt be as great a Sin, to make a cauſeleſs Separation from the Church that you are in your ſelf, which is another ſort of Schiſm: If you may not divide in the Church, nor divide others from the Church, then you may not cauſeleſly divide the common from it your ſelves.

4. And it is yet a greater Schiſm, when you divide not only from that one Church, but from many, becauſe they concur in opinion with that one (which is the common way of Dividers.)

5. And it is yet a greater Schiſm, when whole Churches ſeparate from each other, and renounce due Communion with each other without juſt cauſe: As the Greeks, Latines, and Proteſtants in their preſent diſtance, muſt ſome of them (whoever it is) be found guilty.

6. And yet it is a greater Schiſm than this, when Churches do not only ſeparate from each other cauſeleſly, but alſo uncburch each other, and endeavour to cut off each other from the Church-Univerſal, by denying each other to be true Churches of Chriſt. It is a more grievous Schiſm to withdraw from a true Church as No-Church, than as a Corrupt-Church; that is, to cut off a Church from Chriſt and the Church-Catholick, than to abſtain from Communion with it as a ſcandalous or offending Church.

7. It is yet (cæteris paribus) a higher degree of Schiſm to divide your ſelves (a Perſon or a Church) from the Univerſal Church without juſt cauſe, though you ſeparate from it but ſecundum quid, in ſome accidental reſpect where unity is needful (For where Unity is not required, there Diſ-union is no Sin:) Yet ſuch a Perſon that is ſeparate but ſecundum quid, from ſomething accidental, or integral, but not eſſential to the Catholick Church, is ſtill a Catholick Chriſtian, though he Sin.

8. But as for the higheſt degree of all, viz. to ſeparate from the Univerſal-Church ſimpliciter, or in ſome eſſential reſpect, this is done by nothing but by Hereſie or Apoſtaſie. However the Papiſts make Men believe that Schiſmaticks that are neither Hereticks nor Apoſtates, do ſeparate themſelves wholly or ſimply from the Catholick Church, this is a meer figment of their Brains. For he that ſeparateth not from the Church in any thing eſſential to it, doth not truly and ſimply ſeparate from the Church, but ſecundum quid, from ſomething ſeparable from the Church. But whatever is eſſential to the Church is neceſſary to Salvation: And he that ſeparateth from it upon the account of his denying any thing neceſſary to Salvation, is an Heretick or Apoſtate: That is, if he do it, as denying ſome one (or more) eſſential point of Faith or Religion, while he pretended to hold all the reſt, he is an Herericke: If he deny the whole Chriſtian Faith, he is a flat Apoſtate: And theſe are more than to be Schiſmaticks.

A Heretick and Apoſtate what?

§. 12. The word [Hereſie] alſo is variouſly taken by Eccleſiaſtick Writers: Auſtin will have Hereſie to be an inveterate Schiſm: Hierome maketh it to be ſome perverſe Opinion: Some call every Schiſm which gathereth a ſeparated party from the reſt, by the name of Hereſie: Some call it a Hereſie if there be a perilous Error though without any Schiſm. Some call it a Hereſie only when Schiſm is made, and a party ſeparated upon the account of ſome perilous Error. Some ſay this error muſt be damnable, that is, in the eſſentials of Religion: And ſome ſay, it is enough if it be but dangerous. Among all theſe the commoneſt ſenſe of [a Heretick] is One that obſtinately erreth in ſome eſſential point, and divideth from the Communion of other Chriſtians upon that account. And ſo Paræus and many Proteſtants take Hereſie for the Species, and Schiſm for the Genus: All Schiſm is not Hereſie; but all Hereſie, ſay they, is Schiſm. Remember that all this is but a Controverſie de nomine, and therefore of ſmall moment.

Who are true Schiſmaticks.

§. 13. By this that I have ſaid you may perceive who they be that are guilty of Church-diviſions: As, 1. The ſparks of it are kindled when proud and ſelf-conceited Perſons, are brain-ſick in the fond eſtimation of their own opinions; and heart-ſick by a feaveriſh zeal for the propagating of them. Ignorant Souls think that every change of their opinions is made by ſuch an acceſſion of heavenly Light, that if they ſhould not beſtir them to make all of the ſame mind, they ſhould be Betrayers of the Truth, and do the World unſpeakable wrong. When they meaſure and cenſure Men as they receive or reject their peculiar diſcoveries or conceits, Schiſm is in the Egg.

§. 14. 2. The fire is blown up, when Men are deſirous to have a party follow them and cry them up, and thereupon are buſie in perſwading others to be of their mind, and do ſpeak perverſe things to draw away diſciples after them. And when they would be counted the Maſters of a Party. Act. 20. 29

§. 15. 3. The Flames break forth, when by this means the ſame Church, or divers Churches do fall into ſeveral Parties burning in zeal againſt each other, abating Charity, cenſuring and condemning one another; backbiting and reviling each other, through envy and ſtrife: When they look ſtrangely at one another as being on ſeveral ſides; as if they were not Children of the ſame Father, nor Members of the ſame Body; or as if Chriſt were divided; one being of Paul, and another of Apollo, and another of Cephas, and every one of a faction, letting out their thoughts in jealouſies and evil ſurmizes of each other: Perverting the words and actions of each to an ugly ſenſe: And ſnatching occaſions to repreſent one another as Fools or odious to the hearers, as if you ſhould plainly ſay, [I pray you hate or deſpiſe theſe people whom I hate and deſpiſe.] This is the core of the Plague-ſore: It is Schiſm in the bud. Jam. 3. 13, 14, 15, 16, 17.

§. 16. 4. When people in the ſame Church do gather into private meetings, not under the guidance of their Paſtors, to edifie one another in holy exerciſes in Love and Peace, but in oppoſition to their lawful Paſtors, or to one another, to propagate their ſingular opinions, and increaſe their parties, and ſpeak againſt thoſe that are on their ſide; Schiſm is then ready to bring forth and multiply, and the ſwarm is ready to come forth and be gone.

§. 17. 5. When theſe People actually depart, and renounce or forſake the Communion of the Church, and caſt off their faithful Paſtors, and draw into a ſeparated Body by themſelves, and chooſe them Paſtors ſtors and call themſelves a Church, and all without any juſt ſufficient Cauſe; when thus Churches are gathered out of Churches, before the old ones are diſſolved, or they have any warrant to depart; when thus Paſtor is ſet up againſt Paſtor, Church againſt Church, and Altar againſt Altar; this is Schiſm ripe and fruitful: The ſwarm is gone, and hived in another Place.

§. 18. 6. If now the Neighbour Churches by their Paſtors in their Synods, ſhall in Compaſſion ſeek to reclaim theſe ſtraglers, and they juſtifie their unjuſt Separation, and contemn the Counſel of the Churches and Miniſters of Chriſt; this is a confirmed obſtinate Schiſm.

§. 19. 7. If they ſhall alſo judge that Church to be no Church from which they ſeparated, and ſo cut off a part of the Body of Chriſt, by an unrighteous cenſure, and condemn the innocent, and uſurp authority over their Guides; this is diſobedience and uncharitableneſs with Schiſm.

§. 20. 8. If they ſhall alſo condemn and unchurch all the other Churches, that are not of their mind and way, and renounce Communion with them all, and ſo condemn unjuſtly a great part of the Body of Chriſt on Earth, this is to add fury and rebellion to an uncharitable Schiſm. And if to cover their Sin, they ſhall unjuſtly charge theſe Churches which they reject, with Hereſie or Wickedneſs, they do but multiply their Crimes by ſuch Extenuations.

§ 21. 9. If the Opinion that all this ado is made for, be a damning Error, againſt ſome eſſential Point of the true Religion, then it is Hereſie as well as Schiſm.

§. 22. 10. If this Separation from the Church be made in defence of an ungodly Life againſt the Diſcipline of the Church: If a wicked ſort of Men ſhall withdraw from the Church to avoid the diſgrace of Confeſſion or Excommunication; and ſhall firſt caſt off the Church, leſt the Church ſhould proceed to caſt out them; and ſo they ſeparate that they may have none to govern and trouble them but themſelves; this is a prophane rebellious Schiſm. This is the common courſe of Schiſm when it groweth towards the height.

§. 23. 11. Beſides all theſe, there is yet a more pernicious way of Schiſm, which the Church or Court of Rome is guilty of: They make new Articles of Faith, and new Points of Religion, and a new Worſhip —— of God, ſhall I ſay, or of Bread as if it were a God? And all theſe they put into a Law, and impoſe them on all the other Churches, yea they put them into an Oath, and require Men to ſwear that without any doubting they believe them to be true: They pretend to have Authority for all this, as Rome is the Miſtreſs of all other Churches: They ſet up a new Univerſal Head, as an Eſſential part of the Catholick Church, and ſo found or feign a new kind of Catholick Church: And he that will not obey them in all this, they renounce Communion with him, and to hide this horrid notorious Schiſm, they call all Schiſmaticks that are not thus ſubjected to them.

§. 24. 12. And to advance their Schiſm to the height, as far as Arrogance can aſpire, they not only refuſe Communion with thoſe, from whom they ſeparate, but condemn them as no Paſtors, no Churches, no Chriſtians, that are not ſubject to them in this their Uſurpation: And they that are but about the third or fourth part (at moſt) of the Chriſtian World, do condemn the Body of Chriſt to Hell (even all the reſt) becauſe they are not Subjects of the Pope.

§. 25. Beſides all this criminal odious Schiſm, of Impoſers or Separaters, there is a degree of Schiſm or unjuſt Diviſion, which may be the infirmity of a good and peaceable Perſon. As if a humble tender Chriſtian ſhould miſtakingly think it unlawful to do ſome Action, that is impoſed upon all that will hold Communion with that particular Church (ſuch as Paul ſpeaketh of Rom. 14. if they had been impoſed:) And if he ſuſpecting his own Underſtanding, do uſe all means to know the Truth, and yet ſtill continueth in his miſtake: If this Chriſtian do forbear all reviling of his Superiours, and cenſuring thoſe that differ from him, and drawing others to his Opinion, but yet dare not joyn with the Church in that which he taketh to be a Sin, this is a ſinful ſort of withdrawing, becauſe it is upon miſtake: But yet it is but a pardonable infirmity, conſiſtent with integrity, and the favour of God.

§. 26. IV. In theſe Caſes following Separation is our Duty and not a Sin. 1. The Churches Separation from the Unbelieving World is a neceſſary Duty: For what is a Church, but a Society dedicated or ſanctified to God, by Separation from the reſt of the World? 2 Cor. 6. 17, 18. Wherefore come out from among them, and be ye ſeparate ſaith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing, and I will receive you, and will be a Father unto you, and ye ſhall be my Sons and Daughters, ſaith the Lord Almighty. The Church is a Holy People, and therefore a ſeparated People. What Separation is a Duty. 1 Pet. 2. 5. Populus Separatus um de Imp: p. 83.

§. 27. 2. If a Church apoſtatize and forſake the Faith, or if they turn notoriouſly Heretical denying openly any one Eſſential Article of the Faith, and this not only by an undiſcerned Conſequence, but directly in expreſs Terms or Senſe, it is our Duty to deny to hold Communion with ſuch Apoſtates or Hereticks: For it is their ſeparating from Chriſt that is the ſinful Separation, and maketh it neceſſary to us to ſeparate from them. But this is no excuſe to any Church or Perſon, that ſhall falſly accuſe any other Church or Perſon of Hereſie (becauſe of ſome forced or diſowned Conſequences of his Doctrine,) and then ſeparate from them when they have thus injured them by their Calumnies or Cenſures.

§ 28. 3. We are not bound to own that as a Church which maketh not a viſible Profeſſion of Faith and Holineſs: That is, If the Paſtors and a ſufficient number of the Flock make not this Profeſſion. For as the Paſtor and Flock are the conſtituent Parts of the Church, politically conſidered, ſo Profeſſion of Faith and Holineſs is the eſſential Qualification of the Members. If either Paſtors or People want this Profeſſion, it is no Political Church: But if the People profeſs true Religion, and have no Paſtors, it is a community of Believers, or a Church unorganized, and as ſuch to be acknowledged.

§. 29. 4. If any ſhall unlawfully conſtitute a new Political Church-form, by making new conſtitutive Officers to be its Viſible Head, which Chriſt never appointed, we are not to hold Communion with the Church in its deviſed Form or Polity: Though we may hold Communion with the Members of it conſidered as Chriſtians and Members of the Univerſal Church. Mark well, that I do not ſay that every new deviſed Officer diſobligeth us from ſuch Communion, but ſuch as I deſcribe; which I ſhall fullier open.

§. 30. Queſt. May not Men place new Officers in the Church: And new Forms of Government which God never inſtituted? Or is there any Form and Officers of Divine Inſtitution? Whether any form of Church-Government be of Divine Appointment: And whether Man may appoint any other?

Anſw. Though I anſwered this before, I ſhall here briefly anſwer it again; 1. There are ſome ſorts of Officers that are eſſential to the Polity, or Church-form, and ſome that are only needful to the well-being of it, and ſome that are only Accidental: 2. There is a Church-form of Gods own Inſtitution, and there is a ſuper-added humane Polity, or Form: There are two ſort of Churches, or Church-forms of Gods own Inſtitution. The firſt is the Univerſal Church conſidered Politically as Headed by Jeſus Chriſt: This is ſo of Divine Appointment, as that it is an Article of our Creed. Here if any Man deviſe and ſuperinduce another Head of the Universal Church, which God never appointed, though he pretend to hold his Soveraignty from Christ and under him, it is Treason against the Soveraignty of Christ, as setting up an Universal Government or Soveraign in his Church without his Authority and Consent. Thus the Pope is the Usurping Head of a Rebellion against Christ, and in that sense by Protestants called Antichrist: And he is guilty of the Rebellion that subscribeth to, or owneth his Usurpation, or sweareth to him as his Governour, though he promise to obey him but in licitis & honestis: Because it is not lawful or honest to Consent to an Usurpers Government. If an Usurper should traiterously without the Kings Consent, proclaim himself Vice King of Ireland or Scotland, and fulfil, say that he hath the Kings Authority, when the King disclaimeth him, he that should voluntarily swear Obedience to him in things lawful and honest, doth voluntarily own his Usurpation and Treason. And it's not the lawfulness and honesty of the Matter which will warrant us to own the Usurpation of the Commander. And Secondly, There is another subordinate Church-form of Christs Institution: That is, Particular Churches consisting of Pastors and People conjoined for personal Communion in Gods worship. These are to the Universal Church, as particular Corporations are to a Kingdom, even such Parts of it as have a distinct subordinate Polity of their own: It is no City or Corporation, if they have not their Mayors, Bailiffs, or other Chief Officers, subject to the King, as Governours of the People under him: And it is no particular Church, in a Political Sense, but only a Community, if they have not their Pastors to be under Christ, their spiritual Conductors in the matters of Salvation; as there is no School which is not constituted of Teacher and Scholars. That particular organized Political Churches are of Christs Institution (by his Spirit in the Apostles:) Is undeniable: Acts 14. 23. They ordained them Elders in every Church. Tit. 1. 5. Ordain Elders in every City as I commanded thee: Acts 20. 17. He sent to Ephesus and called the Elders of the Church: 28. Take heed to your selves and to all the Flock, over which the Holy Ghost hath made you Overseers, to feed the Church of God —— So 1 Thess. 5. 12, 13. Heb. 13. 7, 17. 24, &c. 1 Cor. 7. 23. If the whole Church be come together into one place, &c. Thus far it is no question but Church-forms and Government is of Divine Appointment: And Man can no more alter this, or set up such other without Gods Consent, than a Subject can alter or make Corporations without the Kings Consent. 2. But besides these two sorts of Divine Institution, there are other allowable Associations which some call Churches: God hath required these particular Churches to hold such Communion as they are capable of, for promoting the common Ends of Christianity: And Prudence is left to determine of the Times and Places, and Manner of their Pastors Assemblies, Councils and Correspondencies according to Gods general Rules. If any will call these Councils, or the Associations engaged for special Correspondencies, by the Name of Churches, I will not trouble any with a strife about the Name: In this Case so far as Men have Power to make that Association or Combination which they call a Church, so also if they make Officers suited to its Ends, not encroaching upon the Churches or Officers of Christs own Institution, I am none of those that will contend against them: Nor will this allow us to deny Communion with them. 3. And in those Churches which Christ himself hath instituted, there are Officers that make but for the Integrity, and not for the Political Essence of the Church: As Deacons, and all Pastors or Presbyters more than One. For it is not essential to it to have any Deacons, or many Pastors. As to this sort of Officers Christ hath appointed them, and it is not in Mans Power to alter his Institution, nor to set up any such like in Co-ordination with these: But yet if they should do so, as long as the true Ellentials of the Church remain; I am not to deny Communion with that Church, so I own not this Corruption. 4. But there are also as circumstantial Employments about Gods Worship, so Officers to do those employments, which Men may lawfully institute: As Clerks, Church-wardens, Door-keepers, Ringers, &c. It is not the adding of these that is any Sin. By this time you may see plainly both how far Churches, Officers, and Church-Government is Jure Divino, and how far Man may or may not add or alter, and what I meant in my Proposition, viz. That if Men introduce a new Universal Head to the Church Catholick, or a new Head to particular Churches, instead of that of Christs Institution, this is in sensu Politico, to make new Species of Churches, and destroy those that Christ hath instituted; (for the pars guvernans, and pars gubernata are the essential Constituents of a Church.) And with such a Church as such in specie, I must have no Communion (which is our case with the Papal Church;) though with the Material parts of that Church, as Members of Christ, I may hold Communion still.

Leg. Grotium de Imp. p. 223, 226

§. 30. 5. If particular Members are guilty of obstinate impenitency in true Heresie, or ungodliness, or any scandalous Crime, the Church may and must remove such from her Communion: For it is the Communion of Saints. And the Offender is the Cause of this Separation.

§. 31. 6. If a whole Church be guilty of some notorious scandalous Sin, and refuse with obstinacy to Repent and Reform, when admonished by Neighbour Churches, or if that Church do thus defend such a Sin in any of her Members, so as openly to own it; other Churches may refuse Communion with her, till she Repent and be Reformed. Or if they see cause to hold Communion with her in other Respects, yet in this they must have none.

But not denying her to be a Church, unless she cast off some essential part: But so disowning her as in 2 Thes. 3.

§. 32. 7. If any Church will admit none to her personal Communion, but those that will take some false Oath, or subscribe any Untruth, or tell a Lye, though that Church do think it to be true, (as the Trent Oath which their Priests all swear,) it is not lawful to do any such unlawful thing to obtain Communion with that Church: And he that refuseth in this Case to commit this Sin, is no way guilty of the Separation, but is commendable for being true to God: And though the Case may be sad to be deprived of the Liberty of publick Worship, and the Benefits of publick Communion with that Church, yet Sin is worse; and * Obedience is better than Sacrifice: God will not be served with Sin, nor accept the Sacrifice of a disobedient Fool, Eccles. 5. 1, 2. Nor must we lye to glorifie him, nor do evil that good may come by it: Just is the Damnation of such servers of God, Rom. 1. 7, 8. All publick Worship is rather to be omitted, than any one Sin committed to enjoy it: (Though neither should be done where it is possible to do better.) It is not so unwise to think to feed a Man with Poysons, as to think to serve God acceptably by Sin.

Where any Church retaining the Purity of Doctrine doth require the owning of and conforming to any unlawful or suspected Practice, Men may lawfully deny conformity to, and Communion with that Church in such Things, without incurring the guilt of Schism. Mr. Stillingfleet. Iren. p. 117. * 1 Sam. 15. 22. Prov. 15. 8.

§. 33. 8. If any one Church would ambitiously Usurp a governing Power over others (as Rome doth over the World) it is no unwarrantable Separation to refuse the Government of that Usurping Church. We may hold Communion with them as Christians, and yet refuse to be their Subjects. And therefore it is a proud and ignorant complaint of the Church of Rome, that the Protestants separate from them as to Communion, because they will not take them for their Governours.

§. 34. 9. If any by violence will banish or cast out the true Bishops or Pastors of the Church, and set up Usurpers in their stead (as in the Arrians Persecution secution it was commonly done,) it is no culpable Separation, but laudable and a Duty, for the People to own their Relation to their true Pastors, and deny Communion with the Usurpers; as the People of the Eastern Churches did commonly refuse Communion with the intruding Bishops, even to the Death, telling the Civil Rulers, that they had Bishops of their own, to whom they would adhere.

§. 35. 10. If a true Church will obstinately deny her Members the use of any one Ordinance of God, as Preaching, or Reading Scripture, or Prayer, or Praise, or Discipline, while it retaineth all the rest, though we may not separate from this Church as no-Church (which yet in the case of total Rejection of Prayer or Praise, is very questionable at least) yet if we have opportunity, we must remove our local Communion to a more edifying Church, that useth all the publick Ordinances of God: Unless the publick Good forbid, or some great Impediment, or contrary Duty be our excuse.

2 Joh. 10, 11. 2 Tim. 3. 5. Rom. 16. 17. 1 Cor. 5. 11.

§. 36. 11. If a true Church will not cast out any impenitent, notorious scandalous Sinner, though I am not to separate from the Church, yet I am bound to avoid private familiarity with such a Person, that he may be ashamed, and that I partake not of this Sin.

§ 37. 12. As the Church hath diversity of Members, some more holy, and some less, and some of whose sincerity we have small hope, some that are more honourable, and some less; some that walk blamelesly, and some that work Iniquity: So Ministers and private Members, are bound to difference between them accordingly, and to honour and love some far above others, whom yet we may not excommunicate: And this is no sinful Separation.

Matth. 13. 41, 30. Jer. 15. 19. 1 Cor. 12. 23, 24.

§. 38. 13. If the Church that I live and communicate with, do hold any tolerable Errour, I may differ therein from the Church, without a culpable Separation. Union with the Church may be continued with all the diversities before mentioned D. 3. §. 10.

§ 39. 14. In case of Persecution in one Church or City, when the Servants of Christ do fly to another (having no special Reason to forbid it,) this is no sinful Separation, Matth. 10. 23.

§. 40. 15. If the publick Service of the Church require a Minister or private Christian to remove to another Church, if it be done deliberately and upon good Advice, it is no sinful Separation.

§. 41. 16. If a Lawful Prince or Magistrate command us to remove our Habitation, or command a Minister from one Church to another, when it is not notoriously to the detriment of the common interest of Religion, it is no sinful Separation to obey the Magistrate.

§. 42. 17. If a poor Christian that hath a due and tender care of his Salvation, do find that under one Minister his Soul declineth and groweth Dead, and under another that is more sound, and clear, and lively he is much edified to a holy and heavenly Frame and Life, and if hereupon, preferring his Salvation before all things he remove to that Church and Minister where he is most edified, without unchurching the other by his censures, this is no sinful Separation, but a preferring the One thing needful before all.

§. 43. 18. If one part of the Church have leisure, opportunity, cause and earnest Desires to meet oftner for the edifying of their Souls, and redeeming their Time, than the poorer, labouring, or careless and less zealous part will meet, in any fit place, under the oversight and conduct of their Pastors, and not in Opposition to the more publick full Assemblies, as they did, Acts 12. 12. to pray for Peter at the house of Mary, where many were gathered together Praying; and Acts 10. 1, &c. this is no sinful Separation.

§. 44. 19. If a Mans own outward Affairs require him to remove his Habitation from one City or Countrey to another, and there be no greater matter to prohibit it, he may lawfully remove his local Communion from the Church, that he before lived with, to that which resideth in the place he goeth to: For with distant Churches and Christians I can have none but Mental Communion or by distant means (as Writing, Messengers, &c.); it is only with present Christians that I can have local personal Communion.

§. 45. 20. It is possible in some cases that a Man may live long without local personal Communion with any Christians or Church at all, and yet not be guilty of sinful Separation. As the Kings Embassador or Agent in a Land of Infidels, or some Traveller, Merchants, Factors, or such as go to convert the Infidels, or those that are banished or imprisoned. In all these Twenty Cases, some kind of Separation may be lawful.

§. 46. 21. One more I may add, which is, when the Temples are so small, and the Congregations so great, that there is no room to hear and joyn in the publick Worship: Or when the Church is so excessively great, as to be uncapable of the proper Ends of the Society; in this case to divide or withdraw, is no sinful Separation: When one Hive will not hold the Bees, the swarm must seek themselves another, without the injury of the rest.

By all this you may perceive, that sinful Separation is first in a censorious uncharitable Mind, condemning Churches, Ministers and Worship causelesly, as unfit for them to have Communion with: And Secondly, It is in the personal Separation which is made in pursuance of this Censure: But not in any local removal that is made on other lawful Grounds.

§ 47. Direct. 4. Understand and consider well the Reasons why Christ so frequently and earnestly presseth Concord on his Church, and why he so vehemently forbiddeth Divisions. Observe how much the Scripture speaketh to this Purpose, and upon what weighty Reasons. Here are four Things distinctly to be represented to your serious Consideration. 1. How many, plain and urgent are the Texts that speak for Unity, and condemn Division. 2. The great Benefits of Concord. 3. And the mischiefs of Discord and Divisions in the Church. 4. And the Aggravations of the Sin. Dir. 4.

§. 48. I. A true Christian that hateth Fornication, Drunkenness, Lying, Perjury, because they are forbidden in the Word of God, will hate Divisions also when he well observeth how frequently and vehemently they are forbidden, and Concord highly commended and commanded. John 17. 21, 22, 23. That they all may be One, as thou Father art in me, and I in thee: That they also may be one in us, that the World may believe that thou hast sent me. And the Glory which thou gavest me I have given them, that they may be One, even as we are One: I in them, and thou in me, that they may be made perfect in One; and that the World may know that thou hast sent me, and hast loved them as thou hast loved me. Here you see, that the Unity of the Saints must be a special means to convince the Infidel World of the Truth of Christianity, and to prove Gods special Love to his Church, and also to accomplish their own Perfection. 1 Cor. 1. 10. Now I beseech you brethren, by the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that ye all speak the same thing, and that there be no divisions (or Schisms) among you, but that ye be perfectly joyned together in the same mind, and in the same Judgment. For it hath been declared to me of you, my Brethren, —— that there are contentions among you —— 1 Cor. 3. 3. For ye are yet carnal: For whereas there is among you envying, (zeal) and strife, and divisions, (or parties, or factions) are ye not carnal, and walk as Men? For while one saith, I am of Paul, and another I am of Apollos, are ye not carnal? Phil. 2. 1, 2, 3, 4. If there be any Consolation in Christ, if any comfort of love, if any fellowship of the Spirit; if any bowels and mercies, fulfil ye my joy, that ye be like minded, having the same Love, of one Accord, of one Mind. Let nothing be done through strife or vain Glory, but in lowliness of mind, let each esteem others better than themselves. Rom. 16. 17, 18. Now I beseech you brethren, mark them which cause divisions (or parties) and offences

The Benefits of Concord.

§. 49. II. The great Benefits of the Concord of Chriſtians are theſe following. 1. It is neceſſary to the very Life of the Church and its ſeveral Members, that they be all One Body. As their Union with Chriſt the Head and Principle of their Life is principally neceſſary, ſo Unity among themſelves is ſecondarily neceſſary, for the conveyance and reception of that Life which floweth to all from Chriſt. For though the Head be the Fountain of Life, yet the Nerves and other parts muſt convey that Life unto the Members: And if any Member be cut off or ſeparated from the Body, it is ſeparated alſo from the Head, and periſheth. Mark well the words of the Apoſtle, Epheſ. 4. 3, to 16. [Endeavouring to keep the Unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace: There is one Body, and one Spirit, even as ye are called in one Hope of your calling: One Lord, one Faith, one Baptiſm, one God and Father of all, who is above all, and through all, and in you all: But unto every one of us is given Grace according to the meaſure of the gift of Chriſt.——— And he gave ſome Apoſtles, and ſome Prophets, and ſome Evangeliſts, and ſome Paſtors and Teachers: For the perfecting of the Saints, for the work of the Miniſtry, for the edifying of the Body of Chriſt, till we all come in the Unity of the Faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, to a perfect Man, unto the meaſure of the ſtature of the fulneſs of Chriſt, that——— ſpeaking the truth in Love, we may grow up into him in all things, which is the Head, even Chriſt; from whom the whole Body fitly joined together, and compacted by every joint of ſupply, according to the effectual working in the meaſure of every part, maketh increaſe of the Body to the edifying of it ſelf in Love:] See here how the Churches Unity is neceſſary to its Life and Increaſe, and to the due nutrition of all the parts.

§. 50. 2. The Unity of the Church, and the Concord of Believers, is neceſſary to its ſtrength and ſafety; for Chriſt alſo ſtrengtheneth as well as quickneth them by ſuitable means. Wo to him that is alone: But in the Army of the Lord of Hoſts we may ſafely march on, when ſtraglers are catch'd up or killed by the weakeſt Enemy. A threefold cord is not eaſily broken. Enemies both ſpiritual and corporal are deterred from aſſaulting the Church or any of its Members, while they ſee us walk in our Military Unity and Order. In this poſture every Man is a bleſſing and defence unto his Neighbour. As every Soldier hath the benefit of all the Conduct, Wiſdom and Valour of the whole Army, while he keepeth in his place; ſo every weak Chriſtian hath the uſe and benefit of all the Learning, the Wiſdom and Gifts of the Church, while he keepeth his ſtation, and walketh orderly in the Church. The Hand, the Eye, the Ear, the Foot, and every Member of the Body, is as ready to help or ſerve the whole, and every other particular Member as it ſelf: But if it be cut off, it is neither helpful, nor to be helped. O what mercy is it for every Chriſtian, that is unable to help himſelf, to have the help of all the Church of God? Their Directions, their Exhortations, their Love, their Prayer, their Liberality and Compaſſion, according to their ſeveral abilities and opportunities? As Infants and ſick Perſons have the help of all the reſt of the Family that are in health.

Peace containeth inmate blessings: It strengtheneth Faith: It kindleth Charity: The God of Peace

§. 51. 3. Unity and Concord as it proceedeth from Love, ſo it greatly cheriſheth and increaſeth Love: Even as the laying of the Wood or Coals together is neceſſary to the making of the Fire, which the ſeparating of them will put out. Holy Concord cheriſheth holy Converſe and Communion: And holy Communion powerfully kindleth holy Love: When the Servants of Chriſt do ſee in each other the lulſtre of his Graces, and hear from each other the heavenly Language which floweth from a divine and heavenly Mind, this potently kindleth their Affections to each other, and maketh them cloſe with thoſe as the Sons of God, in whom they find ſo much of God; Yea, it cauſeth them to love God himſelf in others, with a reverent, admiring, and tranſcendent Love, when others at the beſt, can love them but as Men. Concord is the womb and ſoil of Love, although it be firſt its progeny. In quietneſs and peace the voice of peace is moſt regarded.

of the Church, diſtilleth into peace of conſcience: and it turneth the writing and reading of Controverſies, into treatiſes of Mortification and Devotion. Id. Ibid. Againſt procuring Unity by ſanguinary Perſecutions, ſee Lord Bacon Eſſay 3. Surely there is no better way to ſtop the riſing of new Sects and Schiſms, than to reform abuſes, to compound the ſmaller differences, to proceed mildly, and not with ſanguinary Perſecutions, and rather to take off the principal Author by winning and advancing them, than to enrage them by violence and bitterneſs. Lord Bacon in his Eſſay 58. Ira hominis non implet juſtitiam Dei: And it was a notable obſervation of a wiſe Father, that thoſe which held and perſwaded preſſure of Conſcience, were commonly intereſſed therein themſelves for their own ends. Id Eſſay 3. p. 19.

§. 52. 4. Unity and Concord is the Churches Beauty: It maketh us amiable even to the eye of nature, and venerable and terrible even to the eye of malice. A concord in Sin is no more honour, than it is for conquered Men to go together in multitudes to Priſon or Captivity: Or for Beaſts to go by droves unto the ſlaughter. But to ſee the Churches of Chriſt with one Heart and Soul acknowledging their Maker and Redeemer, and ſinging his Praiſe as with one Voice, and living together in Love and Concord, as thoſe that have one Principle, one Rule, one Nature, one Work, one Intereſt and Hope, and End, this is the truly beauteous ſymmetry, and delectable harmony. Pſal. 133. Behold how good and how pleaſant it is for brethren to dwell even together in unity? It is like the precious oyntment upon the head, that ran down upon the beard, even Aarons beard, that went down to the skirts of his garment: As the dew of Hermon, and as the dew that deſcended upon the mountains of Zion: For there the Lord commanded the bleſſing, even life for evermore. The Tranſlators well put this as the Contents of this Pſalm [The benefit of the communion of Saints.]

§. 53. 5. The concord of Believers doth greatly conduce to the ſucceſſes of the Miniſtry, and propagation of the Goſpel, and the conviction of Unbelievers, and the Converſion and Salvation of ungodly Souls. When Chriſt prayeth for the Unity of his Diſciples, he redoubleth this argument from the effect or end, [that the world may believe that thou haſt ſent me:] and [that the world may know that thou haſt ſent me, and haſt loved them, &c. John 17. 21, 23.] Would this make the World believe that Chriſt was ſent of God? Yes, undoubtedly if all Chriſtians were reduced to a Holy Concord, it would do more to win the Heathen World, than all other means can do without it. It is the Diviſions and the Wickedneſs of profeſſed Chriſtians, that maketh Chriſtianity ſo contemned by the Mahometans, and other Infidels of the World: And it is the Holy Concord of Chriſtians that would convince and draw them home to Chriſt. Love and Peace and Concord are ſuch Vertues, as all the World is forced to applaud, notwithſtanding natures enmity to good. When the firſt Chriſtian Church were all with one accord in one place, and continued daily with one accord in the Temple, and breaking bread from houſe to houſe, partook of food with gladneſs and ſingleneſs of heart, and when the multitude of believers were of one heart and of one ſoul, &c. Act. 2. 1, 46. and 4. 32. Then did God ſend upon them the Holy Ghoſt, and then were Three Thouſand converted at a Sermon; and with great power gave the Apoſtles witneſs of the Reſurrection of the Lord Jeſus, and great Grace was upon them all. Act. 2. 47. Act. 4. 33.

Our Concord in Religion hath all theſe advantages for the converting of Unbelievers and ungodly

Men

How our Concord would promote the Conversion of Infidels.

Men. 1. It is a sign that there is a constraining evidence of Truth in that Gospel which doth convince so many: A concurrent satisfaction and yielding to the Truth, is a powerful testimony for it. 2. They see then that Religion is not a matter of worldly Policy and Design, when so many Men of contrary Interests do embrace it. 3. And they see it is not the fruit of Melancholy Constitutions, when so many Men of various temperatures entertain it. 4. They may see that the Gospel hath Power to conquer that self-love and self-interest which is the most potent thing in vitiated nature; Otherwise it could never make so many unite in God as their common interest and end. 5. They may see that the Gospel and Spirit of Christ, is stronger than the Devil and all the allurements of the Flesh and World, when it can make so many agree in the renouncing of all earthly Vanities, for the hopes of everlasting Life. 6. They will see that the Design and Doctrine of Christianity is good and excellent, beseeming God, and desirable to Man; when they see that it doth produce so good effects, as the Love and Unity and Concord of Man. 7. And it is an exceeding great and powerful help to the Conversion of the World in this respect, because it is a thing so conspicuous in their sight, and so intelligible to them, and so approved by them. They are little wrought on by the Doctrine of Christ alone, because it is visible or audible but to few, and understood by fewer, and containeth many things which nature doth distaste: But the holy Concord of Believers is a thing that they are more able to discern and judge of, and do more generally approve. The HOLY CONCORD of Christians, must be the CONVERSION of the unbelieving World, if God have so great a Mercy for the World: Which is a Consideration that should not only deter us from Divisions, but make us zealously study and labour with all our interest and might, for the healing of the lamentable Divisions among Christians, if we have the Hearts of Christians, and any sense of the interest of Christ.

§. 54. 6. The Concord of Christians doth greatly conduce to the ease and peace of particular Believers. The very exercise of Love to one another doth sweeten all our Loves and Duties: We sail towards Heaven in a pleasant Calm, with Wind and Tide, when we live in Love and Peace together: How easie doth it make the work of Godliness: How light a burden doth Religion seem, when we are all as of one Heart and Soul.

§. 55. 7. Lastly, Consider whether this be not the likest state to Heaven, and therefore have not in it the most of Christian Excellency and Perfection? In Heaven there is no discord, but a perfect consort of glorified Spirits, harmoniously loving and praising their Creator. And if Heaven be desirable, holy Concord on Earth is next desirable.

The Mischiefs of Division.

§. 56. III. On the contrary, consider well of the Mischiefs of Divisions. 1. It is the killing of the Church (as much as lyeth in the Dividers) or the wounding it at least. Christ's Body is One, and it is sensible; and therefore dividing it tendeth directly to the destroying it, and at least will cause its smart and pain. To reform the Church by dividing it, is no wiser than to cut out the Liver or Spleen or Gall to cleanse them from the filth that doth obstruct them, and hinder them in their office: You may indeed thus cleanse them, but it will be a mortal cure. As he that should divide the Kingdom into two Kingdoms dissolveth the old Kingdom, or part of it at least, to erect two new ones: So he that would divide the Catholick Church into two, must thereby destroy it, if he could succeed: Or destroy that part which divideth it self from the rest. Can a Member live that is cut off from the Body, or a Branch that is separated from the Tree?

§. 57. Quest. O but, say the Romanists, why then do you cut off your selves from us: The Division is made by you, and we are the Church, and you are dead till you return to us? How will you know which part is the Church, when a Division is once made? Answ. Are you the Church? Are you the only Christians in the World? The Church is [all Christians united in Christ their Head.] You traiterously set up a new usurping Head; and proclaim your selves to be the whole Church, and condemn all that are not Subjects to your new Head: We keep our Station, and disclaim his Usurpation, and deny his Subjection to you, and tell you that as you are the Subjects of the Pope, you are none of the Church of Christ at all: From this treasonable Conspiracy we withdraw our selves: But as you are the subjects of Christ we never divided from you, nor denyed you our Communion. Let Reason judge now who are the Dividers. And is it not easie to know which is the Church in the Division? It is all those that are still united unto Christ: If you or we be divided from Christ, and from Christians that are his Body, we are then none of the Church: But if we are not divided from Christ, we are of the Church still: If part of a Tree, (though the far greater part) be cut off or separated from the rest, it is that part (how small soever) that still groweth with the Root that is the living Tree. The Indian Fig-tree, and some other Trees, have Branches that take root when they touch the ground: If now you ask me, whether the Branches springing from the second Root, are Members of the first Tree, I answer; 1. The rest that have no new Root are more undoubtedly members of it; 2. If any Branches are separated from the first Tree, and grow upon the new Root alone, the case is out of doubt. 3. But if yet they are by continuation joined to both, that Root which they receive their nutriment most from, is it which they most belong to. Suppose a Tyrant counterfeit a Commission from the King to be Vice King in Ireland; and proclaimeth all them to be Traytors that receive him not: The King disclaimeth him: The wisest Subjects renounce him; and the rest obey him but so as to profess they do it, because they believe him to be commissioned by the King. Let the question be now, who are the Dividers in Ireland? And who are the Kings truest Subjects? And what Head it is that denominateth the Kingdom? And who are the Traytors? This is your case.

Quest. Answ. Whether Papists or Protestants are Schismaticks.

Concil. Toletan. 4. c. 16. 28. q. 1. Ca. Judæi qui —— allow separation from a Jewish Husband, if after admonition he will not be a Christian: and so doth Acosta and his Concil. Limens. 3. 6. c. 21. and other Jesuits. and allow the marrying of another: And sure the Conjugal Bond is fasterthan that of a Pastor and his flock: may not a man then change his Pastor when his Soul is in apparent hazzard?

§. 58. 2. Divisions are the deformities of the Church. Cut off a Nose, or pluck out an Eye, or dismember either a Man or a Picture, and see whether you have not deformed it. Ask any compassionate Christian? Ask any insulting Enemy, whether our Divisions be not our Deformity and Shame; the Lamentation of Friends and the Scorn of Enemies?

§. 59. The Churches Divisions are not our own Dishonour alone, but the injurious Dishonour of Christ and Religion and the Gospel. The World thinketh that Christ is an impotent King, that cannot keep his Kingdom at unity in it self, when he hath himself told us, that every Kingdom divided against it self is brought to desolation, and every City or House divided against it self shall not stand, Mat. 12. 25. They think the Gospel tendeth to Division, and is a Doctrine of dissention, when they see Divisions and Dissentions procured by it; they impute all the faults of the Subjects to the King, and think that Christ was confused in his Legislation, and knew not what to teach or command, because Men are confounded in their Opinions or Practices, and know not what to think or do. If Men misunderstand the Law of Christ, and one saith, This is the sense, and another saith that is the sense, they are ready to think that Christ spake Non-sense, or understood not himself, because the ignorant understand him not: Who is there that converseth with the ungodly of the World, that heareth not by their reproach and ſcorns, how much God and Religion are diſhonoured by the Diviſions of religious People.

§. 60. 4. And thus alſo our Diviſions do lamentably hinder the progreſs of the Goſpel, and the Converſion and Salvation of the ungodly World: They think they have ſmall encouragement to be of your Religion, while your Diviſions ſeem to tell them, that you know not what Religion to be of your ſelves. Whatever Satan or wicked Men would ſay againſt Religion to diſcourage the ungodly from it, the ſame will exaſperated Perſons in theſe Diviſions ſay againſt each others way: And when every one of you condemneth another, how ſhould the Conſciences of the ungodly perſwade them to expect Salvation in any of thoſe ways, which you thus condemn? Doubtleſs the Diviſions of the Chriſtian World, have done more to hinder the Converſion of Infidels, and keep the Heathen and Mahometan World in their damnable Ignorance and Deluſions, than all our Power is able to undo: And have produced ſuch Deſolations of the Church of Chriſt, and ſuch a plentiful Harveſt and Kingdom for the Devil, as every tender Chriſtian Heart is bound to lament with Tears of bitterneſs. If it muſt be that ſuch Offences ſhall come, yet woe to thoſe by whom they come.

§. 61. 5. Diviſions lay open the Churches of Chriſt, not only to the ſcorn, but to the malice, will and fury of their Enemies. A Kingdom or Houſe divided cannot ſtand, Matth. 12. 25. Where hath the Church been deſtroyed, or Religion rooted out, in any Nation of the Earth, but Diviſions had a principal hand in the effect? O what Deſolations have they made among the Flocks of Chriſt! As Seneca and others opened their Veins and bled to death, when Nero or ſuch other Tyrants, did ſend them their Commands to die; even ſo have many Churches done by their Diviſions, to the gratifying of Satan, the Enemy of Souls.

Rev. 17. 13.

§. 62. 6. Diviſions among Chriſtians do greatly hinder the edification of the Members of the Church: While they are poſſeſſed with envyings and diſtaſte of one another, they loſe all the benefit of each others Gifts, and of that holy Communion which they ſhould have with one another. And they are poſſeſſed with that zeal and wiſdom, which James calleth earthly, ſenſual and deviliſh, which corrupteth all their affections, and turneth their food to the nouriſhment of their diſeaſe, and maketh their very worſhipping of God to become the increaſe of their Sin. Where Diviſions and Contentions are, the Members that ſhould grow up in Humility, Meekneſs, Self-denyal, Holineſs and Love, do grow in Pride, and perverſe Diſputings, and paſſionate Strivings, and envious Wranglings: The Spirit of God departeth from them, and an evil Spirit of Malice and Vexation taketh place; though in their Paſſion, they know not what ſpirit they are of: Whereas if they be of one mind, and live in peace, the God of love and peace will be with them. What lamentable inſtances of this calamity have we in many of the Sectaries of this preſent time: Eſpecially in the People called Quakers, that while they pretend to the greateſt auſterities, do grow up to ſuch a meaſure of ſower Pride, and uncharitable Contempt of others, and eſpecially of all Superiours, and helliſh railing againſt the holieſt Miniſters and People, as we have ſcarce known, or ever read off?

Eph. 4. 16. 1 Tim. 1. 4. Rom. 15. 19. Act. 9. 31.

§. 63. 7. Theſe Diviſions fill the Church with ſin: even with Sins of a moſt odious Nature. They introduce a ſwarm of Errors, while it becomes the Mode for every one to have a Doctrine of his own, and to have ſomething to ſay in Religion which may make him notable, Acts 20. 30. Of your own ſelves ſhall men ariſe, ſpeaking perverſe things, to draw away Diſciples after them. They cheriſh pride, and malice, and belying others (the three great Sins of the Devil) as naturally as dead fleſh breedeth Worms: They deſtroy impartial Chriſtian Love, as naturally as bleeding doth conſume our vital heat and moiſture. What Wickedneſs is it that they will not cheriſh? In a word, the Scripture telleth us that where envying and ſtrife is, there is confuſion, and every evil work. (And is not this a lamentable way of Reformation of ſome imaginary or leſſer evils?) The greek word is Zeal.

§ 64. 8. Theſe Diviſions are the grief of honeſt Spectators, and cauſe the Sorrows of thoſe that are guilty of them. They make all their Duties uneaſie to them, and turn their Religion into a bitter unpleaſant wrangling toil: Like Oxen in the Yoke that ſtrive againſt each other, when they ſhould draw in order and equality. What a grievous Life is it to Husband and Wife, or any in the Family, if they live in diſcord? So is it to the Members of the Church. When once Men take the Kingdom of God to conſiſt of Meats, or Drinks, or Ceremonies, which conſiſteth in Righteouſneſs, and Peace, and Joy in the Holy Ghoſt, and turn to ſtrife about unedifying Queſtions, they turn from all the ſweetneſs of Religion. Rom. 14. 1 Tim. 1. 4.

§. 65. 9 Sects and Diviſions lead directly to Apoſtaſie from the Faith. Nothing is more in the deſign of Satan, than to confound Men ſo with variety of Religions, that they may think there is no certainty in any: That ſo both the ignorant Spectators may think all Religion is but fancy and deceit, and the contenders themſelves wheel about from Sect to Sect, till they come to the point where they firſt ſet out, and to be at laſt deliberately of no Religion, who at firſt were of none for want of deliberation. And it is no ſmall ſucceſs that Satan hath had by this temptation.

§. 66. 10. The Diviſions of Chriſtians do oft proceed to ſhake States and Kingdoms, having a lamentable influence upon the civil Peace: And this ſtirreth up Princes jealouſies againſt them, and to the uſe of thoſe ſeverities, which the ſuffering Party takes for Perſecution: Yea, and Turks and all Princes that are Enemies to Reformation and Holineſs, do juſtifie themſelves in their crueleſt Perſecutions, when they ſee the Diviſions of Chriſtians, and the Troubles of States that have followed thereupon. If Chriſtians, and Proteſtants in ſpecial, did live in that Unity, Peace and Order as their Lord and Ruler requireth them to do, the Conſciences of Perſecutors would even worry and torment them, and make their Lives a Hell on Earth, for their cruelty againſt ſo excellent a ſort of Men: But now when they ſee them all in confuſions, and ſee the troubles that follow hereupon, and hear them reviling one another, they think they may deſtroy them as the Troublers of the Earth, and their Conſciences ſcarce accuſe them for it.

§. 67. IV. It is neceſſary alſo for your true underſtanding the malignity of this Sin, that you take notice of the Aggravations of it, eſpecially as to us. 1. It is a Sin againſt ſo many, and clear, and vehement Words of the Holy Ghoſt, (which I have partly before recited) that it is therefore utterly without excuſe: Whoredoms, and Treaſons, and Perjury are not oftner forbidden in the Goſpel than this. The Aggravations of Schiſm.

§. 68. 2. It is contrary to the deſign of Chriſt in our Redemption; which was to reconcile us all to God, and unite and center us all in him: To gather together in one the Children of God that are ſcattered abroad, John 11. 52. To gather together in one all things in Chriſt, Epheſ. 1. 10. To make in himſelf of twain one new man, ſo making peace, Epheſ. 2. 15. And ſhall we join with Satan the Divider and Deſtroyer, againſt Chriſt the Reconciler, in the very deſign of his Redemption?

§. 69. It is contrary to the deſign of the Spirit of Grace,

Grace, and contrary to the very nature of Christianity itself. By one spirit we are all baptized into one body——and have all been made to drink into one Spirit, 1 Cor. 12. 13. As there is one Body and one Spirit, so it is our charge to keep the unity of the spirit in the bond of peace, Ephes. 4. 3, 4. The new nature of Christians doth consist in Love, and desireth the Communion of Saints as such: And therefore the command of this special Love, is called the New Commandment, John 17. 21. and 13. 34. and 15. 12, 17. And they are said to be taught of God to love one another, 1 Thess. 4. 9. As self-preservation is the chief Principle in the Natural Body, which causeth it to abhor the wounding. or amputation of its Members, and to avoid Division as Destruction, except when a gangrened Member must be cut off, for the saving of the Body; so it is also with the mystical Body of Christ. He is senseless and graceless that abhorreth not Church-wounds.

Rom. 8. 16. & 5. 26. 1 Joh. 5. 1.

§. 70. 4. These Divisions are Sins against the nearest bonds of our high Relations to each other: We are Brethren, and should there be any strife among us? Gen. 13. 8. We are all the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus, Gal. 3. 26. We are the Fellow-members of the Body of Christ; and should we tear his Body, and separate his Members, and cut his Flesh, and break his Bones? Eph. 5. 23, 30. For as the body is one, and hath many members, and all the members of that one body being many, are one body; so also is Christ, 1 Cor. 12. 12. As we have many members in one body——so we being many are one body in Christ; and every one members one of another, Rom. 12. 4, 5. He that woundeth or dismembreth your own Bodies, shall scarce be taken for your Friend: And are you Christ's Friends, when you dismember or wound his Body? Is it lovely to see the Children or Servants in your Family together by the ears? Is Civil Wars for the safety of a Kingdom? Or doth that tend to the Honour of the Children of God, which is the shame of common Men? Or is that the safety of his Kingdom, which is the ruin of all others? We are all fellow citizens with the Saints, and of the houshold of God, Ephes. 2. 19. We are Gods building, 1 Cor. 3. 9. Know ye not that ye are the Temple of God? And that the spirit of God dwelleth in you? If any man defile the Temple of God, him shall God destroy: For the Temple of God is holy, which Temple ye are: 1 Cor. 3. 16, 17. Will he destroy the Defilers? And will he love the Dividers and Destroyers? If it be so great a Sin to go to Law unnecessarily with our Brethren, or to wrong them, 1 Cor. 6. 8. What is it to disown them and cast them off? And if they that salute and love only their Brethren, and not also their Enemies, are not the Children of God, Matth. 5. 47. What are they that separate from, and condemn even their Brethren?

§. 71. 5. Church-dividers either would divide Christ himself between them, or else would rob him of a great part of his inheritance: And neither of these is a little Sin: If you make several Bodies, you would have several Heads: And is Christ divided? Saith the Apostle, 1 Cor. 1. 13. Will you make him a Sect-Master? He will be your common Head as Christians; but he will be no Head of your Sects and Parties: (I will not name them.) Or would you tear out of the hands of Christ, any part of his Possessions? Will he cut them off, because you cut them off? Will he separate them from himself, because you separate from them, or seperate them from you? Will he give them a Bill of divorce when ever you are pleased to lay any odious accusation against them? (Who shall condemn them, when it is he that justifieth them? Who shall separate them from the Love of God? Can your censure or separation do it, when neither Life, nor Death, nor any Creature can do it? Rom. 8. 33, &c.) Hath he not told you, that he will give them eternal Life, and they shall never perish, neither shall any pluck them out of his hand, John 10. 28. Will he lose his Jewels, because you cast them away as dirt? He suffered more for Souls than you, and better knoweth the worth of Souls; And do you think that he will forget so dear a purchase? Or take it well that you rob him of that which he hath bought so dearly? Will you give the Members and Inheritance of Christ to the Devil, and say, They are Satan's, and none of Christ's. Who art thou that judgest another mans servant?

§. 72. 6. Church-dividers are guilty of Self-ignorance, and Pride, and great Unthankfulness against that God that beareth with so much in them, who so censoriously cast off their Brethren. Wert thou ever humbled for thy Sin? Dost thou know who thou art, and what thou carriest about thee? And how much thou offendest God thy self? If thou do, surely thou wilt judge tenderly of thy Brethren, as knowing what a tender hand thou needest, and what Mercy thou hast found from God. Can he cruelly judge his Brethren to Hell upon his petty differences, who is sensible how the gracious Hand of his Redeemer, did so lately snatch him from the brink of Hell? Can he be forward to condemn his Brethren, that hath been so lately and mercifully saved himself?

§. 73. 7. Church-dividers are the most successful Servants of the Devil, being Enemies to Christ in his Family and Livery. They gratifie Satan, and all the Enemies of the Church, and do the very work that he would have them do, more effectually than open Enemies could do it. As Mutineers in an Army may do more to destroy it, than the power of the Enemy.

§. 74. 8. It is a Sin that contradicteth all God's Ordinances and Means of Grace; which are purposely to procure and maintain the Unity of his Church. The Word and Baptism is to gather them into one Body, and the Lords Supper to signifie and maintain their Concord, as being one Bread, and one Body, 1 Cor. 10. 17. And all the Communion of the Church is to express and to maintain this Concord. The use of the Ministry is much to this end, to be the bonds and joints of this Unity of Believers, Ephes. 4. 13, 14, 16. All these are contemned and frustrated by Dividers.

§. 75. 9. Church-division is a Sin (especially to us) against as great and lamentable experiences as almost any Sin can be. About Sixteen Hundred Years the Church hath smarted by it: In many Countries where the Gospel prospered, and Churches flourished, Division hath turned all into Desolation, and delivered them up to the curse of Mahometanism and Infidelity. The contentions between Constantinople and Rome, the Eastern and the Western Churches have shaken the Christian Interest upon Earth, and delivered up much of the Christian World to Tyranny and Blindness, and given advantage to the Papacy to captivate and corrupt much of the rest, by pretending it self to be the Center of Unity. O what glorious Churches, where the learned Writers of those Ages once lived, are now extinct, and the places turned to the Worship of the Devil and a Deceiver; through the ambition and contentions of the Bishops, that should have been the bonds of their Unity and Peace! But doth England need to look back into History, or look abroad in foreign Lands, for instances of the sad effects of Discord? Is there any one, good or bad in this Age, that hath spent his Days in such a sleep, as not to know what Divisions have done, when they have made such ruines in Church and State, and kindled such consuming Flames, and raised so many Sects and Parties, and filled so many Hearts with uncharitable Rancour, and so many Mouths with slanders and revilings, and turned so many Prayers into Sin, by poysoning them with Pride and factious Oppositions, and hath let out streams of Blood and Fury, over all the Land? He that maketh light of the Divisions of Christians in these Kingdoms, or loveth not those that speak against them, doth shew himself to be so impenitent in them, as to be one of those terrible effects of them, that should be a Pillar of Salt to warn after ages to take heed.

§. 76. 10. Yea, this is a heinous aggravation of this sin, that commonly it is justified, and not repented of by those that do commit it. When a Drunkard, or a Whoremonger will confess his Sin, a Church divider will stand to it, and defend it: And woe to them that call evil good, and good evil. Impenitency is a terrible aggravation of Sin.

§ 77. 11. And it is yet the more heinous, in that it is commonly fathered upon God. If a Drunkard or Whoremonger should say, God commandeth me to do it, and I serve God by it, would you not think this a horrid aggravation? When did you ever know a Sect or Party, how contrary soever among themselves, but they all pretended Gods authority, and entitled him to their Sin, and called it his service, and censured others as ungodly, or less godly, that would not do as bad as they? St. James is put to confute them that thought this wisdom was from above, and so did glory in their Sin, and lye against the truth, when their Wisdom was from beneath, and no better than earthly, sensual and devilish. For the wisdom from above, is first pure, then peaceable, gentle, easie to be entreated, full of mercy, &c. James 3. 17.

§ 78. 12. Church-divisions are unlike to our Heavenly State, and in some regard worse than the Kingdom of the Devil, for he would not destroy it, by dividing it against it self, Matth. 12. 26. O what a blessed Harmony of united holy Souls, will there be in the Heavenly Jerusalem, where we hope to dwell for ever? There will be no Discords, Envyings, Sidings or Contendings, one being of this Party, and another of that: But in the Unity of perfect Love, that World of Spirits, with joyful Praise will magnifie their Creator. And is a snarling Envy or jarring Discord the likely way to such an end? Is the Church of Christ a Babel of Confusion? Should they be divided Party against Party here, that must be one in perfect Love for ever? Shall they here be condemning each other, as none of the Children of the Most High, who there must live in sweetest Concord? If there be shame in Heaven, you will be ashamed to meet those in the delights of Glory, and see them entertained by the Lord of Love, whom you reviled and cast out of the Church, or your Communion causelesly on Earth.

Eph. 4. 13, 14, 16.

§. 79. Remember now that Schism, and making Parties and Divisions in the Church, is not so small a Sin as many take it for: It is the accounting it a Duty, and a part of Holiness, which is the greatest cause that it prospereth in the World: And it will never be reformed till Men have right apprehensions of the evil of it. Why is it that sober People are so far and free from the Sins of Swearing, Drunkenness, Fornication and Lasciviousness, but because these Sins are under so odious a Character, as helpeth them easily to perceive the evil of them: And till Church-divisions be rightly apprehended, as Whoredom, and Swearing, and Drunkenness are, they will never be well cured. Imprint therefore on your Minds the true Character of them, which I have here laid down, and look abroad upon the effects, and then you will fear this confounding Sin, as much as a consuming Plague.

Two Hinderances of our true apprehensions of Schism.

§. 80. The two great causes that keep Divisions from being hated as they ought, are 1. A charitable respect to the good that is in Church-dividers, carrying us to over-look the evil of the Sin: Judging of it by the Persons that commit it, and thinking that nothing should seem odious that is theirs, because many of them are in other respects of blameless pious Conversations. And indeed every Christian must so prudently reprehend the mistakes and faults of pious Men, as not to asperse the Piety which is conjunct; and therefore not to make their Persons odious, but to give the Person all his just commendations for his Piety, while we oppose and aggravate his Sin: Because Christ himself so distinguisheth between the good and the evil, and the Person and the Sin; and loveth his own for their good, while he hateth their evil; and so must we: And because it is the grand design of Satan, by the faults of the godly to make their Persons hated first, and their Piety next, and so to banish Religion from the World: And every Friend of Christ must shew himself an Enemy to this design of Satan. But yet the Sin must be disowned and opposed, while the Person is loved according to his worth. Christ will give no thanks for such Love to his Children, as cherisheth their Church destroying Sins: There is no greater Enemy to Sin than Christ, though there be no greater Friend to Souls. Godliness was never intended to be a Fortress for Iniquity; or a Battery for the Devil to mount his Cannons on against the Church; nor for a blind to cover the Powder-mines of Hell. Satan never opposeth Truth, and Godliness, and Unity so dangerously, as when he can make religious Men his instruments. Remember therefore that all men are vanity, and Gods interest and honour must not be sacrificed to theirs, nor the most Holy be abused, in reverence to the holiest of sinful Men.

§. 81. The other great hinderance of our due apprehension of the sinfulness of Divisions, is our too deep sense of our sufferings by Superiours, and our looking so much at the evil of Persecutions, as not to look at the danger of the contrary extream. Thus under the Papacy, the People of Germany at Luthers Reformation were so deeply sensible of the Papal Cruelties, that they thought by how many ways soever Men fled from such bloody Persecutors, they were very excusable. And while Men were all taken up in decrying the Roman Idolatry, Corruptions and Cruelties, they never feared the danger of their own Divisions till they smarted by them. And this was once the case of many good People here in England, who so much hated the wickedness of the Prophane and the Haters of Godliness, that they had no apprehensions of the evil of Divisions among themselves: And because so many prophane ones were wont to call sober godly People, Schismaticks and Factious, therefore the very Names began with many to grow into credit, as if they had been of good signification, and there had been really no such Sin as Schism and Faction to be feared: Till God permitted this Sin to break in upon us with such fury, as had almost turned us into a Babel, and a Desolation. And I am perswaded God did purposely permit it, to teach his People more sensibly to know the evil of that Sin by the effects, which they would not know by other means: And to let them see when they had reviled and ruined each other, that there is that in themselves which they should be more afraid of, than of any Enemy without.

§. 82. Direct. 5. Own not any cause which is an enemy to Love: And pretend neither Truth, nor Holiness, nor Unity, nor Order, nor any thing against it. The Spirit of Love is that one Vital Spirit which doth animate all the Saints. The increase of Love is the powerful Balsome that healeth all the Churches wounds. Though loveless, lifeless Physicians think that all these Wounds must be healed by the Sword. And indeed the Weapon-salve is now become the proper cure. It is the Sword that must be medicated, that the Wounds made by it may be healed. The decays of Love, are the Churches dissolution; which first causeth Scissures and Separations, and in process crumbleth us all to dust: And therefore the Pastors of the Church are the fittest instruments for the Gal. 5. 6, 13. the cure, who are the Messengers of Love, and whose Government is paternal, and hurteth not the Body, but is only a Government of Love; and exercised by all the means of Love. All Christians in the World confess that LOVE is the very Life and Perfection of all Grace, and the end of all our other Duties, and that which maketh us like to God, and that if Love dwelleth in us, God dwelleth in us; and that it will be the everlasting Grace, and the Work of Heaven, and the Happiness of Souls: And that it is the excellent way, and the Character of Saints, and 1 John 4. 7, 8. the New Commandment. And all this being so, it is most certain that no way is the way of God, John 13. 35. James 3. 15. which is not the way of Love: And therefore what specious pretences soever they may have, and one may cry up Truth, and another Holiness, and another Order, and another Unity it self, to justifie 1 John 4. 16. Gal. 5. 19, 20, 21, 22. 2 Cor. 13. 11. their Envyings, Hatred, Cruelties, it is most certain that all such pretences are Satanical deceits: And if they bite and devour one another, they are not like the Sheep of Christ, but shall be devoured one of 1 Tim. 6. 11. another, Gal. 5. 15. Love worketh no ill to his neighbour: therefore Love is the fulfilling of the Law, Rom. Gal. 5. 14. 1 Cor. 13. 13. 10. When Papists that shew their love to Mens Souls by racking their Bodies, and frying them in Eph. 4. 2, 15, 16. the Fire, can make them apprehensive of the excel- Col. 1. 4. lency of that kind of Love, they may use it to the healing of the Church. In the mean time as their Religion is, such is their Concord, while all those are called Members of their Union, and Professors of their Religion, who must be burnt to ashes if they say the contrary. They that give God an Image and Carcass of Religion, are thus content with the Image and Carcass of a Church for the exercise of it. And if there were nothing else but this to detect the sinfulness of the Sect of Quakers, and many more, it is enough to satisfie any sober Man, that it cannot be the way of God: God is not the author of that Spirit and way which tends to Wrath, Emulation, Hatred, Railing, and the extinction of Christian Love, to all save their own Sect and Party. Remember as you love your Souls, that you shun all ways that are destructive to universal Christian Love.

§. 83. Direct. 6. Make nothing necessary to the unity of the Church, or the communion of Christians, which God hath not made necessary, or directed you to make so. By this one Folly, the Papists are become the most notorious Schismaticks on earth: Even by making new Articles of Faith, and new parts of Worship, and imposing them on all Christians, to be sworn, subscribed, professed or practised, so as that no Man shall be accounted a Catholick, or have Communion with them (or with the Universal Church, if they could hinder it) that will not follow them in all their Novelties. They that would subscribe to all the Scriptures, and to all the ancient Creeds of the Church, and would do any thing that Christ and his Apostles have enjoyned, and go every step of that way to Heaven that Peter and Paul went, as far as they are able, yet if they will go no further, and believe no more (yea, if they will not go against some of this) must be condemned, cast out, and called Schismaticks by these notorious Schismaticks. If he hold to Christ the Universal Head of the Church, and will not be subject or sworn to the Pope, the Usurping Head, he shall be taken as cut off from Christ. And there is no certainty among these Men what measure of Faith, and Worship, and Obedience to them, shall be judged necessary to constitute a Church-member: For as that which served in the Apostles Days, and the following Ages, will not serve now, nor the subscribing to all the other pretended Councils until then, will not serve without subscribing to the Creed or Council of Trent; so no body can tell, what new Faith, or Worship, or Test of Christianity, the next Council (if the World see any more) may require: And how many Thousand that are Trent-Catholicks now, may be judged Hereticks or Schismaticks then, if they will not shut their eyes, and follow them any whither, and change their Religion as oft as the Papal Interest requireth a change. Of this Chillingworth, Hales, and Dr. H. More have spoken plainly. If the Pope had imposed but one lye to be subscribed, or one Sin to be done, and said [All Nations and Persons that do not this, are no Christians, or shall have no Communion with the Church] the Man that refuseth that imposed Lye or Sin, is guiltless of the Schism, and doth but obey God, and save his Soul: And the Usurper that imposeth them, will be found the heinous Schismatick before God, and the cause of all those Divisions of the Church. And so if any private Sectary, shall feign an opinion or practice of his own to be necessary to Salvation or Church Communion, and shall refuse Communion with those that are not of his mind and way, it is he and not they, that is the cause of the uncharitable separation.

Dr. H. More saith Myst. Redemp. p. 495. l. 10. c. 2. There is scarce any Church in Christendom at this day that doth not obtrude, not only falshood, but such falshoods that will appear to any free Spirit pure contradictions and impossibilities: And that with the same gravity, authority, and importunity, that they do the holy Oracles of God. Now the consequents of this must needs be sad: For what knowing and conscientious Man, but will be driven off, if he cannot assert the truth, without open asserting of a gross Lye? Id. p. 526. And as for Opinions, though some may be better than other some, yet none should exclude from the fullest enjoyments of either private or publick rights; supposing there be no venome of the persecutive Spirit mingled with them: But every one that professeth the Faith of Christ, and believeth the Scriptures in the Historical Sense, &c. See Hales of Schism, p. 8.

§. 84. Direct. 7. Pray against the usurpations or intrusions of impious, carnal, ambitious, covetous Pastors into the Churches of Christ. For one wicked Man in the place of a Pastor, may do more to the increase of a Schism or Faction, than many private Men can do. And carnal Men have carnal Minds and carnal Interests, which are both unreconcileable to the spiritual holy mind and interest: For the carnal mind is enmity against God, and is not subject to his Law, nor can be, Rom. 8. 7. And they that are in the flesh cannot please God, v, 8. And you may easily conceive what work will be made in the Ship, when an Enemy of the Owner hath subtilly possessed himself of the Pilot's place? He will charge all that are faithful as Mutineers, because they resist him when he would carry all away. And if an Enemy of Christ should get to be Governour of one of his Regiments or Garrisons, all that are not Traytors shall be called Traytors, and cashiered that they hinder not the Treason which he intendeth. And as then he that was born after the flesh, persecuted him that was born after the spirit, even so it is now: But what saith the Scripture? cast out the bond-woman and her son, &c. Gal. 4. 29, 30. It is not the sacred office of the Ministry nor the profession of the same Religion, that will cure the enmity of a carnal Heart, against both Holiness and the Holy Seed. The whole business of the World from age to age is but the management of that War, proclaimed at Sins first entrance into the World, between the seed of the Woman and the Serpent; and none of the Serpents seed are more cruel or more successful, than those of them that creep into the Armies of Christ; and especially that get the conduct of his Regiments. Neither Brotherhood nor Unity of profes'd Religion, would hold the hands of malignant Cain from murdering his Brother Abel. The same Religion, and Father and Family reconciled not scoffing Ishmael to Isaac, or prophane Esau to his Brother Jacob. The Family of Christ, and an Apostles Office, did not keep Judas from being a Traytor to his Lord. If carnal Men invade the Ministry, they take the way of ease and honour and worldly Wealth, and strive for Dominion, and who shall be the greatest, and care not how great their Power and Jurisdiction is, nor how little their profitable work is: And their endeavour is to fit all matters of Worship and Discipline to their ambitious covetous ends; and the spiritual Worshipper

Acosta l. 6. c. 23. p. 579. [Nothing so much hurteth this Church as a rabble of hirelings and self-seekers: For what can natural Men, that scarce have the Spirit, do in the cause of God? But when will this be? When Men cease to be Men; and to savour the Things of Men; and to seek and gape after the Things of Men. With Men this is utterly impossible; but with God all Things are possible: Because this is hard in the Eyes of this People, shall it therefore be hard in my Eyes, saith the Lord? Zech. 10. pag. 580. I may say to some Ministers that cry out of the schismatical disobedience of the People, as Acosta doth to those that cryed out of the Indians' dulness and wickedness: It is long of the Teachers. Deal with them in all possible love and tenderness, away with Covetousness, Lordliness and Cruelty; give them the Example of an upright Life, open to them the way of Truth; and teach them according to their Capacity, and diligently hold on in this way, who ever thou art that art a Minister of the Gospel, and (saith he) as ever I hope to enjoy thee, O Lord Jesu Christ, I am perswaded the Harvest will be plentiful and joyful, l. 4. p. 433. & passim. But (saith he) we quickly cease our Labours, and must presently have hasty and plenteous Fruit. §. 85. Direct. 8. In a special Manner, take heed of Pride; suspect it and subdue it in your selves; and do what you can to bring it into disgrace with others. Only by Pride cometh Contention, Prov. 13. 10. I never yet saw one Schism made, in which Pride conjunct with Ignorance was not the cause: Nor ever did I know one Person forward in a Schism (to my remembrance), but Pride was discernably his Disease. I do not here intend (as the Papists) to charge all with Schism or Pride, that renounce not their Understandings, and choose not to give up themselves to a beastial Subjection to Usurpers or their Pastors: He that thinks it enough that his Teacher hath Reason and be a Man, instead of himself, and so thinketh it enough that his Teacher be a Christian and Religious; must be also content that his Teacher alone be saved: (But then he must not be the Teacher of such a damning way). But by Pride I mean a plain over-valuing of his own Understanding, and Conceits and Reasonings, quite above all the Evidences of their worth, and an undervaluing and contempt of the Judgments and Reasonings of far wiser Men, that had Evidence enough to have evinced his Folly and Error to a sober and impartial Man. Undoubtedly it is the Pride of Priests and People, that hath so lamentably in all Ages torn the Church. He that readeth the Histories of Schisms and Church-confusions, and marketh the Effects which this Age hath shewed, will no more doubt whether Pride were the cause, than whether it was the wind that blew down Trees and Houses, when he seeth them one way overturned by multitudes, where the Tempest came with greatest force. Therefore a Bishop must be no Novice lest being lifted up with Pride (ἵνα μὴ τυφωθεὶς) he fall into the Condemnation of the Devil, 1 Tim. 3. 6. And if such Stars fall from Heaven, no wonder if they bring many down headlong with them. Humble Souls dwell most at home, and think themselves unworthy of the Communion of their Brethren, and are most quarrelsome against their own Corruptions: They do nothing in strife and vain glory, but in lowliness of mind, each one esteemeth other better than themselves, Phil. 2. 2, 3. and judge not lest they be judged, Matth. 6. 1. And is it likely such should be Dividers of the Church? But Proud Men, must either be great and domineer, and as Diotrephes, 3 John 9, 10. Love to have the preheminence, and cast the Brethren out of the Church, and prate against their faithfullest Pastors with malicious Words; or else must be noted for their supposed Excellencies, and set up themselves, and speak perverse Things, to draw away Disciples after them, and think the Brethren unworthy of their Communion, and esteem all others below themselves; and as the Church of Rome, confound Communion and Subjection, and think none fit for their Communion that obey them not, or comply not with their opinion and will. There is no hope of Concord where Pride hath Power to prevail. Acts 20. 30.

Dir. 9. §. 86. Direct. 9. Take heed of singularity, and narrowness of Mind, and unacquaintedness with the former and present state of the Church and World. Men that are bred up in a Corner, and never read nor heard of the common Condition of the Church or World, are easily misled into Schism, through ignorance of those Matters of Fact that would preserve them. Abundance of this sort of honest People that I have known, have known so little beyond the Town or Countrey where they lived, that they have thought they were very Catholick in their Communion, because they had one or two Congregations, and divided not among themselves. But for the avoiding of Schism, 1. Look (with pity) on the unbelieving World, and consider that Christians of all sorts, are but a sixth part of the whole Earth: And then 2. Consider of this sixth part how small a part the Reformed Churches are: And if you be willing to leave Christ any Church at all, perhaps you will be loth to separate yet into a narrower Party, which is no more to all the World, than one of your Cottages is to the whole Kingdom. And is this all the Kingdom on Earth that you will ascribe to Christ? Is the Kingdom of the Church, the King only of your little Party? Though his Flock be but a little Flock, make it not next to none: As if he came into the World on so low a design as the gathering of your Sect only: The less his Flock is, the more sinful it is to rob him of it, and make it lesser than it is: It is a little Flock, if it contained all the Christians, Protestants, Greeks, Armenians, Abassines and Papists on the Earth. Be singular and separate from the unbelieving World, and spare not: And be singular in Holiness from prophane and nominal hypocritical Christians. But affect not to be singular in Opinion or Practice, or separated in Communion, from the universal Church, or generality of sound Believers, or if you forsake some common Errour, yet hold still the common Love and Communion, with all the faithful according to your Opportunities. 3. And it will be very useful when you are tempted to separate from any Church for the defectiveness of its manner of Worship, to enquire how God is worshipped in all the Churches on Earth, and then consider, Whether if you lived among them you would forsake Communion with them all, for such defects (while you are not forced to justifie or approve them). 4. And it is very useful to read Church History, and to understand what Heresies have been in Times past, and what havock Schisms have caused among Christians: For if this much had been known by well-meaning Persons in our Days, we should not have seen those same Opinions applauded as new Light, which were long ago exploded as old Heresies: Nor should we have seen many honest People, taking that same course to reform the Church now, and advance the Gospel, which in so many Ages and Nations hath heretofore destroyed the Church, and cast out the Gospel. A narrow Soul, that taketh all Christs Interest in the World, to lie in a few of their separated Meetings, and shutteth up all the Church in a Nutshel, must needs be guilty of the foulest Schisms. It is a Catholick Spirit and Catholick Principles, loving a Christian as a Christian, abhorring the very names names of Sects and Parties as the Churches wounds, that must make a Catholick indeed.

Dir. 10. §. 87. Direct. 10. Understand well the true difference between the visible Church, and the World, lest you should think that you are bound to separate as much from a corrupted Church, as from the World. It is not true Faith, but the Profession of true Faith, that maketh a Man fit to be acknowledged a member of the visible Church. If this Profession be unsound, and accompanied with a vitious Life, it is the Sin and Misery of such an Hypocrite, but it doth not presently put him as far unrelated to you, as if he were an Infidel without the Church? If you ask what Advantage have such unsound Church-members? I answer with the Apostle, Rom. 3. 1, 2. Much every way, chiefly because unto them are committed the Oracles of God. Rom. 9. 4. To them pertaineth the Adoption and the Glory and Covenants, and the giving of the Law, and the Service of God and the Promises: Till the Church find cause to cast them out, they have the external Priviledges of its Communion. It hath made abundance to incur the guilt of sinful separation to misunderstand those Texts of Scripture that call Christians to separate from Heathens, Infidels and Idolaters: As 2 Cor. 6. 17. Wherefore come out from among them and be ye separate saith the Lord, &c. The Text speaketh only of separating from the world who are Infidels and Idolaters, and no members of the Church, and ignorant people ordinarily expound it, as if it were meant of separating from the Church because of the ungodly that are members of it: But that God that knew why he called his people to separate from the World, doth never call them to separate from the Church-universal, nor from any particular Church by a mental Separation so as to unchurch them. We read of many loathsome Corruptions in the Churches of Corinth, Galatia, Laodicea, &c. but yet no command to separate from them. So many abuse Rev. 18. 4. Come out of her my People: As if God commanded them to come out of a true Church because of its Corruptions or Imperfections, because he calleth them out of Babylon? It's true, you must partake with no Church in their Sins, but you may partake with any Church in their holy Profession and Worship, so far as you can do it without partaking with them in their Sins.

Dir. 11. §. 88. Direct. 11. Understand what it is that maketh you partakers of the Sins of a Church, or any Member of it, lest you think you are bound to separate from them in good, as well as in evil. Many fly from the publick Assemblies, lest they partake of the Sins of those that are there present. Certainly nothing but Consent (direct or indirect) can make their faults to become yours: And therefore nothing which signifieth not some such Consent, should be on that Account avoided: 1. If you by word or subscription or furtherance own any Mans Sin, you directly Consent to it: 2. If you neglect any Duty which lieth upon you for the cure of his Sin, you indirectly Consent: For you consent that he shall rather continue in his Sin, than you will do your part to help him out of it. Consider therefore how far you are bound to reprove any Sin, or to use any other means for the Reformation of it, whether it be in the Pastor or the People; and if you neglect any such means, your way is to reform your own neglect, and do your duty, and not to separate from the Church, before you have done your Duty to reform it. But if you have done all that is your part, then the Sin is none of yours, though you remain there present.

Quest. Whether presence be not a consent to Sin?

§. 89. It is a turbulent fansie and disquieting Error of some People to think, that their Presence in the Assembly and continuance with the Church doth make them guilty of the personal Faults of those they join with: If so, who would ever join with any Assembly in the World? Quest. But what if they be gross and scandalous Sinners that are Members of the Church? Answ. If you be wanting in your Duty to reform it, it is your Sin: But if bare presence made their Sins to be ours, it would also make all the Sins of the Assembly ours: But no Word of God doth intimate any such thing. Paul never told the Churches of Galatia and Corinth so, that had so many defiled Members. Quest. But what if they are Sins committed in the open Assembly, even by the Minister himself in his Praying, Preaching and other Administrations? And what if all this be imposed on him by a Law, and so I am certain before hand, that I must join with that which is unwarrantable in Gods Worship? Answ. The next Direction containeth those Distinctions that are necessary to the Answer of this.

Dir. 12. §. 90. Direct. 12. Distinguish carefully, 1. Between a Ministers Personal faults, and his Ministerial faults. 2. Between his tolerable weaknesses and his intolerable insufficiencies. 3. And between the work of the Minister and of the Congregation. And then you will see your doubt resolved in these following Propositions.

§. 91. 1. A Ministers personal faults (as swearing, lying, drunkenness, &c.) may damn himself, and must be matter of Lamentation to the Church, and they must do their best to reform them, or to get a better Pastor by any lawful means: But in Case they cannot, his Sin is none of theirs, nor doth it make his Administration null or ineffectual: Nor will it allow you to separate from the Worship which he administreth. Though many of the Priests were wicked Men, the godly Jews were not thereby disobliged from Gods publick Worship, or Sacrifices which were to be offered by their Hands. Otherwise how sad a Case were the Church in, that must answer for the Sins which they never committed, nor could reform! But no Scripture chargeth this upon them.

Saith Cleanthes (in Laert.) The Peripateticks are like Letters that sound well, but hear not themselves.

§. 92. 2. It is not all Ministerial faults that will allow you to separate from or disown a Minister, but only those that prove him or his Ministration utterly intolerable. Such are, 1. An utter insufficiency in Knowledge or Utterance for the necessary Parts of the Ministerial Work: As if he be not able to Teach the necessary Points of Christian Religion, nor to administer the Sacraments and other parts of publick Worship. 2. If he set himself to oppose the very ends of his Ministry, and Preach down Godliness, or any part of it that is of necessity to Salvation: For then he doth the Devils work, in seeking the Damnation of Souls, and so maketh himself the Devils Minister, and is not the Minister of Christ. For the end is essential to the Relation. Herein I include a Preacher of Heresie that doth preach up any damning Error, and preach down any necessary saving Truth: That is, that preacheth such Error as subverteth either Faith or Godliness; and doth more harm in the Church, than Good. 3. If he so deprave Gods publick Worship as to destroy the substance of it, and make it unacceptable, and offer up a publick false-worship to God, which he disowneth in the very Matter of it. As if he put up blasphemy for Praise and Prayer, or commit Idolatry, or set up New Sacraments, and guide the People thus in publick Worship. As the Papists Priests do that adore Bread with Divine Worship, and pray to the Dead, and offer real Sacrifices for them, &c. Such Worship is not to be joined in. 4. Or if they impose any actual Sin upon the People: As in their Responds to speak any falshood, or to adore the Bread, or the like: These faults discharge us from being present with such Pastors at such Worship. But besides these there are many Ministerial faults which warrant not our Separation. As, 1. The internal Vices of the Pastors mind, though manifested in their Ministration: As some tolerable Errors of Yet I excuse not impiety or insufficiency in Ministers. It was one of Solons Laws, Qui nequitiæ ac flagitiis insignis est, tribunali, publicisque suggestis arcendus est. And Gildas saith to the ungodly Pastors of Britain, Apparet ergo cum qui vos sacerdotes sciens ex corde dicit, non esse eximium Christianum —— Quomodo vos aliquid solvetis, ut sit solutum in cœlis, à cœlo ob scelera adempti? & immanium peccatorum funibus compediti? Qua ratione aliquid in terra ligabitis, quod supra mundum etiam ligetur; propter vosmet ipsos qui ita ligati iniquitatibus in hoc mundo tenemini, ut in cœlos nunquam ascendatis, sed in infaustâ tartari ergastula, non conversi in hac vita ad dominum, decidatis, Fol. ult. O inimici Dei, & non sacerdotes! O licitatores malorum, & non Pontifices! Traditores, & non Sanctorum Apostolorum Successores; impugnatores, & non Christi ministri —— pag. 571. Impres. Basil.

Judgment; or envy and pettiſh oppoſition to others. Phil. 1. 15. Some indeed preach Chriſt of envy and ſtrife, and ſome of good will: The one preach Chriſt of contention, not ſincerely, ſuppoſing to add affliction to my bonds; but the other of love, &c. Here is an odious vice in the publick Miniſtry, even an endeavour to increaſe the ſufferings of the Apoſtle: Yet it was lawful to hear ſuch Preachers; though not to prefer them before better: Moſt Sects among Chriſtians are poſſeſſed with a tang of envy and uncharitableneſs againſt Diſſenters; which uſeth to break forth in their preaching and praying: And yet it is lawful to join with ſuch. 2. It is not unlawful to join with a Miniſter that hath many defects and infirmities in his Miniſtration or manner of Worſhip. As if he preach with ſome ignorance, diſorder, unfit expreſſions or geſtures, unmeet repetitions; or if he do the like in Prayer or in the Sacraments, putting ſomething laſt that ſhould be firſt, and leaving out ſomething that ſhould be ſaid, or praying coldly and formally: Theſe and ſuch like are faults which we ſhould do our beſt to reform; and we ſhould not prefer ſuch a Miniſtry before a better: But it is lawful and a duty to join with ſuch, when we have no better. For all Men are imperfect, and therefore the manner of Worſhip as performed by them will be imperfect: Imperfect Men cannot be perfect in their Miniſtrations: We muſt join with a defective and imperfect mode of Worſhip, or join with none on Earth: And we muſt perform ſuch or none our ſelves. Which of you dare ſay that in your private Prayers, you have no diſorder, vain repetitions, flatneſs or defects? 3. It is not unlawful to join with a Miniſter that hath ſome material error or untruth in his preaching or praying, ſo be it we be not called to approve it, or make it ours, and ſo it be not pernicious and deſtructive to the ends of his Miniſtry. For all Men have ſome error, and they that have them may be expected ſometime to vent them. And it is not our preſence that is any ſignification of our conſent to their miſtakes. If we run away from all that vent any untruth or miſtake in publick or private Worſhip, we ſhall ſcarce know what Church or Perſon we may hold Communion with: The Reaſon of this followeth.

§ 93. 3. The ſenſe of the Church, and all its members is to be judged of by their publick profeſſions, and not by ſuch words of a Miniſter which are his own, and never had their conſent. I am by Profeſſion a Chriſtian, and the Scripture is the Profeſſed Rule of my Religion: And when I go to the Aſſemblies, I profeſs to worſhip God according to that Rule: I profeſs my ſelf a hearer of a Miniſter of the Goſpel, that is to preach the Word of God, and that hath promiſed in his Ordination [out of the holy Scriptures to inſtruct the People committed to his charge, and to teach nothing (as required of neceſſity to eternal Salvation) but that which he ſhall be perſwaded may be concluded and proved by the Scripture.] This he profeſſed when he was ordained, and I profeſs by my preſence only to hear ſuch a Preacher of the Goſpel, and worſhip God with him in thoſe Ordinances of Worſhip, which God hath appointed. Now if this Man ſhall drop in any miſtake in preaching, or modifie his Prayers or Adminiſtrations amiſs, and do his part weakly and diſorderly, the hearers are no way guilty of it by their preſence. For if I muſt run away from God's publick worſhip becauſe of Mens miſ-performance, 1. I ſhould join with none on Earth (for a ſmall Sin may no more be wilfully done or owned than a greater.) 2. And then another Mans weakneſs may diſoblige me and diſcharge me from my Duty. To order and word his Prayers and Preaching aright, is part of the Miniſter's own work, and not the Peoples: And if he do it well, it is no commendation to me that am preſent, but to himſelf: And therefore if he do it amiſs, it is no fault of mine or diſpraiſe to me, but to himſelf. If the Common-Council of London, or Court of Aldermen agree to petition the King for the renewing of their Charter, and commit the expreſſing of their requeſt to their Recorder, in their preſence, If he petition for ſomething elſe inſtead of that which he was intruſted with, and ſo betray them in the ſubſtance of his buſineſs, they are openly to contradict him and diſown his treachery or miſtake: But if he deliver the ſame Petition which he undertook with ſtammering, diſorder, defectiveneſs, and perhaps ſome mixture of untruths in his additional reaſons and diſcourſe, this is his failing in the perſonal Performance of his Duty, and no way imputable to them that ſent him, and are preſent with him, though (in modeſty) they are ſilent and ſpeak not to diſown it; for how can it be their fault that a Man is wanting in his perſonal ſufficiency and duty: (unleſs it be that they chooſe not a better.) And whether he ſpeak ex tempore or more deliberately, in a written form or without, in words that other Men taught him, or wrote for him, or in words of his own deviſing, it altereth not their caſe.

§. 94. Obj. But if a Man fail through weakneſs in his own performance, I know not of that before hand: But if his faulty manner of praying be preſcribed and impoſed on him by a Law, then I know it before-hand, and therefore am guilty of it. Obj. Of impoſed defective Liturgies.

Anſw. To avoid confuſion, fix upon that which you think is the thing ſinful. 1. Either it is becauſe the Prayers are defective and faulty; 2. Or becauſe they are impoſed: 3. Or becauſe you know the fault before-hand. But none of all theſe can prove your joining with them ſinful: 1. Not becauſe they are faulty: For you may join with as faulty Prayers you confeſs, if not impoſed. 2. Not becauſe impoſed: 1. Becauſe that is an extenuation, and not an aggravation: For it proveth the Miniſter leſs voluntary of the two, than thoſe are that do it without any command, through the error of their own judgments, (as moſt erroneous Perſons will.) 2. Becauſe (though lawful things oft become unlawful when Superiours forbid them, yet) no reaſon can be given why a lawful thing ſhould become unlawful becauſe a lawful Superiour doth command it. Elſe Superiours might take away all our Chriſtian Liberty, and make all things unlawful to us by commanding them: You would take it for a wild conceit in your Children or Servants, if they ſay, when you bid them learn a Catechiſm or uſe a form of Prayer, it was lawful to us till you commanded us to do it; but becauſe you bid us do it, it is unlawful. If it be a Duty to obey Governours in all things, then it is not a Sin to obey them. 3. And it is not your knowing before-hand that maketh it unlawful: For, 1. I know in general before-hand, that all imperfect Men will do imperfectly: And though I know not the particular, that maketh it never the lawfuller, if fore-knowledge it ſelf did make it unlawful. 2. If you know that e. g. an Antinomian or ſome miſtaken Preacher would conſtantly drop ſome words for his Error in Prayer or Preaching, that will not make it unlawful in your own judgment for you to join, (if it be not a flat Hereſie.) 3. It is another mans error or fault that you fore-know and not your own: And therefore fore-knowledge maketh it not your own. 4. God himſelf doth as an Univerſal Cauſe of Nature concur with Men in thoſe acts which he foreknoweth they will ſinfully do: And yet God is not to be judged either an Author or Approver of the Sin becauſe of ſuch concurrence and foreknowledge: Therefore our fore-knowledge maketh us no approvers, or guilty of the failings of any in their ſacred Miniſtrations, unleſs there be ſome other guilt. If you ſay that is no one of theſe that maketh it unlawful, but all together, you muſt give us a diſtinct argument to prove that the concurrence of theſe three will prove that unlawful, which cannot be proved ſo by any of them alone, for your affirmation muſt not ſerve the turn: And when we know your argument, I doubt not but it may be anſwered. One thing I ſtill confeſs may make any defective Worſhip to be unlawful to you; and that is, When you prefer it before better, and may (without a greater inconvenience) enjoy an abler Miniſtry, and purer Adminiſtration, but will not.

Object. §. 95. Obj. But he that ſitteth by in ſilence in the poſture as the reſt of the Congregation, ſeemeth to conſent to all that is ſaid and done: and we muſt avoid all appearance of evil.

Anſw. Anſw. The appearance of evil which is evil indeed, muſt be alway avoided: But that appearance of evil which is indeed good, muſt not be avoided. We muſt not forſake our Duty leſt we ſeem to ſin: That were but to prefer Hypocriſie before Sincerity, and to avoid appearances more than realities: The omiſſion of a Duty is a real Sin: And that muſt not be done to avoid a ſeeming Sin. And whom doth it appear ſo to? If it appear evil to the blind or prejudiced, it is their eyes that muſt be cured: But if it appear ſo to the wiſe, then it's like it is evil indeed: For a wiſe Man ſhould not judge that to be evil that is not. But I confeſs that in a caſe that is altogether indifferent, even the miſtakes of the ignorant may oblige us to forbear: But the Worſhip of God muſt not be ſo forborn. It is an irrational fancy to think that you muſt be uncivil, by contradicting, or covering your Heads, or doing ſomething offenſive to the Congregation, when any thing is ſaid or done which you diſallow. Your Preſence ſignifieth your Conſent to all that you profeſs, even to worſhip God according to his Word, and not to all the humane imperfections that are there expreſſed.

Dir. 13. §. 96. Direct. 13. Diſtinguiſh carefully between your perſonal private Duties, and the duty of the Paſtor or Church with which you muſt concur. And do not think that if the Church or Paſtor, do not their duty, that you are bound to do it for them. To caſt out an obſtinate impenitent Sinner by ſentence from the Communion of the Church, is the Paſtors or Churches Duty, and not yours, unleſs in concurrence, or ſubſerviency to the Church: Therefore if it be not done, enquire whether you did your duty towards it: If you did, the Sin is none of yours: For it is not in your power to caſt out all that are unworthy from the Church: But private familiarity is in your power to refuſe; and with ſuch no not to eat.

Dir. 14. §. 97. Direct. 14. Take the meaſure of your accidental duties more from the good or hurt of the Church, or of many, than from the immediate good or hurt that cometh to your ſelf. You are not to take that for the ſtation of your Duty, which you feel to be moſt to the commodity of your Souls; but that in which you may do God moſt ſervice: If the ſervice of God for the good of many, require you to ſtay with a weaker Miniſter, and defective Adminiſtrations, you will find in the end that this was not only the place of your Duty, but alſo of your Benefit: For your Life is in Gods hands, and all your Comforts; and that is the beſt way to your Peace and Happineſs, in which you are moſt pleaſing unto God, and have his Promiſe of moſt Acceptance and Grace. I know the leaſt advantage to the Soul, muſt be preferred before all earthly riches; but not before the publick good: Yea, that way will prove moſt advantageous to us, in which we exerciſe moſt obedience.

Dir. 15. §. 98. Direct. 15. Take heed of ſuffering prejudice and fancy to go for reaſon, and raiſe in your minds unjuſtifiable diſtaſtes of any way or mode of Worſhip. It is wonderful to ſee what fancy and prejudice can do? Get once a hard opinion of a thing, and your judgments will make light of all that is ſaid for it, and will ſee nothing that ſhould reconcile you to it: Partiality will carry you away from equity and truth. Abundance of things appear now falſe and evil, to Men that once imagine them to be ſo, which would ſeem harmleſs, if not laudable, if they were tryed by a mind that's clear from prejudice.

Dir. 16. §. 99. Direct. 16. Judge not of Doctrines and Worſhip by Perſons, but rather of Perſons by their Doctrine and Worſhip (together with their Lives.) The World is all prone to be carried by reſpect to Perſons; I confeſs where any thing is to be taken upon truſt, we muſt rather truſt the intelligent, experienced, honeſt and credible, than the ignorant and incredible: But where the Word of God muſt be our Rule, it is perverſe to judge of Things by the Perſons that hold them or oppoſe them: Sometimes a bad Man may be in the right, and a good Man in the wrong: Try the way of the worſt Men before you reject it (in diſputable things.) And try the opinions and way of the beſt and wiſeſt before you venture to receive them.

Dir. 17. §. 100. Direct. 17. Enſlave not your ſelves to any Party of Men, ſo as to be over-deſirous to pleaſe them, nor over-fearful of their cenſure. Have a reſpect to all the reſt of the World as well as them. Moſt Men that once engage themſelves in a Party, do think their honour and intereſt is involved with them, and that they ſtand or fall with the favour of their Party, and therefore make them (before they are aware) the Maſters of their Conſciences.

Dir. 18. §. 101. Direct. 18. Regard more the judgment of aged ripe experienced Men, that have ſeen the fruits of the various courſes of profeſſors of Religion, than of the young, unripe, unexperienced, hot-headed ſort. Zeal is of great uſe to execute the reſolutions of a well-informed Man: And the Zeal of others is very uſeful to warm the Hearts of ſuch as do converſe with them. But when it comes to matter of Judgment once, to decide a caſe of difficulty, aged experience hath far the advantage: And in no caſes more, than in thoſe where Peace and Concord are concerned, where raſh hot-headed youth is very prone to precipitant courſes, which muſt be afterward repented of.

Dir. 19. §. 102. Direct. 19. When fervent ſelf-conceited people would carry down all by cenſoriouſneſs and paſſion, it is time for the Paſtors and the aged and riper ſort of Chriſtians openly to rebuke them, and appear againſt them and ſtand their ground, and not to comply with the miſ-guided ſort to eſcape their cenſures. Nothing hath more cauſed Schiſms in the Church (except the pride and ambition of the Clergy) than that the riper and more judicious ſort of People together with the Miniſters themſelves, have been ſo loth to lye under the bitter cenſures of the unexperienced younger hotter ſort, and to avoid ſuch cenſures and keep in with them, they have followed thoſe whom they ſhould have led, and have been drawn quite beyond their own underſtandings. God hath made WISDOM to be the Guide of the Church, and ZEAL to follow and diligently execute the commands of Wiſdom: Let ignorant well-meaning People cenſure you as bitterly as they pleaſe, yet keep your ground, and be not ſo proud or weak as to prefer their good eſteem before their benefit, and before the pleaſing of God. Sin not againſt your knowledge to eſcape the cenſure of the ignorant. If you do, God will make thoſe Men your Scourges whom you ſo much over-valued: And they ſhall prove to their ſpiritual Fathers as cockered Children (like Abſolom) do to their natural Fathers, and perhaps be the breaking of your Hearts. But if the Paſtors and the riper experienced Chriſtians will ſtand their ground, and ſtick together, and rebuke the exorbitancies of the cenſorious younger ones, they will maintain the credit of the Goſpel, and keep the Truth, and the Churches Peace, and the hot-ſpurs will in time either repent and be ſober, or be ſhamed and diſabled to do much hurt.

Dir. 20. §. 103. Direct. 20. Take heed how you let looſe your zeal againſt the Paſtors of the Church, leſt you bring their Perſons and next their Office into contempt, and ſo break the bond of the Churches Unity and Peace. There is no more hope of maintaining the Churches

Unity

Unity and Concord without the Ministry, than of keeping the Strength or Unity of the Members without the Nerves. If these Nerves be weak or labour of a Convulsion or other Disease, it is curing and strengthening them, and not the cutting them asunder that must prove to the welfare and safety of the body. Meddle with the faults of the Ministry only so far as tendeth to a cure, of them or of the Church, but not to bring them into disgrace, and weaken their interest in the People, and disable them from doing good. Abhor that proud rebellious Spirit, that is prone to set up it self against the Officers of Christ, and under pretence of greater Wisdom or Holiness, to bring their Guides into contempt; and is picking quarrels with them behind their back, to make them a scorn or odious to the hearers. Indeed a Minister of Satan that doth more harm in the Church than good, must be so detected as may best disable him from doing harm. But he that doth more good than hurt, must so be disswaded from the hurt as not to be disabled from the good. My Brethren be not many Masters (or Teachers) knowing that ye shall receive the greater condemnation.

Dir. 21. §. 104. Direct. 21. Look more with an eye of Charity on what is good in others and their worship of God, than with an eye of malice to carp at what appeareth evil. Some Men have such distempered Eyes, that they can see almost nothing but faultiness, in any thing of another party which they look at: Envy and Faction maketh them carp at every word and every gesture: And they make no Conscience of aggravating every failing, and making Idolatry of every mistake in Worship, and making Heresie or Blasphemy of every mistake in judgment, and making Apostasie of every fall; nay perhaps the truth itself shall have no better a representation. As Dr. H. More well noteth, It would do much more good in the World, if all Parties were forwarder to find out and commend what is good in the Doctrine and Worship of all that differ from them. This would win them to hearken to reforming advice, and would keep up the credit of the common truths and duties of Religion in the World, when this envious snarling at all that others do, doth tend to bring the World to Atheism, and banish all reverence of Religion, together with Christian Charity from the Earth.

Dir. 22. Read the next Chap. 24. sect. 20. §. 105. Direct. 22. Keep not strange to those from whom you differ, but be acquainted with them, and plainly hear what they have to say for themselves: Or else converse with them in Christian Love in all those duties in which you are agreed, and this (if you never talk of your differences) will do much to reconcile you in all the rest. It is the common way of Division, Uncharitableness, yea, and Cruelty at last, to receive hard reports of those that differ from us, behind their backs, and to believe and aggravate all, and proceed to detraction and contention at a distance, and in the dark, and never be familiarly acquainted with them at all: There is something in the apprehension of Places, and Persons, and Things by the eye sight, which no reports are able to match: And so there is that satisfaction about Men by familiar acquaintance, which we cannot attain by hearsay from any how judicious soever. All Factions commonly converse together, and seek no familiar converse with others, but believe them to be any thing that's naught, and then report them to be so, before they ever knew the Persons of whom they speak: I am perswaded this is one of the greatest feeders of Enmity, Uncharitableness, Contention and Slanders in the World. I speak it upon great observation and experience; I have seldom heard any Man bitterly oppose the Servants of Christ, but either grosly wicked, or those that never had much acquaintance with them: And I see commonly, how bitter soever Men were before, when once they converse together, and grow acquainted, they are more reconciled: The reason is, partly because they find less evil, and more good in one another than before they did believe to be in them; and partly because Uncharitableness and Malice, being an ugly Monster, is bolder at a distance, but ashamed of it self before your Face: And therefore the Pens of the Champions of Malice, are usually more bitter than their Tongues when they speak to you face to face. Of all the furious Adversaries that have raged against me in the latter part of my Life, I remember not one Enemy that I have or ever had, that was ever familiar or acquainted with me: And I have my self heard ill reports of many: Which by personal acquaintance I have found to be all false. Keep together, and either silence your differences, or gently debate them; yea, rather chide it out, than withdraw asunder: Familiarity sendeth Love and Unity, §. 106. Direct. 23. When ever you look at any corruption in the Church, look also at the contrary extream, and see and avoid the danger of one as well as of the other. Be sure every error and Church-corruption hath its extream: And if you do not see it, and the danger of it, you are the liker to run into it. Look well on both sides if you would be safe. Dir. 23.

§. 107. Direct. 24. Worship God your selves in the purest manner, and under the most edifying Ministry that lawfully you can attain: But be not too forward to condemn others that reach not to your measure, or attain not so much happiness: And deny not personal Communion sometimes, with Churches that are more blemished, and fit for Communion. And when you cannot join locally with them, let them have the communion of your Hearts, in Faith and Charity, and Prayer for each other. I fear not here openly to tell the World, that if I were turned loose to my own liberty, I would ordinarily worship God in that manner that I thought most pure, and agreeable to his Will and Word: But I would sometimes go to the Churches of other Christians, that were fit for Christian Communion, if there were such about me: Sometime to the Independants, sometime to the moderate Anabaptists, sometime to such as had a Liturgie as faulty as that of the Greek or the Ethiopian Churches: To shew by my practice, what Communion my Heart hath with them all. Dir. 24.

§. 108. Direct. 25. Take heed that you interest not Religion or the Church in civil differences: This error hath divided and ruined many famous Churches, and most injuriously made the holy Truth and Worship of God to be a reproach and infamy among selfish partial carnal Men. When Princes and States fall out among themselves, they will needs draw the Ministers to their sides, and then one side will certainly condemn them, and call them all that self-interest and malice can invent: And commonly when the Controversie is only in point of Law or Politicks, it is Religion that bears the blame of all: And the differences of Lawyers and Statesmen must be charged upon Divines, that the Devil may be able to make them useless, as to the good of all that Party that is against them, and may make Religion it self be called Rebellion. And O that God would maintain the Peace of Kingdoms; and Kings and Subjects were all Lovers of Peace, the rather because the differences in States do cause so commonly Divisions in the Church. It would make a Man wonder, (and a lover of History to lament) to observe in the differences between the Pope and Henry the fourth, and other Emperors, how the Historians are divided, one half commending him that the other half condemneth: And how the Bishops and Churches were one half for the Pope, and the other for the Emperor; and one half still accounted Rebels or Schismaticks by the other, though they were all of one Religion. It is more to ruin the Church, than Kingdoms, that Satan laboureth so much to kindle Wars, and Dir. 25. Since the writing of this, I have published a Book called The Cure of Church-Divisions, and a Defence of it which handle these things more fully.

☞ Prince Frederick of Monpelgard being instructed into a distaste of the Reformed Protestants, when he had been at Geneva and Helvetia, was wont to say, Genevæ & in Helvetia vidi multa de quibus nihil, pauca eorum de quibus sæpe audivi: ut Tossanus ad Pegelium referente Sculteto in Curric. p. 36.

Wars, and breed civil differences in the World: And therefore let him that loveth the Churches Peace, be an obedient Subject, and an Enemy of Sedition, and a Lover and Defender of the Civil Peace and Government in the place that God hath ſet him in: For this is pleaſing unto God.

Beda Hiſt. Eccleſ. lib. 1 cap. 26. Diuicerat enim (Rex Edilberth) & à Doctoribus, auctoribuſq; ſuæ ſalutis, ſervitium Chriſti voluntarium, non coactitium debere eſſe.

§. 109. I know there are ſome, that with too bloody and calamitous ſucceſs, have in moſt ages, given other kind of Directions, for the extirpation of Error, Hereſie and Schiſm, than I have here given! But God hath ſtill cauſed the moſt wiſe, and holy, and charitable, and experienced Chriſtians to bear their teſtimony againſt them! And he hath ever cauſed their way of cruelty to turn to their own ſhame: And though (like Treaſons and Robberies) it ſeem for the time preſent to ſerve their turn, it is bitterneſs in the end, and leaveth a ſtinking memorial of their names and actions to poſterity. And the Treatiſes of Reconcilers, (ſuch as Halls, Uſhers, Bergius, Burroughs, and many other) by the delectable ſavour of Unity and Charity are ſweet and acceptable to prudent and peaceable Perſons, though uſually unſucceſsful with the violent that needed them.

Beſides the fore-cited witneſs of Sr. Francis Bacon, &c. I will here add one of the moſt ancient, and one or two of this age, whom the contrary-minded do mention with the greateſt honour. Juſtin Martyr Dial. cum Tryph. doth at large give his judgment, that a Judaizing Chriſtian, who thinketh it beſt to be circumciſed and keep the Law of Moſes, be ſuffered in his opinion and practice, and admitted to the Communion and Privileges of the Church, and loved as one that may be ſaved in that way, ſo be it he do not make it his buſineſs to perſwade others to his way, and teach it as neceſſary to Salvation or Communion: For ſuch he doth condemn.

King James by the Pen of Iſ. Caſaubon telleth Cardinal du Perron, that ["His Majeſty thinketh "that for Concord there is no nearer way, than di- "ligently to ſeparate things neceſſary from the un- "neceſſary, and to beſtow all our labour that we "may agree in the things neceſſary, and that in "things unneceſſary there may be place given for "Chriſtian Liberty. The King calleth theſe things "ſimply neceſſary, which either the Word of God "expreſly commandeth to be believed or done, "or which the ancient Church did gather from the "Word of God by neceſſary conſequence——]

Grotius Annot. in Matth. 13. 41. is ſo full and large upon it, that I muſt intreat the Reader to peruſe his own words; where by arguments and authority he vehemently rebuketh the Spirit of Fury, Cruelty and Uncharitableneſs, which under pretence of Government, Diſcipline and Zeal denyeth that liberty and forbearance, even to Hereticks and Offenders, (much more when to the faithful Miniſters of Chriſt) which humane frailty hath made neceſſary, and Chriſt hath commanded his Servants to grant. Concluding, Ubi ſolitudinem fecerant, pacem appellabant (as Tertul.) Et his omnibus obtendi ſolet ſtudium Divini nominis; ſed plerumque obtendi tantum. Nam Deus dedignatur coacta ſervitia; nec placere illi poteſt quod vi humana exprimitur. Reipſa ſolent qui id faciunt non nomini divino, ſed ſuis honoribus, ſuis commodis & tranquillitati conſulere; quod ſcit ille qui mentes introſpicit. Atq; ita fit, ut lolium evellatur cum tritico, innocentes cum nocentibus: immo ut triticum ſæpe ſumatur pro lolio: Non enim tam bene agitur cum rebus humanis, ut ſemper meliora pluribus aut validioribus placeant: ſed ut in grege taurus, ita inter homines, qui viribus eſt editior, imbecilliorem cædit: & iidem ſæpe quæ pati ſe quærebantur, nocent in alios audent.——— Lege cætera.

Again, I intreat thoſe that would eſcape the Sin of Schiſm, to read ſeriouſly the foreſaid Treatiſes of Peacemakers; eſpecially Biſhop Hall's Peacemaker, Biſhop Uſher's Sermon on Eph. 4. 3. and Mr. Jeremy Burrough's Irenicum: To which I may add Mr. Stillingfleet's Irenicum, for the hot contenders about Church-Government, though I believe all the ſubſtance of Church Order to be of Divine Inſtitution; and Jac. Acontii Stratag. Satanæ.

And it muſt be carefully noted, that one way by which Satan tempteth Men into Church-Diviſions, is by an over-vehement zeal againſt Dividers; and ſo he would draw the Rulers of the World, under pretence of a zeal for Unity and Peace, to raiſe Perſecutions againſt all that are guilty of any exceſs of ſcrupuloſity about Church-Communion, or of any Principles or Practices which a little ſwerve from true Catholiciſm: And ſo by the cruelty of their Penalties, ſilencing Miniſters, and vexing the People they much increaſe the Diviſions which they would heal: For when Satan cannot do his work barefaced and directly, he uſeth to be the forwardeſt in ſeeming to do good, and to take part with Chriſt, and Truth, and Godlineſs: And then his way is to over-do: He will be over-orthodox, and over-godly, and over-peaceable, that he hug the Church and Truth to death, by his too hard embracements. As in Families and Neighbourhoods, ſome croſs words muſt be paſſed over if we would have Peace: And he that for every provoking unpeaceable word of another, will raiſe a ſtorm, ſhall be himſelf the moſt unpeaceable; ſo it is in the Church: He that cannot bear with the weakneſſes of the younger ſort of Chriſtians, who are too much inclined by their zeal againſt Sin, to dividing ways, but will preſently let fly at them as Schiſmaticks, and make them odious, and excommunicate or puniſh them according to his wrath, ſhall increaſe the zeal and the number of Dividers, and prove himſelf the greateſt Divider.

And by this violence and deſtroying zeal of Orthodox Rulers, againſt the real faults and infirmities of ſome ſeparating well-meaning Men, a far greater number of Heterodox Rulers, are encouraged to perſecute the moſt learned, ſober, and peaceable Miniſters, and the moſt godly and faithful of their Subjects, who dare not conform to all their unrighteous Edicts, and Eccleſiaſtical Laws, in things forbidden by the Law of Chriſt: And all this is done upon pretence of promoting Unity and Peace, and ſuppreſſing Hereſie and Schiſm. And ſo Perſecution becometh the Devil's Engine to keep out the Goſpel and Godlineſs from the Infidel World, and to keep them under in the Chriſtian World.

Sed tamen ſive illud (Origenis de Redemptione futura diabolorum) Error eſt, ut ego ſentio; ſive Hæreſis ut putatur, non ſolum reprimi non potuit multis animadverſionibus Sacerdotum, ſed nequaquam tam late ſe potuiſſet effundere, niſi contentione creviſſet: inquit Poſthumianus in Sulp. Severi Dialog. 1.

Sed non fuit animus ibi conſiſtere, ubi recens fraternæ cladis fervebat invidia. Nam etſi fortaſſe videantur parere Epiſcopis debuiſſe, non ob hanc tamen cauſam multitudinem tantam ſub Chriſti confeſſione viventem, præſertim ab Epiſcopis oportuiſſet affligi. Id. Ibid. Speaking of the Biſhops provoking the Secular Power to afflict the Monks of Alexandria for defending Origen.

When the Emperor Conſtantius would by violence force the Orthodox to hold Communion with the Arrians, he did but make the breach the wider. Read Lucifer Calaritanus de non conveniendo cum Hæreticis, (in Biblioth. Patr. Tom. 9. p. 1045, &c.) The Emperor ſaith, that the Orthodox were enemies to Peace, and Unity, and brotherly Love, and that he was reſolved to have Unity and Peace in his Dominions: Therefore he impriſoned the Orthodox and baniſhed them: Propterea odis nos, quia concilium veſtrum malignantium execramur: propterea in exilio ſumus; propterea in carcere necamur; propterea nobis ſolis prohibetur conſpectus; idcirco recluſi in tenebras cuſtodimur, inventi cuſtodiuntur: hujus rei cauſa nullius ad nos viſendos admittitur hominum; num; quia videlicet noluerimus vobiſcum impiis ſacrilegis ullam ſcelerum veſtrorum habere ſocietatem——Ib. pag. 1050. which ſtirred up this Biſhop in particular to go too far from free Communion even with the penitent Arrians, and heap up more Scriptures againſt that Communion which the Emperor commanded, than any had done before. Nobis dicebas, Pacem volo fieri; & in corde tuo manens adverſarius religionis noſtræ, cogitabat per te facere nos idololatras, &c. p. 1051. Conſilia veſtra contra ſuam prolata Eccleſiam reprobat Deus: Nec enim poteſt odire populum ſuum, hæreditatem ſuam, & amare vos filios peſtilentiæ, vos perſecutores ſervorum ſuorum: Dixiſti, Facite pacem cum Epiſcopis ſectæ meæ Arrianis, & eſtote in unum; & dicit Dei Spiritus, Vias impiorum noli exequi, neque æmuleris viam iniquorum, &c.—— Dulce quibuſdam videtur, quo tibi Regi in amicitias jungantur ſuſcipiendo hæreſin tuam: ſed amarius felle ſenſuri cum tecum in perpetuum cœperint in perpetua gehenna ſentire, qui tecum eſſe deligerunt, tunc dicturi, Væ nobis, qui Conſtantium Imperatorem Deo præpoſuerimus. Abundance more he writeth to prove that the Emperor being a Heretick, they muſt have no Communion with him or his Biſhops. And when the Emperor complained hereupon, that they wronged and diſhonoured him whom they ſhould honour, the ſaid Lucifer wrote his next Book, de non parcendo in Deum delinquentibus; which beginneth, [Superatum te, Imperator, à Dei ſervis ex omni cum conſpexiſſes parte, dixiſti paſſum te ac pati à nobis contra monita ſacrarum Scripturarum contumeliam: dicis nos inſolentes extitiſſe, circa te quem honorari decuerit. Si quiſquam Dei cultorum pepercit Apoſtatis, ſint vera quæ dicis de nobis;] and ſo he heapeth up as many Texts for rough dealing with offending Kings: I give this one inſtance to ſhew the fruits of violence, as pretended for Peace and Unity.

Of the perſecutions of the faithful in moſt ages, even by profeſſed Chriſtians themſelves, and God's diſowning that Spirit of Cruelty by his ſpecial Providences, all Church Hiſtory maketh mention: And how the names of ſuch perſecuting Hypocrites have ſtunk in the Noſtrils of all ſober Men when their Tragedy was fully acted and underſtood. Eſpecially the poor Churches called Waldenſes, Picards, and Albigenſes, have felt the grievouſeſt effects of this Tyranny, and yet have the Teſtimony of the beſt and wiſeſt Men, to have been the pureſt and the neareſt to the Apoſtolick ſimplicity in all the World; and the memory of their Enemies and Perſecutors is an abhorrence to the Sons of Charity and Peace. Read Laſitius and Commenius of their Diſcipline, and Biſhop Uſher de Eccleſ. ſucceſ. & ſtatu. I will recite one notable paſſage mentioned by Thuanus and Commenius, the one Hiſt. l. 36. the other de Bono Unit. & Ord. Diſcipl. p. 59. Maximilian that good and moderate Emperor, being one day in the Coach with Joh. Crato only (his chief Phyſician and a learned Proteſtant) lamenting the Diviſions of Chriſtians, asked Crato, which ſort he thought came neareſt to the Apoſtolick Simplicity: He anſwered, He thought that Honour belonged to the Brethren called Picards. The Emperor ſaid, He thought ſo too: Which Crato acquainting them with, encouraged them to dedicate to him a Book of part of their Devotions: For the Year before God had thus marvelouſly ſaved him, from having a hand in their Blood. Joachimus à Nova Domo, Chancellor of Bohemia went to Vienna, and gave the Emperor no reſt, till he had procured him to ſubſcribe a Mandate for the reviving of a former perſecuting Mandate againſt them: Having got his Commiſſion, and paſſing juſt out of the Gates of Vienna, as he was upon the Bridge over the Danubius, the Bridge brake under him, and he and all his retinue fell into that great and terrible Water; and all were drowned except ſix horſemen, and one young Nobleman, who ſeeing his Lord in the Waves, catcht hold of his Gold Chain, and held him till ſome Fiſhermen came in Boats, but found him dead, and his Box with the Commiſſion ſunk paſt recovery: This Nobleman who ſurvived, was ſenſible of Gods judgment, and turned to the Brethren in Religion, and the Mandate was no further proſecuted. (Such another Story Biſhop Uſher was wont to tell how Ireland was ſaved from perſecution in Queen Mary's Days.

But it is the moſt heinous cruelty, when, as in Daniel's caſe, there are Laws of impiety or iniquity, made of purpoſe to intrap the innocent, by them that confeſs, We ſhall find no fault againſt this Daniel, except it be concerning the Law of his God: And then Men muſt be taken in theſe Spiders webs, and accuſed as Schiſmatical, or what the contrivers pleaſe. And eſpecially when it is real Holineſs which is hated, and Order, Unity, Concord, Peace or Obedience to our Paſtors, is made the pretence, for the malicious oppreſſion of it. Gildas and Salvian have told Church Governours of this at large: And many of the perſecuted Proteſtants have more largely told the Roman Clergy of it.

It is a ſmart complaint of him that wrote the Epiſt. de malis Doctoribus, aſcribed to P. Sixtus 3: [Hujus doctrinæ cauſa (pro ſanctitate ſcilicet) paucos amicos conquirunt, & plures inimicos, Neceſſe eſt enim eos qui peccatorum vitia condemnant, tantos habere contrarios, quantos exercere vitia delectat: Inde eſt etiam quod iniquis & impiis factionibus opprimuntur: quod criminibus falſis appetuntur, quod hæreſis etiam perfunduntur infamia: quod hic omnis inimicorum ſuorum ſermo ab ipſorum ſumit obtrectatione materiam. Sed quid mirum ut flagitioſis hæreſis videatur doctrina juſtitiæ? Quibus tamen hæreſis? Ipſorum ſecretum patet tantum inimicis, cum ſi fides dictis ineſſet, amici illud potius ſcire potuiſſent, &c.

The cauſe is, ſaith Proſper de vit. contempl. l. 1. cap. 20. & ex eo Hilitgarius Camarac. l. 5. c. 19.) Sed nos præſentibus delectati, dum in hac vita commoda noſtra & honores inquirimus, non ut meliores ſed ut ditiores, non ut ſanctiores, ſed ut honoratiores ſimus, cæteris feſtinamus. Nec gregem domini qui nobis paſcendus, tuendusque commiſſus eſt, ſed noſtras voluntates, dominationem, divitias, & cætera blandimenta carnaliter cogitamus. Paſtores dici volumus, nec tamen eſſe contendimus. Officii non vitamus laborem, appetimus dignitatem; Immundorum ſpirituum feras à grege dilacerando non pellimus; & quod eis remanſerat, ipſi conſumimus: Quando peccantes divites vel potentes non ſolum non arguimus, ſed etiam veneramur; ne nobis aut munera ſolita offenſi non dirigant, aut obſequia deſiderata ſubducant: ac ſi muneribus eorum & obſequiis capti, immo per hæc illis addicti, loqui eos de peccato ſuo aut de futuro judicio formidamus: Ad hoc tantum Potentes effecti, ut nobis in ſubjectos dominationem tyrannicam vindicemus; non ut afflictos contra violentiam potentum qui in eos ferarum more ſæviunt, defendamus. Inde eſt quod tam à Potentibus hujus mundi, quam à nobis, quod pejus eſt, nonnulli graviter fatigati depereunt, quos ſe de manu noſtra Dominus requiſiturum terribiliter comminatur——

Sulp. Severus alſo toucheth the ſore when he ſaith, Hiſt. l. 2. Certatim glorioſa in certamina ruebatur, multoque avidius tum martyria glorioſis mortibus quærebantur, quam nunc Epiſcopatus pravis ambitionibus appetuntur.

But when he ſaith ibid. after Conſtantines delivery of the Church, [Neque ulterius perſecutionem fore credimus, niſi eam quam ſub fine jam ſæculi Antichriſtus exercebit,] either he was groſly miſtaken, or elſe thoſe are the inſtruments of Antichriſt that are not thought ſo.

It is a moſt notable inſtance to our purpoſe which Severus ends his Hiſtory with, of the miſchievous zeal of Orthodox Ithacius and Idacius againſt Priſcillian and his Gnoſticks; and worthy of the ſtudy of the Prelates of the Church, [Idacius ſine modo & ultra quam oportuit Iſtantium ſocioſq; ejus laceſſens, facem cem nascenti incendio subdidit: ut exasperaverit malos potius quam compresserit.] In sum, they got the Magistrate to interpose and banish the Gnosticks; who quickly learned by bribing Court Officers to turn the Emperor against the Orthodox for themselves: Till the zeal of Idacius and Ithacius grew so hot as to accuse even the best Men, yea, St. Martin himself of favouring the Gnosticks: And at last got another Tyrannical Emperor to put Priscillian and many other Gnosticks to death: Though they withdrew from the accusation, as tending to their own confusion. And Severus saith [Certe Ithacium nihil pensi, nihil sancti habuisse definio: fuit enim audax, loquax, impudens, sumptuosus, veneri & gulæ plurimum impertiens. Hic stultitiæ eo usq; processerat, ut omnes etiam sanctos viros, quibus aut studium inerat lectionis, aut propositum erat certare jejuniis, tanquam Priscilliani socios & discipulos, in crimen arcesseret. Ausus etiam miser est, Martino Episcopo, viro plane Apostolis conferendo, palam objectare hæresis infamiam: — quia non desinebat increpare Ithacium, ut ab accusatione desisteret.] And when the Leaders were put to death, the Heresie increased more, and honoured Priscillian as a Martyr, and reproached the Orthodox as wicked Persecutors: And the end was, that the Church was filled by it with Divisions and manifold Mischiefs, and all the most godly made the common scorn. [Inter hæc plebs Dei & optimus quisq; probro atque ludibrio habebatur.] They are the last words of Severus's History: And changing the names are calculated for another Meridian and for later Years.

CHAP. IX.

How to behave our selves in the publick Assemblick Assemblies, and the Worship there performed, and after them.

See my Treat. of the Lords day, and my Cure of Church Divisions. Dir. 1. Eccles. 5. 1, 2, 3, 4. 1 Pet. 2. 1, 2. Prov. 1. 20 to the end

I Have purposely given such particular Directions in Tom. 2. on this subject, and written so many Books about it, and said so much also in the Cases of Conscience, that I shall here only cast in a few common Directions, lest the Reader think I make a bawk.

Direct. 1. Let your preparations in secret and in your Family on the beginning of the Lords Days, be such as conduce to fit you for the publick Worship. Run not to Church as ungodly People do, with a carnal Heart, that never sought God before you went, nor considered what you go about; as if all your Religion were to make up the number of the auditors; and you thought God must not be worshipped and obeyed, at home, but only in the Church. God may in Mercy meet with an unprepared Heart, and open his Eyes and Heart, and save him; but he hath made no promise of it to any such. He that goeth to worship that God at Church, whom he forgetteth and despiseth in his Heart and House, may expect to be despised by him. O consider what it is for a Sinner that must shortly die, to go with the Servants of God to worship him? To pray for his Salvation, and to hear what God hath to say to him by his Minister, for the Life of his immortal Soul?

Dir. 2. Direct. 2. Enter not into the holy Assembly either superstitiously or unreverently. Not as if the bending of the knee, and mumbling over a few words with a careless ignorant Mind, and spending an hour there as carelesly, would save your Souls: Nor yet as if the Relation which the worship, the worshippers and the dedicated Place have unto God, deserved not a special honour and regard. Though God be ever with us, every where; yet every Time, and Place, and Person, and Business is not equally related to God. And Holiness is no unfit attribution, for that Company or that Place, which is related to God, though but by the lawful separation and dedication of Man. To be uncovered in those Countries where uncovering signifieth Reverence, is very well becoming a reverent Soul; except when the danger of cold forbids it. It is an unhappy effect of our Contentions, that many that seem most reverent and holy, in their high regard of holy things, do yet carry themselves with more unreveverent deportment, than those that themselves account prophane. God is the God of Soul and Body, and must be worshipped by both: And while they are united, the actions of one are helpful to the other, as well as due and decent.

Dir. 3. Direct. 3. If you can, come at the beginning, that you may shew your attendance upon God, and your esteem of all his worship. Especially in our Assemblies, where so great a part of the duty, (as Confession, Praises, Reading the Scriptures,) are all at the beginning. And it is meet that you thereby shew that you prefer publick worship before private, and that needless business keep you not away.

Dir. 4. Direct. 4. If you are free, and can do it lawfully, choose the most able holy Teacher that you can have, and be not indifferent whom you hear: For O how great is the difference; and how bad are our Hearts? And how great our necessity of the clearest Doctrine, and the livelyest helps? Nor be you indifferent what manner of People you join with, nor what manner of worship is there performed; but in all choose the best when you are free. But where you are not free, or can have no better, refuse not to make use of weaker Teachers, or to communicate with faulty Congregations in a defective faulty manner of worship, so be it, you are not compelled to sin. And think not that all the faults of the Prayers, or Communicants are imputed to all that join with them in that worship. For then we should join with none in all the World.

Dir. 5. Direct. 5. When the Minister is weak, be the more watchful against prejudice and sluggishness of Heart, lest you lose all. Mark that Word of God which he readeth to you, and reverence and love, and lay up that. It was the Law read and meditated on, which David saith the Godly do delight in. The sacred Scriptures are not so obscure and useless as the Papists do pretend, but convert the Soul, and are able to make us wise unto Salvation. Christ went ordinarily to the Synagogues where even bad Men did read Moses and the Prophets every Sabbath day. There are Thousands that cannot read themselves, who must come to the Assembly to hear that word read, which they cannot read or hear at home. Every sentence of Scripture hath a divine excellency, and therefore had we nothing but the reading of it, and that by a bad Man, a holy Soul may profit by it. Psal. 1. 2, 3 Psal. 12. 6, 7. & 19. 7, 8, 9.

Dir. 6. Direct. 6. Mind not so much the case of others present as your selves: And think not so much how bad such and such a one is, and unworthy to be there, as how bad you are your selves, and unworthy of Communion with the People of the Lord, and what a Mercy it is that you have admittance, and are not cast out from those holy opportunities.

Dir. 7. Direct. 7. Take heed of a peevish quarrelsome humour, that disposeth you to carp at all that's said and done, and to find fault with every mode and circumstance, and to affect a causeless singularity, as thinking that your own ways, and words, and orders, are far more excellent than other Mens: Think ill of nothing out of a quarrelsome Disposition, but only as evidence constraineth you to dissent. And then remember that we are all imperfect, and faulty Men must needs perform a faulty worship, if any, for it cannot be better than the agent.

Dir. 8. Direct. 8. When you meet with a word in a Sermon or Prayer, which you do not like, let it not stop you, and hinder your fervent and peaceable proceeding in the rest; as if you must not join in that that which is good, if there be any faulty mixture in it. But go on in that which you approve, and thank God that pardoneth the infirmities of others as well as your own.

Dir. 9. Direct. 9. Conform your selves to all the lawful gestures and customes of the Church with which you join. You come not hither proudly to shew the Congregation, that you are wiser in the circumstances of worship than they, nor needlesly to differ from them, much less to harden Men into a scorn of strictness, by seeing you place Religion in singularities in lawful and indifferent things. But you come to exercise Love, Peace and Concord, and with one Mind and Mouth to glorifie God. Stand when the Church standeth; sit when the Church sitteth; kneel when the Church kneeleth, in cases where God doth not forbid it.

Dir. 10 Direct. 10. Take heed of a customary, formal senseless Heart, that tolerateth it self from day to day, to do holy things in a common manner, and with a common, dull, and careless mind: For that is to prophane them. Call in your thoughts when they attempt to wander: Stir up your Hearts when you feel them dull. Remember what you are about, and with whom it is that you have to do, and that you tread on the dust of them who had such opportunities before you which are now all gone, and so will yours. You hear and pray for more than your Lives; therefore do it not as in jeast or as asleep.

Dir. 11. Direct. 11. Do all in Faith and Hope: Believe what you may get of God in Prayer, and by an obedient hearing of his word! Would you not go cheerfully to the King, if he had promised you to grant whatever you ask? Hath not God promised you more, than Kings can give you? Oh it is an unbelieving and a despairing Heart, that turneth all into dead formality. Did you but hope that God would do all that for you, which he hath told you he will do, and that you might get more by Prayer than by your Trades, or Projects, or all your Friends, you would go to God with more earnestness and more delight?

Dir. 12. Direct. 12. Apply all the Word of God to your selves according to its usefulness. Ask as you go, How doth this concern me? This reproof, this mark, this counsel, this comfort, this exhortation, this direction: Remember as much as you can; but especially the most practical useful parts. Get it home so deep upon your Hearts, that it may not easily slide away. Root it by close application, as you go, that affection may constrain you to remember it.

Dir. 13. Act.10.33 1 Sam. 3. 9, 10. Prov.8.34 Ezek.33.4 Psa. 66.18 Psal. 5. 5. Dan.4.27 Prov. 10. 29. & 28. 9. Psal. 50. 16,17,18. & 125. 5. 1 Sam.15. 22. 2 Tim. 2. 19. Mat.7.23. Luk. 13. 27. Joh. 10.3, 4, 27. Eccles 5. 1, 2, 3, 4.

Direct. 13. Above all, Resolve to obey what God shall make known to be his will: Take heed lest any wilful Sin should escape the power of the Word; and should ordinarily go away with you as it came. Careless hearing and careless living tend most dangerously to a hardned Heart, and a forsaken State. If you regard iniquity in your Heart, God will not hear your Prayers. The Sacrifice of the wicked is abominable to him. The foolish shall not stand in his sight, he hateth all the workers of iniquity. He that turneth away his ear from hearing (that is, obeying) the Law, even his Prayer is abominable. To the wicked saith God, What hast thou to do to take my Covenant into thy mouth, seeing thou hatest instruction, and hast cast my words behind thee? Obedience is better than Sacrifice. He that nameth the Name of Christ must depart from iniquity, or else God will not find his mark upon him, nor take him to be one of his: Christ's Sheep know his voice and follow him, and to them he will give eternal Life. But if you had preach'd or done Miracles in his Name, he will say to you, Depart from me, I know you not, if ye be workers of iniquity. Look therefore to your Foot (to your Heart and Life) when you go to the House of God, and be more ready to hear (his Law that must govern you, that you may know his will and do it) than to offer the Sacrifice of Fools, that is, disobedient Sinners) that think by Sacrifices and outside worship to get pardon for an unholy Life, and to reconcile God to them in their Sins, not knowing that thus they add sin to sin. If you seek God daily, and delight to know his ways, as a Nation that did Righteousness and forsook not the Ordinance of their God; if you ask of him the Ordinances of Justice (sound Doctrine, regular Worship, strict Discipline) and take delight in approaching to God; if you humble your Souls with frequent Fasts; and yet live in a course of wilful Disobedience, you labour in vain, and aggravate your Sins, and Preachers had need to lift up their voices and be louder Trumpets to tell you of your Sins, than to other Men. But if ye will wash you, and make you clean, and put away the evil of your doings, cease to do evil, learn to do well, seek judgment, relieve the oppressed, &c. You may then come with boldness, and confidence unto God. Otherwise to what purpose is the multitude of your Sacrifices? Your Oblations will be vain, and your Incense abominable. If ye be willing and obedient, you shall be blessed: But if ye refuse and rebel you shall be destroyed; for the Mouth of the Lord hath spoken it. If you do well shall you not be accepted? But if ye do evil, sin lyeth at the door. Let your profession be never so great, and your parts and expressions never so Seraphical, Sin is a reproach to any People: And if you would hide your selves from Justice in the purest Church, among the holiest People, and the most numerous and longest Prayers, be sure that your Sin will find you out. Your secret lust, your covetous over-reaching, your secret glutTony or tipling, much more your crimson Sins will surely find you out.

Isa. 58. 1, 2, 3. Isa. 1. 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20. Gen. 4. 7. Prov. 14. 34. Numb. 32 23. Jam.1.22. Rom.2.13

Alas, what then will those miscreants do, whose Sins are scarlet bloody Persecutions, under pretence of promoting Unity and Obedience and the Catholick Church, while the Cloak or Cover of it is but the thin transparent Spider-web of humane Traditions, and numerous Ceremonies, and childish complementing with God; and when they have nothing but the Prayers of a long Liturgy, to cover the effects of their earthly, sensual and diabolical Zeal and Wisdom (as St. James calls it, 3. 15, 16.) and to concoct the Widows Houses which they devour, and to put a reverence upon the office and work, which they labour all the Week to render reproachful, by a sensual, luxurious, idle Life, and by perfidious making merchandize of Souls.

Ezek. 7. 19. Jer. 7.23. & 11.4,7, & 26. 13. Mat. 23. 14. Mark 12. 40. Exod. 6. 30. Deut. 7. 12. & 11. 13. & 13. 18. & 15. 5. & 26. 17. & 28. 1.

As ever you care what becometh of your Souls, take heed lest Sin grow bold under Prayers, and grow familiar and contemptuous of Sermons and holy Speeches, and lest you keep a custom of religious Exercises, and wilful Sins. For oh how doth this harden now, and wound hereafter! He is the best Hearer, that is the holiest Liver, and faithfullest Obeyer.

Psal.71.8, 9, 10, 11, 12.

Dir. 14. Direct. 14. Be not a bare hearer of the Prayers of the Pastor, (whether it be by a Liturgy, or without.) For that is but Hypocrisie, and a Sin of omission; you come not thither only to hear Prayers, but to pray. And kneeling is not praying; but it is a profession that you pray. And will you be prayerless even in the House of Prayer, and when you profess and seem to pray? And so add Hypocrisie to Impiety? I fear many that seem religious and would have those kept from the Sacrament that pray not in their Families, do very ordinarily tolerate themselves in this gross Omission, and mocking of God, and are prayerless themselves even when they seem to pray.

Dir. 15. Direct. 15. Stir up your Hearts in a special manner to the greatest alacrity and joy, in speaking and singing the Praises of God. The Lord's Day is a Day of Joy and Thanksgiving, and the Praises of God are the highest and holiest employment upon Earth.

Earth. And if ever you ſhould do any thing with all your might, and with a joyful and triumphing frame of Soul, it is this. Be glad that you may join with the ſacred Aſſemblies, in Heart and Voice, in ſo heavenly a work. And do not, as ſome humourſome peeviſh Perſons (that know not the danger of that proud Diſeaſe) fall to quarrelling with Davids Pſalms; as unſuitable to ſome of the hearers, or to nauſeate every failing in the Metre, ſo as to turn ſo holy a Duty into neglect or ſcorn (for, alas, ſuch there are near me where I dwell;) nor let prejudice againſt melody, or Church muſick (if you dwell where it is uſed) poſſeſs you with a ſplenetick diſguſt of that which ſhould be your moſt joyful work. And if you know how much the incorporate Soul muſt make uſe of the Body in harmony, and in the joyful Praiſes of Jehovah, do not then quarrel with lawful helps, becauſe they are ſenſible and corporeal.

Dir. 16. See Mr. Rawlets Book of Sacramental Covenanting.

Direct. 16. Be very conſiderate and ſerious in Sacramental renewings of your Covenant with God. O think what great things you come thither to receive. And think what a holy work you have to do: And think what a Life it is that you muſt promiſe. So ſolemn a covenanting with God, and of ſo great importance, requireth a moſt holy, reverent and ſerious frame of Soul. But yet let not the unwarrantable differencing this Ordinance from Gods Praiſes and the reſt, ſeduce you into the common errors of the times: I mean, 1. Of thoſe that hence are brought to think that the Sacrament ſhould never be received without a preparatory Day of Humiliation, above the preparation for an ordinary Lord's Days work. 2. And therefore receive it ſeldom; whereas the primitive Churches never ſpent a Lord's Day together without it. 3. Thoſe that turn it into a perplexing terrifying thing, for fear of being unprepared, when it ſhould be their greateſt comfort, and when they are not ſo perplexed about their unpreparedneſs to any other Duty. 4. Thoſe that make ſo great a difference betwixt this and Church-Prayers, Praiſes and other Church-worſhip, as that they take this Sacrament only for the proper work and priviledge of Church-members; and thereupon turn it into an occaſion of our great Contentions and Diviſions, while they fly from Sacramental Communion with others, more than from Communion in the other Church-worſhip. O what hath our ſubtle Enemy done againſt the Love, Peace and Unity of Chriſtians, eſpecially in England, under pretence of Sacramental Purity?

Dir. 17. Direct. 17. Perform all your Worſhip to God, as in Heart-Communion with all Chriſts Churches upon Earth; even thoſe that are faulty, though not with their faults. Though you can be preſent but with one, yet conſent as preſent in ſpirit with all, and ſeparate not in Heart, from any one; any further than they ſeparate from Chriſt.

Dir. 18. Direct. 18. Accordingly let the intereſt of the Church of Chriſt, be very much upon your Heart, and pray as hard for it as for your ſelf.

Dir. 19. Direct. 19. Yea, remember in all, what Relation you have to the heavenly Society and Choir, and think how they worſhip God in Heaven, that you may ſtrive to imitate them in your degree. Of which more anon.

Dir. 20. Direct. 20. Let your whole courſe of Life after, ſavour of a Church-frame; live as the Servants of that God whom you worſhip; and as ever before him. Live in the Love of thoſe Chriſtians with whom you have Communion: And do not quarrel with them at home, nor deſpiſe, nor perſecute them with whom you join in the worſhipping of God. And do not needleſly open the weakneſſes of the Miniſter to prejudice others againſt him and the Worſhip. And be not religious at the Church alone, for then you are not truly religious at all.

CHAP. X.

Directions about our Communion with Holy Souls Departed, and now with Chriſt.

THE overſight and neglect of our Duty concerning the Souls of the bleſſed, now with Chriſt, doth much harden the Papiſts in their erroneous exceſſes hereabout. And if we will ever reduce them, or rightly confute them, it muſt be by a judicious aſſerting of the Truth, and obſerving ſo much with them as is our duty, and commending that in them which is to be commended, and not by running away from truth and duty that we may get far enough from them and error: For error is an ill way of confuting error. The practical Truth lyeth in theſe following Precepts.

I have ſaid more of this ſince, in my Life of Faith.

§. 1. Direct. 1. Remember that the departed Souls in Heaven are part, and the nobleſt part of the Body of Chriſt and Family of God, of which you are inferiour Members; and therefore that you owe them greater Love and Honour, than you owe to any Saints on Earth. Dir. 1.

Eph. 3. 15. The whole family in Heaven and Earth is named of Chriſt. Thoſe are the happieſt and nobleſt parts, that are moſt pure and perfect, and dwell in the higheſt and moſt glorious habitations, neareſt unto Chriſt, yea, with him: If Holineſs be lovely, the moſt holy are the moſt lovely: We have many obligations therefore, to love them more than the Saints on Earth: They are more excellent and amiable, and Chriſt loveth them more. And if any be honourable, it muſt eſpecially be thoſe Spirits, that are of greateſt excellencies and perfections, and advanced to the greateſt Glory and nearneſs to their Lord. Make Conſcience therefore of this as your duty, not only to love and honour bleſſed Souls, but to love and honour them more than thoſe that are yet on Earth. And as every Duty is attended with Benefit, ſo we ſhall find this exceeding benefit in the performance of this duty, that it will incline our Hearts to be the more heavenly, and draw up our Deſires to the Society which we ſo much love and honour.

§. 2. Direct. 2. Remember that it is a part of the Life of Faith, to ſee by it the Heavenly Society of the bleſſed, and a part of your Heavenly Converſation, to have frequent, ſerious and delightful thoughts of thoſe crowned Souls that are with Chriſt. Dir. 2. Heb. 11. 13

Otherwiſe God would never have given us ſuch Deſcriptions of the Heavenly Jeruſalem, and told us ſo much of the Hoſts of God that muſt inhabit it for ever; that muſt come from the Eaſt and from the Weſt, and ſit down with Abraham, Iſaac and Jacob in the Kingdom of God: When it is ſaid that our Converſation (πολίτευμα) is in Heaven, Phil. 3. 20. the meaning extendeth both to our Relation, Priviledges and Converſe: We are Denizons or Citizens of the Heavenly Society; and our Title to their Happineſs is our higheſt Priviledge and Honour; and therefore our daily buſineſs is there, and our ſweeteſt and moſt ſerious Converſe is with Chriſt and all thoſe bleſſed Spirits. Whatever we are doing here, our Eye and Heart ſhould ſtill be there: For we look not at the temporal things which are ſeen, but at the eternal things which are not ſeen, 2 Cor. 4. 18. A wiſe Chriſtian that hath forſaken the Kingdom of Darkneſs, will be deſirous to know what the Kingdom of Chriſt is into which he is tranſlated, and who are his fellow Subjects, and what are their ſeveral ranks and dignities, ſo far as tendeth to his congruous Converſe with them all. And how ſhould it affect us to find that we are come unto Mount Sion, and unto the City of the living God, the Heavenly Jeruſalem, and to an innumerable company of Angels, to the general Aſſembly and Church of the firſt born which are written in Heaven, and to God the Judge of all, and to the Spirits of Juſt Men made perfect, and to Jeſus the Mediator of the new Covenant, Heb. 12. 22, 23, 24. Live then as the

the Members of this Society, and exclude not the chief Members from your thoughts and converse: Though our local visible Communion be only with these rural inferiour Inhabitants, and not with the Courtiers of the King of Heaven, yet our Mental Communion may be much with them. If our Home and Treasure be there with them, our Hearts will be there also, Mat. 6. 21.

Dir. 3. §. 3. Direct. 3. It is the Will of God that the Memory of the Saints be honoured on Earth when they are dead. It is some part of his favour which he hath promised to them. Prov. 10. 7. The memory of the just is blessed: But the name of the wicked shall rot. Matth. 26. 13. Verily I say unto you, wheresoever this Gospel shall be preached in the whole World, there shall also this that this Woman hath done, be told for a memorial of her. The History of the Scripture recordeth the Lives of the Saints to their perpetual Honour. And God will have it so also for the sake of his abused Servants on Earth, that they may see that the slanders of malicious Tongues, shall not be able to obscure the Glory of his Grace, and that the lies of the ungodly prevail but for a moment. And God will have it so for the sake of the ungodly, that they may be ashamed of their malicious Enmity and Lies against the Godly, while they perceive that the departed Saints do leave behind them a surviving Testimony of their sanctity and innocency, sufficient to confound the venemous calumnies of the Serpents Seed. Yea God will have the Names of his eminent Servants to be honoured upon Earth, for the honour of their Head, and of his Grace and Gospel: So that while malice would cast dishonour upon Christ, from the meanness and failings of his Servants that are alive, the memory of the dead, (who were once as much despised and slandered) shall rise up against them to his Honour and their Shame. And it is very observable, how God constraineth the bitter Enemies of Holiness to bear this Testimony for the Honour of Holiness against themselves! That many who are the cruelest Persecutors and Murderers of the Living Saints, do honour the Dead even to excess. How zealous are the Papists for the multitude of their Holy-days, and the honouring of their Names and Relicts, and pretending many Miracles to be wrought by a very touch of their Shrines or Bones, whilst they revile and murder those that imitate them, and deprive Temporal Lords of their Dominions that will not exterminate them. Yea, while they burn the living Saints, they make it part of their Crime or Heresie, that they honour not the Days and Relicts of the Dead, so much as they: To shew us that the Things that have been shall be, and that wickedness is the same in all Generations: Matth. 23. 29, 30, 31, 32, 33. Wo unto you Scribes and Pharisees, Hypocrites! Because ye build the Tombs of the Prophets, and garnish the Sepulchres of the Righteous; and say, If we had been in the days of our fathers, we would not have been partakers with them in the blood of the Prophets: Wherefore ye be witnesses to your selves that ye are the Children of them which killed the Prophets. Fill ye up then the measure of your Fathers: Ye Serpents, ye generation of Vipers, how can ye escape the Damnation of Hell? I know that neither did the Pharisees, nor do the Papists, believe that those whom they murdered were Saints; but Deceivers and Hereticks, and the Troublers of the World: But if Charity be the Grace most necessary to Salvation; then sure it will not keep any Man from Damnation, that he had malice and uncharitableness sufficient to perswade him, that the Members of Christ were Children of the Devil. But thus God will force even the Persecutors and Haters of his Saints to honour them. And if he constrain his Enemies to it, his Servants should not be backward to do it according to his Will.

Concil. Lat. 4. sub Innoc. 3. Can. 3.

Dir. 4. §. 4. Direct. 4. Only such Honour must be given to departed Saints, as subserveth the Honour of God, and nothing must be ascribed to them that is his Prerogative: All that of God which was communicated to them and appeared in them, must be acknowledged: But so that God must be still acknowledged the spring of all; and no Honour given ultimately to them; but it is God in them that we must behold, and love, admire and honour.

§. 5. Direct. 5. The Honour of the Saints departed must be only such as tendeth to the promoting of Holiness among the living. It is a most horrid aggravation of those Mens Sins, who make their honouring of the Saints departed, a cover for their hating and persecuting their followers: Or that make it an engine for the carrying on some base Design; some make it a device for the advancing of their Parties and peculiar Opinions: The Papists make it a very great means, for the maintaining the usurped Power of the Pope; giving him the Power of Canonizing Saints, and assuring the World what Souls are in Heaven: A Pope that by the Testimony of a General Council (as Joh. 23. Eugenius, &c.) is a Heretick, and a wicked Wretch, and never like to come to Heaven himself, can assure the World of a very large Catalogue of Persons that are there: And he that by the Papists is confessed fallible in Matters of Fact, pretendeth to know so certainly who were Saints, as to appoint them Holy-days, and command the Church to pray to them: And he that teacheth Men that they cannot be certain themselves of their Salvation, pretendeth when they are dead that he is certain that they are saved: To pretend the Veneration of Saints for such carnal ambitious designs, and cheats, and cruelties is a Sin unfit for any that mentioneth a Saint. So is it when Men pretend that Saints are some rare extraordinary Persons among the living Members of the Church: To make Men believe that honouring them will serve instead of imitating them; and that all are not Saints that go to Heaven: [God forbid, say they, that none but holy Persons should be saved: We confess it is good to be Saints, and they are the chief in Heaven: But we hope those that are no Saints may be saved for all that.] But God saith, that without Holiness none shall see him, Heb. 12. 14. Heaven is the inheritance of none but Saints: Acts 26. 18. Col. 1. 12. He that extolleth Saints to make Men believe that those that are no Saints may be saved, doth serve the Devil by honouring the Saints. The same I may say of those that give them Divine Honour, ascribing to each a Power to hear and help all throughout the World that put up Prayers to them.

Rom. 1. 7. 1 Cor. 1. 2. & 14. 33. Eph. 1. 8. & 2. 19. & 4. 12. & 5. 3. Rom. 15. 25, 26.

Dir. 6. §. 6. Direct. 6. Look up to the blessedness of departed Souls, as Members of the same Body, rejoicing with them, and praising God that hath so exalted them. This is the benefit of holy Love, and Christian Unity, that it maketh our Brethrens happiness to be unto us, in a manner as if it were our own. 1 Cor. 12. 25, 26. That there should be no Schism in the Body, but that the Members should have the same care one for another —— that if one member be honoured all the members rejoice with it. So far as selfishness is overcome, and turned into the Uniting Love of Saints, so far are all the joys of the blessed Souls in Heaven, become the joys of all that truly Love them upon Earth. How happy then is the state of all true Believers, that have so many to rejoice with? Deny not God that Thanks for the saving of so many Souls, which you would not deny him, if he saved but your Friends, Estates or Lives. Especially when Afflictions or Temptations would deprive you of the Joy which you should have in Gods Mercies to your selves, then comfort your selves with the remembrance of your Brethrens Joy. what an incongruous undecent thing is it for that Man to pine away in Sorrows upon Earth, who hath so many thousand Friends in Heaven, in joy and blessedness, whose Joys should all be to him as his own?---

Dir. 7. §. 7. Direct. 7. When you feel a cooling of your love to God, or of your zeal or reverence or other Graces, think then of the temper of those Holy Souls, that see his Glory! O think, with what fervour do they Love their their God? With what tranſporting ſweetneſs do they delight in him? With what Reverence do they all behold him? And am not I his Servant, and a member of his Family as well as they? Shall I be like the ſtrangers of this frozen World, when I ſhould be like my fellow Citizens above? As it will diſpoſe a Man to weep to ſee the tears and grief of others; and as it will diſpoſe a Man to mirth and joy to ſee the mirth and joy of others; ſo is it a potent help to raiſe the Soul to the Love of God, and delight in his Service, to think believingly of the Love and Delight of ſuch a World of bleſſed Spirits.

Dir. 8. §. 8. Direct. 8. When you draw near to God in his holy Worſhip, remember that you are part of the ſame Society with thoſe bleſſed Spirits that are praiſing him in Perfection. Remember that you are members of the ſame Choir, and your part muſt go to make up the Melody; and therefore you ſhould be as little diſcordant from them as poſſibly you can. The quality of thoſe that we join with in Gods Service, is apt either to dull or quicken us, to depreſs or elevate us; and we move Heaven-ward moſt eaſily and ſwiftly in that Company, which is going thither on the ſwifteſt pace. A believing thought that we are worſhipping God in Conſort with the heavenly Choir, and of the high and holy Raptures of thoſe Spirits, in the continual praiſe of their great Creator, is an excellent means to warm and quicken us, and raiſe us as near their holy Frame, as here on Earth may be expected.

Dir. 9. §. 9. Direct. 9. When you would poſſeſs your Hearts with a lively ſenſe of the odiouſneſs of Sin, and would reſiſt all Temptations which would draw you to it, think then how the bleſſed Souls with God do judge of Sin, and how they would entertain ſuch a temptation if the motion were made to them? What think they of Covetouſneſs, Pride or Luſt? What think they of malice, cruelty or lying? How would they entertain it, if Lands and Lordſhips, Pleaſure or Preferment were offered them to entice their Hearts from God? Would they venture upon damnation for a Whore, or for their Games, or to pleaſe their Appetites? Do they ſet as light by God and their Salvation as the ungodly World doth? Oh with what ſcorn and holy Indignation would they refuſe a World, if it were offered them inſtead of God? With what deteſtation would they reject the motion to any Sin?

Dir. 10. §. 10. Direct. 10. When you would revive in your minds a right apprehenſion and eſtimation of all earthly things, as Riches and Honours and Greatneſs and Command and full Proviſions for the fleſh, bethink you then how the bleſſed Souls with Chriſt eſteem them. How little do they ſet by all thoſe things, that worldlings make ſo great a ſtir for, and for which they ſell their God and their Salvation? How contemptible are Crowns and Kingdoms in their Eyes? Their Judgements is more like to Gods than ours is. Luke 16. 15. That which is highly eſteemed among Men is abomination in the ſight of God. All the World would not hire a Saint in Heaven, to tell one lie, or take the name of God in vain, or to forget God or be eſtranged from him for one hour.

Dir. 11. §. 11. Direct. 11. When you ſee the Godly under the 1 Cor. 4. 12, 13. Lam. 3. 45 contempt of Sinners here, accounted as the filth of the World, and the off-ſcouring of all things, defamed, reviled, hated and perſecuted, look up then to the Saints with Chriſt, and think how they are eſteemed and uſed. And when you would truly know what a Believer is, think not how they are eſteemed and uſed by Men, but how they are eſteemed and uſed by Chriſt. Judge not of them by their ſhort Afflictions, nor by their meanneſs in the fleſh, but by their endleſs Happineſs, and their Glory above. Look up to the home and Heb. 11. 38. World of Saints, if you would know what Saints are, and not to the few ſcattered imperfect Paſſengers in this World that is not worthy of them.

Dir. 12. §. 12. Direct. 12. When you are tempted to think meanly of the Kingdom of Chriſt, as if his flock were ſo ſmall and poor and ſinful as to be inconſiderable, look up to the World of bleſſed Souls which dwell above. And there you ſhall ſee no ſuch paucity, or imperfections, or blemiſhes as are here below: The Subjects there are ſuch as diſhonour not their King. Chriſts Kingdom is not of this World, Joh. 18. 36. If you would know it in its Glory, look up to the world where it is glorious. If when you hear Men contemn the Kingdom of the Saints of Chriſt, and at the ſame time did but ſee, (as Stephen did) a glimpſe into that Kingdom, and all the Glory of the bleſſed there, what thoughts would you have of the Words which did diſhonour it?

§. 13. Direct. 13. When you hear Sinners boaſt of Dir. 13. the Wiſdom or Numbers of their Party, and appealing to the learned or great ones of the World, look up to the bleſſed Souls with Chriſt, and ask whether they are not more wiſe and numerous than all the Sinners upon Earth. The greateſt Doctors are ignorant and unlearned, in compariſon of the meaneſt Soul with Chriſt: The greateſt Monarchs are but Worms, in compariſon of the glorified Spirits with God. If they ſay to you, Are you wiſer than ſo many and ſo wiſe and learned Men? Ask them, are you or all the ungodly wiſer, than all the bleſſed Souls with Chriſt? Let the wiſer party carry it.

§. 14. Direct. 14. When you are tempted to be wea- Dir. 14. ry of a holy Life, or to think all your Labour is vain, look up to the bleſſed Souls with Chriſt, and there you will ſee the end of Holineſs: There you will ſee that of all the labour of your Lives, there is none that you are ſo ſure to gain by; and that in due time, you ſhall reap if you faint not; and if you ſow to the Spirit, of the Spirit you ſhall reap everlaſting Life, Gal. 6. 8, 9. And that when you have done the will of God, if you have but Patience, you ſhall inherit the Promiſe, Heb. 10. 36. Ask your ſelves, whether any of thoſe bleſſed Souls repent now of the Holineſs of their lives on Earth? Or of their mortifying the Fleſh, and denying themſelves the delights of Sin?

§. 15. Direct. 15. When you are tempted to turn back Dir. 15. in the day of tryal, and to forſake Chriſt or his cauſe when Perſecution ariſeth, then look to the bleſſed Souls above, and ſee what is the end of ſuffering for the ſake of Chriſt and Righteouſneſs. To foreſee the great Reward in Heaven, will convince you that inſtead of being terrified by ſufferings, you ſhould rejoice and be exceeding Matth. 5. 11, 12. glad. Are you to lye in Priſon, or to burn in the Flames? So did many thouſands that are now in Heaven: And do you think that they repent it now? Ignatius, Polycarp, Cyprian, and many ſuch holy Men, were once uſed as hardly as you are now, and put to Death by cruel Men: Rogers, Bradford, Hooper, Glover and Multitudes with them, were once in Priſon and burnt in the Flames; but where are they now, and what is the end of all their Pains? Now whether do you think the Caſe of Bonner or Bradford to be beſt? Now had you rather be Gardiner or Philpot? Now which think you doth moſt repent? The poor Waldenſes that were murdered by Thouſands? Or the Popes and Perſecutors that murdered them?

§. 16. Direct. 16. When you are diſmayed under the Dir. 16. burden of your Sins, the greatneſs of your Corruptions, the weakneſs of your Graces, the imperfections of your Duties, look up to the bleſſed Souls with Chriſt, and remember that all thoſe glorified Spirits, were once in Fleſh as you now are, and once they lay at the feet of God, in tears and groans and cries as you do: They were once fain to cry out of the burden of their Sins, and mourn under the weakneſs of their Graces, as you now do. They were once as much clog'd with Fleſh as you are; and once as low in doubts and fears, and bruiſed under the ſenſe of Gods diſpleaſure: They once were as violently aſſaulted with Temptations; and had the ſame Corruptions to lament and ſtrive againſt as you have: They were once as much afflicted by God and Man: But is there any of the ſmart of this remaining?

§. 17. Direct. 17. When you are deterred from the Dir. 17. preſence of the dreadful God, and think he will not accept ſuch worms as you, look up to the bleſſed Souls with Chriſt; and remember how many millions of your Brethren are there there accepted to greater familiarity than that which you here desire: Remember that those Souls were once as dark and distant from God, and unworthy of his acceptance as you now are. A fearful Child receiveth boldness, to see his Brethren in his Fathers arms.

Dir. 18. §. 18. Direct. 18. When you are afraid of Satan lest he should prevail against you and devour you, look up to the blessed Souls with Christ; and see how millions are there safely landed, that once were in as dangerous a station as you are. Through many tribulations and temptations they are arrived at the Heavenly Rest: Satan once did his worst against them: They were tost on the Seas of this tempestuous World: But they were kept by the Power of God, through Faith unto Salvation, and so may you.

Dir. 19. §. 19. Direct. 19: When you would duly value all your present means and mercies, and see whither they tend, look up then to the Souls with Christ, and see whither the like mercy hath conducted them. The poorest Cottage and the hardest fare are great Mercies as they tend to endless blessedness. This now and Heaven after, is great; though the thing in it self be never so small. Heaven puts the value and signification upon all your Mercies: The wicked make Cyphers of their greatest Blessings, by separating them in their esteem and use, from God and Heaven, which is the measure of their estimate.

Dir. 20. §. 20. Direct. 20. When you see Divisions among believers, and hear one for this party, and another for that, and hear them bitterly censuring each other, look up then to the Saints with Christ, and think what perfect Love and Peace and Concord is among them. Consider how unlike our Factions and Schisms are to their fervent Love and Unity? And how unlike our jarring strifes and quarrels are to their harmonious Praise of God. Remember in what work it is that they are so happily united, even Love and Praise unceasant to Jehovah: And then think whether it would not unite the Saints on Earth, to lay by their contendings for the preheminence in knowledge, (covered with the guilded name of Zeal for the Truth of God,) and to employ themselves in Love and Praise, and to shew their emulation here, in striving who shall love God and each other with the more pure Heart and fervent Love, 1 Pet. 1. 22. And who shall praise him with the most heavenly alacrity and delight. Consider whether this work of blessed Souls, be not like to be more desirable and excellent, than the work of self-conceited wrangling Sophisters? And whether there be any danger of falling into Sects and Factions, or falling out by emulations or contentions, while we make this work of Love and Praise the matter of our religious converse? And consider whether almost all the Schisms that ever vex'd the Church of God, did not arise, either by the Pastors striving who should be the greatest, (Luk. 22. 24, 26.) or by the rising up of some Sciolist or Gnostick, proudly pretending to know more than others, and to vindicate or bring to light, some excellent Truth which others know not, or oppose? And when you see the hot contendings of each Party, about their pretended Orthodoxness or Wisdom (which Jam. 3. is purposely written against) remember how the Concord of those blessed Souls doth shame this work, and should make it odious to the heirs of Heaven.

Dir. 21. §. 21. Direct. 21. When you are afraid of Death, or would find more willingness to dye, look up to the blessed Souls with Christ, and think that you are but to pass that way, which all those Souls have gone before you; and to go from a World of enmity and vanity, to the company of all those blessed Spirits: And is not their blessed state more desirable, than such a vain vexatious Life as this? There is no malice, nor slandering, nor cruel persecuting, no uncharitable censures, contentions, or divisions; no ignorance, nor unbelief, nor strangeness unto God: Nothing but holy, amiable and delightful. Join your selves daily to that Celestial Society: Suppose your selves Spectators of their Order, Purity and Glory, and Auditors of their harmonious Praises of Jehovah: Live by Faith in a daily familiarity with them: Say not that you want company or are alone, when you may walk in the Streets of the Heavenly Jerusalem, and there converse with the Prophets and Apostles, and all the glorious Hosts of Heaven. Converse thus with them in your Life, and it will overcome the fear of Death, and make you long to be there with them: Like one that stands by the River side, and seeth his Friends on the further side, in a place of pleasure, while his Enemies are pursuing him at his back, how gladly would he be over with them? And it will embolden him to venture on the passage, which all they have safely pass'd before him. Thus Death will be to us as the Red Sea, to pass us safe to the Land of Promise, while our Pursuers are there overthrown and perish. We should not be so strange to the World above, if we thus by Faith conversed with the blessed ones.

§. 22. Direct. 22. When you are overmuch troubled for the death of your godly Friends, look up to that World of blessed Souls, to which they are translated, and think whether it be not better for them to be there than here? And whether you are not bound by the Law of Love, to rejoice with them that are thus exalted. Had we but a sight of the World that they are in, and the company that they are gone to, we should be less displeased with the will of God, in disposing of his own, into so glorious a state. Dir. 22.

§. 23. All these improvements may be made by a Believer, of his daily converse with the Souls above: This is the Communion with them which we must hold on Earth: Not by praying to them, which God hath never encouraged us to do; nor by praying for them (for though it be lawful to pray for the Resurrection of their Bodies, and the perfecting of their blessedness thereby, yet it being a thing of absolute certainty as the Day of Judgment is, we must be very cautelous in the manner of our doing this lawful act; it being a thing that their Happiness doth not at all depend on, and a thing which will-worshippers have shewed themselves so forward to abuse, by stepping further into that which is unlawful; (as the horrid abuses of the Names and Days, and shrines and relicts of real or supposed Saints, in the Papal Kingdom sadly testifieth.) But the necessary part of our Communion with the Saints in Heaven, being of so great importance to the Church on Earth, I commend it to the due consideration of the faithful, whether our forgetfulness of it is not to be much repented of, and whether it be not a work to be more seriously minded for the time to come.

§. 24. And I must confess I know not why it should be thought unlawful to celebrate the memorial of the Life or Martyrdom of any extraordinary Servant of God, by an Anniversary Solemnity, on a set appropriate Day: It is but to keep the thankful remembrance of God's Mercy to the Church: And sure the life and death of such, is not the smallest of the Churches Mercies here on Earth. If it be lawful on Nov. 5. to celebrate the memorial of our deliverance from the Powder-plot, I know not why it should be thought unlawful to do the like in this case also: Provided, 1. That it be not terminated in the Honour of a Saint, but of the God of Saints for giving so great a Mercy to his Church. 2. That it be not to honour a Saint meerly as a Saint, but to some extraordinary eminent Saints: Otherwise all that go to Heaven must have Festivals kept in remembrance of them; and so we might have a Million for a Day. 3. That it be not made equal with the Lords Day, but kept in such a subordination to that Day, as the life or death of Saints is of inferiour and subordinate respect to the work of Christ in Mans Redemption. 4. And if it be kept in a spiritual manner, to invite Men to imitate the Holineſs of the Saints, and the conſtancy of the Martyrs, and not to encourage ſenſuality and ſloth.

CHAP. XI.

Directions about our Communion with the Holy Angels.

Dir. 1. §. 1. Direct. 1. BE ſatisfied in knowing ſo much of Angels as God in Nature and Scripture hath revealed, but preſume not to enquire further, much leſs to determine of unrevealed things. That there are Angels, and that there are holy Spirits, is paſt diſpute. But what number they are, and of how many Worlds, and of what orders and different dignities and degrees; and when they were created, and what locality belongeth to them, and how far they excel or differ from the Souls of Men, theſe and many other ſuch unneceſſary queſtions neither Nature or Scripture will teach us how infallibly to reſolve. Almoſt all the Hereticks in the firſt ages of the Church did make their Doctrines of Angels the firſt and chief part of their Hereſies: Arrogantly intruding into unrevealed things, and boaſting of their acquaintance with the orders and inhabitants of the higher World. Theſe being riſen in the Apoſtles Days, occaſioned Paul to ſay, Col. 2. 18. Let no man beguile you of your reward in a voluntary humility, and worſhipping of Angels, intruding into thoſe things which he hath not ſeen, vainly puft up by his fleſhly mind.

Dir. 2. §. 2. Direct. 2. Underſtand ſo much of the Miniſtry of Angels as God hath revealed, and ſo far take notice of your communion with them; but affect not any other ſort of communion.

Angelorum vocabulum nomen eſt officii, non naturæ: nam ſancti illi cœleſtis patriæ ſpiritus, ſemper ſunt ſpiritus, ſed ſemper vocari Angeli non poſſunt. Gregor.

I ſhall here ſhew how much of the Miniſtry of Angels is revealed to us in Scripture.

Dan. 4. 13 Gen. 32. 1, 2. Exod. 32. 2. Dan. 6. 22 Act. 12. 7, 11. 1 King. 19 5, 6.

§. 3. 1. It is part of the appointed work of Angels, to be Miniſtring Spirits for the heirs of Salvation, Heb. 1. 14. Not Miniſters or Servants of the godly, but Miniſters of God for the godly: As the Shepherd is not a ſervant of the ſheep, but for the ſheep. It is not an accidental or occaſional work which they do extraordinarily; but it is their undertaken Office to which they are ſent forth. And this their Miniſtry is about the ordinary concernments of our Lives, and not only about ſome great or unuſual caſes or exigents, Pſal. 34. 6, 7. Pſal. 91. 11, 12.

§. 4. 2. It is not ſome, but all the Angels that are appointed by God to this Miniſtration, Heb. 1. 1, 4. Are they not all miniſtring Spirits ſent forth, &c. Mark here, that if you enquire whether God have any higher Spirits, that are not employed in ſo low an Office, but govern theſe Angels, or if you enquire whether only this World be the Angels charge, or whether they have many other Worlds alſo (of Viators) to take care of: Neither Nature nor Scripture doth give you the determination of any of theſe queſtions: And therefore you muſt leave them as unrevealed things: (with abundance more with which the old Hereticks and the Popiſh Schoolmen, have diverted Mens minds from plain and neceſſary things.) But that all the Angels miniſter for us, is the expreſs words of Scripture.

Luk. 1. 13, 18, 19, 26, 28. & 2. 10, 13, 21. Act. 10. 7. 22. & 12. 8, 9. Dan. 3. 28 & 6. 22. Gen. 24. 40.

§. 5. 3. The work of this Office is not left promiſcuouſly among them, but ſeveral Angels have their ſeveral works and charge: Therefore Scripture telleth us of ſome ſent of one meſſage, and ſome on another: And tells us that the meaneſt of Chriſt's members on Earth, have their Angels before God in Heaven, Matth. 18. 10. I ſay unto you, that in Heaven their Angels do always behold the face of my Father which is in Heaven. Whether each true Believer hath one or more Angels? And whether one Angel look to more than one Believer? Are queſtions which God hath not reſolved us of, either in Nature or Scripture: But that each true Chriſtian hath his Angel, is here aſſerted by our Lord.

1 Pet. 3. 22. Matth. 28. 18. Rev. 1. 1.

§. 6. 4. In this office of Miniſtration they are Servants of Chriſt as the Head of the Church, and the Mediator between God and Man to promote the ends of his ſuperior Office in Mans Redemption, Mat. 28. 18. All power is given to me in heaven and earth. John 13. 3. Eph. 1. 20, 21, 22. And ſet him at his right hand in the celeſtials, far above all principality, and power, and might, and dominion, and every name that is named, not only in this world, but alſo in that which is to come, and hath put all things under his feet, and gave him to be head over all things to the Church. Rev. 23. 16. I Jeſus have ſent mine Angel to teſtifie unto you theſe things in the Churches. Whether the Angels were appointed about the ſervice of Adam in innocency? Or only began their Office with Chriſt the Mediator as his Miniſters, is a thing that God hath not revealed, But that they ſerve under Chriſt for his Church is plain.

2 Kings 6. 17.

§ 7. 5. This care of the Angels for us is exerciſed throughout our Lives, for the ſaving of us from all our dangers, and delivering us out of all our troubles, Pſal. 34. 6, 7. This poor man cryed, and the Lord heard him, and ſaved him out of all his troubles: the angel of the Lord encampeth about them that fear him, and delivereth them: Pſal. 91. 11, 12. For he ſhall give his Angels charge over thee to keep thee in all thy ways; They ſhall bear thee up in their hand, leſt thou daſh thy foot againſt a ſtone. In all our ways (that are good) and in every ſtep we tread, we have the Care and Miniſtry of tutelar Angels. They are our ordinary defence and guard.

Dan. 4. 35

§. 8. 6. In all this Miniſtry they perfectly obey the Will of God, and do nothing but by his command. Pſal. 103. 10. Zech. 1. 8, 10. Matth. 18. 10. being his Meſſengers to Man.

1 King. 22 19, 20, 21. 22. 1 Theſſ. 2. 18.

§. 9. 7. Much of their work is to oppoſe the malice of evil ſpirits that ſeek our hurt, and to defend us from them: Againſt whom they are engaged under Chriſt in daily War or Conflict, Rev. 12. 7, 9. Pſal. 61. 17. and 78. 49. Matth. 4. 11.

Luk. 1. 19, 26.

§. 10. 8. In this their Miniſtration they are ordered into different degrees of ſuperiority and inferiority, and are not equal among themſelves, 1 Theſſ. 4. 16. Jude 9. Dan. 10. 13, 20, 21. Eph. 1. 21. Col. 2. 10. Eph. 3. 10. and 6. 12. Col. 1. 16. Zech. 4. 10. Rev. 4. 5. and 5. 6.

Act. 7. 53.

§. 11. 9. Angels are employed not only about our Bodies, but our Souls, by furthering the means of our Salvation! They preached the Goſpel themſelves, (as they delivered the Law) Luke 2. 10, 9. Luke 1. 11, &c. Heb. 2. 2. Gal. 3. 19. Acts 10. 4. Dan. 7. 16. and 8. 15, 16, 17. and 9. 21, 22. Luke 1. 29. and 2. 19. Eſpecially they deliver particular meſſages, which ſuppoſe the ſufficiency of the Laws of Chriſt, and only help to the obedience of it.

Act. 27. 24. Luk. 1. 13, 30. & 2. 10. Dan. 10. 12. 2 King. 6. 16. Gen. 16. 9, 10. Numb. 22 32.

§. 12. 10. They are ſometime God's inſtruments to confirm, and warn, and comfort, and excite the Soul, and to work upon the Mind, and Will, and Affections: They that do this perſwaſively, and have as much acceſs and power to do us good, as Satan hath to do us evil, is very clear: Good Angels have as much power and acceſs to the Soul, to move to duty, as Devils have to tempt to Sin. As God hath ſent them oft upon monitory and conſolatory meſſages to his Servants in viſible ſhapes, ſo doth he ſend them on the like meſſages inviſibly, Judg. 5. 23. Mat. 1. 20. Pſal. 104. 4. Luke 22. 43. An Angel from Heaven is ſent to ſtrengthen Chriſt himſelf in his agony.

§. 13. 11. They perſecute and chaſe the Enemies of the Church, and ſometimes deſtroy them: As Pſal. 35. 5, 6. 2 Kings 19. 35. Iſa. 37. 36. and hinder them from doing hurt, Numb. 22. 24.

§. 14. 12. They are a Convoy for the departing Souls of the godly, to bring them to the place of their felicity, Luk 16. 22. though how they do it we cannot understand.

§. 15. 13. They are the attendants of Christ at his coming to judgment, and his Ministers to gather his elect, and sever the wicked from the just, in order to their endless Punishment or Joy: 1 Thess. 4. 16. The Lord himself shall descend from Heaven with a shout, with the voice of the Arch-angel, and with the trumpet of God, and the dead in Christ shall rise first: Then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up, &c. Matth. 13. 42, 49. The Son of man shall 2 Thess. 1. 2. send forth his Angels, and they shall gather out of his Mark 8. 38 kingdom all offences or scandals, and them which do ini- Matth. 25 quity; and shall cast them into a furnace of fire. At 31. the end of the World the Angels shall come forth, and sever the wicked from among the just, and shall cast them into the furnace of fire, &c.

Dir. 3. §. 16. Direct. 3. Understand our near affinity or relation to the Angels, and how they and we are concerned in each others condition and affairs. As to our Nature our Immortal Souls are kin or like unto the Angels, though our Bodies are but like the Brutes. Those Souls that are created after the Image of God, in their very Natural Essence (as rational and free agents) besides his Moral Image of sanctity, Gen. 9. 6. may well be said to be like the Angels: He made us little lower than the Angels, Psal. 8. 5. And God hath made us their charge and care; and therefore no doubt hath given them a special Love unto us, to fit them to the due performance of their trust. As Ministers have a special paternal Love to their Flocks, and as Christians are to have a special Love to one another to enable and engage them to the duties appointed them by God towards each other; so these excellent Spirits have no doubt a far purer and greater Love, to the Image of God upon the Saints, and to the Saints for the Image and sake of God, than the dearest Friends and holiest Persons on Earth can have. For they are more holy, and they are more perfectly conformed to the Mind of God, and they love God himself more perfectly than we, and therefore for his sake do love his People much more perfectly than we. And therefore they are more to be loved by us than any Mortals are; both because they are more excellent, pure and amiable, and because they have more Love to us. Moreover the Angels are Servants of the same God, and Members of the same Society which we belong to. They are the Inhabitants of the Heavenly Jerusalem, of which we are heirs: They have possession, and we have title, and shall in time possess it. We are called to much of the same employment with them: We must love the same God, and glorifie him by obedience, thank and praise, and so do they. Therefore they are Ministers for our good, and rejoice in the success of their labours, as the Ministers of Christ on Earth do, Heb. 1. 14. There is not a Sinner converted, but it is the Angels Joy, Luke 15. 10. which sheweth us how much they attend that work. We are come to Mount Zion, and unto the city of the living God, the heavenly Jerusalem, and to myriads of Angels, &c. Heb. 12. 22, 23, 24. They are especially present and attendant on us in our holy Assemblies and Services of God; and therefore we are admonished to reverence their presence, and do nothing before them that is sinful or unseemly, 1 Cor. 11. 10. Eccles. 5. 6. The presence of God, and the Lord Jesus Christ, and the elect Angels, must continually awe us into exact obedience, 1 Tim. 5. 21. With the Church they pry into the mystery of the dispensations of the Spirit to the Church, 1 Pet. 1. 12. And so by the Church, that is, by Gods dealings with the Church, is made known the manifold wisdom of God, even to these heavenly principalities and powers, Eph. 3. 10. In conclusion, Christ telleth us that in our state of blessedness we shall be equal to the Angels, Luke 20. 36. and so shall live with them for ever.

§. 17. Direct. 4. When your thoughts of Heaven are staggering or strange, and when you are tempted to doubt whether indeed there is such a Life of glory for the Saints, it may be a great help to your faith, to think of the world of Angels that already do possess it. That there are such excellent and happy inhabitants of the superior Orbs, besides what Scripture saith, even reason will strongly perswade any rational Man: 1. When we consider that Sea, and Land, and Air, and all places of this lower baser part of the World, are replenished with inhabitants suitable to their natures; and therefore that the incomparably more great and excellent Orbs and Regions should all be uninhabited, is irrational to imagine: 2. And as we see the Rational Creatures are made to govern the Brutes in this inferiour World, so reason telleth us it is improbable that the higher Reason of the inhabitants of the higher Regions should have no hand in the government of Man. And yet God hath further condescended to satisfie us herein, by some unquestionable apparitions of good Angels, and many more of evil Spirits, which puts the matter past all doubt, that there are inhabitants of the unseen World. And when we know that such there are, it maketh it the more easie to us to believe that such we may be, either numbered with the happy or unhappy Spirits: Considering the affinity which there is between the nature of our Souls and them: To conquer senseless Sadducism is a good step to the conquest of irreligiousness: He that is well perswaded that there are Angels and Spirits, is much better prepared than a Sadducee to believe the immortality of the Soul: And because the infinite distance between God and Man, is apt to make the thoughts of our approaching his Glory either dubious or very terrible, the remembrance of those myriads of blessed Spirits that dwell now in the presence of that Glory, doth much embolden and confirm our thoughts. As he that would be afraid whether he should have access to and acceptance with the King, would be much encouraged if he saw a multitude as mean as himself, or not much unlike him, to be familiar attendants on him. I must confess such is my own weakness, that I find a frequent need of remembring the holy Hosts of Saints and Angels, that are with God, to embolden my Soul, and make the thoughts of Heaven more familiar and sweet, by abating my strangeness, amazedness and fears: And thus far to make them the Media (that I say not the Mediators) of my thoughts, in their approaches to the Most High and Holy God: (Though the remembrance of Christ the true Mediator is my chief encouragement.) Especially when we consider how fervently those holy Spirits do love every holy Person upon Earth, and so that all those that dwell with God, are dearer Friends to us, than our Fathers and Mothers here on Earth are (as is briefly proved before,) this will embolden us yet much more. Dir. 4.

§. 18. Direct. 5. Make use of the thoughts of the Angelical Hosts, when you would see the Glory and Majesty of Christ: If you think it a small matter that he is the Head of the Church on Earth, a handful of People contemned by the Satanical Party of the World, yet think what it is to be Head over all things, far above all principality and power, and might, and dominion, and every name that is named, not only in this World, but also in that which is to come, (that is, gave him a Power, Dignity and Name, greater than any Power, Dignity or Name of Men or Angels,) and hath put all things under his feet, Ephes. 1. 21, 22, 23. Being made so much better than the Angels, as he hath by inheritance obtained a more excellent name than they: Of him it is said, Let all the Angels of God worship him, Heb. 1. 4, 6. Read the whole Chapter. Our Head is the Lord of all these Hosts. Dir. 5.

§. 19. Direct. 6. Make use of the remembrance of the glorious Angels, to acquaint you with the dignity of humane Dir. 6.

humane nature, and the special dignity of the servants of God, and so to raise up your hearts in thankfulness to your Creator and Redeemer who hath thus advanced you. 1. What a dignity is it that these holy Angels should be all Ministring Spirits sent for our good? That they should love us, and concern themselves so much for us, as to rejoice in Heaven at our conversion? Lord! What is man; that thou art mindful of him, and the son of man that thou visitest him? For thou hast made him a little lower than the Angels, and hast crowned him with glory and honour, Psal. 8. 4, 5. 2. But yet it is a higher declaration of our dignity, that we should in Heaven be equal with them, and so be numbered into their Society, and join with them everlastingly in the praise of our Creator. 3. And it is yet a greater honour to us, that our Natures are assumed into union of Person with the Son of God, and so advanced above the Angels. For he took not on him the nature of Angels, but the seed of Abraham: Nor hath he put the World to come in subjection to the Angels, Heb. 2. 5, 16. This is the Lord's doing, and it is wondrous in our eyes.

Dir. 7. §. 20. Direct. 7. When you would admire the works of God and his Government, look specially to the Angels part: If God would be glorified in his works, then especially in the most glorious parts: If he take delight to work by instruments, and to communicate such excellency and honour to them as may conduce to the honour of the principal Cause, we must not overlook their Excellency and Honour, unless we will deny God the Honour which is due to him As he that will see the excellent Workmanship of a Watch or any other Engine, must not overlook the chiefest parts, nor their operation on the rest: So he that will see the excellent Order of the Works and Government of God, must not over-look the Angels, nor their Offices in the Government, and preservation of the inferiour Creatures so far as God hath revealed it unto us. We spoil the Musick if we leave out these strings. It is a great part of the Glory of the Works of God, that all the parts in Heaven and Earth are so admirably conjoined and joynted as they are; and each in their places contribute to the beauty and harmony of the whole.

Dir. 8. Heb. 1. 14 Psal. 103. 20, 21. §. 21. Direct. 8. When you would be apprehensive of the excellency of Love and Humility, and exact obedience to the will of God, look up to the Angels, and see the lustre of all those vertues as they shine in them. How perfectly do they love God and all his Saints? Even the weakest and meanest of the Members of Christ? With what Humility do they condescend to minister for the heirs of Salvation? How readily and perfectly do they obey their Maker? Though our chiefest Pattern is Christ himself, who came nearer to us, and appeared in flesh, to give us the example of all such Duties, yet under him the example of Angels is also to be observed, and with pleasure to be imitated. And ask the Enemies of Holiness, who urge you with the examples of the great and learned, whether they are wiser than all the Angels of God?

Dir. 9. §. 22. Direct. 9. When you are tempted to desire any inordinate communion with Angels, as visibly appearing or affecting your senses, or to give them any part of the Office or Honour of Jesus Christ, then think how suitable that Office is to your safety and benefit which God hath assigned them, and how much they themselves abhor aspiring or usurpation of the Office or Honour of their Lord: And consider how much more suitable to your benefit this spiritual ministration of the Angels is, than if they appeared to us in bodily shapes. In this spiritual Communion they act according to their spiritual Nature, without deceit: And they serve us without any terrible appearances; and without any danger of drawing us to sensitive gross apprehensions of them, or enticing us to an unmeet adhesion to them, or honouring of them: Whereas if they appeared to us in visible shapes, we might easily be affrighted, confounded and left in doubt, whether they were good Angels indeed or not. It is our Communion with God himself that is our Happiness. And Communion with Angels or Saints is desirable but in order unto this: That kind of Communion with Angels therefore is the best, which most advanceth us to Communion with God: And that reception of his Mercy by instruments is best, which least endangereth our inordinate adhesion to the Instruments, and our neglect of God. We know not so well as God, what way is best and safest for us: As it is dangerous desiring to mend his Word by any fancies of our own, which we suppose more fit; so it is dangerous to desire to amend his Government and Providence, and Order, and to think that another way than that which in nature he hath stated and appointed, is more to our benefit. It is dangerous wishing God to go out of his way, and to deal with us, and conduct us in by-ways of our own; in which we are our selves unskilled, and of which we little know the issue.

§. 23. Direct. 10. When you are apt to be terrified with the fear of Devils, think then of the guard of Angels, and how much greater strength is for you than against you. Though God be our only fundamental security, and our chiefest confidence must be in him, yet experience telleth us how apt we are to look to instruments, and to be affected as second causes do appear to make for us or against us: Therefore when appearing dangers terrifie us, appearing or secondary helps should be observed to comfort and encourage us. Dir. 10.

§. 24. Direct. 11. Labour to answer the great and holy Love of Angels with such great and holy Love to them, as may help you against your unwillingness to die, and make you long for the company of them whom you so much love. And when Death seemeth terrible to you because the World to come seems strange, remember that you are going to the society of those Angels, that rejoiced in your conversion, and ministred for you here on earth, and are ready to convoy your Souls to Christ. Though the thought of God and our blessed Mediator should be the only final object to attract our Love, and make us long to be in Heaven, yet under Christ, the Love and Company of Saints and Angels must be thought on to further our desires and delight: For even in Heaven God will not so be All to us, as to use no Creature for our comfort: Otherwise the glorified humanity of Christ would be no means of our comfort there: And the heavenly Jerusalem would not then have been set out to us by its created Excellencies as it is, Rev. 21. & 22. Nor would it be any comfort to us in the Kingdom of God, that we shall be with Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, Luke 13. 28. Matth. 8. 11. Dir. 11.

Simus devoti, simus grati tantis custodibus: reddamus ergo quantum possumus, quantum debemus effectuose, &c. Bernard. Væ nobis si quando provocat? Sancti Angeli peccatis & negligentiis, indignos nos judicaverint præsentia & visitatione sua, &c. Cavenda est nobis eorum offensa, & in his maxime exercendum, quibus eos novimus oblectari: Hæc autem placent eis quæ in nobis invenire delectat, ut est sobrietas, castitas, &c. In quovis angulo reverentiam exhibe Angelo, ne audeas illo præsente, quod me vidente non auderes. Bernard.

Dir. 13. §. 26. Direct. 13. In all the Worſhip you perform to God, remember that you join with the Angels of Heaven, and bear your part to make up the Conſort: Do it therefore with that holineſs and reverence, and affection, as remembring not only to whom you ſpeak, but alſo what Companions you have: And let there not be too great a diſcord either in your Hearts or Praiſes. O think with what lively joyful minds they praiſe their glorious Creator: And how unwearied they are in their moſt bleſſed work! And labour to be like them in Love and Praiſe, that you may come to be equal with them in their Glory, Luke 20. 36.

CASES

CASES OF CONSCIENCE ABOUT Matters Eccleſiaſtical.

READER,

I Have ſomething to ſay to thee of the Number of theſe Caſes, ſomewhat of the Order, and ſomewhat of the Manner of handling and reſolving them. I. That they are ſo Many, is becauſe there are really ſo many difficulties which all Men are not able to reſolve: That they are no more, is, partly becauſe I could not remember then any more that were neceſſarily to be handled, and I was not willing to increaſe ſo great a Book with things unneceſſary.

II. As to the Order, I have ſome Reaſons for the order of moſt of them, which would be too tedious to open to you: But ſome of them are placed out of order, becauſe, 1. I could not remember them in due place. 2. And great haſte allowed me not Time to tranſpoſe them. If you ſay that in ſuch a work I ſhould take time, I anſwer, You are no competent Judges, unleſs you knew me and the reſt of my work, and the likelyhood that my time will be but ſhort: They that had rather take my Writings with ſuch defects which are the effects of haſte, than have none of them, may uſe them, and the reſt are free to deſpiſe them and neglect them. Two or Three Queſtions about the Scripture, I would have put nearer the beginning if I could have time; But ſeeing I cannot; it's eaſie for you to tranſpoſe them in the reading.

III. The reſolution of theſe Caſes ſo much avoideth all the extreams, that I look they ſhould be diſpleaſing to all that vaſt number of Chriſtians, who involve themſelves in the opinions and intereſts of their ſeveral Sects as ſuch; and that hold the Faith of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, with reſpect of Perſons. But there will be ſtill a certain number of truly Catholick impartial Readers, whoſe favourable acceptance I confidently prognoſticate; and who, being out of the duſt, and noiſe, and paſſions of contending Sides and Parties and their Intereſts, will ſee a ſelf-evidencing Light in thoſe ſolutions, which are put off here briefly, without the pomp of formal Argumentation, or perſwading Oratory. The eternal Light revealeth himſelf to us, by Chriſt who is the Light of the World, and by the Illumination of the Spirit and Word of Light; that we may walk in the Light, as the Children of Light, till we come to the World of Glorious Everlaſting Light. And what other defect ſoeſoever our knowledge have, if any Man hath knowledge enough to kindle in him the Love of God, the ſame is known of Him, and therefore is beloved by him, and ſhall be bleſſed with and in Him for ever, 1 Cor. 8. 1, 2, 3.

Queſt. 1. How to know which is the true Church, among all pretenders, that a Chriſtians Conſcience may be quiet in his Relation and Communion.

I Have written ſo much of this already in four Books (viz. one called, The Safe Religion, another called A Key for Catholicks, another called The Viſibility of the Church, another called A true Catholick, and the Catholick Church deſcribed,) that I ſhall ſay now but a little, and yet enough to an impartial conſiderate Reader.

The terms muſt firſt be opened: 1. By a Church is meant a Society of Chriſtians as ſuch. And it is ſometimes taken Narrowly, for the Body or Members as diſtinct from the Head, as the word Kingdom is taken for the Subjects only as diſtinct from the King; And ſometimes more fully and properly for the whole Political Society, as conſtituted of its Head and Body or the Pars Imperans & pars Subdita.

2. The word Church thus taken, ſignifieth ſometime the Univerſal Church called Catholick; which conſiſteth of Chriſt and his Body Politick, or Myſtical; And ſometime ſome part only of the Univerſal Church. And ſo it is taken either for a ſubordinate Political Part. or for a Community, or a Part conſidered as Conſociate, but not Political; or as many particular Political Churches agreeing and holding Concord and Communion without any Common Head, ſave the Univerſal Head.

3. Such Political Churches, are either of Divine Conſtitution and Policy, or only of Humane.

2. By Chriſtians, I mean ſuch as profeſs the Eſſentials of the Chriſtian Religion. For we ſpeak of the Church as Viſible.

3. By [True] may be meant, either Reality of Eſſence, oppoſite to that which is not really a Church in this univocal Acception; or elſe Sound and Orthodox, in the Integrals, as oppoſite to erroneous and defiled with much enormity. And now I thus decide that Queſtion.

Prop. 1. The True Catholick Church consisteth of 1 Cor.11. Christ the Head, and all Christians as his Body, or the 3. Members. As the Kingdom consisteth of the King 1 Cor. 12. and his Subjects. 12.

Eph.1.22, Prop. 2. As all the sincere Heart-Covenanters 23. make up the Church as regenerate, and mystical or 1 Cor. 6. invisible; so all that are Christened, that is, Bapti- 15. zed, and profess Consent to all the Essentials of the 1 Cor.12. Baptismal Covenant, not having Apostatized, nor 27. Eph.4 4,5 being by lawful Power Excommunicated, are Christi- Mat. 28. ans, and make up the Church as Visible. 19, 20.

Prop. 3. Therefore there is but One Universal Eph.4.4,5 Church, because it containeth all Christians; and so 1 Cor. 12. leaveth out none to be the Matter of another. 12.

Mark 16. Prop. 4. It is not Ignorance or Error about the 16. meer Integrals of Christianity, which maketh them Rom. 14. no Christians who hold the Essentials, that is, the 1, 6, 7. & Baptismal Covenant. 15. 1, 3, 4.

1 Cor. 15. Prop. 5. That the Baptismal Covenant might be 1, 2, &c. rightly understood and professed, the Churches have Matth.28. still used the Creed as the Explication of the Covenant, 19, 20. in point of Faith; and taken it for the Symbol of the Christian belief. And no further Profession of Faith was or is to be required, as necessary to the Being of Christianity.

Rom. 14. Prop. 6. If proud Usurpers or Censurers take on 3, 4. them to excommunicate, or unchristian, or unchurch John. others, without Authority and Cause, this maketh them not to be no Christians, or no Churches, that are so used.

Rom. 6. Prop. 7. Therefore to know which is the true Ca- 1, 2, &c. tholick or Universal Church is but to know who are Baptized Professed Christians.

Eph.4.4,5 Prop. 8. The Reformed Churches, the Lutherans, the Abassines, the Copties, the Syrians, the Armenians, the Jacobites, the Georgians, the Maronites, the Greeks, the Moscovites, and the Romanists, do all receive Baptism in all its visible Essentials, and professs all the Essentials of the Christian Religion, though not with the same Integrity.

Tit. 3. 10. Prop. 9. He that denieth any one essential Part, in 2 John. it self, is so a Heretick as to be no Christian, nor true member of the Church, if it be justly proved or notorious; that is, none ought to take him for a Visible Christian, who know the proof of his denying that essential part of Christianity, or to whom it is notorious.

Jam. 3. 2. Prop. 10. He that holdeth the Essentials primarily, Phil. 3. and with them holdeth some Error which by unseen 15, 16. consequence subverteth some Essential Point, but hold- Heb.5.1,2 eth the Essentials so much faster, that he would forsake his error, if he saw the inconsistence, is a Christian notwithstanding: And if the name Heretick be applicable to him, it is but in such a sense, as is consistent with Christianity.

Tit. 3. 10. Prop. 11. He that is judged a Heretick and no Mat. 18. Christian justly by others, must be lawfully cited, 15. and heard plead his Cause, and be judged upon sufficient proof, and not unheard, or upon rash presumption.

Ezek. 18. Prop. 12. Christianity and Heresie being personal 17. qualities, and no where found but in individuals, nor Gen. 18. one Man guilty of anothers error, it followeth that it 23,24,25. is single Persons upon personal Guilt that must be judged.

1 Cor. 10. Prop. 13. Any Man may judge another to be a 15. Christian or Heretick, by a private Judgment of dis- Acts 1.19. cerning, or the reason which guideth all humane ac- 1 Cor. 5. tions: But only Church Rulers may judge him by that 3, 4, 5. 1 Cor. 11.3 publick Judgment, which giveth or denieth him his Matth. 5. publick Priviledges and Communion. 11, 12.

Joh. 16.2. Prop. 14. If by notorious injustice Church Rulers condemn Christians as no Christians, though they may thereby deny them Communion with those publick Assemblies, which they govern, yet do they not oblige the People to take such injured Persons for no Christians. Else they might oblige all to believe a lye, to consent to malicious injuries, and might disoblige the People from Truth, Righteousness and Charity.

Prop. 15. There is no one Natural or Collective 1 Cor.12. Head and Governour of all the Churches in the World 27,28,29. (the Universal Church) but Jesus Christ; and Eph. 4. 5, therefore there is none that by such governing Power, 6, 7. can excommunicate any Man out of the Universal 1 Cor. 1. Church: And such Usurpation would be Treason 12. 13. & against Christ, whose Prerogative it is. 3. 22, 23. Eph.5.23. & 4. 15. Col.1. 18. & 2. 19. 3 John.

Prop. 16. Yet he that deserveth to be excommuni- cated from one Church, deserveth to be excommuni- cated by and from all, if it be upon a Cause common to all; or that nullifieth his Christianity.

Prop. 17. And where Neighbour Churches are Eph.5.11. Consociate and live in Order and Concord, he that 1 Cor. 5. is orderly excommunicate from one Church, and it 11. be notified to the rest, should not be taken into the Communion of any of the rest, till he be cleared, or become fit for their Communion. But this Obligation ariseth but from the Concord of Consociate Churches, and not from the Power of one over the rest: And it cannot reach all the World, where the Person cometh not, nor was ever known; but only to those who through neighbourhood are capable of just notice, and of giving or denying Communion to that Person.

Prop. 18. From all this it is clear, that it is not either Papists alone, or Greeks alone, or Protestants alone, or any party of Christians, who are the Uni- 1 Cor. 12. versal Church, seeing that Church containeth All 12. Christians. And that reviling others (yea, whole Joh.13.35 Nations) as Hereticks, Schismaticks, and no Chri- 1 Cor. 13. stians, or Churches, will no more prove the Revilers 1, 2, &c. to be the only Church or Christians, than Want of Love will prove a Man to be one of Christs Disciples, who by Love are known to all Men to be his.

Prop. 19. It is therefore the shameful language of distracted Men, to cry out against other Christian Nations, It is not you, but we that are the Catholick or Universal Church. And our shameful Controversie, which of them is the Catholick, is no wiser than to question, Whether it be this House or that which 1 Cor. 12. is the Street? Or this Street or that which is the 12. City? Or whether it be the Kitchin, or the Hall, 1 Cor. 6. or the Parlour which is the House? Or the Hand, or 17. Foot, or Eye which is the Man? O when will God & 10. 17. bring distracting Teachers to Repentance, and di- Eph. 4. 3, stracted People to their Wits! &c.

Prop. 20. There is great difference in the Purity or soundness, of the several Parts of the Universal Church; some being more Orthodox and Holy, and Gal. 4.11, some defiled with so many Errors and Sins, as to make 12. it difficult to discern whether they do not deny the very essentials.

Prop. 21. The Reformed Churches are the sound- Rev.3.8,9 est and purest that we know in the World, and there- 10,11,12. fore their Priviledge exceeding great, though they are &2.10,11. not all the Universal Church. Act.14.22 Tit. 1. 5.

Prop. 22. Particular Churches consisting of Law- Rom. 16. ful Pastors and Christian People, associated for Personal 4, 16. Communion in Worship and Holy Living are Societies 1 Cor.7.17. or true Churches of Christs Institution, and the & 11. 16. chief Parts of the Universal Church: As Cities and & 14. 33, Corporations are of the Kingdom. 34. 2 Thes. 1. 4.

Prop. 23. There are Thousands of these in the Rev.2.23. World, and a Man be saved in one, as well as in another: Only the purest give him the best advantages for his Salvation; and therefore should be preferred by all that are wise and love their Souls, so far as they are free to choose their Communion.

Prop. 24. The Case then being easily resolved [which is the true Church]? viz. All Christians as 1 Cor.1.13 Christians are the Catholick or Universal Church; and Rom. 16. All Congregations afore described, of true Pastors and 17. Christians being particular true Churches, differing only Act.20.30 in degrees of Purity, he is to be suspected as a designing deceiver and troubler of the World, that pretending to be a Learned Man and a Teacher, doth still perplex the Consciences of the ignorant with this frivolous Question, and would muddy and obscure this this clear State of the Caſe, leſt the People ſhould reſt in the diſcerned Truth.

Prop. 25. The Papal Church as ſuch, being no true Church of Chriſts Inſtitution (of which by it ſelf anon) it followeth that a Papiſt as a Papiſt is no Member of the Church of Chriſt, that is, no Chriſtian. But yet whether the ſame Perſon may not be a Papiſt and a Chriſtian, and ſo a member of the Catholick Church, we ſhall anon enquire.

Acts 2.44. 1 Cor. 1. 10. 1 Theſſ. 5. 12, 13.

Prop. 26. There are many things which make up the fitneſs and deſirableneſs of that particular Church, which we ſhould prefer or chooſe for our ordinary perſonal Communion; As, 1. That it be the Church of that Place where we dwell; if the Place be ſo happy as to have no divided Churches, that it be the ſole Church there; however that it be ſo near as to be fit for our Communion. 2. That it be a Church which holdeth Communion with other Neighbour Churches, and is not ſingular or divided from them; or at leaſt not from the Generality of the Churches of Chriſt; nor differeth in any great Matters from thoſe that are moſt pure. 3. That it be under the Reputation of ſoundneſs with the other Churches aforeſaid, and not under the ſcandal of Hereſie, Schiſm or groſs Corruption among thoſe that live about. 4. That it be under the countenance and encouraging favour of the Chriſtian Magiſtrate. 5. That it be the ſame Church of which the reſt of the Family which we are of, be Members; that Husband and Wife, Parents and Children, Maſters and Servants be not of ſeveral Churches. 6. That the Paſtors be able Teachers, prudent Guides, and of holy Lives, and diligent in their Office. 7. That the Paſtors be regularly called to their Office. 8. That the Members be intelligent, peaceable and of holy, temperate and righteous Lives. But when all theſe cannot be had together, we muſt chooſe that Church which hath thoſe Qualifications which are moſt needful, and bear with tolerable Imperfections. The moſt needful are the firſt, ſecond and ſixth of theſe Qualifications.

Heb. 10. 25. 1 Tim. 3. 7. 3 Joh. 12. Acts 16. 32, 34. Acts 10. 2, 22. Acts 18. 8. Col. 4. 15.

Prop. 27. He that is free, ſhould chooſe that Church which is the fitteſt for his own Edification; that is, the beſt Paſtors, People and Adminiſtrations.

Prop. 28. A Mans freedom is many ways reſtrained herein. As, 1. When it will tend to a greater publick hurt, by diſorder, ill example, diviſion, diſcouragement, &c. 2. When Superiours forbid it; As Husbands, Parents, Maſters, Magiſtrates. 3. By ſome ſcandal. 4. By the diſtance or inconvenience of our dwelling. 5. By Differences of Judgment, and other cauſes of Contention in the ſaid Churches: And many other Ways.

Of theſe things I have ſaid ſo much in my Cure of Church diviſions, and in the Defence of it, and in the end of my Reaſ. of Chriſt. Relig. Conſect. 1, & 2. that I paſs them over here with the more brevity.

Prop. 29. A free Man who removeth from one Church to another for his Edification, is not therefore a Separatiſt or Schiſmatick: But it muſt not be done by one that is not free, but upon ſuch Neceſſity as freeth him.

Prop. 30. It is Schiſm or ſinful Separation to ſeparate from, 1. A true Church as no true Church; 2. From lawful Worſhip and Communion, as lawful; but of this more in its proper Place.

Queſt. 2. Whether we muſt eſteem the Church of Rome a true Church? And in what ſenſe ſome Divines affirm it, and ſome deny it.

See Mr. Barton's and B. Hall's conteſt hereabouts.

WAnt of ſome eaſie diſtinguiſhing hath made that ſeem a Controverſie here, which is ſo plain that it can hardly be any at all to Proteſtants, if the Queſtion had been but truly ſtated.

Remember therefore that by a Church is meant, not a meer company of Chriſtians, any how related to each other; but a Society conſiſting of an Eccleſiaſtical Head and Body, ſuch as we call a Political Society. 2. And that we ſpeak not of an Accidental Head (ſuch as the King is, becauſe he governeth them ſuo modo by the Sword): For that is not an Eſſential Conſtitutive Part: But of a Conſtitutive Eccleſiaſtical Head and Body. 3. That the Queſtion is not, Whether the Church of Rome, be a Part of the Church, but whether it be a true Church. And now I anſwer;

1. To affirm the Church of Rome to be [the Catholick or Univerſal Church,] is more than to affirm it to be [a true Catholick Church] that is, a true part of the Catholick Church; and is as much as to ſay that it is the whole and only Church, and that there is no other; which is odious falſhood and uſurpation, and ſlander againſt all other Churches.

2. The Church of Rome is ſo called in the Queſtion, as it is a Policy or Church in a general Senſe; and the meaning of the Queſtion is, Whether it be a Divine or a Humane or Diabolical Policy; a lawful Church.

3. The Church of Rome is conſidered, 1. Formally, as a Church or Policy. 2. Materially, as the ſingular Perſons are qualified. It is the Form that denominateth. Therefore the Queſtion muſt be taken of the Roman Policy, or of the Church of Rome as ſuch; that is, As it is one Ruler pretending to be the Vicarious conſtitutive governing Head of all Chriſts viſible Church on Earth, and the Body which owneth him in this Relation.

4. Therefore I conclude (and ſo do all Proteſtants) that this Policy or Church of Rome is no true Church of Chriſts Inſtituting or Approbation, but a Humane ſinful Policy formed by the Temptation of Satan the Prince of Pride, deceit and darkneſs. The proof of which is the Matter of whole loads of Proteſtant Writings. And indeed the proof of their Policy being incumbent on themſelves, they fail in it, and are ſtill fain to fly to pretended falſe Tradition for Proof, in which the Sophiſters know that either they muſt be Judges themſelves, and it muſt go for Truth becauſe they ſay it; or elſe that if they can carry the Controverſie into a Thicket or Wood of Fathers and Church Hiſtory, at leaſt they can confound the ignorant, and evade themſelves. Of this ſee my Diſput. with Johnſon, and my Key for Catholicks, &c.

5. The Biſhop of the Engliſh Papiſts, Smith called Biſhop of Chalcedon, in his Survey, cap. 5. ſaith, [To us it ſufficeth, that the Biſhop of Rome is St. Peter Succeſſour; and this all the Fathers teſtifie, and all the Catholick Church believeth: But whether it be jure Divino or Humano is no Point of Faith.] The like hath * Davenport called Franſc. a Sancta Clarâ more largely. By this let the Reader judge, whether we need more Words to prove their Church to be ſuch as Chriſt never inſtituted, when the belief of their Divine Right, is no part of their own Faith.

* Syſtem. Fidei.

6. If the Church of Rome in its formal Policy be but of humane Inſtitution, it is 1. Unneceſſary to Salvation. 2. Unlawful: Becauſe they that firſt inſtituted it had no Authority ſo to do, and were Uſurpers. For either the Makers of it were themſelves a Church or no Church. If no Church, they could not lawfully make a Church. Infidels or Heathens are not to be our Church-makers. If a Church, then there was a Church before the Church of Rome, and that of another form. And if that former form were of Chriſts Inſtitution, Man might not change it: If not, who made that form? And ſo on.

7. Our Divines therefore that ſay that the Church of Rome is a True Church, though corrupt, do not ſpeak of it formally as to the Papal Policy or Headſhip, but materially, 1. That all Papiſts that are viſible Chriſtians are viſible Parts of the univerſal Church. 2. That their particular Congregations conſidered abſtractedly from the Roman Headſhip may be true particular Churches, though corrupt: Which yet being the only difficulty ſhall be the matter of our next enquiry.

Queſt.

Queſt. 3. Whether we muſt take the Romiſh Clergy for true Miniſters of Chriſt? And whether their Baptiſm, and Ordination be nullities?

I Joyn theſe two diſtinct Queſtions together for brevity.

1. As True ſignifieth Regularly called, ſo they are commonly Irregular and not True Miniſters. But as True ſignifieth Real oppoſed to a nullity, ſo it is now to be further conſidered.

2. The doubt lieth either of the ſufficiency of his Call, or of ſomewhat that is ſuppoſed to deſtroy it by contradiction or redundancy. 1. Whether he want any thing of abſolute neceſſity to the Office, who is called in the Church of Rome, or 2. Whether there be any thing in his Office or Entrance, which nullifieth or invalidateth that which elſe would be ſufficient?

For the firſt Doubt, it is not agreed on among Papiſts or Proteſtants what is of Neceſſity to the Being of the Office. Some think real Godlineſs in the Perſon is neceſſary; but moſt think not: Some think that Viſible, that is, ſeeming profeſſed Godlineſs, not diſproved by mortal Sin is neceſſary; and ſome think not: Some think the Peoples Election is neceſſary, and that Ordination is but ad bene eſſe; and ſome think Ordination neceſſary ad eſſe, and Election ad bene eſſe, or not at all: And ſome think Both neceſſary ad eſſe, and ſome Neither: Some think the Election of the People is neceſſary, and ſome think only their Conſent is neceſſary, though after Election by others: Some think it muſt be the Conſent of all the Flock or near all; and ſome only of the Major part; and ſome of the Better part, though the Minor. Some think the Ordination of a Dioceſan Biſhop neceſſary ad eſſe, and ſome not. Some think the Truth of the Ordainers Calling, or Power, to be neceſſary to the validity of his Ordination, and ſome not: Some think the number of two or three or more Ordainers to be neceſſary, and ſome not: Some think it neceſſary to the validity of the Miniſtry, that it come down from the Apoſtles by an uninterrupted Succeſſion of truly Ordained Biſhops, and ſome think not: Some few think that the Magiſtrates Command or Licence is neceſſary, and only it, and moſt deny both. Johnſon, alias, Terret, the Papiſt, in his Diſputation againſt me, maintaineth that Conſecration is not neceſſary ad eſſe, nor any one way of Election, by theſe or thoſe, but only the Churches Reception upon ſuch an Election as may give them notice, and which may be different, according to different Times, Places and other Circumſtances.

In the midſt of theſe Confuſions, What is to be held? I have opened the Caſe as fully and plainly as I can, in my ſecond Diſp. of Ch. Gov. about Ordination, to which I muſt refer the Reader: Only here briefly touching upon the Summ.

Eph. 4. 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11. 1. There are ſome perſonal Qualifications neceſſary to the being of the Office (of which anon) and ſome only to the well being.

Mat. 28. 11, 20. Tit. 1. 5. Act. 20. 28 Act. 14. 23 2 Pet. 5. 2. 2. The efficient conveying cauſe of Power or Office, is Gods will ſignified in his own eſtabliſhed Law; in which he determineth that ſuch Perſons ſo called ſhall receive from him ſuch Power, and be obliged to ſuch Office-Adminiſtrations.

3. Any Providence of God which infallibly or ſatisfactorily notifieth to the Church, who theſe Perſons are, that receive ſuch Power from God, doth oblige them to ſubmit to them as ſo impowered.

4. Gods ordinary eſtabliſhed way of regular Deſignation of the Perſon, is by the Churches conſent and the Senior Paſtors Ordination.

5. By theſe Actions they are not the proper Donors or efficients of the Power, or Office given, but the Conſent of the People and the Ordination do determine of the Recipient, and ſo are regularly cauſa ſine qua non of his Reception. And the Ordination is moreover a ſolemn Inveſtiture in the Office, as when a Servant is ſent by delivering a Key to deliver Poſſeſſion of an Houſe, by his Maſters conſent, to him that had before the owners Grant; and ſo it ceremonioully entereth him into viſible Poſſeſſion; like the ſolemnizing of Marriage, or the liſting of a Soldier, &c.

6. The Peoples Conſent (before or after) is not only by Inſtitution, but naturally neceſſary, that a Man become a Paſtor to thoſe Perſons (for no Man can learn, obey, &c. without conſent): But it is not of neceſſity to the Being of the Miniſtry in General, or in the firſt inſtant: A Man without it may be authorized as a Miniſter to go Preach the Goſpel for Converſion, and baptize and gather Churches, though not to be their ſtated Paſtor.

7. When death, diſtance, corruption, hereſie or malignity of Paſtors within reach, maketh it impoſſible to have Ordination, Gods choice of the Perſon may be notified without it; as by, 1. Eminent Qualifications. 2. The Peoples real Neceſſities. 3. And the removal of Impediments, and a concurrence of inviting Opportunities and Advantages. 4. And ſometimes the Peoples deſire. 5. And ſometimes the Magiſtrates Commiſſion or Conſent; which though not abſolutely neceſſary in themſelves; yet may ſerve to deſign the Perſon and inveſt him, when the ordinary way faileth; which is all that is left to Man to do, to the conveyance of the Power.

The Caſe being thus ſtated, as to what is neceſſary to give the Power or Office, we may next enquire whether any Papiſts Prieſt have ſuch Power, by ſuch means.

And, 1. We have ſufficient Reaſon to judge that many of them have all the perſonal Qualifications which are eſſentially neceſſary. 2. Many among them have the conſent of a ſober Chriſtian People (of which more anon.) And Mr. Jacob who was againſt Biſhops and their Ordination, proveth at large, that by Election or Conſent of the People alone, a Man may be a true Paſtor, either without ſuch Ordination, or notwithſtanding both the vanity and error of it. 3. Many of them have Ordination by able and ſober Biſhops: If that alſo be neceſſary. 4. In that Ordination, they are inveſted in all that is eſſential to the Paſtoral Office.

So that I ſee not that their Calling is a Nullity through defect of any thing of abſolute Neceſſity to its being and validity: Though it be many ways irregular and ſinful.

II. We are next therefore to enquire whether any contradicting Additions make null that which elſe would be no nullity. And this is the great difficulty. For as we accuſe not their Religion for having too little, but too much, ſo this is our chief doubt about their Miniſtry.

And 1. It is doubted, as to the office it ſelf, whether a Maſs-Prieſt be a true Miniſter, as having another work to do, even to make his Maker, and to give Chriſts real Fleſh with his hands to the People; and to Preach the unſound Doctrines of their Church; And theſe ſeem to be eſſential parts of his Function.

The Caſe is very bad and ſad; but that which I ſaid about the Hereſies or Errors which may conſiſt with Chriſtianity, when they overthrow it but by an undiſcerned Conſequence, muſt be here alſo conſidered. The prime part of their Office is that (as to the eſſentials,) which Chriſt ordained: This they receive, and to this they ſew a filthy rag of Mans deviſing: But if they knew this to be inconſiſtent with Chriſtianity or the Eſſentials of the Miniſtry, we may well preſume (of many of them) they would not receive it. Therefore as an Errour which conſequentially contradicteth ſome eſſential Article of Faith, nullifieth not his Chriſtianity who firſt and faſteſt holdeth the Faith, and would caſt away the error if he ſaw the Contradiction, (as Davenant, Morton and Hall have ſhowed Epiſt. Conciliat.) So is it to be ſaid as to practical Error in the preſent Caſe.

They

They are their grievous Errors and Sins, but for ought I ſee, do not nulliſie their office to the Church. As a Maſs-Prieſt, he is no Miniſter of Chriſt (As an Anabaptiſt is not as a Rebaptizer, nor a Separatiſt as a Separator, nor an Antinomian, nor any erroneous Perſon as a Preacher of that error;) But as a Chriſtian Paſtor ordained to preach the Goſpel, baptize, adminiſter the Lord's Supper, pray, praiſe God, guide the Church, he may be.

The ſame anſwer ſerveth to the Objection as it extendeth to the erroneous Doctrines which they preach, which are but by conſequence againſt the Eſſentials of Religion.

2. But it is a greater doubt, Whether any power of the Miniſtry can be conveyed by Antichriſt, or from him? And whether God will own any of Antichriſts adminiſtrations? Therefore ſeeing they profeſs themſelves to have no office but what they receive from the Pope, and Chriſt diſowning his uſurpation, the ſame Man cannot be the Miniſter of Chriſt and Antichriſt; as the ſame Man cannot be an Officer in the King's Army and his Enemies.

But this will have the ſame ſolution as the former. If this Antichriſt were the open profeſſed Enemy to Chriſt, then all this were true: Becauſe their corrupt additions would not by dark conſequences, but ſo directly contain the denyal of Chriſtianity, or the true Miniſtry, that it were not poſſible to hold both. But (as our Divines commonly note) Antichriſt is to ſit in the Temple of God, and the Pope's Treaſon is under pretence of the greateſt ſervice and friendſhip to Chriſt, making himſelf his Vicar General without his Commiſſion. So they that receive Power from him, do think him to be Chriſt's Vicar indeed, and ſo renounce not Chriſt, but profeſs their firſt and chief relation to be to him, and dependance on him, and that they would have nothing to do with the Pope, if they knew him to be againſt Chriſt. And ſome of them write, that the Power or Office is immediately from Chriſt, and that the Pope, Ordainers and Electors do but deſign the Perſon that ſhall receive it (becauſe elſe they know not what to ſay of the Election and Conſecration of the Pope himſelf who hath no Superiours.) And the Spaniſh Biſhops in the Council of Trent held ſo cloſe to this, that the reſt were fain to leave it undetermined; ſo that it is no part of their Religion, but a doubtful Opinion, Whether the power of Biſhops be derived from the Pope, tho' they be governed by him.

But as to the other, the caſe ſeemeth like this: If a Subject in Ireland uſurp the Lieutenancy, and tell all the People that he hath the King's Commiſſion to be his Lieutenant; and command all to ſubmit to him, and receive their places from him, and obey him: And the King declareth him a Traytor, (antecedently only by the deſcription of his Laws,) and maketh it the duty of the Subjects to renounce him: Thoſe now that know the King's will, and yet adhere to the Uſurper, though they know that the King is againſt it, are Traytors with him: But thoſe from whom he keepeth the knowledge of the Laws; and who for want of full information, believe him to be really the King's Lieutenant, (and ſpecially living where all believe it) but yet would renounce him if they knew that he had not the King's Commiſſion, Theſe are the King's Subjects, though in ignorance they obey an Uſurper. And on this account it is that A. Biſhop Uſher concluded, that An ignorant Papiſt might be ſaved, but the learned hardly. But when the Learned through the diſadvantages of their Education are under the ſame ignorance, being Learned but on one ſide to their greater ſeduction, the caſe may be the ſame.

The ſame Man therefore may receive an Office from Chriſt, who yet ignorantly ſubmitteth to the Pope, and receiveth corrupt additions from him.

But ſuppoſe I be miſtaken in all this, yet to come to the ſecond Queſtion.

III. Whether Baptiſm and Ordination given by them be Nullities? I anſwer, no; on a further account, 1. Becauſe that the Miniſtry which is a nullity to the receiver (that is, God will puniſh him as an Uſurper,) may yet perform thoſe Miniſterial Acts which are no Nullities to the Church. Elſe how confuſed a caſe would all Churches be in? For it is hard ever to know whether Miniſters have all things eſſential to their Office. Suppoſe a Man be ignorant or an Heretick againſt ſome eſſential Article of Faith; or ſuppoſe that he feigned Orders of Ordination when he had none; or that he was ordained by ſuch as really had no power to do it; or ſuppoſe he pretended the conſent of the majority of the People, when really the greater part were for another; if all this be unknown, his Baptizing and other Adminiſtrations are not thereby made Nullities to the Church, though they be Sins in him: The reaſon is, becauſe that the Church ſhall not ſuffer, nor loſe her right for another Man's Sin! When the fault is not theirs, the loſs and puniſhment ſhall not be theirs. He that is found in poſſeſſion of the place, performeth valid adminiſtration to them that know not his Uſurpation, and are not guilty of it. Otherwiſe we ſhould never have done Re-baptizing, nor know eaſily when we receive any valid adminiſtrations, while we are ſo diſagreed about the Neceſſaries of the Office and Call, and when it is ſo hard in all things to judge of the Call of all other Men. Mat.7.23; 24, 25. Phil.1.15, 16, 17. Mar.9.40.

2. And as the Papiſts ſay, that a private Man or Woman may baptize in extremity, ſo many learned Proteſtants think, that though a private Mans Baptiſm be a Sin, yet it is no nullity, though he were known to be no Miniſter.

And what is ſaid of Baptiſm, to avoid tediouſneſs, you may ſuppoſe ſaid of Ordination, which will carry the firſt caſe far, as to the validity of the Miniſtry received by Papiſts Ordination, as well as of Baptiſm and Viſible Chriſtianity received by them. For my part, God uſed Parſons Book of Reſolution corrected, ſo much to my good, and I have known ſo many eminent Chriſtians, and ſome Miniſters converted by it, that I am glad that I hear none make a controverſie of it, whether the converſion, Faith, or Love to God be valid, which we receive by the Books or means of any Papiſt?

Queſt. 4. Whether it be neceſſary to believe that the Pope is the Antichriſt?

IT is one queſtion, Whether he be Antichriſt, and another, Whether it be neceſſary to believe it? To the firſt I ſay, I. There are many Antichriſts: And we muſt remove the ambiguity of the name, before we can reſolve the queſtion. If by Antichriſt be meant, [One that uſurps the Office of a Univerſal Vicar of Chriſt, and conſtituting and governing Head of the whole Viſible Church, and hereby layeth the ground of Schiſms, and Contentions, and Bloodſhed in the World, and would rob Chriſt of all his Members, who are not of the Popes Kingdom, and that formeth a multifarious Miniſtry for this ſervice, and corrupteth much of the Doctrine, Worſhip and Diſcipline of the Church,] in this ſenſe no doubt but the Pope is Antichriſt.

But if by Antichriſt be meant him particularly deſcribed in the Apocalypſe and Theſſalonians, then the controverſie de re, is about the expoſition of thoſe dark Prophecies. Of which I can ſay no more but this, 1. That if the Pope be not He; he had ill luck to be ſo like him. 2. That Dr. Moor's Moral Arguments, and Biſhop Downham's and many others expoſitory arguments, are ſuch as I cannot anſwer. 3. But yet my skill is not ſo great in interpreting thoſe obſcure Prophecies, as that I can ſay, I am ſure that it is the Pope that they of ſpeak, and that Lyra, learned Zanchy and others that think it is Mahomet, or others that otherwiſe interpret them, were miſtaken.

II. But

II. But to the ſecond queſtion, I more boldly ſay, 1. That every one that indeed knoweth this to be the ſenſe of thoſe Texts, is bound to believe it.

2. But that God who hath not made it of neceſſity to Salvation to underſtand many Hundred plainer Texts, nor abſolutely to underſtand more than the Articles and Fundamentals of our Religion, hath much leſs made it neceſſary to Salvation to underſtand the darkeſt Prophecies.

3. And that as the ſuſpicion ſhould make all Chriſtians cautelous, what they receive from Rome, ſo the obſcurity ſhould make all Chriſtians take heed, that they draw from it no conſequences deſtructive to Love or Order, or any Truth, or Chriſtian Duty. And this is the advice I give to all.

Queſt. 5. Whether we muſt hold that a Papiſt may be ſaved.

THis queſtion may be reſolved eaſily from what is ſaid before.

1. A Papiſt as a Papiſt, that is, by Popery, will never be ſaved, no more than a Man's Life by Leproſie.

Vid. Hun. Eccl. Rom. non eſt Chriſtiana: & Perkins A Papiſt cannot go beyond a Reprobate.

2. If a Papiſt be ſaved, he muſt be ſaved againſt, and from Popery, either by turning from the opinion, and then he is no Papiſt, or by preſerving his heart from the power of his own opinions. And the ſame we may ſay of every Error and Sin. He that is ſaved, muſt be ſaved from it, at leaſt from the Power of it on the Heart, and from t he guilt of it by forgiveneſs.

3. Every one that is a true ſincere Chriſtian in Faith, Love and true Obedience ſhall be ſaved, what Error ſoever he hold that doth conſiſt with theſe.

4. As many Antinomians and other erroneous Perſons, do hold things which by conſequence ſubvert Chriſtianity; and yet not ſeeing the inconſiſtence, do hold Chriſtianity firſt and faſter, in Heart and ſincere Practice, and would renounce their Error if they ſaw the inconſiſtence, ſo is it with many Papiſts. And that which they hold firſt and faſteſt and practically, doth ſave them from the power, operations, and poyſon of their own opinions: As an Antidote or the ſtrength of nature may ſave a Man from a ſmall quantity of poyſon.

5. Moreover we have cauſe to judge that there are Millions among the Papiſts, corrupted with many of their leſſer errors, who yet hold not their greater; that believe not that none are Chriſtians but the Pope's Subjects, and that Chriſt's Kingdom and the Pope's are of the ſame extent, or that he can remit Mens pains in another World, or that the Bread and Wine are no Bread and Wine, or that Men merit of God in point of Commutative Juſtice, or that we muſt adore or worſhip the Bread, or yet the Croſs or Image it ſelf, &c. Or that conſent to abundance of the Clergies tyrannical Uſurpations and Abuſes: And ſo being not properly Papiſts, may be ſaved, if a Papiſt might not. And we the leſs know how many or few among them are really of the Clergies Religion and Mind, becauſe by terror they reſtrain Men from manifeſting their judgment, and compel them to comply in outward things.

6. But as fewer that have Leproſies, or Plagues, or that take Poyſon ſcape, than of other Men, ſo we have great cauſe to believe, that much fewer Papiſts are ſaved, than ſuch as eſcape their errors. And therefore all that love their Souls ſhould avoid them.

7. And the trick of the Papiſts who perſwade People that theirs is the ſafeſt Religion, becauſe we ſay that a Papiſt may be ſaved, and they ſay that a Proteſtant cannot, is ſo palpable a cheat, that it ſhould rather deter Men from their way. For God is Love, and he that dwelleth in Love dwelleth in God: And all Men muſt know us to be Chriſt's Diſciples, by loving one another; and he that ſaith he loveth God, and loveth not his Brother, he is a Lyar: And Charity believeth all things, credible: That Religion is likeſt to be of God which is moſt charitable, and not that which is moſt uncharitable, and malicious, and like to Satan.

To conclude, no Man ſhall be ſaved for being no Papiſt, much leſs for being a Papiſt. And all that are truly holy, heavenly, humble, lovers of God, and of thoſe that are his Servants, ſhall be ſaved. But how many ſuch are among the Papiſts, God only knoweth who is their Judge.

THE queſtions whether the Greeks, Abaſſines, Neſtorians, Eutychians, Antimonians, Anabaptiſts, &c. may be ſaved, muſt be all reſolved as this of the Papiſts, allowing for the different degrees of their corruption: And therefore I muſt deſire the Reader to take up with this Anſwer for all, and excuſe me from unneceſſary repetition.

As for ſuch Diſputers as my Antagoniſt Mr. Johnſon, who inſiſteth on that of Tit. 3. 10. A Man that is an Heretick——is condemned of himſelf; when he hath proved that the word Heretick hath but one ſignification, I will ſay as he doth. Till then, if he will try who ſhall be damned by bare equivocal words, without the definition, let him take his courſe, for I will be none of his imitators.

Queſt. 6. Whether thoſe that are in the Church of Rome, are bound to ſeparate from it? And whether it be lawful to go to their Maſs or other Worſhip?

THeſe two alſo for brevity I join together.

I. To the firſt, we muſt diſtinguiſh of ſeparation: 1. It is one thing to judge that evil which is evil, and ſeparate from it in judgment. 2. It is another thing to expreſs this by forbearing to ſubſcribe, ſwear, or otherwiſe approve that evil. 3. And another thing to forbear Communion with them, in the Maſs Image and Worſhip, and groſs or known Sins. 4. And another thing to forbear all Communion with them, even as to Baptiſm, and other lawful things. 5. And another thing to uſe ſome open deteſtations or proteſtations againſt them.

2. And we muſt diſtinguiſh much of Perſons, whether they be Miniſters or People, free or bound, as Wives, Children, &c. And now I anſwer.

1. There is no queſtion but it is a duty to judge all that evil which is evil, among the Papiſts or any other.

2. It is the duty of all to forbear ſubſcribing, ſwearing to, or otherwiſe approving evil.

3. It is the duty of all Maſs-Prieſts to renounce that part of their calling, and not to adminiſter their Maſs, or any other unlawful thing.

4. It is the duty of all private Chriſtians to forbear Communion in the Maſs, becauſe it is a kind of Idolatry, while they worſhip a piece of Bread as God: As alſo Image-Worſhip and all other parts of their Religion, in which they are put upon Sin themſelves, or that which is notorious ſcandal and ſymbolizing with them in their Bread-worſhip, or other corruptions of the ſubſtance of God's Ordinances.

5. It is their duty who have fit opportunity, (when it is like to do more good than harm) to proteſt againſt the Papal Corruptions where they are, and to declare their deteſtation of them.

6. It is the duty of thoſe that have Children to be baptized, or catechized, to make uſe of more lawful and ſound Miniſters, when they may be had, rather than of a Papiſt Prieſt.

7. But in caſe they cannot remove or enjoy better, I think it is lawful, 1. To let ſuch baptize their Children, rather than leave them unbaptized. 2. To let their Children be taught by them to read, or in

Arts

Arts and Sciences, or the Catechism, and common Principles of Religion, so they will mix no dangerous errors. 3. And to hear those of them preach, who preach soundly and piously (such as were Gerhard, Zutphaniensis, Thaulerus, Ferus, and many more.) 4. And to read such good Books as those now mentioned have written. 5. And to join with them in such Prayers as are sound and pious, so they go no further.

8. And Wives, Children, and such other as are bound, and cannot lawfully remove, may stay among them, and take up with these helps, dealing faithfully in abstaining from the rest.

II. The second question is answered in this. Only I add, that it is one thing to be present as Elias was, in a way of opposition to them; or as Disputants are, that open their Errors; or as a wise Man may go to hear or see what they do without complyance, as we read their Books: And it is another thing to join with them in their sinful worship, or scandalously to encourage them in it by seeming so to do. See Calv. contr. Nicod. &c.

Quest. 7. Whether the true Calling of the Minister by Ordination or Election, &c. be necessary to the Essence of the Church?

BY a Church here we mean a Political Society of Christians, and not any Assembly or Community. And no doubt Pastor and Flock are the constitutive parts of such a Church; and where either of them are notoriously wanting, it is notorious that there is no true Church. Therefore all the doubt is, whether such parts of his Call be necessary to the being of the Ministry or not? And here we must conclude, that the word [Ministry] and [Church] are ambiguous: By a Minister or Pastor is meant either one that God so far owneth as to accept and justifie his administrations as for himself, even his own good and Salvation; or one whose administrations God will own, accept and bless to the People.

I. In the former sense, 1. He is no true Minister that wanteth the essential qualifications of a Minister, viz. that hath not, 1. The understanding and belief of all the essential Articles of Faith, without Heresie. 2. Tolerable Ability to teach these to the People, and perform the other essentials of his office. 3. Sincere Godliness, to do all this in Love and Obedience to God as his Servant, in order to Life Eternal. 2. And he is thus no true Pastor as to God's acceptance of himself, who hath not a lawful Calling; that is, 1. Ordination, when it may be had. 2. The Consent or Reception of that Church of which he pretendeth to be Pastor, which is still necessary, and must be had, if Ordination cannot.

II. But in the second sense, he is a Pastor so far as that God will own his Administrations as to the Peoples Good who, 1. Hath Possession. 2. And seemeth to them to have necessary qualifications, and a lawful call, though it prove otherwise, so be it, it be not through their wilful fault, that he is culpable or they mistaken in him. If he be not a true Believer but an Infidel, or Heretick, he is no Minister as to himself, that is, God will use him as an Usurper that hath no title: But if he profess to be a Believer when he is not, he is a true Pastor visibly to the People; otherwise they could never know when they have a Pastor: Even as real Faith makes a real Christian, and professed Faith maketh a visible Christian, so is it as to the Ministry. If he seem to understand the Articles of Faith and do not, or if he seem to have due ordination when he hath not, if he be upon this mistake accepted by the People, he is a true Visible Pastor as to them, that is, as to their Duty and Benefit, though not as to himself. Yea, the Peoples consent to his entrance is not necessary ad esse, nor to his Relation neither, so far as to justifie himself, but to his Administrations and to his Relations, so far as their own Right and Benefit is interessed in it. So that two things are necessary to such a Visible Pastor as shall perform valid administrations to the Church; 1. Seeming necessary qualifications and calling to it. 2. Possession, by the Peoples Reception or Consent to his Administrations and Relation so far as to their benefit.

Acts 1.17. Mat.7.23.

And III. Thus also we must distinguish of the word [Church] It is, 1. Such an entire Christian Society as hath a Minister or Pastor whose office is valid as to himself and them; or it is such a Society only as hath a Pastor whose office is valid to them but not to himself: Let us not confound the question de re and de nomine. These Societies differ as is said. Both may fitly be called true Churches.

As it is with a Kingdom which hath a Rightful Prince, and one that hath an Usurper, so it is here. 1. If it have a Rightful King accepted, it is a Kingdom in the fullest sense. 2. If it have an Usurper accepted as King, it is a Kingdom, but faulty. 3. If the Usurper be only so far accepted as that the People consent not to his entrance, no nor his Relation so as to justifie his title, but wish him cast out if they could procure it; but yet consent to receive that Protection and Justice which is their own due from the Possessor, and consent to his Relation only thus far, this is a Kingdom truly, but more defective or maimed than the first. 4. But if the People do not so much as receive him, nor submit to his Administrations, he is but a Conqueror, and not a King, and it is (in respect to him) no Kingdom, (though in respect to some other that hath title and consent without actual possession of the administration, it may be a Kingdom.) And this is the true and plain solution of this question, which want of distinction doth obscure.

Quest. 8. Whether sincere Faith and Godliness be necessary to the Being of the Ministry? And whether it be lawful to hear a wicked Man, or take the Sacrament from him, or take him for a Minister.

THis question receiveth the very same solution with the last foregoing, and therefore I need not say much more to it.

I. The first part is too oft resolved mistakingly on both extreams. Some absolutely saying that Godliness or Faith is not necessary to the Being of the Ministry; and some that it is necessary. Whereas the true solution is as aforesaid; sincere Faith and Godliness is necessary to make a Man a Minister so far as that God will own and justifie him as sent by himself, as to his own Duty and Benefit: For he cannot be internally, and heartily a Christian Pastor that is no Christian, nor a Minister of God, who is not godly, that is, is not truly resigned to God, obeyeth him not, and loveth him not as God. But yet the Reality of these are not necessary to make him a Visible Pastor, as to the Peoples Duty and Benefit.

2. But the Profession of true Faith and Godliness is necessary so far, as that without it the People ought not to take him for a Visible Minister, (as the Profession of Christianity is to a visible Christian.)

3. And in their choice they ought to prefer him cæteris paribus, whose profession is most credible.

Obj. That which maketh a Minister is Gifts and a Calling, which are distinct from Grace and real Christianity. Answ. Every Minister is a Christian, tho' every Christian be not a Minister or Pastor: Therefore he that is a visible Pastor must visibly or in profession have both.

Obj. But a Man may be a Christian without saving Grace or Godliness. Answ. As much as he may be Godly without Godliness. That is, he may be Visibly a Christian and Godly, without sincere Faith or Godliness lineſs, but not without the profeſſion of both. It is not poſſible that the Profeſſion of Chriſtianity in the Eſſentials, can be without the profeſſion of Godlineſs: For it includeth it.

II. To the other queſtion I anſwer, 1. A Man that profeſſeth Infidelity or Impiety, yea that profeſſeth not Faith and Godlineſs is not to be taken for a Miniſter or heard as ſuch.

2. Every one that profeſſeth to ſtand to his Baptiſmal Covenant profeſſeth Faith and Godlineſs.

3. He that by a vicious Life or bad application of Doctrine contradicteth his Profeſſion, is to be lawfully accuſed of it, and heard ſpeak for himſelf, and to be caſt out by true Church-juſtice, and not by the private cenſure of a private Perſon.

4. Till this be done, though a particular private Member of the Church be not bound to think that the Miniſter is worthy, nor that the Church which ſuffereth him and receiveth him doth well, yet they are bound to judge him one who by the Churches reception is in poſſeſſion; and therefore a viſible Paſtor, and to ſubmit to his publick Adminiſtrations: Becauſe it is not in a private Mans power, but the Churches, to determine who ſhall be the Paſtor.

6. But if the caſe be paſt Controverſie, and notorious, that the Man is not only ſcandalous and weak and dull and negligent, but alſo either, 1. Intolerably unable. 2. Or an Infidel, or groſs Heretick. 3. Or certainly ungodly, a private Man ſhould admoniſh the Church and him, and in caſe that they proceed in impenitency, ſhould remove himſelf to a better Church and Miniſtry: And the Church itſelf ſhould diſown ſuch a Man, and commit their Souls to one that is fitter for the truſt.

6. And that Church or Perſon who needleſly owneth ſuch a Paſtor, or preferreth him before a fitter, doth thereby harden him in his Uſurpation, and is guilty of the hurt of the Peoples Souls, and of his own, and of the diſhonour done to God.

Queſt. 9. Whether the People are bound to receive or conſent to an Ungodly, intolerable, heretical Paſtor, yea or one far leſs fit and worthy than a competitor, if the Magiſtrate command it, or the Biſhop impoſe him?

FOR the deciding of this take theſe Propoſitions.

1. The Magiſtrate is authorized by God to govern Miniſters and Churches, according to the Orders and Laws of Chriſt (and not againſt them:) But not to ordain or degrade, nor to make Miniſters, or unmake them, nor to deprive the Church of the Liberty ſettled on it by the Laws of Chriſt.

2. The Biſhops or Ordainers are authorized by Chriſt, to judge of the fitneſs of the Perſon to the office in general, and ſolemnly to inveſt him in it, but not to deprive the People of their freedom, and exerciſe of the natural care of their own Salvation, or of any Liberty given them by Chriſt.

3. The Peoples liberty in chooſing, or conſenting to their own Paſtors to whom they muſt commit the care of their Souls, is partly founded in nature, (it being they that muſt have the benefit or loſs, and no Man being authorized to damn or hazard Mens Souls, at leaſt againſt their Wills:) And partly ſettled by Scripture, and continued in the Church above a Thouſand Years after Chriſt, at leaſt in very many parts of it. See Blondel's full proof de jure plebis in regim. Eccleſ. Hildebertius Cenomań. (alias Turonenſis) even in his time ſheweth that though the Clergy were to lead and the People to follow, yet no Man was to be made a Biſhop, or put upon the People without their own conſent: Epiſt. 12. Bibl. Pet. To. 3. p. 179. Fileſacus will direct you to more ſuch teſtimonies: But the thing is paſt Controverſie. I need not cite to the learned the commonly cited teſtimony of Cyprian, Plebs maximam habet poteſtatem indignos recuſandi, &c. And indeed in the nature of the thing it cannot be: For though you may drench a mad Man's Body by force, when you give him phyſick, you cannot ſo drench Mens Souls, nor cure them againſt their Wills.

In the time of the Arrian Emperors the Churches refuſed the Biſhops whom the Emperors impoſed on them, and ſtuck to their own Orthodox Biſhops; eſpecially at Alexandria and Cæſarea after the greateſt urgency for their obedience.

4. Not that the Peoples conſent is neceſſary to the general office of a Goſpel Miniſter, to preach and baptize; but only to the appropriation or relation of a Miniſter to themſelves; that is, to the being of a Paſtor of a particular Church as ſuch, but not of a Miniſter of Chriſt as ſuch.

5. A Man's Soul is of ſo great value above all the favour of Man, or treaſures of this World, that no Man ſhould be indifferent, to what Man's care he doth commit it; nor ſhould he hazard it upon the danger of everlaſting Miſery, for fear of diſpleaſing Man, or being accuſed of Schiſm or Diſorder.

6. There is as great difference between an able, learned, judicious, orthodox, godly, diligent lively Teacher, and an ignorant, heretical, ungodly, dull and ſlothful Man, as is between a skilful and an ignorant Pilot at Sea; or between an able, experienced, faithful Phyſician, and an ignorant, raſh, and treacherous one, as to the ſaving Mens Lives. And he that would not take a Sot or an Empirick for his Phyſician, who were like to kill him, and refuſe the counſel of an able Phyſician, in obedience to a Magiſtrate or Biſhop, hath as little reaſon to do the like by his Soul; nor ſhould he ſet leſs by that than by his Life. And, if Paul ſaid, we have this power for Edification and not for Deſtruction, we may ſay ſo of all Magiſtrates and Biſhops. Sober Divines have lately ſhewed their error, who teach Men that they muſt be ready to ſubmit to damnation if God require it, or to ſuppoſe that his Glory and our Salvation are ſeparable ends; becauſe Damnation is a thing which nature neceſſitateth Man not to deſire or intend! And ſhall we aſcribe more to a Magiſtrate than to God? And ſay that we muſt caſt our Souls on a likelyhood of Damnation to keep order, and in obedience to Man? No Man can be ſaved without Knowledge and Holineſs; an ignorant, dead, ungodly Miniſter, is far leſs likely to help us to Knowledge and Holineſs, than an able holy Man. To ſay God can work by the unfitteſt inſtrument is nothing to the purpoſe; till you prove that God would have us take him for his inſtrument, and that he uſeth equally to work by ſuch as well as by the fit and worthy, or that we expect wonders from God, and that ordinarily without tempting him! Yea, when ſuch an Uſurper of the Miniſtry is like to damn himſelf, as well as the People.

Mat. 16. 26. Prov. 10. 3°. & 19.8. Luk.12.4.

And here to lenifie the Minds of Ithacian Prelates towards thoſe that ſeek their own Edification, in ſuch a caſe as this, or that refuſe unworthy Paſtors of their impoſing, I will intreat them to cenſure thoſe near them no more ſharply than they do the Perſons in theſe following inſtances. Yea if a Separatiſt go too far, uſe him no more uncharitably, than you would do theſe Men:

1. Gildas Brit. is called Sapiens, and our eldeſt Writer; and yet he calleth the multitude of the lewd Britiſh Clergy whom he reprehendeth in his Acris Correptio, Traytors and no Prieſts; and concludeth ſeriouſly, that he that calleth them Prieſts, is not eximius Chriſtianus, any excellent Chriſtian. Yet thoſe few that were pious he excepteth and commendeth. Shall he account them no Prieſts, for their ſinfulneſs, and will force others, not only to call them Prieſts, but to commit their Souls to ſuch Mens conduct? When Chriſt hath ſaid, If the blind lead the blind, both will fall into the ditch? And Paul, Take heed unto thy ſelf and unto thy doctrine; for in ſo doing, thou ſhalt both ſave thy ſelf and them that hear thee?

Mat. 15. 14. 1 Tim. 4. 16. 1 Tim. 4.6 Mat.16.6. & 24. 4 Mar.4.24 Luk.8.18. Mat. 23. 16.

The

The ſecond is our ſecond (and firſt Engliſh) Hiſtorian Beda, and in him the famous Johannes Epiſc. Haguſtaldenſis Eccleſ. who as he reporteth wrought very great miracles, as Eccleſ. hiſt. l. 5. cap. 2, 3, 4, & 5. is to be read: This Man had one Herebaldus in his Clergy, after an Abbot; who himſelf told Beda as followeth, That this Johannes Ep. cured him miraculouſly of a perilous hurt, taken by diſobedient Horſemanſhip; and when he recovered, he asked him, whether he were ſure that he was baptized? Who anſwered, That he knew it paſt doubt, and named the Presbyter that baptized him. The Biſhop anſwered him, If thou waſt baptized by that Prieſt, thou art not rightly baptized: For I know him, and that when he was ordained Presbyter, he was ſo dull of wit, that he could not learn the Miniſtry of Catechizing and Baptizing. Wherefore I commanded him altogether to give over the preſumption of this Miniſtry, which he could not altogether fulfil. And having thus ſaid, he himſelf took care to catechize me the ſame hour; and —being cured — vitali etiam unda perfuſus ſum, I was baptized.

I commend not this example of re-baptizing, the rather becauſe it ſeems the Prieſt was not depoſed till after he had baptized Herebaldus: But if he went ſo far as to re-baptize, and account the Baptiſm a nullity, which was done by an unable inſufficient Presbyter though rightly ordained, judge but as favourably of Men that avoid ſuch Presbyters in our age.

The third inſtance ſhall be that of Cyprian and all the worthy Biſhops in the Councils of Carthage in his time, who re-baptized thoſe baptized by Hereticks! And conſider withal that in thoſe times many were called Hereticks whom we call but Schiſ-
Act. 20. 30 maticks, that drew Diſciples after them into ſeparated Bodies and Parties, ſpeaking perverſe things, though not contrary to the very Eſſentials of Religion. I juſtifie not their opinion. But if ſo many holy Biſhops counted the very Baptiſm of ſuch a nullity, be not too ſevere and cenſorious againſt thoſe that go not at all ſo far from an inſufficient or ungodly, or groſly ſcandalous Man, for the meer preſervation of their own Souls.

To theſe I will add the ſaying of one of the honeſter ſort of Jeſuites, Acoſta; and in him of an ancienter than he: Lib. 4. c. 1. p. 354. de reb. Indic. He extolleth the words of Dionyſius Epiſt. 8. ad Demoph. which are [Si igitur quæ illuminat Sacerdotum eſt ſancta diſtinctio, proculdubio ille à ſacerdotali ordine & virtute omnino prolapſus eſt, qui illuminans non eſt, multoque ſane magis qui neque illuminatus eſt. Atque mihi quidem videtur audax nimium hujuſmodi eſt, ſi ſacerdotalia munia ſibi aſſumit, neque metuit, neque veretur ea quæ ſunt Divina præter meritum perſequi; putatque ea latere Deum, quorum ſibi ipſe conſcius ſit: & ſe Deum fallere exiſtimat, quem falſo nomine appellat Patrem; audetque ſceleſtas blaſphemias ſuas (neque enim preces dixerim) ſacris aris inferre; eaſque ſuper ſigna illa Divina, ad Chriſti ſimilitudinem dicere. Non eſt iſte ſacerdos; non eſt; ſed infeſtus, atrox, doloſus, illuſor ſui, & lupus in dominicam gregem ovina pelle armatus.] His plura aut majora de evangelici miniſterii & culmine & præcipitio qui expectat, cuique ad reſipiſcendum non iſta ſufficiunt, infatuatam ſe juxta Domini ſententiam, & nullo unquam ſale ſaliri poſſe demonſtrat. I will not Engliſh it, leſt thoſe take encouragement by it, who are bent to the other extream.

7. Yet it will be a great offence, if any cenſorious ſelf-conceited Perſon, ſhall on this pretence, ſet up his judgment of Mens parts, to the contempt of authority, or to the vilifying of worthy Men; and eſpecially if he thereby make a ſtir and Schiſm in the Church, inſtead of ſeeking his own Edification.

8. Yea, if a Miniſter be weaker, yea, and colder and worſe than another, yet if his Miniſtry be competently fitted to Edification, he that cannot leave him and go to a better, without apparent hurt to the Church, and the Souls of others, by Diviſion, or exaſperating Rulers, or breaking Family Order, or violating Relation Duties, muſt take himſelf to be at preſent denied the greater helps that others have, and may truſt God in the uſe of thoſe weaker means, to accept and bleſs him; becauſe he is in the ſtation where he hath ſet him. This caſe therefore muſt be reſolved by a prudent comparing of the good or hurt which is like to follow, and of the accidents or circumſtances whence that muſt be diſcerned.

Queſt. 10 What if the Magiſtrate command the People to receive one Paſtor, and the Biſhops or Ordainers another, which of them muſt be obeyed?

1. THE Magiſtrate, and not the Biſhop or People, (unleſs under him) hath the power and diſpoſal of the Circumſtantials or Accidents of the Church; I mean of the Temple, the Pulpit, the Tythes, &c. And he is to determine what Miniſters are fit either for his own Countenance or Toleration, and what not. In theſe therefore he is to be obeyed before the Biſhops or others. See more of this after.

2. If a Pope or Prelate of a foreign Church, or any that hath no lawful Juriſdiction or Government over the Church that wanteth a Paſtor, ſhall command them to receive one, their command is null, and to be contemned.

3. Neither Magiſtrate nor Biſhop, as is ſaid, may deny the Church or People any Liberty which God in Nature, or Chriſt in the Goſpel hath ſettled on them, as to the Reception of their proper Paſtors.

4. No Biſhop, but only the Magiſtrate can compel by the Sword, the obedience of his command.

5. If one of them command the reception of a worthy Perſon, and the other of an intolerable one; the former muſt prevail, becauſe of obedience to Chriſt, and care of our Souls.

6. But if the Perſons be equal, or both fit, the Magiſtrate is to be obeyed, if he be peremptory in his commands, and decide the caſe in order to the Peace or Protection of the Church; both becauſe it is a lawful thing, and becauſe elſe he will permit no other.

7. And the rather becauſe the Magiſtrates Power is more paſt controverſie, than whether any Biſhop, Paſtor or Synod can any further than by counſel and perſwaſion, oblige the People to receive a Paſtor.

Queſt. 11. Whether an uninterrupted Succeſſion either of right Ordination or Conveyance by Juriſdiction, be neceſſary to the Being of the Miniſtry, or of a true Church?

THE Papiſts have hitherto inſiſted on the neceſſity of ſucceſſive right Ordination: But Voetius de deſperata Cauſa Papatus hath in this ſo handled them, and confuted Janſenius, as hath indeed ſhewed the deſperateneſs of that Cauſe: And they perceive that the Papacy it ſelf cannot be upheld by that way; and therefore Johnſon alias Terret, in his Rejoinder againſt me now concludeth, that it is not for want of a ſucceſſive Conſecration that they condemn the Church of England, but for want of true Juriſdiction, becauſe other Biſhops had title to the places whilſt they were put in: And that ſucceſſive Conſecration (which we take to include Ordination) is not neceſſary to the being of Miniſtry or Church. And it is moſt certain to any Man acquainted in Church Hiſtory, that their Popes have had a ſucceſſion of neither. Their way of Election hath been frequently changed, ſometimes being by the People, ſometimes by the Clergy, ſometimes by the Emperors, and laſtly by the Cardinals alone. Ordination they have ſometime wanted, and a Lay-man been choſen: And oft the Ordination hath been by ſuch as had no Power according to their own Laws. And frequent Interciſions have been made, ſometime by many Years vacancy, when they had no Church, (and ſo there was none on Earth, if the Pope be the Conſtitutive Head) for want of a Pope; ſometime by long Schiſms, when of two or three Popes, no one could be known to have more right than the other, nor did they otherwiſe carry it, than by Power at laſt: Sometimes by the utter incapacity of the Poſſeſſors, ſome being Lay-men, ſome Hereticks and Infidels, ſo judged by Councils at Rome, Conſtance, Baſil; and Eugenius the fourth continued after he was ſo cenſured and condemned and depoſed by the General Council. I have proved all this at large elſewhere.

And he that will not be cheated with a bare ſound of words, but will ask them, whether by a Succeſſion of Juriſdiction, they mean efficient Conveying Juriſdiction in the Cauſers of his Call, or Received Juriſdiction in the Office received, will find that they do but hide their deſperate Cauſe in Confuſion and an inſignificant noiſe. For they maintain that none on Earth have an efficient Juriſdiction in making Popes. For the former Pope doth not make his Succeſſour; and both Electors, Ordainers and Conſecrators, yea, and the People receiving, they hold to be Subjects of the Pope when made, and therefore make him not by Juriſdiction giving him the Power. Therefore Johnſon tells me, that Chriſt only, and not Man, doth give the Power, and they muſt needs hold that Men have nothing to do but deſign the Perſon Recipient by Election and Reception, and to Inveſt him ceremonially in the Poſſeſſion. So that no efficient Juriſdiction is here uſed at all by Man. And for received Juriſdiction, 1. No one queſtioneth, but when that Office is received which is eſſentially Governing, he that receiveth it receiveth a Governing Power, or elſe he did not receive the Office. If the queſtion be only, whether the Office of a Biſhop be an Office of Juriſdiction, or contain eſſentially a governing Power, they make no queſtion of this themſelves. So that the noiſe of ſucceſſive Juriſdiction is vaniſhed into nothing. 2. And with them that deny any Juriſdiction to belong to Presbyters, this will be nothing as to their Caſe, who have nothing but Orders to receive.

They have nothing of ſenſe left them to ſay but this, That though the efficient Juriſdiction which maketh Popes be only in Chriſt, becauſe no Men are their Superiours, yet Biſhops and Presbyters who have Superiours, cannot receive their Power but by an efficient Power of Man, which muſt come down by uninterrupted Succeſſion.

Anſw. 1. And ſo if ever the Papal Office have an Interciſion, (as I have proved it hath had as to lawful Popes) the whole Catholick Church is nullified; and it is impoſſible to give it a new being, but by a new Pope.

But the beſt is, that by their Doctrine indeed they need not to plead for an uninterrupted Succeſſion either of Popes, Biſhops or Presbyters, but that they think it a uſeful cheat to perplex all that are not their Subjects. For if the Papacy were extinct an hundred Years, Chriſt is ſtill alive: And ſeeing it is no Matter (ad eſſe) who be the Electors or Conſecrators, ſo it be but made known conveniently to the People, and Men only Elect and Receive the Perſon, and Chriſt only giveth the Power (by his ſtated Law) what hindreth after the longeſt Extinction or Interciſion, but that ſome Body, or ſome ſort of Perſons may chooſe a Pope again, and ſo Chriſt make him Pope? And thus the Catholick Church may die and live again by a new Creation, many Times over.

And when the Pope hath a Reſurrection after the longeſt Interciſion, ſo may all the Biſhops and Prieſts in the World, becauſe a new Pope can make new Biſhops, and new Biſhops can make new Prieſts. And where then is there any ſhew of neceſſity of an uninterrupted Succeſſion of any of them? All that will follow is, that the particular Churches die, till a Reſurrection: And ſo doth the whole Church on Earth every Time the Pope dieth, till another be made, if he be the conſtitutive Head.

2. But as they ſay that Chriſt only efficiently giveth the Power to the Pope, ſo ſay we to the Biſhops or Paſtors of the Church. For there is no act of Chriſts Collation to be proved, but the Scripture Law or Grant: And if that ſtanding Law give Power to the Pope, when Men have but deſigned the Perſon, the ſame Law will do the ſame to Biſhops or Paſtors: For it eſtabliſheth their Office in the ſame ſort. Or rather in Truth there is no word, that giveth Power to any ſuch Officer as an univerſal Head or Pope, but the Law for the Paſtoral Office is uncontrovertible.

And what the Spaniſh Biſhops at Trent thought of the Divine Right of the Biſhops Office, I need not mention.

I ſhall therefore thus truly reſolve the Queſtion.

1. In all Ordinations and Elections Man doth but firſt chooſe the Recipient Perſon: 2. And Ceremoniouſly and Miniſterially Inveſt him in the Poſſeſſion, when God hath given him the Power: But the efficient Collation or Grant of the Power is done only by Chriſt, by the Inſtrumentality of his Law or Inſtitution. As when the King by a Charter ſaith, whoever the City ſhall chooſe, ſhall be their Mayor, and have ſuch and ſuch Power, and be inveſted in it by the Recorder or Steward: Here the Perſon elected receiveth all his Power from the King by his Charter, (which is a ſtanding Efficient, conveying it to the capable choſen Perſon,) and not from the Chooſers or Recorder; only the laſt is as a Servant to deliver Poſſeſſion. So is it in this Caſe.

2. The regular way of entrance appointed by Chriſt to make a Perſon capable, is the ſaid Election, and Ordination. And for order ſake where that may be had, the unordained are not to be received as Paſtors.

3. If any get Poſſeſſion, by falſe pretended Ordination or Miſſion, and be Received by the Church, I have before told you that he is a Paſtor as to the Churches uſe and benefit, though not to his own. And ſo the Church is not extinct by every fraudulent Uſurpation or Miſtake, and ſo not by want of a true Ordination or Miſſion.

4. If the way of regular Ordination fail, God may otherwiſe (by the Churches neceſſity and the notorious aptitude of the Perſon) notifie his Will to the Church, what Perſon they ſhall receive: (As if a Lay-man were caſt on the Indian ſhore and converted Thouſands, who could have no Ordination.) And upon the Peoples Reception or Conſent, that Man will be a true Paſtor.

And ſeeing the Papiſts in the Concluſion (as Johnſon ubi ſupra) are fain to caſt all their cauſe on the Churches Reception of the Pope, they cannot deny reaſonably but ad eſſe the Churches Reception may ſerve alſo for another Officer: And indeed much better than for a Pope. For, 1. The Univerſal Church is ſo great, that no Man can know when the greater Part receiveth him, and when not, except in ſome notorious Declarations. 2. And it is now known, that the far greater part of the Univerſal Church (the Greeks, Armenians, Abaſſines, Copties, Proteſtants, &c.) do not receive the Roman Head. 3. And when one part of Europe received one Pope, and one part another Pope for above forty years together, who could tell which of the Parties was to be accounted the Church? It was not then known, nor is not known yet to this Day: And no Papiſt can prove it, who affirmeth it.

As a Church e. g. Conſtantinople may be gathered, or oriri de novo where there is none before, ſo may it be be restored where it is extinct. And possibly a Layman (as Frumentius and Edesius in the Indies) may be the instrument of Mens Conversion. And if so, they may by Consent become their Pastors, when regular Ordination cannot be had.

I have said more of this in my Disputations of Church Government Disp. 2. The Truth is, the pretence of a Necessity of uninterrupted successive Ordination, Mission, or Jurisdictional Collation ad esse, to the being of Ministry or Church, is but a cheat of Men that have an interest of their own which requireth such a Plea, when they may easily know, that it would overthrow themselves.

Quest. 12. Whether there be, or ever was such a thing in the World, as one Catholick Church, constituted by any Head besides or under Christ?

THE greatest and first controversie between us and the Papists, is not What Man, or Politick Person, is the Head of the whole visible Church: But, Whether there be any such Head at all, either Personal or Collective, Monarchical, Aristocratical or Democratical under Christ, of his appointment or allowance? Or any such thing as a Catholick Church so Headed or Constituted? Which they affirm and we deny. That neither Pope nor General Council is such a Head, I have proved so fully in my Key for Catholicks and other Books, that I will not here stay to make Repetition of it. That the Pope is no such Head, we may take for granted, 1. Because they bring no Proof of it; whatever they vainly pretend. 2. Because our Divines have copiously disproved it, to whom I refer you. 3. Because the Universal Church never received such a Head, as I have proved against Johnson. 4. And whether it be the Pope, their Bishop of Calcedon ubi sup. & Sancta Clara System. fid. say is not de fide.

That a Council is no such Head I have largely proved as aforesaid Part 2. Key for Cath. And 1. The use of it being but for Concord proveth it. 2. Most Papists confess it. 3. Else there should be seldom any Church in the World for want of a Head (yea, never any.)

See also in my Reasons of Christian Religion Cons. 2. of the Interest of the Church.

For I have proved there and to Johnson, that there never was a true General Council of the Universal Church: But only Imperial Councils of the Churches under one Emperours Power, and those that having been under it, had been used to such Councils: And that it is not a thing ever to be attempted or expected, as being unlawful and morally impossible.

Quest. 13. Whether there be such a thing as a visible Catholick Church? And what it is?

THE Ancients differently used the Terms [A Catholick Church] and [The Catholick Church] —— By the first they meant any particular Church which was part of the Universal; By the second they meant the Universal Church it self. And this is it that we now mean. And I answer Affirmatively, There is a visible universal Church, not only as a Community, or as a Kingdom distinct from the King, but as a Political Society.

1 Cor. 12. 12. and throughout.

Eph. 4. 1, 5, 6, 7, 16.

2. This Church is the Universality of Baptized Visible Christians Headed by Jesus Christ himself.

There is this, and there is no other upon Earth. The Papists say, that this is no visible Church because the Head is not Visible.

I answer, 1. It is not necessary that he be seen, but visible: And is not Christ a visible Person?

2. This Church consisteth of two Parts, the Triumphant part in Glory, and the Militant part: And Christ is not only Visible but seen by the triumphant part. As the King is not seen by the ten thousandth part of his Kingdoms, but by his Courtiers and those about him, and yet he is King of all.

3. Christ was seen on earth for above thirty years: And the Kingdom may be called visible in that the King was once visible on Earth, and is now visible in Heaven. As if the King would shew himself to his People, but one year together in all his Life.

4. It ill becometh the Papists of any Men, to say that Christ is not visible, who make him, see him, taste him, handle him, eat him, drink him, digest him, in every Church, in every Mass throughout the year, and throughout the World: And this not as divided, but as whole Christ.

Obj. But this is not quatenus Regent.

Answ. If you see him that is Regent, and see his Laws and Gospel which are his governing Instruments, together with his Ministers who are his Officers, it is enough to denominate his Kingdom visible.

5. The Church might be fitly denominated Visible secundum quid, if Christ himself were invisible; because the Politick Body is visible, the dispersed Officers, Assemblies and Laws are visible. But sure all these together may well serve for the Denomination.

Quest. 14. What is it that maketh a Visible Member of the Universal Church? And who are to be accounted such?

1. Baptism maketh a Visible Member of the Universal Church; and the Baptized (as to entrance, unless they go out again) are to be accounted such. Mat. 28. 19. Mark 16. 16.

2. By Baptism we mean, open devotion or dedication to God by the Baptismal Covenant, in which the Adult for themselves, and Parents for their Infants, do profess Consent to the Covenant of Grace; which includeth a Belief of all the Essential Articles of the Faith, and a Resolution for sincere Obedience; and a Consent to the Relations between God and us, viz. That he be our Reconciled Father, our Saviour and our Sanctifier.

3. The Continuance of this Consent, is necessary to the continuance of our visible Membership.

4. He that through ignorance, or incapacity for want of Water, or a Minister, is not baptized, and yet is solemnly, or notoriously dedicated and devoted to God the Father, Son and Holy Ghost, in the same Covenant, though without the outward Sign, and professeth openly the same Religion, is a visible Christian, though not by a compleat and regular visibility; as a Souldier not listed nor taking his Colours, or a Marriage not regularly solemnized, &c.

5. He that forsaketh his Covenant, by Apostasie, or is totally and duly excommunicated, ceaseth to be a visible Member of the Church.

Quest. 15. Whether besides the Profession of Christianity, either Testimony or Evidence of Conversion, or Practical Godliness be necessary to prove a Man a Member of the Universal Visible Church?

1. AS the Mediator is the way to the Father, sent to recover us to God, so Christianity includeth Godliness; and he professeth not Christianity who professeth not Godliness. Joh. 14. 6. 1 Tim. 3. 16. & 6. 3, 11. 2 Pet. 1. 3.

2. He that professeth the Baptismal Covenant, professeth Christianity and Godliness, and true Conversion. And therefore cannot be rejected for want of a Profession of Conversion or Godliness.

3. But he that is justly suspected not to understand his own Profession, but to speak general words, without the Sense, may and ought to be examined by him that is to baptize him: And therefore though the Apostles among the Jews who had been bred up among the Oracles of God, did justly presume of so much understanding, as that they baptized Men the same Day that they professed to believe in Christ; yet when they baptized converted Gentiles, we have reason to think, that they first received a particular account Acts 2. 38, 39.

count of their Converts, that they underſtood the three eſſential Articles of the Covenant: 1. Becauſe the Creed is fitted to that uſe, and hath been ever uſed thereunto by the Churches, as by tradition from the Apoſtles Practice. 2. Becauſe the Church in all Ages, as far as Church Hiſtory leadeth us upward, hath uſed catechizing before baptizing; yea, and to keep Men as Catechumens ſome time for Preparation. 3. Becauſe common Experience telleth us, that multitudes can ſay the Creed that underſtand it not.

If any yet urge the Apoſtles Example, I will grant that it obligeth us when the Caſe is the like: (And I will not fly to any Conceit of their Heart-ſearching, or diſcerning Mens Sincerity.) When you bring us to a People that before were the viſible Church of God, and were all their Life-time trained up in the Knowledge of God, of Sin, of Duty, of the promiſed Meſſiah, according to all the Law and Prophets, and want nothing, but to know the Son and the Holy Ghoſt, that this Jeſus is the Chriſt, who will reconcile us to God, and give us the ſanctifying Spirit, then we will alſo baptize Men the ſame Day that they profeſs to believe in Jeſus Chriſt, and in the Father as reconciled by him, and the Holy Ghoſt as given by him. But if we have thoſe to deal with who know not God, or Sin, or Miſery, or Scripture Prophecies, no nor natural Verities, we know no Proof that the Apoſtles ſo haſtily baptized ſuch.

Of this I have largely ſpoken in my Treatiſe of Confirmation.

4. It is not Neceſſary to a Mans Baptiſm and firſt Church-membership, that he give any Teſtimony of an antecedent godly Life: Becauſe it is Repentance and future Obedience profeſſed that is his Title; and we muſt not keep Men from Covenanting, till we firſt ſee whether they will keep the Covenant which they are to make. For Covenanting goeth before Covenant-keeping: And it is any the moſt impious Sinner who repenteth, that is to be Waſhed and Juſtified as ſoon as he becometh a Believer.

1 Cor. 6. 9, 10. Tit. 3. 3, 4, 5. Eph. 2. 1, 2, 3. Acts 2. 37, 38.

5. Yet if any that profeſſeth Faith and Repentance, ſhould commit Whoredom, Drunkenneſs, Murder, Blaſphemy, or any mortal Sin, before he is baptized, we have reaſon to make a ſtop of that Mans Baptiſm, becauſe he contradicteth his own Profeſſion, and giveth us cauſe to take it for hypocritical, till he give us better Evidence that he is penitent indeed.

6. Heart-Covenanting maketh an inviſible Church-member, and Verbal Covenanting and Baptiſm make a Viſible Church-member. And he that maketh a Profeſſion of Chriſtianity, ſo far as to declare that he believeth all the Articles of the Creed particularly and underſtandingly (with ſome tolerable Underſtanding though not diſtinct enough and full) and that he openly devoteth himſelf to God the Father, Son, and Spirit, in the Vow and Covenant of Baptiſm, doth produce a ſufficient Title to the Relation of a Chriſtian and Church-member; and no Miniſter may reject him, for want of telling, when, and by what arguments, means, order, or degrees he was converted.

7. They that forſake theſe Terms of Church entrance, left us by Chriſt and his Apoſtles, and uſed by all the Churches in the World, and reject thoſe that ſhew the Title of ſuch a Profeſſion, for want of ſomething more, and ſet up other ſtricter Terms of their own, as neceſſary to diſcover Mens Converſion and Sincerity, are guilty of Church Tyranny againſt Men, and Uſurpation againſt Chriſt: And of making Engines to divide the Churches; ſeeing there will never be Agreement on any humane deviſed Terms, but ſome will be of one ſize, and ſome of another, when they forſake the Terms of Chriſt.

8. Yet if the Paſtor ſhall ſee cauſe upon Suſpicion of Hypocriſie, ad melius eſſe, to put divers queſtions to one Man more than to another, and to deſire further Satisfaction, the Catechumens ought in Conſcience to anſwer him, and endeavour his Satisfaction. For a Miniſter is not tied up to ſpeak only ſuch or ſuch words to the Penitent: And he that ſhould ſay, I will anſwer you no further than to repeat the Creed, doth give a Man reaſon to ſuppoſe him either Ignorant, or Proud, and to ſuſpend the Reception of him, though not to deny it. But ſtill ad eſſe no Terms muſt be impoſed as neceſſary on the Church, but what the Holy Ghoſt by the Apoſtles hath eſtabliſhed.

Queſt. 16. What is neceſſary to a Mans Reception into Membership in a particular Church, over and above this foreſaid Title? Whether any other Tryals, or Covenant, or what?

1. A Particular Church is a regular Part of the Univerſal, as a City of a Kingdom, or a Troop of an Army.

2. Every Man that is a member of the particular Church, is a member of the Univerſal; but every one that is a member of the Univerſal Church, is not a member of a particular.

3. Every particular Church hath its own particular Paſtor (one or more), and its own particular Place or Bounds of Habitation or Reſidence: Therefore he that will be a Member of a particular Church, 1. Muſt co-habit, or live in a proximity capable of Communion. 2. And muſt Conſent to be a Member of that particular Church, and to be under the Guidance of its particular Paſtor, in their Office work. For he cannot be made a Member without his own Conſent and Will; nor can he be a Member, that ſubjecteth not himſelf to the Governour or Guide.

4. He therefore that will intrude into their Communion and Priviledges without expreſſing his conſent before-hand to be a Member, and to ſubmit to the Paſtoral over-ſight, is to be taken for an Invader.

5. But no other perſonal Qualification is to be exacted of him as neceſſary, but that he be a Member of the Church Univerſal. As he is not to be baptized again, ſo neither to give again all that account of his Faith and Repentance particularly which he gave at Baptiſm: Much leſs any higher proofs of his ſincerity: But if he continue in the Covenant and Church-ſtate which he was Baptized into, he is capable thereby of Reception into any particular Church upon particular Conſent. Nor is there any Scripture-proof of any new Examinations about their Converſion or Sincerity, at their removals or entrance into a particular Church.

6. But yet becauſe he is not now lookt on only as a Covenant-maker, as he was at Baptiſm, but alſo as a Covenant-keeper or Performer, therefore if any can prove that he is falſe to his Baptiſmal Covenant, by Apoſtaſie, Hereſie, or a wicked Life, he is to be refuſed till he be Abſolved upon his renewed Repentance.

7. He that oft profeſſeth to Repent, and by oft revolting into mortal Sin, (that is, Sin which ſheweth a ſtate of Death) doth ſhew that he was not ſincere, muſt afterward ſhew his Repentance by actual amendment, before he can ſay, it is his due to be believed.

8. Whether you will call this Conſent to particular Church Relation and Duty by the Name of a Covenant or not, is but lis de nomine: It is no more than mutual Conſent that is neceſſary to be expreſſed: And mutual Conſent expreſſed may be called a Covenant.

9. Ad melius eſſe, the more expreſs the Conſent or Covenant is, the better: For in ſo great Matters Men ſhould know what they do, and deal aboveboard: Eſpecially when Experience telleth us, that Ignorance and Imagery is ready to eat out the Heart of Religion in almoſt all the Churches in the World. But yet ad eſſe Churches muſt ſee that they feign or make no more Covenants neceſſary than God hath made; becauſe humane unneceſſary Inventions have ſo long diſtracted and laid waſte the Churches of Chriſt.

10. The

Mat. 28. 19, 20. Heb. 13. 7, 17. 1 Theſſ. 5. 12, 13. 1 Tim. 5. 17.

10. The Paſtors Conſent muſt concur with the Perſons to be received: For it muſt be mutual Conſent: And as none can be a Member, ſo none may be a Paſtor againſt his will. And though he be under Chriſt's Laws what Perſons to receive, and is not arbitrary to do what he liſt, yet he is the Guide of the Church, and the diſcerner of his own duty. And a Paſtor may have reaſons to refuſe to take a Man into his particular Charge, without rejecting him as unworthy. Perhaps he may already have more in number than he can well take care of. And other ſuch Reaſons may fall out.

11. In thoſe Countries where the Magiſtrates Laws and common conſent, do take every qualified Perſon for a Member of that Church where his habitation is, (called a Pariſh,) and to which he ordinarily reſorteth, the Paſtor that undertaketh that charge, doth thereby ſeem to conſent to be Paſtor to all ſuch Perſons in that Pariſh. And their Co-habitation and ordinary Conjunction with the Church, may go for a ſignification of conſent, and inſtead of more particular Contract or Covenant, by virtue of the expoſition of the ſaid Laws and Cuſtoms. Yet ſo, that a Man is not therefore to be taken for a member of the Church, meerly becauſe he liveth in the Pariſh; for ſo Atheiſts, Infidels, Hereticks and Papiſts may do: But becauſe he is, 1. A Pariſhioner, 2. Qualified, 3. Joyning with the Church, and actually ſubmitting to the Miniſtry.

12. Where there is this much only, it is a ſinful ſlander to ſay that ſuch a Pariſh is no true Church of Chriſt; however there may be many deſirable orders wanting to its better being. Who hath the power of trying and receiving we ſhall ſhew anon.

Joh. 20. 21 & 13. 20. Leke 10. 3 Rom. 10. 15. Act. 20. 28

THE Office of the Sacred Miniſtry is a mixt Relation, (not a ſimple) I. As the Miniſter is related to Chriſt, he is his Servant or Miniſter by Office, that is, one Commiſſioned by him for that ſacred work, where there is, 1. The Commiſſion it ſelf, (which is not particular, but general, in a general Law, applicable to each ſingular Perſon when qualified.) 2. The determination of the individual Perſon who is to receive it: Which conſiſteth in the Call, which I have opened before, and therefore repeat not. Only note again, that by virtue of the General Commiſſion or Inſtitution of the Office in ſpecie, the power is conveyed from Chriſt to the Individual Perſon, and that the Church (Electors or Ordainers) are not the Donors, Authorizers or Obligers, but only inſtruments of deſigning an apt recipient, and delivering him poſſeſſion. 2. That by virtue of this Inſtitution, Charter, or Law-Commiſſion, it is that the acts of a Man ſeemingly or viſibly called, are valid to the Church, though really he were not ordained, or truly called, but deceived them by hypocritical intruſion.

Phil. 1. 15, 16, 17. Mat. 7. 22. Rom. 15. 14. Eph. 4. 7, 8 2 Tim. 2. 2

2 Tim. 1. 5, 7. Eph. 6. 19. Col. 4. 3. 2 Cor. 1. 4, 5. Tit. 1. 2. 2 Cor. 8. 6. 1 Cor. 4. 1, 2. Tit. 1. 7.

2. The Cauſation or Efficiency of Chriſt in the making any one a Miniſter, is, 1. Diſpoſitive, making him a qualified fit recipient; 2. Then Applying the General Commiſſion to him, or giving him the Function it ſelf.

1. The Diſpoſitive acts of Chriſt are, 1. Giving him competent knowledge for a Miniſter: 2. Giving him competent Goodneſs, that is, Love to God, Truth and Souls, and willingneſs for the work. 3. Giving him competent Power and Abilities for Execution, which is principally in Utterance; and ſo qualifying his Intellect, Will and Executive Power.

2. The immediate Conveyance or act of Collation, is, 1. An Obligation laid on the Perſon to do the work. 2. Authority given him to warrant him, and to oblige others: That is, a Jus docendi, gubernandi,

3. The form of the Relation is denominated,

1. From the reception of theſe Efficiencies in general, 2. From the ſubordination which hereby they are placed in to Chriſt, as their Relation is denominated à Termino.

1. Formally the Office conſiſteth in, 1. An Obligation to do the work of the Office. 2. Authority to do it, and to oblige others to ſubmit to it.

2. Theſe make up an Office, which being denominated alſo from the Terminus, is conſidered, 1. As to the neareſt term, which is the work to be done. 2. The remote, which is the object of that work.

The work is, 1. Teaching: 2. Ruling: 3. Worſhipping. And ſo it is eſſentially [An Obligation and Power, of Miniſterial Teaching, Ruling and Worſhipping God.] 2 Tim. 2. 2 & 3. 2. & 4. 11. & 6. 2, 3. 1 Theſ. 5. 11, 13. Heb. 13. 7, 17. Acts 6. 4. 2. As to the object it is, 1. The World to be converted. 2. The Converted to be Baptized and Congregated or ordered into particular Societies, (ſo far as may be.) 3. The Baptized and Congregate, to be 1. Taught, 2. Ruled, 3. Guided in Worſhip.

From all which reſulteth an Office, which is Miniſterially ſubordinate to Chriſt, 1. The Prophet or Teacher, 2. The Ruler, 3. The High Prieſt and Lover of his Church; and it may be aptly called both, a Teaching Miniſtry, a Ruling Miniſtry (not by the Sword but by the Word) and a Prieſthood or Prieſtly Miniſtry,

II. As the Paſtor is related to the Church, he is, 1. A conſtitutive part of particular political Churches: 2. He is Chriſt's Miniſter for the Church, and for Chriſt; that is, to teach, rule and worſhip with the Church. He is above the Church, and greater than it, as to Order and Power, and not the Miniſter of the Church as the Efficient of the Miniſtry: But he is leſs and worſe than the Church finally and materially; and is finally the Churches Miniſter, as the Phyſician is the Patients Phyſician; not made a Phyſician by him, but choſen and uſed as his Phyſician for his cure: So that to ſpeak properly, he is not from them, but for them. He is Chriſt's Miniſter for their good; as the Shepherd is his Maſter's Servant, for his Flock, and ſo finally only the ſervant of the Sheep.

Rom. 1. 1. Col. 4. 12. 2 Pet. 11. 1 1 Cor. 4. 1, 2. & 3. 5. 2 Cor. 3. 6. & 6. 4. & 11. 23. Mat. 24. 45, 46, 48. 1 Cor. 9. 19.

The whole uncontrovertible work of the Office is laid down in my ſmall Book called Univerſal Concord, to which I muſt refer you.

Queſt. 18. Whether the Peoples Choice or Conſent is neceſſary to the Office of a Miniſter in his firſt work, as he is to convert Infidels, and baptize them? And whether this be a Work of Office? And what Call is neceſſary to it?

I Conjoin theſe three diſtinct Queſtions for expedition.

I. That it is part of the Miniſter's Office-work to Teach, Convert and Baptize Men, to bring them out of the World into the Church, is undeniable, 1. In Chriſt's expreſs Commiſſion, Mat. 28. 19, 20. Go diſciple me all Nations, baptizing them—— 2. In the execution of this Commiſſion.

2. That this was not peculiar to the Apoſtles or their age is proved, 1. Becauſe not an extraordinary work, like Miracles, &c. but the firſt great buſineſs of the Goſpel and Miniſtry in the World. 2. Becauſe others as well as the Apoſtles did it in that age, and ever ſince. 3. Becauſe the promiſe is annexed to the Office thus deſcribed [I am with you alway to the end of the World:) Or if you tranſlate it [Age] it is the Age of the Church of the Meſſiah incarnate, which is all one. 4. Becauſe it was a ſmall part of the World comparatively that heard the Goſpel in the Apoſtles Days: And the far greateſt part of the World is without it at this Day, when yet God our Saviour would have all Men to be ſaved and to come to the knowledge of truth. 5. Even where the Goſpel hath long continued, for the moſt part there are many ſtill that are in infidelity. And ſo great great a work is not left without an appointed suitable means for its performance: And if an Office was necessary for it in the first age, it is not credible that it is left to private Mens charity ever since. 6. Especially considering that private Men are to be supposed insufficient, 1. Because they are not educated purposely for it, but usually for something else: 2. Because that they have other Callings to take them up. 3. Because they have no special obligation. And that which is no Mans peculiar work, is usually left undone by all.

Rom. 10, 15, 16.

II. The Peoples Call or Consent is not necessary to a Ministers reception of his Office in general, nor for this part of his work in special: But only to his Pastoral Relation to themselves.

1. It is so in other Functions that are exercised by skill. The Patients or People make not a Man a Physician, or a Lawyer, but only choose what Physician shall be their Physician, and what Lawyer shall be their Counsellor.

2. If the Peoples Call or Consent be necessary, it is either the Infidels or the Churches. Not the Infidels to whom he is to preach: For 1. He is authorized to preach to them (as the Apostles were) before he goeth to them. 2. Their Consent is but a Natural-consequent requisite for the Reception and success of their teaching, but not to the Authority which is pre-requisite. 3. Infidels cannot do so much towards the making of a Minister of Christ. 4. Else Christ would have few such Ministers. 5. If it be Infidels, either all or some? If some, why those rather than others? Or is a Man made a Minister by every Infidel auditory that heareth him?

2. Nor is it Christian People that must do this much to the making of a General Minister; For, 1. They have no such Power given for it, in Nature or the Word of God. 2. They are generally unqualified and unable for such a work: 3. They are no where obliged to it, nor can fitly leave their Callings for it; much less to get the abilities necessary to judge: 4. Which of the People have this power? Is it any of them, or any Church of private Men? Or some one more than the rest? Neither one nor all can lay any claim to it. There is some reason why this Congregation rather than another should choose their own Pastors: But there is no reason (nor Scripture) that this Congregation choose a Minister to convert the World.

III. I conclude therefore that the Call of a Minister in General doth consist, 1. Dispositively in the due qualifications and enablement of the Person: 2. And the Necessity of the People, with opportunity, is a providential part of the Call. 3. And the Ordainers are the orderly Electors and Determiners of the Person that shall receive the power from Christ.

1. For this is part of the power of the Keys or Church-Government; 2. And Paul giveth this direction for exercising of this Power to Timothy, which sheweth the ordinary way of Calling, 2 Tim. 2. 2. And the things which thou hast heard of me among many witnesses, the same commit thou to faithful Men, who shall be able to teach others also. Act. 13. 1, 2, 3. There were in the Church at Antioch certain Prophets— As they ministred to the Lord, the Holy Ghost said, Separate me Barnabas and Saul for the work whereunto I have called them; And when they had fasted and prayed, and layed their hands on them, they sent them away. And they being sent forth by the Holy Ghost, departed. In this (whether it be called an Ordination, or rather a Mission) there is somewhat ordinary (that it be by Men in office) and somewhat extraordinary (that it be by a special Inspiration of the Holy Ghost.)

2 Tim. 2. 6, 7. Tit. 1. 5, 6.

And Timothy received his Gifts and Office by the Imposition of the hands of Paul and of the Presbytery. 1 Tim. 4. 14. 2 Tim. 1. 6. 1 Tim. 5. 22. Lay hands suddenly on no man.

These instances make the case the clearer, 1. Because it is certain that all that Governing Power which is given by Christ to the Church under the name of the Keys, is given to the Pastors: 2. Because there are no other competitors to lay a reasonable claim to it.

Quest. 19. Wherein consisteth the Power and Nature of Ordination? And to whom doth it belong? And is it an Act of Jurisdiction? And is Imposition of hands necessary in it?

I. THis is resolved on the by before. 1. Ordination performeth two things; 1. The designation, election or determination of the Person who shall receive the Office: 2. The Ministerial Investiture of him in that office: Which is a Ceremonial Delivery of Possession; as a Servant doth deliver possession of a House by delivering him the Key, who hath before received the Power or Right from the Owner.

2. The office delivered by this Election and Investiture, is the sacred Ministerial Office in general to be after exercised according to particular Calls and Opportunities; as Christ called the Apostles, and the Spirit called the ordinary general Teachers of those times; such as Barnabas, Silas, Silvanus, Timothy, Epaphroditus, Apollo, &c. And as is before cited, 2 Tim. 2. 2. As a Man is made in general a licensed Physician, Lawyer, &c.

3. This Ordination is Ordinis gratiâ, necessary to order: And therefore so far necessary as Order is necessary: Which is Ordinarily, when the greater interest of the substantial duty, or of the Thing Ordered is not against it. As Christ determined the case of Sabbath keeping, and not eating the Shew-bread. As the Sabbath was made for man, and not man for the Sabbath, and the end is to be preferred before the separable means: So Ordination was instituted for Order, and Order for the thing ordered and for the work of the Gospel, and the good of Souls, and not the Gospel and Mens Souls for that Order: Therefore when, 1. The Death, 2. Distance, 3. Or malignity of the Ordainers depriveth a Man of Ordination, these three substitutes may notifie to him the Will of God, that he is by him a Person called to that office: 1. Fitness for the works, in Understanding, Willingness and Ability; 2. The Necessity of Souls, 3. Opportunity,

II. The power of ordaining belongeth not, 1. To Magistrates, 2. Or to private Men, either single or as the Body of a Church; but 3. To the Senior Pastors of the Church (whether Bishops or Presbyters of a distinct order, the Reader must not expect that I here determine:)

For, 1. The Power is by Christ given to them, as is before proved; and in Tit. 1. 5.

2. None else are ordinarily able to discern aright the Abilities of a Man for the sacred Ministry. The People may discern a profitable moving Preacher, but whether he understand the Scripture, or the substance of Religion, or be sound in the Faith and not Heretical, and delude them with not a form of well uttered words, they are not ordinarily able to judge.

3. None else are fit to attend this work, but Pastors who are separated to the sacred office. It requireth more time to get fitness for it, and then to perform it faithfully, than either Magistrates or People can ordinarily bestow.

Act. 13. 2. Rom. 1. 1. 1 Tim. 4. 15.

4. The power is no where given by Christ to Magistrates or People.

5. It hath been exercised by Pastors or Church-officers only both in, and ever since the Apostles Days, in all the Churches of the World. And we have no reason to think that the Church hath been gathered from the beginning till now, by so great an error, as a wrong conveyance of the Ministerial Power.

III. The

III. The word Juriſdiction as applyed to the Church-Officers, is no Scripture Word, and in the common ſenſe ſoundeth too big, as ſignifying more power than the Servants of all muſt claim; for there is One Law-giver who is able to ſave and to deſtroy. But in a moderate ſenſe it may be tolerated, as Juriſdiction ſignifieth in particular, 1. Legiſlation, 2. Or Judicial Proceſs or Sentence, 3. Or the Execution of ſuch a Sentence, ſtrictly taken, ſo Ordination is no part of Juriſdiction. But as Juriſdiction ſignifieth the ſame with the Power of Government, Jus Regendi in general; ſo Ordination is an Act of Juriſdiction: As the placing or chooſing of inferior Officers may belong to the Steward of a Family, or as the calling or authorizing of Phyſicians belongeth to the Colledge of Phyſicians, and the authorizing of Lawyers to the Judges Society, or the authorizing of Doctors in Philoſophy, to the Society of Philoſophers or to particular Rulers. Where note that in the three laſt inſtances, the Learning or Fitneſs of the ſaid Perſons or Societies, is but their Diſpoſitio vel aptitudo ad poteſtatem exercendam; but the actual Power of conveying authority to others, or deſigning the recipient Perſon, is received from the ſupream Power of the Land, and ſo is properly an Act of Authority, here called Juriſdiction.

Iſa. 33. 22. Jam. 4. 12.

So that the common diſtinguiſhing of Ordination from Juriſdiction or Government, as if they were totâ ſpecie different, is unſound.

IV. Impoſition of hands was a ſign (like the Kiſs of Peace, and the anointing of Perſons, and like our kneeling in Prayer, &c.) which having firſt ſomewhat in their nature, to invite Men to the uſe, was become a common ſignificant ſign, of a ſuperiours benediction of an inferior, in thoſe times and Countries. And ſo was here applied ordinarily for its antecedent ſignificancy and aptitude to this uſe; and was not purpoſely inſtituted, nor had its ſignificancy newly given it by inſtitution; and ſo was not like a Sacrament neceſſarily and perpetually affixed to Ordination.

Therefore we muſt conclude, 1. That Impoſition of hands in Ordination is a decent, apt, ſignificant ſign, not to be ſcrupled by any, nor to be omitted without neceſſity, as being of Scripture, ancient, and common uſe.

2. But yet that it is not eſſential to Ordination; which may be valid by any fit deſignation and ſeparation of the Perſon. And therefore if it be omitted, it nullifieth not the action. And if the Ordainers did it by Letters to a Man a Thouſand Miles off, it would be valid: And ſome Perſons of old were ordained when they were abſent.

V. I add as to the need of Ordination, 1. That without this Key, the Office and Church doors would be caſt open, and every Heretick or Self-conceited Perſon intrude.

Acts 13. 2. Heb. 5. 4, 10.

2. It is a ſign of a proud unworthy Perſon, that will judge himſelf fit for ſo great a work, and intrude upon ſuch a conceit, when he may have the Judgment of the Paſtors, and avoideth it.

3. Thoſe that ſo do, ſhould no more be taken for Miniſters by the People, than any ſhould go for Chriſtians that are not baptized, or for married Perſons whoſe Marriage is not ſolemnized.

Queſt. 20. Is Ordination neceſſary to make a Man a Paſtor of a particular Church as ſuch? And is he to be made a General Miniſter and a particular Church-Elder or Paſtor at once, and by one Ordination?

I Have proved that a Man may be made a Miniſter in general, yea and ſent to exerciſe it in Converting Infidels, and baptizing them, before ever he is the Paſtor of any particular Church. To which I add, that in this General Miniſtry, he is a Paſtor in the Univerſal Church, as a Licenſed Phyſician that hath no Hoſpital or Charge, is a Phyſician in the Kingdom.

And, 1. As Baptiſm is as ſuch our Entrance into the univerſal Church, and not into a particular; ſo is Ordination to a Miniſter an entrance only on the Miniſtry as ſuch.

2. Yet a Man may at once be made a Miniſter in general, and the Paſtor of this or that Church in particular: And in Kingdoms wholly inchurched and Chriſtian, it is uſually fitteſt ſo to do; Leſt many being ordained ſine titulo, idleneſs and poverty of ſupernumeraries, ſhould corrupt and diſhonour the Miniſtry: Which was the cauſe of the old Canons in this caſe.

3. But when a Man is thus called to both at once, it is not all done by Ordination as ſuch; but his complicate Relation, proceedeth from a complication of cauſes. As he is a Miniſter, it is by Ordination. And as he is The Paſtor of this People, it is by the conjunct cauſes of appropriation; which are, 1. Neceſſarily the Peoples Conſent; 2. Regularly, the Paſtors approbation and recommendation, and reception of the Perſon into their Communion. 3. And ſometimes the Magiſtrate may do much to oblige the People to conſent.

4. But when a Man is made a Miniſter in general before, he needeth no proper Ordination to fix him in particular charge; but only an Approbation, Recommendation, particular Inveſtiture, and Reception. For elſe a Man muſt be oft ordained, even as oft as he removeth. But yet Impoſition of hands may fitly be uſed in this particular Inveſtiture, though it be no proper Ordination, that is, no collation of the Office of a Miniſter in general, but the fixing of one that was a Miniſter before.

Queſt. 21. May a Man be oft or twice Ordained?

IT is ſuppoſed, that we play not with an ambiguous word, that we remember what Ordination is. And then you will ſee cauſe to diſtinguiſh, 1. Between entire true Ordination, and the external act or words or ceremony only. 2. Between one that was truly ordained before, and one that was not. And ſo I anſwer.

1. He that ſeemed Ordained, and indeed was not, is not Re-ordained when he is after Ordained.

2. It is needful therefore to know the Eſſentials of Ordination, from the Integrals and Accidentals.

3. He that was truly Ordained before may in ſome caſes receives again the Repetition of the bare words and outward Ceremonies of Ordination (as Impoſition of hands.) Where I will, 1. Tell you in what Caſes. 2. Why.

1. In caſe there wanted ſufficient witneſſes of his Ordination; and ſo the Church hath not ſufficient means of notice or ſatisfaction, that ever he was ordained indeed: Or if the witneſſes die before the notification. Whether the Church ſhould take his word or not, in ſuch a caſe, is none of my queſtion, but whether he ſhould ſubmit to the repetition if they will not.

2. Eſpecially in a time and place (which I have known) when written and ſealed Orders are often counterfeited, and ſo the Church called to extraornary care.

3. Or if the Church or Magiſtrate be guilty of ſome cauſeleſs culpable incredulity, and will not believe it was done till they ſee it done again.

4. Or in caſe that ſome real or ſuppoſed Integral (though not eſſential) part was omitted, or is by the Church or Magiſtrate ſuppoſed to be omitted; and they will not permit or receive the Miniſter to exerciſe his office, unleſs he repeat the whole Action again, and make up that defect.

5. Or if the Perſon himſelf do think that his Ordination was inſufficient, and cannot exerciſe his Miniſtry niſtry to the ſatisfaction of his own Conſcience, till the defect be repaired.

1. In theſe caſes (and perhaps ſuch others) the outward Action may be repeated.

2. The Reaſons are, 1. Becauſe this is not a being twice ordained. For the word Ordination, ſignifieth a Moral Action, and not a Phyſical only: As the word Marriage doth, &c. And it eſſentially includeth the new Dedication and Deſignation to the ſacred Office, by a kind of Covenant between the Dedicated Perſon and Chriſt to whom he is conſecrated and devoted. And the external words are but a part, and a part only as ſignificant of the action of the Mind. Now the oft expreſſing of the ſame mental Dedication doth not make it to be as many diſtinct dedications. For, 1. If the Liturgy or the Perſons words were tautological, or at the Ordination ſhould ſay the ſame thing often over and over, or for Confirmation ſhould ſay often, that which elſe might be ſaid but once, this doth not make it an often or multiplied Ordination: It was but one Love which Peter expreſſed, when Chriſt made him ſay thrice, that he loved him; nor was it a threefold Ordination which Chriſt uſed, when he ſaid thrice to him, Feed my Lambs and Sheep.

2. And if thrice ſaying it that hour make it not three Ordinations, neither will thrice ſaying it, at more Hours, Days or Months (or Years) diſtance, in ſome caſes. For the time maketh not the Ordinations to be many. It is but one Moral Action. But the common error ariſeth from the cuſtom of calling the outward action alone by the name of the whole moral Action (which is ordinarily done to the like deceit in the caſe of the Baptiſmal Covenant, and the Lord's Supper.)

3. The common judgment and cuſtom of the World confirmeth what I ſay. If Perſons that are marryed, ſhould for want of witneſs or due ſolemnity be forced to ſay and do the outward action all over again; it is by no wiſe Man taken in the proper moral full ſenſe, for a ſecond Marriage: But for one Marriage twice uttered.

And if you ſhould in witneſs bearing be put to your Oath, and the Magiſtrate that was abſent ſhould ſay, [Reach him the Book again, I did not hear him ſwear,) The doing it twice is not Morally two witneſſings nor Oaths, but one only twice Phyſically uttered,

If you bind your Son Apprentice, or if you make any Indentures or Contract, and the Writings being loſt or faulty, you write and ſign, and ſeal them all again, this is not morally another Contract, but the ſame done better, or again recorded. And ſo it is plainly in this caſe.

4. But Re-ordination morally and properly ſo called, is unlawful: For, 1. It is (or implyeth) a lye, viz. that we are not truly dedicated and ſeparated to this office before.

2. It is a ſacrilegious renunciation of our former dedication to God: Whereas the Miniſterial dedication and Covenant is for Life, and not for a Tryal; which is the meaning of the Indelible Character, which is a perpetual Relation and Obligation.

3. It is a taking the Name of God in vain; thus to do and undo and do again: And to promiſe and renounce and promiſe again, and to pretend to receive a power which we had before.

4. It tendeth to great confuſions in the Church; as to make the People doubt of their Baptiſm, or all the Miniſterial Adminiſtrations of ſuch as are re-ordained, while they acted by the firſt Ordination.

5. It hath ever been condemned in the Churches of Chriſt, as the Canons called the Apoſtles, and the Churches conſtant practiſe, teſtifie.

5. Though the bare repetition of the outward Action and Words be not Re-ordination, yet he that on any of the forementioned occaſions is put to repeat the ſaid words and actions, is obliged ſo to do it, as that it may not ſeem to be a Re-ordination, and ſo be a ſcandal to the Church. Or if it outwardly ſeem ſo by the action, he is bound to declare that it is no ſuch thing, for the counterpoiſing that appearance of evil.

6. When the Ordainers or the common eſtimation of the Church, do take the Repetition of the Words and Action for a Re-ordination, though the Receiver ſo intend it not, yet it may become unlawful to him by this accident, becauſe he ſcandalizeth and hardneth the erroneous, by doing or receiving that which is interpretative Re-ordination.

7. Eſpecially when the Ordainers ſhall require this Repetition on notoriouſly wicked grounds, and ſo put that ſenſe on the action by their own doctrines and demands: As for inſtance.

1. If Hereticks ſhould (as the Arrians,) ſay that we are no Miniſters, becauſe we are not of their Hereſie, or ordained by ſuch as they.

2. If the Pope or any proud Papal Uſurpers ſhall ſay, You are no Miniſters of Chriſt, except we ordain you; and ſo do it to eſtabliſh a trayterous uſurped Regiment in the Church; it is not lawful to ſerve ſuch an Uſurpation. As if Cardinals or Archbiſhops ſhould ſay, none are true Miniſters but thoſe that we ordain: Or Councils or Synods of Biſhops or Presbyters ſhould ſay, none are true Miniſters but thoſe that we ordain. Or if one Presbyter or one Biſhop without Authority would thus make himſelf Maſter of the reſt, or of other Churches, and ſay, you are no Miniſters unleſs I ordain you; we may not promote ſuch Tyranny and Uſurpation.

3. If Magiſtrates would uſurp the power of the Keys, in Eccleſiaſtical Ordination, and ſay that none but they have power to ordain, we may not encourage ſuch pretences by repetition of the Words and Action.

4. If they would make ſome thing neceſſary to Ordination which is not, as if it were a falſe Oath, or falſe ſubſcription or profeſſion, or ſome unlawful Ceremony (as if it were Anointing, wearing Horns, or any the like) and ſay, you are no Miniſters without theſe, and therefore you muſt be Re-ordained to receive them.

5. Yea if they declare our former Miniſtry cauſeleſly to be null, and ſay, you are no Miniſters till you are ordained again, and ſo publickly put this ſenſe upon our Action, that we take it as Re-ordination; all theſe accidents make the repetition of the Words and Actions to be unlawful, unleſs when greater Accidents notoriouſly preponderate.

Queſt. But if ſuch Church Tyrants ſhould have ſo great power, as that without their Repetition of Ordination on thoſe terms, the Miniſtry might not be exerciſed, is it lawful ſo to take it in a caſe of ſuch neceſſity.

Anſw. 1. Every ſeeming neceſſity to you, is not a neceſſity to the Church: 2. Either you may publickly declare a contrary ſenſe in your receiving their new orders or not.

1. If you may not as publickly declare that you renounce not your former Miniſtry and Dedication to God in that office, as the Ordainers declare their ſenſe of the Nullity of it, ſo that your open Declaration may free you from the guilt of ſeeming conſent, I conceive it is a ſinful complyance with their Sin. 2. Yea if you may ſo declare it, yet if there be no neceſſity of your Miniſterial Liberty in that place, I think you may not take it on ſuch terms. As, 1. If there be worthy Men enough to ſupply the Churches wants there without you. 2. And if you may ſerve God ſucceſsfully in a perſecuted ſtate, though to the ſuffering of your Fleſh; 3. Or if your impriſonment for Preaching be like to be as ſerviceable to the Church and Goſpel as your continued Preaching on thoſe ſcandalous terms. 4. Or if you may remove and preach in another Country.

9. When any ſuch caſe doth fall out, in which the Repe-

Repetition of the outward Action and Words is lawful, it is not lawful to mix any falſe and ſcandalous expreſſions: As if we were required to ſay falſly, I accept this Ordination as confeſſing my ſelf no Miniſter of Chriſt till now: Or any ſuch like.

10. In a word, a peaceable Chriſtian may do much as to the meer outward Action and Submiſſion, for Obedience, Peace, Order, or Satisfaction to his own or other Mens Conſciences. But, 1. He may do nothing for good ends which is falſe and injurious to the Church. 2. And he may not do that which otherwiſe were lawful, when it is for evil ends, or tendeth to more hurt than good; as to promote Hereſie, or Church-Tyranny and Uſurpation; whether in Pope, Prelates, Presbyters or People.

Queſt. 22. How many Ordainers are neceſſary to the validity of Ordination by God's inſtitution? Whether one or more?

MY Queſtion is not of the ancient Canons, or any humane Laws, or Cuſtoms: For thoſe are eaſily known: But of Divine Right. Now either God hath determined the caſe as to the number of Ordainers neceſſary, or not: If not, either he hath given the Church ſome General Rule to determine it by, or not. If not, then the number is not any part of the Divine Order or Law, and then, if we ſuppoſe that he hath determined the caſe as to the Ordaining Office and not to the Number, then it will follow that one may ſerve. The truth I think may be thus explained.

1. There is Ordo officialis primarius, and ordo ordinis, vel exercitii, vel ſecundarius; an Order of Office primary, and an Order of Exerciſe ſecundary in the Church. As to the firſt, the Order of Office, God hath determined, that the Ordaining Officers, and no others, ſhall ordain Officers, or give Orders. And having not determined whether one or more, it followeth that the Ordination of one ſole lawful Ordainer is no nullity on that account becauſe it is but one, unleſs ſomewhat elſe nullifie it.

2. God hath given General Rules to the Ordainers for the due exerciſe of their office, though he have not determined of any ſet number. Such as are theſe: That all things be done in Judgment, Truth, Love, Concord, to the Churches Edification, Unity and Peace, &c.

3. According to theſe General Laws, ſometimes the ordination of one ſole Ordainer, may not only be valid but regular: As when there are no other to concur, or none whoſe concurrence is needful to any of the aforeſaid ends. And ſometimes the concurrence of Many is needful, 1. To the Receivers ſatisfaction: 2. To the Churches or Peoples ſatisfaction. 3. To the Concord of Paſtors, and of Neighbour Churches, &c. And in ſuch caſes ſuch Conſent or Concourſe is the Regular way.

4. Where there are many Neighbour Paſtors and Churches ſo near, as that he that is ordained in one of them, is like oft to paſs and preach and officiate obiter in others, and ſo other Churches muſt have ſome Communion with him, it is meeteſt that there be a concurrence in the Ordination.

5. The Ordainer is certainly a Superiour to the Perſon that cometh to be ordained while he is a private Man; and therefore ſo far his Ordination is (as is ſaid) an Act of Juriſdiction in the large ſenſe, that is, of Government: But whether he be neceſſarily his Superiour after he is ordained, hath too long been a Controverſie. It is certain that the Papiſts confeſs, that the Pope is ordained ſuch by no Superior: And it is not neceſſary that a Biſhop be ordained by one or more of any ſuperior Order (or Juriſdiction either.) And though the Italian Papiſts hold that a ſuperior Papal Juriſdiction muſt needs be the ſecondary Fountain of the ordaining Power, though the Ordainer himſelf be but of the ſame Order; yet Proteſtants hold no ſuch thing. And all acknowledge that as Impoſition of hands on a Layman to make him a Miniſter of Chriſt or an Officer, is a kind of official Generation; * ſo the Ordained as a Junior in Office, is as it were a Son to the Ordainer, as the Convert is ſaid to be peculiarly to his Converter: And that a proportionable honour is ſtill to be given him. But whether he that ordaineth a Presbyter, and not he that ordaineth or conſecrateth a Biſhop, muſt needs be of a ſuperior Order or Office is a queſtion which the Reader muſt not expect me here to meddle with.

* Ejuſdem ſpeciei vel inferioris: How then is the Pope Ordained or made?

Queſt. 23. What if one Biſhop ordain a Miniſter, and three or many or all the reſt proteſt againſt it, and declare him no Miniſter, or degrade him? Is he to be received as a true Miniſter or not?

SUppoſing that the Perſon want no neceſſary perſonal Qualification for the office, there are two things more in queſtion; 1. His Office whether he be a Miniſter. 2. His Regularity, whether he came regularly to it; and alſo his Comparative relation, whether this Man or another is to be preferred. I anſwer therefore,

1. If the Perſon be utterly incapable, the one Biſhop or the many whoſoever taketh him for uncapable, is for the Truth ſake to be believed and obeyed.

2. If the Man be excellently qualified, and his Miniſtry greatly neceſſary to the Church, whoever would deprive the Church of him be it the One or the Many, is to be diſobeyed, and the Ordainers preferred.

Obj. But who ſhall judge? Anſw. The Eſſe is before the Scire: The thing is firſt True or Falſe before I judge it to be ſo: An therefore whoever judgeth falſly in a caſe ſo notorious and weighty, as that the welfare of the Church and Souls is (conſideratis conſiderandis) injured and hazarded by his error, is not to be believed nor obeyed on pretence of order. Becauſe all Chriſtians have judicium diſcretionis, a diſcerning judgment.

3. But if the caſe be not thus to be determined by the Perſons notorious qualifications, then either it is, 1. The Man ordained, 2. Or the People that the caſe is debated by, whether they ſhould take him for a Miniſter; 3. Or the Neighbour Miniſters.

1. The Perſon himſelf is ceteris paribus more to regard the judgment of many concordant Biſhops, than of one ſingular Biſhop; and therefore is not to take orders from a ſingular Biſhop, when the generality of the wiſe and faithful are againſt it; unleſs he be ſure that it is ſome notorious faction or error that perverteth them, and that there be notorious neceſſity of his labour.

2. The Auditors are either Infidels to be converted, (and theſe will take no Man upon any of their Authorities,) or elſe Chriſtians converted. Theſe are either of the particular charge of the ſingular Biſhop who ordaineth, or not: If they be, then pro tempore for orders ſake, they owe him a peculiar obedience, till ſome further proceſs or diſcovery diſoblige them, (though the moſt be on the other ſide.) But yet they may be ſtill bound in Reaſon moſt to ſuſpect the Judgment of their ſingular Biſhop, while for orders ſake they ſubmit to it. But if they are not of his flock, then, I ſuppoſe the Judgment and Act of many is to prevail ſo much againſt the Act of a ſingle and ſingular Perſon, as that both Neighbour Miniſters and People are to diſown ſuch an ordained Perſon as unfit for their Communion under the notion of a Miniſter, (Becauſe Communion of Churches is maintained by the Concord of Paſtors.) But whether the ordained Man's Miniſtry, be by their contradictor declarationy or degradation, made an abſo-

Eph. 4. 3. 1 Cor. 12. Rom. 14. 17, 19. 1 Cor. 14. 33. 1 Theſ. 5. 12, 13, Phil. 2. 1. 2, 3. Epheſ. 4. 15, 16. 1 Cor. 1. 10.

lute nuillity, to himſelf and thoſe that ſubmit to him, neither I will determine, nor ſhould any other Strangers to the particular caſe: For if he be rejected or degraded without ſuch cauſe and proof as may ſatisfie other ſober Perſons, he hath wrong; but if he be ſo degraded, on proved ſufficient cauſe, to them that it is known to, he giveth the degraders the advantage.

And as 1. All particuler members are to be obedient to their proper Paſtor.

2. And all particular Churches are to hold Correſpondency and Communion according to their capacity: So muſt Men act in this and ſuch like caſes reſpectively according to the Laws of Obedience to their Paſtor, and of Concord of the Churches.

Queſt. 24. Hath one Biſhop Power by Divine Right to ordain, degrade, or govern, or excommunicate, or abſolve in anothers Dioceſe or Church, either by his conſent or againſt it? And doth a Miniſter that officiateth in another's Church, act as a Paſtor, and their Paſtor, or as a private Man? And doth the Miniſterial Office ceaſe when a Man removeth from his flock?

I Thruſt theſe queſtions altogether for their affinity, and for brevity.

1. Every true Miniſter of Chriſt, Biſhop or Paſtor is related to the univerſal Church by ſtronger obligations than to his particular charge; as the whole is better than the parts, and its welfare to be preferred.

2. He that is no Paſtor of a particular Church, may be a Paſtor in the univerſal, obliged as a conſecrated Perſon to endeavour its good, by the works of his office, as he hath a particular opportunity and call.

3. Yet he that hath a particular charge is ſpecially and nearlier related and obliged to that Charge or Church, than to any other part of the univerſal (though not than to the whole:) And conſequently hath a peculiar Authority, where he hath a peculiar Obligation and work.

4. He that is (without degrading) removed from a particular Church doth not ceaſe to be a General Miniſter and Paſtor related to the Univerſal Church; as a Phyſician put out of a Hoſpital charge, is a Phyſician ſtill. And therefore he needeth no new Ordination, but only a ſpecial Deſignation, to his next particular charge.

5. No Man is the Biſhop of a Dioceſs as to the meaſure of ground, or the place, by divine right, that is, by any particular Law or Determination of God: But only a Biſhop of the Church or People: For your office eſſentially containeth a Relation to the People, but accidentally only to the Place.

6. Yet natural Convenience, and God's General Laws of Order and Edification, do make it uſually (but not always) beſt, and therefore a duty, to diſtinguiſh Churches by the Peoples habitation: Not taking a Man for a Member eo nomine, becauſe he liveth on that ground; but for order ſake taking none for Members that live not on that ground; and not intruding cauſeleſly into each others bounds.

7. He that by the Call or Conſent of a Neighbour Paſtor or People doth officiate (by Preaching, Sacraments, Excommunication or Abſolution) in anothers ſpecial charge for a Day, or Week, or Month, or more, without a fixed relation to that flock, doth neither officiate as a Lay-man, nor yet unlawfully or irregularly; But, 1. As a Miniſter of Chriſt in the Church Univerſal. 2. And as the Paſtor of that Church for the preſent time only, though not ſtatedly: Even as a Phyſician called to help another in his Hoſpital, or to ſupply his place for the time, doth perform his work, 1. As a Licenſed Phyſician, 2. And as the Phyſician of that Patient or Hoſpital for that time, though not ſtatedly.

8. No Man is to intrude into anothers Charge without a Call; much leſs to claim a particular ſtated Overſight and Authority. For though he be not an Uſurper as to the Office in general, he is an Uſurper as to that particular Flock. It is no error in Ordination to ſay [Take thou authority to preach the Word of God, and adminiſter the holy Sacraments when thou ſhalt be thereto lawfully called,] that is, when thou haſt a particular call to the Exerciſe, and to a fixed Charge, as thou haſt now a Call to the Office in general.

9. Yet every Biſhop or Paſtor by his Relation to the Church Univerſal, and to Mankind, and the intereſt of Chriſt, is bound not only as a Chriſtian, but as a Paſtor, to do his beſt for the common good, and not to caſt wholly out of his care, a particular Church, becauſe another hath the overſight of it. Therefore if an Heretick get in, or the Church fall to Hereſie, or any pernicious Error or Sin, the Neighbour Paſtors are bound both by the Law of Nature and their Office, to interpoſe their Counſel as Miniſters of Chriſt, and to prefer the ſubſtance before pretended order, and to ſeek to recover the Peoples Souls, though it be againſt their proper Paſtors will. And in ſuch a caſe of neceſſity, they may ordain, degrade, excommunicate and abſolve in anothers charge, as if it were a vacuity.

10. Moreover it is one thing to excommunicate a Man out of a particular Church, and another thing for many aſſociated Churches or Neighbours to renounce Communion with him. The ſpecial Paſtors of particular Churches, having the Government of thoſe Churches, are the ſpecial governing Judges, who ſhall or ſhall not have Communion as a Member in their Churches: But the Neighbour-Paſtors of other Churches have the power of judging with whom they and their own flocks will or will not hold Communion. As e. g. Athanaſius may as Governour of his flock declare any Arrian-member excommunicate: And require his flock to have no Communion with him. And all the Neighbour Paſtors (though they excommunicate the ſame Men as his ſpecial Governours, yet) may declare to all their flocks, that if that Man come among them, they will have no Communion with him, and that at diſtance they renounce that diſtant Communion which is proper to Chriſtians one with another, and take him for none of the Church of Chriſt.

Queſt. 25. Whether Canons be Laws? And Paſtors have a Legiſlative Power?

ALL Men are not agreed what a Law is, that is, what is to be taken for the proper ſenſe of that Word. Some will have the name confined to ſuch Common Laws as are ſtated durable Rules for the ſubjects actions: And ſome will extend it alſo to perſonal temporary verbal Precepts and Mandates, ſuch as Parents and Maſters uſe daily to the Children and Servants of their Families. And of the firſt ſort, ſome will confine the name [Laws] to thoſe acts of Soveraignty which are about the common matters of the Kingdom, or which no inferior Officer may make: And others will extend it to thoſe Orders which the Sovereigns Charter, a Corporation, or Colledge, or School may make for the ſubregulation of their particular Societies and Affairs.

I have declared my own opinion de nomine fully elſewhere, 1. That the definition of a Law in the proper general ſenſe, is, to be a ſign or ſignification of the Reaſon and Will of the Rector as ſuch, to his ſubjects as ſuch, inſtituting or antecedently determining what ſhall be due from them, and to them; Jus efficiendo, Regularly making Right.

2. That thoſe Laws are many more ways diverſified fied and distinguished (from the efficient, sign, subjects, matter, end, &c.) than is meet for us here to enumerate. It is sufficient now to say, 1. That stated regular Laws as distinct from temporary Mandates and Proclamations: 2. And Laws for Kingdoms and other Common-wealths, in regard of Laws for Persons, Schools, Families, &c. 3. And Laws made by the Supream Power, as distinct from those made by the derived Authority of Colledges, Corporations, &c. called By-Laws or Orders, (for I will here say nothing of Parents and Pastors, whose Authority is directly or immediately from the efficiency of Nature in one, and Divine Institution in the other, and not derived efficiently from the Magistrate, or any Man.) 4. That Laws about great substantial Matters, distinct from those about little and mutable Circumstances, &c. I say the first sort as distinct from the second, are Laws so called by Excellency above other Laws. But that the rest are univocally to be called Laws, according to the best definition of the Law in Genere. But if any Man will speak otherwise, let him remember that it is yet but lis de nomine, and that he may use his Liberty, and I will use mine. Now to the Question.

1. Canons made by Virtue of the Pastoral Office and Gods General Laws (in Nature or Scripture) for regulating it, are a sort of Laws to the Subjects or Flocks of those Pastors.

2. Canons made by the Votes of the Laity of the Church, or private Part of that Society as private, are no Laws at all, but Agreements; because they are not Acts of any governing Power.

3. Canons made by Civil Rulers about the circumstantials of the Church, belonging to their Office, as orderers of such things, are Laws, and may be urged by moderate and meet civil or corporal Penalties, and no otherwise.

4. Canons made by Princes or inferiour Magistrates, are no Laws purely and formally Ecclesiastical, which are essentially Acts of Pastoral Power: But only materially Ecclesiastical, and formally Magistratical.

5. No Church Officers as such (much less the People) can make Laws with a Co-active or Co-ercive Sanction; that is, to be enforced by their Authority with the Sword or any corporal Penalty, mulct or force: This being the sole Priviledge of Secular Powers, Civil or Oeconomical, or Scholastick.

6. There is no Obligation ariseth to the subject for particular Obedience of any Law, which is evidently against the Laws of God (in Nature or Holy Scripture.)

7. They are no Laws which Pastors make to People out of their Power: As the Popes, &c.

8. There is no Power on Earth under Christ, that hath Authority to make Universal Laws; to bind the whole Church on all the Earth, or all Mankind. Because there is no Universal Soveraign, Civil or Spiritual, Personal or Collective.

9. Therefore it is no Schism but Loyalty to Christ, to renounce or separate from such a Society of Usurpation; nor no disobedience or rebellion, to deny them Obedience.

10. Pastors may and must be obeyed in things lawful as Magistrates, if the King make them Magistrates: Though I think it unmeet for them to accept a Magistracy with the Sword, except in Case of some rare necessity.

11. If Pope, Patriarchs or Pastors shall usurp any of the Kings Authority, Loyalty to Christ and him, and the Love of the Church and State, oblige us to take part with Christ and the King against such Usurpation, but only by lawful means, in the compass of our proper Place and Calling.

12. The Canons made by the Councils of many Churches, have a double Nature; as they are made for the People and the Subjects of the Pastors, they are a sort of Laws: That is, they oblige by the derived Authority of the Pastors: Because the Pastors of several Churches do not lose any of their Power by their Assembling, but exercise it with the greater advantage of Concord. But as they are made only to oblige the present or absent Pastors who separatedly are of equal Office-power, so they are no Laws, except in an equivocal Sense, but only Agreements or Contracts. So Bishop Usher profest his Judgment to be: And before him the Council of Carthage in Cyprians time: But it needs no Proof, no more than that a Convention of Kings may make no Laws to bind the Kings of England, but Contracts only. Grotius de Imperio sum. pot. circ. sacr. most solidly resolveth this Question.

13. But yet we are aliunde obliged even by God, to keep these Agreements in things lawful, for the Churches Peace and Concord, when greater contrary Reasons, à fine, do not disoblige us. For when God saith, You shall keep Peace and Concord, and keep Lawful Covenants; the Canons afford us the Minor; [but these are lawful Contracts or Agreements, and means of the Churches Peace and Concord:] Therefore (saith Gods Law) you shall observe them. So though the Contracts (as of Husband and Wife, Buyer and Seller, &c.) be not Laws, yet that is a Law of God which bindeth us to keep them. 1 Pet. 5. 2, 3. 2 Cor. 1. 24.

14. Seeing that even the obliging Commands of Pastors may not by them be enforced by the Sword, but work by the Power of Divine Authority or Commission manifested, and by Holy Reason, and Love, therefore it is most modest and fit for Pastors (who must not Lord it over Gods Heritage, but be examples to all) to take the lower Name of Authoritative Directions, and Perswasions, rather than of Laws: Especially in a Time when Papal Usurpation maketh such ruinating use of that Name, and Civil Magistrates use to take it in the nobler and narrower Sense.

THE Questions, 1. [If one Pastor make Orders for his Church, and the Multitudes or Synods be against them: Which must be obeyed] you may gather from what is said before of Ordination. And 2. [What are the particulars proper Materially to the Magistrates Decision, and what to the Pastors,] I here pass by.

Quest. 26. Whether Church-Canons, or Pastors Directive Determinations of Matters pertinent to their Office, do bind the Conscience? And what Accidents will disoblige the People; you may gather before in the same Case about Magistrates Laws, in the Political Directions: As also by an impartial transferring the Case to the Precepts of Parents and Schoolmasters to Children; without respect to their Power of the Rod (or supposing that they had none such.)

Quest. 27. What are Christs appointed means of the Unity and Concord of the Universal Church, and consequently of its Preservation, if there be no Humane Universal Head and Governour of it upon Earth? And if Christ have instituted none such, Whether Prudence and the Law of Nature oblige not the Church to set up and maintain an Universal Ecclesiastical Monarchy or Aristocracy? Seeing that which is every Mans work, is as no Mans, and omitted by all?

I. TO the first question I must refer you in part to two small popular yet satisfactory Tractates written long ago, that I do not one thing too oft. Briefly now, Catholick Unity and The True Catholick and Church described.

1. The Unity of the Universal Church, is founded in, and maintained by their common Relation to Christ the Head, (as the Kingdom in its Relation to the King).

2. A Concord in Degrees of Goodness, and in Integrals and Accidentals of Christianity, will never be ob-obtained on Earth, where the Church is still imperfect: And perfect Holiness and Wisdom, are necessary to perfect Harmony and Concord, Phil. 3.12, 13, 14.

3. Experience hath long taught the Church, if it will learn, that the claim of a Papal Head-ship and Government over the Church Universal, hath been the famous incendiary, and hinderer of Concord in the Christian World.

4. The means to attain such a measure of Concord and Harmony which is to be hoped for, or endeavoured upon Earth, I have so distinctly, fully, and yet briefly described (with the contrary Impediments) in my Treatise of the Reasons of Christian Religion Part 7. Chap. 14. Page 470, 471. in about two Leaves, that I will not recite them. If you say, You are not bound to read the Books which I refer you to; I answer, Nor this.

II. To the latter Question I answer, 1. To set up such an Universal Head on the Supposition of natural Reasons and Humane Policy is, 1. To cross Christs Institution, and the Laws of the Holy Ghost, as hath been long proved by Protestants from the Scripture.

2. It is Treason against Christ Soveraign Office to usurp such a Vicegerency without his Commission.

3. It is against the notorious light of Nature, which telleth us of the Natural Incapacity of Mortal Man, to be such an Universal Governour through the World.

4. It is to Sin against long, and dreadful common experience, and to keep in that fire that hath destroyed Emperours, Kings and Kingdoms, and set the Churches Pastors and Christian World in those divisions, which are the great and serviceable work of Satan, and the impediment of the Churches Increase, Purity and Peace, and the notorious shame of the Christian Profession in the eyes of the Infidel World.

And if so many hundred Years sad experience, will not answer them that say [If the Pope were a good Man, he might unite us all,] I conclude that such deserve to be deceived, 2 Thes. 2. 10, 11, 12.

Quest. 28. Who is the Judge of Controversies in the Church? 1. About the Exposition of the Scripture, and Doctrinal Points in themselves: 2. About either Heresies, or wicked Practices, as they are charged on the Persons who are accused of them: That is, 1. Antecedently to our Practice, by way of Regulation, 2. Or Consequently, by Judicial Sentence (and Execution) on Offenders.

I Have answered this Question so oft, that I can perswade my self to no more than this short, yet clear Solution.

The Papists use to cheat poor unlearned Persons that cannot justly discern Things that differ, by puzzling them with this confused ambiguous Question. Some things they cunningly and falsly take for granted, As that there is such a thing on Earth, as a Political Universal Church, headed by any Mortal Governour. Some things they shuffle together in equivocal Words. They confound, 1. Publick Judgment of Decision, and private Judgment of discerning. 2. The Magistrates Judgment of Church-controversies, and the Pastors, and the several Cases, and Ends, and Effects of their several Judgments. 3. Church-judgment as Directive to a particular Church, and as a means of the Concord of several Churches. Which being but distinguished, a few Words will serve to clear the difficulty.

1. As there is no Universal Humane Church (Constituted or Governed by a Mortal Head) so there is no Power set up by Christ to be an Universal Judge of either sort of Controversies, by decisive Judicial Sentence: Nor any Universal Civil Monarch of the World.

2. The publick Governing Decisive Judgment, obliging others, belongeth to publick Persons, or Officers of God, and not to any private Man. Eph. 4. 7, 13, 14, 15, 16. 1 Cor. 12. 28, 29. Act. 15. 17.

3. The publick Decision of Doubts or Controversies about Faith it self, or the true sense of Gods Word and Laws, as obliging the whole Church on Earth to believe that Decision, or not gain-say it, because of the Infallibility or Governing Authority of the Deciders, belongeth to none but Jesus Christ; because as is said, he hath made no Universal Governour, nor Infallible Expositor. It belongeth to the Law-giver only to make such an Universally obliging Exposition of his own Laws. See my Key for Catholicks.

4. True Bishops or Pastors in their own particular Churches are Authorized Teachers and Guides, in Expounding the Laws and Word of Christ: And the People are bound as Learners to reverence their Teaching, and not contradict it without true cause: Yea, and to believe them fide humanâ, in things pertinent to their Office: For oportet discentem credere.

5. No such Pastors are to be absolutely believed, nor in any case of notorious Errors or Heresies, where the Word of God is discerned to be against them.

6. For all the People as reasonable Creatures, have a Judgment of private discerning to judge what they must receive as Truth, and to discern their own Duty, by the help of the Word of God, and of their Teachers.

7. The same Power of Governing-Judgment lawful Synods have over their several Flocks, as a Pastor over his own, but with greater Advantage.

8. The Power of Judging in many Consociate Churches, who is to be taken into Communion as Orthodox, and who to be refused by those Churches as Hereticks, in specie, that is, what Doctrine they will judge sound or unsound, as it is Judicium discernendi; belongeth to every one of the Council singly: As it is a Judgment obliging themselves by Contract, (and not of Governing each other) it is in the Contracters and Consenters: And for peace and order usually in the Major Vote. But with the Limitations before expressed.

9. Every true Christian believeth all the Essentials of Christianity, with a Divine Faith, and not by a meer humane belief of his Teachers, though by their Help and Teaching, his Faith is generated and confirmed, and preserved. Therefore no essential Article of Christianity is left to any obliging decision of any Church, but only to a subservient obliging Teaching: As whether there be a God, a Christ, a Heaven, a Hell, an Immortality of Souls; whether God be to be believed, loved, feared, obeyed before Man? Whether the Scripture be Gods Word, and true? Whether those that contradict it are to be believed therein? Whether Pastors, Assemblies, publick Worship, Baptism, Sacrament of the Lords Supper, be Divine Institutions? And the same I may say of any known Word of God; no Mortals may judge in partem utramlibet, but the Pastors are only Authorized Teachers and Helpers of the Peoples Faith. (And so they be partly to one another.)

10. If the Pope or his Council, were the Infallible, or the Governing Expositors of all Gods Laws, and Scriptures, 1. God would have enabled them to do it by an Universal Commentary which all Men should be obliged to believe, or at least not to contradict. For there is no Authority and Obligation given to Men (yea, to so many successively) to do that (for the needful decision of Controversies) which they never have Ability given them to do. For that were to oblige them to things impossible. 2. And the Pope and his Council would be the most treacherous miscreants on earth, that in so many hundred Years, would never write such an infallible, nor governing Commentary, to end the differences of the Christian World. Indeed they have judged (with other) against Arius, that Christ is true God, and one with the Father in substance, &c. But if they they ſaid the contrary, muſt we have taken it for God's truth, or have believed them?

11. To judge who for Hereſie or Scandal, ſhall be puniſhed by the Sword, belongeth to none but the Magiſtrate in his own Dominions: As to judge who ſhall have Communion or be excommunicated from the Church, belongeth, as aforeſaid, to the Paſtors. And the ſaid Magiſtrate hath firſt as a Man his own Judgment of diſcerning what is Hereſie, and who of his ſubjects are guilty of it, in order to his publick governing Judgment.

12. The Civil Supream Ruler may Antecedently exerciſe this Judgment of diſcerning (by the teaching of their proper Teachers) in order to his conſequent ſentences on Offenders: And ſo in his Laws may tell the Subjects, what Doctrines and Practices he will either tolerate or puniſh. And thus may the Church Paſtors do in their Canons to their ſeveral Flock, in relation to Communion or Non-communion.

13. He that will condemn particular Perſons as Hereticks or Offenders, muſt allow them to ſpeak for themſelves, and hear the proofs, and give them that which Juſtice requireth, &c. And if the Pope can do ſo at the Antipodes, and in all the World either per ſe, or per alium without giving that other his eſſential claimed Power, let him prove it by better experience than we have had.

14. As the prime and ſole-univerſal Legiſlation belongeth to Jeſus Chriſt, ſo the final Judgment univerſal and particular, belongeth to him, which only will end all Controverſies, and from which there is no appeal.

Queſt. 29. Whether a Parents power over his Children, or a Paſtor or many Paſtors or Biſhops over the ſame Children, as parts of their Flock, be greater, or more obliging in matters of Religion and publick Worſhip.

THis being touch'd on ſomewhere elſe, I only now ſay, 1. That if the caſe were my own, I would, 1. Labour to know their different Powers, as to the matter commanded, and obey each in that which is proper to his place,

2. If I were young and ignorant, natural neceſſity, and natural obligation together, would give my Parents with whom I lived ſuch an advantage above the Miniſter (whom I ſeldom ſee or underſtand) as would determine the caſe de eventu, and much de jure.

3. If my Parents command me to hear a Teacher who is againſt Ceremonies or certain Forms, and to hear none that are for them, natural neceſſity here alſo (ordinarily) would make it my duty firſt to hear and obey my Parents: And in many other caſes, till I came to underſtand the greater power of the Paſtors, in their own place and work.

4. But when I come to Church, or know that the judgment of all Concordant Godly Paſtors, condemneth ſuch a thing as damnable Hereſie or Sin, which my Father commandeth me to receive and profeſs, I would more believe and follow the Judgment of the Paſtors and Churches.

Queſt. 30. May an Office Teacher or Paſtor be at once, in a ſtated Relation of a Paſtor and a Diſciple to ſome other Paſtor?

1. THat Timothy was ſtill Paul's Son in point of Learning and his Diſciple, and ſo that under Apoſtles the ſame Perſons might be ſtated in both relations at once, ſeemeth evident in Scripture.

2. But the ſame that is a Paſtor is not at once a meer Lay-man.

3. That Men in the ſame Office may ſo differ in Age, Experience, and degrees of knowledge, as that young Paſtors may and often ought, many Years to continue, not only in occaſional reception of their help, but alſo in an ordinary ſtated way of receiving it, and ſo be related to them as their ordinary Teachers, by ſuch gradual advantages, is paſt all doubt. And that all Juniors and Novices owe a certain reverence and audience, and ſome obedience to the elder and wiſer.

4. But this is not to be a Diſciple to him as in lower Order or Office, but as of lower Gifts and Grace.

5. It is lawful and very good for the Church, that ſome ordained Perſons continue long as Pupils to their Tutors in Schools or Academies, (e.g. to learn the holy Langaages, if they have them not, &c.) But this is a relation left to voluntary Contractors.

6. In the ancient Churches the prrticular Churches had one Biſhop and ſome Presbyters and Deacons, uſually of much lower parts, who lived all together (ſingle or chaſte) in the Biſhops or Church-houſe, which was as a Colledge, where he daily edified them by Doctrine and Example.

7. The Controverſie about different Orders by Divine Inſtiturion, belongeth not to me here to meddle with: But as to the natural and acquired Imparity of age and gifts, and the unſpeakable benefit to the Juniors and the Churches, that it is deſirable that there were ſuch a way of their education and edification, I take to be diſcernable to any that is impartial and judicious.

Ambroſe was at once a Teacher and a Learner; Beda Eccl. Hiſt. mentioneth one in England, that was at once a Paſtor and a Diſciple. And in Scotland ſome that became Biſhops were ſtill to be under the Government of the Abbot of their Monaſteries according to their firſt devotion, though the Abbot was but a Presbyter.

8. Whether a ſettled private Church-member, may not at once continue his very formal Relation, to the Paſtor of that Church, and yet be of the ſame Order with him in another Church, as their Paſtor, at the ſame time (as he may in caſe of neceſſity continue his Apprenticeſhip, or civil ſervice, is a caſe that I will not determine. But he that denyeth it, muſt prove his opinion, (or affirmation of its unlawfulneſs) by ſufficient evidence from Scripture or Nature; which is hard.

Queſt. 31. Who hath the power of making Church-Canons.

THis is ſufficiently reſolved before. 1. The Magiſtrate only hath the power of making ſuch Canons or Laws for Church matters as ſhall be inforced by the Sword.

2. Every Paſtor hath power to make Canons for his own Congregation; that is, to determine what hour or at what place they ſhall meet; what Tranſlation of Scripture, or Verſion of Pſalms ſhall be uſed in his Church: What Chapter ſhall be read: What Pſalm ſhall be ſung, &c. Except the Magiſtrate contradict him, and determine it otherwiſe, in ſuch points as are not proper to the Miniſterial Office.

3. Councils or Aſſemblies of Paſtors have the power of making ſuch Canons, for many Churches, as ſhall be Laws to the People, and Agreements to themſelves.

4. None have power to make Church Laws or Canons, about any thing, ſave 1. To put Gods own Laws in execution, 2. To determine to that end, of ſuch Circumſtances as God hath left undetermined in his Word.

5. Canon-making under pretence of Order and Concord, hath done a great deal of miſchief to the Churches: Whilſt Clergymen have grown up from

Agree-

Agreements, to Tyrannical Uſurpations and Impoſitions, and from Concord about needful Accidents of Worſhip, to frame new Worſhip Ordinances, and to force them on all others; but eſpecially 1. By encroaching on the power of Kings, and telling them that they are bound in Conſcience to put all their Canons into execution by force: 2. And by laying the Union of the Churches, and the Communion of Chriſtians upon things needful and doubtful, yea, and at laſt on many ſinful things; whereby the Churches have been moſt effectually divided, and the Chriſtian World ſet together by the Ears; and Schiſms, yea, and Wars have been raiſed: And theſe maladies cannot poſſibly be healed, till the tormenting tearing Engines be broken and caſt away, and the voluminous Canons of numerous Councils, (which themſelves alſo are matter of undeterminable Controverſie) be turned into the primitive ſimplicity; and a few neceſſary things made the terms of Concord. Doubtleſs if every Paſtor were left wholly to himſelf for the ordering of Worſhip Circumſtances and Accidents in his own Church, without any common Canons, ſave the Scriptures, and the Laws of the Land, there would have been much leſs diviſion, than that is, which theſe numerous Canons of all the Councils, obtruded on the Church, have made.

Queſt. 32. Doth Baptiſm as ſuch enter the Baptized into the Univerſal Church, or into a particular Church, or both? And is Baptiſm the Particular Church-Covenant as ſuch?

Anſw. 1. Baptiſm as ſuch doth enter us into the Univerſal Church, and into it alone; and is no particular Church-Covenant, but the ſolemnizing of the great Chriſtian Covenant of Grace, between God and a Believer and his ſeed.

For, 1. There is not eſſentially any mention of a particular Church in it.

2. A Man may be baptized by a general unfixed Miniſter, who is not the Paſtor of any particular Church: And he may be baptized in ſolitude, where there is no particular Church. The Eunuch Act. 8. was not baptized into any particular Church.

Mat. 28. 19, 20.

3. Baptiſm doth but make us Chriſtians: But a Man may be a Chriſtian who is no Member of any particular Church.

4. Otherwiſe Baptiſm ſhould oblige us neceſſarily to a Man, and be a Covenant between the Baptized and the Paſtor and Church into which he is baptized: But it is only our Covenant with Chriſt.

5. We may frequently change our particular Church relation: Without being baptized again. But we never change our relation to the Church which we are baptized into, unleſs by Apoſtaſie.

2. Yet the ſame perſon at the ſame time that he is baptized may be entred into the univerſal Church, and into a particular; and ordinarily it ought to be ſo where it can be had.

3. And the Covenant which we make in baptiſm with Chriſt, doth oblige us to obey him, and conſequently to uſe his inſtituted means, and ſo to hear his Miniſters, and hold due Communion with his Churches.

4. But this doth no more enter us into a particular Church, than into a particular Family. For we as well oblige our ſelves to obey him in Family-relations as in Church-relations.

5. When the baptized therefore is at once entered into the univerſal and particular Church, it is done by a double conſent, to the double relation. By Baptiſm he profeſſeth his conſent to be a Member of Chriſt and his univerſal Church; and additionally he conſenteth to be guided by that particular Paſtor in that particular Church; which is another Covenant or Conſent.

Queſt. 33. Whether Infants ſhould be Baptized? I have anſwered long agoe in a Treatiſe on that Subject.

Alſo what Infants ſhould be Baptized? And who have Right to Sacraments? And whether Hypocrites are univocally or equivocally Chriſtians and Church-members, I have reſolved in my Diſput. of Right to Sacraments.

Queſt. 34. Whether an unbaptized Perſon who yet maketh a publick profeſſion of Chriſtianity, be a member of the Viſible Church? And ſo of the Infants of Believers unbaptized.

Anſw. 1. Such Perſons have a certain imperfect irregular kind of profeſſion, and ſo of Membership; their Viſibility or viſible Chriſtianity is not ſuch as Chriſt hath appointed. As thoſe that are married, but not by Legal Celebration, and as thoſe that in caſes of neceſſity are Miniſters without Ordination; ſo are ſuch Chriſtians as Conſtantine and many of old without Baptiſm.

2. Such Perſons ordinarily are not to be admitted to the Rights and Communion of the Viſible Church, becauſe we muſt know Chriſt's Sheep by his own mark: But yet they are ſo far viſible Chriſtians, as that we may be perſwaded nevertheleſs of their Salvation. As to viſible Communion, they have but a remote and incompleat jus ad rem, and no jus in re, or legal inveſtiture and poſſeſſion.

3. The ſame is the caſe of unbaptized Infants of Believers, becauſe they are not of the Church meerly as they are their natural ſeed; but becauſe it is ſuppoſed that a Perſon himſelf devoted to God, doth alſo devote his Children to God: Therefore not nature only, but this ſuppoſition ariſing from the true nature of his own dedication to God, is the reaſon why believers Children have their right to Baptiſm: Therefare till he hath actually devoted them to God in Baptiſm, they are not legally Members of the Viſible Church, but only in fieri and imperfectly as is ſaid. Of which more anon.

Queſt. 35. Is it certain by the Word of God that all Infants Baptized, and dying before actual Sin are undoubtedly ſaved? Or what Infants may we ſay ſo of?

Anſw. I. 1. We muſt diſtinguiſh between certainty objective and ſubjective, or plainlier, the Reality or Truth of the Thing, and the certain apprehenſion of it.

2. And this certainty of apprehenſion, ſometime ſignifieth only the Truth of that apprehenſion, when a Man indeed is not deceived, or more uſually that clearneſs of apprehenſion joined with Truth, which fully quieteth the Mind and excludeth doubting.

3. We muſt diſtinguiſh of Infants as baptized lawfully upon juſt title, or unlawfully without title.

4. And alſo of Title before God, which maketh a lawful Claim and Reception at his Bar: And Title before the Church, which maketh only the Adminiſtration lawful before God, and the Reception lawful only in foro eccleſiæ or externo.

Since the writing of this, there is come forth an excellent Book for Infant Baptiſm by Mr. Joſeph Whiſton, in which the Grounds of my preſent Solutions are notably cleared.

5. The word Baptiſm ſignifieth either the external part only, conſiſting in the words and outward action, or the Internal Covenanting of the Heart alſo.

6. And that internal Covenant is either ſincere which giveth right to the benefits of God's Covenant, or only partial, reſerved, and unſound, ſuch as is common to Hypocrites.

Concluſ. 1. God hath been pleaſed to ſpeak ſo little in Scripture of the caſe of Infants, that modeſt Men will uſe the words [Certainly and Undoubtedly] about their caſe, with very great caution: And many great Divines have maintained that their very Baptiſm it ſelf, cannot be [Certainly and Undoubtedly] proved proved by the Word of God but by Tradition: Tho' I have endeavoured to prove the contrary in a special Treatise on that point.

2. No Man can tell what is objectively certain or revealed in Gods Word, who hath not subjective certainty or knowledge of it.

3. A Man's apprehension may be true, when it is but a wavering opinion, with the greatest doubtfulness. Therefore we do not usually by a certain apprehension, mean only a true apprehension, but a clear and quieting one.

4. It is possible to baptize Infants unlawfully, or without any Right, so that their Reception and Baptizing shall be a great Sin, as is the misapplying of other Ordinances. For instance; one in America where there is neither Church to receive them, nor Christian Parents nor Sponsors, may take up the Indians Children and baptize them against the Parents wills; or if the Parents consent to have their Children outwardly baptized, and not themselves, as not knowing what baptizing meaneth, or desire it only for outward advantages to their Children: Or if they offer them to be baptized only in open derision and scorn of Christ; such Children have no Right to be received. And many other instances nearer may be given.

5. It's possible the Person may have no authority at all from Christ who doth baptize them. And Christ's part in Reception of the Person, and Collation and Investiture in his benefits, must be done by his Commission, or else how can we say that Christ doth it? But open Infidels, Women, Children, Madmen, Scorners, may do it that have none of his Commission.

6. That all Infants baptized without title or right by mis-application, and so dying, are not undoubtedly saved, nor any word of God doth certainly say so, we have reason to believe on these following grounds.

1. Because we can find no such Text, nor could ever prevail with them that say so, to shew us such an ascertaining Word of God.

2. Because else gross Sin would certainly be the way to Salvation. For such mis-application of Baptism, by the demanders at least, would certainly be gross Sin, as well as misapplying the Lord's Supper.

3. Because it is clean contrary to the tenour of the new Covenant which promiseth Salvation to none but penitent Believers and their Seed: What God may do for others unknown to us, we have nothing to do with: But his Covenant hath made no other promise that I can find; and we are certain of no Man's Salvation by Baptism, to whom God never made a promise of it. If by the Children of the faithful, be meant not only their Natural Seed, but the adopted or bought also of which they are true Proprietors, yet that is nothing to all others.

4. To add to God's words, especially to his very Promise or Covenant, is so terrible a Presumption, as we dare not be guilty of.

5. Because this tyeth Grace or Salvation so to the outward washing of the Body or opus operatum as is contrary to the nature of God's Ordinances, and to the tenour of Scripture, and the judgment of the Protestant Divines.

6. Because this would make a strange disparity between the two Sacraments of the same Covenant of Grace: When a Man receiveth the Lord's Supper (unworthily in Scorn, in Drunkenness, or Impenitency) much more without any right (as Infidels,) he doth eat and drink Damnation or Judgment to himself: and maketh his Sin greater: Therefore he that gets a Child baptized unworthily and without right, doth not therefore infallibly procure his Salvation.

7. Because the Apostle saith, 1 Cor. 7. 14. Else were your Children unclean, but now are they holy; and the Scripture giveth this privilege to the Children of the faithful above others: Whereas the contrary opinion levelleth them with the seed of Infidels and Heathens, as if these had right to Salvation by meer Baptism, as well as the others.

8. Because else it would be the greatest act of Charity in the World, to send Soldiers to catch up all Heathens and Infidels Children and baptize them; which no Christians ever yet thought their duty. Yea it would be too strong a temptation to them to kill them when they had done, that they might be all undoubtedly saved.

Obj. But that were to do evil that good might come by it. Answ. But God is not to be so dishonoured as to be supposed to make such Laws, as shall forbid me the greatest good in the World, and then to tempt them by the greatness of the benefit to take it to be no evil: As if he said [If Soldiers would go take up a Million of Heathens Children and baptize them, it will put them into an undoubted state of Salvation: But yet I forbid them doing it: And if they presently kill them, lest they sin after, they shall undoubtedly be saved; but yet I forbid them doing it.] I need not aggravate this temptation to them that know the power of the Law of Nature, which is the Law of Love and good Works, and how God that is most good is pleased in our doing good: Though he tryed Abraham's obedience once, as if he should have killed his Son, yet he stopt him before the execution: And doth he ordinarily exercise Mens obedience, by forbidding them to save the Souls of others, when it is easily in their power? Especially when with the adult the greatest labour and powerfullest preaching, is frequently so frustrate, that not one of many is converted by it.

9. Because else God should deal with unaccountable disparity with Infants and the Adult in the same ordinance of Baptism. It is certain that all Adult Persons baptized, if they dyed immediately, should not be saved. Even none that had no right to the Covenant and to Baptism; such as Infidels, Heathens, Impenitent Persons, Hypocrites, that have not true Repentance and Faith: And why should Baptism save an Infant without title, any more than the Adult without title? I still suppose that some Infants have no title, and that now I speak of them alone.

Obj. But the Church giveth them all right by receiving them.

Answ. This is to be farther examined anon. If you mean a particular Church, perhaps they are baptized into none such: Baptism as such is a Reception only into the Universal Church, as in the Eunuch's case, Act. 8. appeareth. If you mean the Universal Church, it may be but one single ignorant Man in an Infidel Country that baptizeth; and he is not the Universal Church? Yea perhaps is not a lawfully called Minister of that Church? Hower this is but to say, that Baptism giveth right to Baptism. For this Receiving is nothing but Baptizing. But there must be a Right to this Reception, if Baptism be a distinguishing Ordinance, and all the World have not right to it. Christ saith, Matth. 28. 19. Disciple me all Nations, baptizing them: They must be initially made Disciples first, by Consent, and then be invested in the visible state of Christianity by Baptism.

10. If the Children of Heathens have right to Baptism and Salvation thereby, it is either, 1. As they are Men, and all have right, or 2. Because the Parents give them right, 3. Or because remote Ancestors give them right, 4. Or because the universal Church gives them right, 5. Or because a particular Church giveth them right, 6. Or because the Sponsors giveth them right, 7. Or the Magistrate, 8. Or the Baptizer. But it is none of all these, as shall anon be proved.

II. But as to the second question, I answer: 1. It will help us to understand the case the better if we prepare the way by opening the case of the Adult, because in Scripture times they were the most famous mous Subjects of Baptism. And it is certain of such, 1. That every one outwardly baptized is not in a state of Salvation. That no Hypocrite that is not a true penitent Believer is in such a state. 2. That every true penitent Believer is before God in a State of a Salvation, as soon as he is such; and before the Church, as soon as he is baptized. 3. That we are not to use the word Baptism as a Physical term only, but as a moral Theological term. Because words (as in Law, Physick, &c.) are to be understood according to the Art or Science in which they are treated of. And Baptism taken Theologically doth as essentially include the Wills consent or Heart-covenanting with God, as Matrimony includeth Marriage consent, and as a Man containeth the Soul as well as the Body. And thus it is certain that all truly baptized Persons are in a state of Salvation; that is, All that sincerely consent to the Baptismal Covenant when they profess consent by Baptism, (but not Hypocrites.) 4. And in this sense all the ancient Pastors of the Churches, did concur that Baptism did wash away all Sin, and put the baptized into a present right to Life Eternal; as he that examineth their Writings will perceive: Not the outward washing and words alone, but when the inward and outward parts concur, or when by true Faith and Repentance, the Receiver hath right to the Covenant of God. 5. In this sense it is no unfit language to imitate the Fathers, and to say that the truly baptized are in a state of Justification, Adoption and Salvation, unless when Mens misunderstanding maketh it unsafe. 6. The sober Papists themselves say the same thing, and when they have said that even ex opere operato Baptism saveth, they add that it is only the meet Receiver; that is, the penitent Believer, and no other of the adult. So that hitherto there is no difference.

2. Now let us by this try the case of Infants; concerning which there are all these several opinions among Divines.

1. Some think that all Infants (baptized or not) are saved from Hell and positive Punishment, but are not brought to Heaven as being not capable of such Joys.

2. Some think that all Infants (dying such) are saved as others are, by actual felicity in Heaven, though in a lower degree. Both these sorts suppose that Christ's death saveth all that reject it not, and that Infants reject it not.

3. Some think that all unbaptized Infants do suffer the pœnam damni and are shut out of Heaven and Happiness, but not sensibly punished or cast into Hell. For this Jansenius hath wrote a Treatise; and many other Papists think so.

4. Some think that all the Children of sincere Believers dying in Infancy are saved (that is glorified) whether baptized or not; and no others.

5. Some think that God hath not at all revealed what he will do with any Infants.

6. Some think that he hath promised Salvation as aforesaid to Believers and their Seed, but hath not at all revealed to us what he will do with all the rest.

7. Some think that only the Baptized Children of true Believers are certainly (by promise) saved.

8. Some think that all the adopted and bought Children of true Christians, as well as the natural, are saved (if baptized, say some, or if not, say others.)

9. Some think that Elect Infants are saved, and no other, but no Man can know who they are. And of these, 1. Some deny Infant Baptism; 2. Most say that they are to be baptized, and that thereby the Non-elect are only received into the visible Church, and its Priviledges, but not to any promise or certainty of Justification, or a state of Salvation.

10. Some think that all that are baptized by the Dedication of Christian Sponsors are saved.

11. Some think that all that the Pastor dedicateth to God are saved, (because so dedicated by him say some; or because baptized ex opere operato say others.) And so all baptized Infants are in a state of Salvation.

12. Some think that this is to be limited to all that have right to Baptism coram Deo; which some think that the Churches reception giveth them, of which anon.

13. And some think it is to be limited to those that have right coram Ecclesia, or are rightfully baptized ex parte Ministrantis, where some make the Magistrates command sufficient, and some the Bishops and some the Baptizers will.

Of the title to Baptism I shall speak anon. Of the Salvation of Infants, it is too tedious to confute all that I dissent from: Not presuming in such darkness and diversity of opinions to be peremptory, nor to say. I am certain by the Word of God who are undoubtedly saved, nor yet to deny the undoubted certainty of wiser Men, who may know that which such as I do doubt of, but submitting what I say to the judgment of the Church of God and my Superiours, I humbly lay down my own thoughts as followeth.

1. I think that there can no promise or proof be produced that all unbaptized Infants are saved, either from the pœna damni or sensus or both.

2. I think that no Man can prove that all unbaptized Infants are damned, or denyed Heaven. Nay I think I can prove a promise of the contrary.

3. All that are rightfully baptized in foro externo are visible Church Members, and have Ecclesiastical Right to the priviledges of the visible Church.

4. I think Christ never instituted Baptism for collation of these outward Privileges alone, unless as on supposition that Persons culpably fail of the better ends.

5. I think Baptism is a solemn mutual contract or Covenant between Christ and the baptized Person. And that it is but one Covenant, even the Covenant of Grace which is the sum of the Gospel, which is sealed and received in Baptism; and that this Covenant essentially containeth our saving relation to God the Father, Son and Holy Ghost, and our Pardon, Justification and Adoption or Right to Life everlasting: And that God never made any distinct Covenant of outward Priviledges alone, to be sealed by Baptism: But that outward Mercies are the second and lesser gift of the same Covenant which giveth first the great and saving Blessings.

6. And therefore that whoever have right before God, to claim and receive Baptism, hath right also to the benefits of the Covenant of God, and that is, to Salvation: Though I say not so of every one that hath such right before the Church, as that God doth not require the Minister to baptize him. For by Right before God, or in foro cœli I mean such a Right as will justifie the claim before God immediately, the Person being one whom he commandeth in that present state to claim and receive Baptism. For many a one hath no such right before God to claim or receive it, when yet the Minister hath right to give it them if they do claim it.

The case stands thus. God saith in his Covenant, [He that believeth shall be saved, and ought to be baptized to profess that belief and be invested in the benefits of the Covenant; and he that professeth to believe (whether he do or not) is by the Church to be taken for a visible believer, and by Baptism to be received into the Visible Church.] Here God calleth none but true Believers (and their Seed) to be baptized, nor maketh an actual Promise or Covenant with any other; and so I say that no other have right in foro cœli. But yet the Church knoweth not Mens Hearts, and must take a serious Profession for a credible sign of the faith professed, and for that outward title upon which Mark 16. 66. Act. 2. 37, 38. Act. 22. 16. 1 Cor. 6. 11. Tit. 3. 3, 5, 6. Heb. 10. 22. Eph. 5. 26. Rom. 6. 1, 4. Col. 2. 12.

1 Pet. 3. 21, 22. Eph. 4. 5. Act. 8. 12. 13, 16, 36, 38. Act. 9. 18. & 16. 15, 33. & 19. 5 Gal. 3. 27.

which it is a duty of the Paſtor to baptize the claimer. So that the moſt malignant ſcornful Hypocrite that maketh a ſeemingly ſerious Profeſſion, hath right coram Eccleſia, but not coram Deo, ſave in this ſenſe, that God would have the Miniſter baptize him. But this I have largelier opened in my Diſputations of Right to Sacraments.

7. I think therefore that all the Children of true Chriſtians, do by Baptiſm receive a publick Inveſtiture by God's appointment into a ſtate of Remiſſion, Adoption and right to Salvation at the preſent: Though I dare not ſay that I am undoubtedly certain of it, as knowing how much is ſaid againſt it. But I ſay as the Synod of Dort, Art. 1. that Believing Parents have no cauſe to doubt of the Salvation of their Children that die in Infancy, before they commit actual Sin; that is, not to trouble themſelves with fears about it.

The Reaſons that move me to be of this judgment (though not without doubting and heſitancy) are theſe, 1. Becauſe whoever hath right to the preſent Inveſtiture, delivery and poſſeſſion of the firſt and great benefits of God's Covenant made with Man in Baptiſm, hath right to Pardon and Adoption and everlaſting Life: But the Infants of true Chriſtians have right to the preſent inveſtiture, delivery and poſſeſſion of the firſt and great benefits of God's Covenant made with Man in Baptiſm. Therefore they have right to Pardon and everlaſting Life.

Either Infants are in the ſame Covenant (that is, are ſubjects of the ſame promiſe of God) with their believing Parents, or in ſome other Covenant, or in no Covenant: If they be under no Covenant (or promiſe) or under ſome other Promiſe or Covenant only, and not the ſame; they are not to be baptized. For Baptiſm is a mutual Covenanting; where the Miniſter by Chriſt's Commiſſion in his name acteth his part, and the believer his own and his Infants part: And God hath but one Covenant, which is to be made, ſealed and delivered in Baptiſm. Baptiſm is not an equivocal word, ſo as to ſignifie divers Covenants of God.

Obj. But the ſame Covenant of God hath divers ſorts of benefits, the ſpecial God giveth to the ſincere, and the common to the common and hypocritical Receiver.

Anſw. 1. God indeed requireth the Miniſter to take Profeſſion for the Viſible Church title; and ſo it being the Miniſter's duty ſo far to believe a Lyar, and to receive diſſemblers who had no right to lay that claim, you may ſay that God indirectly and improperly, giveth them Church-priviledges: But properly, that is, by his Promiſe or Covenant-deed of gift, he giveth them nothing at all; for his Covenant is one, and undivided in its action, though it give ſeveral benefits, and though Providence may give one and not another, yet the Covenant giveth all or none. God ſaith that Godlineſs hath the promiſe of this Life and of that to come: But he never ſaid (that I know of) to the Hypocrite or unſound Believer I promiſe or give right to common Mercies.]

Act. 2. 39. Gal. 3. 22, 29. 1 Tim. 4. 8. Eph. 2. 12. 2 Tim. 1. 1. Heb. 4. 1. & 6. 17. & 9. 15. & 10. 36. & 8. 6. 2 Pet. 1. 4. 5. Act. 2. 38. Act. 26. 18 Lnke 24. 47.

2. But ſuppoſe it were otherwiſe, yet either the Children of true Believers have the true Condition of Right to the ſpecial Bleſſings of the Covenant, or they have not the condition of any at all. For there can no more be required of an Infant as to any ſpecial Bleſſings of the Covenant, than that he be the Child of believing Parents and by them dedicated to God. Either this condition entitleth them to all the Covenant Promiſes which the adult believer is entitled to (as far as their natures are capable) or it entitleth them to none at all: Nor are they to be baptized: For God hath in Scripture inſtituted but one Baptiſm (to profeſs one Faith) and that one is ever for the remiſſion of Sins: He that believeth and is baptized ſhall be ſaved, Mark 16. 16.

3. Or if all the reſt were granted you, yet it would follow that all Infants in the World, even of true believers, are left out of God's Covenant of Grace, that is, the Covenant or Promiſe of Pardon and Life; and are only taken in to the Covenant of Church-priviledges. And ſo 1. You will make two Covenants (which you denyed) and not only two ſorts of benefits of one Covenant. 2. And two ſpecies of Baptiſm: While all Infants in the World are only under a Covenant of outward Priviledges, and have no Baptiſm, but the ſeal of that Covenant, while Believers have the Covenant, Promiſe and Seal of Pardon and Life.

2. And this is my ſecond Reaſon, becauſe then we have no promiſe or certainty, or ground of Faith, for the Pardon and Salvation of any individual Infants in the World. And ſo Parents are left to little comfort for their Children. And if there be no Promiſe there is no Faith of it, nor no Baptiſm to ſeal it; and ſo we ſtill make Antipædobaptiſm unavoidable. For who dare ſet God's Seal to ſuch as have no Promiſe? Or pretend to inveſt any in a near and ſaving Relation to God the Father, Son and Holy Ghoſt (which is the very nature of Baptiſm) when God hath given no ſuch commiſſion?

Obj. Yes: Baptiſm and the Covenant of ſpecial promiſes are for all the Elect, though we know not who they are,

Anſw. 1. I deny not God's eternal antecedent Election; but I deny that the Scripture ever mentioneth his pardoning or glorifying any, upon the account of Election only, without certain ſpiritual conditions, which may be given as the reaſon of the difference in judgment. God may freely give the Goſpel to whom he will, and alſo Faith or the firſt Grace by the Goſpel, without any previous condition in Man, but according to his free Election only; But he giveth Pardon and Heaven as a Rector by his equal Laws and Judgment; and always rendereth a reaſon of the difference, from the qualifications of Man.

2. And if this were as you ſay, it would ſtill overthrow Infant-Baptiſm. For either we muſt baptize all indifferently, or none, or elſe know how to make a difference. All muſt not be baptized indifferently: And Election is a ſecret thing to us, and by it no Miniſter in the World can tell whom to baptize; therefore he muſt baptize none, if there be no other differencing note to know them by.

Obj. God hath more elect ones among the Infants of true Believers than among others: And therefore they are all to be baptized.

Anſw. 1. It will be hard to prove that much (that he hath more) if there be no promiſe to them all as ſuch. 2. If he have more, yet no Man knoweth how many, and whether the Elect be one of Ten, Twenty, Forty or an Hundred in compariſon of the Non-elect: For Scripture tells it not. So that no Miniſter of a Church is ſure that any one Infant that he ever baptized is elect. 3. And God hath given no ſuch rule for ſealing and delivering his Covenant with the benefits, as to caſt it hap hazard among all, becauſe it is poſſible or probable it may belong to ſome.

Obj. You have no certainty what adult profeſſor is ſincere, nor to which of them the ſpecial benefits belong; no not of any one in a Church. And yet becauſe there is a probability that among many there are ſome ſincere, you baptize them all. Take then the birth priviledge but as equal to the profeſſion of the adult.

Anſw. This partly ſatisfied me ſometimes: But I cannot forget that a viſible, falſe or hypocritical profeſſion is not the condition of God's own Covenant of Grace, nor that which he requireth in us, to make us partakers of his Covenant-benefits, nay, he never at all commandeth it; but only commandeth that profeſſion of Conſent, which followeth the real conſent of the Heart; he that condemneth lying, maketh it neither the condition of our Church-membership, as his gift by promiſe, nor yet our duty.

Rom. 10. 9. Acts 8. 37.

And mark well, that it is a Profeſſed Conſent to the whole Covenant that God requireth, as the condition of our true right to any part or benefit of it. He that ſhall only ſay, I conſent to be a viſible Church-member, doth thereby acquire no right to that membership; no not in foro Eccleſiæ: But he muſt alſo profeſs that he conſenteth to have God for his God, and Chriſt for his Lord and Saviour, and the Holy Spirit for his Sanctifier. So that he muſt be a Lyar or a ſound Believer that maketh this profeſſion.

But for an Infant to be born of true Believers, and ſincerely by them dedicated in Covenant to God, is all the Condition that ever God required to an Infant-title to his Covenant; and it is not the failure of the true Condition as a falſe profeſſion is.

Indeed if the proportion were thus laid, it would hold good; [as we know not who ſincerely covenanteth for himſelf, and yet we muſt baptize all that ſoberly profeſs it; ſo we know not who doth ſincerely Covenant for his Infant, and yet we muſt baptize all whom the Parents bring with ſuch a profeſſion, for themſelves and them.]

But if the ſincere dedication of a ſound believer, ſhall be accounted but equal to the lying profeſſion of the adult, which is neither commanded, nor hath any promiſe, then Infants are not in the Covenant of Grace, nor is the ſincereſt dedication to God either commanded or hath any promiſe.

If I were but ſure that the profeſſion of the Adult for himſelf were ſincere, I were ſure that he were in a ſtate of Grace. And if I am not ſure of the ſame concerning the Parents dedication of his Infant, I muſt conclude that this is not a condition of the ſame Covenant, and therefore that he is not in the ſame Covenant (or conditional Promiſe of God) unleſs there be ſome other Condition required in him or for him: But there is no other that can be deviſed.

Object. Election is the Condition.

Anſw. Election is God's act and not Man's; and therefore may be an Antecedent, but no Condition required of us. And Man is not called to make Profeſſion that he is Elected, as he is to make profeſſion of his Faith and conſent to the Covenant. And God only knoweth who are his by Election, and therefore God only can baptize on this account.

And what is the probability which the objectors mean, that many of the Infants of the faithful are elected? Either it is a promiſe, or but a prediction: If no promiſe it is not to be ſealed by Baptiſm. If a promiſe, it is abſolute or conditional. If any abſolute promiſe [As, I will ſave many Children of Believers] 1. This terminateth not on any ſingular Perſon, as Baptiſm doth, and 2. It is not the abſolute promiſe that Baptiſm is appointed by Chriſt to ſeal. This is apparent in Mark 16. 16. and in the caſe of the adult. And it is not one Covenant which is ſealed to the adult by Baptiſm, and another to Infants. Elſe Baptiſm alſo ſhould not be the ſame. But if it be any conditional Covenant, what is it, and what is the condition?

And what is it that Baptiſm giveth to the ſeed of Believers, if they be not juſtified by it from original Sin? You will not ſay, that it conveyeth inherent ſanctifying Grace, no not into all the Elect themſelves, which many are many Years after without. And you cannot ſay, that it ſealeth to them any promiſe, ſo much as of viſible Church-priviledges. For God may ſuffer them preſently to be made Janizaries, and violently taken from their Parents, and become ſtrangers and deſpiſers of Church-priviledges, as is ordinary with the Greeks Children among the Turks. Now God either promiſed ſuch Church-priviledges abſolutely, or conditionally, or not at all? Not abſolutely, for then they would poſſeſs them. If conditionally, what is the Condition? If not at all, what promiſe then doth Baptiſm ſeal to ſuch, and what benefit doth it ſecure? God hath inſtituted no Baptiſm, which is a meer preſent delivery of poſſeſſion of a Church-ſtate, without ſealing any Promiſe at all. True Baptiſm firſt ſealeth the Promiſe, and then delivereth poſſeſſion of ſome benefits.

Yea, indeed outward Church-priviledges are ſuch uncertain bleſſings of the promiſe, that as they are but ſecondary, ſo they are but ſecondarily given and ſealed, ſo that no Man ſhould ever be baptized, if theſe were all that were in the promiſe. The holieſt Perſon may be caſt into a Wilderneſs, and deprived of all viſible Church-communion: And doth God then break his promiſe with him? Certainly no: It is therefore our ſaving Relations to God the Father, Son and Holy Ghoſt, which the Promiſe giveth, and Baptiſm ſealeth; and other things but ſubordinately and uncertainly as they are means to theſe. So then it's plain, that believers Infants have a promiſe of Salvation, or no promiſe at all which Baptiſm was inſtituted to ſeal. Mat. 6. 33. Rom. 8. 28, 32. &c.

I have ſaid ſo much more of this in my Appendix to the Treatiſe of Infant Baptiſm, to Mr. Bedford, in defence of Dr. Davenant's judgment, as that I muſt refer the Reader thither.

8. I think it very probable that this aſcertaining promiſe belongeth not only to the natural ſeed of believers, but to all whom they have a true power and right to dedicate in Covenant to God: Which ſeemeth to be all that are properly their own, whether adopted or bought; but there is more darkneſs and doubt about this than the former, becauſe the Scripture hath ſaid leſs of it.

9. I am not able to prove, nor ſee any probable reaſon for it, that any but ſound believers have ſuch a promiſe for their Children: Nor that any Hypocrite ſhall certainly ſave his Child, if he do but dedicate him to God in Baptiſm. For, 1. I find no promiſe in Scripture made to ſuch. 2. He that doth not ſincerely believe himſelf, nor conſent to God's Covenant, cannot ſincerely believe for his Child, nor conſent for him. 3. And that Faith which will not ſave the owner, as being not the condition of the promiſe, cannot ſave another. Much more might be ſaid of this. I confeſs, that the Church is to receive the Children of Hypocrites as well as themſelves: And their Baptiſm is valid in foro externo Eccleſiæ; and is not to be reiterated. But it goeth no further for his Child, than for himſelf.

10. Therefore I think that all that are rightfully baptized by the Miniſter, that is, baptized ſo as that it's well done of him, are not certainly ſaved by Baptiſm, unleſs they be alſo rightfully baptized, in regard of their right to claim and receive it. Let them that are able to prove more do it, for I am not able.

11. Whereas ſome miſ-interpret the words of the old Rubrick of Confirmation in the Engliſh Liturgie, as if it ſpake of all that are baptized, whether they had Right or not, the words themſelves may ſerve to rectifie that miſtake, [And that no Man ſhall think any detriment ſhall come to children by deferring of their Confirmation, he ſhall know for truth, that it is certain by God's Word, that Children being baptized have all things neceſſary for their Salvation, and be undoubtedly ſaved,] Where it is plain that they mean, they have all things neceſſary ex parte Eccleſiæ, or all God's applying Ordinances neceſſary, though they ſhould die unconfirmed, ſuppoſing that they have all things neceſſary to juſt Baptiſm on their own part. Which is but what the ancients were wont to ſay of the Baptized Adult; but they never meant that the Infidel and Hypocrite and Impenitent Perſon was in a ſtate of Life, becauſe he was baptized; but that all that truly conſent to the Covenant, and ſignifie this by being baptized are ſaved. So the Church of England ſaith, that they receive no detriment by delaying Confirmation, but it never ſaid, that that they receive no detriment by their Parents or Sponſors Infidelity and Hypocriſie, or by their want of true Right coram Deo to be baptized.

12. But yet before theſe Queſtions (either of them) be taken as reſolved by me, I muſt firſt take in ſome other queſtions which are concerned in the ſame Cauſe; as Queſt. 36. What is meant by this Speech, that Believers and their Seed are in the Covenant of God; which giveth them right to Baptiſm?

Anſw. THough this was opened on the by before, I add, 1. The meaning is not that they are in that abſolute Promiſe of the all firſt and all following Grace, ſuppoſed ordinarily to be made of the Elect (as ſuch unknown) viz. [I will give them Faith, Repentance, Converſion, Juſtification and Salvation and all the Conditions of the Conditional Promiſe, without any Condition on their part] which many take to be the meaning of [I will take the hard Heart out of them, &c.] For 1. This Promiſe is not now to be firſt performed to the adult who repent and believe already: And no other are to be baptized at Age: If that abſolute Promiſe be ſealed by Baptiſm, either it muſt be ſo ſealed as a Promiſe before it be performed, or after: If before, either to all, becauſe ſome are elect, or only to ſome that are elect. Not to all: For it is not common to Infidels: Not to ſome as elect; for 1. They are unknown, 2. If they were known, they are yet ſuppoſed to be Infidels. Not after Performance, for then it is too late.

2. The meaning is not only that the Conditional Covenant of Grace is made and offered to them: For ſo it may be ſaid of Heathens and Infidels and all the World that hear the Goſpel.

But 1. The Covenant meant is indeed this Conditional Covenant only, Mark 16. 16. He that believeth and is baptized, ſhall be ſaved.

2. To be in this Covenant is, to be a conſenting Believer, and ſo to be one that hath by inward Heart Conſent, the true Conditions of right to the Benefits of the Covenant, and is thereby prepared ſolemnly by Baptiſm to profeſs this Conſent, and to receive an Inveſtiture and ſeal of Gods Part, by his Miniſter given in his Name.

3. Infants are thus in Covenant with their Parents, becauſe reputatively their Parents Wills are theirs, to diſpoſe of them for their good. And therefore they Conſent by their Parents, who Conſent for them.

Queſt. 37. Are Believers Children certainly in Covenant before their Baptiſm, and thereby in a ſtate of Salvation? Or not till they are baptized?

Anſw. DIſtinguiſh between 1. Heart-Covenanting, and Mouth-Covenanting: 2. Between being in Covenant before God, and Viſibly before the Church.

1. No Perſon is to be baptized at Age, whoſe inward Heart Conſent before profeſſed, giveth him not right to Baptiſm. Therefore all the adult muſt be in Covenant, that is, Conſent on their part to the Covenant, before they are baptized.

2. Therefore it is ſo with the Seed of the faithful, who muſt Conſent by their Parents, before they have right: Otherwiſe all ſhould have right, and their Baptiſm be eſſentially another Baptiſm, as ſealing ſome other Covenant, or none.

3. If there be no Promiſe made to the Seed of the faithful more than to others, they have no right more than others to Baptiſm or Salvation. But if there be a Promiſe made to them as the Seed of Believers, then are they as ſuch within that Promiſe, that is, performers of its Conditions by their Parents, and have right to the Benefit.

4. If the Heart Conſent or Faith of the Adult, do put themſelves into a ſtate of Salvation, before their Baptiſm, then it doth ſo by their Children: But &c. —

5. But this right to Salvation in Parents and Children upon Heart Conſent before Baptiſm, is only before God. For the Church taketh no Cognizance of ſecret heart-tranſactions: But a Man then only conſenteth in the Judgment of the Church, when he openly profeſſeth it, and deſireth to ſignifie it by being baptized.

6. And even before God, there is a neceſſitas præcepti obliging us to open Baptiſm after Heart conſent: And he that heartily conſenteth, cannot refuſe Gods way of uttering it, unleſs either through ignorance he know it not to be his duty, (for himſelf and his child,) or through want of ability or opportunity cannot have it. So that while a Man is unbaptized, ſomewhat is wanting to the compleatneſs of his right to the Benefits of the Covenant, viz. A Reception of Inveſtiture and Poſſeſſion in Gods appointed way; though it be not ſuch a want, as ſhall fruſtrate the Salvation of thoſe that did truly conſent in Heart.

7. I take it therefore for certain, that the children of true Believers, Conſent to the Covenant by their Parents, and are as certainly ſaved if they die before Baptiſm, as after; though thoſe that deſpiſe Baptiſm, when they know it to be a duty, cannot be thought indeed to believe or conſent for their children or themſelves.

Queſt. 38. Is Infants title to Baptiſm and the Covenant-benefits given them by God in his Promiſe, upon any proper Moral Condition, or only upon the Condition of their Natural Relation, that they be the Seed of the Faithful?

Anſw. THat which is called a meer Natural Condition is properly in Law ſenſe no Condition at all; nor doth make a Contract or Promiſe to be called Conditional in a Moral ſenſe. But it is matters of Morality, and not of Phyſicks only that we are treating of; and therefore we muſt take the Terms in a Moral ſenſe. For a Phyſical Condition is either paſt, or preſent, or future, or not-future: If it be paſt or preſent, the Propoſition may indeed be hypothetical, but it is no ſuch conditional Promiſe as we are ſpeaking of: For inſtance, if you ſay, [If thou waſt born in ſuch a City, or if thy Name be John, I will give thee ſo much] Theſe are the Words of an uncertain Promiſer; but the Promiſe is already either equivalent to an Abſolute Gift, or Null. So if the Phyſical Condition be de futuro, e. g. [If thou be alive to morrow, I will give thee this or that; or if the Sun-ſhine to morrow, &c.] This indeed ſuſpendeth the gift or event; but not upon any Moral being which is in the Power of the Receiver, but upon a Natural Contingency or Uncertainty. And God hath no ſuch Conditional Covenants or Promiſes to be ſealed by Baptiſm. He ſaith not, If thou be the child of ſuch or ſuch a Man, thou ſhalt be ſaved, as his natural off-ſpring only. If the Papiſts that accuſe us for holding that the meer natural Progeny of Believers are ſaved as ſuch, did well underſtand our Doctrine, they would perceive that in this we differ not from the underſtanding ſort among them, or at leaſt, that their Accuſations run upon a miſtake.

I told you before that there are three things diſtinctly to be conſidered in the Title of Infants to baptiſm and Salvation. 1. By what right the Parent covenanteth for his child? 2. What right the Child hath to baptiſm? 3. What right he hath to the benefits of the Covenant ſealed and delivered in Baptiſm?

To the firſt, two things concur to the Title of the Parent to Covenant in the name of his Child: One is his Natural Intereſt in him, the Child being his own is at his diſpoſe. The other is Gods Gracious Will and Conſent that it ſhall be ſo; that the Parents Will ſhall shall be as the Childs for his good, till he come at Age to have a Will of his own.

To the second, the Childs right to Baptism is not meerly his Natural or his Birth relation from such Parents, but it is in two degrees as followeth, 1. He hath a Virtual Right, on Condition of his Parents Faith: The Reason is, because that a Believers Consent and Self-dedication to God doth Virtually contain in it a Dedication with himself of all that is his: And it a Contradiction to say, that a Man truly dedicateth himself to God, and not all that he hath, and that he truly consenteth to the Covenant for himself, and not for his Child, if he understand that God will accept it. 2. His Actual Title-condition is his Parents (or Owners) Actual Consent to enter him into Gods Covenant, and his Actual mental Dedication of his Child to God, which is his Title before God, and the Profession of it is his Title before the Church. So that it is not a meer Physical but a Moral Title condition, which an Infant hath to baptism, that is, His Parents Consent to dedicate him to God.

3. And to the third, His Title-condition to the Benefits of Baptism, hath two degrees, 1. That he be really dedicated to God by the Heart consent of his Parent as aforesaid: And 2. That his Parent expres this by the solemn engaging him to God in Baptism; the first being necessary as a Means sine quo non, and the second being necessary as a Duty without which he sinneth, (when it's possible,) and as a Means coram Ecclesia to the Priviledges of the visible Church.

The sum of all is, that our meer natural Interest in our Children is not their Title-condition to Baptism or to Salvation, but only that presupposed state which enableth us by Gods Consent to Covenant for them: But their Title-condition to Baptism and Salvation, is our Covenanting for them, or voluntary dedicating them to God; which we do 1. Virtually, when we dedicate our selves, and all that we have or shall have, 2. Actually, when our Hearts consent particularly for them, and Actually devote them to God, before Baptism: 3. Sacramentally, when we express this in our solemn baptismal covenanting and dedication.

Consider exactly of this again; and if you loath distinguishing, confess ingeniously that you loath the truth, or the necessary means of knowing it.

Quest. 39. What is the true meaning of Sponsors, Patrimi or God-fathers as we call them? And is it lawful to make use of them?

Answ. 1. TO the first question; all Men have not the same thoughts either of their Original, or of their present Use.

1. Some think that they were Sponsors or Sureties for the Parents rather than the Child at first: And that when many in Times of Persecution, Heresie and Apostasie, did baptize their Children this month or year, and the next month or year apostatize and deny Christ themselves, that the Sponsors were only credible Christians witnessing that they believed that the Parents were credible firm Believers, and not like to apostatize. 2. Others think that they were undertakers, that if the Parents did apostatize or die, they would see to the Christian Education of the Child themselves. 3. Others think that they did both these together: (which is my Opinion;) viz. That they witnessed the probability of the Parents fidelity; but promised that if they should either apostatize or die, they would see that the Children were piously educated. 4. Others think that they were absolute Undertakers that the Children should be piously educated, whether the Parents died or apostatized or not: So that they went joint-undertakers with the Parents in their Life-time. 5. And I have lately met with some that maintain that the God-fathers and God-mothers, become Proprietors, and Adopt the Child, and take him for their own, and that this is the sense of the Church of England. But I believe them not for these Reasons.

1. There is no such word in the Liturgy, Doctrine or Canons of the Church of England: And that is not to be feigned and fathered on them, which they never said.

2. It would be against the Law of Nature to force all Parents to give the sole propriety, or joynt-propriety in their Children to others. Nature hath given the propriety to themselves, and we cannot rob them of it.

3. It would be heinously injurious to the Children of Noble and Learned Persons, if they must be forced to give them up to the Propriety and Education of others, even of such as perhaps are lower and more unfit for it than themselves.

4. It would be more heinously injurious to all God-fathers and God-mothers, who must all make other Mens Children their own, and therefore must use them as their own.

5. It would keep most Children unbaptized; because if it were once understood that they must take them as their own, few would be Sponsors to the Children of the Poor, for fear of keeping them; and few but the Ignorant that know not what they do, would be Sponsors for any, because of the greatness of the Charge, and their averseness to adopt the Children of others.

6. It would make great Confusion in the State, while all Men were bound to exchange Children with another.

7. I never knew one Man or Woman that was a God-father or God-mother on such Terms, nor that took the Child to be their own: And if such a one should be found among ten thousand, that is no rule to discern the Judgment of the Church by.

8. And in Confirmation the God-father and God-mother is expresly said to be for this use, to be Witnesses that the Party is confirmed.

9. And in the Priests speech to the Adult that come for Baptism, in the Office of Baptism of those of riper Years, it is the Persons themselves that are to Promise and Covenant for themselves, and the God-fathers and God-mothers are only called [these your Witnesses.] And if they be but Witnesses to the adult, it's like they are not Adopters of Infants.

II. Those that doubt of the Lawfulness of using Sponsors for their Children, do it on these two accounts: 1. As supposing it unlawful to make so promiscuous an Adoption of Children, or of choosing another to be a Covenanter for the Child instead of the Parent, to whom it belongeth; or to commit their Children to anothers either propriety, or education, or formal Promise of that which belongeth to education, when they never mean to perform it, nor can do. 2. Because they take it for an Adding to the Ordinance of God, a thing which Scripture never mentioneth. To which I answer.

1. I grant it unlawful to suppose another to be the Parent or Proprietor that is not: Or to suppose him to have that Power and Interest in your Child which he hath not: Or to desire him to undertake what he cannot perform, and which neither he nor you intend he shall perform: I grant that you are not bound to alienate the Propriety of your Children, nor to take in another to be joint-proprietors; nor to put out your Children to the God-fathers education. So that if you will misunderstand the Use of Sponsors, then indeed you will make them unlawful to be so used.

But if you take them but as the ancient Churches did, for such as do attest the Parents fidelity (in their perswasion,) and do Promise first to mind you of your Duty, and next to take care of the Childrens pious Education if you die, I know no Reason you have to scruple this much.

Yea more, it is in your own Power to agree with the the God-fathers, that they ſhall repreſent your own Perſons, and ſpeak and promiſe what they do, as your deputies only, in your names? And what have you againſt this? Suppoſe you were ſick, lame, impriſoned or baniſhed, would you not have your Child baptized? And how ſhould that be done, but by your deputing another to repreſent you in entring him into Covenant with God?

Object. But when the Church-men mean another thing, this is but to juggle with the World.

Anſw. How can you prove that the Authority that made or impoſed the Liturgy, meant any other thing? And other individuals are not the Maſters of your Senſe. 2. Yea, and if the Impoſers had meant ill, in a thing that may be done well, you may diſcharge your Conſcience by doing it well, and making a ſufficient Profeſſion of your better Senſe.

2. And then it will be no ſinful Addition to Gods Ordinance, to determine of a lawful Circumſtance, which he hath left to humane Prudence: As to chooſe a meet Deputy, Witneſs or Sponſor, who promiſeth nothing but what is meet.

Queſt. 40. On whoſe account or right is it that the Infant hath Title to Baptiſm and its Benefits? Is it on the Parents, Anceſtors, Sponſors, the Churches, the Miniſters, the Magiſtrates, or his own?

Anſw. THE Titles are very various that are pretended: Let us examine them all.

I. I cannot think that a Magiſtrates Command to baptize an Infant, giveth him right, 1. Becauſe there is no proof of the validity of ſuch a Title: 2. Becauſe the Magiſtrate can command no ſuch thing if it be againſt Gods Word, as this is, which would level the caſe of the Seed of Heathens and Believers. And I know but few of that Opinion.

II. I do not think that the Miniſter as ſuch giveth Title to the Infant: For 1. He is no Proprietor, 2. He can ſhew no ſuch power or grant from God: 3. He muſt baptize none but thoſe that antecedently have right. 4. Elſe he alſo might level all, and take in Heathens Children with Believers: 5. Nor is this pretended to by many, that I know of.

III. I cannot think that it is a particular Church that muſt give this Right, or perform the Condition of it. For 1. Baptiſm (as is aforeſaid) as ſuch, doth only make a Chriſtian, and a member of the Univerſal Church, and not of any particular Church. And 2. The Church is not the proprietor of the Child. 3. No Scripture Commiſſion can be ſhewed for ſuch a Power. Where hath God ſaid, All that any particular Church will receive, ſhall have right to Baptiſm? 4. By what act muſt the Church give this right? If by baptizing him, the queſtion is of his antecedent right? If by willing that he be baptized, 1. If they will that one be baptized that hath no right to it, their will is ſinful, and therefore unfit to give him right. 2. And the baptizing Miniſter hath more Power than a thouſand or ten thouſand private Men, to judge who is to be baptized. 5. Elſe a Church might ſave all Heathens Children that they can but baptize, and ſo level Infidels and Chriſtians Seed. 6. It is not the Church in general, but ſome one Perſon, that muſt educate the Child: Therefore the Church cannot ſo much as Promiſe for its Education: The Church hath nothing to do with thoſe that are without: But only with her own; and Heathens Children are not her own, nor expoſed to her Occupation.

IV. I believe not that it is the Univerſal Church that giveth the Infant-title to Baptiſm: For, 1. He that giveth Title to the Covenant and Baptiſm, doth it as a performer of the Moral Condition of that Title. But God hath no where made the Churches Faith, to be the condition of Baptiſm or Salvation, either to Infidels or their Seed. 2. Becauſe the Univerſal Church is a body that cannot be conſulted with to give their Vote and Conſent: Nor have they any Deputies to do it by. For there is no Univerſal Viſible Governour: And if you will pretend every Prieſt to be commiſſioned to act and judge in the Name of the Univerſal Church, you will want proof, and that's before confuted. 3. If all have right that the Univerſal Church offereth up to God, or any Miniſter or Biſhop be counted its Deputy or Agent to that end, it is in the Power of that Miniſter (as is ſaid) to level all, and to baptize and ſave all; which is contrary to the Word of God.

V. I believe that God-fathers as ſuch, being no Adopters or Proprietors, are not the performers of the Condition of Salvation for the Infant, nor give him right to be baptized. 1. Becauſe he is not their Own, and therefore their will or act cannot go for his: Becauſe there is no Word of God for it that all ſhall be baptized or ſaved that any Chriſtians will be Sponſors for. Gods Church bleſſings be not tyed to ſuch inventions, that were not in being when Gods Laws were made. Where there is no Promiſe or Word, there is no Faith. 3. No Sponſors are ſo much as lawful (as is ſhewed before) who are not Owners, or their Deputies, or meer ſecondary ſubſervient Parties, who ſuppoſe the principal Covenanting Party. 4. And as to the Infants Salvation, the Sponſors may (too oft) be ignorant Infidels and Hypocrites themſelves, that have no true Faith for themſelves; and therefore not enough to ſave another. 5. And it were ſtrange if God ſhould make no Promiſe to a wicked Parent for his own Child, and yet ſhould promiſe to ſave by Baptiſm all that ſome wicked and hypocrite God-fathers will offer him. And that thus the Seed of Heathens and Chriſtians ſhould be levelled, and yet an ignorant bold undertaker to carry away the Priviledge of ſaving Perſons from them both. All this is but Mens unproved Imaginations. He that never commandeth God-fathers; but forbiddeth the Uſurping ſort, and only alloweth humane Prudence to uſe the lawful ſort, did never put the Souls of all Children, Chriſtians and Heathens into their Hands, (no more than into the Hands of the Prieſt that baptizeth them.)

VI. I do not find that remote Anceſtors that are dead, or that are not Proprietors of the Children, are the Performers of the Condition by which they have right to Baptiſm or Salvation. 1. Becauſe God hath put that Power and Work in the Hands of others, even the Parents, which they cannot nullifie. 2. Becauſe the Promiſe of Mercy to Thouſands is on Suppoſition that the Succeſſors make no Interceſſion. 3. Elſe the threatnings to the Seed of the Wicked would ſignifie nothing, nor would any in the World be excluded from right, but all be levelled; becauſe Noah was the common Father of Mankind: And if you lay it on dead Anceſtors, you have no Rule where to ſtop till you come to Noah.

VII. I conclude therefore that it is, clearly the immediate Parents, (both or one) and probably any true domeſtick Owner of the Child, who hath the Power to chooſe or refuſe for him; and ſo to enter him into Covenant with God, and ſo by Conſent to perform the Condition of his Right. For 1. Abundance of Promiſes are made to the faithful and their Seed, of which I have ſpoke at large in my Book of Infant Baptiſm. And beſides the Puniſhment of Adams Sin, there is ſcarce a Parent infamous for Sin in Scripture, but his Poſterity falleth under the Puniſhment, as for a ſecondary Original Sin or guilt. As the caſe of Cain, Cham, the Sodomites, the Amalekites, the Jews, Achan, Gehazi, &c. ſhew. And 1 Cor. 7. 14. it is expreſly ſaid, Elſe were your Children unclean, but now are they holy (of the ſenſe of which I have ſpoke as afore-cited.)

Object. But if Owners may ſerve, one may buy multitudes, and a King or Lord of ſlaves, whoſe Own the People are, may cauſe them all to be baptized and ſaved.

Anſw.

Answ. 1. Remember that I say, that the Christian Parents Right is clear, but I take the other as more dark: For it is principally grounded on Abraham and the Israelites circumcising their Children born to them in the House or bought with Money: And how far the parity of Reason here will reach is hard to know. All that I say is, that I will not deny it, because favores sunt ampliandi. 2. If such a Prince be an Hypocrite, and not a sincere Christian himself, his faith or consent cannot save others, that cannot save himself. 3. It is such a propriety as is conjunct with a Divine Concession only that giveth this power of consenting for an Infant: Now we find clear proof of God's Concession to Natural Parents, and probable proof of his Concession of it to Domestick Deut. 29. 10, 11, 12, 13. Owners, but no further that I know of. For, 1. It is an Act of God's Love to the Child for the Parents sake; and therefore to such Children as we are supposed to have a special nearness to, and Love for. 2. And it is a consent and covenanting which he calls for, which obligeth the promiser to consequent pious education, which is a domestick act. 3. They are comprized in the Name of Parents, which those that adopt them and educate them may be called. 4. And the Infants are their Children, not their Slaves. But now if the Emperor of Moscovy, Indostan, &c. had the propriety in all his People as Slaves, this would not imitate paternal interest and love, but tyranny, nor could he be their domestical educater. Therefore I must limit it to a pro-parent, or domestical educating proprietor.

Quest. 41. Are they really baptized who are baptized according to the English Liturgie and Canons, where the Parent seemeth excluded, and those to consent for the Infant who have no power to do it?

Answ. I Find some puzzled with this doubt, whether all our Infants Baptism be not a meer Nullity: For, say they, the outward washing without covenanting with God, is no more Baptism than the Body or Corpse is a Man. The Covenant is the chief essential part of Baptism. And he that was never entered into Covenant with God was never baptized. But Infants according to the Liturgie, are not entered into Covenant with God; which they would prove thus: They that neither ever covenanted by themselves, or by any authorized Person for them, were never entered into Covenant with God (For that's no act of theirs which is done by a stranger that hath no power to do it) But, &c.——That they did it not themselves is undenyable: That they did it not by any Person empowred by God to do it for them they prove, 1. Because God-fathers are the Persons [by whom] the Infant is said to promise: But God-fathers have no power from God, 1. Not by Nature, 2. Not by Scripture. 2. Because the Parents are not only not included as Covenanters, but positively excluded, 1. In that the whole Office of covenanting for the Child from first to last is laid on others: 2. In that the twenty ninth Canon saith, [No Parent shall be urged to be present; nor admitted to answer as God-father for his own Child:] By which the Parent that hath the power is excluded. Therefore our Children are all unbaptized.

To all this I answer, 1. That the Parents consent is supposed, though he be absent: 2. That the Parent is not required to be absent but only not to be urged to be present; but he may if he will: 3. That the reason of that Canon seems to be their jealousie, lest any would exclude God-fathers. 4. While the Church hath no where declared what Person the Sponsors bear, nor any further what they are to do, than to speak the covenanting words, and promise to see to the pious education of the Child, the Parents may agree that the God-fathers shall do all this as their Deputies, primarily, and in their steads, and secondarily as friends that promise their assistance. 5. While Parents really consent, it is not their silence that nullifieth the Covenant. 6. All Parents are supposed and required to be themselves the choosers of the Sponsors or Sureties, and also to give notice to the Minister before hand; by which it appeareth that their Consent is presupposed. And though my own judgment be, that they should be the principal Covenanters for the Child expresly, yet the want of that expressness will not make us unbaptized Persons.

Quest. 42. But the great Question is, How the Holy Ghost is given to Infants in Baptism? And whether all the Children of true Christians have inward sanctifying Grace? Or whether they can be said to be justified, and to be in a state of Salvation, that are not inherently sanctified? And whether any fall from this Infant state of Salvation?

Answ. OF all these great difficulties I have said what I know, in my Appendix to Infant Baptism to Mr. Bedford and Dr. Ward, and of Bishop Davenant's judgment. And I confess that my judgment agreeth more in this with Davenant's than any others, saving that he doth not so much appropriate the benefits of Baptism to the Children of sincere believers as I do. And though by a Letter in pleading Davenant's cause, I was the occasion of good Mr. Gatakers printing of his answer to him, yet I am still most inclined to his judgment; not that all the baptized, but that all the baptized seed of true Christians are pardoned, justified, adopted, and have a title to the Spirit and Salvation.

But the difficulties in this case are so great, as drive away most who do not equally perceive the greater inconveniencies which we must choose, if this opinion be forsaken: That is, that all Infants must be taken to be out of the Covenant of God, and to have no promise of Salvation. Whereas surely the Law of Grace as well as the Covenant of Works included all the seed in their capacity.

1 To the first of these Questions, I answer, 1. As all true Believers, so all their Infants do receive initially by the promise, and by way of obsignation and Sacramental Investiture in Baptism, a Jus Relationis, a right of peculiar Relation to all the Three Persons in the blessed Trinity: As to God, as their reconciled adopting Father, and to Jesus Christ as their Redeemer and Actual Head and Justifier, so also to the Holy Ghost as their Regenerater and Sanctifier. This Right and Relation adhereth to them, and is given them in order to future actual operation and communion. As a Marriage Covenant giveth the Relation and Right to one another, in order to the subsequent Communion and Duties of a married Life: And as he that sweareth allegiance to a King, or is listed into an Army, or is entred into a School, receiveth the Right and Relation, and is so correlated, as obligeth to the mutual subsequent Office of each, and giveth right to many particular benefits. By this Right and Relation, God is his own God and Father; Christ is his own Head and Saviour; and the Holy Spirit is his own Sanctifier, without asserting what operations are already wrought on his Soul, but only to what future ends and uses these Relations are. Now as these Rights and Relations are given immediately, so these Benefits which are relative, and the Infant immediately capable of them, are presently given by way of Communion: He hath presently the pardon of original Sin, by virtue of the Sacrifice, Merit and Intercession of Christ. He hath a state of Adoption, and Right to Divine Protection, Provision and Church communion according to his natural Capacity, and Right to everlasting Life. Matth. 28 19, 20. 1 Cor. 12, 12, 13. Eph. 4. 4, 5.

2. It must be carefully noted, that the relative Union

Union between Chriſt the Mediator and the baptized Perſons, is that which in Baptiſm is firſt given in order of nature, and that the reſt do flow from this. The Covenant and Baptiſm deliver the Covenanter, 1. From Divine Diſplicency by Reconciliation with the Father, 2. From Legal Penalties by Juſtification by the Son; 3. From Sin it ſelf by the operations of the Holy Ghoſt. But it is Chriſt as our Mediator-Head, that is firſt given us in Relative Union: And then, 1. The Father loveth us with Complacency as in the Son, and for the ſake of his first beloved. 2. And the Spirit which is given us in Relation is firſt the Spirit of Chriſt our Head; and not firſt inherent in us: So that by Union with our Head, that Spirit is next united to us, both relatively, and as radically inherent in the humane Nature of our Lord, to whom we are united. As the Nerves and Animal Spirits which are to operate in all the Body, are radically only in the Head, from whence they flow into, and operate on the Members as there is need (though there may be obſtructions); ſo the Spirit dwelleth in the humane Nature of our Head, and there it can never be loſt; and it is not neceſſary that it dwell in us by way of Radication, but by way of Influence and Operation.

The Spirit is not given radically or immediately to any Chriſtian, but to Chriſt our Head alone, and from Him to us.

Theſe things are diſtinctly and clearly underſtood but by very few; and we are all much in the dark about them. But I think (however doctrinally we may ſpeak better) that moſt Chriſtians are habituated to this perilous miſapprehenſion (which is partly againſt Chriſtianity it ſelf,) that the Spirit floweth immediately from the Divine Nature of the Father and the Son (as to the Authoritative or Poteſtative conveyance) unto our Souls. And we forget that it is firſt given to Chriſt in his Glorified Humanity as our Head, and radicated in him, and that it is the Office of this Glorified Head, to ſend or communicate to all his members from himſelf, that Spirit which muſt operate in them as they have need.

This is plain in many Texts of Scripture, Rom. 8. 32. He that ſpared not his own Son, but gave him up for us all, how ſhall he not alſo with him freely give us all things? (when he giveth him particularly to us)

1 John 5. 11, 12. And this is the record that God hath given us eternal life, and this life is in his Son: He that hath the Son hath the life, and he that hath not the Son hath not the life.

Rom. 8. 9. If any man have not the Spirit of Chriſt, the ſame is none of his.

Eph. 1. 22, 23. And gave him to be the Head over all things to the Church, which is his body, the fulneſs of him that filleth all in all.

John 15. 26. The Advocate or Comforter whom I will ſend unto you from the Father, &c.

John 16, 7. If I depart, I will ſend him unto you.

John 14. 26. The Comforter whom the Father will ſend in my Name.

Gal. 4. 6. And becauſe ye are Sons, God hath ſent forth the Spirit of his Son into your Hearts, crying Abba, Father.

Gal. 2. 20. I live: yet not I, but Chriſt liveth in me (I know that is true of his living in us Objectively and Finally, but that ſeemeth not to be all.)

Col. 3. 3, 4. For ye are dead, and your life is hid with Chriſt in God; when Chriſt who is our Life ſhall appear, then ſhall ye alſo appear with him in Glory. I know that in verſ. 3. by Life is meant Felicity or Glory; but not only; as appeareth by verſ. 4. where Chriſt is called Our Life.

Matth. 28. 19. All power is given unto me in Heaven and Earth——ver. 20. I am with you always——Joh. 13. 3. The Father hath given all things into his hands.

Joh. 17. 2, 3. Thou haſt given him power over all fleſh, that he ſhould give eternal Life to as many as thou haſt given him, and this is Life eternal to know thee, &c.

Joh. 5. 21. The Son quickneth whom he will: v. 26. For as the Father hath Life in himſelf, ſo hath he given to the Son to have Life in himſelf.

Joh. 6. 27. Labour for that meat which endureth to everlaſting life, which the ſon of man ſhall give unto you, for him hath God the Father ſealed.

V. 32, 33. He giveth Life unto the World, V. 53, 54, 55, 56. Whoſo eateth my fleſh and drinketh my blood hath eternal Life——dwelleth in me and I in him——my fleſh is meat indeed——As the Living Father hath ſent me, and I live by the Father, ſo he that eateth me, even he ſhall live by me. V. 63. It is the ſpirit that quickneth: the fleſh profiteth nothing.

Joh. 7. 39. This ſpake he of the ſpirit which they that believe in him ſhould receive. Joh. 3. 34. God giveth not the ſpirit to him by meaſure.

1 Cor. 6. 17. He that is joined to the Lord is one ſpirit.

2 Cor. 3. 17. The Lord is the ſpirit, and where the ſpirit of the Lord is, there is liberty.

Phil. 1. 19. Through the ſupply of the ſpirit of Jeſus Chriſt.

Joh. 15. 4. Abide in me and I in you: As the branch cannot bear fruit of it ſelf, except it abide in the Vine, no more can ye except ye abide in me. V. 5. I am the Vine, ye are the Branches: He that abideth in me and I in him, the ſame bringeth forth much fruit: For without me (or, out of me, or, ſevered from me) ye can do nothing.

I will add no more: All this is proof enough that the Spirit is not given radically or immediately from God to any believer, but to Chriſt, and ſo derivatively from him to us. Not that the Divine Nature in the third Perſon is ſubject to the humane nature in Chriſt; but that God hath made it the office of our Mediators Glorified Humanity, to be the Ciſtern that ſhall firſt receive the Waters of Life, and convey them by the Pipes of his appointed means to all the Offices of his Houſe: Or to be the Head of the Animal Spirits, and by Nerves to convey them to all the Members.

3. We are much in the dark concerning the degree of Infants Glory: And therefore we can as little know, what degree of Grace is neceſſary to prepare them for their Glory.

4. It is certain that Infants before they are glorified, ſhall have all that Grace that is prerequiſite to their preparation and fruition.

5. No ſanctified Perſon on earth is in an immediate capacity for Glory: Becauſe their ſin and imperfection muſt be done away, which is done at the diſſolution of Soul and Body. The very acceſſion of the Soul to God doth perfect it.

6. Infants have no actual Faith or Hope or Love to God to exerciſe, and therefore need not the influence of the Spirit of Chriſt to exerciſe them.

7. We are all ſo very much in the dark, as to the clear and diſtinct apprehenſion of the true nature of original inherent Pravity or Sin, that we muſt needs be as much ignorant of the true nature of that inherent Sanctity or Righteouſneſs which is its contrary, or cure. Learned Illiricus thought it was a Subſtance, which he hath in his Clavis pleaded for at large. Others call it a Habit, others a Nature, or natural Inclination, and a privation of a natural Inclination to God: Others call it an Indiſpoſition of the mind and will, to holy Truth and Goodneſs, and an ill Diſpoſition of them to error and evil. Others call it only the inordinate Luſt of the ſenſitive faculties, with a debility of Reaſon and Will to reſiſt it. And whilſt the nature of the Soul it ſelf and its faculties, are ſo much unknown to it ſelf, the nature of Original Pravity and Righteouſneſs muſt needs be very much unknown.

8. Though an Infant be a diſtinct natural Perſon from his Parents, yet is he not actually a diſtinct Perſon morally, as being not a moral Agent, and ſo not capable of moral Actions good or evil. Therefore his Parents Will goeth for his.

9. His firſt acceptance into the Complacential Love of God (as diſtinct from his Love of Benevolence) is not for any inherent Holineſs in himſelf; but 1. As the Child of a believing Parent who hath dedicated him to Chriſt, and 2. As a Member of Chriſt, in whom he is well pleaſed.

10. Therefore God can complacentially as well as benevolently love an Infant in Chriſt, who only believeth and repenteth by the Parents, and not by himſelf, nor is not yet ſuppoſed to have the ſpirit of ſanctification.

11. For the ſpirit of ſanctification is not the preſuppoſed Condition of his acceptance into Covenant with God, but a gift of the Covenant of God it ſelf, following both the Condition on our part, and our right to be Covenanters or to God's promiſe upon that condition.

12. So the adult themſelves have the operation of the Spirit by which they believe and repent, by which they come to have their Right to God's part in the Covenant of Baptiſm; (for this is antecedent to their Baptiſm!) But they have not that gift of the Spirit, which is called in Scripture, the Spirit of Sanctification, and of Power, Love and a ſound Mind, and is the benefit given by the Covenant of Baptiſm, till afterward; becauſe they muſt be in that Covenant before it can be made good to them. And their Faith or Conſent is their Infants right alſo, antecedent to the Covenant Gift.

Act. 26. 8. 2 Tim. 4. 7. Rom. 8. 30. Gal. 4. 6.

13. There is therefore ſome notable difference between that work of the Spirit by which we firſt repent and believe and ſo have our title to the promiſe of the ſpirit, and that gift of the ſpirit which is promiſed to believers: Which is not only the Spirit of Miracles given in the firſt times, but ſome notable degree of Love to our reconciled Father, ſuitable to the Grace and Goſpel of Redemption and Reconciliation, and is called the Spirit of Chriſt, and the Spirit of Adoption, which the Apoſtles themſelves ſeem not to have received till Chriſt's aſcenſion: And this ſeemeth to be not only different from the Gifts of the Spirit common to Hypocrites and the Unbelievers, but alſo from the ſpecial gift of the Spirit which maketh Men believers: So that Mr. Tho. Hooker ſaith trulier than once I underſtood, that Vocation is a ſpecial Grace of the Spirit, diſtinct from common Grace on the one ſide, and from Sanctification on the other ſide. Whether it be the ſame degree of the Spirit which the faithful had before Chriſt's Incarnation, which cauſeth Men firſt to believe, diſtinct from the higher following degree I leave to enquiry: But the certaineſt diſtinction is from the different effects.

Rom. 8. 9, 16, 26.

14. Though an Infant cannot be either diſpoſed to a holy Life, or fit for Glory immediately, without an inward Holineſs of his own, yet by what is ſaid it ſeemeth plain, that meerly on the account of the Condition performed by the Parent, and of his Union relatively with Chriſt thereupon, and his title to God's promiſe on theſe Grounds, he may be ſaid to be in a ſtate of Salvation; that is, to have the pardon of his Original Sin, deliverance from Hell (in right) Adoption, and a right to the needful operations of the Holy Ghoſt, as given to him in Chriſt, who is the firſt receiver of the Spirit.

15. But when and in what ſort and degree Chriſt giveth the actual operations of the Spirit to all covenanted Infants, it is wonderful hard for us to know. But this much ſeemeth clear, 1. That Chriſt may when he pleaſe work on the Soul of an Infant to change its diſpoſition, before he come to the uſe of Reaſon. 2. That Chriſt and his Spirit as in Covenant with Infants, are ready to give all neceſſary aſſiſtance to Infants for their inherent Sanctification, in the uſe of thoſe means, and on thoſe further conditions, on which we muſt wait for it and expect it. For the Holy Ghoſt is not ſo engaged to us in our Covenant of Baptiſm, as to be obliged preſently to give us all the Grace that we want; but only to give it us on certain further conditions, and in the uſe of certain means. But becauſe this leadeth me up to another queſtion, I will ſuſpend the reſt of the anſwer to this, till that be handled. Only I muſt anſwer this objection.

Mr. Whiſton p. 60. ſheweth [That even the promiſes of a new Heart, &c. Ezek. 36. 37, &c. Though they may run in the external tenour of them abſolutely, yet are not abſolutely abſolute, but have a ſubordinate condition, and that is, That the Parties concerned in them do faithfully uſe the means appointed of God in a ſubſerviency to his working in or beſtowing them the Good promiſed.]

Obj. It is contrary to the holy nature of God, complacentially to love an unſanctified Infant, that is yet in his Original Corruption unchanged, and he juſtifieth none relatively from the guilt of Sin, whom he doth not at once inherently ſanctifie.

Anſw. 1. God's complacential Love reſpecteth every one as he is; for it is Goodneſs only that he ſo loveth. Therefore he ſo loveth not thoſe that either actually or habitually love not him, under any falſe ſuppoſition that they do love him when they do not. His Love therefore to the Adult and Infants differeth as the objects differ. But there is this lovely in ſuch Infants, 1. That they are the Children of believing ſanctified Parents, 2. That they are by his Covenant relatively united to Chriſt, and ſo are lovely as his Members; 3. That they are pardoned all their original Sin; 4. That they are ſet in the way to actual Love and Holineſs; being thus dedicated to God.

2. All imperfect Saints are Sinners; and all Sinners are as ſuch abhorred of God, whoſe pure Eyes cannot behold iniquity. As then it will ſtand with his purity to accept and love the Adult upon their firſt believing, before their further Sanctification, and notwithſtanding the remnant of their Sins, ſo may it do alſo to accept their Infants through Chriſt upon their Dedication.

3. As the actual Sin imputed to Infants was Adams, and their Parents only by Act, and not their own, it is no wonder if upon their Parents Faith and Repentance, Chriſt waſh and juſtifie them from that guilt which aroſe only from anothers act.

4. And then the inherent pravity was the effect of that Act of their Anceſtors, which is forgiven them. And this pravity or inherent original Sin may two ways be ſaid to be mortified radically or virtually or inceptively before any inherent change in them, 1. In that it is mortified in their Parents from whom they derived it, who have the power of chooſing for them, and 2. In that they are by Covenant engrafted into Chriſt, and ſo related to the cauſe of their future ſanctification; yea, 3. In that alſo they are by Covenant and their Parents promiſe, engaged to uſe thoſe means which Chriſt hath appointed for ſanctification.

[God's being a God to any individual Perſon doth require and preſuppoſe that they do for the preſent, ſuppoſing them capable, or for the future as ſoon as capable, take God in Chriſt a their God.] Ibid. p. 61.

5. And it muſt be remembred that as this is but an inceptive preparatory change, ſo the very pardon of the inherent vitioſity is not perfect (as I have elſewhere largely proved) (hower ſome Papiſts and Proteſtants deny it.) While ſin remaineth, ſin and corruption is ſtill indwelling, beſides all the unremoved Penalties of it, the very being of it, proveth it to be ſo far unpardoned, in that it is not yet aboliſhed, and the continuance of it being not its ſmalleſt Puniſhment, as permitted, and the Spirit not given ſo far as to cure it. Imperfect pardon may conſiſt with a preſent right both to further ſanctification by the Spirit, and ſo to Heaven.

Obj. Chriſt's Body hath no unholy Members.

Anſw. 1. 1 Cor. 7. 14. Now are your Children holy: They are not wholly unholy who have all the foredeſcribed holineſs. 2. As Infants in Nature want memory and actual reaſon, and yet initially are Men; ſo, ſo, as Chriſts members, they may want actual and habitual Faith and Love, and yet initially be ſanctified, by their Union with him and his Spirit, and their Parents Dedication, and be in the way for more, as they grow fit; and be Chriſtians and Saints in fieri, or initially only, as they are Men.

Queſt. 43. Is the right of the Baptized (Infants or Adult) to the ſanctifying operations of the Holy Ghoſt, now Abſolute, or ſuſpended on further Conditions? And are the Parents further duty for their Children ſuch conditions of their Childrens reception of the actual Aſſiſtances of the Spirit? Or are Childrens own actions ſuch Conditions? And may Apoſtate Parents forfeit the Covenant Benefits to their Baptized Infants? Or not?

Anſw. THE queſtion is great and difficult, and few dare meddle with it. And almoſt all Infant-caſes are to us obſcure.

1. 1. It is certain that it is the Parents great duty to bring up their Children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord.

Eph. 6. 4, 5. Col. 3. 21. Gen. 18. 19. Deut. 6. 6, 7, 8. & 11. 18. 19, 20.

2. It is certain that God hath appointed this to be the means of their actual knowledge, faith and holineſs.

3. And God doth not appoint ſuch means unneceſſarily or in vain: Nor may we ordinarily expect his grace but in the uſe of the means of Grace, which he hath appointed us to uſe.

4. It is certain that God's receiving the Children of the faithful is an act of God's Love to the Parents as well as the Children, and promiſed as a part of his bleſſing on themſelves.

5. It is certain that theſe Parents hold their own mercies upon the condition of their own continued fidelity: And (let their Apoſtaſie be on other reaſons never ſo impoſſible, or not future, yet) the promiſe of continuance and conſummation of the perſonal felicity of the greateſt Saint on earth, is ſtill conditional, upon the condition of his perſevering fidelity.

Second Commandment. Prov. 20. 7

6. Even before Children are capable of Inſtruction, there are certain duties impoſed by God on the Parents for their ſanctification; viz. 1. That the Parents pray earneſtly and believingly for them. 2. That they themſelves ſo live towards God as may invite him ſtill to bleſs their Children for their ſakes, as he did Abraham's, and uſually did to the faithful's ſeed.

7. It is certain that the Church ever required Parents; not only to enter their Children into the Covenant, and ſo to leave them, but to do their after duty for their good, and to pray for them, and educate them according to their Covenant.

8. It is plain that if there were none to promiſe ſo to educate them, the Church would not baptize them. And God himſelf who allowed the Iſraelites, and ſtill alloweth us to bring our Children into his Covenant, doth it on this ſuppoſition, that we promiſe alſo to go on to do our duty for them, and that we actually do it.

9. All this ſet together maketh it plain, 1. That God never promiſeth the adult in Baptiſm, though true believers, that he will work in them all graces further by his ſanctifying Spirit, let them never ſo much neglect or reſiſt him: Or that he will abſolutely ſee that they never ſhall reſiſt him: Nor that the Spirit ſhall ſtill help them, though they neglect all his means; or that he will keep them from neglecting the means (Election may ſecure this to the Elect as ſuch; but the Baptiſmal Covenant as ſuch, ſecureth it not to the baptized, nor to believers as ſuch) 2. And conſequently that Infants are in Covenant with the Holy Ghoſt ſtill conditionally as their Parents are: And that the meaning of it is, that the Holy Ghoſt as your Sanctifier will afford you all neceſſary help, in the uſe of thoſe means which he hath appointed you to receive his help in.

The Holy Ghoſt is promiſed in Baptiſm to give the Child grace in his Parents and his own faithful uſe of the appointed means.

Obj. Infants have no means to uſe.

Anſw. While Infants ſtand on their Parents account, or Wills, the Parents have means to uſe for the continuance of their grace, as well as for the beginning of it.

10. Therefore I cannot ſee but that if a believer ſhould apoſtatize (whether any do ſo is not the queſtion) and his Infant not to be made anothers Child, he forfeiteth the benefits of the Covenant to his Infant. But if the propriety in the Infant be tranſferred to another, it may alter the caſe.

11. And how dangerouſly Parents may make partial forfeitures of the Spirits aſſiſtance to their Children, and operations on them, by their own ſinful Lives, and neglect of Prayer, and of prudent and holy education, even in particular acts, I fear many believing Parents never well conſidered.

12. Yet is not this forfeiture ſuch as obligeth God to deny his Spirit: For he may do with his own, as a free Benefactor, as he liſt; and may have mercy freely, beyond his promiſe (though not againſt his word) on whom he will have mercy. But I ſay that he that conſidereth the woful unfaithfulneſs and neglect of moſt Parents, even the religious, in the great work of holy educating their Children, may take the blame of their ungodlineſs on themſelves, and not lay it on Chriſt or the Spirit who was in Covenant with them as their Sanctifier, ſeeing he promiſed but conditionally to give them the ſanctifying heavenly Influences of his Life, Light, and Love, in their juſt uſe of his appointed means, according to their abilities.

M. Whiſton p. 53. [As Abraham as a ſingle Perſon in Covenant was to accept of and perform the condition of the Covenant---- ſo as a Parent he had ſomething of duty incumbent on him with reference to his (immediate) ſeed: And as his faithful performance of that duty incumbent on him in his ſingle capacity, ſo his performing that duty incumbent on him as a Parent in reference to his ſeed was abſolutely neceſſary in order to his enjoying the good promiſed, with reference to himſelf and his ſeed: Proved Gen. 17. 1. and 18. 19.] He proveth that the promiſe is conditional, and that as to the continuance of the Covenant ſtate the conditions are 1. The Parents upright Life. 2. His duty to his Children well done: 3. The Childrens own duty as they are capable.

13. Alſo as ſoon as Children come to a little uſe of Reaſon, they ſtand conjunctly on their Parents Wills and on their own. As their Parents are bound to teach and rule them, ſo they are bound to learn of them and be ruled by them for their good. And though every Sin of a Parent or a Child be not a total forfeiture of Grace, yet both their notable actual Sins may juſtly be puniſhed, with a denial of ſome further help of the ſpirit which they grieve and quench.

II. And now I may ſeaſonably anſwer the former queſtion, whether Infants Baptiſmal ſaving Grace may be loſt, of which I muſt for the moſt that is to be ſaid refer the Reader to Davenant (in Mr. Bedford's Book) on this ſubject, and to Dr. Sam. Ward joined with it, (though Mr. Gataker's anſwers are very learned and conſiderable:) And to my ſmall Book called, My Judgment of Perſeverance.

Auguſtine who firſt roſe up for the doctrine of perſeverance, againſt its Adverſaries, carried it no higher than to all the Elect as ſuch, and not at all to all the ſanctified; but oft affirmeth that ſome that were juſtified, ſanctified and love God, and are in a ſtate of Salvation, are not elect, and fall away: But ſince the Reformation, great reaſons have been brought to carry it further to all the truly ſanctified; of which cauſe Zanchius was one of the firſt learned and zealous Patrons, that with great diligence in long diſputations maintained it. All that I have now to ſay is, that I had rather with Davenant believe that the fore-deſcribed Infant ſtate of Salvation, which came by the Parents, may be loſt by the Parents and the Children, though ſuch a ſanctified renewed nature in holy Habits of Love as the adult have be never lost) than believe that no Infants are in the Covenant of Grace and to be baptized.

Obj. But the Child once in Possession shall not be punished for the Parents Sin.

Answ. 1. This point is not commonly well understood. I have by me a large Disputation proving from the current of Scripture, a secondary original Sin, besides that from Adam, and a secondary Punishment ordinarily inflicted on Children for their Parents Sins, besides the common Punishment of the World for the first Sin. 2. But the thing in question is but a loss of that Benefit which they received and hold only by another. It is not so properly called a Punishment for anothers Sin, as a non-deliverance, or a non-continuance of their Deliverance, which they were to receive on the Condition of anothers Duty.

Obj. But the Church retaineth them as her members, and so their right is not lost by the fault or apostasie of the Parents.

Answ. 1. Lost it is one way or other, with multitudes of true Christians Children, who never shew any signs of Grace, and prove sometimes the worst of Men. And God breaketh not his Covenant.

2. How doth the Church keep the Greeks Children that are made Janizaries?

3. No Man stayeth in the Church without Title. If the Church or any Christians take them as their own, that's another matter: I will not now stay to discuss the question, whether Apostates baptized Infants be still Church-members? But what I have said of their right before God, seemeth plain.

4. And mark, that on whomsoever you build an Infants Right, you may as well say, that he may suffer for other Mens default: For, if you build it on the Magistrate, the Minister, the Church, the God-fathers, any of them may fail: They may deny him Baptism it self: They may fail in his Education: Shall he suffer then for want of Baptism, or good Education when it is their faults? Whoever a Child or Man is to receive a Benefit by, the failing of that Person may deprive him of that Benefit. More Objections I must pretermit, to avoid prolixity.

Quest. 44. Doth Baptism always oblige us at the present, and give Grace at the present? And is the Grace which is not given till long after, given by Baptism? Or an effect of Baptism?

Answ. I Add this Case for two Reasons, 1. To open their pernicious Error who think that a Covenant or Promise made by us to God, only for a future distant Duty (as to repent and believe before we die,) is all that is essential to our Baptismal Covenanting. 2. To open the ordinary saying of many Divines, who say, that Baptism worketh not always at the present, but sometimes only long afterward. The Truth I think may be thus expressed.

1. It is not Baptism, if there be not the Profession of a present Belief, a present Consent, and a present Dedition, or Resignation, or Dedication of the Person to God, by the adult for themselves, and by Parents for their Infants. He that only saith, [I promise to believe, repent and obey only at twenty or thirty Years of Age,] is not morally baptized; for it is another Covenant of his own which he would make, which God accepteth not.

2. It is not only a future, but a present Relation to God, as his Own, his Subjects, his Children by Redemption, to which the baptized Person doth Consent.

3. It is a present Correlation and not a future only, to which God consenteth on his part, to be their Father, Saviour and Sanctifier, their Owner peculiarly, their Ruler graciously, and their chief Benefactor, and Felicity, and End.

4. It is not only a future but a present Remission of Sin, and Adoption and Right to temporal and eternal Mercies, which God giveth to true Consenters by his Covenant and Baptism.

5. But those Mercies which we are not at that present capable of, are not to be given at the present, but afterward when we are capable: As the particular Assistances of the Spirit, necessary upon all future particular Occasions, &c. The pardon of future Sins; Rom. 6.1, actual Glorification, &c. 4,6 7, &c.

6. And the Duties which are to be performed only for the future, we must Promise at present to perform only for the future, in their season, to our lives end. Therefore we cannot Promise that Infants shall believe, obey or love God, till they are naturally capable of doing it.

7. If any Hypocrite do not indeed Repent, Believe, or Consent when he is baptized, or baptizeth his Child, he so far faileth in the Covenant professed: And so much of Baptism is undone; and God doth Acts 8.37, not enter into the present Covenant-Relations to him, 38. 13. 20,21, as being uncapable thereof. 22, 23.

8. If this Person afterwards Repent and Believe, it is a doing of the same Thing which was omitted in Baptism, and a making of the same Covenant; but not as a part of his Baptism it self, which is long past.

9. Nor is he hereupon to be Re-baptized; because the external Part was done before, and is not to be twice done. But the internal Part which was omitted, is now to be done, not as a part of Baptism (old or new); but as a Part of Penitence, for his Omission.

Object. If Covenanting be a part of Baptism, then this Person, whose Covenant is never a part of his Baptism, doth live and die unbaptized.

Answ. As baptism signifieth only the external Ordinance, heart-covenanting is no part of it, but the Profession of it is: And if there was no Profession of Faith made, by word or sign, the Person is unbaptized. But as Baptism signifieth the internal Part with the external, so he will be no baptized Person while he liveth; that is, One that in Baptism did truly Consent, and receive the spiritual Relations to God: But he will have the same thing in another way of Gods Appointment.

10. When this Person is after sanctified, it is by Gods Performance of the same Covenant in specie, which Baptism is made to seal, that God doth pardon, justifie and adopt him: But this is not by his past Baptism as a Cause, but by after Grace and Absolution. The same Covenant doth it, but not Baptism. Because indeed the Covenant or Promise saith, [When ever thou believest and repentest, I will forgive thee: But Baptism saith, Because thou now believest, I do forgive thee, and wash away thy Sin;] and maketh present Application.

11. So if an Infant or Adult Person live without Grace, and at Age be Ungodly, his Baptismal Covenant is violated; and his after Conversion (or Faith and Repentance) is neither the fulfilling of Gods Covenant, nor of his Baptism neither. The Reason is, because though Pardon and Adoption be given by that Conditional Covenant of Grace which Baptism sealeth, yet so is not that first Grace of Faith and Repentance which is the Condition of Pardon and Adoption, and the Title to Baptism it self. Else Infidels should have right to Baptism, and thereby to Faith and Repentance. But these are only the free Gifts of God to the Elect, and the fulfilling of some absolute Predictions concerning the Calling of the Elect, and the fulfilling of Gods Will or Covenant to Christ the Mediator, that He shall see the travail of his Soul and be satisfied, and possess those that are given him by the Father.

12. But when the Condition of the Covenant is at first performed by the Parent for the Infant, and this Covenant never broken on this Childs behalf, (notwithstanding Sins of Infirmity,) in this case the first actual Faith and Repentance of Children as they grow up, is from Gods fulfilling of his Baptismal Covenant with them. The Reason is, because that God in in that Covenant did give them a Right of Relation to the Holy Spirit in Christ their Head, as their Sanctifier, to operate on them as they are capable. But if they first prove Apostates and be after converted, God is disobliged (yea, to hypocrites never was obliged) as to the Engagement made by him in Baptism: And doth now 1. Freely give them Faith and Repentance as a Benefactor to his Elect, and then 2. As a Covenanter give them Pardon and Adoption, &c.

13. So to the adult, that truly made the Baptismal Covenant and never apostatized from it, all the Grace that God giveth them through their Lives, is his fulfilling of his Promises made to them, and sealed by Baptism, and a fruit of their Baptism. But to Hypocrites and Apostates it is otherwise, as is before explained.

Quest. 45. What is a proper Violation of our Baptismal Covenant.

Joh. 3.16, 17, 18, 36. Joh. 1.11, 12, 13. Answ. NOte well, that there is a wide difference between these Question, 1. When doth a Man miss of, or lose his present Part in the Covenant or Promise of God in the Gospel? (This is as long as he is Impenitent, an Unbeliever and Refuser.) 2. When doth a Man totally lose his Part and hope in that Promise or Covenant of God, so as to be liable to all the Penalty of it? (That is only by final Impenitence, Unbelief and Refusal, when Life is ended.) 3. And when doth a Man violate his own Covenant or Promise made to God in Baptism? Which is our present Question. To which I answer,

1. This Promise hath parts Essential and parts Integral: We Promise not both these Parts alike, nor on the same Terms: Though both be promised. The 2 Pet. 2. 20 21, 22, 23. Heb. 6. 2, 4 5, 6, 7, 8. Heb. 10. 26, 27, 28. 1 Joh. 1. 9, 10. James 3. 2, 3. essential Parts, are our essential Duties of Christianity, (Faith, Love, Repentance in the essential Parts,) &c. The Integrals are the Integral Duties of Christianity.

2. He that performeth not the essential Duties is an Apostate, or Hypocrite.

3. He that performeth not the Integral Duties is a Sinner, not only against the Law of Nature, and Christs Precepts, but his own Promise; (and in this sense we all confess our breach of Covenant with Christ) But he is no Apostate, Hypocrite, or out of Covenant.

Quest. 46. May not Baptism in some Cases be repeated? And when?

Answ. 1. YOu must distinguish between Baptism, taken Morally, or only Physically. 2. Between Baptism Morally, as it is a Church or Visible Covenant, and as a Heart-Covenant. 3. Between real Baptism and seeming Baptism, which is a Nullity. 4. Between certain Reception of Baptism, and that which is uncertain or justly doubted of. And so I answer,

1. Real and Certain Baptism as a visible Church-Ordinance may not be repeated. Though the Heart Covenant was wanting. And though it wanted not only decent modes, but integral Parts.

2. But in these Cases Baptism may be used where it seemed to have been received before.

1. When the Person made no Profession of the Christian Faith (nor his Parents for him, if an Infant). 2. If that Profession notoriously wanted an Essential Part; as if he only professed to believe in God the Father, and not in the Son, or the Holy Ghost. 3. If the Minister only baptized him into the Name of the Father, or Son, or left out any essential Part. 4. If the Person or Minister only contracted for a distant futurity, (as I will be a Christian when I am old, &c.) and not for the present: Which is not to be Christned, but only to Promise to be christened hereafter. 5. If all Application of Water (or any watery Element) was omitted, which is the external Sin. 6. Of the Baptizers Power I shall speak anon. 7. If the Church or the Person himself have just cause of doubting, whether he was truly baptized or not, to do it again, with hypothetical Expressions, [If thou art not baptized, I baptize thee] yea, or simply while that is understood, is lawful, and fit. And it is not to be twice baptized Morally, but only Physically, as I have fully opened in the Question of Re-ordination, to which I must refer the Reader.

3. And I confess I make little doubt but that those in Acts 19. were Re-baptized, notwithstanding the witty Evasion invented by Phil. Marnixius Aldegondus and Beza's Improvement of it, and the now common Reception of that Interpretation; for 1. A new and forced Exposition which no Reader dreameth of till it be put into his Head, is usually to be suspected, lest art deceive us. Of Acts 19. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5.

2. The omission of the Holy Ghost is an essential defect, and maketh Baptism specifically another thing: And he were now to be re-baptized who should be so baptized. Whether it were re-baptizing.

3. Whatever some say in heat against the Papists, Johns Baptism and our Christian Baptism are so specifically distinct also, that he that had now but Johns were to be yet baptized: The Person of the Messiah himself being not determinately put into Johns Baptism as such: Nor can it be supposed that all the Jews that John baptized, were baptized into the Profession of Faith in this numerical Person Jesus, but only to an unknown Saviour undetermined: However he pointed to Christ in the hearing of some of his Disciples. We must not run from plain Truth in peevishness of Opposition to Papists or any other Men.

4. The fifth Verse would not be true of Johns Baptism as the History sheweth, that [When Johns hearers heard this, they were baptized into the Name of the Lord Jesus]. This is contrary to the Text that recordeth it.

5. In the fourth Verse the words, [that is, on Christ Jesus] are plainly Pauls expository words of Johns, and not Johns words: John baptized them [into the Name of the Messiah that should come after him,] which indeed saith Paul was Christ Jesus, though not then personally determined by John.

6. The Connexion of the fourth, fifth and sixth Verses puts all out of doubt: 1. In the fourth Verse the last Words are Pauls [that is, on Christ Jesus]. 2. In the next Words, ver. 4. [When they heard this, they were baptized, &c.] must refer to the last Words, or to his that was speaking to them. 3. Ver. 6. The Pronoun [Them] (when Paul had laid his hands on them) plainly referreth to them last spoken of, ver. 5. which therefore was not Johns hearers as such. 4. And the words [They were baptized into the Name of the Lord Jesus] are plainly distinctive from Johns Baptism. Saith Grotius, Sic accepere Latinus, Syrus, Arabs, & Veteres omnes ante Marnixium (ut verba Lucæ). Yet I say not so hardly of Johns Baptism, as Tertullian on this Text (de Baptis.)] Adeo postea in Actis Apostolorum invenimus, quoniam qui Johannis baptismum habebant, non accepissent Spiritum Sanctum, quem ne auditu quidem noverant: Ergo non erat cœleste, quod cœlestia non exhibebat.] See Dr. Hammond in loc.

Quest. 47. Is Baptism by Lay-men or Women lawful in Cases of Necessity? Or are they nullities, and the Person to be re-baptized?

Answ. 1. I Know some of the Ancients allowed it in necessity. But I know no such necessity that can be: For 1. God hath expressly made it a part of the Ministerial Office by Commission, Mat. 28. 19, 20. 2. He hath no where given to any other either Command to oblige them to do it, or Commission to authorize them, or Promise to bless and accept them in it, or Threatning if they omit it.

3. He

3. He oft ſeverely puniſheth ſuch as invade the ſacred Function, or uſurp any part of it. 4. Therefore it is a Sin in the doer, and then there can be no neceſſity of it in ſuch a caſe in the receiver. 5. He that is in Covenant by open profeſſed Covenant, wants nothing neceſſary to his Salvation, either neceſſitate medii vel præcepti, when it cannot be had in a lawful way.

II. As to the nullity I will not determine ſo controverted a point any further than to ſay, 1. That if the Lay man had the counterfeit Orders of a Miniſter, and had poſſeſſion of the place, and were taken for one, his deceit deprived not the Receiver of his right, nor made it his Sin, and I ſhould not re-baptize him, if after diſcovered.

2. But if he were in no poſſeſſion or pretence of the Office, I would be baptized again, if it were my caſe: Becauſe I ſhould fear that what is done in Chriſt's Name by one that notoriouſly had no authority from him to do it, is not owned by Chriſt as his deed, and ſo is a nullity. As if a deceiver go in my Name to make bargains for me.

3. And if any that had after diſcovered a Miniſter to be indeed no Miniſter that baptized him, ſhould doubt of the validity, and for certainty have it done again by an authorized Miniſter, I would not diſcommend him: Nor would I account it morally twice baptizing, but a Phyſical repeating of that act which morally is but one: (As I explained before of Re-ordination.)

Therefore if one that was a groſs Heretick in the very Eſſentials, or an Infidel, or one that had not knowledge and parts eſſentially neceſſary to the Miniſtry baptize one (in right words) I would not blame him that for certainty would have an authorized Perſon to do it: Eſpecially if he was notoriouſly ſuch a one when he did it. Let thoſe that are angry with this reſolution be as fair to me as they will be to venerable Beda, and that great Miracle-working Biſhop John, whom in his Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory he reporteth to baptize a Man again in England, meerly becauſe the Prieſt that did it was ſo dull, ignorant and inſufficient as in John's judgment to be uncapable of the Office, and therefore had been by him forbidden to uſe it, though the Perſon baptized (at age) knew not this: viz. Herebaldus, ut Bed. l. 5. c. 6, (Of which before.)

Queſt. 48. May Anabaptiſts, that have no other error, be permitted in Church-communion?

Anſw. YES: And tolerated in their own practice alſo: For, 1. They agree with us in all points abſolutely neceſſary to Communion.

2. The ancient Chriſtians had liberty either to baptize, or to let them ſtay till age, as they thought beſt: And therefore Tertullian and Nazianzen ſpeak againſt haſte: And Auguſtine and many Children of Chriſtian Parents were baptized at age.

3. The Controverſie is of ſo great difficulty, that if in all ſuch caſes none that differ be tolerated, we may not live together in the World or Church, but endleſly excommunicate or perſecute one another.

4. Such ſober Antipædobaptiſts will conſent, to profeſs openly, that they do devote their Children to God according to all the Power or Duty which they can find communicated or laid upon them in the Word of God; and that if they believed that God would accept them into his Covenant upon their dedication, they would willingly do it. And that actually they do offer them to God according to their power, and promiſe to bring them up in his way. And who can force Mens Wills to chooſe aright for themſelves or others?

Queſt. 49. May one offer his Child to be baptized, with the Sign of the Croſs, or the uſe of Chriſm, the White Garment, Milk and Hony, or Exorciſm; as among the Lutherans, who taketh theſe to be unlawful things?

Anſw. I Am not now to meddle with the queſtion, Whether they be lawful: But to this queſtion I anſwer,

1. He that judgeth them unlawful, muſt firſt do his beſt to be certain whether they be ſo or not.

2. If ſo, he muſt never approve of them, or conſent to them.

3. He muſt not offer his Child to be ſo baptized, when cæteris paribus, he may have it done in a better manner on lawful terms.

4. But when he cannot lawfully have better, he may and muſt offer his Child, to them that will ſo baptize him, rather than to worſe, or none at all: Becauſe Baptiſm is God's Ordinance and his Priviledge, and the Sin is the Miniſters and not his. Another Man's ſinful Mode will not juſtifie the neglect of our duty: Elſe we might not join in any Prayer or Sacrament in which the Miniſter modally ſinneth: That is, with none.

5. The Milk and Hony, White Garment and Chriſme, are ſo ancient (called by Epiphanius and others the Traditions and Cuſtoms of the Univerſal Church) that the original of them is not known. And he that then would not be ſo baptized, muſt not have been baptized at all.

6. But in this caſe he that bringeth his Child to Baptiſm, ſhould make known, that it is Baptiſm only that he deſireth; and that he diſowneth and diſalloweth the manner which he accounteth ſinful: And then he is no conſenter to it.

7. But where Law, ſcandal, or great inconvenicies forbid him, he is not to make this profeſſion openly in the Congregation, but in that prudent manner which beſeemeth a ſober peaceable Perſon; whether to the Miniſter in private, or to his Neighbours in converſe; It being eaſie among Neighbours to make known a Man's diſſent, without a diſorderly troubling of the Church, or violating the Laws of Obedience, Civility and Peace.

8. But he muſt not, 1. Either offer his Child to Baptiſm, where the Ordinance is eſſentially corrupted, or worſe than none. 2. Or where he cannot be admitted without an actual Sin of his own; as by falſe profeſſions, ſubſcriptions, &c. For we muſt not do evil for good ends.

Queſt. 50. Whence came the ancient univerſal cuſtom of anointing at Baptiſm, and putting on a White Garment, and taſting Milk and Hony? And whether they are lawful to us?

Anſw. WE muſt remember that the ſignification of theſe was not by a new inſtitution of theirs, but by former cuſtom of the Countries where they lived. As 1. Anointing in Judæa was like Bathing at Rome: It was taken in thoſe ſcorching Countries for a wholſome, eaſing, and comforting thing; and therefore uſed to refreſh the weary limbs of travellers, and to comfort the ſick. Pſal. 23.5. & 92. 10. Luk. 7.46. Mat. 6.17. Amos 6.6. Pſa. 89. 20 Lev. 16. 32. Luke 16.

2. And it was the long accuſtomed Ceremony alſo uſed on Officers accounted ſacred, Kings and Prieſts, who were anointed at their entrance and inveſtiture.

3. White Cloathing and Purple were then and there taken for the nobleſt attire; not appropriated to ſacred Things and Perſons; but as Scarlet lately in England, the garb only of great Men: On which account, not as a Sacred Veſtment, but as an honourable cloathing, when the Biſhops began to be advanced, they were allowed to wear White Cloathing, not only when they officiated, but at other times. Rev. 3.4,5 They ſhall walk with me in whites.

4. The Milk and Hony were there highly eſteemed for food, and accounted the character of the Land of Promiſe. Jam. 5.14. Mar. 6.13.

2. Here;

2. Hereupon by application the Churches uſed theſe ſigns in the ſacred Ordinance of Baptiſm: Not by new inſtitution of the ſignification, I ſay, but by application of the old well known ſignification.

3. As Natural Signs are commonly allowed to be applyed to holy things, ſo ſigns whoſe ſignification is of old and commonly ſtated and well known by Agreement or Cuſtom, do ſeem in this not to be different from Natural Signs. Such are all Words, as ſigns of our Minds; no word ſignifying any thing Naturally, but by Agreement or Cuſtom only. And ſuch is kneeling in Prayer; and being uncovered; 1 Cor. 11. 16. and many the like: About ſome of which Paul appealeth to the cuſtom of the Churches of God.

4. It is moſt probable that theſe two things together brought in Anointing; 1. The common uſe of anointing then, in both the foreſaid Caſes, (common Refreſhment and ſacred Inveſtiture.) 2. And the miſtake of all thoſe Scripture Texts, which command or mention Anointing Metaphorical; as 1 John 2. 27. The anointing which you have received——teacheth you all things. Ezek. 16. 9. I waſhed thee, I anointed thee with Oyl, &c. Pſal. 105. 15. 1 Chron. 16. 22. Touchnot mine anointed. Rev. 3. 18. Rev. 1. 6. & 5. 10. & 20. 6. 1 Pet. 2. 5, 9.

And withal reading that we are made Kings and Prieſts to God, and a Royal Prieſthood, they thought this might be ſignified by the uſual honorary ſigns of ſuch, as well as by words to be called ſuch. So that they took it as if in our age, the baptized ſhould be ſet in a Chair of State, and ſumptuouſly apparelled, and a feaſt made to ſolemnize it, as they do at Weddings, and the baptized Perſon ſet at the upper end, &c. which are ſignificant Actions and Ceremonies; but they intended them not as new Sacraments, or any part of the Sacrament, but as a pompous celebration of the Sacrament by ſuch additionial ceremonial accidents.

5. And you muſt remember that they lived among Infidels, where their profeſſion was made the common ſcorn, which tempted them by ſuch oſtentation and pomp to ſeek to make it honourable, and to ſhew that they ſo accounted it, and to encourage thoſe who were diſcouragable by the ſcorn. On which account alſo they uſed the Croſs, and the memorials of the Martyrs.

6. Yet ſome, yea, many afterwards did ſeem to take the Anointing for a Sacramental Action. When they read that the laying on of hands was the ſign of giving the Holy Ghoſt, as diſtinct from Baptiſm, and that the Spirit is called in Scripture the Anointing, they joined both together, and made that which they now called the Sacrament of Confirmation.

7. Whether the Anointing, Milk and Hony, and the White Garment, were then ſinful in themſelves to the uſers, I determine not. But certainly they proved very ill by accident, whilſt at this door thoſe numerous and unlawful Ceremonies have entered, which have ſo troubled the Churches, and corrupted Religion; and among the Papiſts, Greeks, Armenians, Abaſſines, and many others, have made the ſauce to become the meat, and the lace to go for cloathing, and turned too much of God's Worſhip into Imagery, ſhadows and pompous ſhews.

Queſt. 51. Whether it be neceſſary that they that are baptized in Infancy, do ſolemnly at age renew and own their Baptiſmal Covenant, before they have right to the ſtate and priviledges of Adult Members? And if they do not, Whether they are to be numbered with Chriſtians or Apoſtates?

Anſw. 1. CHurch-membership is the ſame thing in Infants and in the Adult.

2. Infants are naturally uncapable of doing all that in Baptiſm which the Adult muſt do: As to underſtand, profeſs, &c. themſelves.

3. The Baptiſm of the Adult, being the moſt compleat, becauſe of the maturity of the receivers, is made the ſtanding pattern in Scripture: For God formeth his Ordinances to the moſt perfect ordinary receivers.

4. Though an Infant be devoted acceptably to God by his Parents will, yet when he is at age, it muſt be done by his own will.

5. Therefore a bare Infant title ceaſeth when we come to age, and the Perſons title ceaſeth, unleſs it be renewed by himſelf, or his own conſent. The reaſon is, becauſe the Conditions of his Infant Title then ceaſe. For his Parents will, ſhall go for his no longer.

6. Regularly and ad bene eſſe the tranſition out of the ſtate of Infant-membership into the ſtate of Adult-membership ſhould be very ſolemn; and by an underſtanding, perſonal owning of the Baptiſmal Covenant. See the proofs of all in my Treatiſe of Confirmation.

7. There needeth no other proof of this, than 1. That God in Scripture never gave adult Perſons title to his Covenant, but by their own perſonal conſent: And at the firſt inſtitution of Baptiſm, both went together, (Perſonal Profeſſion and Baptiſm) becauſe the receivers were adult. 2. And that Infants are capable of Baptiſm, but not of perſonal profeſſion. 3. Therefore though they are not to repeat Baptiſm, which was done before, yet they are bound to make that profeſſion at age which they never made before.

8. Where this ſolemn owning of their Covenant cannot be had (by reaſon of Church corruptions, and Magiſtrates prohibition) there the Perſons ordinary joining with the Church, in the publick profeſſion and worſhip, is to be taken for an owning it.

9. He that being baptized in Infancy, doth no way at full age own his Baptiſmal Covenant, is to be taken for an Apoſtate: 1. Becauſe his Infant title ceaſeth: 2. And he notoriouſly violateth his Covenant: 3. Becauſe he can be no adult Chriſtian that no way owneth Chriſt.

10. But this is to be underſtood of thoſe that have opportunity: For one in a Wilderneſs among Heathens only, cannot join in publick Worſhip, nor give teſtimony of his Chriſtianity to the Church.

11. Though the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper be appointed for the renewing of our Covenant at age, yet is it not the firſt owning of the Covenant, by the aged: For that Sacrament belongeth neither to Infants nor Infidels: And he that claimeth it, muſt be an adult Church-member or Chriſtian; which thoſe are not, who at full age no way ever owned their Baptiſmal Covenant, nor made any perſonal profeſſion of Chriſtianity.

But of this I have written purpoſely in a Treatiſe of Confirmation long ago.

Queſt. 52. Whether the Univerſal Church conſiſt only of particular Churches and their Members?

Anſw. NO: Particular Churches are the moſt regular and noble parts of the Univerſal Church; but not the whole: No more than Cities and Corporations be all the Kingdom. 1. Some may be as the Eunuch baptized before they can come to any particular Church; or as Paul, before they can be received. Acts 8. 37. & Acts 9. 17, 18, 19, 26, 27, &c.

2. Some may live where Church-tyranny hindereth them, by ſinful impoſitions; as all that live among the Papiſts.

3. Some may live in times of doubting, diſtraction and confuſion, and not know what Church ordinarily to join with, and may providently go promiſcuouſly to many, and keep in an unfixed ſtate for a time.

4. Some may be Wives, Children or Servants, who may be violently hindered.

5. Some may live where no particular Churches are;

are: As Merchants and Embaſſadors among Mahometans and Heathens.

Queſt. 53. Muſt the Paſtor firſt call the Church, and aggregate them to himſelf, or the Church firſt congregate themſelves, and then chooſe the Paſtor?

Anſw. THE Paſtors are in order of Nature, if not in time, firſt Miniſters of Chriſt in general, before they are related to a particular Charge.

2. As ſuch Miniſters they firſt make Men fit to be congregate, and tell them their duty therein.

3. But it is a matter variable and indifferent, Whether the Miniſter firſt ſay, (All that will join with me, and ſubmit to me as their Paſtor, ſhall be my particular Charge:] Or the People before congregated do call a Man to be their Paſtor.

Queſt. 54. Wherein doth a particular Church of Chriſt's inſtitution differ from a Conſociation of many Churches?

Acts 2. 1, 24, 44, 46. & 4. 32. & 5. 12. 1 Theſſ. 5. 12, 13. 1 Cor. 14. 19, 23, 24, 28, 35. Act. 14. 23 Titus 1. 5. Acts 11. 26. James 2. 2.

Anſw. 1. IN that ſuch particular Church is a company of Chriſtians aſſociated for perſonal immediate Communion in God's worſhip and in holy living; Whereas Conſociations of Churches, are combined for mediate diſtinct Communion, or by Delegates or Repreſentatives (as in Synods.)

2. Such a particular Church is conſtituted of one or more Paſtors with the People, officiating in the ſacred Miniſtry among them, in Doctrine, Worſhip and Diſcipline, in order to the ſaid perſonal Communion. But a Conſociation of Churches hath no particular Head as ſuch, of Divine Inſtitution, to conſtitute and govern them as one. In Ignatius's time every particular Church was characterized or known by two marks of Unity, 1. One Altar, (that is, one place of aſſembling for holy Communion:) 2. One Biſhop with the Presbyters and Deacons: And two Altars and two Biſhops proved two Churches.

3. A particular Church under one Biſhop or the ſame Paſtors, is a Political holy Society; but a combition of many Churches conſociate, is not ſo, but only, 1. Either a Community agreeing to live in Concord, as Neighbour Kingdoms may: 2. Or elſe a humane Policy or Society, and not of Divine immediate inſtitution. So that if this Conſociation of Churches be called a Church, it muſt be either equivocally or in a humane ſenſe.

Queſt. 55. Whether a particular Church may conſiſt of more Aſſemblies than one? Or muſt needs meet all in one place?

Anſw. 1. THE true diſtinguiſhing note of a particular Church is, that They be aſſociated for holy Communion in Worſhip and holy living, not by Delegates, nor diſtantly only, by owning the ſame Faith, and loving one another, as we may do with thoſe at the Antipodes; but perſonally in preſence.

1 Cor. 14. 19, 23. 2. Therefore they muſt neceſſarily be ſo near, as to be capable of perſonal preſent Communion.

Act. 11, 26 &c. as before cited. 3. And it is moſt convenient that they be no more than can ordinarily meet in the ſame Aſſembly, at leaſt for Sacramental Communion.

4. But yet they may meet in many places or Aſſemblies, as Chappels, or Oratories, or other ſubordinate meetings which are appointed to ſupply the neceſſity of the weak and aged, and them that cannot travel far: And in times of perſecution when the Church dare not at all meet in one place, they may make up ſeveral ſmaller meetings, under ſeveral Paſtors of the ſame Church. But they ſhould come all together as oft as they can.

5. And it is to be conſidered that all the Perſons of a Family can ſeldom go to the Aſſembly as one time, eſpecially when they live far off. Therefore if a Church-place would receive but Ten Thouſand, yet Twenty Thouſand might be Members, while half meet one day and half another, (or another part of the day.)

6. Two Congregations diſtinctly aſſociated for perſonal Worſhip, under diſtinct Paſtors, or having ſtatedly (as Ignatius ſpeaketh) two Biſhops and two Altars, are two particular Churches, and can no otherwiſe be one Church, than as that may be called One which is a Conſociation of divers.

Queſt. 56. Is any Form of Church-Government of Divine Inſtitution.

Eph. 1, 22, 23. & 5. 25. 26, &c. & 4. 4, 5. 6, 16. Heb. 10. 25. 1 Cor. 14. Act. 14. 23 Titus 1. 5. 1 Tim. 5. 17. 1 Theſſ. 5. 12, 13. 1 Tim. 3. 3, 4, 6. 1 Pet. 5. 1, 2, 3. Act. 20. 28. Phil. 1. 1, 2.

Anſw. YEA: There are two eſſentially different Policies or Forms of Church-Government of Chriſt's own Inſtitution, never to be altered by Man. 1. The form of the Univerſal Church, as headed by Chriſt himſelf; which all Chriſtians own as they are Chriſtians in their Baptiſm.

2. Particular Churches which are headed by their particular Biſhops or Paſtors, and are parts of the Univerſal, as a Troop is of an Army, or a City of a Kingdom.

Here it is of Divine Inſtitution, 1. That there be holy Aſſemblies for the publick Worſhip of God.

2. That theſe Aſſemblies be Societies, conſtituted of the People with their Paſtors, who are to them as Captains to their Troops, under the General, or as Mayors to Cities under the King.

3. That theſe Paſtors have the power of the Keys, or the ſpecial Guidance and Governance (by the Word, not by the Sword) of their own particular charge, in the matters of Faith, Worſhip and holy Living; and that the flocks obey them. And when all this is Jure divino, why ſhould any ſay, that No form of Government is Jure divino?

3. Moreover it is of Divine appointment, that theſe Churches hold the neareſt Concord, and help each other as much as they can; whether by Synods, or other meet ways of Correſpondency. And though this be not a diſtinct Government, it is a diſtinct mode of Governing.

Object. But that there be Paſtors with fixed Churches or Aſſemblies is not of the Law of Nature.

Anſw. 1. Hath Chriſt no Law but the Law of Nature? Wherein then differ the Chriſtian Religion and the Heatheniſh? 2. Suppoſe but Chriſt to be Chriſt, and Man to be what he is, and Nature it ſelf will tell us that this is the fitteſt way for ordering the Worſhip of God: For Nature ſaith, God muſt be ſolemnly and ordinarily worſhipped, and that qualified Perſons ſhould be the official Guides in the performance: And that People who need ſuch conduct and private overſight beſides, ſhould where they live have their own ſtated Overſeers.

Object. But particular Congregations are not de primaria intentione divina: For if the whole World could join together in the publick Worſhip of God, no doubt that would be properly a Church: But particular Congregations are only accidental, in reference to God's intention of having a Church, becauſe of the impoſſibility of all Mens joining together for Ordinances, &c.

Anſw. 1. The queſtion with me is not whether they be of primary intention, but whether ſtated Churches headed with their proper Biſhops or Paſtors be not of God's inſtitution in the Scripture?

2. This Objection confirmeth it, and not denieth it. For 1. It confeſſeth that there is a neceſſity of joining for God's Worſhip: 2. And an Impoſſibility that all the World ſhould ſo join: 3. But if the whole World could ſo join, it would be properly a Church: So that it confeſſeth that [to be a Society joined for God's publick Worſhip,] is [to be properly a Church.] And we confeſs all this: If all the World could be one Family, they might have one Maſter, or one King-

Kingdom, they might have one King. But when it is confessed, that 1. A Natural Impossibility of an Universal Assembly necessitateth more particular assemblies. 2. And that Christ hath instituted such actually in his Word, what more can a considerate Man require?

3. I do not understand this distinction de primaria intentione divina, and accidental, &c. The Primary intention is properly of the Ultimate End only: And no Man thinketh that a Law de mediis, of the means, is no Law, or that God hath made no Laws de mediis: For Christ as a Mediator is a Means. But suppose it be limited to the Matter of Church Laws: If this be the meaning of it, that it is not the principal means, but a subordinate means, or that it is not instituted only propter finem ultimum, no more than propter se, but also in order to a higher thing as its immediate end, we make no question of that. Assemblies are not only that there may be Assemblies; but for the Worship and Offices there performed: And those for Man; and all for God. But what of all this? Hath God made no Laws for subordinate means? No Christian denyeth it.

Therefore the learned and judicious Disputer of this point declareth himself for what I say, when he saith, [I engage not in the Controversie, Whether a particular Congregation be the first political Church or no: It sufficeth for my purpose, that there are other Churches besides——The thing in question is, Whether there be no other Church, but such particular Congregations.] Where it seemeth granted that such particular Churches are of Divine Institution: And for other Churches I shall say more anon. In the mean time note, that the question is but de nomine here, whether the Name [Church] be fit for other Societies, and not de re.

Dr. Stillingfleet's Iren. p. 154 so p. 173. By Church here I mean not a particular Congregation &c. So he granteth that 1. The Universal Church, 2. Particular Congregations are of Divine Institution, one ex intentione primaria, and the other as he calls it accidentally, but yet of natural necessity.

But lest any should grow to the boldness to deny that [Christ hath instituted Christian stated Societies consisting of Pastors and Flocks, associate for personal Communion in publick Worship and holy Living] (which is my definition of a particular Church, as not so confined to one assembly, but that it may be in divers, and yet not consisting of divers, such distinct stated Assemblies with their distinct Pastors, nor of such as can have no personal Communion, but only by Delegates) I prove it thus from the Word of God.

1. The Apostles were commissioned by Christ to deliver his commands to all the Churches, and settle them according to his will, John 20. 21.——Matth. 28. 19, 20, &c.

2. These commissioned Persons had the promise of an infallible Spirit for the due performance of their work, John 16. 13, 14, 15. and 15. 26. and 14. 26. Matth. 28. 20.

3. These Apostles where ever the success of the Gospel prepared the materials, did settle Christian stated Societies, consisting of Pastors or Elders with their Flocks, associated for personal Communion in publick Worship, and holy Living. These settled Churches they gave Orders to for their direction, and preservation, and reformation: These they took the chief care of themselves, and exhorted their Elders to fidelity in their work. They gave command that none should forsake such Assemblies, and they so fully describe them, as that they cannot easily be misunderstood. All this is proved, Acts 14. 23. Titus 1. 5. Rom. 16. 1. 1 Cor. 11. 18, 20, 22, 26. 1 Cor. 14. 4, 5, 12, 19, 23, 28, 33, 34. Col. 4. 16. Acts 11. 26. and 13. 1. 1 Cor. 16. 1, 2. Acts 14. 27. & 15. 3. to omit many more. Here are Proofs enough that such particular Churches were de facto setled by the Apostles, Heb. 10. 25. Forsake not the assembling of your selves together. So James 2. 2. they are called Synagogues.

2. It is confessed that there is a natural necessity of such stated Churches or Assemblies, supposing but the Institution of the Worship it self which is there performed: And if so, then we may say that the Law of Nature it self doth partly require them.

1. It is of the Law of Nature, that God be publickly worshipped as most Expositors of the fourth Commandment do confess.

2. It is of the Law of Nature that the People be taught to know God and their Duty, by such as are able and fit to teach them.

3. The Law of Nature requireth, that Man being a sociable Creature, and conjunction working strongest affections, we should use our sociableness in the greatest matters, and by conjunction help the zeal of our Prayers and Praises of God.

4. God's Institution of publick Preaching, Prayer and Praise, are scarce denyed by any Christians.

5. None of these can be publickly done but by assembling.

6. No Assembly can suffice for these without a Minister of Christ; because it is only his Office to be the ordinary Teacher, and to go before the People in Prayer and Praise, and to administer the Lord's Supper, which without a Minister may not be celebrated, because Christ's part cannot be otherwise performed, than by some one in his name, and by his warrant, to deliver his sealed Covenant to the receivers, and to invest them visibly in the benefits of it, and receive them that offer themselves in Covenant to him.

7. It is also a Ministerial Duty to instruct the People personally, and to watch over them, at other time, Acts 20. 20, 28. And to be examples of the flock, 1 Pet. 5. 1, 2, 3. To have the Rule over the People, and labour among them, and admonish them, 1 Thess. 5. 12. Heb. 13. 7, 17. 1 Tim. 5 17. To exercise holy Discipline among them, Titus 3. 10. Matth. 18. 17, 18. 1 Cor. 5. To visit the sick and pray over them, James 5. 14. Yea, to take care of the poor. See Dr. Hammond on 1 Cor. 12. 28. And all this cannot possibly be well done by uncertain transient Ministers, but only by a resident stated Pastor, no more than transient strangers can rule all our Families, or all the Christian Kingdoms of the World.

8. And as this cannot be done but by stated Pastors, so neither on transient Persons, ordinarily: For who can teach them that are here to day and gone to morrow: When the Pastor should proceed from day to day in adding one instruction to another, the hearers will be gone, and new ones in their place? And how can vigilancy and discipline be exercised upon such transient Persons, whose faults and cases will be unknown? Or how can they mutually help each other? And seeing most in the World have fixed Habitations, if they have not also fixed Church-relations, they must leave their habitations and wander, or else have no Church-Communion at all.

9. And as this Necessity of fixed Pastors and Flocks is confessed, so that such de facto were ordinarily settled by the Apostles is before proved, if any Scriptures may pass for proof.

The Institution and settlement then of particular worshipping Churches is out of doubt: And so that two Forms of Church Government are Jure Divino, the Universal Church Form, and the particular.

4. Besides this, in the Apostles Days there were under Christ in the Church Universal, many General Officers that had the care of gathering and overseeing Churches up and down, and were fixed by stated relation unto none. Such were the Apostles, Evangelists, and many of their helpers in their days. And most Christian Churches think that though the Apostolical extraordinary Gifts, Privileges and Offices cease, yet Government being an ordinary part of their work, the same form of Government which Christ and the Holy Ghost did settle, in the first age, were settled for all following ages, though not with the same extraordinary Gifts and Adjuncts. Because 1. We read of the settling of that form, (viz. General Officers as well as particular) but we never read of any abolition, discharge or cessation of the institution. 2. Because if we affirm a cessation without proof, we seem to accuse God of mutability, as settling one form of Government for one age only, and no longer. 3. And we leave room for audacious Wits accordingly to question other Gospel Institutions, as Pastors, Sacraments, &c. and to say that they were but for an age. 4. It was General Officers that Christ promised to be with to the end of the World, Matth. 28. 20.

Reasons for a larger Episcopacy.

Now either this will hold true or not. If not, then this General Ministry is to be numbred with the humane additions to be next treated of. If it do, then here is another part of the form of Government proved to be of Divine Institution. I say not, another Church, (for I find nothing called a Church in the New Testament, but the Universal Church and the particular:) But another part of the Government of both Churches Universal and particular: Because such General Officers are so in the Universal, as to have a General Oversight of the particular: As an Army is Headed only by the General himself, and a Regiment by the Colonel, and a Troop by the Captain: But the General Officers of the Army (the Lieutenants General, the Majors General, &c.) are under the Lord General in and over the Army, and have a general oversight of the particular Bodies (Regiments and Troops.) Now if this be the instituted Form of Christ's Church Government, that he himself rule absolutely as General, and that he have some general Officers under him (not any one having a charge of the whole, but in the whole unfixedly, or as they voluntarily part their Provinces,) and that each particular Church have its own proper Pastor (one or more,) then who can say, that No form of Church Government is of Divine Appointment or Command?

Object. But the question is only whether any sole form be of God's commanding? And whether another may not have as much said for it as this?

Answ. Either you mean [Another instead of this, as a Competitor,] or [Another part conjunct with these parts.]

1. If the first be your sense, then you have two works to do: 1. To prove that these before mentioned were mutable Institutions, or that they were settled but disjunctively with some other, and that the choice was left indifferent to Men. 2. To prove the Institution of your other Form (which you suppose left with this to Mens free choice.)

But I have already proved, that both the general and particular Church Form are settled for continuance as unchangeable Ordinances of God. I suppose you doubt not of the continuance of Christs Supremacy, and so of the Universal Form: And if you will prove that Church Assemblies with their Pastors may cease, and some other way supply the room, you must be strange and singular undertakers. The other two parts of the Government (by General Officers, and by Consociation of Churches) are more disputed; but it is the Circumstances of the last only that is controverted and not the thing; And for the other I shall now add nothing to what I have said elsewhere.

Disput. of Church Gov. Disp.

2. But if you only mean that another part of the form may be jure divino as well as this, that will but prove still that some form is jure divino.

But 3. If you mean, that God having instituted the forms now proved, hath left Men at liberty to add more of his own, I shall now come to examine that Case also.

Quest. 57. Whether any Forms of Churches, and Church Government, or any new Church Officers, may lawfully be invented and made by Man?

Answ. TO remove ambiguities, 1. By the word [Forms] may be meant either that Relative form of such aggregate Bodies which is their essence, and denominateth them essentially; or only some Accidental mode which denominateth them but accidentally.

2. By Churches is meant either Holy Societies related by the Foundation of a Divine Institution; or else Societies related by accident, or by humane contract only.

3. By [Church Government] is meant, either that Government formally Ecclesiastical, which constituteth a Church, of Christ's making; or else some Government about the Matters of the Church, which is formally either Magistratical or humane, by contract) &c.

4. So by Church Officers are meant, either such as are accounted essential to a Church in the pure Christian Sense; or Integral at least (as Deacons:) Or else such as are accounted but Accidental to it, and Essential only to the humane form. And so I answer,

1. As there are some things circa sacra, or Accidents of God's special Church Worship, which are left to humane Prudence to determine of, so the same humane prudence may determine who shall do them. As e.g. Who shall repair the Buildings of the Church; the Windows, the Bells, the Pulpits, the Tables, &c. Who shall keep the Clock; who shall keep the Cups, Cloaths, and other Utensils; who shall be the Porter, the keeper of the Books, &c. Who shall call the People to Church, or ring the Bells, or give them notice of Church Assemblies: Who shall make the Bread for the Sacrament, or provide Wine, or bring Water for Baptism: Who shall make the Graves, and bury the Dead, or attend Marriages, or Baptizings, &c. Who shall set the Tune of the Psalm, or use the Church-Musick (if there be any:) Who shall summon any of the People on any just occasion to come to their Pastors; or who shall summon the Pastors to any Synod, or lawful Assembly, and give them notice of the time and place: When they are to meet, who shall be called first, and who second? Who shall sit highest, and who lowest? Who shall take the Votes, or moderate or guide the Disputations of the Assembly? Who shall be the Scribe, and record what is done? Who shall send abroad their Agreements; and who shall be the Church-messenger to carry them? The Agents of such Circumstantials may be chosen by the Magistrate: Or by the Churches or Pastors, as is most convenient. Though I doubt not but in the beginning the Deacons were meer Servants to the Pastors, to do as much of such circumstantial work, as they were able; of which serving at Tables, and looking to the Poor, and carrying Bread and Wine to the absent, &c. Were but parts: And all went under the Name of Ministring to the Pastors or Churches. And therefore they seem to be such an Accidental Office, appointed by the Apostles, on such common reasons, as Magistrates or Churches might have appointed them, if they had not.

2. If one will call all or many of these, [Church Officers] and another will not; it is but a strife about Names, which one will use more largely and the other more narrowly or strictly.

3. If Magistrates by Authority, or the Churches by Agreement, shall distribute the Country for conveniency into Parishes (not making all to be Church Members that dwell in those Precincts, but determining that all Persons that are fit in those proximities, and they only, shall be Members of that particular Church) and then shall denominate the Church from this accident of place, it is but what is left to their discretion.

4. And

4. And if the ſaid Magiſtrates or Churches ſhall divide a Kingdom into Provinces, and ſay, that whereas God commandeth us the uſe of Correſpondencies, mutual Advice and Synods, for the due help, concord and communion of Churches, and all things muſt be done in order and to edification; therefore we determine that ſo many Churches ſhall make up ſuch a Synod, and the Churches of ſuch a diſtrict ſhall make up another Synod, and ſo ſhall be ſpecially related to each other for Concord as Adviſers, all this is but the prudent determining of Church Circumſtances or Accidents left to Man.

5. And if they ſhall appoint that either a Magiſtrate or one Paſtor ſhall be for Order ſake the Appointer of the Times and Places of Meeting, or the Preſident of the Synod, to regulate and order proceedings, and keep Peace, as is aforeſaid, it is but an Accident of the Sacred Work which Man may determine of. Therefore a Lay-man may be ſuch a Preſident or Regulater.

6 And if they will call this Man by the Name of a Church-Governour, who doth but a common part therein, and from thence will call this Aſſociation or Province by the name of a Church, which is but a company of Churches aſſociated for Concord and Counſel, the Name maketh it not another thing than it is without that name: And the name may be lawful or unlawful as times and probable conſequents make it fit or unfit as to uſe.

7. So much of Church matters as is left to the Magiſtrates Government, may be under Monarchy, Ariſtocracy or Democracy, and under ſuch ſubordinate Officers as the Supream Ruler ſhall appoint.

8. And if the Magiſtrate will make Aſſemblies or Councils of Paſtors, to be his Councils, and require them frequently to meet to adviſe him in the performance of his own truſt and work about Religion and the Church, he may accordingly diſtribute them into Provinces for that uſe, or order ſuch circumſtances as he pleaſe.

9. And if a Province of Churches be called one Church, becauſe it is under one Magiſtrate, or a Nation of Churches called a National Church, becauſe it is under one King, or many Kingdoms or an Empire called one Catholick Church, becauſe they are all under one Emperour; it muſt be confeſſed that this queſtion is but de nomine, and not de re.

And further, 1. That in ſacred things that which is of Divine and primary Inſtitution is the famoſius analogatum, and not that which is but formed by Man. 2. That when ſuch an ambiguous word is uſed without explication or explicating circumſtances, it is to be taken for the famoſius analogatum. 3. That in this caſe the word Church or Church-form is certainly ambiguous and not univocal. 4. That a National, Imperial, or Provincial Church as Headed by a King, Emperour, Magiſtrate, or any head of Mans appointment, is another thing, from a Church of Chriſts Inſtitution: And is but an Accident or adjunct of it; and the Head of the Humane form, if called the Head of the Church of Chriſt, is but an Accidental Head, and not Conſtitutive. And if Chriſts Churches be denominated from ſuch a Head, they are denominated but from an accident, as a Man may be denominated cloathed or uncloathed, cloathed gorgeouſly or ſordidly, a Neighbour to this Man or that, &c. It is no formal denomination of a Church in the firſt Acception, as it ſignifieth the famoſius analogatum; though otherwiſe many kind of Societies may be called Eccleſiæ or Cœtus: But Divines ſhould not love Confuſion.

10. It ſeemeth to me that the firſt diſtribution of Churches in the Roman Empire, into Patriarchal, Primates, Metropolitical, Provincial, Dioceſan, were only the determination of ſuch adjuncts or extrinſick things, partly by the Emperours, and partly by Churches Conſent upon the Emperours Permiſſion: And ſo that theſe new Church Governments were partly Magiſtratical, or by Power derived from the Emperours, and partly meer Agreements or Contracts by degrees degenerating into Governments: And ſo the new forms and names are all but accidental, of adjuncts of the true Chriſtian Churches. And though I cannot prove it unlawful to make ſuch adjunctive or extrinſick Conſtitutions, Forms and Names, conſidering the Matter ſimply it ſelf, yet by accident theſe accidents have proved ſuch to the true Churches, as the accident of ſickneſs is to the Body, and have been the cauſes of the Diviſions, Wars, Rebellions, Ruines and Confuſions of the Chriſtian World: 1. As they have ſerved the covetouſneſs and ambition of carnal Men: 2. And have enabled them to oppreſs ſimplicity and ſincerity: 3. And becauſe Princes have not exerciſed their own Power themſelves, nor committed it to Lay-Officers, but to Church-men: 4. Whereby the extrinſick Government hath ſo degenerated, and obſcured the Intrinſick and been confounded with it, that both going under the equivocal Name of Eccleſiaſtical Government, few Churches have had the Happineſs to ſee them practically diſtinct: Nay, few Divines do clearly in their Controverſies diſtinguiſh them: (Though Marſilius Patavinus and ſome few more have formerly given them very fair light, yet hath it been but ſlenderly improved.)

Which tempteth the Eraſtians to deny and pull down both together; becauſe they find one in the Paſtors hands which belongeth to the Magiſtrate, and we do not teach them to untwiſt and ſeparate them.

11. There ſeemeth to me no readier and directer way, to reduce the Churches to holy Concord, and true Reformation, than for the Princes and Magiſtrates who are the extrinſick Rulers, to re-aſſume their own, and to diſtinguiſh openly and practically between the properly Prieſtly or Paſtoral intrinſick Office, and their extrinſick part, and to ſtrip the Paſtors of all that is not Intrinſecally their own (it being enough for them, and things ſo heterogeneous not well conſiſting in one Perſon:) And then when the People know what is claimed as from the Magiſtrate only, it will take off moſt of their ſcruples as to Subjection and Conſent.

12. No mortal Man may abrogate or take down the Paſtoral Office, and the Intrinſick real Power thereof, and the Church-form which is conſtituted thereby; ſeeing God hath inſtituted them for perpetuity on Earth.

13. But whether one Church ſhall have one Paſtor or many is not at all of the Form of a particular Church: But it is of the Integrity or gradual Perfection of ſuch Churches as need many, to have many, and to others not ſo: Not that it is left meerly to the will of Man, but it is to be varied as natural neceſſity and cauſe requireth.

14. The Nature of the Intrinſick Office or Power (anon to be deſcribed) is moſt neceſſary to be underſtood as diſtinct from the Power of Magiſtrates, by them that would truly underſtand this. The number of Governours in a Civil State make that which is called a variety of Forms of Common-wealths, Monarchy, Ariſtocracy or Democracy: Becauſe commanding Power is the thing which is there moſt notably exerciſed, and primarily magnified. And a wiſer and better Man, yea, a thouſand, muſt ſtand by as Subjects, for want of Authority or true Power; which can be but in One Supream, either Natural or Political Perſon: Becauſe it cannot conſiſt in the exerciſe with Self-contradiction. If one be for War and another for Peace, &c. there is no Rule. Therefore the Many, muſt be one Collective or Political Perſon, and muſt Conſent, or go by the major Vote, or they cannot govern. But that which is called Government in Prieſts or Miniſters, is of another Nature: It is but a ſecondary ſubſervient branch of their Office: The firſt parts are Teaching, and Guiding the People as their Prieſts to God in publick Worſhip: And they Govern them by Teaching, and in order to further Teaching and Worſhipping God; and that not by Might, but by Reaſon and Love. Of which more anon. Therefore if a Sacred Congregation be taught and conducted in publick Worſhip, and ſo governed as conduceth hereunto, whether by one, two, or many, it no more altereth the Form of the Church, than it doth the Form of a School, when a ſmall one hath one Schoolmaſter, and a great one four: Or of a Hoſpital, when a ſmall one hath one Phyſician, and a great one many; ſeeing that Teaching in the one, and Healing in the other is the main denominating Work, to which Government is but ſubſervient in the moſt notable Acts of it.

15. No mortal Man may take on him to make another Church, or another Office for the Church, as a Divine Thing, on the ſame grounds, and of the ſame Nature pretendedly as Chriſt hath made thoſe already made. The caſe of adding new Church Officers or Forms of Churches, is the ſame with that of making new Worſhip Ordinances for God, and accordingly to be determined (which I have largely opened in its Place.) Accidents may be added. Subſtantials of like pretended Nature may not be added: Becauſe it is an uſurping of Chriſts Power, without derivation by any proved Commiſſion; and an accuſing of him, as having done his own work imperfectly.

16. Indeed no Man can here make a new Church Officer of this Intrinſick ſort, without making him new work, which is to make new Doctrine, or new Worſhip (which are forbidden:) For to do Gods work already made belongs to the Office already inſtituted. If every King will make his own Officers, or authorize the greater to make the leſs, none muſt preſume to make Chriſt Officers and Churches without his Commiſſion.

17. No Man muſt make any Office, Church or Ordinance, which is corruptive or deſtructive, or contrary, or injurious to the Offices, Churches and Ordinances which Chriſt himſelf hath made. This Bellarmin confeſſeth, and therefore I ſuppoſe Proteſtants will not deny it. Thoſe humane Officers which uſurp the work of Chriſts own Officrs, and take it out of their hands, do malignantly fight againſt Chriſts Inſtitutions: And while they pretend that it is but preſerving and not corrupting or oppoſing Additions which they make, and yet with theſe words in their mouths, do either give Chriſts Officers work to others, or hinder and oppreſs his Officers themſelves, and by their new Church-forms undermine or openly deſtroy the old, by this expreſſion of their enmity they confute themſelves.

18. This hath been the unhappy caſe of the Roman frame of Church Innovations, as you may obſerve in the particulars of its degeneracy.

1. Councils were called General or Oecumenical in reſpect to one Empire only: And they thence grew to extend the Name to the whole World: When they may as well ſay, that Conſtantine, Martian, &c. were Emperours of the whole World, ſeeing by their authority they were called.

2. Theſe Councils at firſt were the Emperours Councils called to direct him what to ſettle in Church Orders by his own Power: But they were turned to claim an impoſing Authority of their own to command the Churches as by Commiſſion from God.

3. Theſe Councils at firſt, were only for Counſel, or for Agreement by way of contract or mutual Conſent to the particular Biſhops: But they degenerated into a form of Government, and claimed a ruling and commanding Power.

4. The Patriarchs, Primates and Metropolitans, at firſt claimed but a Power about circumſtantials extrinſecal to the Paſtoral Office, ſuch as is the Timing and Placing of Councils, the ſitting above others, &c. And the exerciſe of ſome part of the Magiſtrates Power committed to them, that is, the depoſing of other Biſhops or Paſtors from their ſtation of ſuch Liberty and Countenance as the Magiſtrate may grant or deny as there is cauſe. But in time they degenerated to claim the ſpiritual Power of the Keys, over the other Biſhops; in Point of Ordination, Excommunication, Abſolution.

5. Theſe Patriarchs, Primates and Metropolitans at firſt claimed their extrinſick Power but from Man, that is, either the Conſent and Agreement of the Churches, or the grant of the Emperours: But in time they grew to claim it as of Divine or Apoſtolical appointment, and as unalterable.

6. At firſt they were taken only for Adjuncts, Ornaments, Supports or Conveniences to the Churches. But afterwards they pretended to be integral Parts of the Church univerſal, and at laſt the Pope would needs be an Eſſential Part. And his Cardinals muſt claim the Power of the Church Univerſal in being the chooſers of an Univerſal Head, or a King-Prieſt and Teacher for all the Chriſtians of the World.

7. At firſt Lay-men (now called Chancellors, &c.) were only the Biſhops Counſellors, or Officers to the Magiſtrate or them, in performing the extrinſecal work about Church adjuncts, which a Lay-man might do. But at laſt they came to exerciſe the Intrinſick Power of the Keys, in Excommunications and Abſolutions, &c.

8. At firſt a number of particular Churches conſociated with their ſeveral Biſhops, were taken to be a Community or company of true Churches prudentially cantonized or diſtributed and conſociated for Concord. But after they grew to be eſteemed proper political Societies, or Churches of Divine Appointment, if not the Eccleſiæ minimæ, having turned the particular Churches into Oratories or Chappels, deſtroying Ignatius his Character of one Church, [To every Church there is one Altar, and one Biſhop with his Preſbyters and Deacons.] Abundance more ſuch inſtances may be given.

Obj. Wherever we find the Notion of a Church Particular, there muſt be Government in that Church: And why a national Society incorporated into one civil Government, joyning into the Profeſſion of Chriſtianity, and having a right thereby to participate of Goſpel Ordinances, in the convenient Diſtributions of them in the particular Congregations, ſhould not be called a Church, I confeſs I can ſee no reaſon.

Anſw. 1. Here obſerve, that the queſtion is only of the Name (whether it may be called a Church) and not of the thing (whether all the Churches in a Kingdom may be under one King, which no ſober Man denieth.)

2. Names are at Mens diſpoſal much. But I confeſs I had rather the Name had been uſed no otherwiſe, or for no other Societies than Scripture uſeth it. My Reaſons are, 1. Becauſe when Chriſt hath appropriated or ſpecially applied one Name to the ſacred Societies of his Inſtitution, it ſeemeth ſomewhat bold to make that Name common to other Societies. 2. Becauſe it tendeth to confuſion, miſunderſtanding, and to cheriſh errours and coutroverſies in the Churches, when all names ſhall be made common or ambiguous, and holy things ſhall not be allowed any Name proper to themſelves, nor any thing can be known by a bare name without a Deſcription. If the name of Chriſt himſelf ſhould be uſed of every anointed King, it would ſeem not a little thus injurious to him. If the Name, Bible, Scripture, Preachers, &c. be made common to all that the Notation of the Names may extend to, it will introduce the aforeſaid inconveniences: So how ſhall we in common talk diſtinguiſh, between ſacred Societies of Divine Inſtitution and of humane, if you will allow us no peculiar Name, but make that common which Chriſt hath choſen?

3. And that the name is here uſed equivocally is manifeſt. For the Body political is informed and denominated from the pars imperans, the Governing Part or Head: Therefore as a Head of Divine Inſtitution, authorized for the ſpiritual or Paſtoral work, denominateth the Society accordingly; ſo a civil Head can make but a civil Society, and a Head of Mans making, but a humane Society. It is certain that Chriſt hath appointed the Epiſcopal or Paſtoral Office, and their work; and conſequently Epiſcopal or Paſtoral Churches: And it is certain that a King is no conſtitutive Part of one of theſe Churches, but Accidental; and therefore that he is an Accidental Head to a Paſtoral Church as ſuch, to which the Paſtor is eſſential.

Therefore if you will needs call both theſe Societies [Churches] you muſt diſtinguiſh them into Paſtoral Churches, and Regal Churches, or Magiſtratical Churches; for the word [National] notifieth not the Government which is the conſtitutive part; and may be uſed of Conſociated Churches, though under many Civil Governours (as in the Saxon Heptarchy.)

So that our queſtion is much like this, Whether all the Grammar Schools in England as under one King may be called one National School? Anſw. Not without unfitneſs, and inconveniencies: But rather than breed any quarrel, they may call them ſo that pleaſe: But, 1. They muſt confeſs that a particular School is the famoſius ſignificatum. 2. That the King is King of Schools, but not a Schoolmaſter, nor a conſtitutive part of a School; 3. That if you will needs denominate them from the Regent part, as one, you muſt call them all one Royal School, if you will leave the well known ſenſe of words for ſuch uncouth Phraſes. But give us leave to call the Body which is eſſentiated by a King, by the name of a Kingdom only, though it have in it many Schools, Academies, Colleges, Cities, Churches, which they that pleaſe may call all one Royal School, Academy, Colledge, City and Church, if they love confuſion.

4. Chriſtianity giveth Men right to Communion in particular Churches, when they alſo make known their Chriſtianity to the Biſhops of thoſe Churches, and are received (as ſtated or tranſient) Members by mutual Conſent; but not otherwiſe: Nor doth meer Regal Government, give any ſubject right to Church Communion, except by a Church you mean a Kingdom.

Obj. A particular Church then I would deſcribe thus [It is a Society of Men joined together in the viſible profeſſion of the true Faith, having a right to, and enjoying among them, the Ordinances of the Goſpel.) Anſw. 1. When you tell us by your deſcription what you will mean by [a particular Church) we may underſtand your denomination: But yet while it is unuſual, you muſt not expect that other Men ſo uſe the Word. Had you called your deſcription a definition, I would have asked you, 1. Whether by [a Society] you mean not ſtrictly [a Political Society) conſtituted by a Pars gubernans, & gubernata? If not, it's no Church ſave equivocally. If ſo, ſhould not the Pars regens which is conſtitutive have been put in? If private Men join togeher, &c. it makes but a community. 2. A right to Goſpel Ordinances is ſuppoſed, but need not be in the definition. 3. The enjoying of them, is not eſſential to a Church. The Relation may continue, when the enjoyment is a long time hindered. 4. [Among them] is a very ambiguous word: Is it among them in the ſame place? Or in the ſame Country or Kingdom? Or in the ſame World? If you difference and define them not, by Relation to the ſame Biſhops or Paſtors, and by intended Perſonal Holy Communion, your deſcription confoundeth the Univerſal Church, as well as the National, with a Particular Church: For the whole Chriſtian World, is [a Society of Men joining together in the viſible profeſſion of the true Faith, having a right to, and enjoying among them the Ordinances of the Goſpel]

Obj. A Nation joining in the profeſſion of Chriſtianity is a true Church of God: Whence it evidently followeth, that there muſt be a form of Eccleſiaſtical Government over a Nation as a Church, as well as of Civil Government over it, as a Society governed by the ſame Laws——For every Society muſt have its Government belonging to it as ſuch a Society: And the ſame reaſon that makes the Government neceſſary in any particular Congregation will make it neceſſary for all the particular Congregations, joining together in one viſible Society, as a particular national Church. For the Unity and Peace of that Church ought much more to be looked after than of any one particular Congregation, &c.

Anſw. 1. From one abſurdity many follow: Our Controverſie before was but of the Name: If an Accidental Royal or Civil Head may equivocally denominate an Eccleſiaſtical Society, and we grant you the uſe of an equivocal Name (or rather the abuſe) you will grow too hard upon us, if thence you will gather a neceſſity of [a real Eccleſiaſtical Policy, beſides the Civil. Names abuſed infer not the things ſignified by an univocal term.

2. You muſt firſt prove the form of Government, and thence infer the denomination, and not contrarily, firſt beg the Name, and then infer the Government.

3. If yet by [a form of Eccleſiaſtical Government] you meant nothing but the King's extrinſick Government) which you may as well call alſo a form of School Government, of College Government, &c.) we would grant you all. But if I can underſtand you, you now ſpeak of Eccleſiaſtical Government as diſtinct from that. And then,

4. You are now grown up from a may be, to a muſt be, and neceſſity: And a greater neceſſity of one National Eccleſiaſtical Government, than of a Particular Church Government; which being undeniably of Chriſt's Inſtitution (by the Holy Ghoſt in the Apoſtles) you do not make all forms to be indifferent or deny this to be jure divino. What! neceſſary and more neceſſary than that which is jure divino, and yet indifferent and not jure divino? If you ſay, It is neceſſary only on ſuppoſition that there be a national Church: I anſwer; but your reaſons evidently infer that it is alſo neceſſary that there be ſuch a National Church, where it may be had: Though you deny the neceſſity of Monarchical Government by one High Prieſt in it. But I know you call not this a form of Government, unleſs as determinately managed by one, many or moſt. But why a national ſpiritual Policy as diſtinct from Congregational, may not be called [a form of Government] as well as one Man's diſtinct from two, over the ſame People, I ſee not. But this is at your liberty. But your Neceſſity of ſuch a National Regiment is a matter of greater moment.

In theſe three ſenſes I confeſs a National Church. 1. As all the Chriſtians in a Nation are under one Civil Church Governour; 2. As they are conſociated for Concord, and meet in Synods or hold Correſpondencies. 3. As they are all a part of the univerſal Church, cohabiting in one Nation. But all theſe are equivocal uſes of the word Church; the denomination being taken in the firſt from an Accident; in the ſecond the Name of a Policy being given to a Community agreeing for Concord; in the third the Name of the whole is given to a ſmall integral part.

But the neceſſity of any other Church, headed by your Eccleſiaſtical National Governour, perſonal or collective, Monarchical, Ariſtocratical or Democratical, I utterly deny, and find not a word of proof which I think I have any need to furniſh the Reader with an anſwer to.

5. And your judgment in this is down right againſt the Conſtitution, Canons and Judgment of the National Church of England: For that they uſe the Word in the ſenſes allowed by me, and not in yours is proved, 1. From the viſible conſtitution in which there is (beſides the King) no diſtinct Eccleſiaſtical Head. For the Archbiſhop of Canterbury is not the proper Governor of the Archbiſhop of York and his Province.

2. From the Canons. Can. 139. [A National Synod the Church Repreſentative; Whoſoever ſhall affirm that the' ſacred Synod of this Nation, in the name of Chriſt and by the King's authority aſſembled, is not the true Church of England by repreſentation, let him be excommunicated, &c.] So that the Synod is but the Repreſentative Church. And therefore not the Political Head of the Church: Whether it be the Laity, or the whole Clergy or both, which they repreſent, Repreſentation of thoſe that are no National Head, maketh them not a National Head.

Repre-

3. From the ordinary judgment of Epiſcopal Divines, (maintained by Biſhop Bilſon and many others at large againſt the Papiſts) that all Biſhops jure divino are equal and independant, further than humane Laws, or Agreements or Difference of Gifts may difference them, or as they are bound to conſociation for Concord.

6. How ſhall I deny not only the lawfulneſs, but the neceſſity of ſuch a Papacy as really was in the Roman Empire, on your grounds? I have proved againſt W. Johnſon that the Pope was then actually but the Head of the Imperial Churches, and not of all the World. And if there muſt be one National Eccleſiaſtical Head under one King, why not one alſo in one Empire? Or whether it be one Monarch, or a collective Perſon, it is ſtill one Political Perſon which is now in queſtion. (Either a Ruling Pope, or a Ruling Ariſtocracy or Democracy, which is not the great matter in Controverſie.)

7. And why will not the ſame Argument carry it alſo, for one Univerſal viſible Head of all the Churches in the World? At leaſt as lawful? At leaſt as far as humane capacity and converſe will allow? And who ſhall chooſe this Univerſal Head? And who can lay ſo far a claim to it as the Pope? And if the form be indifferent, why may not the Churches by conſent at leaſt, ſet up one Man as well as many? Whether you carry it to an Imperial Church, or a Papal, to a Patriarchal, or Provincial, or National, till you have proved it to be of Divine Inſtitution, (and Particular Churches to be unneceſſary, alterable and of humane inſtitution,) I ſhall never grant you that it is to be preferred before that which is unqueſtionably of God. For though I eaſily grant that all the Churches of a Nation, Empire or the World, are to be more eſteemed and carefully preſerved, than one Biſhop's or Paſtor's particular Church; yet I will not grant you that your humane Policy is more neceſſary to the ſafety of all theſe Churches than the Divine. For the ſafety of theſe Churches may be better preſerved by God's three great means (1. The Polity of particular Churches with the conduct of their preſent faithful Biſhops or Paſtors; 2. The loving Conſociation of Neighbour Churches for Concord; 3. The protection and countenance of Magiſtrates) without any new Church-form, or National or Imperial or Univerſal Paſtor) than with it.

Nay when that ſort of Uſurpation hath been the very Engine of dividing, corrupting and undoing the Chriſtian Churches above a Thouſand Years, we are not eaſily perſwaded now, that it is yet either neceſſary or deſirable.

8. But the beſt and eaſieſt way to diſcern how far the making new Churches or Church Offices is lawful or unlawful, is by trying it by the quality of their Office work. For it is the work which giveth us the deſcription of the Office; and the office of the ruling part, which giveth us the definition of the Church, which that office conſtituteth.

The work which the new humane Officer is to do, is either, 1. The ſame which God hath already appointed Biſhops or Paſtors to do, or at leaſt the unfixed Miniſters in the Univerſal Church; 2. Or it is ſuch as he hath appointed Magiſtrates to do; 3. Or it is ſuch as belongeth to private and lay-men; 4. Or it is ſomewhat different from all theſe.

1. If it be of the firſt ſort, it is a contradiction. For Men that are by Office appointed to do the ſame work which Miniſters are already appointed to do, are not a new office, but Miniſters indeed, ſuch as Chriſt hath inſtituted: For the office is nothing but an Obligation and Authority to do the work.

2. If it be the ſame work which belongeth to the Magiſtrate, then it is no new Office, for they are Magiſtrates.

3. If it be that which belongeth to private Men, by God's appointment, they cannot diſoblige themſelves by transferring it to a new Officer.

4. If it be none of all theſe, what is it? I doubt it may prove ſome needleſs or rather ſinful work, which God committed to none of theſe three ſorts, and therefore unfit to make a Church office of. Unleſs it be ſuch as I before deſcribed and granted, 1. I confeſs that the Magiſtrate may make new inferior Officers, to do his own part (as Church-Juſtices, Church wardens, &c.) 2. I grant that the People may make an office for the better doing of ſome parts of their own work: They may make Collectors, Doorkeepers, Artiſts by office, to keep the Clock, and Bells, and Church-buildings, &c. if the Magiſtrates leave it to them.

3. I grant that the Biſhops or Paſtors may do ſome circumſtances of their work by humane Officers: As to facilitate their Concord in Synods, by chooſing one to preſide, to chooſe time and place, to ſend Meſſengers to take votes, to moderate diſputes, to record agreements, &c. as aforeſaid: And theſe circumſtantials are the things that Officers may be made for.

But the very modes and circumſtances which are part of the work to which every Biſhop or Paſtor is obliged, he cannot commit to another; as to chooſe his Text, Subject, Method, Words, &c. Theſe are parts of his own work: Though Concord in theſe is the work of many.

Now what is the work beſides all theſe that we muſt have new Churches and Offices made for? Is it to govern all theſe Biſhops and Churches? How? By the Word or by the Sword? If by the Sword, the Magiſtrate is to do it? If by the Word (or ſpiritual Authority) either God hath made ſuch an Office as Archbiſhops or General Biſhops over many, or he hath not: If he have, we need no new humane Office for it, God having provided for it already: If not, but God hath left all Biſhops independent, and to learn of one another, as equal in Office, and unequal only in Gifts, then either ſuch an Office is fit and neceſſary, or not. If it be, you accuſe God of omiſſion in not appointing a Biſhop over Biſhops as well as a Biſhop of the loweſt Order. If not, then by what reaſon or power will you make new needleſs Officers in the Church? When Cyprian and his Carthage Council ſo vehemently diſclaimed being Epiſcopi Epiſcoporum.

19. I would fain know whether thoſe new made Churches of humane and not of divine Fabrication, (whether Univerſal (or Papal) Patriarchal, Provincial, &c.) were made by former Churches, or by no Churches. If by no Churches, then either by other Societies or by ſingle Perſons: If by other Societies, by what power do they make new Churches to Chriſt, who are themſelves no Churches? If by ſingle Perſons, either they are before Church members, or not. If not, how can thoſe make new Churches that be not ſo much as Members of Churches, without a Commiſſion from Chriſt? But if either former Churches or their Members made theſe new Churches, then 1. It followeth that there were another ſort of Churches before theſe new or humane Churches. And if ſo, either thoſe other that made theſe were themſelves made of God or not? And ſo the queſtion will run up till you bring it either to ſome Church of God's making which made theſe other, or ſome Perſon commiſſioned to do it. If you ſay the firſt, then he that will confeſs that there is a ſpecies of Churches of Chriſt's Inſtitution, and a ſpecies not of his inſtitution, muſt prefer the former, and muſt well prove the power of making the later. And ſo they muſt do, if they ſay that it was done by particular Perſons that were no particular Church-members. For if Chriſt commiſſioned them to ſettle any one ſpecies of Churches, thoſe are to be eſteemed ſettled by Chriſt. But if you ſay that Chriſt left them to vary the ſpecies of Churches as they ſaw cauſe, and ſo on to the end of the World, 1. You muſt well prove it, 2. It is before diſproved: (unleſs you take the word Church equivocally.)

20. Laſtly, all Chriſtians are ſatisfied of Chriſt's Authority; and therefore in that they can agree: But ſo they are not, of any humane Church-makers authority; and therefore in that there will never be an agreement: Therefore ſuch new Churches, and Eccleſiaſtical Governments will be but (as they ever have been) the Engines of diviſion and ruin in the Churches: And the ſpecies of God's making, with the mutability of mutable Adjuncts and Circumſtances, will beſt preſerve the Churches Peace.

But if the true nature of Paſtoral or Eccleſiaſtical Government were well underſtood, it would put an end to all theſe Controverſies. Which may be moſtly gathered from what is ſaid before; to which I will add this little following.

Queſt. Whetein conſiſteth the true noture of Paſtoral Church Government.

Anſw. 1. NOT in any uſe of the Sword or corporal force.

2. Not in a power to contradict God's word.

3. Not in a power co-ordinate with Chriſt's, to do his proper work, or that which hath the ſame grounds, reaſons, and nature.

4. Not in an unqueſtionable Empire, to command things which none muſt preſume to examine, or judge of by a diſcerning judgment, whether they be forbidden by God or not.

5. Not now in making a new word of God, or new Articles of Faith, or new univerſal Laws, for the whole Church.

6. Not in any thing which derogates from the true power of Magiſtrates, or Parents, or Maſters.

But 1. It is a Miniſterial Power, of a Meſſenger or Servant, who hath a commiſſion to deliver his Maſters commands and exhortations. 1 Cor. 4. 1, 2.

2. As it is over the Laity or Flocks, it is a power in the ſacred Aſſemblies to teach the People by Office, and to be their Prieſts or Guides in holy Worſhip. 3. And to rule the Worſhip-actions for the time, length, method, and orderly performance of them. 1 Pet. 5. 1, 2, 3. Matth. 28. 19, 20. 1 Theſ. 5. 12, 23.

3. As to particular Perſons, it is the power of the Church Keys, which is, 1. To judge who is meet to be by Baptiſm taken in to the Church. 2. To reprove, exhort and inſtruct thoſe that by vice or ignorance, in order to Repentance, or Knowledge, or Confirmation do need the Paſtoral help. 3. To judge who is to be forbidden Church-communion as impenitent; or at leaſt, with whom that Church muſt be forbidden to communicate. 4. To judge who is meet for Abſolution as a Penitent. 5. To deliver Men perſonally a ſealed Pardon from Chriſt in his two Sacraments. 6. To viſit the ſick, and comfort the ſad, and reſolve the doubting, and help the poor. This is the true Church Government, which is like a Philoſopher's or Schoolmaſters in his School among volunteers, ſuppoſing them to have no power of the Rod or Violence, but only to take in or put out of their Schools: And what need is there of an Univerſal, Patriarchal or National Head, to do any of this work, which is but the Government of a perſonal Teacher and Conductor; and which worketh only on the Conſcience? 2 Tim. 4. 1, 2, 3, 5.

4. But beſides this there is a neceſſity of agreeing in the right management of this work: Which needeth no new Head, but only the Conſultations of the ſeveral Biſhops or Paſtors, and the Magiſtrates civil Rule, or extrinſick Epiſcopacy (as Conſtantine called it.)

5. And beſides this there is need to ordain Paſtors and Biſhops in the Church. And this is not done by any force neither; but 1. By judging what Men are fit, 2. By perſwading the People to conſent and receive them, and 3. By inveſting them by a delivery of poſſeſſion by the Impoſition of hands. Now for all this, there needs no humane ſpecies of Biſhops or Churches to be made.

6. Beſides this there is need of ſome overſight of theſe Paſtors and Miniſters and fixed Biſhops when they are made; and of ſome general care of Paſtors and People, if they decline to Hereſies, Errors, Vices, or Lukewarmneſs: But for this, 1. When Magiſtrates have done their part, 2. And Neighbour Miniſters to one another, 3. And the conſociated Biſhops to the particular ones: 4. And unfixed Miniſters have done their part in the places where occaſionally they come, if moreover any general Paſtors or Archbiſhops are neceſſary, to rebuke, direct, and perſwade the Biſhops or their Flocks, by Meſſengers, Epiſtles or in Preſence, no doubt but God hath appointed ſuch as the Succeſſors of the Apoſtles, Evangeliſts and other General Miniſters of thoſe firſt times. But if no ſuch thing be appointed by Chriſt, we may be ſure it is not neceſſary nor beſt.

If it were but conſidered that the Ruling Power in the Church is ſo inſeparable from the Teaching Power, that it is exerciſed by teaching and only by God's Word, (either generally, or perſonally applyed) and that upon none but thoſe that willingly and by conſent receive it, it would quiet the World about theſe matters. And O that once Magiſtrates would take the Sword wholly to themſelves, and leave Church Power to work only by its proper ſtrength and virtue, and then all things would fall into joynt again; though the Ithacians would be diſpleaſed.

Queſt. 58. Whether any part of the proper Paſtoral or Epiſcopal Power may be given or deputed to a Lay-man, or to one of any other Office, or the proper work may be performed by ſuch?

Anſw. 1. SUch extrinſecal, or circumſtantial, or accidental Actions as are afore-mentioned may be done by Deputies or others (as calling the Church together, ſummoning Offenders, recording actions, &c.)

2. The proper Epiſcopal or Paſtoral Work or Office cannot be deputed, in whole or part, any other way than by Communication, which is, by Ordination, or making another to be of the ſame Office. For if it may be done by a Lay-man, or one that is not of the ſame order and office, then it is not to be called any proper part of the Paſtoral or Epiſcopal Office: If a Lay-man may baptize, or adminiſter the Sacrament of Chriſt's Body and Blood, or may ordain, or excommunicate (Eccleſiaſtically) or abſolve, meerly becauſe a Biſhop authorizeth or biddeth him, Then 1. What need Chriſt have made an Office-work of it, and Perſons be devoted and conſecrated to it?

2. And why may not the Peoples election and the King's Commiſſion ſerve to enable a Lay-man to do it? For if commanding only be proper to the Biſhop or Paſtor, and executing be common to Lay-men, it's certain that the King may command all Biſhops and Paſtors to do their Office-work; and therefore he may command a Lay-man to do that which a Biſhop may command him to do.

3. And is it not a contradiction to ſay that a Man is a Lay-man, or of another Order, who is Authorized by a Biſhop, to do a Biſhops Work or Office? When as the Office it ſelf is nothing (as is oft ſaid) but an Obligation and Authority to do the Work. If therefore a Biſhop authorize and oblige any other Man to do the proper Work of a Biſhop or Paſtor (to Ordain, to Baptize, to give the Sacrament of the Euchariſt, to Excommunicate, to Abſolve, &c.) he thereby maketh that Man a Biſhop or a Paſtor, whatever he call him.

Obj. But

Obj. But doth not a Biſhop preach per alios to all his Dioceſs? And give them the Sacraments per alios, &c?

Anſw. Let not the Phraſe be made the Controverſie inſtead of the Matter. Thoſe other Perſons are either Miniſters of Chriſt, or Lay-men. If Lay-men, their Actions are unlawful. If Miniſters, they are Commiſſioned Officers of Chriſts themſelves, and it is the work of their own Office which they do, and it is they that ſhall have the Reward or Puniſhment. But if preaching to all theſe Churches or giving to all theſe Perſons in a thouſand Pariſhes the Sacraments, &c. were the Biſhops or Archbiſhops work, that is, which they are obliged to do, then they would Sin in not doing it. But if they are the Governours only of thoſe that are obliged to do it, and are not obliged to do it themſelves, then governing the doers of it, is only their work; and therefore it is but equivocally ſaid that the work is theirs, which others and not they are obliged to do; and that they do their work per alios, when they do but govern thoſe others in doing their own work.

Of this read the Lord Bacons Conſiderations, and Grotius de Imper. ſumm. Poteſt. circa Sacra, who ſoundly reſolve the Caſe, againſt doing the Paſtoral Work per alium.

Queſt. 59. May a Lay-man preach or expound the Scriptures? Or what of this is proper to the Paſtors Office?

Anſw. 1. NO doubt but there is ſome Preaching or Teaching and Expounding which a Lay-man may uſe. So did Origen; ſo did Conſtantine; ſo may a King or Judge on the Bench: So may a Parent to his Children, and a Maſter to his Family, and a Schoolmaſter or Tutor to his Scholars.

2. It is not any one Method or Sermon faſhion which is proper to a Miniſter, and forbidden to a Lay-man: That Method which is moſt meet to the Matter and Hearers, may be uſed by one as well as by the other.

3. It is not the meer publickneſs of the Teaching, which muſt tell us what is unlawful for a Lay man. For Writing and Printing are the moſt publick ways of Teaching; and theſe no Man taketh to be forbidden the Laity. Scaliger, Caſaubon, Grotius, Eraſmus, Conſtantine, King James, the Lord Bacon, and abundance more Lay-men have done the Church great ſervice by their Writings. And Judges on the Bench ſpeak oft Theologically to many.

But that which is proper to the Miniſters or Paſtors of the Church is, 1. To make a ſtated Office of it, and to be ſeparated, ſet a-part, devoted, or conſecrated and appropriated to this ſacred Work; and not to do it occaſionally only, or ſometimes, or on the by; but as their Calling and the Employment of their Lives.

2. To do it as Called and Commiſſioned Miniſters of Chriſt, who have a ſpecial nunciative and Teaching Authority committed to them; and therefore are in a ſpecial manner to be heard, according to their ſpecial Authority.

3. To be the ſtated Teachers of particular Churches, as their Paſtors and Guides; (though they may ſometime permit a Lay-man when there is cauſe to Teach them pro tempore) Theſe three are proper to the Miniſterial and Paſtoral Office.

But for the regulating of Lay-mens Teaching, 1. They muſt ſtatedly keep in their Families or within their proper bounds.

2. They muſt not preſume to go beyond their abilities eſpecially in matters dark and difficult.

3. They muſt not thruſt themſelves without a juſt call and need into publick or numerous Meetings as Teachers, nor do that which favoureth of Pride or Oſtentation, or which tendeth to cheriſh thoſe vices in others.

4. They muſt not live, or Preach, as from under the Government of the Church Paſtors: But being members of their flocks, muſt do all as under their lawful overſight and guidance: Much leſs muſt they proudly and ſchiſmatically ſet up themſelves againſt their lawful Paſtors, and bring them into contempt to get themſelves Reputation, and to draw away Diſciples after them. Act. 20. 30 Heb. 13 7, 17, 24. 1 Theſ. 5. 12, 13. 1 Tim. 5. 17.

5. Times and Places muſt be greatly diſtinguiſhed. In Infidel or groſly ignorant Countreys, where through the want of Preachers there is a true neceſſity, Men may go much further than in Countreys where Teachers and Knowledge do abound.

Queſt. 60. What is the true ſenſe of the diſtinction of Paſtoral Power, in foro interiore & exteriore, rightly uſed?

Anſw. 1. NOt as if the Paſtors had any Power of the Sword or outward force, or of Mens Bodies or Eſtates immediately: For all the Paſtoral Power is immediately on the Soul, and but ſecondarily on the Body, ſo far as the perſwaded Soul will move it. Reaſon and Love and the Authority of a Meſſenger of Chriſt, are all the Power by which Biſhops or Paſtors as ſuch can work, in foro interiore vel exteriore; they Rule the Body but by Ruling the Soul.

2. But the true uſe of the diſtinction is only to ſerve inſtead of the uſual diſtinction of Publick, and Perſonal Obligation. It is one thing to ſatisfie a Mans private Conſcience about his own perſonal Caſe or Matters: And another thing to oblige the whole Church, or a particular Perſon, of his Duty as a member of the Society to the reſt. When the Paſtor abſolveth a penitent Perſon, in foro interiore, that is, in his own Conſcience, he delivereth him a diſcharge in the Name of Chriſt on Condition he be truly Penitent: Elſe not. But in foro exteriore he actually and abſolutely reſtoreth him to his viſible State of Church Communion. The reſt of the members perhaps may juſtly think this Man unlike to prove a true Penitent: And then in foro interiore they are not bound to believe him certainly penitent or pardoned by God: But in foro exteriore that he is reſtored to Church Communion, and that for order ſake they are bound to hold Communion with him, they are bound (internally) to believe. So that it comes near the ſenſe of the diſtinction of the ſecret Judgment (of God and Conſcience) and Church Judgment.

Queſt. 61. In what ſenſe is it true that ſome ſay, that the Magiſtrate only hath the External Government of the Church, and the Paſtors the Internal?

Anſw. 1. NOt as External and Internal are oppoſed in the Nature of the Action. For the Voice of the Paſtor in Preaching is External, as well as the Kings.

2. Not as they are oppoſed in the manner of Reception. For the Ears of the Auditors are external Recipients from the Preacher as well as from the King.

3. Not as diſtinguiſhing the parts that are to obey, the Duties commanded, and the Sins forbidden, as if the King ruled the Body only and the Paſtor the Soul. For the Soul is bound to obey the King, or elſe the Body could not be bound to obey him; unleſs by Cords. And the Body muſt obey the Preacher as well as the Soul. Murder, Drunkenneſs, Swearing, Lying, and ſuch other external Vices, are under the Paſtors Power to forbid in Chriſts name, as well as the Kings.

4. Not as if all the external Parts or Actions of Religion were exempted from the Paſtors Power. For Preaching, Praying, Reading, Sacraments, Church-aſſemblies, are external Parts of Religion, and under the Paſtors care.

But in two reſpects the External Power is only the Kings or Civil Magiſtrates. 1. As it is denominated from the Sword or mulcts or corporal Penalties which which is the external means of Execution: Though in this respect the distinction were far more intelligibly expresst by [The Government by the Sword, and by the Sacred Word.]

As Bishop Bilson of Obed. useth still to distinguish them; with many others: See B. Carlton of Jurisdiction. ☞

2. But the principal Sense of their Distinction is the same with Constantines, who distinguished of a Bishop without and within; or of our common Distinction of Intrinsick and Extrinsick Government: And though Internal and External have the same Signification, use maketh Intrinsick and Extrinsick more intelligible. And by Internal is meant that Power which Intrinsecally belongeth to the Pastors Office as Instituted by Christ, and so is Intrinsecal to the Pastorship and the Church (as Preaching, Praying, Sacraments, the Keys of Admission and Exclusion, Ordination, &c.) And by External is meant, that which is Extrinsecal to the Pastorship and the Church; which Princes have sometimes granted them, but Christ hath made no part of their Office. In this Sense the assertion is good and clear and necessary; that the disposal of all things Circa Sacra all Accidents and Circumstances whatsoever, which by Christs Institution are not Intrinsecal to the Pastorship and Church, but extrinsecal, do belong to the Power of Kings and Magistrates.

Quest. 62. Is the tryal, judgment, or consent of the Laity necessary to the admittance of a member into the Universal or Particular Church?

Answ. 1. IT is the Pastors Office to bear and exercise the Keys of Christs Church: Therefore by Office he is to receive those that come in; and consequently to be the Tryer and Judge of their fitness.

2. It belongeth to the same Office which is to Baptize, to Judge who is to be baptized: Otherwise Ministers should not be rational Judges of their own Actions, but the Executioners of other Mens Judgment It is more the Judging who is to be baptized, which the Ministers Office consisteth in, than in the bare doing of the outward act of Baptizing.

3. He that must be the ordinary Judge in Church-admissions, is supposed to have both Ability and Leisure to make him fit; and Authority and Obligation to do the work.

4. The ordinary Body of the Laity have none of all these four Qualifications; much less all. 1. They are not ordinarily able; so to examine a Mans Faith and Resolution with Judgment and Skill, as may neither tend to the wrong of himself nor of the Church. For it is great skill that is required thereunto. 2. They have not ordinarily Leisure from their proper Callings and Labours, to wait on such a work as it must be waited on; especially in populous Places. 3. They are not therefore obliged to do that which they cannot be supposed to have Ability or Leisure for. 4. And where they have not the other three, they can have no Authority to do it.

5. It is therefore as great a crime for the Laity to usurp the Pastors Office in this matter, as in Preaching, Baptizing or other Parts of it.

6. And though Pride often blind Men (both People and Pastors) so as to make them overlook the burden and look only at the Authority and Honour; yet is it indeed an intolerable injury to the Laity, if any would lay such a burden on them which they cannot bear, and consequently would make them responsible for the omissions or misdoing of it, to Christ their Judge.

7. There is not so much as any fair pretence for the Laity having Power to judge who shall be received into the Universal Church: For who of the Laity should have this Power? Not All, nor the Major Vote of the Church: For who ever sought the Votes of all the Christians in the World, before he baptized a Man? Not any one particular Church or Persons above the rest: For they have no Right to shew for it, more than the rest.

John 20. 21, 22, 23. & 21. 15, 16, 17. Mat. 28. 12, 20.

8. It is not in the Power of the Laity to keep a Man out of their own particular Church Communion, whom the Pastor receiveth; because, as is said, it is his Office to judge and bear the Keys. 1 Cor. 4. 1, 2. 1 Tim. 5. 17. Heb. 13. 7, 17.

9. Therefore if it be ill done, and an unworthy Person be admitted, the Consciences of the People need not accuse themselves of it, or be disturbed, because it is none of their Employment. 1 Cor. 5. 3, 4, 5, 6, 11. 2 Thes. 3. 6, 10, 14. Tit. 3. 10.

10. Yet the Liberty of the Church or People must be distinguished from their Governing Power, and their Executing Duty from the Power of Judging. And so, 1. The People are to be guided by the Pastors as Volunteers, and not by Violence: And therefore it is the Pastors Duty, in all doubtful Cases, to give the People all necessary Satisfaction, by giving them the Reasons of his doings, that they may understandingly and quietly obey and submit. 2. And in case the People discern any notable appearance of danger, by introducing Hereticks and grosly impious Men to corrupt the Church, and by subverting the order of Christ, they may go to their Pastors to desire Satisfaction in the case. 3. And if by open proof or notoriety it be certain, that by Ignorance, fraud or negligence the Pastors thus corrupt the Church, the People may seek their due Remedy from other Pastors and Magistrates; 4. And they may protest their own dissent from such proceedings; 5. And in case of extremity may cast off Heretical and impious and intolerable Pastors, and commit their Souls to the conduct of fitter Men; As the Churches did against the Arrian Bishops, and as Cyprian declareth it his Peoples duty to do; as is aforesaid. 2 John. Mar. 13. 9, 23, 33. Mar. 4. 24. Mat. 7. 15, 16. Mat. 16. 6, 11, 12. Mar. 12. 38. & 8. 15. Phil. 2. 2, 3. Col. 2. 8. 1 Pet. 3. 17. Mat. 24. 4.

Quest. 63. What Power have the People in Church Censures and Excommunication?

Answ. THis is here adjoined, because it requireth but little more than the foregoing answer. 1. As it is the Pastors Office to judge who is to be received, so also to judge who is to be excluded.

2. But the Execution of his Sentence belongeth to the People as well as to himself. It is they that either hold Communion with the Person, or avoid him. 1 Cor. 5. 3, 6, 11. 2 John. Tit. 3. 10.

3. Therefore though ordinarily they must acquiesce in the Pastors Judgment, yet if he grosly offend against the Law of God, and would bring them, e. g. to Communion with Hereticks and openly impious, and excommunicate the Orthodox and Godly, they may seek their remedy as before.

Quest. 64. What is the Peoples Remedy in Case of the Pastors Male-administration?

Answ. THis also is here annexed for dispatch, as being almost sufficiently answered already.

1. It must be supposed that all Church disorders and male-administrations cannot be expected to be remedied; but many while we are sinners and imperfect must be born.

2. The first Remedy is to speak submissively to the Pastor of his faults, and to say to Archippus, Take heed to the Ministry which thou hast received: And if he hear not more privately, for the People more openly to warn and intreat him; not as his Governours, but as Christians that have Reason to regard Christs Interest and their own, and have Charity to desire his Reformation. Col. 4. 17.

2. The next remedy is, to consult with the neighbour Pastors of other Churches, that they may admonish him; not as his Governours, but as neighbour Pastors. Acts 15.

3. The next remedy is to seek redress from those Governours that have Power to correct or cast out the intolerable.

4. The last remedy is that of Cyprian, to desert such intolerable Pastors.

But in all this, the People must be sure that they proceed not proudly, ignorantly, erroneously, passionately, factiously, disorderly or rashly.

Quest. 65. May one be a Pastor or a Member of a particular Church who liveth so far from it, as to be uncapable of personal Communion with them?

Answ. THE Name is taken from the Relation; and the Relation is founded in Capacity, Right, and Obligation to actual Communion, Duties and Priviledges; 1. He that is so statedly distant is uncapable statedly of Communion, and therefore uncapable of the Relation and Name.

2. He that is but for a Time accidentally so distant, is but for that time uncapable of Communion with them: And therefore retaineth Capacity, Right and Obligation statedly for the future, but not for the present exercise. Therefore he retaineth the Relation and Name, in respect to his future intended exercise; but not in so plenary a sense, as he that is capable of present Communion.

3. It is not the length or shortness of the time of absence that wholly cutteth off or continueth the Relation and Name, but the probability or improbability of a seasonable accession. For if a Man be removed but a day, with a purpose to return no more, his relation ceaseth. And if a Man be long purposing and probably like to return, and by sickness or otherwise be hindered, it doth not wholly end his relation.

4. If the delay be so long as either maketh the return improbable, or as necessitateth the Church to have another statedly in the Pastor's place, where they can have but one, and so the People by taking another, consent (though with grief) to quit their relation and title to the former, there the Relation is at an end.

5. It is a delusory formality of some, that call themselves Members of a separated (or other) Church, from which they most ordinarily and statedly live at an utter distance, and yet take themselves to be no Members of the Church where they live, and usually join with: And all because they covenanted with one and not with the other.

Quest. 66. If a Man be injuriously suspended or excommunicated by the Pastor or People, which way shall he have remedy?

Answ. AS is aforesaid in case of Male-administration; 1. By admonishing the Pastor or those that wrong him. 2. By consulting Neighbour Pastors, that they may admonish him; 3. By the help of Rulers, where such are, and the Churches good forbids it not. 4. In case of extremity by removing to a Church that will not so injure you. And what needs there any more, save patience?

Quest. 67. Doth presence always make us guilty of the errors or faults of the Pastor in God's Worship, or of the Church? Or in what cases are we guilty?

Answ. 1. IF it always made us guilty no Man could join with any Pastor or Church in the World, without being a wilful Sinner. Because no Man worshippethGod without Sin in matter or manner, omission or commission.

2. If it never made us guilty, it would be lawful to join with Mahometans and Bread-worshippers, &c.

3. Therefore the following decision of the question, in what cases it is a Duty or a Sin to separate, doth decide this case also. For when separation is no Duty, but a Sin, there our presence in the Worship is no Sin: But when separation is a Duty, there our presence is a Sin.

4. Especially in these two cases our presence is a Sin; 1. When the very Assembly and Worship is so bad as God will not accept, but judgeth the substance of it for a Sin. 2. In case we our selves be put upon any Sin in Communion, or as a previous condition of our Communion (as to make some false profession, or to declare our consent to other Mens Sin, or to commit corporal visible reputative Idolatry, or the like.) But the Pastor and Church shall answer for their own faults, and not we, when we have cause to be present, and make them not ours by any sinful action of our own.

Quest. 68. Is it lawful to communicate in the Sacrament with wicked Men?

Answ. THE answer may be gathered from what is said before.

1. If they be so wicked for number, and flagitiousness, and notoriety, as that it is our duty to forsake the Church, then to communicate with them is a Sin. Therefore the after resolution of the just causes of separation must be perused. As if a Church were so far defiled with Heresie, or open Impiety, that it were justified by the Major Vote, and bore down Faith and Godliness, and the Society were become uncapable of the Ends of Church Association and Communion: In this and other cases it must be deserted.

2. If we do not perform our own Duty to remove unlawful Communions, whether it be by admonition of the Offender or Pastor; or what ever is proved really our Duty,) the omission of that Duty is our Sin.

3. But if we sin not by omitting our own Duty, it will be no Sin of ours to communicate with the Church, where scandalous Sinners or Hereticks are permitted. The Pastors and Delinquents Sins are not ours.

4. Yea, if we do not omit our own duty in order to the remedy, that will not justifie us in denying Communion with the Church while wicked Men are there: But it will rather aggravate our Sin, to omit one Duty first, and thence fetch occasion to omit another.

Quest. 69. Have all the Members of the Church right to the Lord's Table? And is Suspension lawful?

OF this see the Defence of the Synods Propositions in New England. I answer,

1. You must distinguish between a fundamental Right of State, and an immediate right of present possession; or if you will, between a Right duly to receive the Sacrament, and a Right to immediate reception simply considered.

2. You must distinguish between a questioned controverted Right, and an unquestioned Right; and so you must conclude as followeth.

1. Every Church-member (at least adult) as such, hath the Fundamental Right of stated Relation, or a Right duly to receive the Sacrament; that is, to receive it understandingly and seriously at those seasons when by the Pastors it is administred.

2. But if upon faults or accusations, this Right be duly questioned in the Church, it is become a controverted right; and the possession or admission may by the Bishops or Pastors of the Church, be suspended, if they see cause, while it is under tryal, till a just decision.

3. Though Infants are true Members, yet the want of natural capacity, duly to receive, maketh it unlawful to give them the Sacrament, because it is to be given only to Receivers, and receiving is more than eating and drinking; it is consenting to the Covenant, which is the real Receiving in a moral sense, or at least Consent professed. So that they want not a state of right, as to their Relation, but a natural capacity to receive.

4. Persons at age who want not the Right of a stated Relation, may have such actual Natural and Moral Indispositions, as may also make them for that time unmeet to Receive. As Sickness, Infection, a Journey, Persecution, scattering the Church, a Prison: And (morally) 1. Want of necessary knowledge of the nature of the Sacrament (which by the negligence of Pastors or Parents may be the case of some that are but newly past their Childhood;] 2. Some heinous Sin, of which the Sinner hath not so far repented, as to be yet ready to receive a sealed Pardon, or which is so scandalous in the Church, as that in publick respects the Person is yet unfit for its priviledges. 3. Such Sins or accusation of Sin, as make the Persons Church-title justly controverted, and his Communion suspended, till the case be decided. 4. Such fears of unworthy receiving, as were like to hurt and distract the Person, if he should receive till he were better satisfied. These make a Man uncapable of present Reception, and so are a bar to his plenary right: They have still right to receive in a due manner: But being yet uncapable of that due receiving, they have not a plenary right to the thing.

5. The same may be said of other parts of our Duty and Priviledges. A Man may have a relative, habitual or stated right, to praise God, and give him thanks for his Justification, Sanctification, and Adoption, and to godly Conference, to exercises of Humiliation, &c. Who yet for want of present actual Preparation, may be uncapable, and so want a plenary right.

6. The understanding of the double preparation necessary, doth most clearly help us to understand this case. A Man that is in an unregenerate state, must be visibly cured of that state (of utter ignorance, unbelief, ungodliness,) before he can be a Member of the Church, and lay a claim to its priviledges. But when that is done, besides this general preparation, a particular preparation also to each duty is necessary to the right doing of it. A Man must understand what he goeth about, and must consider of it, and come with some suitable affections. A Man may have right to go a Journey that wants a Horse; or may have a Horse, that is not sadled: He that hath Clothes must put them on, before he is fit to come into Company: He that hath right to write, may want a Pen, or have a bad one: Having of gracious habits, may need the addition, of bringing them into such acts, as are suitable to the work in hand.

Quest. 70. Is there any such thing in the Church, as a Rank or Classis, or Species of Church-Members at age, who are not to be admitted to the Lord's Table, but only to hearing the Word and Prayer, between Infant-members, and adult confirmed ones?

Answ. SOme have excogitated such a Classis or Species or Order, for convenience, as a prudent necessary thing: Because to admit all to the Lord's Table they think dangerous on one side; and to cast all that are unfit for it out of the Church, they think dangerous on the other side, and that which the People would not bear. Therefore to preserve the reverence of the Sacrament, and to preserve their own and the Churches Peace, they have contrived this middle way or rank. And indeed the Controversie seemeth to be more about the title (whether it may be called a middle order of meer Learners) and Worshippers, than about the Matter. I have occasionally written more of it than I can here stay to recite: And the accurate handling of it requireth more words, than I will here use. This breviate therefore shall be all.

1. It is certain that such Catechumens as are in meer preparation to Faith, Repentance and Baptism, are no Church-members or Christians at all; and so in none of these ranks.

2. Baptism is the only ordinary regular door of entrance into the visible Church; and no Man (unless in extraordinary cases)is to be taken for aChurch-member or visible Christian till baptized.

Two Objections are brought against this. 1. The Infants of Christians are Church-members as such, before Baptism, and so are believers: They are baptized because Members, and not Members, by Baptism.

Answ. This case hath no difficulty: 1. A Believer as such, is a Member of Christ and the Church invisible, but not of the visible Church, till he be an orderly Professor of that belief. And this Profession is not left to every Man's will how it shall be made, but Christ hath prescribed and instituted a certain way and manner of profession, which shall be the only ordinary Symbol or Badge, by which the Church shall know visible Members; and that is Baptism. Indeed when Baptism cannot be had, and open profession without it may serve: For Sacraments are made for Man, and not Man for Sacraments. But when it may be had, it is Christ's appointed Symbol, Tessera and Church-door. And till a Person be baptized, he is but irregularly and initially a Professor; as an Embryo in the Womb is a Man; or as a Covenant before the writing, sealing and delivering is initially a Covenant; or as Persons privately contracted without solemn Matrimony are married; or as a Man is a Minister upon Election and Tryal before Ordination: He hath only in all these cases, the beginning of a Title, which is not compleat; nor at all sufficient in foro Ecclesiæ,to make a Man visibly and legally, a married Man, a Minister, and so here a Christian. For Christ hath chosen his own visible Badge,by which his Church-members must be known. What makes a visible member?

2. And the same is to be said of the Infant-title of the Children of Believers: They have but an initial right before Baptism, and not the Badge of visible Christians. For there are three distinct gradations to make up their visible Christianity. 1. Because they are their own, (and as it were parts of themselves) therefore Believers have power and obligation to dedicate their Children in Covenant with God. 2. Because every Believer is himself dedicated to God, with all that is his own, (according to its capacity) therefore a Believers Child is supposed to be virtually (not actually] dedicated to God in his own Dedication or Covenant, as soon as his Child hath a being. 3. Being thus virtually and implicitely first dedicated, he is after actually and regularly dedicated in Baptism, and Sacramentally receiveth the Badge of the Church; and this maketh him a visible Member or Christian, to which the two first were but introductory, as Conception is to humane Nativity.

Object. But the seed of Believers as such are in the Covenant; and therefore Church-members.

Ans. The word Covenant here is ambiguous: Either it signifieth God's Law of Grace, or prescribed terms for Salvation, with his immediate offer of the benefits to accepters, called the single Covenant of God; or it signifieth this with Man's consent, called the Mutual Covenant where both Parties covenant. In the former sense, the Covenant only offereth Church-membership, but maketh no Man a Church-member, till consent. It is but God's conditional promise, If thou believe thou shalt be saved, &c. If thou give up thy self and Children to me, I will be your God, and you shall be my People. But it is only the Mutual Covenant that maketh a Christian or Church-member.

Object. The promise is to us and our Children as ours.

Answ. That is, that you and your Children dedicated to God, shall be received into Covenant; but not otherwise. Believing is not only bare assenting, but conſenting to the Covenant, and delivering up your ſelves to Chriſt: And if you do not conſent that your Child ſhall be in the Covenant, and deliver him to God alſo, you cannot expect acceptance of him, againſt your wills; nor indeed are you to be taken for true Believers your ſelves, if you dedicate not your ſelves to him and all that are in your power.

Object. This offer or conditional Covenant belongeth alſo to Infidels.

Anſw. The offer is to them, but they accept it not. But every believer accepteth it for himſelf, and his, or devoteth to God himſelf and his Children when he ſhall have them: And by that virtual dedication or conſent, his Children are virtually in the Mutual Covenant; and actually upon actual Conſent and Dedication.

Object. But it is Profeſſion and not Baptiſm, that makes a viſible Member.

Anſw. That's anſwered before; it is Profeſſion by Baptiſm: For Baptiſm is that peculiar act of profeſſion, which God hath choſen to this uſe, when a Perſon is abſolutely devoted, reſigned and engaged to God in a ſolemn Sacrament, this is our regular initiating profeſſion: And it is but an irregular Embryo of a profeſſion, which goeth before Baptiſm ordinarily.

Prop. 3. The time of Infant memberſhip, in which we ſtand in Covenant by our Parents Conſent, cannot be determined by duration, but by the inſufficiency of Reaſon through immaturity of age, (or continuing ideots) to chooſe for ones ſelf.

Prop. 4. It is not neceſſary that the Doctrine of the Lord's Supper be taught Catechumens before Baptiſm; nor was it uſeful with the ancients ſo to do (though it may very well be done.)

Prop. 5. It is needful that the nature of the Lord's Supper be taught all the baptized before they receive it (as was opened before,) elſe they muſt do they know not what.

Prop. 6. Though the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper ſeal not another, but the ſame Covenant that Baptiſm ſealeth; yet are there ſome further truths therein expreſſed, and ſome more particular exerciſes of Faith in Chriſt's Sacrifice and coming, &c. and of Hope, and Love, and Gratitude, &c. requiſite. Therefore the ſame qualifications which will ſerve for Baptiſm, Juſtification, and Adoption, and Salvation, are not enough for the right uſe of Church Communion in the Lord's Supper, the one being the Sacrament of initiation and our new birth; the other of our Confirmation, Exerciſe and Growth in Grace.

7. Whether Perſons be baptized in Infancy or at age, if they do not before underſtand theſe higher Myſteries, they muſt ſtay from the exerciſe of them till they underſtand them: And ſo with moſt there muſt be a ſpace of time between their Baptiſm and fuller Communion.

8. But the ſame that we ſay of the Lord's Supper muſt be ſaid of other parts of Worſhip; Singing Pſalms, Praiſe, Thankſgivings, &c. Men muſt learn them, before they can practiſe them: And uſually theſe as Euchariſtical Acts concur with the Lord's Supper.

9. Whether you will call Men in this ſtate, Church-members of a middle rank and order, between the Baptized, and the Communicants, is but a lis de nomine, a verbal Controverſie. It is granted that ſuch a middle ſort of Men there are in the Church.

10. It is to be maintained that theſe are in a ſtate of Salvation, even before they thus communicate. And that they are not kept away for want of a ſtated Relation-title, but of an immediate capacity, as is aforeſaid.

11. There is no neceſſity, but upon ſuch unfitneſs, that there ſhould be one Days time between Baptiſm and the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper: Nor is it deſirable: For if the baptized underſtand thoſe Myſteries the firſt day, they may communicate in them.

12. Therefore as Men are prepared, ſome may ſuddenly communicate and ſome ſtay longer.

13. When Perſons are at age, if Paſtors, Parents and themſelves be not groſly negligent, they may and ought to learn theſe things in a very little time; ſo that they need not to be ſettled in a lower Learning ſtate, for any conſiderable time, unleſs their own negligence be the cauſe.

14. And in order to their Learning, they have right to be Spectators and Auditors at the Euchariſt, and not to be driven away with the Catechumens, as if they had no right to be there. For it is a thing beſt taught by the practice to beholders.

15. But if any ſhall by ſcandal or groſs neglect of Piety, and not only by Ignorance give cauſe of queſtioning their Title, and ſuſpending their Poſſeſſion of thoſe ſacred Priviledges, theſe are to be reckoned in another rank, even among thoſe whoſe title to Church-memberſhip it ſelf becometh controverted, and muſt undergo a tryal in the Church.

And this much I think may ſerve to reſolve this conſiderable queſtion.

Queſt. 71. Whether a Form of Prayer be lawful.

Anſw. I Have ſaid ſo much of this and ſome following queſtions in many Books already, that to avoid repetition, I ſhall ſay very little here.

The queſtion muſt be out of queſtion with all Chriſtians:

I. Becauſe the Scripture it ſelf hath many forms of Prayer; which therefore cannot be unlawful.

Object. They were lawful then, but not now.

Anſw. He that ſaith ſo, muſt prove where God hath ſince forbidden them. Which can never be.

Object. They may lawfully be read in Scripture for inſtruction, but not uſed as Prayers.

Anſw. They were uſed as Prayers then and are never ſince forbidden: Yea, John and Chriſt did teach their Diſciples to pray, and Chriſt thus prefaceth his form, When ye pray, ſay ——

II. All things muſt be done to Edification: But to uſe a form of Prayer is for the Edification of many Perſons, (at leaſt thoſe that cannot otherwiſe do ſo well) therefore thoſe Perſons muſt uſe a form. Full experience doth prove the Minor, and nothing but ſtrangeneſs to Men can contradict it.

Queſt. 72. Are Forms of Prayer or Preaching in the Church lawful?

Anſw. YES: Moſt Miniſters ſtudy the methodical form of their Sermons before they preach them: And many write the very words, or ſtudy them: And ſo moſt Sermons are a form. And ſure it is as lawful to think before-hand what to ſay in praying as in preaching.

God gave forms of preaching to Moſes and the Prophets: See a large form of prayer for all the people, Deut. 26. 13,14,15. And ſo elſewhere there are many.

1. That which God hath not forbidden is lawful: But God hath not forbidden Miniſters to ſtudy their Sermons or Prayers, either for matter, method or words, and ſo to make them many ways a form.

2. That which God preſcribed is lawful (if he reverſe it not:) But God preſcribed publick forms of prayer; as the titles and matter of many of the Pſalms prove, which were daily uſed in the Jewiſh Synagogues.

Object. Pſalms being to be ſung, are more than Prayers.

Anſw. They were Prayers, though more. They are called Prayers, and for the Matter many of them were no more than Prayers; but only for the meaſures of words: Nor was their ſinging like ours now, but liker to our ſaying. And there are many other Prayers recorded in the Scripture.

3. And all the Churches of Chriſt at leaſt theſe Thir-

Thirteen or Fourteen Hundred Years have taken publick forms for lawful: Which is not to be gainſayed without proof.

Queſt. 73. Are publick Forms of Man's deviſing or compoſing lawful?

Anſw. YES: 1. The Miniſters afore-mentioned throughout the Chriſtian World, do deviſe and compoſe the form of their own Sermons and Prayers: And that maketh them not unlawful. 2. And whoever ſpeaketh ex tempore, his words are a form when he ſpeaketh them, though not a premeditated form. 3. And when Scripture ſo vehemently commandeth us to ſearch, meditate, ſtudy the Scriptures, and take heed to our ſelves and unto Doctrine, &c. What a Perſon is that who will condemn Prayer or Preaching, only becauſe we before hand ſtudied or conſidered what to ſay? As if God abhorred diligence and the uſe of reaſon. Men are not tyed (now) from thinking before hand what to ſay to the Judge at the Bar for Eſtate or Life, or what to ſay on an Embaſſage, or to a King, or any Man that we converſe with? And where are we forbidden to forethink what to ſay to God? Muſt the People take heed how they hear, and look to their foot when they go into the houſe of God? And muſt not we take heed what we ſpeak, and look to our words that they be fit and decent?

Object. Forms are Images of prayer and preaching, forbidden in the ſecond Commandment.

Anſw. Prove it, and add not to the Word of God. 1. The Scripture and God's Servants, even Chriſt himſelf, had broken the ſecond Commandment, when they uſed or preſcribed forms. 2. Forms are no more Images than extemporate words are, as they ſignifie our Minds. Are all the Catechiſms, printed and written Sermons and Prayers, Images or Idols? All forms that Parents teach their Children? O charge not ſuch untruths on God; and invent not falſhoods of his Word, while you cry down Man's inventions.

Queſt. 74. Is it lawful to impoſe Forms on the Congregation or the People in publick Worſhip?

YES, and more than lawful: It is the Paſtor's duty ſo to do. For whether he fore-think what to pray or not, his Prayer is to them a form of words: And they are bound in all the lawful parts, to concur with him in Spirit or Deſire, and to ſay Amen. So that every Miniſter by Office is daily to impoſe a form of Prayer on all the People in the Congregation. Only ſome Men impoſe the ſame form many times over, or every day, and others impoſe every day a new one.

Queſt. 75. Is it lawful to uſe Forms compoſed by Man, and impoſed not only on the People, but on the Paſtors of the Churches?

Anſw. THE queſtion concerneth not the lawfulneſs of impoſing, but of uſing forms impoſed. And 1. It is not lawful to uſe them meerly on that account becauſe they are impoſed or commanded, without ſome greater reaſons of the unlawfulneſs. For elſe it would be unlawful for any other to uſe impoſed Forms; as for a Scholar or Child, if the Maſter or Parent impoſe them, or for the Congregation when the Paſtor impoſeth them, which is not true.

2. The uſing of impoſed Forms may by other accidents be ſometimes good and ſometimes evil, as the Accidents are that make it ſo.

1. Theſe accidents may make it evil. 1. When the form is bad for matter or manner, and we voluntarily prefer it before that which is better, being willing of the impoſiton. 2. When we do it to gratifie our ſlothfulneſs, or to cover our wilful ignorance and diſability. 3. When we voluntarily obey and ſtrengthen any unlawful uſurping Paſtors or Powers that impoſe it without authority, and ſo encourage Church-tyranny. 4. When we chooſe a ſingular form impoſed by ſome ſingular Paſtor, and avoid that which the reſt of the Churches agree in, at a time when it may tend to diviſion and offence. 5. When the weakneſs and offence of the Congregation is ſuch, that they will not joyn with us in the impoſed form, and ſo by uſing it, we drive them from all publick Worſhip or divide them.

2. And in the following circumſtances the uſing of an impoſed form is lawful and a duty: 1. When the Miniſter is ſo weak that he cannot pray well without one, nor compoſe ſo good a one himſelf: 2. Or when the errors or great weakneſs of the generality of Miniſters is ſuch, as that they uſually corrupt or ſpoil God's Worſhip by their own manner of praying, and no better are to be had; and thereupon the wiſe and faithful Paſtors and Magiſtrates ſhall impoſe one ſound and apt Liturgy to avoid error and diviſion in ſuch a diſtempered time; and the ableſt cannot be left at liberty without the relaxing of the reſt. 3. When it is a means of the Concord of the Churches, and no hinderance to our other Prayers. 4. When our hearers will not join with us if we uſe them not: (For error and weakneſs muſt be born with on one ſide, as well as on the other.) 5. When obedience to juſt Authority requireth it, and no command of Chriſt is croſt by it. 6. When the impoſition is ſo ſevere that we muſt ſo worſhip God publickly, or not at all; and ſo all God's publick Worſhip will be ſhut out of that Congregation, Country or Nation, unleſs we will uſe impoſed Prayers. 7. In a word, when the good conſequents of Obedience, Union, avoiding Offence, Liberty for God's publick Worſhip and preaching the Goſpel, &c. are greater than the bad conſequents which are like to follow the uſing of ſuch forms: The preponderating accidents muſt prevail. 8. And if a Man's own Judgment and Conſcience cannot be ſatisfied, to do God's work comfortably and quietly any other way, it may go far in the determination. And the common good of many Churches muſt ſtill be preferred before a leſs.

Queſt. 76. Doth not the Calling of a Miniſter ſo conſiſt in the exerciſe of his own Miniſterial Gifts, that he may not officiate without them, nor make uſe of other Mens Gifts inſtead of them?

Anſw. 1. THE Office of the Miniſtry is an Obligation and Authority to do the Miniſterial work, by thoſe perſonal competent abilities which God hath given us.

2. This obligation to uſe our own abilities, forbiddeth us not to make uſe of the helps, gifts and abilities of others; either to promote our own abilities and habits, or to further us in the act or the exerciſe of them. For, 1. There is no ſuch prohibition in Scripture. 2. All Men are inſufficient for themſelves; and Nature and Scripture require them to uſe the beſt help they can get from others. 2. God's Service muſt be done in the beſt manner we can. But many Miniſters cannot do it ſo well (conſideratis conſiderandis) without other Mens help as with it.

3. We may uſe other Mens gifts to help us, 1. For Matter, 2. Method, 3. Words, and ſo for a threefold form of preaching or prayer.

4. He that uſeth a Scripture form of Matter, Method or Words, uſeth his own abilities no more, than if he uſed a form out of another Book. But it is lawful to uſe a Scripture form: Therefore it is lawful ſo far to take in aſſiſtance in the uſe of our own abilities.

5. He that uſeth a form uſeth his own abilities alſo alſo (not only perhaps at other times, but) in the uſe of it. He uſeth his underſtanding to diſcern the true ſenſe and aptitude of the words which he uſeth: He uſeth his holy Deſires in putting up thoſe Prayers to God: And his other Graces, as he doth in other Prayers. He uſeth his Utterance in the apt and decent ſpeaking of them.

6. A Miniſter is not always bound to uſe his own gifts to the utmoſt that he can, and other Mens as little as he can. For, 1. There is no ſuch Command from God. 2. All things muſt be done to the Churches edification: But ſometimes the greater uſe of another Man's gifts, and the leſs uſe of his own may be to the Churches greater edification.

Inſtances of the lawful uſe of other Mens gifts are ſuch as theſe.

1. For Matter, an abler Miniſter may tell a young Man what ſubjects are fitteſt for him in preaching and prayer; and what is the ſenſe of the Scriptures which he is to open; and what is the true ſolution of ſeveral doubts and caſes. A Miniſter that is young, raw or ignorant, (yea, the beſt) may be a Learner while he is a Teacher: But he that is a Learner maketh uſe ſo far of the gifts of others. And indeed all Teachers in the World make uſe of the gifts of others: For all teach what they learn from others.

2. For Method; it is lawful to learn that as well as Matter from another. Chriſt taught his Diſciples a Method of Prayer: And other Men may open that method to us. All Tutors teach their Pupils Method as well as Matter: For Method is needful to the due underſtanding and uſing of the Matter. A Method of Divinity, a Method of Preaching, and a Method of Praying may be taught a Preacher by word, and may be written or printed for his uſe.

3. For Words, 1. There is no more prohibition in God's Word, againſt learning or uſing another Man's Words, than his Method or Matter. Therefore it is not unlawful. 2. A Tutor or Senior Miniſter may teach the Scripture words to a Pupil or Junior Miniſter; yea, and may ſet them together and compoſe him a Sermon or Prayer out of Scripture in its words. (For he that may uſe an ill-compoſed Scripture form of his own gathering, may uſe a well-compoſed form of anothers.) 3. All the Books in our Libraries are forms of words; and it is lawful ſure to uſe ſome of all thoſe words which we read; or elſe our Books would be a ſnare and limitation to our Language. 4. All Preachers ordinarily uſe Citations, Teſtimonies, &c. in other Mens words. 5. All Miniſters uſe Pſalms in the Metre of other Mens compoſing (and uſually impoſing too.) And there is no more prohibition againſt uſing other Mens words in a Prayer, than in a Pſalm. 6. Almoſt all Miniſters uſe other Mens gifts and form of words, in reading the Scriptures, in their Vulgar Tongues: For God did not write them by his Apoſtles and Prophets in Engliſh, French, Dutch, &c. but in Hebrew, Chaldee and Greek: Therefore the wording them in Engliſh, &c. is a humane form of words: And few Miniſters think they are bound to tranſlate all the Bible themſelves, leſt they uſe other Mens words or abilities. 7. If a young Miniſter that can pray but weakly, hear more apt expreſſions and ſentences in another Miniſters Prayers, than his own are, he may afterward make uſe of thoſe ſentences and expreſſions. And if of one ſentence, why not of two or ten. when God hath not forbidden it? So alſo in preaching. 8. It is lawful to read another Man's Epiſtles or Sermons in the Church, as the primitive Churches did by Clements and ſome others. 9. An impoſition may be ſo ſevere, that we ſhall not uſe our own words, unleſs we will uſe ſome of other Mens. 10. All Churches almoſt in the World, have conſented in the uſe of Creeds, Confeſſions, and Prayers, and Pſalms in the words of others.

But yet 1. No Miniſter muſt on theſe pretences ſtifle his own gifts, and grow negligent; 2. Nor conſent to Church-tyranny or Papal Uſurpations; 3. Nor do that which tendeth to eat our ſerioufneſs in the Worſhip of God, and turn all into dead Imagery or Formality.

Queſt. Is it lawful to read a Prayer in the Church?

Anſw. 1. THat which is not forbidden is lawful: But to read a Prayer is not forbidden (as ſuch, though by accident it may.)

2. The Prayers in the Scripture Pſalms, were uſually read in the Jewiſh Synagogues lawfully: For they were written to that end; and were indeed the Jewiſh Liturgy. Therefore to read a Prayer is not unlawful.

3. He that hath a weak Memory may read his own Sermon Notes: Therefore he may read his Prayers.

4. I add as to this caſe and the former together, that 1. Chriſt did uſually frequent the Jewiſh Synagogues.

2. That in thoſe Synagogues there were forms of Prayer, and that ordinarily read: At leaſt Scripture forms: And if either the Jewiſh Rabbins (cited by Scaliger, Selden in Eutych. Alexandr. &c.) or the ſtrongeſt probability may be credited, there were alſo humane forms. For who can imagine that thoſe Phariſees ſhould have no humane forms, 1. Who are ſo much accuſed of formality, and following Traditions: 2. And uſed long and frequent Prayers: But if indeed they had no ſuch forms, then long and frequent extemporate Prayers are not ſo great a ſign of the Spirits gifts as is imagined, when ſuch Phariſees abounded in them. But there is little probability, but that they uſed both ways.

3. That Chriſt did not ſeparate from the Synagogues for ſuch Prayers ſake.

4. Yea, that we never read that Chriſt medled in the Controverſie, it being then no Controverſie; nor that he once reproved ſuch forms or reading them, or ever called the Jews to repent of them.

If you ſay, His general reproof of Traditions was not as ſuch, but as ſet before, or againſt the Commands of God. 2. He named many of their particular Traditions and Corruptions, Mat. 15. & 23, &c. and yet never named this. 3. His being uſually preſent at their Aſſemblies, and ſo joining with them in their Worſhip, would be ſuch an appearance of his approbation, as would make it needful to expreſs his diſallowance of it, if indeed he thought it ſinful. So that whoever impartially conſidereth all this, that he joined with them, that he particularly reproved other Corruptions, and that he never ſaid any thing at all againſt Forms or reading Prayers, that is recorded, will ſure be moderate in his judgment of ſuch indifferent things, if he know what moderation is.

Queſt. 77. Is it lawful to pray in the Church without a preſcribed or premeditated form of Words?

Anſw. THere are ſo few ſober and ſerious Chriſtians that ever made a doubt of this, that I will not beſtow many words to prove it.

1. That which is not forbidden is lawful. But Church-prayer without a premeditated or preſcribed form of words is not forbidden (by God) therefore (as to God's Laws) it is not unlawful.

2. To expreſs holy deſires underſtandingly, orderly, ſeriouſly and in apt expreſſions, is lawful praying. But all this may be done without a ſet form of words; therefore to pray without a ſet form of words may be lawful.

3. The conſent of the Univerſal Church, and the experience of godly Men, are arguments ſo ſtrong, as are not to be made light of.

4. To which Scripture inſtances may be added.

Queſt.

Queſt. 78 Whether are ſet Forms of Words, or free Praying without them the better way? And what are the Commodities and Incommodities of each way?

Anſw. I Will firſt Anſwer the later Queſtion, becauſe the former dependeth on it.

I. The Commodities of a ſet form of Words, and the diſcommodities of free-praying are theſe following.

1. In a time of dangerous Hereſie which hath infected the Paſtors, a ſet form of preſcribed Words tendeth to keep the Church, and the Conſciences of the joyners from ſuch Infection, offence and guilt.

2. When Miniſters are ſo weak as to diſhonour Gods Worſhip by their unapt, and ſlovenly, and unſound Expreſſions, preſcribed or ſet Forms which are well compoſed, are ſome preſervative and cure. When free praying leaveth the Church under this inconvenience.

3. When Miniſters by faction, paſſion or corrupt intereſts, are apt to put theſe Vices into their Prayers, to the injury of others, and of the Cauſe and Church of God, free praying cheriſheth this, or giveth it opportunity, which ſet forms do reſtrain.

4. Concordant ſet forms do ſerve for the exacteſt Concord in the Churches, that all at once may ſpeak the ſame things.

5. They are needful to ſome weak Miniſters that cannot do ſo well without them.

6. They ſomewhat prevent the laying of the reputation of Religious Worſhip upon the Miniſters abilities: When in free praying, the honour and comfort varieth with the various degrees of Paſtoral abilities: In one Place it is excellently well done, in another but drily, and coldly, and meanly: In another erroneouſly, unedifyingly, if not diſhonourably, tending to the contempt of holy Things: Whereas in the way of ſet Liturgies, though the ableſt (at that time) doth no better, yet the weakeſt doth, (for words) as well, and all alike.

7. And, if proud weak Men have not the compoſing and impoſing of it, all know that Words drawn up by Study, upon ſober Premeditation and Conſultation, have a greater Advantage, to be exact and apt, than thoſe that were never thought on till we are ſpeaking them.

8. The very fear of doing amiſs, diſturbeth ſome unready Men, and maketh them do all the reſt the worſe.

9. The Auditors know before hand, whether that which they are to join in be ſound or unſound having time to try it.

10. And they can more readily put in their Conſent to what is ſpoken, and make the Prayers their own, when they know before hand what it is, than they can do, when they know not before they hear it; it being hard to the duller ſort of hearers, to concur with an Underſtanding and Conſent as quick, as the ſpeakers words are. Not but that this may be done, but not without great difficulty in the duller ſort.

11. And it tendeth to avoid the Pride and Self-deceit of many, who think they are good Chriſtians, and have the Spirit of Grace and Supplication, becauſe by Learning and Uſe they can ſpeak many hours in variety of Expreſſions in Prayer; which is a dangerous miſtake.

II. The Commodities of Free extemporate Prayers, and the diſcommodity of preſcribed or ſet forms are theſe following.

1. It becometh an advantage to ſome Proud Men who think themſelves wiſer than all the reſt, to obtrude their Compoſitions, that none may be thought wiſe enough, or fit to ſpeak to God but in their Words: And ſo introduce Church-tyranny.

2. It may become a hindrance to able worthy Miniſters that can do better.

3. It may become a dividing ſnare to the Churches, that cannot all Agree and Conſent in ſuch humane Impoſitions.

4. It may become an advantage to Hereticks when they can but get into Power (as the Arrians of old) to corrupt all the Churches and publick Worſhip: And thus the Papiſts have corrupted the Churches by the Maſs.

5. It may become an engine or occaſion of Perſecution, and ſilencing all thoſe Miniſters that cannot Conſent in ſuch Impoſitions.

6. It may become a means of depraving the Miniſtry, and bringing them to a common idleneſs and ignorance, (if other things alike concur.) For when Men perceive that no greater Abilities are uſed and required, they will commonly labour for and get no greater, and ſo will be unable to pray without their forms of Words.

7. And by this means Chriſtian Religion may decay and grow into contempt: For though it be deſirable that its own worth ſhould keep up its reputation and ſucceſs, yet it never hitherto was ſo kept up without the Aſſiſtance of Gods eminent Gifts and Graces in his Miniſters: But where ever there hath been a learned, able, holy, zealous, diligent Miniſtry, Religion uſually hath flouriſhed: And where ever there hath been an ignorant, vicious, cold, idle, negligent and reproached Miniſtry, Religion uſually hath died and been reproached. And we have now no reaſon to look for that which never was, and that God ſhould take a new courſe in the World.

8. And the opinion of impoſing Forms of Prayer, may draw on the opinion of impoſing forms of Preaching as much, and of reſtraining free Preaching as much as free Praying, as we ſee in Moſcovy. And then when nothing but bare Reading is required, nothing more will be ordinarily ſought; and ſo the Miniſtry will be the ſcorn of the People.

9. And it will be a ſhameful and uncomfortable failing, when a Miniſter is not able on variety of occaſions, to vary his Prayers accordingly; and when he cannot go any further than his Book or Leſſon; it being as impoſſible to make Prayers juſt fitted to all occaſions which will fall out, as to make Sermons fit for all, or as they ſay, to make a Coat for the Moon: And the People will contemn the Miniſters when they perceive this great deficiency.

10. And it is a great difficulty to many Miniſters to learn and ſay a form without Book; ſo that they that can all Day ſpeak what they know, can ſcarce recite a form of words one quarter of an hour, the memory more depending upon the Body and its temper, than the exerciſe of the underſtanding doth. He that is tied juſt to theſe words and no other, is put upon double Difficulties (like him that on height muſt walk on a narrow plank, where the fear of falling will make him fall.) But he that may expreſs the juſt deſires of his Soul in what words occur that are apt and decent, is like one that hath a field to walk in: For my own part, it is eaſier to me to Pray or Preach ſix hours in Freedom, about things which I underſtand, than to pray or preach the tenth part of an hour in the fetters of a form of words which I muſt not vary. And ſo the neceſſity of a Book coming in, doth bring down the reputation of the Miniſters abilities, in the Peoples eyes.

11. But the grand incommodity greater than all the reſt is, that it uſually occaſioneth careleſneſs, deadneſs, formality and heartleſs Lip labour in our Prayers to God; whileſt the free way of preſent Prayer tendeth to excite our Cogitations to conſider what we ſay. And it is not only the multitude of dead-hearted Hypocrites in the Church, that are thus tempted to perſevere in their Lip-labour and Hypocriſie, and to draw near to God with their Lips when their Hearts are far from him, and are gratified in their ſelf-deceit, whileſt Parrot-like they ſpeak the words which they regard not, and their Tongues do overgo their Hearts; But even better Men are greatly ly tempted to dead remiſsneſs: I mean both the ſpeakers and the hearers: For, 1. It is natural to Mans mind to have a ſlothful wearineſs as well as his Body; and to do no more than he findeth a neceſſity of doing: And though Gods Preſence alone ſhould ſuffice to engage all the Powers of our Souls, yet ſad Experience telleth us, that Gods eye and Mans together will do more with almoſt all Men, than one alone. And therefore no Mens Thoughts are ſo accurately governed as their Words. Therefore when a Miniſter knoweth before-hand that, as to Mans approbation, he hath no more to do, but to read that which he ſeeth before him, he is apt to let his Thoughts fly abroad, and his affections lye down, becauſe no Man taketh account of theſe. But in extemporate diverſified Prayer, a Man cannot do it without an Excitation of his Underſtanding to think (to the utmoſt) what to ſay; and an Excitation of his Affections, to ſpeak with Life, or elſe the hearers will perceive his coldneſs. And though all this may be Counterfeit and hypocritically Affected, yet it is a great help to ſerioufneſs and ſincerity, to have the faculties all awake: And it is a great help to awaken them, to be under ſuch a conſtant neceſſity even from Man. As thoſe that are apt to ſleep at Prayer, will do it leſs when they know Men obſerve them, than at another Time.

2. And both to ſpeaker and hearers, humane frailty maketh it hard to be equally affected with the ſame thing ſpoken a hundred times, as we are at firſt when it is new, and when it is cloathed in comely variety of Expreſſions. As the ſame Book affecteth us not at the twentieth reading as it did at the firſt. Say not, it is a diſhonourable weakneſs to be thus carried by the novelty of things or words: For though that be true, it is a diſhonour common to all Mankind, and a diſeaſe which is your own, and which God alloweth us all lawful means to cure, and to correct the unhappy Effects while it is uncured.

12. Laſtly, Set forms ſerve unworthy Men to hide their unworthineſs by, and to be the matter of a Controverſie in which they may vent their envy againſt them that are abler and holier than themſelves.

II. Having now truly ſhewed you the Commodities and Incommodities of both the ways, for the other Queſtion, Which of them is the beſt, I muſt give you but ſome Rules to anſwer it your ſelves.

1. That is beſt which hath moſt and greateſt Commodities, and feweſt and leaſt diſcommodities.

2. For neither of them is forbidden, in it ſelf conſidered, nor evil, but by accident.

3. One may have more Commodities and the other more diſcommodities in one Countrey, and age than in another; and with ſome Perſons than with others.

4. Sober Chriſtians ſhould be very backward in ſuch Caſes to quarrel with the Churches where they live or come, but humbly ſubmit to them in lawful things, though they think them inconvenient; becauſe it is not they that are the Governours and Judges.

5. The Commands of Authority and the Concord of the Churches may weigh down many lighter accidents.

6. I crave leave to profeſs that my own Judgment is, that ſomewhat of both ways joined together will beſt obviate the incommodities of both. To have ſo much wholeſome, methodical, unqueſtionable forms as near as may be in Scripture Phraſe, as is neceſſary to avoid the inconvenience of a total Excluſion of Forms, and to the attainment of their deſireable Ends; and to have ſo much withal of Freedom in Prayer, as is neceſſary to its ends, and to avoid the deadneſs, formality, and other incommodities of Forms alone. Though by this Opinion I croſs the Conceits of prejudiced Men on both extreams, I think I croſs not the Judgment of the Church of England, which alloweth free Prayers in the Pulpit, and at the Viſitation of the ſick: And I croſs not the opinion of any ancient Church that ever I read of, nor of the Fathers and Paſtors whoſe works are come to our Hands; nor yet of Luther, Melanctkon, Bucer, Zuinglius, Calvin, Beza, Zanchius and the reſt of our famous Reformers; nor yet of the famous Nonconformiſts of England, Cartwright, Hilderſham, Greenham, Perkins, Baine, Ameſius, &c. And I leſs fear erring in all this Company, than with thoſe on either of the extreams.

I have a Manuſcript of Mr. Cartwrights in which, having fully proved the falſhood of Sutliffs Suſpicion that he was acquainted with Hackets Project, he anſwereth his Charge, as if he were againſt Forms of Prayer, that all the Years that he lived at Middleburg and Antwerpt, he conſtantly uſed the ſame Form before Sermon, and moſtly after Sermon, and alſo did read Prayers in the Church; and that ſince he ſeldom concluded but with the Lords Prayer.

Queſt. 79. Is it lawful to forbear the Preaching of ſome Truths, upon Mans Prohibition, that I may have liberty to preach the reſt: Yea, and to Promiſe before-hand to forbear them? Or to do it for the Churches Peace?

Anſw. 1. SOme Truths are of ſo great moment and neceſſity, that without them you cannot preach the Goſpel in a ſaving ſort. Theſe you may not forbear nor Promiſe to forbear.

2. Some Truths are ſuch as God at that time doth call Men eminently to publiſh and receive (as againſt ſome Hereſie when it is in the very height, or the Church in greateſt danger of it: Or concerning ſome Duty which God then ſpecially calleth Men to perform (as the Duty of Loyalty juſt in the time of a perillous Rebellion, &c.) Such preaching being a Duty, muſt not be forborn, when it cannot be performed upon lawful Terms.

3. But ſome Truths are controverted among good Men; and ſome are of a lower nature and uſefulneſs: And concerning theſe I further ſay,

1. That you may not renounce them or deny them, nor ſubſcribe to the ſmalleſt untruth for liberty to preach the greateſt Truth.

2. But you may for the Time that the Churches benefit requireth it, both forbear to preach them, and promiſe to forbear, both for the Churches Peace, and for that Liberty to preach the Goſpel, which you cannot otherwiſe obtain. The Reaſons are:

1. Becauſe it is not a duty to preach them at that Time: For no duty is a duty at all times: Affirmative Precepts bind not ad ſemper, becauſe Man cannot always do them.

2. It is a Sin to prefer a leſſer Truth or Good before a Greater. You cannot ſpeak all things at once. When you have all done, ſome, yea, a thouſand muſt be by you omitted. Therefore the leſs ſhould be omitted rather than the greater.

3. You have your Office to the Churches Edification. Preaching is made for Man, and not Man for Preaching. But the Churches Edification requireth you rather to preach the Goſpel, than that Opinion or Point which you are required to forbear. Without this the hearers may be ſaved, but not without the Goſpel.

And what a Man may do and muſt do, he may on good occaſion promiſe to do.

He that thinketh Dioceſans, or Liturgies, or Ceremonies unlawful, and yet cannot have leave to preach the Goſpel (in time of need) unleſs he will forbear, and promiſe to forbear to preach againſt them, may and ought ſo to do and promiſe, rather than not to preach the Goſpel.

Obj. But if Men impriſon or hinder me from preaching, that is their fault: But if I voluntarily forbear any Duty, it is my own fault.

Anſw. 1. It is to forbear a Sin, and not a Duty at that time: It is no more a duty than reading or ſinging or praying at Sermon time. 2. When you are in Priſon, or know in all probability you ſhall be there, there, though by other Mens fault, it is your own fault if you will deny a lawful means to avoid it: For your not preaching the Gospel is then your own Sin, as well as other Mens: And theirs excuseth not yours.

Quest. 80. May or must a Minister silenced, or forbid to Preach the Gospel, go on still to preach it, against the Law?

Answ. Distinguish between, 1. Just silencing and Unjust; 2. Necessary preaching, and unnecessary.

1. Some Men are justly forbidden, to preach the Gospel, as 1. Those that are utterly unable, and do worse than nothing when they do it. 2. Those that are Hereticks and subvert the Essentials of Christianity or Godliness. 3. Those that are so Impious and Malignant, that they turn all against the Practice of that Religion which they profess; In a word, All that do (directly) more hurt than good.

2. In some places there are so many able Preachers, that some tolerable Men may be spared, if not accounted supernumeraries; and the Church will not suffer by their silence. But in other Countreys either the Preachers are so few, or so bad, or the People so very ignorant, and hardned and ungodly, or so great a number that are in deep necessity, that the need of preaching is undeniable. And so I conclude,

1. That he that is justly silenced, and is unfit to Preach, is bound to forbear.

2. He that is silenced by just Power though unjustly in a Countrey that needeth not his Preaching, must forbear there, and if he can must go into another Countrey where he may be more serviceable.

3. Magistrates may not Ecclesiastically Ordain Ministers or degrade them, but only either give them Liberty, or deny it them as there is cause.

4. Magistrates are not the Fountain of the Ministerial Office, as the Soveraign is of all the Civil Power of inferiour Magistrates; but both Offices are immediately from God.

5. Magistrates have not Power from God to forbid Men to Preach in all Cases, nor as they please, but justly only and according to Gods Laws.

6. Men be not made Ministers of Christ only pro tempore or on tryal, to go off again if they dislike it; but are absolutely dedicated to God, and take their Lot for better and for worse; which maketh the Romanists say, that Ordination is a Sacrament (and so it may be aptly called;) and that we receive an indelible Character, that is, an obligation during Life, unless God himself disable us.

7. As we are nearlier devoted and related to God, than Church Lands, Goods, and Temples are, so the sacriledge of alienating a consecrated Person unjustly, is greater and more unquestionable than the sacriledge of alienating consecrated Houses, Lands or Things. And therefore no Minister may Sacrilegiously alienate himself from God and his undertaken office and work.

8. We must do any lawful Thing to procure the Magistrates Licence to Preach in his Dominions.

9. All Men silenced or forbidden by Magistrates to Preach, are not thereby obliged or warranted to forbear. For, 1. The Apostles expresly determine it, Acts 4. 19. Whether it be better to hearken to God rather than to you, judge ye. 2. Christ oft foretold his Servants, that they must Preach against the Will of Rulers, and suffer by them. 3. The Apostles and ordinary Ministers also for 300 Years after Christ did generally preach against the Magistrates, will, throughout the Roman Empire and the World. 4. The Orthodox Bishops commonly took themselves bound to Preach when Arrian or other Heretical Emperours forbad them. 5. A moral Duty of stated necessity to the Church and Mens Salvation is not subjected to the Will of Men for Order sake: For Order is for the thing ordered and for the End. Magistrates cannot dispense with us, for not Loving our Neighbours, or not shewing Mercy to the Poor, or saving the Lives of the Needy in Famine and Distress. Else they that at last shall hear, I was hungry and ye fed me not, I was naked and ye cloathed me not, I was in Prison and ye visited me not, might oft say, our Parents, Masters or Magistrates forbad us. Yet a lesser Moral Duty may be forbidden by the Magistrate for the sake of a greater, because then it is no Duty indeed, and may be forborn if he forbid it not; as to save one Mans Life, if it would prove the Death of a Multitude; or to save one Mans House on Fire, if so doing would Fire many. Therefore,

10. It is lawful and a duty to forbear some certain Time or Number of Sermons, Prayers, or Sacraments, &c. when either the present use of them would apparently procure more hurt than good, or when the forbearance were like to procure more good than the doing of them: For they are all for our Edification, and are made for Man and not Man for them (though for God.) As if forbearing this Day would procure me Liberty for many Days service afterward, &c.

11. It is not lawful at the Command of Man to forsake or forbear our Calling and Duty, when it is to be judged Necessary to the Honour of God, to the good of the Church, and of Mens Souls: That is, when as in Daniels Case, Dan. 6. our Religion it self and our owning the true God, doth seem suspended by the suspence of our Duty: Or when the multitude of ignorant, hardned ungodly Souls, and the want of fit Men for number and quality, doth put it past Controversie, that our work is greatly necessary.

12. Those that are not immediately called by Christ as were the Apostles, but by Men, being yet statedly obliged to the Death when they are called, may truly say as Paul, Necessity is laid upon me, and woe be to me if I preach not the Gospel. Mat. 28. 20. Rom. 10. 14. 1 Cor. 9. 16.

13. Papists and Protestants concur in this Judgement. Papists will preach when the Law forbids them: And the Judgment of Protestants is, among others, by Bishop Bilson of Subjection, and Bishops Andrews Tortur. Tort. plainly so asserted. Acts 5. 42. & 10. 42. 2 Tim. 4. 1, 2. Acts 8. 4, 12.

14. But all that are bound to preach, are not bound to do it to the same number, nor in the same manner; as they have not the same opportunity and call. Whether it shall be in this place or that, to more or fewer, at this hour or that, are not determined in Scripture, nor alike to all. & 15. 35.

15. The Temples, Tithes, and such adjuncts of Worship and Ministry, are at the Magistrates dispose, and must not be invaded against his Laws.

16. Where any are obliged to Preach in a forbidden discountenanced state, they must study to do it with such prudence, caution, peaceableness, and obedience in all the lawful Circumstantials, as may tend to maintain Peace and the honour of Magistracy, and to avoid temptations to sedition, and unruly passions.

Quest. 81. May we lawfully keep the Lords Day as a Fast.

Answ. NOT ordinarily: Because God hath made it a day of Thanksgiving; and we must not pervert it from the use to which it was appointed by God. But in Case of extraordinary necessity, it may be done; As, 1. In Case that some great Judgment call us so suddenly to Humiliation and Fasting, as that it cannot be deferred to the next Day (as some sudden invasion, fire, sickness, &c.) 2. In Case by Persecution, the Church be denied Liberty to meet on any other Day, in a time when publick Fasting and Prayer is a Duty. 3. In Case the People be so poor, or Servants, Children and Wives be so hardly restrained, that they cannot meet at any other Time. It is lawful in such Cases, because Positives give way to Moral or Natural Duties, cæteris paribus, and lesser duties unto greater: The Sabbath is made for Man, and not man for the Sabbath. Luke 6. 5. & 13. 15. Mat. 12. 7.

Queſt. 82. How ſhould the Lords Day be ſpent, in the main?

Anſw. I Have ſo far opened that in the Family-directions, that I will now only ſay, 1. That Pſal.92.1, 2,3,4,5. Euchariſtical Worſhip is the great Work of the Day:
Pſal. 118. 1,2,3,15, 19,23,24, 27,28,29. And that it ſhould be kept as a Day of publick Thankſgiving for the whole Work of Redemption, eſpecially for the Reſurrection of our Lord.

Act. 20.7, 9. 2. And therefore the Celebration of the Sacrament of the Lords Supper was always a chief part of its Obſervation in the primitive Churches: Not meerly for Rev.1.10. Act.24.14 25,26,&c. the Sacrament ſake; but becauſe with it was ſtill joyned all the Laudatory and Thankſgiving worſhip;
Pſal.1ſt. 7, 8, 9, 10. and it was the Paſtors work ſo to pray, and praiſe God, and preach to the People, as tendeth moſt to 1 Cor. 16. 1, 2. poſſeſs their Souls, with the livelieſt Senſe of the Love of the Father, the Grace of the Son, and the Communion of the Holy Spirit, on the account of our Redemption.

3. Though Confeſſion of Sin and Humiliation muſt not be the chief work of the Day, yet it may and muſt come in, as in due Subordination to the chief. 1. Becauſe there are uſually many Perſons preſent who are members only of the viſible Church, and are not fit for the Laudatory and Rejoycing Part. 2. Becauſe while we are in the Fleſh, our Salvation is imperfect, and ſo are we; and much Sin ſtill remaineth, which muſt be a grief and burden to Believers: And therefore while Sin is mixt with Grace, Repentance
Pſal. 2.9, 10, 11. and Sorrow muſt be mixed with our Thankſgivings,
Heb. 12. 28, 29. and we muſt rejoice with trembling: And though we receive a Kingdom which cannot be moved, yet muſt our acceptable ſervice of God be with reverence and godly Fear, becauſe our God is a conſuming Fire. 3. Our Sin and Miſery being that which we are ſaved from, doth enter the definition of our Salvation. And without the ſenſe of them, we can never know aright what Mercy is, nor ever be truly glad and thankful. But yet take heed that this ſubordinate Duty be not pretended for the neglecting of that Thankſgiving which is the work of the Day.

Queſt. 83. May the People bear a Vocal Part in Worſhip, or do any more than ſay, Amen?

1 Cor. 14. Pſal. 150. & 81.2,3. & 98. 5. & 94. 1,2, 3, &c. & 105. 7, 2, &c. & 145. throughout. Col. 3.16. Anſw. YES: The People ſhould ſay Amen; that is, openly ſignifie their Conſent: But the meaning is not that they muſt do no more, nor otherwiſe expreſs their conſent ſaying by that ſingle Word. For, 1. There is no Scripture which forbiddeth more. 2. The People bear an equal part in ſinging the Pſalms; which are Prayer and Praiſe and Inſtruction. 3. If they may do ſo in the Pſalms in Metre, there can no Reaſon be given but they may lawfully do ſo, in the Pſalms in Proſe; for ſaying them and ſinging them are but modes of Utterance; both are the ſpeaking of Prayer and Praiſe to God: And the ancient ſinging was liker our ſaying, than to our Tunes, as moſt judge. 4. The Primitive Chriſtians were ſo full of the Zeal and Love of Chriſt, that they would have taken it for an injury and a quenching of the Spirit to have been wholly reſtrained from bearing their part in the Praiſes of the Church. 5. The uſe of the Tongue keepeth awake the Mind, and ſtirreth up Gods Graces in his Servants. 6. It was the decay of Zeal in the People that firſt ſhut out Reſponſes; while they kept up the ancient Zeal, they were inclined to take their part vocally in their Worſhip: And this was ſeconded by the pride and Uſurpation of ſome Prieſts thereupon, who thought the People of God too prophane to ſpeak in the Aſſemblies, and meddle ſo much with Holy Things.

Yet the very remembrance of former Zeal, cauſed moſt Churches to retain many of the words of their Predeceſſours, even when they loſt the Life and Spirit which ſhould animate them: And ſo the ſame Words came into the Liturgies, and were uſed by too many cuſtomarily, and in formality, which their Anceſtors had uſed in the fervour of their Souls.

6. And if it were not that a dead hearted formal People by ſpeaking the Reſponſes careleſly and hypocritically do bring them into diſgrace with many that ſee the neceſſity of ſerioufneſs, I think few good People would be againſt them now. If all the ſerious zealous Chriſtians in the aſſembly ſpeak the ſame words in a ſerious manner, there will appear nothing in them that ſhould give offence. If in the fulneſs of their Hearts, the People ſhould break out into ſuch words of Prayer or Confeſſion or Praiſe, it would be taken for an extraordinary pang of Zeal; and were it unuſual, it would take exceedingly. But the better any thing is, the more loathſome it appeareth when it is mortified by hypocriſie and dead formality, and turned into a mockery, or an affected ſcenical act. But it is here the Duty of every Chriſtian to labour to reſtore the Life and Spirit to the Words, that they may again be uſed in a ſerious and holy manner as heretofore.

7. Thoſe that would have private Men pray and propheſie in Publick, as warranted by 1 Cor. 14. [Ye may all ſpeak, &c.] do much contradict themſelves, if they ſay alſo that a Lay-man may ſay nothing but Amen.

8. The People were all to ſay Amen in Deut. 27. 15, 16, 18, 19, 20, &c. And yet they oftentimes ſaid more. As Exod. 19. 8. in as ſolemn an Aſſembly as any of ours, when God himſelf gave Moſes a Sermon (in a form of words) to Preach to the People, and Moſes had repeated it as from the Lord (it being the Narrative of his Mercies, the command of obedience, and the Promiſes of his great Bleſſings upon that Condition,) All the People anſwered together and ſaid, All that the Lord hath ſpoken we will do. The like was done again, Exod. 24. 3. And Deut. 5. 27. And leſt you ſhould think either that the Aſſembly was not as ſolemn as ours, or that it was not well done of the People to ſay more than Amen, God himſelf who was preſent declared his Approbation, even of the Words when the ſpeakers Hearts were not ſo ſincere in ſpeaking them as they ought: ver. 28,29. [And the Lord heard the voice of your Words when you ſpake unto me, and the Lord ſaid unto me, I have heard the voice of the words of this People —— They have well ſaid all that they have ſpoken. O that there were ſuch a heart in them ——

Obj. But this is but a ſpeech to Moſes and not to God.

Anſw. I will recite to you a form of Prayer which the People themſelves were to make publickly to God; Deut. 26. 13, 14, 15. [Then ſhalt thou ſay before the Lord thy God; I have brought away the hallowed things out of my Houſe, and alſo have given them to the Levite and to the ſtranger, to the fatherleſs and the Widow, according to all thy Commandments which thou haſt commanded me: I have not tranſgreſſed thy Commandments, neither have I forgotten them: I have not eaten thereof in my mourning, neither have I taken away ought thereof for any unclean uſe, nor given ought thereof for the dead; but I have hearkened to the voice of the Lord my God, and have done according to all that thou haſt commanded me: Look down from thy holy Habitation, from Heaven, and bleſs thy People Iſrael, and the Land which thou haſt given us, as thou ſwareſt unto our Fathers, a Land that floweth with milk and honey.] Is not here a full form of Prayer to be uſed by all the People? And remember that Joſeph and Mary and Chriſt himſelf were under this Law, and that you never read that Chriſt found fault with the Peoples ſpeech, nor ſpake a word to reſtrain it in his Churches.

In Lev. 9. 24. When all the People ſaw the Glory of the Lord, and the fire that came out from it and conſumed the burnt Offering, they ſhouted and fell on their Faces: Which was an Acclamation more than bare Amen.

2 King. 23. 2, 3. King Josiah went up into the house of the Lord, and all the men of Judah, &c. And the Priests and the Prophets, and all the People both small and great; and he read in their ears all the words of the book of the Covenant. And the King stood by a pillar and made a Covenant before the Lord, to walk after the Lord, and to keep his Commandments, &c. with all their heart, and all their soul, &c. and all the people stood to the Covenant? Where as a King is the Speaker, it's like that the People used some words to express their consent.

1 Chron. 16. 35, 36. When David delivered a Psalm for a form of Praise: In which it is said to the People, v. 33. [And say ye, save us O God of our salvation and gather us together, and deliver us from the Heathen that we may give thanks to thy holy name, and glory in thy praise: blessed be the Lord God of Israel for ever and ever] All the people said Amen, and praised the Lord. Where it is like that their praising the Lord was more than their Amen.

And it is a command Psal. 67. 3, 5. Let all the people praise thee O God, let all the people praise thee: And he that will limit this to single Persons, or say that it must not be Vocally in the Church, or it must be only in metre and never in prose, or only in tunes and not without, must prove it, lest he be proved an adder to God's word.

But it would be tedious to recite all the repeated Sentences in the Psalms, which are commonly supposed to be the Responses of the People, or repeated by them. And in Rev. 14. 2, 3. the voice as of many waters and as of a great thunder, and the voice of Harpers harping with their harps, who sung a new song before the Throne, and before the four beasts and the elders, a song which none could learn but the hundred forty and four thousand which were redeemed from the Earth, which were not defiled with women, who were Virgins and followed the Lamb, &c. doth seem very plainly to be spoken of the Praises of all the Saints. Chap. 17. 15. by waters is meant people, multitudes, &c. And Chap. 19. 5, 6, 7, 8. there is expressly recited a form of Praise for all the People, [A voice came out of the Throne saying, Praise our God all ye his servants, and ye that fear him both small and great. And I heard as it were the voice of a great multitude, and as the voice of many waters, and as the voice of mighty thunderings saying, Alleluja: for the Lord God omnipotent reigneth. Let us be glad and rejoice and give honour to him; for the marriage of the Lamb is come, and his wife hath made her self ready; and to her was granted, &c.

And indeed he that hath stiled all his People Priests to God and a holy and royal Priesthood, to offer up spiritual Sacrifices acceptable to God by Jesus Christ, and to shew forth the Praises (τὰς ἀρετὰς) the virtues, of him that hath called us out of darkness into his marvellous Light,] doth seem not to make them for so prophane a Generation, as to be prohibited from speaking to God in publick any otherwise than by the Mouth of a Priest.

Numb. 1. 54. & 3. 10, 31 Exod. 20. Heb. 4. 16, 17. Eph. 2. 13, Heb. 12. 18, 21, 22, 23.

And it seemeth to be more allowed (and not less) under the Gospel, than under the Law; because then the People as under guilt were kept at a greater distance from God, and must speak to him more by a Priest that was a Type of Christ our intercessor. But now we are brought nigh, and reconciled to God, and have the Spirit of Sons, and may go by Christ alone unto the Father. And therefore though it be true that Ministers yet are Sub-intercessors under Christ our High Priest, yet they are really called Priests, but described more in the New Testament by other parts of their office.

Obj. But the Peoples responses make a confused noise in the Assemblies, not intelligible.

Answ. All things are ill done, that are done by ill Men that carnally and formally slubber it over: But if the best and holiest People would unanimously set themselves to do it, as they do in singing Psalms, so that they did not only stand by to be the hearers of others, it would be done more orderly and spiritually as well as singing is.

Quest. 84. Is it not a Sin for our Clerks to make themselves the mouth of the People, who are no ordained Ministers of Christ?

Answ. 1. IN those places where ordained Deacons do it, this objection hath no place. 2. The Clerks are not appointed to be the Mouth of the People, but only each Clerk is one of the People commanded to do that which all should do, lest it should be wholly left undone. If all the Congregation will speak all that the Clerk doth, it will answer the primary desire of the Church-Governours, who bid the People do it: But if they that will not do it themselves, shall pretend that the Clerk doth usurp the Ministry, because he ceaseth not as well as they; they might as well say so by a few that should sing Psalms in the Church, when the rest are against it and forbear. May not a Man do his duty in singing or saying, when you refuse yours, without pretending to be your mouth, or usurping the Ministry?

Quest. 85. Are repetitions of the same words in Church Prayers, lawful?

Answ. 1. IT is not lawful to affect them as the Heathens, who think they shall be heard for their Battologie, or saying over the same words, as if God were moved by them as by a charm. 2. Nor is it lawful to do that which hath a strong appearance of such a conceit, and thereby to make God's worship ridiculous and contemptible: As the Papists in their Psalters, and Prayer Books, repeating over the Name of Jesus and Mary so oft together as maketh it seem a ludicrous canting. Mat. 6. 7.

But, 1. It is lawful to speak the same words from fulness and fervency of zeal; 2. And when we are afraid to give over lest we have not yet prevailed with God. 3. And in God's solemn praises (sung or said,) a word or sentence oft repeated sometime hath an elegancy, and affecting decency; and therefore it is so often used in the Psalms; yea and in many Scripture Prayers. 4. In such cases, to bring a serious urgency of spirit to the repeated words, and not to quarrel with the repetitions, is the duty of one that joineth with true Christian Assemblies, as a Son of Piety and Peace. Psal. 136. & 107. 8, 13, 21, &c.

Quest. 86. Is it lawful to bow at the naming of Jesus?

Answ. THE question either respecteth the Person of Jesus, named by any of his names, or else this name Jesus only. And that either simply in it self considered; or else comparatively as excluding, and not including other names. Mic. 6. 6. Jer. 23. 27 Isa. 52. 5, 6 Isa. 29. 24. Isa. 42. 8, 9 Psal. 2. 10, 11.

1. That the Person of Jesus is to be bowed to, I never knew a Christian deny. Phil. 2. 9, 10, 11, 12.

2. That we may lawfully express our reverence by bowing, when the Names [God, Jehovah, Jesus, Christ, &c.] are uttered, I have met with few Christians who deny, nor know I any reason to deny it. Psal. 34. 3. & 66. 2. & 68. 4. & 72. 19. & 76. 1, 2. & 96. 2. & 100. 4. & 111. 9. & 148. 13. & 149, 3. Isa. 9. 6, 7. & 12. 4. Psal. 138. 2, 3.

3. Had I been fit to have prescribed directions to other Ministers or Churches, I would not have perswaded, much less commanded them, to bow at the Name of Jesus, any more than at the Name of God, Jehovah, Christ, &c. for many Reasons which the Reader may imagine, though I will not now mention them.

4. But if I live and join in a Church where it is commanded and peremptorily urged to bow at the Name of Jesus, and where my not doing it would be divisive, scandalous or offensive, I will bow at the Name of God, Jehovah, Jesus, Christ, Lord, &c. one as well as the other: Seeing it is not bowing at Christ's Name that I scruple, but the consequents of Rev. 15. 4. 1 Chron. 29. 20. 2 Chron. 29, 30.

[illegible] before all the rest.

Quest. 87. Is it lawful to stand up at the Gospel more are appointed?

Answ. 1. HAD I been a [illegible] to others myself, I should not have required the Church to stand up at the reading of one part of a Chapter by the Name of the Gospel, and not at the same words when the whole Chapter is read.

2. But if I live where Rulers peremptorily command it (I suppose not forbidding us to stand up at the Gospel read in Chapters, but selecting this as an instance of their signified Consent to the Gospel, who will do no more) I would obey them rather than give offence, by standing up at the reading of the Chapters and all; which I suppose will be no violation of their Laws.

Quest. 88. Is it lawful to kneel, when the Decalogue is read?

Answ. 1. IF I lived in a Church that mistook the Commandments for Prayers, as many ignorant People do, I would not so harden them in that error. [illegible] But in my mind, I had rather do nothing that might scandalize or harden them in it.

But 1. That the thing in it self is lawful, is past doubt: As we may kneel to the King when we hear him or speak to him; so it is lawful to kneel to God, when we read a Chapter or hear it read, and specially the Decalogue so terribly delivered, and written by his own finger in stone. 2. And if it be peremptorily commanded, and the omission would be offensive, I would use it though mistaking Persons are present. 3. Because I esteem Unity, and the Peace of the whole Assembly, without a greater hurt and scandal, than seeming to harden that mistaking Person. [illegible] And because I would not yield to remove that Person's danger, as from me, by making him know that it is no Prayer. 3. And the rather in our times, because we can get the Minister in the Pulpit publickly to tell the People the contrary. 4. And in Chatechizing it is his appointed Duty so to do. 5. And we find that the [illegible] People who took the Commandments for a Prayer, took the Creed to be so too: [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] tolerable Wickedneſs or Hereſie (as Arrianiſm, Socinianiſm, &c.) and the People own the Error or Sin as well as the Perſon; the Paſtor is then to admoniſh them alſo, and by all means to endeavour to bring them to Repentance; and if they remain impenitent to renounce Communion with them and deſert them. 4. But if they own not the Crime, but only think the Perſon injured, the Paſtor muſt give them the proof for their ſatisfaction; and if they remain unſatisfied, he may proceed in his office as before.

Queſt. 92. May a whole Church, or the greater part be excommunicated?

Anſw. 1. TO excommunicate is by Miniſterial Authority to pronounce the Perſon unmeet for Chriſtian Communion, as being under the guilt of impenitence in heinous Sin; and to charge the Church to forbear Communion with him, and avoid him, and to bind him over to the Bar of God.

2. The Paſtor of a particular Church may pronounce all the Church uncapable of Church Communion and Salvation till they repent, e.g. If they ſhould all be impenitent Arrians, Socinians, Blaſphemers, &c. For he hath authority and they deſerve it. But he hath no Church that he is Paſtor of, whom he can command to avoid them. 3. The Neighbour Paſtors of the Churches about them, may upon full proof, declare to their own Churches, that ſuch a Neighbour Church that is falſe to Arrianiſm, &c. is unmeet for Chriſtian Communion and to be owned as a Church of Chriſt, and therefore charge their flocks not to own them, nor to have occaſional Communion with their Members when they come among them. For there is Authority, and a meet object, and neceſſity for ſo doing; and therefore it may be done. 4. But a ſingle Paſtor of another Church may not uſurp authority over any Neighbour Church, to judge them and excommunicate them, where he hath neither call nor full proof, as not having had opportunity to admoniſh them all, and try their Reaſons. Therefore the Pope's Excommunications are rather to be contemned, than regarded. 5. Yet if many Churches turn Hereticks notoriouſly, one ſingle Neighbour Paſtor may renounce their Communion, and require his flock for to avoid them all. 6. And a Paſtor may as lawfully excommunicate the Major part of his Church, by charging the Minor part to avoid them, as he may do the Minor part; except that accidentally the inconveniences of a diviſion may be ſo great, as to make it better to forbear: And ſo it may oft fall out alſo, if it were the Minor part.

2 Joh. 10. 3 Joh. 9. Rev. 2. 5, 16. & 3. 5, 15, 6.

Queſt. 93. What if a Church have two Paſtors, and one excommunicate a Man, and the other abſolve him, what ſhall the Church and the Diſſenter do?

Anſw. IT was ſuch caſes that made the Churches of old chooſe Biſhops, and ever have but one Biſhop in one Church. But 1. He that is in the wrong is firſt bound to repent and yield to the other 2. If he will not, the other in a tolerable ordinary caſe may for Peace give way to him, though not conſent to his injurious dealing. 3. In a dubious caſe they ſhould both forbear proceeding till the caſe be cleared. 4. In moſt caſes, each party ſhould act according to his own judgment, if the Counſel of Neighbour Paſtors be not able to reconcile them. And the People may follow their own judgments, and forbear obeying either of them formally till they agree.

Queſt. 94. For what Sins may a Man be denied Communion or excommunicated? Whether for impenitence in every little Sin? Or for great Sin without impenitence?

Anſw. 1. I Have ſhewed before that there is a ſuſpenſion which is but a forbearance of giving a Man the Sacrament, which is only upon an Accuſation till his cauſe be tryed: And an innocent Perſon may be falſly accuſed, and ſo tryed.

2. Some Sins may be of ſo heinous a ſcandal, that if the Perſon repent of them this day, his abſolution and reception may be delayed till the ſcandal be removed. 1. Becauſe the publick good is to be preferred before any Man's perſonal good. 2. And the Churches, or Enemies about, cannot ſo ſuddenly know of a Man's Repentance. If they hear of a Man's Murder, Perjury or Adultery to day, and hear that he is abſolved to morrow, they will think that the Church conſiſteth of ſuch, or that it maketh very light of Sin. Therefore the ancient Churches delayed and impoſed Penances, partly to avoid ſuch ſcandal. 3. And partly becauſe that ſome Sins are ſo heinous, that a ſudden profeſſion is not a ſufficient evidence of Repentance, unleſs there be alſo ſome evidence of Contrition.

3. But ordinarily no Man ought to be excommunicate for any Sin whatſoever, unleſs Impenitence be added to the Sin. Becauſe he is firſt to be admoniſhed to repent, Matth. 18. 15, 16. Tit. 3. 10. And Repentance is the Goſpel condition of pardon to believers.

4. A Man is not to be excommunicated for every Sin which he repenteth not of. Becauſe, 1. Elſe all Men ſhould be excommunicated. For there are in all Men ſome errors about Sin and Duty, and ſo ſome Sins which Men cannot yet perceive to be Sin. 2. And Miniſters are not infallible, and may take that for a Sin which is no Sin, and ſo ſhould excommunicate the innocent. 3. And daily unavoidable Infirmities, though repented of, yet awaken not the Soul ſufficiently to a neceſſible contrition; nor are they fit matter for the Churches admonition. A Man is not to be called openly to Repentance before the Church for every idle word, or thought.

Gal. 5. 17. Jam. 3. 2. 1 Joh. 1. 8, 9. 2, 1. 2, 3.

5. Therefore to Excommunication theſe two muſt concur, 1. A heinouſneſs in the Sin, 2. Impenitence after due admonition and patience.

Queſt. 95. Muſt the Paſtors examine the People before the Sacrament?

Anſw. 1. REgularly they ſhould have ſufficient notice after they come to age that they own their Baptiſmal Covenant, and that they have that due underſtanding of the Sacrament and the Sacramental work, and ſuch a Chriſtian Profeſſion as is neceſſary to a due participation.

2. But this is fitlieſt done at their ſolemn tranſition out of the Infant-Church-ſtate into their adult: And it is not neceſſarily to be done every time they come to the Lord's Table (unleſs the Perſon deſire help for his own benefit;) but only once, before their firſt communicating: If it be the ſatisfaction of the Paſtor or Church that is intended by it.

Queſt. 96. Is the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper a Converting Ordinance?

Anſw. YOU muſt diſtinguiſh 1. Between the Converſion of Infidels without the Church, and of Apoſtates within it: 2. Between the primary and ſecondary intention of the Inſtitutor. 3. Between the primary duty of the receiver, and the event. And ſo I conclude.

Luke 22. 19. 1 Cor. 11. 24.

1. That God did not command Miniſters to give Infidels the Lord's Supper to convert them to Chriſtianity.

Act. 2. 37.

2. He requireth us to give it to none but thoſe that profeſs themſelves converted from Infidelity and

1 Cor. 10. 16. and a state of wickedness, and to none that profess not true saving Faith and Repentance.

2 Cor. 6. 14. Acts 8. 13. 37, 38. 1 Cor. 11. 27, 28, 29, 30.

3. God never commanded or allowed any Infidel to demand or receive it to his conversion.

4. God commandeth the Pastors of the Church, to deliver it to Hypocrites, (who at the Heart are Infidels or impenitent and ungodly) if they profess Faith and Repentance, and desire or require it,

5. There is much in the nature of the Sacrament, which tendeth to the conversion of an Hypocrite.

6. And God often blesseth it to the conversion of Hypocrites; so that it may thence be said to be his secondary intention.

7. But yet he that knoweth himself to be a meer Hypocrite, or void of saving Faith and Repentance, should not come first and immediately to the Sacrament, to be converted by it: But should first so long hear, read, meditate and pray, till he repent and believe, and his Heart consent to the Covenant of God: And then he should come with penitent Contrition, and solemnly renew his Covenant in this Sacrament, and there receive a sealed Pardon.

Quest. 97. Must no Man come to the Sacrament, that is uncertain or doubtful of the sincerity of his Faith and Repentance?

1 Cor. 11. 28, 29, 31. Answ. 1. HE that is sure of his Unsoundness and Hypocrisie should not come.

2. He that upon tryal is not sure, but yet as far as he can understand his own Heart and Life, doth judge himself an impenitent Hypocrite, should use other means to know himself certainly, and fullier to repent before he cometh. And though some melancholy and timerous Persons be falsly perswaded that they are impenitent, yet it is better that such forbear the Sacrament, while they use other means for the better acquaintance with themselves, than that all the Hypocrites and wicked impenitent People be told that it is their duty to come, if they can but make themselves uncertain whether they be impenitent or not.

3. But he that after the best endeavours he can use to know himself, can say, I am not certain that I truly repent, but as far as I can know my Heart I do; is not to be hindred from the Sacrament by that uncertainty. 1. For few of the best attain to a full certainty of their own sincerity. 2. And all that can be expected from us is, that we proceed according to the best of our understandings, and the best acquaintance with our selves that we can get. 3. And otherwise it would keep us from all other Duties proper to true Christians; as from Thanksgiving for our Justification, Sanctification, Adoption, &c.

4. He that only erreth about the Nature of true Faith and Repentance, and not about the reality of it in himself, should not be kept away by that error: As if he can say, [As far as I know my Heart, I am willing to part with every known Sin, and to know every Sin that I may part with it; but I am afraid this is not true Repentance] or he that saith, [I believe the Gospel to be true, and I am willing to have Christ upon his Covenant terms, and wholly to resign my self unto him; but I am afraid yet that I am not a true believer.] This Person is truly penitent, and is a true Believer, and therefore ought to come.

5. The case de esse, whether a Man be a true Christian or not, is in order before the case de scire, whether he be certain of it, or not. He that is an Hypocrite is bound by God first to know that he is so, and then to repent, and then to communicate. He that is sincere, is bound by God, to know that he is sincere, and to be thankful, and to communicate: And Man's neglect of one duty will not make God change his Laws, which still bind them to all this at once.

Quest. 98. Is it lawful or a Duty to join Oblations to the Sacrament, and how?

Answ. 1. THere is no question but a Christian must give up himself Soul and Body, with all that he hath to God for his Service; and this Oblation is Christianity it self. Rom. 12. 1 1 Pet. 2, 5, 9.

2. It is undoubted that the Lord's Day is a fit time for our depositing what we have to spare, for charitable and pious uses, and this is partly of Divine appointment, 1 Cor. 16. 1, 2.

3. No doubt but what we give to the poor, should be for God's sake, and from our Love to God; and therefore must first be devoted or given up to God, and but secondarily to the poor. Matth. 10. ult. & 25. 40, &c.

4. It is certain that the Lord's Supper is as fit a Season as any part of that Day, for such Oblations and Collections. The ancient Christians did therefore call it the Communion, because in it they shewed their Love and Communion, and feasted in common to that end. There are two several sorts of Oblations which may lawfully be made (and fitly) at the Communion. 1. The Creatures of Bread and Wine should be offered or presented before God, as acknowledging him to be the Creator and Giver of all, and to desire his acceptance and benediction of them for that holy use. 2. Our Alms or charitable Contribution may be then fitly offered to God, that he may first accept it, and so it may be communicated to the Church and Poor. When we receive from God the most obliging benefits, when we return our greatest thanks, when we resign our selves and all to God, it's then sure a seasonable time, to express all by the oblation of our benevolence: That Hypocrites may not pretend that they are charitable in secret, but the Church may have due notice of it, and the Pastors be duly entrusted with it. 1 Cor. 16. 1, 2.

Quest. 99. How many Sacraments are there appointed by Christ.

Answ. THE word [Sacrament] hath so many significations, that it is not fit for the Question till it be explained. Passing all others now, we must take notice, 1. That our use of it is not so large as the Latin Interpreter who putteth it for [Mystery,] but for [A solemn Dedication of Man to God by a Vow expressed by some sacred Ceremony, signifying mutually our Covenant to God, and God's reception of us and his Covenant with us.] And it is brought into the Church from the Roman Military Oath called a Sacrament, in which as Tertul. de Cor. Mil. sheweth, the Soldier sware fidelity and obedience to Cæsar, renouncing Father, Mother, &c. for his Service, and swearing to prefer it and its safety before them all: See Martinius reciting the Oath out of divers Authors. This is our sense of the word: Let no Man now that taketh it in other Sense, pretend therefore that we differ in Doctrine. Of which see Martinius fully in Onom. de Sacram. Bellarmine himself reckoneth five.

2. Seeing it is no Scripture word, it is not of necessity to the Faith or Peace of the Church; but when Disputers agree not of the Sense of the word they had best lay it by, and use such terms whose Sense they can agree on.

3. The name [Sacrament] is either taken from the Covenant sworn to, or from the Sign or Ceremony of Consent by which we oblige our selves, or from both together.

4. The Covenant of Christianity is different from a particular Covenant of some Office; and accordingly the Sacrament is to be distinguished.

5. As Civil, Oeconomical and Ecclesiastical Offices are distinct, so are their several Sacraments.

6. The solemn renewing of the sacred Vow or Covenant, without any instituted obliging sign, is to be distinguished from the renewing it by such a sign of God's institution: And now I conclude,

1. As the word [Sacrament] is taken improperly secun-

secundum quid, from the nobler part only, that is, the Covenant, (as a Man's Soul is called the Man) so there are as many Sacraments as Covenants; and there is in specie but one Covenant of Christianity, and so but one Sacrament of Christianity, variously expressed.

2. As the word [Sacrament] is taken properly and fully according to the foresaid description; so there are properly two Sacraments of Christianity, or of the Covenant of Grace: That is, Baptism, the Sacrament of initiation (most fully so called) and the Lord's Supper, or the Sacrament of Confirmation, Exercise and Progress.

3. As the word [Sacrament] is taken less properly, defectively, secundum quid, for the same Covenant of Grace or Christianity renewed by any arbitrary sign of our own, without a solemn Ceremony of Divine Institution, so there are divers Sacraments of Christianity or the Covenant of Grace, that is, divers solemn renewals of our Covenant with God. As 1. At our solemn transition from the state of Infant-membership unto that of the Adult, when we solemnly own our Baptismal Covenant, which Calvin and many Protestants (and the English Rubrick) call Confirmation. 2. The solemn owning the Christian Faith and Covenaant, in our constant Church-assemblies, when we stand up at the Creed or profession of our Faith, and all renew our Covenant with God, and Dedication to him: 3. At solemn Days of Fasting or Humiliation, and of Thanksgiving when this should be solemnly done. Specially upon some publick defection. 4. Upon the publick Repentance of a particular Sinner before his absolution. 5. When a Man is going out of the World, and recommending his Soul to God by Christ: All these are solemn renewings of our Covenant with God, in which we may use any lawful, natural or arbitrary Signs or Expressions, to signifie our own Minds by, as speaking, subscribing, standing up, lifting up the hand, laying it upon a Book, kissing the Book, &c. These Sacraments are improperly so called: And are Divine as to the Covenant renewed, but humane as to the expressing signs.

4. Ordination is not improperly or unfitly called [a Sacrament,] because it is the solemnizing of a mutual Covenant between God and Man, for our dedication to his special Service, and his reception of us and blessing on us, though Imposition of Hands be not so solemn a Ceremony by meer Institution, as Baptism and the Lord's Supper. But then it must be noted, that this is not Sacramentum Christianitatis, a Sacrament of the Christian Covenant; but Sacramentum Ordinis vel officii particularis; a Sacrament of Orders, or a particular Office, but yet of Divine Institution.

5. The solemn Celebration of Marriage, is an Oeconomical Sacrament; that is, a solemn obligation of Man and Woman by Vow to one another, and of both to God in that relation, which may be arbitrarily expressed by lawful Signs or Ceremonies.

6. The solemn Covenant of a Master with his Servant, is on the same account, an Oeconomical Sacrament.

7. The inauguration of a King, in which he is sworn to his Subjects, and dedicated to God in that Office, and his Subjects sworn or consent to him, is a Civil Sacrament; whether Unction be added or not. And so is a Judges entrance on his Office, when it is done so solemnly by an obliging Vow or Covenant.

8. Confirmation in the Papists sense, as conferred by Chrism on Infants for giving them the Holy Ghost, is but an unwarrantable imitation of the old miraculous operation by the Apostles, and neither a Christian Sacrament, nor a warrantable practice, but a presumption.

9. The same may be said of their Sacrament of Extream Unction.

10. Their Sacrament of Marriage is no otherwise a Sacrament, than the Inauguration of a King is; which is approved by God as well as Marriage, and signifieth also an honourable Collation of Power from the Universal King.

11. Their Sacrament of Penance is no otherwise a Sacrament than many other fore-mentioned renewings of our Covenant are.

12. Therefore the Papists seven Sacraments, or septenary distribution, is confused, partly redundant, partly defective, and unworthy to be made a part of their Faith or Religion, or the matter of their peevish and ignorant contendings. And they that peremptorily say without distinguishing that there are but two Sacraments in all, do but harden them by the unwarrantable narrowing of the word.

Quest. 100. How far is it lawful, needful or unlawful for a Man to afflict himself by external Penances for Sin?

Answ. Neg. 1. NOT to the destroying of his Body, Life or Health, or the disabling or unfitting Body or Mind, for the service of God. Isa.58.3,5 6,7,8, &c. Mar.9.13. & 12. 7. Mat.6.1,3, 5, 6. 17.

2. Not to be the expression of any sinful inordinate dejection, despondency, sorrow or despair. Zech. 8. 19.

3. Not so as may be an outward appearance of such inordinate Passions, or as may be a scandal to others, and deter them from Religion as a melancholy hurtful Thing. 2Cor.2 7. Col.2.22, 23, 24. Joel.1.14. & 2. 15.

4 Nor as if God would accept the meer external self-afflicting for it self, or as if he loved our hurt, or as if we merited of him by our unprofitable voluntary Troubles. Dan. 9.3. Act. 10. 13.

But 1. It is a Duty to express true godly sorrow by its proper exercise and signs, so far as either the acting of it, or the increase or continuance by the means of those expressions is profitable to our selves. 1Cor.7.5. Luk.2.37. Mat. 4. 2. 2 Sam.12. 22.

2. And also so far as is needful to the profiting of others, by shewing them the evil of Sin, and drawing them to repentance. Luke 18. 12. 2Cor.7.9, 10, 11.

3. And so far as is necessary to the satisfying of the Church of the Truth of our Repentance, in order to our Absolution and Communion. 1 Cor. 9. 27. Col. 1.5,6

4. Especially so far as is necessary to subdue our fleshly Lusts, and tame our Bodies, and bring them into a due Subjection to our Faith, and to avoid our Sin for the time to come. And also by the exercise of sober Mortification prudently, to keep under all our worldly Phantasies, and love of this present world, without unfitting our selves for Duty. Rom. 13. 13, 14.

5. And so far as is needful by such mortification, to fit us for fervent Prayer, especially by fasting on days of Humiliation; and to help us in our Meditations of Death and Judgment, and to further our heavenly Contemplations and Conversation.

6. The greatest difficulty is, Whether any self-revenge be lawful or due; which is answered by what is said already: None such as disableth us for Gods service is lawful. But true Repentance is an anger or great displeasure with our selves for Sin, and a hatred of Sin, and loathing of our selves for it: And to judge, condemn and afflict our own Souls by a voluntary self-punishing is but that exercise of Justice on our selves, which is fit for pardoned Sinners that are not to be condemned by the Lord, and indeed the just exercise of Repentance and Displeasure against our selves. On which accounts of sober self-revenge we may cherish such degrees of godly Sorrow, Fasting, course Cloathing (as Sackcloth) and denying our selves the Pleasures of this World, as shall not be hurtful but helpful to our Duty. And if great and heinous Sinners have of old on these Terms, exceeded other Men in their austerities, and self-afflictings, we cannot condemn them of Superstition, unless we more particularly knew more cause for it. But Popishly to think that self afflicting without respect to such causes or necessities is a meritorious Perfection, fit for others, Psal. 69. 10. Levit. 16. 29, 31. & 23. 27, 32. Numb. 29 7. & 30. 13. Ezra 8. 21 Isa. 58. 5.

others, is Superstition indeed. And to think as many of the Melancholy do, that self-murder is a lawful self-revenge, is a heinous Sin, and leadeth to that which is more heinous and dangerous.

Quest. 101. Is it lawful to observe stated times of Fasting imposed by others, without extraordinary occasion? And particularly, Lent?

2 Chron. 20. 3. Ezra 8.21. Jonah 3.5. Zech. 8.19 Joel 2.15. Read Dallæus Treatise de Jejuniis.

Answ. REmember that I here meddle not with the Question, How far is it lawful for Rulers to impose such Fasts on others; Save only to say, 1. That it is undoubtedly fit for Kings to do it by Precepts, and Churches by Consent, in extraordinary cases of defection, sin or judgments. 2. That it is undoubtedly sinful Usurpation, for either Pope or any pretended Ecclesiastical Universal Rulers, to impose such on the Universal Church (because there are no Universal Rulers.) Or for a Neighbour Bishop by Usurpation to impose it on a Neighbour Church. 3. And that it is sinful in all or many Churches to make by their Agreements such things to be necessary to their Union or Communion with their Neighbour Churches, so that they will take all those for Schismaticks that differ from them in such indifferent things. But as to the Using of such Fasts (omitting the imposing) I say,

Isa. 58. 3, 5, 6, 7, 8.

1. 1. That so great and extraordinary a Duty as holy Fasting, must not be turned into a meer Formality or Ceremony.

2. No particular Man must be so observant of a publick commanded anniversary Fast, as for it to neglect any Duty commanded him by God which is inconsistent with it. (As to rejoice or keep a Day of Thanksgiving in Lent, upon an extraordinary obliging Cause; to keep the Lords Day in Lent, as a Day of Thanksgiving and Rejoycing; to preserve our own health; &c.) It is not lawful in obedience to Man, to fast so much, or use such diet as is like to destroy our lives or health: These being not so far put into the Power of Man: Nor can Man dispence with us as to the duty of Self-preservation, If God himself require us not to offer him our lives and health needlessly, as an acceptable Sacrifice, nor ever maketh self-destruction our Duty, no nor any thing that is not for Mans own good; then we are not to believe without very clear proof that either Prince or Prelates have more Power than ever God doth use himself.

3. Such an Anniversary Fast as is meet for the remembrance of some great Sin or Judgment, if commanded, is to be kept, both for the Reason of it, and for the Authority of the Commander. For 1. It is not unlawful as Anniversary. (For 1. It is not forbidden, and 2. There may be just occasion: Some arbitrarily keep an anniversary Fast on the Day of their Nativity (as I have long done;) and some on the Day that they fell into some great Sin; and some on the Day of the Death of a Friend, or of some personal, domestick, or national Calamity: And none of this is forbidden.) 2. And that which is not unlawful in it self, is not therefore unlawful to be done because it is commanded; seeing Obedience to Superiours is our Duty and not our Sin, unless in sinful Things.

4. Whether it be lawful or meet to commemorate Christs Sufferings by anniversary Fasts, is next to be considered.

II. As for Lent in particular: We must distinguish, 1. Between the ancient Lent, and the later Lent; 2. Between keeping it on a Civil account, and on a Religious. 3. Between true fasting, and change of Dyet. 4. Between the Imitation of Christs forty days fasting, and the meer Commemoration of it. Which premised I conclude,

1. The keeping a true Fast or Abstinence from food, for forty days, on what account soever, being impossible, or self murder, is not to be attempted.

2. The Imitation of Christ in his forty days fasting is not to be attempted or pretended to: Because his miraculous works were not done for our imitation. And it is presumption for us to pretend to such a power as is necessary to Miracles; or yet to make any Essayes at such an imitation any more than at the raising of the dead.

3. The pretending of a fast when men do but change their dyet; Flesh for Fish, Fruit, Sweetmeats, &c. is but hypocritical and ridiculous: Most poor labourers, and temperate Ministers do live all the year on a more flesh-denying dyet, and in greater abstinence than many Papists do in Lent, or on their fasting days. And what a ridiculous dispute is it to hear, e g, a Calvin that never eateth but one small meal a day for many years, to plead against the keeping of the Popish fasts, and their Clergy call him voracious, and carnal, and an Epicure, and plead for fasting as holy mortification, who eat as many meals and as much meat on a Lent day or fasting day, as Calvin did in three feasting Days; and drink as much Wine in a Lent, as he in twenty Years? Sure I am I know many such on both sides: Some that eat but a small meal a Day, and never drink Wine at all, and others that drink Wine daily, and eat of many Dishes at a meal, and that to the full, and of the sweeteſt, as Fish, Fruits, &c. yet rail at the former for not fasting as they do. So delusory are the outward appearances, and so false the pretensions of the carnal sort!

4. The ancient Lent consisted first of one Day (Good-friday) alone; and after that of three Days, and then of six, and at last it came up to forty. (Of which read Dallæus ubi supra at large.)

5. None can question the lawfulness of an obedient keeping of such a Civil Lent fast as our Statutes command, for the vending of Fish, and for the breed of Cattle; so be it, no bodily necessity or greater Duty be against it.

6. It is not unlawful for those that cannot totally fast, yet to use more abstinence and a more mortifying sort of diet than ordinary for the exercises of Repentance and Mortification, in due time.

7. If Authority shall appoint such a mortifying abstemious course upon lawful or tolerable grounds and ends, I will obey them, if they peremptorily require it, when my health or some greater Duty forbiddeth it not.

8. As for the Commanding such an Abstinence as in Lent, not in Imitation, but bare Commemoration of Christ forty days Fast, I would not command it if it were in my Power: But being peremptorily commanded, I cannot prove it unlawful to obey; with the fore-mentioned Exceptions.

9. It was anciently held a crime to fast on the Lords Days, even in Lent; and I take that Day to be separated by Christ and the Holy Ghost for a Church Festival or day of Thanksgiving; therefore I will not keep it as a fast, though I were commanded, unless in such an extraordinary necessity, as aforesaid.

OF Pilgrimages, Saints, Relicts and Shrines, Temples, of their Miracles, of Praying to Angels, to Saints, for the Dead, of Purgatory, of the Popes Pardons, Indulgences, Dispensations; of the Power of true Pastors to forgive Sins, with a multitude of such Cases, which are commonly handled in our Controversal Writers against the Papists, I must thither refer the Reader for a Solution, because the handling of all such particular Cases would swell my Book to a magnitude beyond my intention, and make this part unsuitable to the rest.

Quest. 102. May we continue in a Church, where some one Ordinance of Christ is wanting, as Discipline, Prayer, Preaching or Sacraments, though we have all the rest?

Answ. DIstinguish 1. Of Ordinances: 2. Of a stated want, and a temporary want:

3. Of

3. Of one that may have better; and one that cannot.

1. Teaching, Prayer and Praise, are Ordinances of such necessity that Church Assemblies have not their proper use without them.

2. The Lords Supper is of a secondary need, and must be used when it may, but a Church-Assembly may attain its ends sometimes without it, in a good degree.

3. Discipline is implicitely exercised when none but the Baptized are Communicants, and when professed Christians voluntarily assemble, and the preaching of the Word doth distinguish the precious from the vile: Much more when notorious scandalous Sinners are by the Laws kept from the Sacrament. (As our Rubrick and Canons do require.)

4. But for the fuller explicite and exacter exercise of Discipline, it is very desirable for the well being of the Churches: But it is but a stronger fence or hedge, and preservative of Sacred Order; and both the being of a Church; and the profitable use of Holy Assemblies, may subsist without it: As in Helvetia and other Countreys it is found.

Acts 28. ult. & 11. 26. & 20. 7, 20, &c. I conclude then, 1. That he that consideratis considerandis is a free Man should choose that Place where he hath the fullest opportunities of worshipping God and edifying his Soul.

1 Cor. 14. Acts 2.42. 1 Tim. 4. 13, 14. 2 Tim. 4. 1, 2. 2. He is not to be accounted a free man that cannot remove, without a greater hurt, than the good, either to the Church or Countrey, or to his Family, his Neighbour, or Himself.

2 Tim. 3. 16. Heb. 10. 25, 26. 3. Without Teaching, Prayer and Divine Praises we are not to reckon that we have proper Church-Assemblies and Communion.

4. We must do all that is in our Power to procure the right use of Sacraments and Discipline.

Col. 4.16. Act. 13,27 & 15. 21. 1 Thes. 5. 27. 1 Cor. 5. 34, &c. 5. When we cannot procure it, it is lawful and a Duty to join in those Assemblies that are without it, and rather to enjoy the rest than none. Few Churches have the Lords Supper above once a Month, which in the Primitive Church was used every Lords day and ofter: And yet they meet on other Days.

6. It is possible that Preaching, Prayer and Praise may be so excellently performed in some Churches that want both Discipline and the Lords Supper, and all so coldly and ignorantly managed in another Church that hath all the Ordinances, that Mens Souls may much more flourish and prosper under the former than the later.

Mat. 26. 31. Acts 8. 1. 7. If forbearing or wanting some Ordinances for a time, be but in order to a probable procurement of them, we may the better forbear.

8. The Time is not to be judged of only by the length, but by the Probability of success. For sometime Gods Providence, and the Disturbances of the Times, or the craft of Men in Power may keep Men so long in the dark, that a long expectation or waiting may become our Duty.

Quest. 103. Must the Pastors remove from one Church to another when ever the Magistrate commandeth us, though the Bishops contradict it, and the Church consent not to dismiss us; and so of other Cases of disagreement?

Answ. 1. AS in Mans Soul, the Intellectual Guidance, the Will, and the executive Power do concur, so in Church Cases of this Nature, the Potestative Government of the Magistrate, the Directive Guidance of the Senior Pastors, and the Attractive Love of the People (who are the chief inferiour final Cause) should all concur: And when they do not, it is Confusion: And when Gods order is broken which commandeth their Concurrence, it is hard to know what to do, in such a Division which God alloweth not: As it is to know whether I should take part with the Heart against the Head, or with the Head against the Stomach and Liver, on Suppositions of cross Inclinations or Interests; when as Nature supposeth either a Concord of Inclination and Interest, or else the Ruine, Sickness or Death of the Person: And the Cure must be by reconciling them, rather than by knowing which to side with against the rest.

But seeing we must suppose such diseases frequently to happen, they that cannot cure them must know how to behave themselves, and to do their own Duty. For my own part in such Cases I would do thus.

Eph. 4. 12, 1... 2 Cor. 10. 8. & 13. 10 Rom. 14. 19. 1. I would look at my ultimate End, Gods Glory, and at the next End the good of Souls and welfare of the Church; and so at the Peoples Interest as it is the End of the Order of Magistracy and Ministry: And I would take my self to be so obliged to that End, as that no point of meer Order could disoblige me; the End being better than the Means as such: Therefore I would do all things to Edification, supposing that all Power of Man is as Paul's was for Edification and not for Destruction.

Rom. 15. 2 1 Cor. 10. 23. 1 Cor. 14. 5, 12, 26, 2 Cor. 12. 19.

2. But in judging of what is best for the Church, I must take in every accident and circumstance, and look to many, more than to a few, and to distant parts as well as to those near me, and to the Time and Ages to come, as well as to the Present, and not go upon mistaken Suppositions of the Churches good: He that doth not see all things that are to be weighed in such a Case, may err by leaving out some one.

3. I would obey the Magistrate formally for Conscience sake in all things which belong to his Office; and particularly in this Case, if it were but a Removal from place to place, in respect to the Temple, or Tythes, or for the Civil Peace, or for the Preservation of Church order in Cases where it is not grosly injurious to the Church and Gospel.

4. In Cases which by Gods appointment belong to the Conduct of Bishops, or Pastors, or the Concord of Consociate Churches, I would formaliter follow them. And in particular, if they satisfie me that the removal of me is an apparent injury to the Church, (as in the Arrians Times when the Emperours removed the Orthodox from all the great Churches to put in Arrians) I would not obedientially and voluntarily remove.

5. If Magistrates and Bishops should concur in commanding my remove in a Case notoriously injurious and pernicious to the Church (as in the aforesaid Case, to bring in an Arrian) I would not obey formally for Conscience sake; supposing that God never gave them such a Power against Mens Souls and the Gospel of Christ: And there is no Power but of God.

6. But I would prefer both the Command of the Magistrate, and the Direction of the Pastors, before the meer will and humour of the People, when their safety and welfare were not concerned in the Case.

7. And when the Magistrate is peremptory, usually I must obey him Materially, when I do it not formally (in Conscience to his meer Command.) Because though in some Cases he may do that which belongeth not to his Office, but to the Pastors, yet his violence may make it become the Churches Interest, that I yield and give place to his Wrath: For as I must not Resist him by force, so if I depart not at his Command, it may bring a greater Suffering on the Churches: And so for preventing a greater evil he is to be submitted to in many Cases, where he goeth against God and without authority; though not to be formally obeyed.

8. Particular Chtrches have no such Interest in their Ministers or Pastors, as to keep them against their wills and the Magistrates, and against the interest of the Universal Church, as shall be next asserted.

I have spoken to this Instance as it taketh in all other Cases of Difference between the Power of the Magistrate, the Pastors and the Peoples Interest, when they disagree, and not as to this Case alone.

Queſt. 104. Is a Paſtor obliged to his Flock for Life? Or is it lawful ſo to oblige himſelf? And may he remove without their Conſent? And ſo alſo of a Church-member, the ſame Queſtions are put.

THeſe four Queſtions I put together for brevity, and ſhall anſwer them diſtinctly.

I. 1. A Miniſter is obliged to Chriſt and the Univerſal Church for Life, (durante vita,) with this Exception, if God diſable him not. 2. But as a Paſtor he is not obliged to this or that Flock for Life. There is no ſuch command or example in Gods Word.

II. To the Second: 1. It is lawful to oblige our ſelves to a People for Life in ſome Caſes, Conditionally; that is, if God doth not apparently call us away. 2. But it is never lawful to do it Abſolutely: 1. Becauſe we ſhall engage our ſelves againſt God; againſt his power over us, and intereſt in us, and his wiſdom that muſt guide us. God may call us whither he pleaſe: And though now he ſpeak not by ſupernatural Revelation, yet he may do it by providential alterations. 2 And we ſhall elſe oblige our ſelves againſt the Univerſal Church, to which we are more ſtrictly bound, than to any particular Church, and whoſe good may oblige us to remove. 3. Yea, we may bind our ſelves to the hurt of that Church it ſelf; ſeeing it may become its intereſt to part with us. 4. And we ſhould ſo oblige our ſelves againſt our Duty to authority, which may remove us.

III. To the third Queſtion I anſwer, 1. A Paſtor may not cauſeleſly remove, nor for his own worldly commodity when it is to the hurt of the Church and hinderance of the Goſpel. 2. When he hath juſt cauſe, he muſt acquaint the People with it, and ſeek their Satisfaction and Conſent. 3. But if he cannot procure it, he may remove without it: As 1. When he is ſure that the intereſt of the Goſpel and Univerſal Church require it: 2. Or that juſt authority doth oblige him to it.

The reaſons are plain from what is ſaid; and alſo 3. He is no more bound to the People, than they are to him: But they are not ſo bound to him, but they may remove on juſt occaſion. 2. If he may not remove, it is either becauſe God forbids it, or becauſe his own Contract with them hath obliged him againſt it: But 1. God no where forbids it: 2. Such a contract is ſuppoſed not made, nor lawful to be made.

IV. As to the Peoples Caſe, it needs no other anſwer; 1. No member may remove without Cauſe: 2. Nor abruptly and uncharitably to the Churches Diſſatisfaction, when he may avoid it. But 3. He may remove upon many juſt Cauſes (private or publick) whether the Church and Paſtors Conſent or not, ſo the manner be as becometh a Chriſtian.

Queſt. 105. When many Men pretend at once to be the true Paſtors of a particular Church againſt each others Title, through differences between the Magiſtrates, the Ordainers and the Flocks, what ſhould the People do, and whom ſhould they adhere to?

What Paſtor to adhere to.

Anſw. THis Caſe is moſtly anſwered before in Queſt. 82. &c. I need only to add theſe Rules of Caution. 1. Do not upon any pretence accept of an Heretick, or one that is utterly unfit for the Office.

2. Do not eaſily take a dividing Courſe or Perſon, but keep as much as may be in a way of Concord with the united faithful Paſtors and Churches in your Proximity or Countrey.

3. Look to the publick good and intereſt of Religion, more than to your particular Congregation.

4. Neglect not the greateſt Advantages for your own Edification: But rather take them by a removal of your dwelling, though you ſuffer by it in your Eſtates, than by any Diviſion, Diſturbance of the Churches Peace, or common Detriment.

5. Do not eaſily go againſt the Magiſtrates Commands; unleſs they be apparently unlawful, and to the Churches detriment or ruine, in the reception of your Paſtors.

6. Do not eaſily forſake him that hath been juſtly received by the Church, and hath Poſſeſſion, that is, till neceſſity require it.

Queſt. 106. To whom doth it belong to Reform a corrupted Church? To the Magiſtrates, Paſtors, or People.

Anſw. A Church is reformed three ſeveral ways, 1. By the perſonal Reformation of every Member: 2. By doctrinal Direction; and 3. By publick forcible Execution, and conſtraint of others.

1. Every Member, whether Magiſtrates, Paſtors or People muſt reform themſelves; by forſaking all their own Sins, and doing their own Duties. If a Ruler command a private Perſon to go to Maſs, to own any Falſhood, or to do any Sin, he is not to be obeyed, becauſe God is to be firſt obeyed. 1 Cor. 11. 28,29 31. 33,34. 1 Cor. 5. 11. Dan. 3. & 6.

2. The Biſhops or Paſtors are to reform the Church by Doctrine, Reproof, and juſt Exhortations, and Nunciative Commands in the name of Chriſt to Rulers and People to do their ſeveral Duties; and by the actual doing of his own. 1 Cor. 5. 3, 4, 5. 1 Pet. 5. 2. 3. Luke 22. 24, 25, 26, 27.

3. The King and Magiſtrates under him, only, muſt Reform by the Sword, that is, by outward force, and Civil Laws and Corporal Penalties: As forcibly to break down Images, to caſt out Idolaters, or the Inſtruments of Idolatry from the Temples, to put true Miniſters in poſſeſſion of the Temples, or the Legal publick maintenance; to deſtroy, puniſh or hurt Idolaters, &c. Suppoſing ſtill the Power of Parents and Maſters in their ſeveral Families.

Queſt. 107. Who is to Call Synods, Princes Paſtors or People?

Anſw. 1. THere are ſeveral ways of Calling Synods: 1. By Force and Civil Mandates, 2. By Paſtoral Perſwaſion and Counſel; and 3. By humble Intreaty and Petition. The queſtion of the power of Synods is ſufficienly anſwered before.

1. Magiſtrates only (that is, the Supream by his own Power, and the Inferiour by Power derived from him) may call Synods by Laws and Mandates, enforced by the Sword or Corporal Penalties or Mulcts.

2. Biſhops or Paſtors in due Circumſtances may call Synods by Counſel and Perſwaſive Invitation.

3. The People in due Circumſtances and Neceſſity, may call Synods by way of Petition and Intreaty.

But what are the due Circumſtances?

Anſw. 1. The Magiſtrate may call them by Command at his Diſcretion, for his own Counſel, or for the Civil Peace, or the Churches Good.

2. The Paſtors and People may not call them, nor meet when the Magiſtrate forbiddeth it, except when the neceſſity of the Church requireth it: Synods may profitably be ſtated for order, when it may be lawfully obtained (both as to limits of Place, Numbers and Time:) But theſe prudential Orders are not of ſtated Neceſſity, but muſt give place to weightier reaſons on the contrary.

3. Synods themſelves are not ordinarily neceſſary, by Nature or Inſtitution (Let him that affirmeth it, prove it) But that which is ſtatedly neceſſary is, The Concord of the Churches as the End, and a neceſſary correſpondency of the Churches as the Means, and Synods when they may well be had, as a convenient ſort of means.

4. When Synods cannot be had, or are needleſs, Meſſengers and Letters from Church to Church may keep up the Correſpondency and Concord.

5. In caſes of real neceſſity (which are very rare, though though usefulness be more frequent) the Bishops and People should first Petition the King for his Consent: And if that cannot be had, they may meet secretly and in small numbers for mutual consultation and advice about the work of God; and not by keeping up the formality of their set numbers, times, and places, and orders, provoke the King against them.

6. The contempt of Synods by the Separatists, and the placing more Power in Synods than ever God gave them by others, yea and the insisting on their circumstantial orders, making them like a Civil Senate or Court, have been the two extreams which have greatly injured and divided the Churches, throughout the World.

Quest. 108. To whom doth it belong to appoint Days and Assemblies for publick Humiliation and Thanksgiving?

Answ. THE answer of the last Question may serve for this. 1. The Magistrate only may do it by way of Laws, or civil Mandate enforced by the Sword.

2. The Pastors may do it in Case of Necessity, by Pastoral advice and exhortation, and nunciative command in the name of Christ.

3. The People may do it by Petition.

4. As ordinary Church Assemblies must be held if the Magistrate forbid them (of which next) so must extraordinary ones, when extraordinary causes make it a Duty.

5. When the Magistrate forcibly hindereth them, natural impossibility resolveth the Question, about our Duty.

Quest. 109. May we omit Church-Assemblies on the Lords-Day, if the Magistrate forbid them?

May we omit Church-assemblies on the Lord's day, if forbidden by Magistrates.

Answ. 1. IT is one thing to forbid them for a time, upon some special cause, (as Infection by Pestilence, Fire, War, &c.) And another to forbid them statedly or prophanely.

2. It is one thing to omit them for a time, and another to do it ordinarily.

3. It is one thing to omit them in formal Obedience to the Law; and another thing to omit them in Prudence or for Necessity, because we cannot keep them.

4. The Assembly and the Circumstances of the Assembly must be distinguished.

1. If the Magistrate for a greater good, (as the common safety) forbid Church Assemblies in a time of Pestilence, assault of Enemies, or Fire, or the like Necessity, it is a Duty to obey him. Because positive Duties give place to those great natural Duties which are their End: So Christ justified himself and his Disciples violation of the external rest of the Sabbath. For the Sabbath was made for Man, and not Man for the Sabbath. 2. Because Affirmatives bind not ad semper, and out of season Duties become Sins. 3. Because one Lord's Day or Assembly is not to be preferred before many which by the omission of that one are like to be obtained.

2. If Princes prophanely forbid holy Assemblies and publick worship, either statedly, or as a renunciation of Christ and our Religion; it is not lawful formally to obey them.

3. But it is lawful prudently to do that secretly for the present necessity, which we cannot do publickly, and to do that with smaller numbers, which we cannot do with greater assemblies, yea and to omit some assemblies for a time that we may thereby have opportunity for more: Which is not formal but only material obedience.

4. But if it be only some circumstances of assembling that are forbidden us, that is the next case to be resolved.

Quest. 110. Must we obey the Magistrate if he only forbid us worshipping God, in such a Place, or Country, or in such Numbers, or the like?

Answ. WE must distinguish between such a determination of Circumstances, modes or accidents, as plainly destroy the worship or the end, and such as do not. For instance, 1. He that saith, you shall never assemble but once a Year, or never but at Midnight; or never but six or seven minutes at once, &c. doth but determine the circumstance of Time: But he doth it so as to destroy the worship, which cannot so be done, in consistency with its ends. But he that shall say, You shall not meet till nine a Clock, nor stay in the Night, &c. doth no such thing. What if we be forbidden only Place, Numbers, &c.

So 2. He that saith, you shall not assemble but at forty Miles distance one from another; or you shall meet only in a room that will hold but the twentieth part of the Church; or you shall never preach in any City or popular Place but in a Wilderness far from the Inhabitants, &c. doth but determine the circumstance of Place. But he so doth it, as tends to destroy or frustrate the work which God commandeth us. But so doth not he that only boundeth Churches by Parish bounds, or forbiddeth inconvenient places.

3. So he that saith, you shall never meet under an hundred thousand together, or never above five or six doth but determine the accident of Number. But he so doth it as to destroy the work and end. For the first will be impossible; and in the second way they must keep Church assemblies without Ministers, when there is not so many as for every such little number to have one. But so doth not he that only saith, you shall not meet above ten thousand, nor under ten.

4. So he that saith, you shall not hear a Trinitarian, but an Arrian, or you shall hear only one that cannot preach the essentials of Religion, or that cries down Godliness it self, or you shall hear none but such as were ordained at Jerusalem or Rome, or none but such as subscribe the Council of Trent, &c. doth but determine what Person we shall hear. But he so doth it as to destroy the work and end. But so doth not he that only saith, you shall hear only this able Minister, rather than that.

2. I need not stand on the application. In the later case we owe formal obedience. In the former we must suffer, and not obey.

For if it is meet so to obey, it is meet in obedience to give over God's worship. Christ said, when they persecute you in one City, flee to another: But he never said, if they forbid you preaching in any City, or populous place, obey them. He that said, Preach the Gospel to every Creature, and to all Nations, and all the World, and that would have all Men to be saved and to come to the knowledge of the Truth, doth not allow us to forsake the Souls of all that dwell in Cities and populous Places, and preach only to some few Cottingers elsewhere: No more than he will allow us to love, pity and relieve the Bodies only of those few, and take none for our Neighbours that dwell in Cities, but with Priest and Levite, to pass them by. Mat. 10. 30. Mar. 16. 15. Mat. 28. 19. 1 Tim. 2. 4 2 Tim. 2. 25, 26. & 4. 1, 2, 3.

Quest. 111. Must Subjects, or Servants forbear weekly Lectures, reading or such helps, above the Lords Days worship, if Princes or Masters do command it?

Answ. 1. THere is great difference between a meer Subject, or Person governed, and a Servant, Slave or Child.

2. There is great difference between such as are hindered by just cause and real necessities, and such as as are hindred only prophane malignity.

1. Poor People have not so much leisure from their callings, as the rich: And so providing for their families, lies, may at that time, by neceſſity become the greater and the preſent duty.

2. So may it be with Soldiers, Judges and others that have preſent urgent work of publick conſequence; when others have no ſuch impediment.

3. He that is the Child or Slave of another, or is his own by propriety, is more at his power, than he that is only a Subject, and ſo is but to be governed in order to his own and the common good.

4. A Servant that hath abſolutely hired himſelf to another, is for that time near the condition of a Slave: But he that is hired but with limitations, and exceptions of Liberty, (expreſt or underſtood) hath right to the excepted Liberty.

5. If the King forbid Judges, Soldiers or others, whoſe labours are due to the publick, to hear Sermons at that time when they ſhould do their work: Or if Parents, or Maſters ſo forbid Children and Servants, they muſt be obeyed, while they exclude not the publick Worſhip of the Lord's own Day, nor neceſſary Prayer and Duty in our private daily caſes.

6. But he that is under ſuch Bondage as hindereth the needful helps of his Soul, ſhould be gone to a freer place, if lawfully he can. But a Child, Wife or ſuch as are not free muſt truſt on God's help in the uſe of ſuch means as he alloweth them. 7. A Prince, or Tutor, or Schoolmaſter, who is not a Proprietor of the Perſon, but only a Governour, is not to be obeyed formally and for Conſcience ſake, if he forbid his Subjects or Scholars ſuch daily or weekly helps for their Salvation as they have great need of, and have no neceſſity to forbear; ſuch as are hearing or aſſembling with the Church on the Week Days at convenient time, reading the Scriptures daily, or good Books, accompanying with Men fearing God, praying, &c. Becauſe God hath commanded theſe when we can perform them.

Queſt. 112. Whether Religious Worſhip may be given to a Creature? And what?

Anſw. WHile the terms of the Queſtion remain ambiguous, it is uncapable of an anſwer.

1. By Worſhip is meant either Cultus in genere, any honour expreſſed to another; or ſome ſpecial act of Honour. We muſt underſtand the Queſtion in the firſt General Senſe, or elſe we cannot anſwer it, till Men tell us, what Acts of honouring they mean.

2. By Religious is meant either in general, that which we are bound to by God, or is done by virtue of a Religious, that is, a Divine Obligation, and ſo is made part of our Religion, that is, of our Obedience to God; or elſe by Religious is meant Divine, or that which is properly due to God. The queſtion muſt be taken in the firſt general Senſe; or elſe it is no queſtion, but ridiculous, (to ask whether we may give God's proper Worſhip to a Creature.)

And ſo I anſwer, 1. By way of diſtinction. 2. Of ſolution.

1. We muſt diſtinguiſh between the honour or worſhipping acts of the Mind, and of the Body. 2. Between Idolatry as againſt the firſt Commandment, and Idolatry or Scandal as againſt the ſecond.

Aſſ. Prop. 1. There is due to every Creature, a true eſtimation of it according to the degree of its dignity or goodneſs; and a Love proportionable: As alſo a Belief, a Truſt, a Fear, proportionable to every Man's credibility, fidelity, power, &c.

2. There is an eminent degree therefore of eſtimation, reverence and love and truſt due to good Men above bad, and to thoſe in Heaven above thoſe on Earth; and a peculiar Honour to Rulers as ſuch, which is not due to their inferiours. Pſal. 15. 4.

3. This is to be expreſſed by the Body, by convenient actions

4. The higheſt honour which we owe to any, is for the Image of God in them, viz. 1. His Natural Image as Men, 2. His Moral Image as Saints, 3 His Relative Image of Supereminency, as Superiours. And ſo it is God in them firſt, and they next as the Images of God, who are to be honoured.

5. There is no honour to be given to any Creature, but that of which God himſelf is the End; viz. as it referreth to his Glory.

6. Therefore all honour given to Men, muſt be thus far Religious Honour (or Worſhip:) For as all things are ſanctified to and by Saints, ſo all things that religious Men do, muſt be religiouſly done. 1 Tim. 4. 5. Tit. 1. 15. 1 Cor. 10. 14. 1 Pet. 4. 3.

7. As Perſons, ſo Places, Books, Words, Utenſils, Times, &c. muſt be honoured for God's ſake, as they are related to God, with ſuch eſtimations and expreſſions as are ſuitable to their Relations. 1 Cor. 6. 9. & 10. 17. Rev. 21. 8. & 22. 15. Act. 17. 16.

Neg. 1. No Creature muſt be eſteemed to be a God; nor any of God's proper attributes of honour given to any Creature whatſoever. Gal. 5. 20. 2. Commandment.

2. No Creature muſt be eſteemed better or greater or wiſer than it is; (as far as we have means to know it.) Rev. 22. 8, 9.

3. Whatſoever outward expreſſions of honour (by word or deed) are appropriated to the true God, 1. By Divine Inſtitution, 2. Or by Nature, 3. Or by received Uſage, that expreſſion of honour ought not to be uſed to a Creature, were the Heart never ſo free from honouring it. 1. Becauſe it is bodily Idolatry: 2. And Scandal as being Idolatry interpretatively, in the juſt ſenſe of others. Rev. 2. 14, 20. 1 Cor. 8. & 10. 19, 28. 1 John 5. 21. Dan. 3.

4. Whatſoever outward expreſſions of honour, Idolaters have uſed, and do uſe to ſignifie their inward Idolatry, or taking a Creature or a Fiction to be God, and ſo make it a Teſſera or Symbol or profeſſing Sign of that their Idolatry, if thoſe actions are ſo uſed or eſteemed among as, or within the notice of our actions; it is unlawful for us to uſe the like to any Creature. Becauſe the uſe of their expreſſion, maketh it to be a Profeſſion of Idolatry by us, and ſo to be interpretative Idolatry and Scandal: For to uſe profeſſing Symbols is to profeſs.

Except when there is ſome notorious reaſon to uſe the ſame words or actions to another lawful ſignification, which is of greater weight than the ſcandal; and we make it as publick to obviate the ſcandal, that we do it not to the Idolaters intents.

For example, [if the Mahometans make it a Symbol of their Religion, to ſay [God is but one] upon a falſe ſuppoſition that the Chriſtians make more Gods than one; yet it is lawful for us to uſe that ſymbolical word to a better end. But if they add to their Symbol [And Mahomet is his Prophet,] we may not uſe that, becauſe it's 1. Symbolical of a falſe Religion; 2. And a falſhood of it ſelf.

So if they make it a diſtinctive note of their religious meetings, to congregate the People by Voice and not by Bells; when it will be taken for a profeſſing their Religion to do the ſame, we muſt avoid it: But not when there is great cauſe for it (as if we have no other means) and the reaſon againſt it, or ſcandal may be well avoided.

5. Image Worſhip, (or bowing or otherwiſe worſhipping towards an Image as an object) in the time of Divine Worſhip, or when we otherwiſe pretend to be worſhipping God, is ſo groſs an appearance of inward Idolatry, (either as viſibly deſcribing God to be like a Creature, or elſe as ſeeming to mean what Idolaters did by that action) that God hath thought meet to forbid it to all Mankind by a ſpecial Law. (Command. 2.)

6. The ſcandal of ſeeming Idolatry is a heinous Sin, and not to be excuſed by the contrary meaning of the Heart, no more than lying idolatrous profeſſions are. Becauſe to blaſpheme God as if he were like a Creature, or to tell the World by our actions that a Creature is God, are both very heinous. And ſo is it to murder our Brethrens Souls, by tempting them to the like. Rom. 11. 4. 1 King. 19. 18. Rev. 22. 8. 9. Joſ. 23. 7. 2 King. 17. 35. Exod. 20. 5.

7. It

Gen. 27. 29. & 32. 10. & 44. 8. Exod. 11. 8. 2 King. 5. 18. Gen. 41. 43. Ruth 2. 10 1 Sam. 25. 23, 41.

7. It is no appearance of Idolatry to kneel to a King, or a Father, or Superiour, when we are professing nothing but to honour them with due Honour: But when the Church assembleth professedly to worship God, if then they mix expressions of veneration to Angels, and Saints in Heaven, or to a King, or any Creature, in their worshipping of God, without a very notorious signification of sufficient difference, it will seem a joining them in part of the same Divine Honour.

8. So we may put off our Hats to the Chair of State, or Kings Image, yea and kneel towards it as to him, if he command it in due time and place, when it is humane Worship only which we profess: But to kneel or bow as an act of honour towards the Image of King, Saints or Angel, in the time of our professed worshipping of God, is scandalous, and an appearance that we give them a part of that which we are giving to God.

9. Yet it is not unlawful even in the sacred Assemblies, to bow to our Superior at our entrance, or going out, or in the intervals of God's Worship; because the time and custom and manner may sufficiently notifie the distinction, and prevent the scandal.

10. If any presumptuous Clergy-men on pretence of their Authority, will bring Images into the Churches, and set them before us in Divine Worship, as objects only of Remembrance, and means of exciting our affections to God, that they may shew quam proxime se accedere posse ad peccatum sine peccato, how near they can come to sin without sin, it is not meet for any good Christians to follow them in their presumption, nor by obeying them to invite them to proceed in their Church Tyranny. Though I now determine not, whether in case of necessity, a Man may not be present with such a Church, if their Worship of God himself be sound, supposing him sufficiently to notifie his dissent, and that he do not himself scandalously direct his Worship toward such Images? (As in the Lutheran Churches we may suppose they do not.)

Quest. 113. What Images, and what use of Images, is lawful or unlawful?

Isa. 40. 18, 25. & 46. 5. Exod. 20. 4. Gen. 1. 26. & 5. 1. Deut. 4. 16, 17, 18, 23, 25. & 5. 8. & 16. 22. 2 Chron. 33. 7. Ezek. 8. 3, 5. Dan. 3. Rom. 1. 23 Heb. 12. 29. Col. 3. 10. Deut. 9. Exod. 23. 24. & 34. 13. Deut. 7. 5. 1 King. 14. 9, 23. 2 King. 17. 19. 2 Chron. 14. 3, 5. Hab. 2. 18. Jer. 10. 8. Deut. 27. 15. Isa. 17. 8. & 41. 29.

Answ. 1. IT is unlawful to make any Image of God. Because it would be a blaspheming of him, as pretending him to be like to that which he is not like to, that is, a Creature.

Obj. Man is God's Image: It is lawful to make an Image of Man, and so an Image of God's Image, and that may be a secondary Image of God.

Answ. 1. It is the Soul of Man, of which no Image can be drawn or made, which is the Image of God, and not the Body. 2. The Image of him who secundum quid as to the Soul, is God's Image, is not God's Image, but Man's quoad corpus as to another part. We need not contend much about the Name whether this may be called a Remote Image of God (though undoubtedly unfit.) But we must not really take it to be like him, or use it for his Image.

Obj. God hath imprinted his Image on the whole Creation; e. g. He is called a consuming fire; therefore fire may be pictured as his Image.

Answ. The same answer serveth as to the former objection. And it is not all the Impressions and Vestigia of God's Power, Wisdom and Goodness, which are called his Image; as the House is not the Image of the Builder, or a Clock of a Clockmaker, &c. And if God be Metaphorically called Fire, as he is called, a Lyon, &c. because of the similitude of some operation or effect, it followeth not that these are his Image; much less that the Image of these is his Image.

2. No Image may be made to be a Teacher of Lies. As we may not lie by Words, so neither by Images. Therefore false stories, or false Images of realities, when made as true, and pretended to be true Images or Representations, are unlawful.

2 Chron. 28. 2. & 34. 3, 4. Hos. 13. 2. Ezek. 16. 17. & 23. 14. & 30. 13. Hos. 10. 1, 2. 2 King. 21. 7. Jer. 8. 19. & 51. 47.

3. Therefore it is unlawful to make an Image of a Spirit, pretending it to be a true Image. Because it will be a Lie.

4. It is unlawful so to make, place or use any Image, as is like to do more harm than good.

5. Therefore it is unlawful so to make, place or use them, as that they are like to tempt a Man to any Sin, unless necessity for some greater good require it. (Of which more anon.)

6. Therefore all Images of such Idols or feigned Deities are unlawful, as are like to be any temptation to any to believe in them, or worship them.

7. Therefore also all Images of such Creatures as others use to give unlawful worship or honour to, are unlawful when they are like to be a temptation to us or others to do the like. As among Papists the Image of the Crucifix, the Virgin Mary, and Angels may not be made, placed or used so as may tempt any to worship them sinfully as they use to do.

8. The Image of an over-honoured or falsly honoured Person, (though not adored) may not be so made, placed or used, as tendeth to tempt others also to such honour. As of Mahomet, or Apollonius, as Alexander Severus placed him and others, with Abraham and Christ in his Lararium or Chappel.) And many give too much honour by Images to Alexander, Cæsar, and such other great Thieves and Murderers of Mankind.

9. It is unlawful to make lascivious Images of naked Persons, and place or use them so, as tendeth to be a temptation to lust or immodesty. A common Sin of Persons of unclean Imaginations.

10. It is also unlawful so to represent Plays, pompous Honours, splendid cloathings or buildings as tendeth more to tempt the beholders to sinful desires, than to any good.

11. It is unlawful to place Images in Churches or in secret before our Eyes when we are worshipping God, when it tendeth to corrupt the imagination, or by possessing it, to hinder the spiritual exercise of the Mind. Which is the ordinary effect of Images.

12. It is unlawful to use Images scandalously, as any of the aforesaid Sinners use them, though we do it not with the same intent. That is, so to use them as is interpretatively or in outward appearance the same with their use: Because by so doing we shall dishonour God as they do, and harden them in Sin. Therefore Images in Churches or in Oratories in those Countries where others use them sinfully, or near such Countries, where the same may harden Men in their Sin, is evil.

13. It is unlawful to make Talismans or shapes, upon false suppositions that the very shape naturally disposeth the matter to receive such influences of the Stars, by which it shall preserve Men from Plagues, Fire, Wild Beasts, Serpents, Diseases, or shall otherwise work Wonders; for which Gaffarel vainly pleadeth at large: Such as they call naturally magical and charming shapes.

14. Much more unlawful it is purposely to make shapes to be Symbols or Instruments by which the Devil shall operate, whether it be for good or evil; it being unlawful so far to use him.

15. So is it to make such shapes on conceit that God, or good Angels will operate in or by them; as some use the Cross or other Images to defend them from Devils, to cure the Tooth-ache or other Diseases, or such like use: When God hath neither appointed any such means to be used, for such ends, nor promised any such blessing or operation by them.

16. It is unlawful to place the Image of a tutelary Saint or Angel in House, Church or Town, on supposition that we shall be the safer while that Image is there placed; or else to profess our trust in that particular guardian. Because no Man knoweth what Angel God doth make his Guardian, nor can we distinguish them; much less that he maketh such or such a Saint our Guardian.

And

And Mens own (fooliſh) chooſing ſuch a one to be their Guardian, will not make them ſo. Nor hath God appointed or promiſed to bleſs any ſuch imagery.

17. It is ſinful to uſe ſuch amorous Images of the Perſons towards whom your luſt is kindled, as tendeth to increaſe or keep up that luſt, or to make profeſſion or oſtentation of it. As luſtful Perſons uſe to carry or keep the Pictures of thoſe on whom they dote.

18. It is unlawful to make ſuch uſe of the Pictures of our Ungodly Friends, as tendeth to increaſe our inordinate love to them.

19. It is unlawful to make ſuch Images, Monuments or Memorials of the beſt and holieſt Perſons or Martyrs, as may endanger or tempt Men to any inordinate veneration of, or confidence in the Perſons honoured.

20. Inward Images of God imprinted on the phantaſie are ſinful; and ſo are other ſuch falſe and ſinful Images as aforementioned, though they be not made externally for the uſe of the Eye.

21. I think it is unlawful to make an Image, or any equal inſtituted ſign to be the publick common Symbol of the Chriſtian Religion (though it be but a profeſſing ſign:) Becauſe God having already inſtituted the Symbols or publick Teſſeræ of our Chriſtian Profeſſion or Religion, it is uſurpation to do the like without his commiſſion. As the King having made the wearing of a George and Star the Badge of the Order of the Garter, would take it ill, if any ſhall make another Badge of the Order, much more if they impoſe it on all of the Order; though I preſume not to condemn it.

1. All Images painted or engraven are not unlawful. For God himſelf commanded and allowed the uſe of many in the Old Teſtament. And Chriſt reprehendeth not Cæſar's Image on his Coin.

2. The civil uſe of Images in Coins, Sign-poſts, Banners, Ornaments of Buildings, or of Books, or Chambers, or Gardens, is not unlawful.

2 Chron. 3.10. Mat. 22. 10. Numb. 21 9. 2King. 16. 17. 1 King. 7. 25, 26, 29, 36, 18, 19.

3. As the word [Image] is taken in general for Signs, there is no queſtion but they are frequently to be uſed: As all a Man's Words are the Images, that is, the ſignifiers of his Mind; and all a Man's writings are the ſame made viſible. It is therefore a blind confounding Error of ſome now amongſt us (otherwiſe very ſober good Men) who accuſe all Forms of Prayer, and of Preaching as ſinful, becauſe (ſay they) they are Idols, or Images of Prayer and of Preaching: They are neither engraven nor painted Images of any Creature: But all words are or ſhould be Signs of the Speakers Mind. And if you will ſecundum quid call only the inward Deſires by the name of Prayer, then the words are the ſigns of ſuch Prayer. But becauſe Prayer in the full ſenſe is Deſire expreſſed, therefore the expreſſions are not the ſigns of ſuch Prayer, but part of the Prayer it ſelf, as the Body is of the Man: Nor is a form, that is, fore-conceived or premeditated words (whether in mind or writing) any more an Image of Prayer, than extemporate Prayer is. All words are ſigns, but never the more for being premeditated, or written. And according to this opinion, all Books are ſinful Images, and all Sermon-notes, and the printing of the Bible it ſelf, and all pious Letters of one Friend to another, and all Catechiſms: Strangers will hardly believe, that ſo monſtrous an opinion as this, ſhould in theſe very inſtances be maintained, by Men otherwiſe ſo underſtanding and truly godly, and every way blameleſs, as have and do maintain it at this day.

4. The making and uſing of the Image of Chriſt, as born, living, preaching, walking, dying (a Crucifix,) riſing, aſcending, is not unlawful in it ſelf, though any of the forementioned accidents may make it ſo in ſuch caſes. As Chriſt was Man like one of us, ſo he may be pictured as a Man.

Object. His divine Nature and humane Soul are Chriſt, and theſe cannot be pictured: Therefore an Image of Chriſt cannot be made.

Anſw. It is not the name, but the thing which I ſpeak of: Chooſe whether you will call it an Image of Chriſt ſecundum corpus, or an Image of Chriſt's Body. You cannot picture the Soul of a Man, and yet you may draw the Picture of a Man's Body.

5. It is a great part of a Believers work, to have Chriſt's Image very much upon his imagination and ſo upon his mind. As if he ſaw him in the Manger, in his temptations, in his preaching, in his praying, watching, faſting, weeping, doing good, as crowned with Thorns, as crucified, &c. that a Crucified Saviour being ſtill as it were before our Eyes, we may remember the price of our Redemption, and the example which we have to imitate; and that we are not to live like a Dives or a Cæſar, but like the Servants of a Crucified Chriſt. A Crucifix well befitteth the Imagination and Mind of a Believer. Rom. 8. 29. Rev. 1. 12. &c. 2 Cor. 4. 4. Col. 1. 15. Phil. 3. 8, 9, 10, &c.

6. It is a great part of true Godlineſs, to ſee God's Image in the Glaſs of the Creation; to love and honour his Image on his Saints, and all the impreſſions of his Power, Wiſdom and Goodneſs on all his works; and to love and honour him as appearing in them. 1 Cor. 11. 7. 2 Cor. 3. 18. Col. 3. 10.

7. It is lawful on juſt occaſion, to make the Image of Fire or Light as ſignifying the inacceſſible Light in which God is ſaid to dwell, and the Glory in which he will appear to the bleſſed in Heaven. For by many ſuch reſemblances the Scripture ſetteth theſe forth, in Rev. 1. and 21. and 22, &c. And Moſes ſaw God's back parts, viz. a Created Glory. Exod. 25. 18, 19. & 37. 8, 2.

8. It is lawful to repreſent an Angel on juſt occaſions, in ſuch a likeneſs as Angels have aſſumed in apparitions; or as they are deſcribed in Ezekiel or elſewhere in Scripture, ſo be it we take it not for an Image of their true ſpiritual Nature, but an improper repreſentation of them, like a Metaphor in Speech. 1 King. 6. 24, 25, 26, 27. Ezek. 10. 2, 4, 7, 9, 14. 1 King. 7. 29, 36. & 8. 6, 7. 1 Sam. 4. 4. 2 King. 19. 15. Pſal. 80. 1. & 99. 1. Iſa. 6. 2, 6.

9. It is lawful (ſeaſonably and in fit circumſtances) to uſe Images, 1. For memory, 2. For clearer apprehenſion, 3. For more paſſionate affection, even in religious caſes; which is commonly called the Hiſtorical uſe of them. For theſe ends the Geneva Bible, and ſome other, have the Scripture Hiſtories in Printed Images! To ſhew the Papiſts that it is not all Images, or all uſe of them, that they were againſt. And ſo Men were wont to picture Dives in his feaſting, with Lazarus in rags, over their Tables, to mind them of the ſinfulneſs of Senſuality. And ſo the ſacred Hiſtories are ordinarily painted, as uſeful ornaments of Rooms, which may profit the Spectators.

10. Thus it is lawful to honour the memory of learned, great, and virtuous Perſons, Saints and Martyrs, by keeping their Images; and by the beholding of them to be remembred of our duty, and excited to imitation of them. Vt Bezæ Icones Virorum Illuſtrium.

11. It is lawful to uſe Hieroglyphicks, or Images expreſſing Virtues and Vices; as Men commonly make Images to decipher Prudence, Temperance, Charity, Fortitude, Juſtice, &c. and Envy, Sloth, Pride, Luſt, &c. As they do of the five Senſes, and the four Seaſons of the Year, and the ſeveral parts of Man's age, and the ſeveral ranks and qualities of Perſons, &c.

12. Thus it is lawful to repreſent the Devil, and Idols, when it tendeth but to make them odious. For as we muſt not take their Names into our Mouths, Pſal. 16. 4. Exod. 23. 13. Epheſ. 5. 3. that is, when it tendeth to honour them, or tempt Men to it; and yet may name them as Elias did in ſcorn, or as the Prophets did by reproof of Sin; ſo is it alſo in making repreſentations of them. Even as a Drunkard may be painted in his filth and folly to bring ſhame and odium on the Sin.

13. It is lawful to uſe Hieroglyphicks inſtead of Letters, in teaching Children, or in Letters to Friends; or to make Images to ſtand as characters in ſtead of Words, and ſo to uſe them even about ſacred things.

14. As

14. As it is lawful to uſe arbitrary profeſſing Signs even about holy things, which ſignifie no more than words, and have by nature and cuſtom an aptitude to ſuch a uſe; while it is extended no farther, than to open our own minds; ſo it may be lawful to uſe ſuch a characteriſtical or hieroglyphical Image to that end, when it hath the ſame aptitude, but not otherwiſe. As a circular figure or ring being a hieroglyphick of perpetuity, and ſo of conſtancy, is uſed as a ſignificant profeſſion of conſtancy in Marriage; and ſo the receiving of each others Picture, might be uſed. And ſo in Covenanting, or taking an Oath, the profeſſing ſign is left to the cuſtom of the Country; whether we ſignifie our conſent by geſture, words, action, writing. And as it is lawful to make an Image on a Seal which hath a ſacred ſignification, (as a flaming Heart on an Altar, a Bible, a Praying Saint, &c.) as well as to write a religious Motto on a Seal; ſo it is lawful to put this Seal to a ſubſcribed Covenant with God and his Church, or our King and Country, when we have a lawful call to ſeal ſuch a Covenant. But if Law or Cuſtom would make ſuch a Seal, to be the common publick Badge or Symbol of the Chriſtian Religion, I think it would become unlawful.

Neh.9.48 Eſth. 8. 8.

As the Crucifix for ought I know might thus have been arbitrarily uſed as a Seal, or as a tranſient arbitrary profeſſing ſign, as the Croſs was by the ancients at the beginning. If any Man had ſcorned me for believing in a Crucified Chriſt, I know not but I might have made a Crucifix by art, act or geſture, to tell him that I am not aſhamed of Chriſt; as well as I may tell him ſo by word of mouth. But if Mens inſtitution or cuſtom ſhall make this a Symbol or Badge of a Chriſtian, and twiſt it in Baptiſm, or adjoin it, as a dedicating Sign, and as the common profeſſing Symbol that every baptized Perſon muſt uſe, to ſignifie and declare that he is not aſhamed of Chriſt crucified, but believeth in him, and will manfully fight under his banner againſt the Fleſh, the World, and the Devil to the death: Though he call it but a Profeſſing Sign, and ſay, He doth but ſignifie his own mind, and not God's act and grace: I ſhould wiſh to diſtinguiſh between a private or arbitrary act of Profeſſion, and a common publick Badge and profeſſing Symbol of our Religion: And tell him that I think the inſtituting of the later belongs to God alone: And that he hath made two Sacraments to that end; which Sacraments are eſſentially ſuch Symbols and Badges of our Profeſſion, and are dedicating Signs on the receivers part; and that Chriſt crucified is the chief Grace or Mercy given to the Church, and his Sacrifice is his own act; and therefore objectively, the Grace, and Act of God alſo, is here ſignified: And therefore on two accounts ſet together, I fear this uſe of the Crucifix is a Sin: 1. As it is an Image, (though it ſhould be tranſient) uſed as a medium in God's Worſhip, and ſo forbidden in the ſecond Commandment, (for it is not a meer circumſtance of Worſhip, but an outward act of Worſhip.) 2. Becauſe it is a new humane Sacrament, or hath too much of the Eſſence of a Sacrament, and ſo is an uſurpation of his Prerogative that made the Sacraments: For as I ſaid, it belongeth to the King to make the common Badge or Symbol of his own Subjects, or any Order honoured by him. And the General giveth out his Colours. And though one may arbitrarily wear another Colour, yet if any ſhall give out common Colours to his Army, Regiment or Troop, beſide his own, to be the Symbol or Badge of his Soldiers, I think he would take it for too much boldneſs. Yet if only an inferior Captain gave but ſubordinate Colours, not to notifie a Soldier of the Army as ſuch, but to diſtinguiſh his Troop from the reſt, it were not ſo much as the other: So if a Biſhop or Ruler did but make ſuch a Symbol by which the Chriſtians of his charge might be diſcerned from all others, and not as a Badge of Chriſtianity it ſelf, though I know no reaſon for ſuch diſtinction, and it may be faulty otherwiſe, yet would it not be this uſurping of Sacramental Inſtitution, which now I ſpeak of. All profeſſing Signs are not Symbols of Chriſtianity. Chriſt hath done his own work well already: His Colours, Sacraments or Symbols are ſufficient; we need not deviſe more, and accuſe his inſtitutions of inſufficiency; nor make more work for our ſelves in Religion, when we leave undone ſo much that he hath made us.

15. All abuſe of Images will not warrant us to ſeparate from the Church which abuſeth them: Nor is all ſuch abuſe, Idolatry. If the Church or our Rulers will againſt our will place Images inconveniently in Churches, we may lawfully be there, ſo that they be not Symbols of Idol Worſhip, or of a Religion or Worſhip ſo ſinful in the ſubſtance, as that God will not accept it; and ſo be it we make no ſinful uſe of thoſe inconvenient Images our ſelves. Though meer Temptation and ſcandal make them ſinful in thoſe that ſo abuſe them, and ſet them up; yet he that is not the author of that Temptation or Scandal, may not forſake God's Worſhip, becauſe that ſuch things are preſent, nor is not to be interpreted a Conſenter to them, while he cometh only about lawful Worſhip,)and perhaps hath fit opportunity at other times to profeſs his diſſent.)

16. It is lawful to preſerve the honeſt and ſober Love to our Friends, by keeping their Pictures; or to ſhew our Love by decent Monuments.

17. Where we may uſe Creatures themſelves to profit us by the ſight, we may (ordinarily) uſe the Images of thoſe Creatures. As the ſight of Trees, Fruits, Cities, &c. may delight us, and mind us of the Power, Wiſdom and Goodneſs of God, (or the ſight of the Sun, Moon, Stars, &c.,) So may the pictures of the ſame things. And as a dead Body, Skeleton, or Skull, may profitably mind us of our latter end; ſo may the picture of any of theſe, which we may more conveniently keep.

18. It is not unlawful to pray before or towards an Image, in a Room where Images are placed only for Ornament, and we have no reſpect to them as a medium or object of our Worſhip, except by accident, as aforeſaid.)

19. It is not unlawful to make an Image (out of the caſes of accidental evil before named) to be objectum vel medium excitans ad cultum Dei, and object or medium of our Conſideration, exciting our minds to worſhip God: (As a Deaths-head or a Crucifix, or an hiſtorical Image of Chriſt or ſome holy Man, yea, the ſight of any of God's Creatures, may be ſo holily uſed, as to ſtir up in us a worſhipping affection, and ſo is medium cultus excitans vel efficienter.) But no Creature, or Image, (I think) may lawfully be made the medium cultus vel terminus, in genere cauſæ finalis, a worſhipped medium, or the terminus, or the thing which we worſhip mediately, on pretence of repreſenting God, and that we worſhip him in it ultimately. And this I take to be the thing forbidden directly in the ſecond Commandment; viz. To worſhip a Creature (with Mind or Body) in the Act of Divine Worſhip, as repreſenting God, or as the mediate term of our Worſhip, by which we ſend it unto God, as if it were the more acceptable to him. So that it is lawful by the ſight of a Crucifix to be provoked to worſhip God; but it's unlawful to offer him that worſhip, by offering it to the Crucifix firſt, as the ſign, way or means of our ſending it to God.

20. Yet a Creature may be honoured or worſhipped with ſuch worſhip as is due to him, by the means of ſuch a repreſenting terminus or Image. If the King command his Subjects to bow towards his Image or Throne when he is abſent, as an act of honour, or humane worſhip to himſelf, it is lawful ſo to do, God having not forbid it. But God hath forbid us to do ſo by himſelf, becauſe he hath no Image, and is confined to no place, and to avoid the danger and appearance of Idolatry.

21. Yet

21. Yet is it lawful to lift up our hands and eyes towards Heaven, as the place of God's Glory: And I condemn not the antient Churches that worshipped towards the East: But it was not Heaven, or the Sun, or East that they worshipped, or to which they sent their worship, as any terminus medius, or thing mediately worshipped; but only to God himself whose Glory is in the Heavens.

Quest. 114. Whether Stage-plays where the Virtuous and Vitious are personated, be lawful?

BEcause this is a kind of Imagery, the Question may be here fitly handled. But I have said so much before of Stage-plays, and the Sin that is used in them, Lib. 1. Chap. 18. Part. 2. that I have nothing more to say here, but only to decide this particular Case of Conscience concerning them.

As I am not willing to thrust any Man into extreams, nor to trouble Men with calling those Sins which God hath not forbidden; so I have reason to advise Men to go in doubtful cases on the safer side, much more to dissuade them from undoubted Sin, and especially from great and multiplied Sins: And therefore I must thus decide the question.

1. It is not absolutely unlawful to personate another Man, nor doth the second Commandment forbid such living Images in this extent. I pass by the instance of the Woman of Tekoah, 2 Sam. 14. because the bare History proveth not the lawfulness. But Paul's speaking as of himself and Apollos the things which concerned others, was approvable: And as Christ frequently taught by Parables, so his Parables were a description of good and evil, by the way of feigned History, as if such and such things had been done by such Persons as never were. And this fiction is no falshood; for the hearer knoweth that it is not meant as an Historical Narrative, but a Parable; and it is but an Image in words, or a painted Doctrine. And if a Person and Action may be feigned by words, I know not where it is forbidden to feign them by personal representation. Therefore to personate another is not simply a Sin.

2. To personate good Men in good Actions, is not simply unlawful: Because 1. it is not unlawful as it is personating, as is shewed: 2. Nor as lying: Because it is not an asserting, but a representing; nor so taken.

3. To personate a bad Man, in a bad Action, is more dubious; but seemeth not in all cases to be unlawful. To pass by David's feigning himself mad (as of uncertain quality,) it is common with Preachers, to speak oft the words of wicked Men, as in their Names or Persons, to disgrace them: And Prov. 5. 11, 12, &c. cometh near it. And whether Job be a History, or a Dialogue personating such Speakers, is doubted by the most learned Expositors.

4 I think it possible to devise and act a Comedy or Tragedy, which should be lawful, and very edifying. It might be so ordered by wise Men.

5. I think I never knew or heard of a lawful Stage-play, Comedy or Tragedy, in the age that I have lived: And that those now commonly used, are not only Sins, but heinous aggravated Sins; for these reasons.

1. They personate odious Vices commonly vitiously, that is, 1. Without need, reciting sinful words, and representing sinful actions; which as they were evil in the first committing, so are they in the needless repetition: Ephes. 5. 3, 12. But fornication, and all uncleanness, or covetousness (or lust) let it not be once named among you as becometh Saints: Neither filthiness, nor foolish talking, nor jesting which are not convenient; but rather giving of thanks.——For it is a shame even to speak of those things which are done of them in secret. 2. Because they are spoken and acted commonly without that shame, and hatred, and grief which should rightly affect the hearers with an abhorrence of them; and therefore tend to reconcile Men to Sin, and to tempt them to take it but for a matter of sport.

2. There are usually so many words materially false (though not proper Lies) used in such actings of good and evil, as is unsavoury, and tendeth to tempt Men to fiction and false speaking. Psal. 26. 4. & 119. 113. 1 Tim. 6. 20.

3. There are usually such multitudes of vain words poured out on the Circumstantials, as are a Sin themselves, and tempt the hearers to the like. Matth. 12. 36, 37. 1 Pet. 1. 18

4. They usually mix such amorous or other such ensnaring expressions or actions, as are fitted to kindle Mens sinful Lusts, and to be Temptations to the evil which they pretend to cure. Eccles. 7. 3, 4, 5, 6, 7. Eph. 4. 29, 30. & 5. 15. 16.

5. A great deal of precious Time is wasted in them, which might have been much better spent; to all the lawful ends which they can intend. Luke 12. 17, 18, 19. Rom. 13. 13, 14.

6. It is the preferring of an unmeet and dangerous Recreation, before many fitter: God having allowed us so great choice of better, it cannot be lawful to choose a worse. The Body, which most needeth exercise, with most of the Spectators, hath no exercise at all: And the Mind might be much more fruitfully recreated many ways; by variety of Books, of Converse, by contemplating God and his works, by the fore-thoughts of the heavenly Glory, &c. So that it is unlawful as unfitted to its pretended ends.

7. It usually best suiteth with the most carnal Minds, and more corrupteth the affections and passions; as full experience proveth: Those that most love and use them are not reformed by them, but commonly are the most loose, ungodly, sensual People.

8. The best and wisest Persons least relish them, and are commonly most against them. And they are best able to make experiment, what doth most help or hurt the Soul. Therefore when the sensual say, We profit by them, as much as by Sermons, they do but speak according to their sense and lust: As one that hath the Green-sickness may say, Coals and Clay and Ashes do more good than Meat: Because they are not so fit to judge, as those that have a healthful state and appetite. And it seldom pleaseth the Conscience of a dying Man, to remember the time he spent at Stage-plays. Joh. 6. 12. 1 Pet. 4. 10 Mat. 18. 2. Rom. 14. 12.

9. Usually there is much cost bestowed on them, which might be better employed, and therefore is unlawful. Phil. 4. 17. Psal. 1. 2. 2 Tim. 4. 1, 2.

10. God hath appointed a stated means of instructing Souls, by Parents, Ministers, &c. which is much more fit and powerful: Therefore that time were better spent. And it is doubtful whether Playhouses be not a stated means of Man's institution, set up to the same pretended use as the Church and Ministry of Christ, and so be not against the second Commandment. For my part I cannot defend them, if any shall say that the Devil hath apishly made these his Churches, in competition with the Churches of Christ.

11. It seemeth to me a heinous Sin for Players to live upon that as a Trade and Function, and to be educated for it, and maintained in it. That which might be used as a Recreation, may not alway be made a Trade of.

12. There is no mention that ever such Plays were used in Scripture times by any godly Persons.

13. The Primitive Christians and Churches were commonly against them: Many Canons are yet to be seen, by which they did condemn them. Read but Dr. Jo. Reignolds against Albericus Gentilis, and you shall see unanswerable Testimonies, from Councils, Fathers, Emperors, Kings, and all sober antiquity against them.

14. Thousands of young People in our time have been undone by them: Some at the Gallows, and many Apprentices who run out in their accounts, neglect their Master's business, and turn to Drunkenness, neſs, and Whoredom, and Debauchery, do confeſs that Stage-plays were not the laſt or leaſt of the temptations which did overthrow them.

15. The beſt that can be ſaid of theſe Plays is, that they are controverted and of doubtful lawfulneſs: But there are other means enough of undoubted and uncontroverted lawfulneſs, for the ſame honeſt ends: And therefore it is a Sin to do that which is doubtful without need.

Upon all theſe reaſons, I adviſe all that love their Time, their Souls, their God and Happineſs, to turn away from theſe Nurſeries of Vice, and to delight themſelves in the Law and Ordinances of their Saviour. Pſal. 1. 2, 3.

Queſt. 115. Is it ever unlawful to uſe the known Symbols and Badges of Idolatry?

Anſw. 1. ORdinarily it is unlawful, as being the thing forbidden in the ſecond Commandment. For he that uſeth them, 1. Is corporally Idolatrous, what ever his ſecret thoughts may be. 2. And he is interpretatively an Idolater, and actually perſwadeth others to be ſo.

2. But yet though no Man may ever uſe ſuch Symbols of Idolatry formaliter, quà tales, as ſuch, yet materially he may uſe them in ſome caſes.

As 1. When an Idolater will take an Ordinance of God, and an appointed Duty, and turn it into a Symbol of his Idolatry: (As in the foregoing inſtance of the Mahometans.) We may not therefore forſake that duty; but we muſt do it in ſuch a manner, as may ſufficiently diſclaim the Idolaters uſe of it. As if any Idolaters will make a Symbol of ſome Scripture Texts, or of the Lord's Day, or of the Sacramental Bread and Wine, &c. we muſt not therefore diſuſe them.

2. When a thing indifferent is made an Idolatrous Symbol or Badge, though I muſt not uſe it as Idolaters do, yet if any act of Divine Providence make it become neceſſary as a Moral Duty, I may be obliged to uſe it, diſclaiming the Idolaters manner and end: And then it will be known that I uſe it not as their Symbol. As if a Man by Famine or a Swoon, were dying in an Idols Temple, I might give him meat and drink there to ſave his Life, though ſuch as was a Badge of their Idolatry, while I diſclaim their ends and uſe: The reaſon is, 1. Becauſe at ſuch a time, it is a natural duty, and therefore may not be omitted for fear of ſcandal, or ſeeming ſin, which at that time is no Sin. 2. Becauſe Chriſt hath taught us in the inſtance of himſelf and his Diſciples, that poſitive Commands give place to natural, cæteris paribus. Mar.9.13. & 12. 7. Mar.2.17. And that the Sabbath was made for Man, and not Man for the Sabbath: And that we muſt learn what this meaneth, I will have mercy and not Sacrifice. And if we muſt break the reſt of the Sabbath for the life, yea, the feeding of an Ox or an Aſs, much more of a Man: And the Poſitives of the ſecond Commandment muſt be regulated as the Poſitives of the fourth. 3. And the ſcandal in ſuch a caſe may be avoided, by declaring that I do diſclaim their uſe and ends.

In a Country where kneeling or being uncovered to the Prince is a Civil honouring Cuſtom, if the Prince ſhould be a Caligula, and command the Subjects to worſhip him and his Image as a God, and make bowing, kneeling, or being uncovered the Badge or Symbol of it; Here I would ordinarily avoid even that which before was a duty, becauſe it was but by accident a duty, and now interpreted a heinous Sin. But in caſe that the Life of any Man lay on it, or that the ſcandal on Religion for my denying Civil Honour to the Prince, would be greater and of more perilous conſequence, than the ſcandal of ſeeming Idolatry, I would perform that Civil Honour which I did before, and which God enjoineth me to perform to my Prince: But I would avoid the ſcandal by open proteſting (ſeaſonably) againſt the Idolatry.

Queſt. 116. Is it unlawful to uſe the Badge or Symbol of any Error or Sect in the Worſhip of God?

Anſw. 1. IT is unlawful to uſe it formally as ſuch. 2. But not materially, when 1. There are juſt and weighty reaſons for it: 2. And I may diſown the Error.

Every Sect of erring Chriſtians accordingly uſeth to err in worſhip, and have ſome badge and ſymbol of their Sect and error.

For 1. All Sects and erroneous Perſons may turn holy Words and Duties into Symbols of their Errors. 2. All Chriſtians in the World being imperfect do ſometime err in matter or manner in their worſhip. And he that will materially avoid all the Badges or Symbols of their Errors, ſhall have no Communion with any Church or Chriſtian. 3. As we muſt do our beſt ſo to avoid all their Errors, that we chooſe them not, and make them not formally our own practice; (as Tautologies, vain Repetitions, Diſorders, unfit Phraſes, &c. We muſt our ſelves when we are the Speakers do as much better as we can:) So we muſt not therefore ſeparate from them that do uſe them, nor deny them our Communion when they uſe them: Elſe we muſt ſeparate from all others, and all others from us. 4. But when we are preſent with them, our Minds muſt diſown all the faults of the holieſt Prayer in the World which we join in: We may be bound to ſtay with them, and join in all that's good and warrantable, and yet as we go along, to diſown in our minds all that we know to be amiſs.

Queſt. 117. Are all indifferent things made unlawful to us, which ſhall be abuſed to Idolatrous Worſhip?

Anſw. YOU muſt diſtinguiſh 1. Of the Symbol of Idolatry before ſpoken of, and other by-abuſes: 2. Of an abuſe done in former ages or remote Countries, and in our own Age and Country. 3. Of the Reaſons inviting us to uſe them, whether neceſſary or not?

1. The Caſe of Symbols or Badges is not here ſpoken of, but other abuſes.

2. An abuſe committed in the age and place we live in, or any other, which will by the ſcandal embolden others to the like, may not be complyed in without ſo great reaſon, as will notably preponderate the evil conſequents.

3. But yet in many caſes ſuch abuſed indifferent things may after be lawfully uſed by Believers: For inſtance.

1. Names may be things indifferent, abuſed to Idolatry, and yet lawfully uſed by us. As the name [God, Deus, Lord, Holy, Juſt, Good, Temple, Altar, Sacrifice, Prieſt, Heaven, Sun, Moon, Jupiter, Saturn, and a hundred ſuch:] I mean theſe Letters and Syllables in theſe Languages. That theſe names are all in themſelves indifferent appeareth in that they are neither naturally neceſſary, nor by God's Inſtitution, but arbitrary ſigns of humane invention and choice: For we may eaſily and lawfully make new words to ſignifie all the ſame things that theſe do. And that they are abuſed to Idolatry is notoriouſly known. And that yet they are lawfully uſed, the practice of all Chriſtians, Engliſh and Latin, even the moſt ſcrupulous themſelves doth judge.

2. And the uſe of Temples (theſe individuals which have been uſed to Idolatry) is lawful.

3. So alſo of Bells, Pulpits, Cups, Tables, and Fonts, and other Utenſils.

4. The Bible it ſelf, as it is this individual Book rather than another, is a thing indifferent. Yet it may be read in after it hath been abuſed to Idolatry.

5. If the King would not give only the Garments, but the Mony, Lands, Lordſhips, Houſes, which have been consecrated or otherwise abused to Idolatry, to any poor People, or most of the scrupulous, they would think it lawful to receive and use them: Yea, it's lawful to dedicate the same Lands and Mony afterwards to holy uses, and to maintain Religious Worship.

6. Otherwise it were in the power of any Idolater when ever he pleased to deprive all the Christian World of their Christian Liberty, and to make nothing indifferent to us, seeing they can abuse them all.

7. Yea, almost nothing is then already indifferent, there being few things that some Person in some time and place hath not abused to Idolatry.

8. If the question be only of all individual things abused to Idolatry, the decision now given will hold good: But if it be also of all species of such things, it will be a dishonour to a Man's reason to make a question of it.

Quest. 118. May we use the Names of Week Days which Idolatry honoured their Idols with; as Sunday, Monday, Saturday, and the rest? And so the Months?

Answ. 1. IT were to be wished that the custom were changed: 1. Because the names have been so grosly abused: 2. And we have no need of them: 3. And as the Papists say, [our Monuments, Temple-names, and other Relicts among you prove ours to be the old Religion, and keep possession for us till it be restored.] So the Heathens say to all the Christians, [your very names of your Days and Months prove our Religion to be elder than yours, and keep possession for us till it be restored.]

2. It is meet that we wisely do our duty toward the reformation of this abuse.

3. But yet long Custom and sound Doctrine hath so far taken away the scandal and ill effects, that rather than be an offence to any by seeming singularity, it is as lawful still to use these names, as it was to Luke to use the names of Castor and Pollux, Jupiter and Mercury historically.

4. In such cases the true solution of the question must be, by weighing accidents and foreseen consequents together wisely and impartially: And he that can foresee which way is likely to do most good or hurt, may satisfactorily know his duty.

Quest. 119. Is it lawful to pray secretly when we come first into the Church, especially when the Church is otherwise employed?

Answ. 1. THis is a thing which God hath given us no particular Law about; but the General Laws must regulate us, Let all be decently, in order, and to edification.

2. Our great and principal business in coming to the Church assembly is to join with them in the publick Worship; and this is it that accordingly as our great business we must intend and do.

3. In a place where superstition makes ignorant People think it a matter of necessity, so to begin with secret Prayer, when the Church is otherwise employed, the use of it is the more scandalous, as encouraging them in their error.

4. It is the best way to come before the publick Worship begin, and then they that think it most decent may do it without scruple or just offence.

5. But as a Man's Heart may put up a short ejaculation as he walketh up the Church, without losing what else he might hear, so a Man may on his Knees be so brief, as that his loss shall be but small: And whether his profit preponderate that little times loss, he can judge better than another. Therefore though I like best keeping to Concord with the Assembly in our Devotion, yet these are things in which it ill becometh Christians to judge or despise each other: And I shall take on either side the judging and despising of those that differ from us, to be a far greater Sin, than the doing or not doing of the thing.

Object. Is it not called in Eccles. 5. 1, 2. the sacrifice of fools who know not that they do evil.

Answ. No: I have wondered to hear that Text so ordinarily thus perverted. The Text is, [Keep thy foot when thou goest to the house of God, and be more ready to hear, than to offer the sacrifice of fools———] Which is no more, than that it is the imagination and custom of fools to think to please God by their Sacrifices, and bringing somewhat to him, while they refuse or neglect to hear his commands and obey him: Whereas Obedience is better than Sacrifice; and the Sacrifice of the wicked is abomination to the Lord: And he that turneth away his ear from hearing the Law, his Prayer is abominable: And because they hate instruction—— they shall cry and God will not hear them. Therefore be first careful to hear what God saith to thee, and to learn his will and do it, and then bring thy Sacrifice to him: Leave thy gift at the Altar, and go and be reconciled to thy Brother: Obey first, and then come and offer thy gift. This is all the meaning of the Text. See also Psal. 50. 8. and compare these cited Texts, 1 Sam. 15. 22. Prov. 15. 8. and 21. 17. Matth. 5, &c. But whether we should begin with Prayer or Hearing when we enter into the Church, God hath left to prudence to be decided by the General Rules.

Quest. 120. May a Preacher kneel down in the Pulpit, and use his private Prayers, when he is in the assembly?

Answ. THis will have the same answer with the former; and therefore I shall trouble the Reader with no more.

Quest. 121. May a Minister pray publickly in his own Name singly, for himself or others? Or only in the Churches Name, as their Mouth to God?

Answ. IT is good to be as exact in order and decency as we can: But they that would not have other Mens Ceremonies brought in on that pretence, should not bring in their own made Doctrines.

2. It is certain that all the Assembly come thither, not only to hear a Prayer, but to pray as well as the Minister: And therefore the practice of all Churches in the World (as is seen in all the Liturgies) is for the Minister to speak in the Plural Number, and usually to pray in the Churches Name. And so he is both their Guide and Mouth in Prayer. Therefore even when he prayeth for himself, it is usually fittest (or very fit) for him rather to say, [We beseech thee give the speaker thy assistance, &c.) than [I beseech thee.]

2. And even subjectively it is not inconvenient to speak of himself in the third Person [Give him] or [Give the speaker thy help].] instead of [Give me.]

3. But they that will place a necessity in either of these, and make the contrary a Sin, must have more knowledge than I have to be able to prove it.

For 1. In the latter case the Minister doth not pray in his own Person, but only for his own Person, when he saith, [We beseech thee give me thy help, &c.

2. And I know no word of God that saith, either that the Minister is only the Mouth of the People, or that he is to speak only in their Names, or that he may not pray for himself or them in his Ministerial capacity in the first Person. 1 Tim. 2. 1, 2. Isa. 59. 16. Jer. 27. 18 & 7. 16. & 29. 7. & 37. 3. & 42. 2, 4, 20. 1 Sam. 7. 5. & 12. 19, 23.

For, 1. He is a Minister of Christ for the Church, and not the Minister of the Church properly. And he is subordinate to Christ in his Priestly Office, as well as in his Teaching and Ruling Office: And the Priests did always take it for their Office not only to speak

2 Cor. 13. 7. Phil. 1. 9. Col. 1. 9, 23. 1 Theſ. 5. 23. 2 Theſ. 1. 11. 1 Theſ. 3. 10. ſpeak as the People Mouth, but as Sub-mediators or Interceſſors for them to God: And as then they were Types of Chriſt by ſtanding between God and the People, ſo they were his Officers as well as Types: And ſo they are his Officers to this Day: And as they teach and rule in his Name by Office, ſo do they intercede in his Name: All Men confeſs that they may do this in private: And where is it forbidden to be done in publick?

2. And there are ſome caſes in which it is fitteſt that it ſhould be ſo. That is, when it is ſuppoſed that the Congregation do not join with him. As 1. When the whole Church is fallen into ſome error of judgment, (as who hath not many) and he knoweth that they differ from him, it is fitter for him to pray as a Sub-interceſſor for them in his own Perſon, than to ſpeak as in their Perſons, who he knoweth join not with him: For that hath a plain untruth in it. 2. If the whole Church be fallen into ſome little Sin, which ſeduction yet hindereth them from repenting of, he were better confeſs it, and profeſs ſorrow for it, in his own Perſon, than in theirs that join not with him in it. 3. When he prayeth for ſomewhat for himſelf and them that is above their underſtanding (as for direction in ſome difficult Controverſies, &c.) I know not that he is bound to ſpeak in their names that underſtand him not.

Therefore this is no buſineſs for Chriſtians that are not poſſeſt with a proud, peeviſh, ſelf-conceited, quarrelſome humour, to cenſure or deſpiſe a Miniſter for: Nor ſhould any introduce that falſe Doctrine of Man's invention into the Church, that the Miniſter is only to pray in publick as the Peoples Mouth. But the power of prejudice is great.

Queſt. 122. May the name Prieſts, Sacrifices, and Altars be lawfully now uſed inſtead of Chriſt's Miniſters, Worſhip and the Holy Table?

Anſw. 1. HE that uſeth them in deſign to bring in the Popiſh Tranſubſtantiation and real Sacrifice of the Maſs, doth heinouſly ſin in ſuch a deſign and uſe.

2. In a time and place where they may not be uſed without ſcandal, or tempting or encouraging any to their Errors, the Scandal will be a grievous Sin.

3. The New Teſtament uſeth all the Greek Names which we tranſlate, Prieſts, Sacrifice and Altars, therefore we may uſe the ſame in Greek: And our Tranſlation and Engliſh Names are not intolerable: If Prieſt come from Presbyter I need not prove that: If it do not, yet all Miniſters are ſubordinate to Chriſt in his Prieſtly Office as eſſentially as in the reſt. And Rev. 1. 6. and 5. 10. and 20. 6. it is ſaid, that we are or ſhall be made Prieſts of God, and unto God. And 1 Pet. 2. 5. we are [an holy Prieſthood] and ver. 9. a [royal Prieſthood:] If this be ſaid of all, then eſpecially of Miniſters.

And the word Sacrifice is uſed of us and our offered Worſhip, 1 Pet. 2. 5. Heb. 13. 15, 16. Phil. 4. 18. Epheſ. 5. 2. Rom. 12. 1.

And Heb. 13. 10. ſaith, We have an Altar whereof they partake not, &c. And the word is frequently uſed in the Revelations, Chap. 6. 9. and 8. 3, 5. and 16. 7, &c. in relation to Goſpel times. We muſt not therefore be quarrelſome againſt the bare names, unleſs they be abuſed to ſome ill uſe.

4. The ancient Fathers and Churches did ever uſe all theſe words ſo familiarly without any queſtion or ſcruple raiſed about them, either by the Orthodox or any Hereticks that at preſent I can remember to have ever read of, that we ſhould be the more wary how we condemn the bare words, leſt thence we give advantage to the Papiſts to make them tell their followers, that all Antiquity was on their ſide. Which were very eaſie for them to prove, if the Controverſie were about the Names alone. Extreams and paſſionate imprudence do give the Adverſaries great advantages.

5. The names of Sacrifice and Altar, were uſed by the ancient Churches, not properly, but meerly in alluſion to the Jewiſh and Heathen Sacrifices and Altars, together with a tropical uſe from the Chriſtian Reaſons of the Name.

As the Lord's Supper is truly the Commemoration of Chriſt's Sacrifice, and therefore called by Proteſtants, A Commemorative Sacrifice; ſo that our Controverſie with the Papiſts, is not, Whether it may be called a Sacrifice, but whether it be only the Sacrament of a Sacrifice, or a Sacramental Commemorative Sacrifice, or alſo a Real proper Sacrifice of the very Body and Blood it ſelf of Chriſt. For we acknowledge, that [This is a Sacrifice] is no more tropical a ſpeech, than [This is my Body and Blood.]

6. Yet it muſt be noted, that the Scripture uſeth the word [Sacrifice] about our ſelves, and our Thankſgivings, and Praiſes, and works of Charity, rather than of the Lord's Supper: And the word [Prieſts] of all Men Lay or Clergy that offer theſe foreſaid Sacrifices to God. Though the ancient Doctors uſed them familiarly, by way of alluſion, of the Sacrament and its Adminiſtrators.

7. In a word, as no Chriſtian muſt uſe theſe or any words, to falſe ends or ſenſes, or deceiving purpoſes, nor yet to ſcandal; ſo out of theſe caſes, the words are lawful: And as the Fathers are not to be any further condemned for uſing them, than as the words (which they foreſaw not) have given advantage to the Papiſts, to bring in an ill Senſe and Doctrine; ſo thoſe that now live in Churches and Countries, where the publick profeſſed Doctrine doth free them from the ſuſpicion of a Popiſh ill Senſe, ſhould not be judged nor quarrelled with for the terms; But all ſober Chriſtians ſhould allow each other the liberty of ſuch Phraſes without cenſoriouſneſs or breach of Charity or Peace.

Queſt. 123. May the Communion-Table be turned Altar-wiſe? and Railed in? And is it lawful to come up to the Rails to communicate?

Anſw. THE anſwer to this is moſtly the ſame with that to the foregoing queſtion. 1, God hath given us no particular Command or Prohibition about theſe Circumſtances; but the General Rules, for Unity, Edification, Order and Decency: Whether the Table ſhall ſtand this way or that way, here or there, &c. he hath not particularly determined.

2. They that turn the Table Altar-wiſe and Rail it in, out of a deſign to draw Men to Popery, or in a ſcandalous way which will encourage Men to, or in Popery, do ſin.

3. So do they that Rail in the Table to ſignifie that the Vulgar or Lay-Chriſtians muſt not come to it, but be kept at a diſtance; when Chriſt in his perſonal preſence admitted his Diſciples to communicate at the Table with himſelf.

4. But where there are no ſuch ends, but only to imitate the Ancients that did thus, and to ſhew reverence to the Table on the account of the Sacrament, by keeping away Dogs, keeping Boys from ſitting on it: And the profeſſed Doctrine of the Church condemneth Tranſubſtantiation, the Real Corporal Preſence, &c. (as ours doth.) In this caſe Chriſtians ſhould take theſe for ſuch as they are, indifferent things, and not cenſure or condemn each other for them; nor ſhould any force them upon thoſe that think them unlawful.

5. And to communicate is not only lawful in this caſe, where we cannot prove that the Miniſter ſinneth, but even when we ſuſpect an ill deſign in him, which we cannot prove; yea, or when we can prove that his perſonal interpretation of the Place, Name, Scitua- tion and Rails is unsound: For we assemble there to communicate in, and according to the professed Doctrine of Christianity and the Churches, and our own open Profession, and not after every private opinion and error of the Minister. As I may receive from an Anabaptist or Separatist notwithstanding his personal errors; so may I from another Man, whose error destroyeth not his Ministry, nor the Ordinance, as long as I consent not to it, yea, and with the Church profess my dissent.

6. Yet cæteris paribus, every free Man that hath his choice, should choose to communicate rather where there is most purity and least error, than with those that swerve more from regular exactness.

Quest. 124. Is it lawful to use David's Psalms in our Assemblies?

Answ. YES: 1. Christ used them at his last Supper, as is most probable: And he ordinarily joined with the Jews that used them. And so did the Apostles. Matth. 26. 30. Mark 14. 26. Luk. 4. 16. & 6. 6.

2. It is confessed lawful to read or say them: Therefore also to sing them. For saying and singing difference not the main end. John 6. 59. & 18. 20.

3. They are suitable to our use, and were the Liturgy of the Jewish Church, not on a Ceremonial account, but for that fitness which is common to us with them. Mar. 1. 21, 23, 29. & 3. 1. & 6. 2. 1 Chron. 16. 7.

4. We are commanded in the New Testament to sing Psalms: And we are not commanded to compose new ones: Nor can every one make Psalms who is commanded to sing Psalms. And if it be lawful to sing Psalms of our own or our Neighbours making, much more of God's making by his Spirit in his Prophets. Psal. 105. 2. & 95. 2. Jam. 5. 13. 1 Chron. 16. 9.

Obj. They are not suitable to all our cases, nor to all the Assembly.

Answ. 1. We may use them in that measure of suitableness to our cases which they have. You may join with a Man in Prayer who expresseth part of your wants, though he express not all. Else you must join with no Man in the World.

2. If ungodly Men are present when the faithful speak to God, must we not speak our proper case, because they are present? The Minister in Church-administrations speaketh principally in the name of the Faithful, and not of Hypocrites. Must he leave out of his Prayers all that is proper to the Godly, meerly because some wicked Men are there? No more must the Church do in singing unto God.

3. They that cannot speak every word in a Psalm just as their own case; may yet speak it as instructive: Otherwise they might not read or say it.

But the Sectarian Objections against singing David's Psalms are so frivolous, that I will not tire the Reader with any more. Rom. 15. 9. Eph. 5. 19. Col. 3. 16.

Quest. 125. May Psalms be used as Prayers, and Praises, and Thanksgivings, or only as Instructive? Even the reading as well as the singing of them?

Answ. THE sober Reader who knoweth not what errors others hold, will marvel that I trouble Men with such questions. But I have oft been troubled with those that (having no other shift to deny the lawfulness of written and set forms of Prayer) do affirm that Psalms are neither to be read or sung at all as Prayers, but only as doctrinal Scriptures for instruction. But that this is false appeareth, Psal. 72. 20. Psal. 90. Title. Psal. 86. Title. Psal. 17. Title, &c.

1. In that those that are real material Prayers, and Praises, and Thanksgivings, and were penned for that very use, as the Titles shew, and those that were so used by the Jewish Synagogues where Christ was ordinarily present, may be so used by us: But such are the Psalms both as said and sung.

2. And those that we are commanded to sing as Psalms, and have Christ's example so to use (who sung a Hymn or Psalm of Praise at his last Supper,) we also may so use. But, &c.

3. And those that are by God's Spirit fitted for our use in Prayer, Praise and Thanksgiving, and never forbidden so to be used, may by us be so used: But such are the Psalms, &c. I will weary you with no more.

Quest. 126. Are our Church-Tunes lawful, being of Man's invention?

Answ. YES: They are a lawful invention, allowed us by God, and fitted to the General Rules of Edification. Scripture is no particular Rule for such Modes and Circumstances.

Object. They breed a carnal pleasure by the melody, which is not fit for spiritual devotion.

Answ. It is a lawful sensitive pleasure, sanctified to a holy use, not hindering, but greatly helping the Soul, in spiritual worship.

Either you call it carnal, because it gratifieth the sinful corrupt inclinations of Man: Or only because it is sensitive, or a pleasure in the imagination and lower faculties. If the former, 1. There is nothing in it which is a necessary cause of any sinful pleasure, nor an impediment to spiritual pleasure. 2. But a lustful Person will turn all sensitive pleasure into sin: Our Meat, and Drink, and Clothes, and Houses, and Friends, and Health: The Bread and Wine in the Sacrament may be thus abused. Luke 12. 17, 18, 19. & 16. 20, 21, 22.

2. But you must know, that as our Bodies are here united to our Souls, so they act together, and while the sensitive part is subordinate to the rational, it is serviceable to it, and not a hinderance: When you come to have Souls that are separated from the Body, you shall use no bodily instruments: And yet even then it is uncertain to us, whether the sensitive powers of the Soul do not accompany it, and be not used by it, But certainly in the mean time, he that will not use Sense, shall not use Reason. And he that acteth not sensibly, acteth not as a Man: It is not a sin to be a Man: And therefore not to see, to hear, to taste, to smell, &c. Nor is it a sin to taste sweetness in our Meat and Drink, nor is it a sinful pleasure for the eyes to behold the Light, or the variety of the beauteous works of God, or to take pleasure in them. His works are great, sought out of all them that have pleasure therein, Psal. 111. 2.

You know not what it is to be a Man, if you know not that God hath made all Senses, to be the inlets of objects, and so of holy pleasure into the Soul. Would he have given us Eyes, and Ears, and Appetites, and made his Creatures sweet and beauteous, that all might either be Sin or useless to us? No: All things are sanctified, and pure to the pure. The sense is the natural way to the Imagination, and that to the Understanding: And he that will have none but sensitive pleasure, were better have none at all. It is therefore a foolish pretence of Spirituality, to dream of acting with our Senses, or avoiding those delights, which may and must be sanctified to us. Harmony and Melody are so high a pleasure of the Sense, that they are nearest to Rational delights, if not participating of them, and exceedingly fitted to elevate the mind and affections unto God. Rom. 18. 32. Titus 1. 35. Rom. 14. 20. 1 Cor. 3. 21. 2 Cor. 4. 15.

And as it is the very nature of true Holiness, to be so suited to holy things, as that they may be our Delight, and he is the genuine Saint, and the best of Christians, who most delighteth in God and Holiness: So that is the best means to make us the best Christians, which helpeth us best to these Delights: And if any thing on Earth be like to Heaven, it is to have our Delight in God. And therefore if any thing may make us heavenly, it is that which raiseth us to such delights. And therefore a Choir of holy Persons, ſons, melodiouſly ſinging the Praiſes of Jehovah, are likeſt to the Angelical Society, Pſalm 150.

Queſt. 127. Is Church-Muſick by Organs or ſuch Inſtruments lawful.

Rev. 14. 2, 3. The voice of Harpers harping with their Harps, is ordinarily expounded of publick Worſhip.

Anſw. I Know that in the perſecuted and poorer times of the Church, none ſuch were uſed (when they had not Temples, nor always a fixed Meeting-place). And that the Author of the Queſt. & Reſp. in Juſtin. Martyr ſpeaketh againſt it: (Which Perkins and others cite to that purpoſe.) And I grant,

1. That as it is in the Power of weak diſeaſed Chriſtians, to make many things unlawful to their Brethren leſt we be hurtful to them, and to deprive us of much, not only of our Liberties but our Helps; ſo in abundance of Congregations, Church-Muſick is made unlawful by accident, through their miſtake. For it is unlawful (cæteris paribus) by an unneceſſary thing to occaſion Diviſions in the Churches: But where one part judgeth Church Muſick unlawful, for another part to uſe it, would occaſion Diviſions in the Churches, and drive away the other part. Therefore I would wiſh Church-muſick to be no where ſet up, but where the Congregation can accord in the uſe of it; or at leaſt where they will not divide thereupon.

2. And I think it unlawful to uſe ſuch ſtreins of Muſick as are Light, or as the Congregation cannot eaſily be brought to underſtand: Much more on purpoſe to commit the whole work of ſinging to the Choriſters, and exclude the Congregation. I am not willing to join in ſuch a Church where I ſhall be ſhut out of this noble work of Praiſe.

3. But plain intelligible Church-muſick, which occaſioneth not Diviſions, but the Church agreeth in, for my part I never doubted to be lawful. For, 1. God ſet it up long after Moſes Ceremonial Law, by David, Solomon, &c.

1 Sam. 18. 6. 1 Chron. 15. 16. 2 Chron. 5. 13. & 7. 6. & 23. 13. & 34. 22. Pſal. 98. & 99. & 149. & 150.

2. It is not an inſtituted Ceremony meerly, but a natural help to the minds alacrity: And it is a Duty and not a Sin to uſe the helps of Nature and lawful Art, though not to inſtitute Sacraments, &c. of our own. As it is lawful to uſe the comfortable helps of Spectacles in reading the Bible, ſo is it of Muſick to exhilarate the Soul towards God.

3. Jeſus Chriſt joined with the Jews that uſed it, and never ſpake a word againſt it.

4. No Scripture forbiddeth it, therefore it is not unlawful.

5. Nothing can be againſt it, that I know of, but what is ſaid againſt Tunes and Melody of Voice. For whereas they ſay that it is a humane Invention: So are our Tunes (and Metre, and Verſions) Yea it is not a humane Invention: As the laſt Pſalm and many other ſhew, which call us to praiſe the Lord with Inſtruments of Muſick.

And whereas it is ſaid to be a carnal Mind of Pleaſure, they may ſay as much of a melodious harmonious conſort of Voices, which is more excellent Muſick than any Inſtruments.

And whereas ſome ſay that they find it do them harm, ſo others ſay of melodious ſinging: But as wiſe Men ſay they find it do them good. And why ſhould the experience of ſome prejudiced ſelf-conceited Perſon, or of a half-man that knoweth not what melody is, be ſet againſt the experience of all others, and deprive them of all ſuch Helps and Mercies, as theſe People ſay they find no Benefit by.

And as ſome deride Church-muſick by many ſcornful Names, ſo others do by ſinging (as ſome Congregations near me teſtifie, who theſe many years have forſaken it and will not endure it: But their Paſtor is fain to unite them, by the conſtant and total omiſſion of ſinging Pſalms). It is a great wrong that ſome do to ignorant Chriſtians, by putting ſuch whimſeys and ſcruples into their Heads, which as ſoon as they enter, turn that to a ſcorn and ſnare and trouble; which might be a real help and comfort, to them as it is to others.

Queſt. 128. Is the Lords Day a Sabbath, and ſo to be called and kept, and that of Divine Inſtitution? And is the Seventh Day Sabbath abrogated? &c.

Anſw. ALL the Caſes about the Lords Day (except thoſe practical Directions for keeping it, in the Oeconomical part of this Book) I have put into a peculiar Treatiſe on that Subject by it ſelf; and therefore ſhall here paſs them over, referring the Reader to them in that Diſcourſe.

Queſt. 129. Is it lawful to appoint humane Holy Days, and obſerve them?

Anſw. THis alſo I have ſpoke to in the foreſaid Treatiſe, and in my Diſput. of Church-Govern. and Cer. Briefly, 1. It is not lawful to appoint another weekly Sabbath, or Day wholly ſeparated to the Commemoration of our Redemption: For that is to mend (pretendedly) the Inſtitutions of God; Yea and to contradict him who hath judged one Day only in ſeven to be the fitteſt weekly proportion.

2. As part of ſome Days may be weekly uſed in Holy Aſſemblies, ſo may whole Days on juſt extraordinary occaſions, of Prayer, Preaching, Humiliation, and Thankſgiving.

3. The Holy Doctrine, Lives and Sufferings of the Martyrs and other Holy Men, hath been ſo great a Mercy to the Church, that (for any thing I know) it is lawful to keep anniverſary Thankſgivings in remembrance of them, and to encourage the weak, and provoke them to conſtancy and imitation.

4. But to dedicate Days or Temples to them in any higher Sence, as the Heathens and Idolaters did to their Heroes is unlawful; or any way to intimate an Attribution of Divinity to them, by Word or Worſhip.

5. And they that live among ſuch Idolaters muſt take heed of giving them ſcandalous Encouragement.

6. And they that ſcrupulouſly fear ſuch Sin more than there is cauſe, ſhould not be forced to Sin againſt their Conſciences.

7. But yet no Chriſtians ſhould cauſeleſly refuſe that which is lawful, nor to joyn with the Churches in holy exerciſes on the days of thankful commemoration of the Apoſtles and Martyrs; and excellent Inſtruments in the Church: Much leſs petulantly to work and ſet open Shops to the offence of others: But rather to perſwade all to imitate the Holy Lives of thoſe Saints to whom they give ſuch Honours.

Queſt. 130. How far is the Holy Scriptures a Law and perfect Rule to us?

Anſw. 1. FOR all Thoughts, Words, Affections, and actions, of Divine Faith and Obedience: (ſuppoſing ſtill Gods Law of Nature.) For it is no believing God to believe what he never revealed; nor no Truſting God, to truſt that he will certainly give us that which he never either directly nor indirectly promiſed: Nor no obeying God, to do that which he never commanded.

2. The Contents will beſt ſhew the Extent: Whatever is Revealed, Promiſed and Commanded in it, for that it is a perfect Rule. For certainly it is perfect in its kind and to its proper uſe.

3. It is a perfect Rule for all that is of Univerſal Moral Neceſſity: That is, Whatever it is neceſſary that Man believe, think, or do, in all ages and places of the World, this is of Divine Obligation. Whatever the World is Univerſally bound to (that is, all Men in it) it is certain that Gods Law in Nature or Scripture or both, bindeth them to it. For the World

2 Tim. 3. 16. 2 Pet. 1. 10. 2 Tim. 3. 15. Rom. 15. 4. & 16. 26.

Joh.5.39. Act.17.2, 11. World hath no Universal King or Lawgiver but God.

Joh. 19. 24,28,36. 37. 4. Gods own Laws in Nature and Scripture are a perfect Rule for all the Duties of the Understanding, Thoughts, Affections, Passions, immediately to be exercised on God himself; for no one else is a discerner or judge of such Matters.

5. It perfectly containeth all the Essential and Integral Parts of the Christian Religion: So that nothing is of it self and directly any part of the Christian Religion which is not there.

6. It instituteth those Sacraments perfectly, which are the seals of Gods Covenant with Man, and the delivery of the Benefits, and which are the Badges or Symbols of the Disciples and Religion of Christ in the World.

7. It determineth what Faith, Prayer and Obedience, shall be his appointed Means and Conditions of Justification, Adoption, and Salvation. And so what shall be Professed and Preached in his Name to the World.

8. It is a perfect Instrument of Donation or Conveyance of our Right to Christ, and of Pardon and Justification, and Adoption, and the Holy Spirits Assistances, and of Glory. As it is Gods Covenant, Promise or Deed of Gift.

9. It instituteth certain Ministers as his own Church-officers, and perfectly describeth their Office, as instituted by him.

10. It instituteth the form of his Church Universal which is called, his Body: And also of particular Holy Societies for his Worship: And prescribeth them certain Duties, as the common Worship, there to be performed.

11. It determineth of a weekly Day, even the first, to be separated for and used in this holy Worship.

12. It is a perfect General Rule for the regulating of those things, which it doth not command or forbid in particular. As that all be done wisely, to edification, in charity, peace, concord, season, order, &c.

13. It giveth to Magistrates, Pastors, Parents and other Superiors, all that Power by which they are authorized, to oblige us under God, to any undetermined Particulars.

14. It is the perfect Rule of Christs judging, rewarding and punishing at last, according to which he will proceed.

15. It is the only Law that is made by Primitive Power.

16. And the only Law that is made by Infallible Wisdom.

17. And the only Law which is faultless, and hath no thing in it that will do the Subject any harm.

Psal.12.6. & 19.7,8, 9, 10. Psal. 119. 18. And the only Law which is from absolute Power, the Rule of all other Laws, and from which there is finally no appeal.

Thus far the holy Scripture with the Law of nature is our perfect Rule. But not in any of the following respects.

1. It is no particular Revelation or perfect Rule of natural Sciences, as Physicks, Metaphysicks, &c.

2. It is no Rule for the Arts, for Medicine, Musick, Arithmetick, Geometry, Astronomy; Grammar, Rhetorick, Logick; nor for the Mechanicks, as Navigation, Architecture; and all the Trades and Occupations of Men: No not Husbandry by which we have our food.

3. It is no particular Rule for all the mutable subordinate Duties of any Societies: It will not serve instead of all the Statutes of this and all other Lands, nor tell us, when the Terms shall begin and end, nor what work every Parent and Master shall set his Children and Servants in his Family, &c.

4. It is no full Rule in particular for all those Political Principles which are the ground of humane Laws: As whether each Republick be Monarchical, Aristocratical or Democratical? What Person or of what Family shall Reign? Who shall be his Officers and Judges, and how diversified? So of his Treasury, Munition, Coin, &c.

5. It is no Rule of Propriety in particular, by which every Man may know which is his own Land, or House, or Goods, or Cattle.

6. It is no particular Rule for our natural Actions, what Meat we shall eat, what Cloaths we shall wear; So of our rest, labour, &c.

7. It is no particular Law or Rule for any of all those Actions and Circumstances about Religion or Gods own Ordinances, which he hath only commanded in general, and left in specie or particular to be determined by Man according to his General Laws: But of these next.

Quest. 131. What Additions or humane Inventions in or about Religion, not commanded in Scripture, are lawful or unlawful?

Answ. 1. THese following are unlawful. 1. To feign any new Article of Faith or Doctrine, any Precept, Promise, Threatning, Prophecy or Revelation, and falsly to farther it upon God, and say, that it is of him, or his special Word. Deut. 12. 32. Rev. 22. 18. Col.2.18, 19,20,21, 22,23,26, 27.

2. To say that either that is written in the Bible which is not, or that any thing is the Sense of a Text which is not; and so that any thing is a Sin or a Duty by Scripture which is not. Or to father Apocryphal Books or Texts or Words upon the Spirit of Christ. Mat.15.3, 8, 9. Gal.1.8,9. Jer. 5. 12. Jer.14.14. & 23. 25, 26,32.

3. To make any Law for the Church universal, or as obligatory to all Christians; which is to usurp the soveraignty of Christ: For which treasonable Usurpation it is that Protestants call the Pope Antichrist. Ezek.13. 9, 19. & 22. 28.

4. To add new Parts to the Christian Religion. Zech. 13. 2,3,4,5,6.

5. To make any Law, which it did properly belong to the Universal Soveraign to have made, if it should have been made at all: Or which implieth an accusation of ignorance, oversight, errour or omission in Christ and the Holy Scriptures.

6. To make new Laws for Mens inward Heart-duties towards God.

7. To make new Sacraments for the sealing of Christs Covenant and Collation of his Benefits therein contained, and to be the publick Tesserae, Badges or Symbols of Christians and Christianity in the World.

8. To feign new Conditions of the Covenant of God, and necessary means of our Justification, Adoption and Salvation.

9. To alter Christs instituted Church-Ministry, or add any that are supra-ordinate, co-ordinate, or derogatory to their Office, or that stand on the like pretended ground, and for equal Ends.

10. To make new spiritual Societies or Church-forms which shall be either supra-ordinate, co ordinate or derogatory to the Forms of Christs Institution. Gal. 2. 5.

11. Any impositions upon the Churches (be the thing never so lawful) which is made by a pretended Power not derived from God and the Redeemer. Acts 15. 23,24,25. 2Cor.10.8 & 13. 10.

12. Any thing that is contrary to the Churches Good and Edification, to Justice, Charity, Piety, Order, Unity or Peace. 1 Cor.14. 5, 12, 26. 2 Cor. 12. 19.

13. Any unnecessary burden imposed on the Consciences of Christians; especially as necessary either to their Salvation, Communion, Liberty or Peace. Eph.4.12, 16. 1Tim.1.4.

14. And the exercise of any Power, pretended to be either Primitive and underived, or Infallible, or Impeccable, or Absolute.

15. In general, any thing that is contrary to the Authority, matter, form, obligation, honour or ends of the Laws of God, in Nature or Scripture.

16. Any thing which setteth up those Judaical Laws and Ceremonies which Christ hath abrogated, in that form and respect in which he abrogated them.

17. Where there is a doubt among sober conscionable Christians, lest in obeying Man they should sin

ſin againſt God and diſobey his Laws, and the matter doubted of is confeſſed unneceſſary by the Impoſers; ſo infinite is the diſtance between God and Man, and ſo wholly dependent on him are the higheſt, that they ſhould be exceeding unwilling to vie with the Authority of their Maker in Mens Conſciences, or to do any thing unneceſſary which tendeth to compel Men to tread down Gods Authority in their Conſciences, and to prefer Mans. Much more unwilling ſhould they be, to ſilence the ſober Preachers of Chriſts Goſpel upon ſuch Accounts.

Queſt. 132. Is it unlawful to obey in all thoſe Caſes, where it is unlawful to impoſe and command? Or in what Caſes? And how far Paſtors muſt be believed and obeyed?

Anſw. I Muſt intreat the Reader carefully to diſtinguiſh here, 1. Between Gods Law forbidding Rulers to do evil, and his Law forbidding Subjects or private Men.

2. Between Obedience formally ſo called; which is, when we therefore obey in Conſcience, becauſe it is commanded, and the Commanders Authority is the Formal Reaſon and Object of our Obedience: And Obedience Material only, which is properly no Obedience, but a doing the thing which is commanded upon other Reaſons, and not at all becauſe it is commanded.

3. Between Formal Obedience to the Office of the Ruler in General, and formal Obedience to him, as commanding this very Matter in particular.

4. Between ſuch Authority in the Ruler as will warrant his Impoſitions before God for his own Juſtification, and ſuch Authority as may make it my Duty to obey him. And ſo I anſwer,

1. We ſhall not be judged by thoſe Laws of God, which made the Rulers Duty, but by that which made our own. It is not all one to ſay, Thou ſhalt not command it; and to ſay, Thou ſhalt not do it.

2. Whatever God abſolutely forbiddeth Men to do, we muſt not do whoever command it.

3. There are many of the things forementioned Abſolutely and always unlawful as being evil of themſelves, which no Man may either command or do: And there are ſome of them, which are only evil by accident, which may not be commanded, but may be done when contrary weightier Accidents do preponderate.

4. Many ſuch things may be done Materially on other Reaſons (as for the Churches good, the furtherance of the Goſpel, the winning of Men to God, the avoiding of ſcandal, or of hurt to others or our ſelves, &c.) when they are not to be done in formal Obedience, out of Conſcience to the Authority impoſing: (As if it be commanded by one that hath no juſt Power).

5. Our Actions may participate of Obedience in general, as being Actions of Subjects, when they are not Obedience in the full and perfect formality as to the Particular. The laſt Leaf of Rich. Hooker's eighth Book of Eccl. Polit. will ſhew you the Reaſon of this. He that hath not juſt Power to command me this one particular Act, yet may be my Ruler in the General, and I am bound to Honour him in General as my Ruler; and to diſobey him in a thing Lawful for me to do, though not for him to command, may be diſhonouring of him, and an appearance of diſobedience and denial of his Power. A Parent is forbidden by God to command his Child to ſpeak an idle word, or to do a vain and uſeleſs action (much more a hurtful). Yet if a Parent ſhould command a Child to ſpeak an idle word, or do a vain Action, the Duty of Obedience would make it at that Time, not to be vain and idle to him, yea if he bid him throw away a cup of Wine, or a piece of Bread, which is evil when cauſeleſs, the Child may be bound to do it: Not only becauſe he knoweth not but the Parents may have lawful Ends and Reaſons for their Command (as to try and exerciſe his Obedience); but alſo if he were ſure that it were not ſo; Becauſe he is a Subject, and the honouring of a Parent is ſo great a good, and the diſhonouring him by that diſobedience may have ſuch ill Conſequents, as will preponderate the evil of the loſs of a Cup of Wine, &c. Yet in this Caſe, the Act of Obedience is but mixt: It is an act of Subjection or Honour to a Parent, becauſe in General he is a Governour: But it is but Materially Obedience in reſpect of that particular Matter, which we know he had no Authority to command.

Eph. 5. 24. Col. 3. 20, 22. Rom. 13. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6.

6. In this reſpect therefore, A Ruler may have ſo much Power as may induce on the Subject an Obligation to obey, and yet not ſo much as may juſtifie his commands before God, nor ſave himſelf from Divine Puniſhment.

I add this ſo diſtinctly, leſt any ſhould miſapply Mr. Rich. Hooker's Doctrine aforeſaid, Eccl. Pol. l. 8. p. 223, 224. [As for them that exerciſe Power altogether againſt order, though the kind of Power which they have may be of God, yet is their exerciſe thereof againſt God, and therefore not of God, otherwiſe than by Permiſſion as all injuſtice is —— Uſurpers of Power whereby we do not mean them that by violence have aſpired unto Places of higheſt Authority, but them that uſe more Authority than they did ever receive in form and manner, beforementioned —— Such Uſurpers thereof, as in the Exerciſe of their Power, do more than they have been authorized to do, cannot in Conſcience, bind any Man to Obedience.]

Left any ſhould gather hence that they are never bound in Conſcience, to obey their Parents, their King, their Paſtors, in any Point wherein they exerciſe more Power than God gave them, I thought meet to ſpeak more exactly to that Point, which needed this diſtinguiſhing. For the ground is ſure that There is no Power but of God; and that God hath given no Man Power againſt himſelf, his Laws and Service: But yet there are many Caſes in which God bindeth Children and Subjects to obey their Superiours, in ſuch matters as they did ſinfully command. Joh. 19. 11 Rom. 13. 1

7. It greatly concerneth all ſober Chriſtians therefore to be well ſtudied in the Law of God, that we may certainly know what thoſe things are which God hath abſolutely forbidden us to do, whoever command them, and to diſtinguiſh them from things that depend on mutable accidents: That as the three Witneſſes, and Daniel, Dan. 3. & 6. we may be true to God whatever we ſuffer for it; and yet may obey Men in all that is our Duty to them.

Thus the Apoſtles knew that no Man had Power from God to ſilence them, or perſecute them for the Goſpel. Therefore they would not obey thoſe that forbad them to Preach: And yet they would appear before any Magiſtrate that commanded them, and obey their ſummons; and ſo we may do even to an Uſurper, or a private Man.

8. The principal and moſt notable Caſe, in which we muſt obey when a Ruler ſinfully commandeth, is, when the matter which he commandeth is not ſuch as is either forbidden us by God, or out of the Verge of his Place and Calling at all to meddle with and command, nor yet ſuch as is deſtructive of our Duty to God; but ſuch as in General belongeth to his Office to determine of according to Gods general Rules; but he miſſes it in the manner and goeth againſt thoſe Rules; yet not ſo far as to deſtroy the Duty we owe to God, or the end of it.

For inſtance, it is not in the Rulers Power to determine whether there ſhall be Preaching or none; true Doctrine or falſe, &c. But it is in his Power to regulate the Circumſtances of Time, Place, &c. (next to be recited.) Now if he do theſe to Order, Unity and Edification, I will obey him formally and fully for Conſcience ſake: If he ſo do it as is deſtructive to the end (as is aforeſaid), as to ſay, You ſhall meet only at twenty miles diſtance, or only at mid-midnight, &c. I will obey him no further than neceſſity and the common good requireth me: If he do it only with a tolerable Inconvenience (as to ſay, You ſhall meet no where but in the open fields, &c.) I will obey for Conſcience ſake as I am in general a Subject bound to Honour the Magiſtrate; but not as he nameth an unmeet Circumſtance; in that reſpect my Obedience ſhall be but material.

I need not handle it as a diſtinct Queſtion, Whether Paſtors are to be believed or obeyed any farther than they ſhew a Word of God revealing and commanding the particular Thing? Divine Faith and Obedience is one thing, and Humane is another. 1. If as a Preacher he ſay, This is Gods Word, believe it and obey it as ſuch, you muſt believe with a humane Faith that it is liker that he knoweth what he ſaith, than you do (unleſs, 1. You ſee evidence, 2. Or the conſent of more credible Perſons to be againſt him, and then you are not to believe him at all). Even as a Child believeth his Teacher in order to learn the things himſelf, ſo you are ſo far to take his Word whil you are Learning to know whether it be ſo or not. But not to reſt in it as certain, nor to take your belief of him and obedince to him, to be a believing and obeying God formally, though a Duty.

Queſt. 133. What are the Additions or Inventions of Men, which are not forbidden by the Word of God, (whether by Rulers or by private Men, invented)?

Anſw. THis is handled under the Directions for Worſhip: To which I refer the Reader, as alſo for part of the Anſwer to the former Caſes: Yet here I ſhall trouble you with ſo much Repetition as to ſay that,

1. Such inventions and additions are lawful as God hath commanded Men (Rulers, Paſtors, Parents, or private Perſons) to make under the Regulation of his General Laws.

2. All ſuch additions are Lawful as are meerly ſubordinate and ſubſervient to Gods Laws and Orders, and not forbidden by him, among the fore-mentioned prohibited Additions.

Inſtances are many. 1. All ſuch modes of a Duty as are neceſſary in genere, or one way or other to be determined of, but left to humane Prudence as to particulars. As 1. Whether I ſhall (this Week or Month) publiſh the Goſpel by Speaking, or by Writing, or by Printing. 2. Whether I ſhall uſe this method or that, or another method in this Sermon. 3. Whether I ſhall uſe theſe Phraſes and Words, or other words 4. Whether I ſhall uſe Notes for my Memory or not? And whether large ones or ſhort ones? 5. Whether I ſhall be an hour or two in Preaching? 6. Whether I ſhall preach with a loud voice or a low? 7. Whether I ſhall at this time more endeavour explication or application, comfort or terror, reprehenſion or direction, &c. All which are to be varied by Mans lawful Invention according to Gods general Rules.

2. It is alſo lawful and needful, that our own Invention or our Superiours, according to Gods general Laws, do determine of the particular Subjects of our Office; which Scripture doth not particularly determine of, viz. 1. Scripture telleth not Miniſters what Countrey, Pariſh or Church they ſhall beſtow their Labours in. 2. Nor to how many they ſhall be a Paſtor. 3. Nor what Text or Subject they ſhall Preach on. 4. Nor what ſingular Perſons they ſhall apply comfort, counſel or terror to, this or that. 5. Nor whom they ſhall admit to the Sacrament (but by the General Rule or Deſcription). 6. Nor whom they ſhall openly rebuke or excommunicate. 7. Nor whom they ſhall abſolve. It telleth them not who the Perſons be to whom the Scripture Character doth belong, in any of theſe Caſes. 8. Nor whether the witneſſes ſay truly or falſly who accuſe a Man. 9. Nor whether the accuſed be to be taken as guilty of Hereſie, Scandal or Schiſm, &c.

3. It is alſo a lawful Invention of Man, to find, chooſe and uſe, ſuch natural Helps, as are uſeful to further us in the Obedience of Gods Laws, and the Practice of his worſhip, and are not forbidden by him. (Yea in genere they are commanded, and yet never particularly determined of in the Scripture: As, 1. What will clear a Preachers voice, to ſpeak audibly. 2. The advantage of a Pulpit to be above the People. 3. The uſe of Spectacles to them that need them to read the Scripture. 4. The tranſlating the Scriptures in our native language. 5. Which tranſlation of many we ſhall uſe in the Churches. 6. The Printing of the Bible. 7. The dividing it into Chapters and Verſes. 8. The Printing of good Books, to expound and apply the Scripture: Commentaries, Sermons, &c. 9. The forms of School-exerciſes, Diſputations, &c. to prepare Students for the Miniſtry; and what Books of Divinity Tutors ſhall read to their Pupils, or every Student ſhall have in his Library? 10. The manner and tune of ſinging Pſalms in the Churches. 11. What verſion or metre to uſe, this or that? 12. What form of Catechiſm, (verbal, written or printed) to uſe among many, in the Church or Family. 13. Whether to pray in the ſame words often or in various. 14. Whether to uſe words of our own compoſing or invention primarily, or of other Mens? And that by direction, perſwaſion or command. 15. To uſe a written or printed form, or neither: To read it on the Book, or ſpeak it by memory? 16. To uſe Scripture forms only, of Prayer, Praiſe, Pſalms and Hymns, or thoſe that are of later compoſure alſo. 17. To print the Bible and uſe it with Marginal Notes, and Contents, or without. 18. To baptize in a River, Well, Pool or Font. 19. To have Sponſors or Witneſſes of the Parents truſtineſs, and the Child's Covenant, or not. 20. At how many days old, Children ſhall be baptized. 21. Whether they ſhall be Named in Baptiſm, or before, or after. 22. Whether one of the Miniſter's ſhall be a Tutor or Teacher to the reſt, that are younger. 23. How far the reſt ſhall ſubmit their judgments to one that is eldeſt and ableſt, and be ruled by him. 24. Whether there ſhall be any Deaconeſſes in the Church? 25. Whether a Church ſhall have one Miniſter, two or more? 26. Who ſhall be the Men? 27. What ſpace of ground ſhall be the Church bounds, for the cohabitation of the Members. 28. How many Neighbour Churches ſhall make a Synod; and which be they. 29. How many Members a Synod ſhall conſiſt of. 30. Who ſhall be preſident? Or whether any? And who ſhall gather the Votes. 31. Who ſhall record their Acts as Scribe? 32. What Meſſenger ſhall carry them to the Churches? 33. What Letters for Correſpondence and Communion ſhall be written to the Churches? 34. When Paſtors ſhall remove from one Church to another? And to which? 35. Who ſhall be ordained Miniſters to preach, baptize and gather Churches? 36. How many the Ordainers ſhall be? 37. Whether there ſhall be any Muſick by Inſtruments in the Church or Houſe, for the Praiſes of God? and what? 38. Who ſhall lead the Pſalm? 39. Who ſhall read? 40. What words the Churches Profeſſion of Faith ſhall be expreſſed by? 41. By what ſigns the Church ſhall ſignifie their conſent? Whether lifting up the hand, ſtanding up, bowing the head, or by voice, or by writing. 42. By what ſign or ceremony ſhall take an Oath? Whether lifting up the hand toward Heaven, or laying it on a Book, or kiſſing the Book, &c. 43. Whether the People at the Sacrament ſit near the Table, or keep farther off. 44. Whether it be put into each Perſons hand, or they take it themſelves. With many more ſuch like.

4. And it is a lawful invention to determine of meer meer Circumſtances of Time and Place which God hath not determined of in Scripture. As, 1. At how many times in the Year or Week, Baptiſm ſhall be adminiſtred? 2. At what age Perſons be admitted to the Lord's Supper. 3. On what days and hours of the Week there ſhall be Lectures, or Church-aſſemblies. 4. How oft and when Miniſters ſhall catechiſe and inſtruct the People privately. 5. On what hour the Church ſhall aſſemble on the Lord's Days, and receive the Sacrament. 6. How long Prayer, Reading and Sermon ſhall be? 7. At what hour to end the publick exerciſes? 8. At what hours to pray in Families or in ſecret? 9. How often Diſciplinary meetings ſhall be held, for the trying of accuſed Members? 10. How often Synods ſhall meet? and how long continue? Of Holy Days before.

5. The ſame it to be ſaid for the Places of Holy Exerciſes. 1. What Edifices the Churches ſhall have for ſuch uſes? 2. In what Places they ſhall be ſcituate? 3. Where the Pulpit ſhall ſtand? 4. And where the Font? 5. And where the Table? 6. Where each of the People ſhall ſit? 7. Where Synods ſhall meet? 8. How many Temples ſhall be in a City, &c.

6. The ſame is to be ſaid of all accidental ſubordinate Officers? As Lectors, Clerks, Door-keepers, Church-wardens and many before mentioned.

7. The ſame is to be ſaid of Church Utenſils. As Table, Cups, Linen, Pulpits, Fonts, Clock, Hourglaſs, Bells, Seats, decent habit of Cloaths, &c.

8. The ſame may be ſaid of Decent Geſtures, not particularly commanded: As what Geſture to preach in, ſtanding or ſitting? What Geſture to read in? What Geſture to hear in? What Geſture to ſing Pſalms in? Whether to be covered or bare-headed? In what Geſture to receive the Lord's Supper (in which Scripture no more regulateth us, than of the room, the hour of communicating, the number of Communicants, the place, in all which Chriſt's example was not a particular Law.)

9. The ſame may be ſaid of Order: 1. Whether the Paſtor ſhall begin with Prayer, reading or exhortation? 2. Whether the People ſhall begin with Prayer or Ejaculations privately. 3. Whether we ſhall make but one or two long continued Prayers, or many ſhort ones. 4. Whether we ſhall pray before Sermon immediately and after, in the Pulpit or in the Reading place? 5. When the Pſalms ſhall be ſaid or ſung, and how many? 6. How many Chapters ſhall be read? And which and in what order? 7. Whether Baptiſm ſhall be before or after or when? 8. When the Catechumens and Learners ſhall be diſmiſſed, and the proper Euchariſtical Church-Exerciſes begin. 9. When Collections made, &c.

But, O Lord, have compaſſion on thy ſcattered flock, who are afflicted and divided by the Imperiouſneſs of thoſe Paſtors, who think it not enough for the exerciſe of their Domination, to promote all thine own holy Laws and Doctrines, and to make their own Canons in all theſe caſes, or ſuch like; but they muſt needs make more work than all this cometh to, for themſelves and for the flocks, even unto thoſe diſtractions and diſſipations and fierce perſecutions and contentions, which many Hundred Years have exerciſed the Greek and Latin Churches, and many more throughout the World.

Queſt. 134. What are the miſchiefs of unlawful Additions in Religion?

Anſw. ALas; many and great. 1. They tend to dethrone Chriſt from his Soveraignty, and legiſlative Prerogative. 2. And to advance Man, blind and ſinful Man into his Place. 3. And thereby to debaſe Religion, making it but a humane or a mixed thing: (And it can be no more noble than its Author is.) 4. And thereby they debaſe alſo the Church of God, and the Government of it, while they make it to be but a humane Policy, and not Divine. 5. They tend to depoſe God from his Authority in Mens Conſciences, and to leave or join him there but with Man. 6. They tends to Mens doubtfulneſs and uncertainty of their Religion; ſeeing Man is fallible, and ſo may his conſtitutions be. 7. They tend to drive out all true Religion from the World, while Man that is ſo bad is the maker of it; and it may be ſuſpected to be bad, that is made by ſo bad an Author. 8. And it taketh off the fear of God, and his judgment: For it is Man that muſt be feared ſo far as Man is the maker of the Law. And it deſtroyeth the conſolation of believers which conſiſteth in the hopes of a reward from God: For he that ſerveth Man muſt be rewarded by Man: And though they do not exclude God, but join him with themſelves, yet this mixture debaſeth and deſtroyeth Religion, as the mixture of God and Mammon in Mens Love, and as mix'd and debaſed Metals do the Soveraigns Coin. 9. It hardneth Infidels and hindereth their Converſion: For they will reverence no more of our Religion than we can prove to be Divine: And when they find one part of it to be humane, they ſuſpect the reſt to be ſo too, and contemn it all, even as Proteſtants do Popery for the abundance of humane trinkets and toys with which we ſee them exerciſe, and delude their ſilly followers. 10. It is the great engine of dividing all the Churches, and breeding and feeding contentions in the Chriſtian World. 11. And becauſe Men that will command, will be obeyed, and they that are abſolutely ſubjected to God, will obey none againſt him, whatever it coſt them (as Dan. 3. and 6. Heb. 11. Luke 14. 26, 33. Matth. 5. 10, 11, 12.) therefore it hath proved the occaſion of bloody Perſecutions in the Churches, by which profeſſed Chriſtians draw the guilt of Chriſtian Blood upon themſelves. 12. And hereby it hath dolefully hindered the Goſpel, while the Perſecutors have ſilenced many worthy Conſcionable Preachers of it. 13. And by this it hath quenched Charity in the Hearts of both ſides, and taught the ſufferers and the afflicters to be equally bitter in cenſuring if not deteſting one another. Rom. 14. & 15. 14. And the Infidels ſeeing theſe diſſentions and bitter Paſſions among Chriſtians, deride and ſcorn and hate them all. 15. Yea, ſuch cauſes as theſe in the Latin and Greek Churches have engaged not only Emperors and Princes againſt their own Subjects, ſo that Chronicles and Books of Martyrs perpetuate their diſhonour, as Pilate's Name is in the Creed, but alſo have ſet them in bloody Wars among themſelves. Theſe have been the Fruits, and this is the tendency of uſurping Chriſt's Prerogative over his Religion, and Worſhip in his Church.

And the greatneſs of the Sin appeareth in theſe aggravations. 1. It is a mark of pitiful Ignorance and Pride when duſt ſhall thus (like Nebuchadnezzar) exalt it ſelf againſt God, to its certain infamy and abaſement.

2. It ſheweth that Men little know themſelves, that think themſelves fit to be the makers of a Religion for ſo many others: And that they have baſe thoughts of all other Men, while they think them unfit to worſhip God any other way, than that of their making; and think that they will all ſo far deny God as to take up a Religion that is made by Man.

3. It ſhews that they are much void of Love to others, that can thus uſe them on ſo ſmall occaſion.

4. And it ſheweth how little true ſenſe or reverence of Chriſtian Religion they have themſelves who can thus debaſe it, and equal their own inventions with it.

5. And it leaveth Men utterly unexcuſable, that will not take warning by ſo many Hundred Years experiences of moſt of the Churches through the World? Even when we ſee the yet continued diviſions, ſions of the Eaſtern and Weſtern Churches, and all about a humane Religion (in the parts moſt contended about:) When they read of the Rivers of Blood that have been ſhed in Piedmont, France, Germany, Belgia, Poland, Ireland, and the Flames in England, and many other Nations, and all for the humane parts of Mens Religion? He that will yet go on and take no warning, may go read the 18th and 19th of the Revelation, and ſee what Joy will be in Heaven and Earth, when God ſhall do Juſtice upon ſuch.

But remember that I ſpeak all this of no other, than thoſe expreſly here deſcribed.

Queſt. 135. What are the miſchiefs of Mens error on the other extream, who pretend that Scripture is a Rule where it is not, and deny the foreſaid lawful things, on pretence that Scripture is a perfect Rule (ſay ſome, for all things?)

Anſw. 1. THey fill their own minds with a multitude of cauſeleſs ſcruples, which on their Principles can never be reſolved, and ſo will give themſelves no reſt.

2. They make themſelves a Religion of their own, and Superſtition is their daily Devotion; which being erroneous, will not hang together, but is full of contradictions in it ſelf; and which being humane and bad, can never give true ſtability to the Soul.

3. Hereby they ſpend their days much in melancholy troubles, and unſetled diſtracting doubts and fears; inſtead of the Joys of ſolid Faith, and Hope, and Love..

4. And if they eſcape, this their Religion is contentious, wrangling, cenſorious and factious, and their zeal flyeth out againſt thoſe that differ from their peculiar Superſtitions and Conceits.

5. And hereupon they are uſually mutable and unſettled in their Religion: This Year for one, and the next for another; becauſe there is no Certainty in their own inventions and conceits.

6. And hereupon they ſtill fall into manifold Parties, becauſe each Man maketh a Religion to himſelf, by his miſ-interpretation of God's Word: So that there is no end of their Diviſions.

7. And they do a great deal of hurt in the Church, by putting the ſame diſtracting and dividing conceits into the heads of others. And young Chriſtians, and Women, and ignorant well-meaning People, that are not able to know who is in the right, do often turn to that Party which they think moſt ſtrict and godly, (though it be ſuch as our Quakers.) And the very good conceit of the People whom they take it from, doth ſettle ſo ſtrong a prejudice in their mind, as no argument or evidence ſcarcely can work out: And ſo Education, Converſe and humane Eſtimation, breedeth a ſucceſſion of dividers and troublers of the Churches.

8. They ſin againſt God by calling good evil, and light darkneſs, and honouring Superſtition, which is the work of Satan, with holy names. Iſa. 5. 20, 21.

9. They ſin by adding to the Word of God; while they ſay of abundance of lawful things, This is unlawful, and that is againſt the Word of God, and pretend that their touch not, taſte not, handle not, is in the Scriptures. For while they make it a Rule for every Circumſtance in particular, they muſt ſqueeze, and force, and wreſt it, to find out all thoſe Circumſtances in it which were never there, and ſo by falſe expoſitions make the Scriptures another thing. Col. 2. 22, 23.

10. And how great a Sin is it to father Satan's Works on God, and to ſay that all theſe and theſe things are forbidden or commanded in the Scripture, and ſo to belie the Lord and the Word of Truth.

11. It engageth all Subjects againſt their Rulers Laws and Government, and involveth them in the Sin of denying them juſt Obedience: While all the Statute Book muſt be found in the Scriptures, or elſe condemned as unlawful.

12. It maintaineth Diſobedience in Churches, and cauſeth Schiſms and Confuſions unavoidably: For they that will neither obey the Paſtors, nor join with the Churches, till they can ſhew Scriptures particularly for every Tranſlation, Method, Metre, Tune, and all that's done, muſt join with no Churches in the World.

13. It bringeth Rebellion and Confuſion into Families, while Children and Servants muſt learn no Catechiſm, hear no Miniſter, give no account, obſerve no hours of Prayer, nay, nor do no work, but what there is a particular Scripture for.

14. It ſets Men on Enthuſiaſtical expectations, and irrational ſcandalous worſhipping of God, while all Men muſt avoid all thoſe Methods, Phraſes, Books, Helps, which are not expreſly or particularly in Scripture, and Men muſt not uſe their own Inventions, or prudence in the right ordering of the works of Religion.

15. It deſtroyeth Chriſtian Love and Concord, while Men are taught to cenſure all others, that uſe any thing in God's Worſhip which is not particularly in Scripture, and ſo to cenſure all true Worſhippers in the World.

16. Yea, it will tempt Men at laſt to be weary of their own Religion, becauſe they will find it an unſatisfactory, uncomfortable, tireſome thing, to do their own ſuperſtitious work.

17. And they will tempt all that they draw into this opinion, to be weary of Religion alſo. And truly had not God's part, which is wiſe, and good, and pleaſant, prevailed againſt the hurtfulneſs of Mens Superſtition, which is fooliſh, bad and unpleaſant, Religion had e're this been caſt off as a weariſome diſtracting thing: Or which is as bad, been uſed but to delude Men.

18. Yea, it will tempt Men at laſt to Infidelity: For Satan will quickly teach them to argue, that if Scripture be a perfect particular Rule, for forty things that were never there, then it is defective, and is not of God, but an undertaking of that which is not performed, and therefore is but a deceit.

19. And the notoriouſneſs and ridiculouſneſs of this error, will tempt the prophane to make religious People a ſcorn.

20. Laſtly. And Rulers will be tempted in Church and State, to take ſuch Perſons for intolerable in all Societies, and ſuch whoſe Principles are inconſiſtent with Government. And no thanks to this opinion, if they be not tempted to diſlike the Scripture it ſelf, and inſtead of it to fly to the Papiſts Traditions, and the Churches Legiſlative Soveraignty or worſe.

But here alſo remember that I charge none with all this, but thoſe before deſcribed.

Queſt. 136. How ſhall we know what parts of Scripture Precept or Example, were intended for univerſal conſtant obligations, and what were but for the time and perſons that they were then directed to?

Anſw. IT is not to be denyed, but ſome things in Scripture, even in the New Teſtament, are not Laws, much leſs univerſal and perpetual. And the difference is to be found in the Scripture it ſelf.

1. All that is certainly of univerſal and perpetual obligation, which is but a Tranſcript of the Univerſal and perpetual Law of Nature.

2. And all that which hath the expreſs Characters of Univerſality and Perpetuity upon it: And ſuch are all the ſubſtantial parts of the Goſpel; As [Except ye Repent, ye ſhall all periſh, Luke 13. 3, 5. Except a

a Man be born again, he cannot enter into the Kingdom of Heaven, John 3. 3, 5. He that believeth in him, ſhall not periſh, but have everlaſting Life, John 3. 16. He that believeth and is baptized ſhall be ſaved, and he that believeth not, ſhall be damned, Mark 16. 16. Without Holineſs none ſhall ſee God, Heb. 12. 14. Go, preach the Goſpel to all Nations, baptizing them, &c. teaching them to obſerve all things that I have commanded you. Matth. 28. 19, 20.] Abundance ſuch Texts have the expreſs Characters of Univerſality and Perpetuity (which many call Morality.)

3. And with theſe we may number thoſe which were given to all the Churches, with commands to keep them, and propagate them to poſterity.

4. And thoſe that have a plain and neceſſary connexion to theſe before mentioned.

5. And thoſe which plainly have a full parity of reaſon with them: And where it is evident that the Command was given to thoſe particular times and Perſons, upon no reaſons proper to them alone, but ſuch as were common to all others. I deny not but (as Ameſius noteth after others) many ceremonial and temporary Laws, are urged (when they are made) with natural and perpetual motives: But the reaſons of making them were narrower, what ever the reaſons of obeying them may be.

On the other ſide, Narrow and temporary Precepts and Example, 1. Are void of all theſe foreſaid Characters. 2. They are about Materials of temporary uſe. 3. Or they are but the ordering of ſuch cuſtoms as were there before, and were proper to thoſe Countries. 4. And many ſpeeches are plainly appropriate to the Time and Perſons. 5. And many actions were manifeſtly occaſional, without any intimation of reaſon or purpoſe of obliging others to imitation.

For inſtance, 1. Chriſts preaching ſometimes on a Mountain, ſometimes in a Ship, ſometimes in a Houſe, and ſometimes in the Synagogues, doth ſhew that all theſe are lawful in ſeaſon on the like occaſion: But he purpoſed not to oblige Men to any one of them alone.

2. So Chriſts giving the Sacrament of his Body and Blood, in an upper room, in a private Houſe, after Supper, to none but Miniſters, and none but his Family, and but to Twelve, and on the fifth Day of the Week only, and in the geſture of a decumbent leaning ſitting; all theſe are plainly occaſional, and not intended as obliging to imitation: For that which he made a Law of, he ſeparated in his ſpeeches, and commanded them to do it in remembrance of him till his coming. And Paul expoundeth the diſtinction, 1 Cor. 11. in his practice.

So the promiſe of the Spirit of Revelation and Miracles is expounded by the event, as the ſeal of the Goſpel and Scripture, proper to thoſe times in the main.

So the primitive Chriſtians ſelling their eſtates, and diſtributing to the Poor, or laying it down at the Apoſtles feet, was plainly appropriated to that time, or the like occaſions, by the Reaſon of it; which was ſuddenly to ſhew the World what the belief of Heaven through the Promiſes of Chriſt, could make them all, and how much their Love was to Chriſt and one another, and how little to the World: And alſo by the ceſſation of it, when the Perſecutions abated, and the Churches came to any ſettlement; yea, and at firſt it was not a thing commanded to all, but only voluntarily done.

So the Womens Vail, and the cuſtom of kiſſing each other as a token of Love, and Mens not wearing long Hair, were the Cuſtoms of the Country there ordered and improved by the Apoſtles about ſacred things; but not introduced into other Countries that had no ſuch cuſtom.

So alſo Anointing was in thoſe Countries taken for ſalubrious, and refreſhing to the Body, and a ceremony of initiation into Places of great Honour; whereupon it was uſed about the Sick, and God's giving the gift of healing in thoſe times was frequently conjunct with this means. So that hence the anointing of the ſick came up; and the ancient Chriſtians turned it into an Initiating Ceremony, becauſe we are Kings and Prieſts to God. Now theſe occaſions extend not to thoſe Countries where Anointing neither was of ſuch uſe, or value, or ſignification.

So alſo Paul's becoming a Jew to the Jews, and being ſhaved, and purifying himſelf, and circumciſing Timothy, are evidently temporary complyances in a thing then lawful, for the avoiding of offence, and for the furtherance of the Goſpel; and no obligatory perpetual Laws to us. And ſo moſt Divines think the eating of things ſtrangled and Blood were forbidden for a time to them only that converſed with the Jews, Acts 15. Though Beckman have many Reaſons for the perpetuity, not contemptible.

So the Office of Deaconeſſes (and ſome think of Deacons) ſeemeth to be fitted to that time, and ſtate, and condition of Chriſtians. And where the Reaſons and Caſe is the ſame, the Obligations will be the ſame. In a word, the Text it ſelf will one way or other ſhew us, when a Command or Example is univerſally and durably obligatory, and when not.

Queſt. 137. How much of the Scripture is neceſſary to Salvation, to be believed, and underſtood?

Anſw. THis queſtion is the more worthy conſideration, that we may withal underſtand the uſe of Catechiſms, Confeſſions and Creeds (of which after,) and the great and tender Mercies of God to the weak, and may be able to anſwer the Cavils of the Papiſts againſt the Scriptures, as inſufficient to be the Rule of Faith and Life, becauſe much of it is hard to be underſtood.

1. He that believeth God to be true, and the Scripture to be his Word, muſt needs believe all to be true, which he believeth to be his Word.

2. All the Scripture is profitable to our knowledge, love and practice; and none of it to be neglected, but all to be loved, reverenced and ſtudied, in due time and order, by them that have time and capacity to do it.

3. All the Holy Scriptures, either as to matter or words, are not ſo neceſſary, as that no Man can be ſaved, who doth not either believe or underſtand them: But ſome parts of it are more neceſſary than others.

4. It is not of neceſſity to Salvation to believe every Book or Verſe in Scripture, to be Canonical, or written by the Spirit of God. For as the Papiſts Canon is larger than that which the Proteſtants own; ſo if our Canon ſhould prove defective of any one Book, it would not follow that we could not be ſaved for want of a ſufficient Faith. The Churches immediately after the Apoſtles time, had not each one all their writings, but they were brought together in time, and received by degrees, as they had proof of their being written by authorized inſpired Perſons. The ſecond of Peter, James, Jude, Hebrews and Revelations were received in many Churches ſince the reſt. And if ſome Book be loſt, (as Henoch's Prophecy, or Paul's Epiſtle to the Laodiceans, or any other of his Epiſtles not named in the reſt) or if any hereafter ſhould be loſt or doubted, as the Canticles, or the ſecond or third Epiſtle of John, the Epiſtle of Jude, &c. it would not follow, that all true Faith and Hope of Salvation were loſt with it.

It is a Controverſie whether 1 John 5. 7. and ſome other particular Verſes be Canonical or not, becauſe ſome Greek Copies have them, and ſome are without them: But whoever erreth in that only, may be saved.

5. There are many hundred or thousand Texts of Scripture, which a Man may possibly be ignorant of the meaning of, and yet have a saving Faith, and be in a state of Salvation. For no Man living understandeth it all.

Rom. 14. 17, 18. Rom. 13. 8, 9, 10. 1 Cor. 15. 2, 3, 4, 5, 6. Mar. 16. 16.

6. The holy Scripture is an entire comely Body, which containeth not only the essential parts of the true Religion, but also the Integral parts, and the ornaments and many accidents: Which must be distinguished, and not all taken to be equal.

7. So much as containeth the Essentials of true Religion, must be understood and believed of necessity to Salvation: And so much as containeth the Integrals of Religion doth greatly conduce to our Salvation, both that we may be the surer and the better Christians, as having greater helps to both.

8. The very adjuncts also have their use to make us the more adorned Christians, and to promote our knowledge of greater things.

Quest. 138. How may we know the Fundamentals, Essentials, or what parts are necessary to Salvation? And is the Papists way allowable that (some of them) deny that distinction, and make the difference to be only in the degrees of Mens opportunities of knowledge?

Answ. 1. THose Papists perverseness can mean no better than that Christianity it self is not necessary to Salvation, to those that have not opportunity to know it (As Johnsons Rejoynd. to me, and Sancta Clara and many others plainly intimate) And were that never so true and certain, it were nothing to the question between them and us, which is, What are the Essentials of Christianity? And what is necessary to salvation, where Christianity is necessary? or Where the Christian Religion is made known, and men may come to the knowledge of it, if they will do their best? This is the true state of our Controversie with them.—And whereas they would make all the parts of Christian faith and practice equally necessary where men have a capacity and ability to know, believe and practise them, It is a gross deceit, unworthy of men pretending to a mediocrity of knowledge in the nature of Religion: And thereby they make all sins and errors as equal as all duties and truths. Whereas 1. There is no man that hath not some error and some sin. 2. There is no man that doth all that ever he was able to do, to understand all the truth. 3. Therefore there is no man whose errors themselves are not (many of them at least) culpable or sinful. 4 And they that distinguish between Mortal and Venial sins, and yet will not distinguish between Mortal and Venial Errors, are either blind, or would keep others blind. As it is not so damning a sin for a man to think a Vain thought, or to speak a Vain word, as not to Love God, or Holiness, (no though he was more able to have forborn that idle word, than to have Loved God:) So it is not so mortal a sin, (that is, inconsistent with a justified state) to mistake in a small matter, (as who was the Father of Arphaxad, or what year the world was drowned in, &c.) as to blaspheme the Holy Ghost, or deny Jesus Christ to be the Saviour of the world, or to deny that there is a God, or everlasting life, or a difference between Good and Evil. All sins are not equal in magnitude or danger. Therefore all errors are not equal in magnitude, sinfulness or danger.

Jam. 3. 2. 1 John 1. ult.

2. And what Priest is able to know whom to take for a Christian and baptizable upon such terms as these? Who knoweth just what opportunities of knowledge other men have had? and what impediments? And will they in deed baptize a man that is a Heathen, because he had not opportunity to come to the knowledge of Christianity? I think they will not: Or will they deny Baptism to one that knoweth and believeth only all the Articles of the Creed, and the chief points of Religion, because he knoweth not as much more, as he had opportunity to know? I think not. Do not these men perceive how they condemn themselves? For do they not say themselves, that Baptism to the due receiver washeth away sin, and puts the person in a state of life? O when will God deliver his poor Church from factious deceivers?

3. Either Christianity is something, and discernable, or nothing, and undiscernable? If the later, then Christians are not to be distinguished from Heathens and Infidels. If the former, then Christianity hath its Constitutive parts, by which it is what it is. And then it hath essential parts distinguishable from the rest.

4. The word Fundamentals being but a Metaphor, hath given room to Deceivers and Contenders to make a Controversie, and raise a Dust about it. Therefore I purposely use the word [Essential] which is not so liable to Mens Cavils.

5. Those are the Essentials of Christianity, which are necessary to the Baptism of the Adult. Know but that, and you answer all the pratings of the Papists, that bawl out for a list of Fundamentals. And sure it is not this day unknown in the Christian World, either what a Christian is, or who is to be baptized: Do not the Priests know it, who baptize all that are Christened in the world? And why is Baptism called our Christening, if it make us not Christians? And why hath Christ promised, that He that believeth and is baptized, shall be saved, Mark. 16. 16. if that so much faith as is necessary to Baptism, will not also serve to a Mans state of Salvation?

6. The Baptismal Covenant of Grace therefore is the Essential part of the Gospel, and of the Christian Religion: And all the rest are the Integrals, and Accidents, or Adjuncts.

7. The Covenant containeth,

I. Objectively, 1. Things True as such, 2. Things Good as such, 3. Things Practicable or to be done, as such: The Credenda, Deligenda, (& Eligenda) & Agenda; as the Object of Mans Intellect, Will, and Practical Power.

The Credenda or things to be known and believed are, 1. God as God, and our God and Father 2. Christ as the Saviour and our Saviour, 3. The Holy Ghost as such, and as the Sanctifier and our Sanctifier (as to the offer of these Relations in the Covenant).

The Diligenda are the same three Persons in these three Relations as Good in themselves and unto us, which includeth the grand benefits of Reconciliation and Adoption, Justification, and Sanctification, and Salvation.

The Agenda in time of Baptism that make us Christians, are 1. The actual Dedition, resignation or dedication of our selves, to God the Father, Son and Holy Ghost in these Relations. 2. A Promise or Vow to endeavour faithfully to live according to our undertaken Relations (though not in perfection); that is, as Creatures to their Creator, and their Reconciled God and Father; as Christians to their Redeemer, their Teacher, their Ruler, and their Saviour; And as willing Receivers of the Sanctifying and Comforting Operations of the Holy Spirit.

II. The Objects tell you what the Acts must be on our part, 1. With the Understanding, to know and believe; 2. With the Will to love, chuse, desire and resolve; and 3. Practically to deliver up our selves for the present, and to promise for the time to come. These are the Essentials of the Christian Religion.

8. The Creed is a larger explication of the Credenda, and the Lords Prayer of the Diligenda, or things to be willed, desired and hoped for; and the Decalogue of the Natural part of the Agenda.

Deca-

9. Suffer not your own Ignorance, or the Papists Cheats to confound the Question, about Fundamentals, as to the Matter, and as to the expressing words. It is one thing to ask, What is the Matter Essential to Christianity? And another, What Words, Symbols or Sentences are Essential to it? To the first, I have now answered you. To the second I say, 1. Taking the Christian Religion as it is an Extrinsick Doctrine in signis, so the Essence of it is, Words and Signs expressive or significant of the material Essence. That they be such in specie, is all that is essential. And if they say, But which be those Words? I answer, 2. That no particular Words in the world are essential to the Christian Religion. For, 1. No one Language is essential to it. It is not necessary to salvation, that you be baptized, or learn the Creed or Scriptures, in Hebrew, or Greek, or Latin, or English, so you learn it in any Language understood. 2. It is not necessary to salvation, that you use the same words in the same Language, as long as it hath more words than one to express the same thing by. 3. It is not necessary to salvation, that we use the same, (or any one single) form, method or order of words, as they are in the Creeds without alteration. And therefore while the Ancients did tenaciously cleave to the same Symbol or Creed, yet they used various words to express it by. (As it may be seen in Irenæus, Tertullian, Origen and Ruffin, elsewhere cited by me; so that it's plain, that by the same Symbol, they meant the same Matter, (though express'd in some variety of words.) Though they avoided such variety as might introduce variety of sense and matter.

10. Words being needful, 1. To make a Learner understand, 2. To tell another what he understandeth, it followeth that the great variety of Mens Capacities maketh a great variation in the necessity of Words or Forms. An Englishman must have them in English, and a Frenchman in French. An understanding Man may receive all the Essentials in a few words: But an Ignorant Man must have many words to make him understand the matter. To him that Understandeth them, the words of the Baptismal Covenant express all the Essentials of Christianity: But to him that understands them not, the Creed is necessary for the explication: And to him that understandeth not that, a Catechism or larger Exposition is necessary. This is the plain explication of this question, which many Papists seem loth to understand.

Quest. 139. What is the Use and Authority of the Creed? And is it of the Apostles framing or not? And is it the Word of God, or not?

Answ. 1. THE Use of the Creed is, to be a plain explication of the Faith professed in the Baptismal Covenant: 1. For the fuller instruction of the duller sort, and those that had not preparatory knowledge, and could not sufficiently understand the meaning of the three Articles of the Covenant, what it is to believe in God the Father, Son and Holy Ghost without more words. 2. And for the satisfaction of the Church, that indeed Men understood what they did in baptism, and professed to believe.

2. The Creed is the Word of God, as to all the Doctrine or Matter of it, whatever it be as to the order and Composition of words.

3. That is oft by the Ancients called the Apostles, which containeth the matter delivered by the Apostles, though not in a form of words compiled by them.

Vid. Usher. & Vossium de Symbolis.

4. It is certain, that all the words now in our Creed, were not put in by the Apostles. 1. Because some of them were not in, till long after their days. 2. Because the ancient formulæ agree not in words among themselves.

5. It is not to be doubted of, but the Apostles did appoint and use a Creed commonly in their days. And that it is the same with that which is now called the Apostles and the Nicene in the main; but not just the same composure of Words, nor had they any such precise composure as can be proved: But this much is easily provable.

1. That Christ composed a Creed when he made his Covenant, and instituted Baptism, Mat. 28. 19.

2. That in the Jewish Church, where Men were educated in the knowledge of the Scriptures, and expectation of the Messiah, it was supposed that the People had so much preparatory knowledge, as made them the more capable of Baptism, as soon as they did but seriously profess to Believe, and Consent to the terms of the Covenant: and therefore they were presently baptized, Acts 2. 38, 39, 40.

3. That this could not be rationally supposed among the Gentiles, and common Ignorant People of the World. And Ignorantis non est Consensus. He doth not Covenant who understandeth not the Covenant, as to what is promised him, and what he promiseth.

4. That the Apostles baptized, and caused others to baptize many thousands, and settle many Churches, before any part of the New Testament was written, even many and many years.

5. That the Apostles did their work as well and better than any that succeeded them.

6. That their Successors in the Common Ministery, did as far as any Church History leadeth us up, Instruct and Catechise Men in the meaning of the Baptismal Covenant, (which is the Christian Faith,) before they baptized them: Yea, they kept them long in the state of Catechumens usually, before they would baptize them. And after baptized but twice a year, at Easter and Whitsuntide (as our Liturgy noteth.) And they received an account of their tolerable understanding of Religion, before they would receive them into the Church.

7. No doubt then, but the Apostles did cause the baptizable, to understand the three Articles of Christ's own Creed and Covenant, and to give some account of it before they baptized them, ordinarily among the Gentiles.

8. No doubt therefore but they used many more explicatory Words, to cause them to understand those few.

9. Their is neither proof nor probability, that they used a Composure of just the same words, and no more or less: Because they had to do with Persons of several Capacities, some knowing, who needed fewer words, and some ignorant and dull, who needed more: Nor is any such Composure come down to our hands. Heb. 5. 11, 12. & 6. 1, 2, 3.

10. But it is more than probable, that the Matter opened by them to all the Catechumens was still the same, when the words were not the same. For Gods Promises and Mans Conditions are still the same (where the Gospel cometh). Though since by the occasion of Heresies, some few material clauses are inserted. For all Christians had one Christianity, and must go one way to Heaven.

11. It is also more than probable, that they did not needlessly vary the words, lest it should teach Men to vary the matter: But that all Christians before baptism, did make the same profession of faith as to the sense, and very much the same as to the very words; using necessary caution, and yet avoiding unnecessary preciseness of formality: But so as to obviate damnable Heresies, that the Christian profession might attain its ends.

12. Lastly, no doubt but this practice of the Apostles was exemplary and imitated by the Churches, and that thus the Essentials of Religion were by the tradition of the Creed and Baptism delivered by themselves, as far as Christianity went, long before any Book of the New Testament was written: And every Christian was an Impress, or Transcript, or Specimen 2 Tim. 1. 13. 2 Cor. 3. 2, 3, 7.

Heb.5.12. & 10.25. Specimen of it. And that the following Churches using the same Creed, (wholly in Sense, and mostly in Words) might so far well call it the Apostles Creed: As they did both the Western and the Nicene.

Quest. 140. What is the use of Catechisms?

Answ. TO be a more familiar Explication of the Essentials of Christianity, and the Principal Integrals, in a larger manner than the Creed, Lords Prayer and Decalogue do; that the ignorant may the more easily understand it. Every Man cannot gather out of the Scripture the greatest Matters in the true Method, as distinct from all the rest: And therefore it is part of the work of the Churches Teachers, to do it to the hands and use of the ignorant.

Quest. 141. Could any of us have known by the Scriptures alone, the Essentials of Religion from the Rest, if Tradition had not given them to us in the Creed, as from Apostolical Collection?

Answ. YES: For the Scripture it self telleth us what is necessary to Salvation: It describeth to us the Covenant of Grace, both Promises and Conditions: And it were strange if so large a Volume, should not as plainly tell us what is necessary to Salvation, as fewer Words? The Scripture hath not Less than the Creed, but more.

Quest. 142. What is the best Method of a true Catechism or Sum of Theology?

Answ. GOD willing I shall tell the Church my Opinion of that at large in a peculiar Latin Treatise, called, Methodus Theologiæ, which here I cannot do. Only I shall say, that among all the great variety of Methods used in these Times, I think none cometh nearer the Order of the Matter (which is the true Commendation of a Method) than those which open Theology, 1. In the breviate of the Baptismal Covenant. 2. In the three explicatory Sums, the Creed, Lords Prayer, and Decalogue, with the added Gospel Precepts. 3. In the Largest form, which is the whole Scripture: And that our common English Catechism, and Paræus or Ursine, and many such who use that common easie Method, are more truly Methodical, than most that pretend to greater accurateness (Though I much commend the great industry of such as Dudley, Fenner, Gomarus, and especially George Sohnius.)

Quest. 143. What is the use of various Church Confessions or Articles of Faith?

Answ. I Will pass by the very ill use that is made of them in too many Countreys, where unnecessary Opinions, or uncertain are put in, and they that can get into favour with the Secular Power, take advantage under pretence of Orthodoxness and Uniformity, Truth and Peace, to set up their Opinions and Judgments to be the common Rule, for all to bow to, though wiser than themselves: And to silence all Ministers, and scatter and divide the flocks that will not say or swear as they do, that is, that they are wise Men, and are in the right.

The true and commendable use of various Church Professions, or Confessions of Faith is, 1. To be an Instruction to the more ignorant how to understand the Scriptures in most of the most weighty Points. 2. To be an Enumeration of those Doctrines, against which no Minister shall be allowed to Preach, and according to which he is to instruct the People. 3. To be a Testimony to all Neighbour or Foreign Churches in an heterodox, contentious and suspicious Age, how we understand the Scriptures, for the confuting of Scandals and unjust Suspicions, and the maintaining Communion in Faith and Charity, and Doctrine.

Quest. 144. May not the Subscribing of the whole Scriptures serve turn for all the foresaid ends, without Creeds, Catechisms, or Confessions.

Answ. BY Subscribing to the Scriptures you mean either, Generally and Implicitely that All in them is True and Good (though perhaps you know not what is in it:) Or else particularly and explicitely that every Point in it is by you both understood and believed to be true.

In the first Sense, it is not sufficient to Salvation: For this implicite Faith hath really no Act in it, but a belief that all that God saith is true: Which is only the formal object of Faith, and is no more than to believe that there is a God (for a Liar is not a God). And this he may do, who never believed in Christ, or a word of Scripture, as not taking it to be Gods Word; yea, that will not believe that God forbiddeth his beastly Life. Infidels ordinarily go thus far.

In the second Sense (of an explicite, or particular actual belief) the belief of the whole Scripture is enough indeed, and more than any Man living can attain to. No Man understandeth all the Scripture. Therefore that which no Man hath, is not to be exacted of all Men, or any Man in order to Ministration or Communion. While, 1. No Man can subscribe to any one Translation of the Bible, that it is not faulty, being the work of defectible Man: 2. And few have such acquaintance with the Hebrew, and Chaldee, and Greek, as to be able to say that they understand the Original Languages perfectly: 3. And no Man that understands the Words, doth perfectly understand the Matter. It followeth that no Man is to be forced or urged to subscribe to all things in the Scriptures, as particularly understood by him, with an Explicite Faith. And an Implicite is not half enough.

2. The true Mean therefore is the ancient way, 1. To select the Essentials for all Christians, to be believed particularly and explicitely. 2. To Collect certain of the most needful Integrals, which Teachers shall not Preach against. 3. And for all Men moreover to profess in General that they implicitely believe all which they can discern to be the holy Canonical Scripture, and that all is true, which is the Word of God: Forbearing each other even about the number of Canonical Books and Texts.

And it is the great Wisdom and Mercy of God, which hath so ordered it, that the Scripture shall have enough to exercise the strongest, and yet that the weakest may be ignorant of the meaning of a thousand Sentences, without danger of Damnation, so they do but understand the Marrow or Essentials, and labour faithfully to increase in the Knowledge of the rest. 1Cor.8.1, 2.& 13.1, 2, 3, 4. 1Cor.8.3. Rom.8.28

Quest. 145. May not a Man be saved that believeth all the Essentials of Religion, as coming to him by Verbal Tradition, and not as contained in the Holy Scriptures, which perhaps he never knew?

Answ. 1. HE that believeth shall be saved, which way ever he cometh by his belief: So be it it be found as to the Object and Act; that is, if it contain all the Essentials, and they be predominantly Believed, Loved and Practised.

2. The Scriptures being the Records of Christs Doctrine delivered by Himself, his Spirit and his Apostles, it is the Office of Ministers, and the Duty of all Instructors to open these Scriptures to those they teach, and to deliver particulars upon the authority of these inspired sealed Records which contain them.

3. They

3. They that thus receive particular Truths, from a Teacher explaining the Scripture to them, do receive them in a Subordination to the Scripture Materially, and as to the Teachers part; though not formally and as to their own Part: And though the Scripture authority being not understood by them, be not the formal Object of their Faith, but only Gods Authority in general.

4. They that are ignorant of the being of the Scripture, have a great disadvantage to their Faith.

5. Yet we cannot say, but it may be the Case of thousands to be saved by the Gospel delivered by Tradition, without resolving their Faith into the authority of the Scriptures. For,

1. This was the Case of all the Christians (as to the New Testament) who lived before it was written: And there are several Articles of the Creed now necessary, which the Old Testament doth not reveal. Mat. 16. 16. Rom. 10. 9, 10, 13, 14, 15.

2. This may be the Case of thousands in ignorant Countreys where the Bible being rare, is to most unknown.

3. This may be the Case of thousands of Children who are taught their Creed and Catechism, before they understand what the Bible is.

4. This may be the Case of thousands among the Papists, where some perverse Priests do keep not only the Reading, but the Knowledge of the Scriptures from the People, for fear lest they should be taught to resolve their Faith into it; and do teach them only the Articles of Faith and Catechism, as known by the Churches Tradition alone.

Quest. 146. Is the Scripture fit for all Christians to read, being so obscure?

Answ. 1. THE Essentials and Points necessary to Salvation are plain. John 5.39. Psal. 1. 2.

2. We are frequently and vehemently commanded to delight in it, and meditate in it Day and Night; to search it; to teach it our very Children, speaking of it at home and abroad, lying down and rising up, and to write it on the Posts of our Houses, and on our Doors, &c. Deut. 6. & 11. Psal. 19. 7, 8, 9, 10, 11. 2 Tim. 3. 15. Psal. 119. 98, 105, 133, 148.

3. It is suited to the necessity and understanding of the meanest, to give light to the simple, and to make the very foolish wise. Act. 17. 11 Acts 8.

4. The ancient Fathers and Christians were all of this Mind.

5. All the Christian Churches of the World, have been used to read it openly to all, even to the simplest: And if they may Hear it, they may Read the same Words which they hear.

6. God blessed the ignorant Ethiopian Eunuch when he found him reading the Scriptures, though he knew not the Sense of what he read, and sent him Philip to instruct him and convert him.

7. Timothy was educated in the Knowledge of the Scriptures in his Childhood.

8. That which is written to and for all Men, may be read by all that can: But the Scripture was written to and for all, —— &c. 2 Tim. 3. 15. Rom. 15. 4 Matth. 12. 24.

Object. But there are many things in it hard to be understood?

Answ. 1. And there are many things easie to be understood. 2. We never said that Men should not use the help of their Teachers, and all that they can to understand it. 3. Were not those Teachers once ignorant? And yet they did read it by the help of Teachers: And so may others. 4. As the King for Concord commandeth all the Schoolmasters to teach one Grammer: So God maketh it the Ministers Office to instruct People in the Scriptures. And were it not a question unworthy of a Schoolmaster, to dispute, Whether the Scholars must learn by their Book, or by their Master? Yea, to conclude that it must be by their Master, and not by their Book? Or that they must never open their Book, but when their Master is just at hand to teach them? The Doctrine of the Papists who tell us that the Scriptures should not be read by the Vulgar, it being the rise of all Heresies, is so inhumane and impious, as savouring of gross enmity to Scriptures, and to Knowledge, that were there no other, it would make the Lovers of Religion and Mens Souls, to pray earnestly to Christ to save his flocks from such Seducers, who so Jewishly use the Key of Knowledge.

Object. But many wrest the Scriptures to their own Destruction, and what Hrresie is not defended as by their Authority? 2 Pet. 3. 16.

Answ. 1. And many thousands receive saving Knowledge and Grace by them. The Law of the Lord is perfect, converting the Soul. All Scripture is profitable to Instruction, &c. to make the Man of God perfect. It is the incorruptible Seed by which we are born again, and the sincere Milk, by which we are nourished. Psal. 19. 3, 8, 9, 10. 2 Tim. 3. 16. 1 Pet. 1. 23

2. And is it not as true, 1. That the Law of the Land is abused by every false Pretender, Lawyer and Corrupt Judge? What Title so bad, that is not defended in Westminster Hall sometimes under pretence of Law? And what Action so bad, that some pretend not Law for? What then? Must the Law be forbidden the common People for this?

2. Nay, what is so much abused to unrighteousness and sin as Reason it self? What Heresie or Crime do not Men plead Reason for? Must Reason therefore be forbidden the Vulgar?

3. Yea, contrarily, this signifieth that Law and Reason are so far from being things to be forbidden Men, that they are indeed those things by which Nature and Necessity have taught all the World to try and discern right from wrong, good from bad: Otherwise good and bad Men would not all thus agree in pretending to them, and appealing to their Decisions.

4. If many Men are poysoned or killed in eating or drinking, if many Mens eye-sight is abused to mislead them unto Sin, &c. the way is not, to eat nothing but what is put into our Mouths; nor to put out our Eyes, or wink, and be led only by a Priest, but to use both the more cautiously, with the best advice and help that we can get.

5. And do not these Deceivers see, that their Reason pleadeth as strongly that Priests and Prelates themselves should never read the Scripture, (and consequently that it should be banished out of the World?) For who that is awake in the World can be ignorant, that it is Priests and Prelates, who have been the Leaders of almost all Heresies and Sects: Who differ in their Expositions and Opinions? And lead the Vulgar into all the Heresies which they fall into? Who then should be forbidden to read the Scripture, but Priests and Prelates, who wrest them to their own and other Mens Destruction?

Quest. 147. How far is Tradition and Mens Words and Ministry to be used or trusted in, in the exercise of Faith?

Answ. 1. THE Churches and Ministers received the Gospel in Scripture from the Apostles, and the Creed as the summary of Faith: And they delivered it down to others, and they to us: Heb. 2. 3, 4 2 Pet. 1. 17 18, 19, 20, 21. 2 Joh. 1. 1,

2. The Ministers by Office are the Instructors of the People in the meaning of it. And the keepers of the Scriptures, as Lawyers are of the Laws of the Land. 2, 3, 4, 5. & 4. 6. 2 Tim. 2. 2 Titus 1. 5.

Quest. 148. How know we the true Canon of Scripture from Apocrypha?

Answ. BY these means set together: 1. There is for the most part, a special venerable excellency in the Books themselves, which helpeth us in the distinct Reception of them.

2. The

2. The Tradition of infallible Church Hiſtory telleth us, which Books they are which are written by Men inſpired by the Holy Ghoſt, and who ſealed their Doctrine with Miracles in thoſe Times: It being but matter of Fact (which Books ſuch Men wrote whom God bare witneſs to) infallible Church Hiſtory (ſuch as we have to know which are the Statutes of the Land, and which are counterfeit) is a ſufficient Notification and Proof.

3. The ſanctifying Spirit ſtill in all Ages and Chriſtians atteſteth the Divinity and Truth of the Doctrine of the main Body of the Bible; eſpecially the Goſpel: And then if we ſhould err about the Authority of a particular Book, it would not overthrow our Faith. It is not neceſſary to Salvation, to believe this particular Text to be Divine. But it is ſin and folly to doubt cauſeleſly of the Parts, when the Spirit atteſteth the Doctrine and the Body of the Book. I paſs theſe things briefly, becauſe I have largelier handled them elſewhere.

Queſt. 149. Is the publick Reading of the Scripture the proper Work of a Miniſter? Or may a Lay-man ordinarily do it? Or another Officer?

Anſw. IN ſuch Caſes as I before ſhewed that a Layman may Preach, he may alſo Read the Scriptures. Of which look back.

2. No doubt but it is a Work well beſeeming the ordained Miniſters or Paſtors, and an integral Part of their Office; and ſhould not be put off by them when they can do it.

3. When they need help the Deacons are ordained Miniſters authorized to help them in ſuch Work, and fitteſt to do it.

4. Whether in a Caſe of neceſſity a Lay-man may not ordinarily read the Scripture to the Congregation, is a Caſe that I am loth to determine, being loth to ſuppoſe ſuch a neceſſity. But if the Miniſter cannot, and there be no Deacon, I cannot prove it unlawful for a Lay-man to do it under the Direction of the Paſtor. I lived ſometime under an old Miniſter of about eighty Years of Age (who never preached himſelf), whoſe Eye-ſight failing him, and having not maintenance to keep an aſſiſtant, he did by Memory ſay the Common-prayer himſelf, and got a Taylor one Year, and a Threſher or poor day-labourer another Year to read all the Scriptures. Whether that were not better than nothing, I leave to Conſideration.

And I think it is commonly agreed on, that where there is no Miniſter, it is better for the People to meet and hear a Lay-man read the Scriptures and ſome good Books, than to have no publick Helps and Worſhip.

Queſt. 150. Is it lawful to read the Apocrypha, or any good Books beſides the Scriptures to the Church? As Homilies, &c.

Anſw. 1. IT is not lawful to read them as Gods Word, or to pretend them to be the Holy Scriptures, for that is a falſhood, and an addition to Gods Word.

2. It is not lawful to read them ſcandalouſly, in a title and manner tending to draw the People to believe that they are Gods Word, or without a ſufficient diſtinguiſhing of them from the Holy Scripturs.

3. If any one of the Apocryphal Books, (as Judith, Tobit, Bell and the Dragon, &c.) be as fabulous, falſe and bad as our Proteſtant Writers (Reignoldus, Ameſius, Whitakers, Chamier, and abundance more) affirm them to be, it is not lawful ordinarily to read them, in that honourable way as Chapters called Leſſons are uſually read in the Aſſemblies. Nor is it lawful ſo to read heretical, fabulous, or erroneous Books.

But it is lawful to read publickly Apocryphal and humane Writings, Homilies, or edifying Sermons on theſe Conditions following.

1. So be it they be indeed ſound Doctrine, Holy, and fitted to the Peoples Edification.

2. So be it they be not read ſcandalouſly without ſufficient differencing them from Gods Book.

3. So they be not read to exclude or hinder the reading of the Scriptures, or any other neceſſary Church-duty.

4. So they be not read to keep up an ignorant lazy Miniſtry that can or will do no better; nor to exerciſe the Miniſters ſloth, and hinder him from Preaching.

5. And ſpecially if Authority command it, and the Churches Agreement require it, as a Signification what Doctrine it is which they profeſs.

6. Or if the Churches Neceſſities require it; as if they have no Miniſter, or no one that can do ſo much to their Edification any other way.

7. Therefore the uſe of Catechiſms is confeſſed lawful in the Church, by almoſt all.

Queſt. 151. May Church Aſſemblies be held where there is no Miniſter? Or what publick Worſhip may be ſo performed by Lay-men? (As among Infidels, or Papiſts, where Perſecution hath killed, impriſoned, or expelled the Miniſters.)

Anſw. 1. SUch an Aſſembly as hath no Paſtor, or Miniſter of Chriſt, is not a Church, in a political Senſe as the word ſignifieth a Society conſiſting of Paſtor and Flock: But it may be a Church in a larger Senſe, as the word ſignifieth only a Community or Aſſociation of private Chriſtians for mutual help in holy Things.

2. Such an Aſſembly ought on the Lords Days, and at other fit Times to meet together for mutual help, and the publick worſhipping of God, as they may, rather than not to meet at all.

3. In thoſe Meetings they may do all that followeth. 1. They may pray together; a Lay-man being the Speaker. 2. They may ſing Pſalms. 3. They may read the Scriptures. 4. They may read ſome holy edifying Writings of Divines, or repeat ſome Miniſters Sermons. 5. Some that are ableſt may ſpeak to the Inſtruction and Exhortation of the reſt, as a Maſter may do in his Family, or Neighbours to ſtir up Gods Graces in each other, as was opened before. 6. And ſome ſuch may Catechize the younger and more ignorant. 7. They may by mutual Conference open their Caſes to each other, and communicate what Knowledge or Experience they have, to the Praiſe of God and each others Edification. 8. They may make a ſolemn Profeſſion of their Faith, Covenant, and Subjection to God the Father, Son and Holy Ghoſt: And all this is better than nothing at all.

But 1. None of them may do any of this as a Paſtor, Ruler, Prieſt, or Office-Teacher of the Church: 2. Nor may they Baptize: 3. Nor adminiſter the Lords Supper; 4. Nor excommunicate by Sentence (but only executively agree to avoid the notoriouſly impenitent). 5. Nor abſolve miniſterially, or as by Authority: Nor exerciſe any of the Power of the Keys, that is, of Government. 6. And they muſt do their beſt to get a Paſtor as ſoon as they are able.

Queſt. 152. Is it lawful to ſubſcribe or profeſs full Aſſent and Conſent to any Religious Books beſides the Scripture, ſeeing all are fallible?

Anſw. 1. IT is not lawful to profeſs or ſubſcribe that any Book is truer or better than it is: Or that there is no fault in any that is faulty; or to profeſs that we believe any mortal Man to be totally Infallible in all that he ſhall write or ſay, or impeccable in all that he ſhall do.

2. Becauſe all Men are fallible, and ſo are we in judging, judging, it is not lawful to say of any large and dubious Books, in which we know no fault, that there is no fault or error in them: we being uncertain, and it being usual for the best Men even in their best writings, Prayers or works to be faulty, as the consequent or effect of our common culpable imperfection. But we may say. That we know no fault or error in it, if indeed we do not know of any.

3. It is lawful to profess or subscribe our Assent and Consent to any humane Writing which we judge to be true and good, according to the measure of its Truth and Goodness: As if Church-Confessions that are found be offered us for our Consent, we may say or subscribe, I hold all the Doctrine in this Book to be true and good. And by so doing I do not assert the Infallibility of the Authors, but only the Verity of the Writing. I do not say that He cannot err, or that he never erreth; but that he erreth not in this, as far as I am able to discern.

Quest. 153. May we lawfully swear Obedience in all things lawful and honest, either to Usurpers, or to our lawful Pastors?

Answ. 1. IF the question were of Imposing such Oaths, I would say, that it was many a Hundred Years before the Churches of Christ (either under Persecution, or in their Prosperity and Glory) did ever know of any such practice, as the People or the Presbyters swearing Obedience to the Bishops. And when it came up, the Magistracy, Princes and Emperors fell under the Feet of the Pope; and the Clergy grew to what we see it in the Roman Kingdom, called a Church. And far should I be from desiring such Oaths to be imposed.

2. But the question being only of the taking such Oaths, and not the Imposing of them, I say that 1. It is not lawful to swear Obedience to an Usurper Civil or Ecclesiastical, in licitis & honestis; because it is a subjecting our selves to him, and an acknowledging that authority which he hath not; for we can swear no further to obey the King himself but in things lawful and honest: And to do so by an Usurper is an injury to the King, and unto Christ.

2. But if the King himself shall command us to swear Obedience to a subordinate Civil Usurper, he thereby ceaseth to be an Usurper, and receiveth authority, and it becometh our duty. And if he that was an Ecclesiastical Usurper, quod personam, that had no true Call to a Lawful Office, shall after have a Call, or if any thing fall out, which shall make it our duty to consent and call him, then the impediment from his Usurpation is removed.

3. It is not lawful, though the Civil Magistrate command us to swear obedience even in licitis & honestis, to such an Usurper, whose Office it self is unlawful, or forbidden by Christ, as he is such an Officer. No Protestant thinketh it lawful to swear obedience to the Pope as Pope: Nor do any that take Lay-Elders to be an unlawful Office, think it lawful to swear obedience to them as such.

4. If one that is in an unlawful Ecclesiastical Office, be also at once in another that is lawful, we may swear obedience to him in respect of the lawful Office. So it is lawful to swear obedience to the Pope in Italy, as a Temporal Prince in his own Dominions: And to a Cardinal, (as Richelieu, Mazarine, Ximenes, &c.) as the Kings Ministers, exercising a power derived from him: So it is lawful for a Tenant, where Law and Custom requireth it, to swear fidelity to a Lay-Elder, as his Land-lord or Temporal Lord and Master. And so the old Non-conformists, who thought the English Prelacy an unlawful Office, yet maintained that it is lawful to take the Oath of Canonical Obedience, because they thought it was imposed by the King and Laws, and that we swear to them not as Officers claiming a Divine Right in the Spiritual Government, but as Ordinaries, or Officers made by the King to exercise so much of Ecclesiastical Jurisdiction under him, as he can delegate; according to the Oath of Supremacy, in which we all acknowledge the King to be Supream in all Ecclesiastical Causes, that is, not the Supream Pastor, Bishop or Spiritual Key-bearer or Ruler, but the Supream Civil Ruler of the Church, who hath the power of the Sword, and of determining all things extrinsick to the Pastoral Office; and so of the Coercive Government of all Pastors and Churches, as well as of other Subjects. And if Prelacy were proved never so unlawful, no doubt but by the King's Command we may swear or perform formal Obedience to a Prelate as he is the Kings Officer. Of the Non-conformists judgment in this, read Bradshaw against Canne, &c.

5. But in such a case no Oath to Inferiors is lawful without the consent of the Soveraign Power, or at least against his will.

6. Though it be a duty for the flock to obey every Presbyter, yet if they would make all the People swear obedience to them, all wise and conscionable Christians should dissent from the introduction of such a custom, and deny such Oaths as far as lawfully they may: That is,

1. If the King be against it, we must refuse it.

2. If he be neutral or meerly passive in it, we must refuse, unless some apparent necessity for the Churches good require it.

1. Because it savoureth of Pride in such Presbyters.

2. Because it is a new Custom in the Church, and contrary to the antient practice.

3. It is not only without any authority given them by Christ, that they exact such Oaths, but also contrary to the great humility, lowliness and condescension, in which he describeth his Ministers, who must be great, by being the Servants of all. Mat.22.4, 10. Luke 22. 27, &c. Mark 9. 35. 1 Pet.5.2, 3.

4. And it tendeth to corrupt the Clergy for the future.

5. And such new impositions give just reason to Princes and to the People to suspect, that the Presbyters are aspiring after some inordinate exaltation, or have some ill project for the advancement of themselves. 1 Cor. 9. 19, 1Cor.4.1 2Cor.4.5

7. But yet if it be not only their own ambition which imposeth it, but either the King and Laws command it, or necessity require it for the avoidance of a greater evil, it may be lawful and a Duty to take an Oath of Obedience to a lawful Presbyter or Bishop. Because 1. It is a Duty to obey them: 2. And it is not forbidden us by Christ to promise or swear to do our Duty, (even when they may sin in demanding such an Oath.

8. If an Office be lawful in the essential parts, and yet have unlawful integrals, or adjuncts, or be abused in exercise, it will not by such additions or abuses be made unlawful to swear Obedience to the Officer as such.

9. If one Presbyter or Bishop would make another Presbyter or Bishop to swear Obedience to him without authority, the Case is the same as of the Usurpers before mentioned.

Quest. 154. Must all our preaching be upon a Text of Scripture?

Answ. 1. IN many Cases it may be lawful to preach without a Text; to make sacred Orations like Greg. Nazianzenes, and Homilies like Macarius's, Ephrem Syrus's and many other ancients, and like our own Church-Homilies. Acts2.&9. Luke4.18

2. But ordinarily it is the fittest way to preach upon a Text of Scripture. 1. Because it is our very Office to teach the People the Scripture: The Prophets brought a new word or message from God; but the Priests did but keep, interpret, and preach the Law already received: And we are not Successors of the inspired Prophets, but as the Priests were, Teachers Mal. 2. 7.

chers of Gods received Word. And this practice will help the People to understand our Office. 2. And it will preserve the due esteem and reverence of the Holy Scriptures, which the contrary practice may diminish.

Quest. 155. Is not the Law of Moses abrogated, and the whole Old Testament out of date, and therefore not to be read publickly and preached on?

Answ. 1. THE Covenant of Innocency is ceased cessante subditorum capacitate, as a Covenant or Promise. And so are the Positive Laws proper to Adam, in that state, and to many particular Persons since.

2. The Covenant mixt of Grace and Works proper to the Jews, with all the Jewish Law as such, was never made to us or to the rest of the World; and to the Jews it is ceased by the coming and perfecter Laws and Covenant of Christ.

3. The Prophecies and Types of Christ, and the Promises made to Adam, Abraham and others of his coming in the flesh, are all fulfilled, and therefore not useful to all the ends of their first making: And the many Prophecies of particular Things and Persons past and gone are accomplished.

4. But the Law of Nature is still Christ's Law: And that Law is much expounded to us in the Old Testament: And if God once, for another use, did say, This is the Law of Nature, the truth of these words as a Divine Doctrine and Exposition of the Law of Nature is still the same.

5. The Covenant of Grace made with Adam and Noah for all Mankind, is still in force as to the great benefits and main condition, that is, as to pardon given by it to true penitent believers, with a right to everlasting Life, and as to the obligation to sincere Obedience for Salvation: Though not as to the yet future coming of Christ in the flesh. And this Law of Grace was never yet repealed any further than Christs coming did fulfil it and perfect it: Therefore to the rest of the World who never can have the Gospel or perfecter Testament as Christians have, the former Law of Grace is yet in force: And that is the Law, conjoined with the Law of Nature, which now the World without the Church is under: Under I say, as to the force of the Law, and a former promulgation made to Adam and Noah, and some common intimations of it in merciful forbearances, pardons and benefits; though how many are under it as to the knowledge, reception, belief and obedience of it, and consequently are saved by it, is more than I or any Man knoweth.

2 Tim. 3. 15. Rom. 15. 4. & 16. 26. ☞ Matth. 22. 29. Luke 24. 27, 32, 45. John 5. 39. Acts 17. 2. 11. & 18. 24, 25. Joh. 20. 9. Joh. 7. 38, 42. & 10. 35. & 13. 18. & 19. 24, 28. Luk. 4. 18, 21.

6. There are many Prophecies of Christ and the Christian Church in the Old Testament yet to be fulfilled; and therefore are still God's Word for us.

2 Tim. 3. 16. 2 Pet. 1. 19, 20. Acts 8. 32, 33, 35. Rom. 1. 2.

7. There are many Precepts of God to the Jews and to particular Persons, given them on Reasons common to them with us; where parity of Reason will help thence to gather our own duty now.

8. There are many holy expressions (as in the Psalms) which are fitted to Persons in our condition, and came from the Spirit of God; and therefore as such are fit for us now.

9. Even the fulfilled Promises, Types and Prophecies, are still Gods Words, that is, his Word given to their several proper uses: And though much of their Use be changed or ceased, so is not all: They are yet useful to us, to confirm our Faith, while we see their accomplishment, and see how much God still led his Church to Happiness in one and the same way.

10. On all these accounts therefore we may still read the Old Testament, and preach upon it in the publick Churches.

Quest. 126. Must we believe that Moses Law did ever bind other Nations; or that any other parts of the Scripture bound them, or belong to them? Or that the Jews were all God's Visible Church on Earth?

Answ. I Conjoin these three questions for dispatch. Rom. 2. 1. 1. Some of the Matter of Moses Law did bind all Nations, that is, The Law of Nature as such. 2. Those that had the knowledge of the Jewish Law, were bound collaterally to believe and obey all the expositions of the Law of Nature in it, and all the Laws, which were given upon Reasons common to all the World (as about degrees of Marriage, particular Rules of Justice, &c.) As if I heard God from Heaven tell another that standeth by me, [Thou shalt not marry thy Fathers Widow, for it is abominable.] I ought to apply that to me, being his subject which is spoken to another on a common reason.

Rom. 1. 20, 21. Exod. 12. 19, 43, 48, 49. & 20. 10. Lev. 17. 12, 15. & 18. 26. & 24. 16, 22. Numb. 9. 14. & 15. 14, 15, 16, 29, 30. & 19. 10.

3. All those Gentiles that would be Proselytes, and join with the Jews in their policy, and dwelt among them, were bound to be observers of their Laws. But 1. The Law of Nature as Mosaical did not formally and directly bind other Nations. 2. Nor were they bound to the Laws of their peculiar policy, Civil or Ecclesiastical, which were positives. The reason is, 1. Because they were all one body of political Laws, given peculiarly to one political Body. Even the Decalogue it self was to them a political Law. 2. Because Moses was not authorized or sent to be the Mediator or Deliverer of that Law to any Nation but the Jews. And being never in the enacting or Promulgation sent or directed to the rest of the World, it could not bind them.

Deut. 1. 16

II. As to the second Question, though the Scripture as a writing bound not all the World, yet, 1. The Law of Nature as such which is recorded in Scripture did bind all. 2. The Covenant of Grace was made with all Mankind in Adam and Noah: And they were bound to promulgate it by Tradition to all their Offspring: And no doubt so they did; whether by word (as all did) or by writing also (as it's like some did, as Henochs Prophecies were it's like delivered, or else they had not in termes been preserved till Judes time.) 3. And God himself as aforesaid by actual Providences, pardoning, and benefits given to them that deserved Hell, did in part promulgate it himself. 4. The Neighbour Nations might learn much by God's Doctrine and dealing with the Jews.

Psal. 145. 9. & 103. 19. Ps. 100. 1. Rom. 14. 11. Act. 34. 35. Judg. 14. 15.

III. To the third Question, I answer, 1. The Jews were a People chosen by God out of all the Nations of the Earth, to be a holy Nation, and his peculiar Treasure, having a peculiar Divine Law and Covenant, and many great Priviledges, to which the rest of the World were strangers; so that they were advanced above all other Kingdoms of the World though not in Wealth nor wordly Power nor largeness of Dominion, yet in a special dearness unto God.

Deut. 14. 2, 3. & 7. 2, 6, 7. Exod. 19. 5. & 6. 7, 8. Lev. 20. 24, 26. Deut. 4. 20, 33. & 29. 13. & 33. 29. Rom. 3. 1, 2, 3.

2. But they were not the only People to whom God made a Covenant of Grace in Adam and Noah, as distinct from the Law or Covenant of Innocency.

3. Nor were they the only People that professed to worship the true God; neither was Holiness and Salvation confined to them; bnt were found in other Nations. Therefore though we have but little notice of the state of other Kingdoms in their times, and scarcely know what National Churches, that is, whole Nations professing saving Faith, there were, yet we may conclude that there were other visible Churches besides the Jews. For, 1. No Scripture denieth it; and Charity then must hope the best. 2. The Scriptures of the Old Testament give us small account of other Countries, but of the Jews alone, with some of their Neighbours. 3. Shem was alive in Abrahams days (yea about thirty four years after Abrahams death and within twelve years of Ishmaels Ishmaels death, viz. till about An. Mundi 2158.). And so great and blessed a Man as Sem, cannot be thought to be less than a King and to have a Kingdom governed according to his holiness; and so that there was with him not only a Church, but a National Church, or holy Kingdom. 4. And Melchizedeck was a holy King and Priest; and therefore had a Kingdom holily governed; and therefore not only a visible, but also a National Church (supposing that he was not Shem, as the Jews and broughton, &c. think; for the scituation of his Country doth make many desert that opinion.) 5. And Job and his Friends shew that there were Churches then besides the Jews. 6. And it is not to be thought that all Ishmaels Posterity suddenly apostatized. 7. Nor that Esaus Posterity had no Church state; (for both retained Circumcision.) 8. Nor is it like that Abrahams Off-spring by Keturah were all Apostates, being once inchurched. For though the special promise was made to Isaac's Seed, as the peculiar holy Nation, &c. yet not as the only Children of God, or Persons in a state of Salvation. 9. And the passages in Jonah about Nineveh give us some such intimations also. 10. And Japhet and his Seed being under a special Blessing, it is not like that they all proved Apostates. And what was in all other Kingdoms of the World is little known to us.

It is this Jewish pride of their own prerogatives which Paul so much laboureth in all his Epistles to pull down

We must therefore take heed of concluding (as the proud Jews were at last apt to do of themselves) that because they were a chosen Nation priviledged above all others, that therefore the Redeemer under the Law of Grace made to Adam, had no other Churches in the World, and that there were none saved but the Jews and Proselytes,

Quest. 157. Must we think accordingly of the Christian Churches now, that they are only advanced above the rest of the World as the Jews were, but not the only People that are saved?

Answ. THis question being fitter for another place, what hope there is of the Salvation of the People that are not Christians, I have purposely handled in another Treatise (in my Method. Theologiæ), and shall only say now, 1. That those that receive not Christ and the Gospel revealed and offered to them cannot be saved. 2. That all those shall be saved (if such there be) who never had sufficient means to know Christ incarnate, and yet do faithfully perform the common conditions of the Covenant of Grace as it was made with Adam and Noah; and particularly, all that are truly sanctified, who truly hate all known sin, and love God as God above all, as their merciful reconciled pardoning Father, and lay up all their hopes in Heaven, in the everlasting fruition of him in Glory, and set their Hearts there, and for those hopes deny the interest of the Flesh, and all things of this World.

Mark 16. 16. Joh. 3.16, 17,18,19, 20. Joh. 1.11, 22. Psal.19.1, 2, 3, 4, 5. Act. 10.2, 3, 35. Rom. 2.

3. But how many or who doth this abroad in all the Kingdoms of the World, who have not the distinct knowledge of the Articles of the Christian Faith, it is not possible for us to know.

4. But (as Aquinas and the Schoolmen ordinarily conclude this question) we are sure that the Church hath this Prerogative above all others, that Salvation is incomparably more common to Christians, than to any others, as their light and helps and means are more. The opinions of Justin, and Clem. Alexandr. Origen, and many other Ancients of the Heathens Salvation I suppose is known. In short:

(1) 1 Tim. 2. 4. & 4. 10. Tit. 2.11. Joh. 1.29. Joh. 3.17. & 4.42. Rom.1.21

1. It seems plain to me, that all the World that are no Christians, and have not the Gospel, are not by Christs incarnation put into a worse condition than they were in before: But may be saved on the same terms that they might have been saved on before.

(2) Joh. 5. 1, &c. 9. 12. &c.

2. That Christs Apostles were in state of Salvation before they believed the Articles of Christs dying for Sin, his Resurrection, Ascension, the giving of the Holy Ghost, and Christs coming to judgment as they are now to be believed. Mat. 16. 18. Joh. 12.16 Luk. 18. 34.

3. That all the faithful before Christs coming were saved by a more general Faith than the Apostles had, as not being terminated in this Person, Jesus, as the Messiah, but only expected the Messiah to come. (3) Mal. 3. 1, 2. Joh. 4. 22.

4. That as more Articles are necessary to those that have the Gospel than to those that have it not, and to those since Christs Incarnation that hear of him, than to the Jews before, so before, there were more things necessary even to those Jews (that had a shorter Creed than that which the Apostles believed before the Resurrection) than was to the rest of the World that had not Promises, Prophecies, Types and Laws, so particular, distinct and full as they had. (4) Rom. 2. 12, 14, 26 Luk. 12. 47, 48. & 16. 16.

5. That the Promises, Covenant or Law of Grace was made to all lapsed Mankind in Adam and Noah. (5) Gen. 3. 15. Gen. 9. 2, 2, 3, 4.

6. That this Law or Covenant is still of the same tenour, and not repealed. (6) Psal. 105. & 103.27. & 100. 5.

7. That this Covenant giveth pardoning Mercy, and Salvation, and promiseth Victory over Satan, to and by the holy Seed. (7) Gen. 3. 15.

8. That the condition on Mans part, is Repentance, and Faith in God as a merciful God thus pardoning Sin, and saving the penitent Believer. But just how particular or distinct their belief of the incarnation of Christ was to be, is hard to determine. Jonah. 3 9 10. & 4.2. (8) Jonah ib. Rom. 2.4. Luk.13.3, 5. Act.10.35 Joh. 3.19, 20, 21.

9. But after Christ's Incarnation, even they that know it not, yet are not by the first Covenant bound to believe that the Messiah is yet to be incarnate, or the Word made Flesh; for they are not bound to believe an untruth, and that as the condition of Salvation. (9) 1 Joh. 4. 2, 3. 1 Tim. 3. 16.

10. Men were saved by Christ about Four Thousand Years before he was Man, and had suffered, satisfied or merited as Man. (11) Rom. 1. 20, 21. Act. 14. 17.

11. The whole course of God's actual Providence since the fall, hath so filled the World with Mercies contrary to Mans demerit, that it is an actual universal Proclamation of the pardoning Law of Grace; which is thereby now become even a Law of Nature, that is of lapsed pardoned Nature, as the first was the natural Law of Innocence. Rom. 2. 15, 16. Psal. 19. 1, 2, 3. Prov. 1, 20 21, 22, 23, 24.

12. Christ giveth a great deal of Mercy to them that never heard of him or know him; and he giveth far more Mercy to Believers, than they have a particular knowledge and belief of. Exo. 34.6. Jer. 3.12. Joh. 4. 2. Luk. 6.36. Ib. 18.13.

13. There is no Salvation but by Christ the Saviour of the World; though there be more Mercy from Christ, than there is Faith in Christ. (12) Psal. 145. 9. 1 Tim. 4. 10.

14. No Man could ever be saved without believing in God as a merciful pardoning saving God, though many have been saved who knew not the Person of Christ, determinately. For he that cometh to God must believe that God is, and that he is the Rewarder of them that diligently seek him: Who is no respecter of Persons, but in every Nation, he that feareth God and worketh Righteousness is accepted of him. Rom. 10. 20. (13) Act. 4. 12. Joh. 14.6. 7. (14) Heb. 11. 6. Act.10.35

15. All Nations on Earth that have not the Gospel, are obliged by God to the use of certain means, and improvement of certain Mercies, in order or tendency to their Salvation. And it is their Sin if they use them not. 2 Thes. 1, 11, 12. Jer. 12.25 Rom. 10. 12, 13, 14, 15.

16. God hath appointed no means in vain; which Men must either not use, or use despairingly. But his Command to use any means for any end, containeth (though not an explicite Promise, yet) great and comfortable encouragement to use that means in hope. (15) Act. 14. 17. & 17. 27, 28, 29, 30. Rom. 1. 19 20. 21, 22. & 2. 4, 7, 10, 14, 15, 16, 27.

17. Therefore the World is now in comparison of the Catholick Church, much like what it was before Christs Incarnation in comparison of the Jews Church; who yet had many ways great advantage, though God was not the God of the Jews only, but also of the Gentiles, who had a Law written in their Hearts, and an accusing or excusing Conscience. Isa. 55. 5, 7 (16) Jonah 4. 2. & 3. 10. Act. 10.35 Mal 3. 14. Mic. 4. 5. Deut. 32. 47. Mal. 1. 10.

Prov.1.22. 23, 24. Gen. 4. 7. Rom. 3. Rom. 2.

18. Thoſe over-doing Divines who pretend to be certain, that all the World are damned that are not Chriſtians, do add to Gods Word, and are great Agents for Satan to tempt Men to Infidelity, and to Atheiſm it ſelf, and to diſſwade Mankind from diſcerning the Infinite Goodneſs of God; and occaſion many to deny the Immortality of the Soul, rather than they will believe, that five Parts in ſix of the World now, and almoſt all before Chriſts incarnation, have immortal Souls purpoſely created in them, to be damned without any propounded means and poſſibility natural of Remedy: And as I know they will pour out their bitter cenſure on theſe Lines (which I could avoid if I regarded it more than Truth) ſo with what meaſure they mete, it ſhall be meaſured to them: And others will damn them as confidently as they damn almoſt all the World: And I will be bold to cenſure that they are UNDOERS of the Church by OVER-DOING. See more in my Vindication of Gods Goodneſs.

Queſt. 158. Should not Chriſtians take up with Scripture-wiſdom only, without ſtudying Philoſophy and other Heathens humane Learning?

Anſw. I Have already proved the uſefulneſs of common Knowledge called Humane Learning, by twenty Reaſons in my Book called the Unreaſonableneſs of Infidelity, Page 163. Part 2. Sect. 23. to which I refer the Reader: And only ſay now, 1. Grace preſuppoſeth Nature; we are Men in order of Nature at leaſt before we are Saints, and Reaſon is before ſupernatural Revelation. 2. Common Knowledge therefore is ſubſervient unto Faith: We muſt know the Creator and his Works; and the Redeemer reſtoreth us to the due Knowledge of the Creatour: Humane Learning in the Senſe in Queſtion is alſo Divine, God is the Author of the Light of Nature, as well as of Grace. We have more than Heathens, but muſt not therefore have leſs, and caſt a way the good that is common to them and us: Elſe we muſt not have Souls, Bodies, Reaſon, Health, Time, Meat, Drink, Cloaths, &c. becauſe Heathens have them. Gods Works are honourable, ſought out of all them that have Pleaſure therein. And phyſical Phyloſophy is nothing but the Knowledge of Gods Works. 3. And the Knowledge of Languages is neceſſary both for humane Converſe, and for the underſtanding of the Scriptures themſelves. The Scriptures contain not a Greek and Hebrew Grammar to underſtand the Languages in which they are written, but ſuppoſe us otherwiſe taught thoſe Tongues that we may interpret them. 4. The uſe of the Goſpel is not to teach us all things needful to be known, but to teach us, on Suppoſition of our common Knowledge, how to advance higher to ſupernatural ſaving Knowledge, Faith, Love and Practice. Scripture telleth us not how to build a Houſe, to Plow, Sow, Weave, or make our Works of Art. Every one that learneth his Country Tongue of his Parents hath humane Learning of the ſame ſort with the Learning of Greek and Hebrew: He that learneth not to read, cannot read the Bible. And he that underſtandeth it not in the Original Tongues muſt truſt other Mens Words that have Humane Learning, or elſe remain a Stranger to it.

Prov.2. & 3.&4.&5. & 6. Pſal. 92.5, 6. & 104.24, 25. & 113. 5, 6. & 107. 8, 15, 21. Pſal.66.3, 4. Pſal. 111. 2,3,4,5,6. &145.7,8 9, 10, 11, 4. 17,18,19. Act.2.6,7, 8, 9. & 21. 40. & 24. 2. 1 Cor. 14. 2,4, 9,13, 14,15, 26, 27. Rom.11. & 14. 16. & 5. 9. Pſal.19. 1, 2, 3. & 94. 10. & 139. 6, Prov. 2. 1, 2, 3, 4. & 8. 9, 10, 12. 1 Cor. 15. 34. Prov. 19. 2. Job 32. 8. &38. 36. Yet I refer the Reader to my Treat. of Knowledge which ſheweth the Vanity of pretended Learning.

But though none but proud Fools will deny the need of that humane Learning which improveth Nature, and is ſubſervient to our Knowledge of ſupernatural Revelations, yet well doth Paul admoniſh us to take heed that none deceive us by vain Phyloſophy, and ſaith that the Wiſdom of the World is foolishneſs with God, and that the Knowledge of Chriſt crucified is the true Chriſtian Phyloſophy or Wiſdom. For indeed the dark Phyloſophers groping after the Knowledge of God, did frequently ſtumble, and did introduce abundance of Logical and Phyſical vanities, uncertainties, and falſities under the Name of Phyloſophy, by meer niceties and high pretendings, ſeeking for the Glory of Wiſdom to themſelves; when as it is one thing to know Gods Works and God in them, and another thing to compoſe a ſyſteme of Phyſicks and Metaphyſicks containing abundance of Errours and Confuſion, and jumbling a few Certainties with a great many Uncertainties and Untruths, and every Sect pulling down, what others aſſerted, and all of them diſproving the Methods and Aſſertions of others, and none proving their own. And the Truth is, after all latter diſcoveries, there is yet ſo much errour, darkneſs, uncertainty and confuſion in the Phyloſophy of every pretending Sect, (the Peripateticks, the Stoicks, the Pythagoreans and Platoniſts, much more the Epicureans, the Lullianiſts, the Carteſians, Teleſius, Campanella, Patricius, Gaſſendus, &c.) that it is a wonder that any that ever throughly tryed them, can be ſo weak as to Glory much of the Certainties and Methods of any, which hitherto are ſo palpably uncertain, and full of certain Errours. We may therefore make uſe of all true humane Learning, real and organical (and he is the happy Scholar who faſtneth upon the CERTAIN and the USEFUL parts well diſtinguiſhed from the reſt, and truly uſeth them to their great and proper ends): But niceties, and fooleries which ſome ſpend their Lives in for meer Oſtentation, and alſo uncertain Preſumptions, ſhould be much neglected; and the great, certain, neceſſary, ſaving Verities of Morality and the Goſpel muſt be dearly loved, and thankfully imbraced, and ſtudiouſly learned, and faithfully practiſed, by all that would prove wiſe Men at laſt.

Queſt. 159. If we think that Scripture and the Law of Nature do in any point contradict each others, which may be the ſtandard by which the other muſt be tryed?

Anſw. IT is certain that they never do contradict each other: 2. The Law of Nature is either that which is very clear by Natural evidence, or that which is dark (as degrees of Conſanguinity unfit for Marriage, the evil of officious lies, &c.) 3. The Scriptures alſo have their plain and their obſcurer parts. 4. A dark Scripture is not to be expounded contrary to a plain natural Verity. 5. A dark and doubtful point in Nature is not to be expounded contrary to a plain and certain Scripture. 6. To ſuppoſe that there be an apparent contradiction in caſes of equal clearneſs or doubtfulneſs, is a caſe not to be ſuppoſed; But he that ſhould have ſuch a dream, muſt do as he would do if he thought two Texts to be contradictory, that is, he muſt better ſtudy both till he ſee his errour; ſtill remembring that natural evidence hath this advantage, that it is, 1. firſt in order, 2. and moſt common and received by all; But ſupernatural evidence hath this advantage, that it is for the moſt part the more clear and ſatisfactory.

Queſt. 160. May we not look that God ſhould yet give us more Revelations of his will, than there are already made in Scripture?

Anſw. YOU muſt diſtinguiſh between, 1. New Laws or Covenants to mankind, and new predictions or informations of a particular perſon. 2. Between what may poſſibly be, and what we may expect as certain or probable. And ſo I conclude.

1. That it is certain that God will make no other Covenant, Teſtament, or Univerſal Law, for the Government of mankind or the Church as a Rule of Du- ty

Gal.1.7,8, 9. ty and of Judgment. Becauſe he hath oft told us, that this Covenant and Law is perfect, and ſhall be in force as our rule till the end of the world.

Mat. 28. 20. 2Theſ.1. 10. 11. Obj. So it was ſaid of the Law of Moſes, that it was to ſtand for ever, yea of many Ceremonies in it?

Mark 16. 15, 16. Rev.14.6. Rev. 22. 18, 19. Heb.7.28, 29. 1 Tim. 1. 16. Rom. 6. 22. Joh.5.22, 24. &8.27.40, 47. & 12. 50, Heb. 1. 7, 8, 9. Eph.1.18. 19. Anſw. 1. It is in the Original only [for ages and ages;] or [to generations and generations] which we tranſlate [for ever] when it ſignifieth but [to many generations]. 2. It is no where ſaid, of Moſes Law as ſuch, that it ſhould continue either till the end of the world, or till the day of Judgment, as it is ſaid of the Goſpel. And 3. It is not ſaid that he will add no more to the former Teſtament, but contrarily, that he will make a new covenant with them, &c. But here in the Goſpel he peremptorily reſolveth againſt all innovations and additions.

2. It is certain that God will make no new Scripture or inſpired word as an infallible univerſal Rule for the expoſition of the word already written. For 1. This were an addition which he hath diſclaimed, and 2. It would imply ſuch an inſufficiency in the Goſpel to its ends (as being not intelligible) as is contrary to its aſſerted perfection, and 3. It would be contrary to that eſtabliſhed way for the underſtanding of the Scripture, which God hath already ſettled and appointed for us till the end.

3. It is certain that God will give all his ſervants in their ſeveral meaſures, the help and illumination of his ſpirit, for the underſtanding and applying of the Goſpel.

4. It is poſſible that God may make new Revelations to particular perſons about their particular duties, events or matters of fact, in ſubordination to the Scripture, either by inſpiration, viſion, or apparition or voice. For he hath not told us that he never will do ſuch a thing. As to tell them, what ſhall befal them, or others; or to ſay [Go to ſuch a place, or dwell in ſuch a place, or do ſuch a thing] which is not contrary to the Scripture, nor co-ordinate, but only a ſubordinate determination of ſome undetermined caſe, or the circumſtantiating of an action.

Mic. 2.11. 1King. 22 21,22. 1 Joh.4.1, 2. 2 Theſ. 2. 2. 5. Though ſuch Revelation and Prophecy be Poſſible, there is no certainty of it in general, nor any probability of it to any one individual Perſon, much leſs a Promiſe. And therefore to expect it, or pray for it, is but a preſemptuous tempting of God.

6. And all ſober Chriſtians ſhould be the more cautelous of being deceived by their own Imaginations, becauſe certain experience telleth us, that moſt in our age that have pretended to prophecy or to Inſpirations or Revelations, have been melancholy crackt-brained perſons, near to madneſs, who have proved to be deluded in the end: And that ſuch crazed perſons are ſtill prone to ſuch imaginations.

7. Therefore alſo all ſober Chriſtians muſt take heed of raſh believing every Prophet or pretended ſpirit, leſt they be led away from the Sacred Rule, and before they are aware, be loſt in vain expectations and conceits.

Queſt. 161. Is not a third Rule of the Holy Ghoſt, or perfecter Kingdom of Love to be expected, as different from the Reign of the Creator and Redeemer?

Joh.5.22. 25. Prov.1.20 21. Anſw. 1. THE works ad extra and the Reign of the Father, Word and Spirit are undivided. But yet ſome things are more eminently attributed to one perſon in the Trinity and ſome to another.

2. By the Law and Covenant of Innocency the Creator eminently ruled Omnipotently. And the Son Ruled eminently ſapientially initially under the Covenant of promiſe or grace from Adam till his Incarnation and the deſcent of the Holy Ghoſt, and more fully and perfectly afterward by the Holy Ghoſt. And the Holy Ghoſt ever ſince doth Rule in the Saints as the Paraclete, Advocate or Agent of Chriſt, and Chriſt by him, emininently by holy Love; which is yet but initially: But the ſame Holy Ghoſt by perfect Love ſhall perfectly Rule in Glory for ever; even as the ſpirit of the Father and the Son. We have already the Initial Kingdom of Love by the Spirit, and ſhall have the perfect Kingdom in Heaven: And beſides the initial and the perfect there is no other. Nor is the perfect Kingdom to be expected before the day of Judgment or our removal unto Heaven: For our Kingdom is not of this World. And they that ſell all and follow Chriſt, do make the exchange for a Reward in Heaven: And they that ſuffer perſecution for his ſake, muſt rejoice becauſe their reward in Heaven is great: And they that relieve a prophet or righteous man for the ſake of Chriſt, and that loſe any thing for him, ſhall have indeed an hundred fold (in value) in this life but in the World to come Eternal Life. We ſhall be taken up in the clouds to meet the Lord in the air, and ſo ſhall we ever be with the Lord: And thoſe are the words with which we muſt comfort one another, and not Jewiſhly with the hopes of an earthly Kingdom. And yet we look for a new Heaven and a new Earth wherein dwelleth righteouſneſs, according to his Promiſe. But who ſhall be the inhabitants, and how that Heaven and Earth ſhall differ, and what we ſhall then have to do with Earth, Whether to be Overſeers of that Righteous Earth (and ſo to judge or Rule the World) as the Angels are now over us in this World, are things which yet I underſtand not.

Queſt. 162. May we not look for Miracles hereafter?

Luk.23.8. Anſw. 1. THE anſwer to Queſt. Hundred and Sixty may ſerve to this 1. God may work Miracles if he pleaſe, and hath not told us that he never will.

2. But he hath not promiſed us that he will, and therefore we cannot believe ſuch a promiſe, nor expect them as a certain thing. Nor may any pray for the gift of miracles.

3. But if there be any probability of them it will be to thoſe that are converting Infidel Nations, when they may be partly of ſuch uſe as they were at firſt.

4. Yet it is certain, that ſometimes God ſtill worketh Miracles: But arbitrarily and rarely, which may not put any individual perſon in expection of them.

Object. Is not the Promiſe the ſame to us as to the Apoſtles and Primitive Chriſtians, if we could but believe as they did?

Anſw. 1. The Promiſe to be believed goeth before the faith that believeth it, and not that faith before the Promiſe. 2. The promiſe of the Holy Ghoſt was for perpetuity, to ſanctifie all believers: But the Promiſe of that ſpecial gift of Miracles, was for a time, becauſe it was for a ſpecial uſe: That is, to be a ſtanding ſeal to the truth of the Goſpel, which all after ages may be convinced of in point of fact, and ſo may ſtill have the uſe and benefit of. And providence (ceaſing Miracles,) thus expoundeth the promiſe. And if Miracles muſt be common to all perſons and ages, they would be as no Miracles. And we have ſeen thoſe that moſt confidently believed they ſhould work them, all fail.

1Cor.12. 28,21. Heb. 2. 3, 4. Joh. 10. 41.

But I have written ſo largely of this point in a ſet Diſputation in my Treatiſe called The Unreaſonableneſs of Infidelity, fully proving thoſe firſt Miracles ſatisfactory and obligatory to all following ages, that I muſt thither now refer the Reader.

Queſt. 163. Is the Scripture to be tryed by the Spirit, or the Spirit by the Scripture, and which of them is to be preferred.

Anſw. I Put the queſtion thus confuſedly, for the ſake of thoſe that uſe to do ſo, to ſhew them how to get out of their own Confuſion. You muſt must distinguish, 1. Between the Spirit in it self considered, and the Scripture in it self. 2. Between the several operations of the Spirit. 3. Between the several persons that have the Spirit. And so you must conclude,

1. That the Spirit in it self is infinitely more excellent than the Scripture. For the Spirit is God and the Scripture is but the work of God.

2. The operation of the Spirit in the Apostles was more excellent than the operation of same Spirit now in; As producing more excellent effects and more infallible.

1 Joh. 4. 1, 2, 6. Joh. 18. 27. & 8. 47. 3. Therefore the holy Scriptures which were infallible dictates of the Spirit in the Apostles, are more perfect than any of our apprehensions which come by the same Spirit (which we have not in so great a measure).

Acts 17. 11, 12. Mat. 5. 18. Rom. 16. 26. 4. Therefore we must not try the Scriptures by our most spiritual apprehensions, but our apprehensions by the Scriptures: That is, we must prefer the Spirits inspiring the Apostles to indite the Scripture, before the Spirits illuminating of us to understand them, or before any present inspirations, the former being the more perfect: Because Christ gave the Apostles the Spirit to deliver us infallibly his own Commands, and to indite a Rule for following ages: But he giveth us the Spirit but to understand and use that Rule aright.

Mat. 28. 20. Luk. 10. 16.

Rev. 2. 2. Jude 17. 2 Pet. 3. 2. Ephes. 4. 11, 12. 1 Cor. 12. 28, 29. Ephes. 2. 20. 5. This trying the Spirit by the Scriptures, is not a setting of the Scripture above the Spirit it self; but is only a trying the Spirit by the Spirit; that is, the Spirits operations in our selves and his Revelations to any pretenders now, by the Spirits operations in the Apostles, and by their Revelations recorded for our use. For they and not we, are called Foundations of the Church.

Quest. 164. How is a pretended Prophet, or Revelation to be tryed?

Answ. 1. IF it be contrary to the Scripture, it is to be rejected as a deceit.

Act. 17. 11 1 Cor. 15. 3, 4. Joh. 10. 35 Joh. 19. 24 28, 36, 37. 2. If it be the same thing which is in the Scripture, we have it more certainly revealed already: Therefore the Revelation can be nothing but an assistance of the persons faith, or to call to obedience, or a reproof of some sin: Which every man is to believe according as there is true evidence that indeed it is a Divine Revelation or Vision: Which if it be not, the same thing is still sure to us in the Scripture.

3. If it be something that is only Besides the Scripture (as about events and facts or Prophecies of what will befal particular places or persons) we must first see whether the evidence of a Divine Revelation be clear in it or not: And that is known, 1. To the person himself by the self-attesting and convincing power of a Divine Revelation, which no man knoweth but he that hath it (And we must be very cautelous lest we take false conceptions to be such.) But to himself and others it is known, 1. At present by clear uncontrouled Miracles, which are Gods attestation; which if men shew, we are bound (in this case) to believe them. 2. For the Future, by the event,

Joh. 3. 2. Joh. 13. 19 & 14. 29. Luk. 21. 7, 9, 28, 31, 36. Mat. 5. 18. & 24. 34. & 21. 4. when things so plainly come to pass, as prove the prediction to be of God. He therefore that giveth you not by certain Miracles uncontrouled, a just proof that he is sent of God, is to be heard with a suspended belief; you must stay till the event shew whether he say true or not: And not act any thing in the mean time upon an unproved presumption either of the truth or falshood of his words.

4. If you are in doubt whether that which he speaketh be contrary to Gods Word or not, you must hear him with a proportionable suspicion, and give no credit to him till you have tryed whether it be so or not.

5. It is a dangerous snare and sin to believe any ones Prophecies or Revelations meerly because they are very Holy Persons, and do most confidently aver or swear it. For they may be deceived themselves. As also to take hysterical, or melancholy delirations or conceptions for the Revelations of the Spirit of God, and so to farther falshood upon God.

Quest. 165. May one be saved who believeth that the Scripture hath any Mistake or Error, and believeth it not all?

Answ. THE chief part of the Answer to this must be fetcht from what is said before about Fundamentals. 1. No Man can be saved who believeth not that God is no Lyar; and that all his Word is true: Because indeed he believeth not that there is a God.

Rev. 6. 10. & 19. 9, 11. & 21. 5. & 22. 6. 1 Joh. 2. 8. & 5. 20. 2 Cor. 1. 18. 1 Cor. 15. 1, 2, 3, &c.

2. No Man can be saved who believeth not the Points that are essential to true Godliness; nor any Man that heareth the Word who believeth not all Essential to Christianity, or the Christian Covenant and Religion.

3. A Man may be saved who believeth not some Books of Scripture, (as Jude, 2 Pet. 2 John, 3 John, Revelations) to be Canonical, or the Word of God; so he heartily believe the rest; or the Essentials.

4. He that thinketh that the Prophets, Sacred Historians, Evangelists and Apostles, were guided to an infallible delivery and recording of all the great substantial necessary Points of the Gospel, but not to an Infallibility in every by-expression, phrase, citation, or circumstance, doth disadvantage his own Faith as to all the rest; but yet may be saved, if he believe the Substance with a sound and practical Belief.

Mark 16. 16. Rom. 10. 12, 13. Joh. 3. 16, 18. 1 Joh. 4. 2, 3.

Quest. 166. Who be they that give too little to the Scriptures, and who too much; and what is the danger of each extreams?

Answ. I. IT is not easie to enumerate all the Errors on either Extream; but only to give some Instances of each. 1. They give too little to the Scripture, who deny it to be indited by Inspiration of the Infallible Spirit of God, and to be wholly true. 2. And they that detract from some Parts or Books of it while they believe the rest. 3. And they that think it is not given as a Law of God, and as a Rule of Faith and Life. 4. And they that think it is not an Universal Law and Rule for all the World, but for some Parts only (supposing the Predication of it). 5. And they that think it an imperfect Law and Rule, which must be made up with the Supplement of Traditions or Revelations. 6. And they that think it was adapted only to the Time it was written in, and not to ours, as not foreseeing what would be. 7. And they that think it is culpably defective in Method. 8. And they that think it culpably defective in phrase, aptness, or elegancy of Stile. 9. And they that think that it containeth not all that was necessary or fit for universal Detemination, of that kind of things which it doth at all universally determine of: As e. g. that it made two Sacraments, but not all of that kind that are fit to be made, but hath left Men to invent and make more of the same Nature and Use. 10. And those that think that it is fitted only to the Learned, or only to the unlearned, only to Princes, or only to Subjects, &c. 11. And those that think it is but for a Time, and then by Alteration to be perfected as Moses Law was. 12. And those that think that the Pope, Princes or Prelates, or any Men may change or alter it.

James 4. 12. Isa. 33: 22. Rev. 22. 18, 19. Mat. 28. 20. Isa. 8. 16, 20. Psal. 19. 7, 8. & 119. 130. Prov. 14. 20, 22. & 8. 5. Deut. 12. 32.

II. Those give too much (in bulk, but too little in virtue) to the Scripture, 1. Who would set them up instead of the whole Law and Light of Nature, as excluding this, as useless where the Scripture is.

2. And they that feign it to be instead of all Grammars, Logick, Philosophy, and all other Arts and Sciences, and to be a perfect particular Rule for for every Ruler, Lawyer, Phyſician, Mariner, Architect, Husbandman and Tradeſman, to do his work by.

1 Joh. 1. 1. 2, 3. 3 Joh. 12. Heb. 2. 3, 4. Joh. 2. 24. Epheſ. 4. 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16.

3. And they that feign it to be fully ſufficient to all Men to prove its own Authority and Truth, without the ſubſidiary uſe of that Church-Hiſtory and Tradition which telleth us the ſuppoſed Matters of Fact, and muſt help us to know what Books are Canonical and what not; and without hiſtorical evidence, that theſe are the true Books which the Prophets and Apoſtles wrote, and the Miracles and Providences which have atteſted them.

4. And thoſe that think that it is ſufficient for its own Promulgation, or the Peoples Inſtruction, without the Miniſtry of Man to preſerve, deliver, tranſlate, expound and preach it to the People.

Joh. 6. 63. Rom. 8. 9. 1 Joh. 3. 24. Joh. 3, 5, 6. Many Romiſh Prieſts and others do ſo.

5. And thoſe that think it ſufficient to ſanctifie Men, without the concourſe of the Spirits Illumination, vivification and inward operation to that end.

6. And they that ſay that no Man can be ſaved by the knowledge, belief, love and practice of all the ſubſtantial Parts of Chriſtianity brought to him by Tradition, Parents or Preachers, who tell him nothing of the Scriptures, but deliver him the Doctrines as atteſted by Miracles and the Spirit without any notice of the Book.

7. And thoſe that ſay that Scripture alone muſt be made uſe of as to all the Hiſtory of Scripture Times, and that it is unlawful to make uſe of any other Hiſtorians, (as Joſephus and ſuch others).

8. And they that ſay, no other Books of Divinity but Scripture are uſeful, yea or lawful to be read of Chriſtians; or at leaſt in the Church.

9. And they that ſay that the Scriptures are ſo Divine, not only in Matter, but in Method and Style, as that there is nothing of humane (inculpable) Imperfection or Weakneſs in them.

10. And thoſe that ſay that the Logical Method, and the Phraſe is as perfect as God was able to make them.

11. And they that ſay, that all paſſages in Scripture hiſtorically related are Moral Truths: And ſo make the Devils words to Eve, of Job, to Chriſt, &c. to be all true.

12. And they that ſay, that all paſſages in the Scripture were equally obligatory to all other Places and Ages, as to thoſe that firſt received them (as the kiſs of Peace, the veils of Women, waſhing Feet, anointing the Sick, Deaconeſſes, &c.)

13. And they that make Scripture ſo perfect a Rule to our belief that nothing is to be taken for certain, that cometh to us any other Way (As natural Knowledge or Hiſtorical.)

14. And thoſe that think Men may not tranſlate the Scripture, turn the Pſalms into Metre, tune them, divide the Scripture into Chapters and Verſes, &c. as being derogatory Alterations of the perfect Word.

1 Cor. 14. 32, 40. 26.

15. And thoſe that think it ſo perfect a particular Rule of all the Circumſtances, Modes, Adjuncts and external Expreſſions of and in Gods Worſhip, as that no ſuch may be invented or added by Man, that is not there preſcribed: As Time, Place, Veſture, Geſture, Utenſils, Methods, Words, and many other things mentioned before.

16. And thoſe that Jewiſhly feign a multitude of unproved Myſteries to lie in the Letters, Orders, Numbers and proper Names in Scripture, (though I deny not that there is much Myſtery which we little obſerve).

17. They that ſay that the Scripture is all ſo plain, that there is no obſcure or difficult Paſſages in them, which Men are in danger of wreſting to their own Deſtruction.

Heb. 5. 10, 11, 12.

18. And they that ſay that all in the Scripture is ſo neceſſary to Salvation (even the darkeſt Prophecies,) that they cannot be ſaved that underſtand them not all; or at leaſt endeavour not ſtudiouſly and particularly to underſtand them.

19. And they that ſay that every Book and Text muſt of neceſſity to Salvation be believed to be Canonical and True.

20. And thoſe that ſay that God hath ſo preſerved the Scripture, as that there are no various readings and doubtful Texts thereupon, and that no written or printed Copies have been corrupted (when Dr. Heylin tells us, that the Kings Printer printed the Seventh Commandment, [Thou ſhalt commit Adultery]) All theſe err in over-doing. Of which ſee Iud. Capellus Crit. Sacr.

III. The dangers of the former detracting from the Scripture are theſe. 1. It injureth the Spirit who is the Author of the Scriptures. 2. It ſtriketh at the Foundation of our Faith, by weakning the Records which are left us to believe: And emboldneth Men to Sin, by diminiſhing the Authority of Gods Law: And weakneth our Hopes, by weakning the Promiſes. 3. It ſhaketh the univerſal Government of Chriſt, by ſhaking the Authority or Perfection of the Laws by which he governeth. 4. It maketh way for humane Uſurpations, and Traditions, as Supplements to the Holy Scriptures: And leaveth Men to contrive to amend Gods Word and Worſhip, and make Co-ordinate Laws and Doctrines of their own. 5. It hindereth the Converſion and Converſion of Sinners, and hardeneth them in unbelief, by queſtioning or weakning the means that ſhould convince and turn them. 6. It is a tempting Men to the curſed adding to Gods Word.

IV. The dangers of over-doing here are theſe: 1. It leadeth to downright Infidelity: For when Men find that the Scripture is imperfect or wanting in that which they fancy to be part of its Perfection, and to be really inſufficient, e. g. to teach Men Phyſicks, Logick, Medicine, Languages, &c. they will be apt to ſay, it is not of God, becauſe it hath not that which it pretends to have. 2. God is made the Author of defects and imperfections. 3. The Scripture is expoſed to the ſcorn and confutation of Infidels. 4. Papiſts are aſſiſted in proving its Imperfection. But I muſt ſtop, having ſpoke to this Point before in Queſt. 35. and partly Queſt. 30. & 31. & 33. more at large.

Queſt. 167. How far do good Men now Preach and Pray by the Spirit?

Anſw. 1. NOT by ſuch Inſpiration of new Matter from God as the Prophets and Apoſtles had which indited the Scriptures.

2. Not ſo as to exclude the exerciſe of Reaſon, Memory or Diligence; which muſt be as much and more than about any common Things.

3. Not ſo to exclude the uſe and need of Scripture, Miniſtry, Sermons, Books, Conference, Examples, Uſe, or other Means and Helps.

But 1. The Spirit indited that Doctrine and Scripture which is our Rule for prayer and for preaching. Heb. 2. 3, 4.

2. The Spirits Miracles and Works in and by the Apoſtles Seal that Doctrine to us, and confirm our Faith in it. 1 Pet. 1. 2, 22. 2 Theſ. 1. 13.

3. The Spirit in our faithful Paſtors and Teachers teacheth us by them to pray and preach. Joh. 3. 5, 6 Rom. 8. 9. 8. 15, 16. 26, 27.

4. The Spirit by Illumination, Quickening and Sanctification, giveth us an habitual Acquaintance with our Sins, our Wants, with the Word of Precept and Promiſe, with God, with Chriſt, with Grace, with Heaven. And it giveth us a Habit of Holy Love to God, and Goodneſs and Thankfulneſs for Mercy and Faith in Chriſt, and the Life to come, and Deſires of Perfection, and Hatred of Sin: And he that hath all theſe, hath a conſtant Habit of Prayer in him: For Prayer is nothing but the expreſſion with the Tongue of theſe Graces in the Heart: So that the Spirit of Sanctification is thereby a Spirit of Adoption and of Supplication. And he that hath freedom of utterance can ſpeak that which Gods Spirits hath put into his very Heart, and made him eſteem his greateſt and 2 Tim. 1. 7. Nehem. 9. 20. Iſa. 11. 2. Ezek. 36. 26. & 37. 14. Gal. 4. 6. Zech. 12. 10. Ezek. 18. 31. & 11. 19.

and neareſt Concernment, and the moſt neceſſary and excellent Thing in all the World. This is the Spirits principal Help.

Rom. 7.6. Joh. 4.23, 24. &7.38,39. 1 Cor. 2. 10, 11. 1 Cor. 6. 11, 17. 2 Cor. 4. 13. Gal. 5. 5, 16,17, 18, 25. Eph. 3.16. & 5.9,18. & 6. 18. 1 Theſſ. 5. 19.

5. The ſame Spirit doth incline our Hearts to the diligent uſe of all thoſe means, by which his abilities may be increaſed: As to read, and hear, and confer, and to uſe our ſelves to Prayer and to Meditation, Self-examination, &c.

6. The ſame Spirit helpeth us in the uſe of all theſe means, to profit by them, and to make them all effectual on our Hearts.

7. The ſame Spirit concurreth with Means, Habits, Reaſon, and our own endeavours, to help us in the very act of Praying and Preaching: 1. By illuminating our Minds to know what to deſire and ſay: 2. By actuating our Wills to Love, and Holy Deſire and other Affections. 3. By quickning and exciting us to a livelineſs and fervency in all. And ſo bringing our former Habits into Acts, the Grace of Prayer is the Heart and Soul of Gifts; and thus the Spirit teacheth us to pray.

Yea, the ſame Spirit thus by common Helps aſſiſteth even bad Men in praying and preaching, giving them common Habits and Acts that are ſhort of ſpecial ſaving Grace. Whereas Men left to themſelves without Gods Spirit, have none of all theſe forementioned Helps. And ſo the Spirit is ſaid to intercede Rom.8.26 for us by exciting our unexpreſſible Groans; and to help our infirmities when we know what to ask as we ought.

Queſt. 168. Are not our own Reaſons, Studies, Memory, Strivings, Books, Forms, Methods and Miniſtry needleſs, yea a hurtful quenching or preventing of the Spirit, and ſetting up our own, inſtead of the Spirits Operations?

Joh. 15.1, 3, 4, 5, 7. Anſw. 1. YES; if we do it in a Conceit of the Sufficiency of our ſelves, our Reaſon, Memory, Studies, Books, Forms, &c. without the Spirit: Or if we aſcribe any thing to any of theſe which is proper to Chriſt or to his Spirit. For ſuch proud ſelf-ſufficient Deſpiſers of the Spirit, cannot reaſonably expect his help: I doubt among Men counted Learned and Rational there are too many ſuch, * That know not Mans inſufficiency or corruption, nor the neceſſity and uſe of that Holy Ghoſt into whoſe Name they were baptized, and in whom they take on them to believe. But think that all that pretend to the Spirit are but Phanaticks and Enthuſiaſts, and ſelf-conceited People; when yet the Spirit himſelf ſaith, Rom. 8. 9. If any Man have not the Spirit of Chriſt, the ſame is none of his. And Gal. 4. 6. Becauſe we are Sons, God hath ſent forth the Spirit of his Son into our Hearts, whereby we cry, Abba, Father.

* Even among them that in their Ordination heard [Receive ye the Holy Ghoſt] and [Over which the Holy Ghoſt hath made you Overſeers.]

2. But if we give to Reaſon, Memory, Study, Books, Methods, Forms, &c. but their proper place in Subordination to Chriſt and to his Spirit, they are ſo far from being quenchers of the Spirit, that they are neceſſary in their Places, and ſuch Means as we muſt uſe, if ever we will expect the Spirits help. For the Spirit is not given to a Bruit to make him a Man, or Rational; nor to a proud Deſpiſer, or idle Neglecter of Geds appointed Means, to be inſtead of means, nor to be a Patron to the Vice of pride or idleneſs, which he cometh chiefly to deſtroy: But to bleſs Men in their laborious uſe of the means which God appointed him: Read but Prov. 1. 20, &c. & 2. & 3. & 5. & 6. & 8. and you will ſee Iſa. 64. 7. that Knowledge muſt be laboured for, and Inſtruction heard: And he that will lie idle till the Spirit Mat.7.13, 14. move him, and will not ſtir up himſelf to ſeek God, 2Pet.1.10 or ſtrive to enter in at the ſtrait Gate, nor give all Diligence to make his Calling and Election ſure, may find that the Spirit of ſloth hath deſtroyed him, when he thought the Spirit of Chriſt had been ſaving him. He that hath but two Articles in his Creed, muſt make this the ſecond: For he that cometh to God Heb.11.6. muſt believe that God is, and that he is the Rewarder of them that diligently ſeek him.

Queſt. 169. How doth the Holy Ghoſt ſet Biſhops over the Churches.

Anſw. 1. BY making the Office it ſelf, ſo far as the Apoſtles had any Hand in it, Chriſt himſelf having made their Office. Act.20.28

2. The Holy Ghoſt in the Electors and Ordainers directeth them to diſcern the fitneſs of the Perſons elected and ordained, and ſo to call ſuch as God approveth of, and calleth by the Holy Ghoſt in them. Which was done, 1. By the extraordinary Gift of diſcerning in the Apoſtles. 2. By the ordinary help of Gods Spirit in the wiſe and faithful Electors and Ordainers ever ſince. Acts 1.24. Act.13. 2, & 15. 28, &c. & 14. 23.

3. The Holy Ghoſt doth qualifie them for the Work, by due Life, Light and Love, Knowledge, Willingneſs, and Active Ability; and ſo both enclining them to it, and marking out the Perſons by his Gifts whom he would have elected and ordained to it: Which was done, 1. At firſt by extraordinary Gifts, 2. And ever ſince by ordinary, 1. Special and ſaving in ſome; 2. Common, and only fitted to the Churches Inſtruction in others. So that who ever is not competently qualified, is not called by the Holy Ghoſt: When Chriſt aſcended, he gave Gifts to Men, ſome Apoſtles, Prophets and Evangeliſts, ſome Paſtors and Teachers, for the edifying of his Body, &c. Eph. 4. 7, 8, 9, 10. 1 Cor. 12. 12,13, 28, 29.

Queſt. 170. Are Temples, Fonts, Utenſils, Church-lands, much more the Miniſters Holy? And what Reverence is due to them as Holy?

Anſw. THE Queſtion is either de nomine whether it be fit to call them Holy; or de re, whether they have that which is called Holineſs.

I. The Word [Holy] ſignifieth in God, eſſential tranſcendant Perfection; and ſo it cometh not into our queſtion. In Creatures it ſignifieth, 1. A Divine Nature in the rational Creature (Angels and Men) by which it is made like God, and diſpoſed to him and his Service, by Knowledge, Love, and Holy Vivacity; which is commonly called real ſaving Holineſs as diſtinct from meer Relative. 2. It is taken for the Relation of any thing to God as his own peculiar appropriated to him: So Infinite is the diſtance between God and us, that whatever is His in a ſpecial Senſe, or ſeparated to his Uſe, is called Holy: And that is, 1. Perſons. 2. Things. 1. Perſons are either, 1. In general devoted to his Love and Service; 2. Or ſpecially devoted to him in ſome ſpecial Office. Which is, 1. Eccleſiaſtical, 2. Oeconomical, 3. Political. Thoſe devoted to his general Service are, 1. Either heartily and ſincerely ſo devoted (who are ever ſanctified in the firſt real Senſe alſo,) or only by Word and outward Profeſſion. 2. Things devoted to God are, 1. Some by his own immediate choice, deſignation and command, 2. Or by general directions to Man to do it. And theſe are, 1. Some things more Nearly, 2. Some things more Remotely ſeparated to him. None of theſe muſt be confounded: And ſo we muſt conclude, Mar.6.20. Col.1. 22. Tit. 1. 8. 1 Pet. 1. 15,16.&3. 5. 2Pet.3.11 Exod. 22. 31. 1 Cor.1.1, 2, 3. 1 Cor.6.9, 10, 11. Heb. 12. 14. Tit.3.3.5, 6. &2.13, 14.

1. All that ſhall be ſaved are Really Holy by a Divine Inclination, and Nature, and actual Exerciſe thereof; and Relatively Holy in a ſpecial Senſe, as thus devoted and ſeparated to God. 1 Pet.2.5, 9. Exo.19.6. Rom. 1.1, 2.

2. All the Baptized and Profeſſors (not apoſtate) are Relatively Holy as verbally devoted and ſeparated to God. 1 Cor. 3. 17. &7.14 Zech.2.12

3. All that are ordained to the Sacred Miniſtry are Relatively Holy as devoted and ſeparated to that Office. And the well qualified are alſo really Holy, as their qualifications are either ſpecial or common. Hag.2.12. Luk.1.71, 72. Ezr. 8.28. & 9. 2.

4. All that are duly called of God to the Place of Kings, Num. 31. 6.

Numb. 6. 8, 20. Lev. 16. 4, 33. Kings, and Judges, and Rulers of Families, are relatively sacred, as their offices and they are of God and for him, and devoted to him.

Exod. 29. 6, 33. Pſal. 89. 20. 5. Temples and other Utenſils deſigned by God himſelf, are holy as related to him by that deſignation.

Numb. 35 25. 2 Tim. 3. 15. Iſa. 58. 13. Pſal. 42. 4. 2 Pet. 1. 18 21. 6. Temples, Utenſils, Lands, &c. devoted and lawfully ſeparated by Man, for holy uſes, are Holy as juſtly related to God by that lawful ſeparation. To ſay as ſome do, that [They are indeed conſecrated and ſeparated, but not Holy] is to be ridiculouſly wiſe by ſelf-contradiction, and the maſterly uſe of the word Holy contrary to cuſtom and themſelves.

Pſal. 87. 1. Numb. 5. 17. Exod. 3. 5. 1 Sam. 21. 5. 7. Miniſters are more Holy than Temples, Lands, or Utenſils, as being nearlier related to holy things. And things ſeparated by God himſelf are more holy than thoſe juſtly ſeparated by Man. And ſo of Days.

Neh. 8. 9, 10, 11. 8. Things remotely devoted to God, are holy in their diſtant place and meaſure; as the Meat, Drink, Houſe, Lands, Labours of every Godly Man, who with himſelf devoteth all to God: But this being more diſtant, is yet a remoter degree of Holineſs.

Uncovered in Church and Reverent geſtures. II. Every thing ſhould be reverenced according to the meaſure of its Holineſs: And this expreſſed by ſuch ſigns, geſtures, actions, as are fitteſt to honour God, to whom they are related: And ſo to be uncovered in Church, and uſe reverent carriage and geſtures there, doth tend to preſerve due Reverence to God and to his Worſhip, (1 Cor. 16. 20.)

Queſt. 171. What is Sacriledge, and what not?

Rom. 2. 22. 2 Pet. 2. 20, 21, 22. Heb. 6. 6, 7 Heb. 10. 26, 27, 28, 29. 1 Theſ. 2. 15, 16. Lev. 19. 8. Heb. 12. 16. Act. 5. 5, &c. Ezek. 22. 26. & 42. 20. & 44. 23. Anſw. I. SAcriledge is robbing God by the unjuſt alienation of holy things. And it is meaſured according as things are diverſified in Holineſs: As,

1. The greateſt Sacriledge is a prophane unholy alienating a Perſon to the Fleſh and the World, from God and his Love and his Service, who by Baptiſm was devoted to him. And ſo all wicked Chriſtians are groſly Sacrilegious.

2. The next is alienating conſecrated Perſons from the ſacred work and office, by depoſing Kings, or by unjuſt ſilencing or ſuſpending true Miniſters, or their caſting off Gods work themſelves. This is far greater Sacriledge than alienating Lands or Utenſils.

3. The next is the unjuſt alienating of Temples, Utenſils, Lands, Days, which were ſeparated by God himſelf.

4. And next ſuch as were juſtly conſecrated by Man; as is aforeſaid in the degrees of Holineſs.

II. It is not Sacriledge, 1. To ceaſe from the Miniſtry or other holy ſervice, when ſickneſs, diſability of body, or violence utterly diſable us.

Mat. 12. 5. 2. Nor to alienate Temples, Lands, Goods or Utenſils, when Providence maketh it needful to the Churches good: So the Fire in London hath cauſed a diminution of the number of Churches: So ſome Biſhops of old, ſold the Church Plate to relieve the Poor: And ſome Princes have ſold ſome Church Lands to ſave the Church and State in the neceſſities of a lawful War.

3. It is not Sacriledge to alienate that which Man devoted, but God accepted not, nor owned as appropriate to him (which his prohibition of ſuch a dedication is a proof of.) As if a Man devote his Wife to Chaſtity, or his Son to the Miniſtry againſt their wills: Or if a Man vow himſelf to the Miniſtry that is unable and hath no call: Or if ſo much Lands or Goods be conſecrated, as is ſuperfluous, uſeleſs and injurious to the common Welfare and the State. Alienation in theſe caſes is no ſin.

Queſt. 172. Are all religious and private Meetings, forbidden by Rulers, unlawful Conventicles? Or are any ſuch neceſſary?

Anſw. THough both ſuch Meetings and our Priſons tell us how greatly we now differ about this point, in the application of it to Perſons and our preſent caſe, yet I know no difference in the doctrinal reſolution of it among moſt ſober Chriſtians at all: (Which makes our caſe ſtrange.)

For ought I know, we are agreed,

Pſal. 1. 2, 5. & 22. 25. & 35. 18. & 40. 2, 10. Act. 21. ult Heb. 10. 20. Act. 20. 7. & 1. 15. & 2. 44. 1 Cor. 44. 23. I. 1. That it is more to the honour of the Church and of Religion and of God, and more to our ſafety and edification, to have God's Worſhip performed ſolemnly, publickly and in great aſſemblies, than in a corner, ſecretly, and with few.

2. That it is a great Mercy therefore where the Rulers allow the Church ſuch publick Worſhip.

3. That cæteris paribus all Chriſtians ſhould prefer ſuch publick worſhip before private; and no private meetings ſhould be kept up, which are oppoſite or prejudicial to ſuch publick meetings.

4. And therefore if ſuch meetings (or any that are unneceſſary to the ends of the Miniſtry, the ſervice of God and good of Souls) be forbidden by lawful Rulers, they muſt be forborn.

1 Cor. 16. 12. Rom. 16. 5 Act. 12. 12 Col. 4. 15. II. But we are alſo agreed, 1. That it is not the Place but the Preſence of the true Paſtors and People that make the Church.

2. That God may be acceptably worſhipped in all places when it is our duty.

3. That the ancient Churches and Chriſtians in times of Perſecutions ordinarily met in ſecret againſt the Rulers wills, and their Meetings were called Conventicles, (and ſlandered, which occaſioned Pliny's examination, and the right he did them.)

Mat. 18. 20. 4. That no Miniſter muſt forſake and give over his work while there is need, and he can do it.

1 Cor. 9. 16. 1 Theſ. 2. 15, 16. Act. 4. 19. See Dr. Hammond in loc. 1 Tim. 2. 8. Act. 8. 4. 1 Joh. 3. 17. 2 Tim. 4. 1, 2, 3. Heb. 10. 25. 5. That where there are many Thouſands of ignorant and ungodly Perſons, and the publick Miniſters, either through their paucity (proportioned to the People) or their diſability, or unwillingneſs, or negligence, or all, are inſufficient for all that publick and private Miniſterial work, which God hath appointed for the inſtruction, perſwaſion and Salvation of ſuch neceſſitous Souls, there is need of more Miniſterial help.

6. That in caſes of real (not counterfeit) neceſſity, they that are hindered from exerciſing their Miniſterial Office publickly, ſhould do it privately, if they have true Ordination, and the call of the Peoples neceſſity, deſire, and of opportunity, ſo be it they do it in that peaceable, orderly and quiet manner, as may truly promote the intereſt of Religion, and detract not from the lawful publick Miniſtry and Work.

See much of this caſe handled before Q. 109. and Q. 113. 7. That they that are forbidden to worſhip God publickly, unleſs they will commit ſome certain ſin, are ſo prohibited as that they ought not to do it on ſuch terms.

That the private meetings which are held on theſe forementioned terms, in ſuch caſes of neceſſity, are not to be forſaken, though prohibited: Though ſtill the honour of the Magiſtrate is to be preſerved, and obedience given him in all lawful things: And ſuch Meetings are not ſinful nor diſhonourable (to the aſſemblers;) for as Tertullian (and Dr. Heylin after him) ſaith, Cum pii, cum boni coeunt, non factio dicenda eſt, ſed curia: When pious, and good people meet (eſpecially as aforeſaid) it is not to be called a Faction, but a Court. Thus far I think we all agree.

And that the Church of England is really of this mind is certain; 1. In that they did congregate in private themſelves, in the time of Cromwell's Uſurpation, towards the end when he began to reſtrain the uſe of the Common Prayer. 2. In that they wrote for it: See Dr. Hide of the Church in the beginning. 3. Becauſe both in the reign of former Princes ſince the Reformation, and to this Day, many many laborious conforming Miniſters, have ſtill uſed to repeat their Sermons in their Houſes, where many of the People came to hear them: 4. Becauſe the Liturgy alloweth private Baptiſm, and reſtraineth not any number from being preſent, nor the Miniſter for inſtructing them in the uſe of Baptiſm (which is the ſum of Chriſtianity). 5. Becauſe the Liturgy commandeth the viſitation of the ſick, and alloweth the Miniſter there to pray and inſtruct the Perſon according to his own ability, about Repentance, Faith in Chriſt, and Preparation for Death and the Life to come; and forbiddeth not the Friends and Neighbours of the ſick to be preſent. 6. Becauſe the Liturgy and Canons allow private Communion with the ſick, lame or aged that cannot come to the aſſembly; where the nature of that holy work is to be opened, and the Euchariſtical work to be performed; and ſome muſt be preſent, and the number not limited. 7. And as theſe are expreſs Teſtimonies, that all private meetings are not diſallowed by the Church of England, ſo there are other inſtances of ſuch natural neceſſity as they are not to be ſuppoſed to be againſt: As, 1. For a Captain to pray, and read Scripture or good Books and ſing Pſalms with his Soldiers, and with Mariners at Sea, when they have no Miniſter. 2. There are many Thouſands or Hundred Thouſands in England, that ſome live ſo far from Church, and ſome are ſo weak that they can ſeldom go, and ſome Churches have not room for a quarter of the Pariſh; and none of the Thouſands now meant can read, and ſo neither can help themſelves, nor have a Miniſter that will do it; and Thouſands that when they have heard a Sermon cannot remember it, but loſe it preſently. If theſe that cannot read or remember, nor teach their own Families, nor go to Church, do take their Families, many of them, to ſome one Neighbours Houſe, where the Sermon is repeated, or the Bible or Liturgy read, methinks the Church ſhould not be againſt it.

But it muſt be ſtill remembred, that 1. Rulers that are Infidels, Papiſts, Hereticks or Perſecutors, that reſtrain Church-meetings to the injury of Mens Soul's muſt be diſtinguiſh'd from pious Princes that only reſtrain Hereticks and real Schiſmaticks for the Churches good. 2. And that times of Hereſie and Schiſm may make private meetings more dangerous than quiet times: And ſo even the Scottiſh Church forbad private meetings in the Separatiſts days of late. And when they do more hurt than good, and are juſtly forbidden, no doubt in that caſe, it is a duty to obey and to forbear them, as is aforeſaid.

Queſt. 173. What particular Directions for Order of Studies, and Books ſhould be obſerved by young Students.

§. 1. BEcauſe diſorder is ſo great a diſadvantage to young Students, and becauſe many have importuned me to name them ſome few of the beſt Books, becauſe they have no Time to read, nor money to buy many, I ſhall here anſwer theſe two demands.

§. 2. 1. The Order of their ſtudies is ſuch as reſpecteth their whole lives, or ſuch as reſpecteth every Day. It is the firſt which I now intend.

§. 3. Direct. 1. The knowledge of ſo much of Theology as is neceſſary to your own Duty and Salvation, is the firſt thing which you are to learn (when you have learnt to ſpeak.) Children have Souls to ſave; and their Reaſon is given them to uſe for their Creators ſervice and their Salvation. 1. They can never begin to learn that too ſoon which they were made and redeemed to learn, and which their whole lives muſt be employed in practiſing. And that which abſolute neceſſity requireth, and without which there is no Salvation. 3. And that which muſt tell a Man the only ultimate end which he muſt intend, in all the moral actions of his Life. For the right intention of our end is antecedent to all right uſe of means: And till this be done, a Man hath not well begun to live, nor to uſe his Reaſon; nor hath he any other work for his Reaſon, till this be firſt done. He liveth but in a continual Sin, that doth not make God and the publick good and his Salvation his end. Therefore they that would not have Children begin with Divinity, would have them ſerve the Devil and the Fleſh. God muſt be our Firſt and Laſt and All.

§. 4. Not that any exact or full Body or Method of Divinity is to be learnt ſo early. But 1. The Baptiſmal Covenant muſt be well opened betime, and frequently urged upon their Hearts. 2. Therefore the Creed, the Lords Prayer and Decalogue, muſt be opened to ſuch betime; that is, they muſt be wiſely catechiſed. 3. They muſt be taught the Scripture Hiſtory, eſpecially Geneſis and the Goſpel of Chriſt. 4. They muſt with the other Scriptures, read the moſt plain and ſuitable Books of practical Divines (after named.) 5. They muſt be kept in the company of ſuitable, wiſe and exemplary Chriſtians, whoſe whole converſation will help them to the Senſe and Love of Holineſs; and muſt be kept ſtrictly from perverting wicked company. 6. They muſt be frequently, lovingly, familiarly yet ſeriouſly, treated with about the ſtate of their own Souls, and made to know their need of Chriſt and of his holy Spirit, of Juſtification and Renovation. 7. They muſt be trained up in the Practice of Godlineſs, in Prayer, pious Speeches, and Obedience to God and Man. 8. They muſt be kept under the moſt powerful and profitable Miniſters of Chriſt that can be had. 9. They muſt be much urged to the ſtudy of their own Hearts; to know themſelves; what it is to be a Man, to have Reaſon, Free-will and an Immortal Soul: What it is to be a Child of lapſed Adam; and an unregenerate unpardoned Sinner: What it is to be a redeemed, and a ſanctified, juſtified Perſon, and an adopted Heir of Life eternal. And by cloſe examination to know which of theſe conditions is their own; to know what is their daily duty; and what their danger and what their temptations and impediments, and how to eſcape?

§. 5. For if once the Soul be truly ſanctified, then 1. Their Salvation is much ſecured, and the main work of their Lives is happily begun, and they are ready to die ſafely when ever God ſhall call them hence. 2. It will poſſeſs them with a right end, in all the ſtudies and labours of their Lives; which is an unſpeakable advantage, both for their pleaſing of God, and profiting themſelves and others; without which they will but prophane God's name and word, and turn the Miniſtry into a worldly fleſhly Life, and ſtudy and preach for Riches, Preferment, or Applauſe, and live as he Luk. 12. 18, 19. Soul, take thy eaſe, eat, drink and be merry; and they will make Theology the way to Hell, and ſtudy and preach their own Condemnation. 3. A holy Heart will be always under the Greateſt Motives; and therefore will be conſtantly and powerfully impelled (as well in ſecret as before others) to diligence in ſtudies and all good endeavours. 4. And it will make all ſweet and eaſie to them, as being a noble work, and reliſhing of God's Love, and the endleſs Glory to which it tendeth. A holy Soul will all the Year long be employed in ſacred Studies and Works, as a good Stomach at a Feaſt, with conſtant pleaſure! And then O how happily will all go on! When a carnal Perſon with a dull, unwilling, weary Mind, taketh now and then a little, when his carnal intereſt it ſelf doth prevail againſt his more ſlothful ſenſual inclinations; but he never followeth it with hearty affections, and therefore ſeldom with good ſucceſs. 4. And a holy Soul will be a continual Treaſury and Fountain of holy matter, to pour out to others, when they come to the ſacred Miniſtry; ſo that ſuch a one can ſay more from the feeling and expe-experience of his Soul, than another can in a long time gather from his Books. 5. And that which he ſaith will come warm to the hearers in a more lively experimental manner, than uſual carnal Preachers ſpeak. 6. And it is liker to be attended by a greater Bleſſing from God. 7. And there are many Controverſies in the Church, which an experienced holy Perſon, (cæteris paribus) hath great advantage in above all others, to know the right, and be preſerved from errors.

§. 6. Direct. 2. Let young Mens time (till about eighteen, nineteen or twenty;) be ſpent in the improvement of their Memories, rather than in ſtudies that require much judgment: Therefore let them take that time to get Organical Knowledge; ſuch as are the Latin and Greek Tongues firſt and chiefly, and then the Hebrew, Chaldee, Syriack and Arabick; with the exacteſt acquaintance with the true Precepts of Logick: And let them learn ſome Epitome of Logick without Book. In this time alſo let them be much converſant in Hiſtory; both Civil, Scholaſtical (of Philoſophers, Orators, Poets, &c.) and Eccleſiaſtical. And then take in as much of the Mathematicks as their more neceſſary ſtudies will allow them time for (ſtill valuing Knowledge according to the various degrees of uſefulneſs.)

§. 7. Direct. 3. When you come to ſeek after more abſtruſe and real Wiſdom, join together the ſtudy of Phyſicks and Theology; and take not your Phyſicks as ſeparated from or independent on Theology; but as the ſtudy of God in his works, and of his works as leading to himſelf. Otherwiſe you will be but like a Scrivener or Printer, who maketh his Letters well, but knoweth not what they ſignifie.

§. 8. Direct. 4. Unite all ὀντολογία or knowledge of real entities into one ſcience: both Spirits and Bodies; God being taken in as the firſt and laſt, the Original, Director and End of all: And ſtudy not the doctrine of Bodies alone, as ſeparated from Spirits: For it is but an imaginary ſeparation, and a deluſion to Mens minds. Or if you will call them by the name of ſeveral Sciences, be ſure you ſo link thoſe ſeverals together that the due dependance of Bodies on Spirits, and of the Paſſive nature on the Active may ſtill be kept diſcernable: And then they will be one while you call them divers.

§. 9. Direct. 5. When you ſtudy only to know what is true, you muſt begin at the Primum cognoſcibile, and ſo riſe in ordine cognoſcendi: But when you would come to ſee things in their proper Order, by a more perfect ſatisfying knowledge, you muſt draw up a ſynthetical ſcheme, juxta ordinem eſſendi, where God muſt be the firſt and laſt; the firſt efficient Governour and End of all.

§. 10. Direct. 6. Your firſt ſtudy of Philoſophy therefore, ſhould be, of your ſelves; to know a Man. And the Knowledge of Mans Soul is a part ſo neceſſary, ſo near, ſo uſeful, that it ſhould take up both the firſt and largeſt room in all your Phyſicks, or knowledge of Gods Works: Labour therefore to be accurate in this.

§. 11. Direct. 7. With the knowledge of your ſelves join the knowledge of the reſt of the works of God; but according to the uſefulneſs of each part to your moral duty; and as all are related to God and You.

§. 12. Direct. 8. Be ſure in all your progreſs that you keep a diſtinct knowledge of things certain and things uncertain, ſearchable and unſearchable, revealed and unrevealed; and lay the firſt as your foundation, yea rather keep the knowledge of them as your Science of Phyſick by it ſelf, and let no obſcurity in the reſt cauſe you to queſtion certain things; nor ever be ſo perverſe as to try things known, by things unknown, and to argue à minùs notis. Lay no ſtreſs on ſmall or doubtful things.

§. 13. Direct. 9. Metaphyſicks as now taken is a mixture of Organical and Real Knowledge; and part of it belongeth to Logick (the Organical part,) and the reſt is Theology, and Pneumatology, and the higheſt parts of Ontology, or Real Science.

§. 14. Direct. 10. In ſtudying Philoſophy, 1. See that you neither neglect any helps of thoſe that have gone before you, under pretence of taking nothing upon truſt, and of ſtudying the naked things themſelves: (For if every Man muſt begin all a new, as if he had been the firſt Philoſopher, knowledge will make but ſmall proficiency.) 2. Nor yet ſtick not in the bare belief of any Author whatſoever, but ſtudy all things in their naked natures and proper evidences, though by the helps that are afforded you by others. For it is not ſcience but humane belief, elſe, whoever you take it from.

§. 15. Direct. 11. So certain are the numerous errors of Philoſophers, ſo uncertain a multitude of their aſſertions, ſo various their ſects, and ſo eaſie it is for any to pull down much which the reſt have built, and ſo hard to ſet up any comely ſtructure that others in like manner may not caſt down; that I cannot perſwade you to fall in with any one ſort or ſect, who yet have publiſhed their ſentiments to the World. The Platoniſts made very noble attempts in their enquiries after ſpiritual Being: But they run into many unproved fanaticiſms, and into divers errors, and want the deſirable helps of true method. The wit of Ariſtotle was wonderful for ſubtilty and ſolidity. His knowledge vaſt; his method (oft) accurate; but many precarious, yea erroneous conceptions and aſſertions, are ſo placed by him, as to have a troubling and corrupting influence into all the reſt: The Epicureans or Democratiſts, were ſtill and juſtly the contempt of all the ſober ſects; and our late Somatiſts that follow them, yea and Gaſſendus, and many that call themſelves Carteſians, yea Carteſius himſelf, much more Berigardus, Regius and Hobbes, do give ſo much more to meer Matter and Motion, than is truly due, and know or ſay ſo much too little of Spirits, active Natures, vital Powers, which are the true principles of motion, that they differ as much from true Philoſophers, as a Carcaſs or a Clock from a living Man. The Stoicks had noble Ethical Principles, and they (and the Platoniſts with the Cynicks) were of the beſt Lives: But their writings are moſt loſt, and little of their Phyſicks fully known to us, and that alſo hath its errors. Patricius is but a Platoniſt ſo taken with the nature of Light, as inſiſting on that in Fanatical terms, to leave out a great deal more that muſt be conjoined. Telæſius doth the like by Heat and Cold, Heaven and Earth, and among many obſervable things, hath much that is unſound and of ill conſequence. Campanella hath improved him, and hath many hints of better Principles (eſpecially in his Primalities) than all the reſt: But he fanatically runs them up into ſo many unproved and vain, yea and miſtaken ſuperſtructures, as that no true body of Phyſicks can be gathered out of all his works. The attempt that pious Commenius hath made in his ſmall Manual hath much that is of worth; but far ſhort of accurateneſs. The Hermetical Philoſophers have no true method of Philoſphy among them; and to make their three or five Principles to be ſo many Elements, or ſimple bodies, conſtituting all compounds, and form up a ſyſteme of Philoſophy on their ſuppoſitions, will be but a trifle and not to ſatisfie judicious Minds; eſpecially conſidering how defective their Philoſophy is made by their omiſſions. Lullius and his followers fit not their Method to the true order of the Matter. Scaliger, Scheggius, Wendelme and Sennertus (eſpecially in his Hypomnemata) were great Men, and have many excellent things; But too much of Ariſtotles goeth for current with them. My worthy, learned and truly pious friend Mr. Sam. Gott in his new Book on Gen. 1. hath many excellent notions, and much that is ſcarce elſewhere to be met with: But the tedious Paragraphs, the defect of Method, and ſeveral unproveable particulars, make it like all humane works imperfect.

Therefore if I muſt direct you according to my judgment, I muſt adviſe you, 1. To ſuppoſe that Philoſophers are all ſtill in very great darkneſs, and there is much confuſion, defectiveneſs, error and diviſion and uncertainty among them. 2. Therefore addict not your ſelves abſolutely to any Sect of them. 3. Let your firſt ſtudies of them all leave room for the changing of your judgment, and do not too haſtily fix on any of their ſentiments as ſure, till you have heard what others ſay, and with ripened underſtandings have deeply and long ſtudied the things themſelves. 4. Chooſe out ſo much of the Certainties and uſeful parts of Phyſicks as you can reach to, and make them know their places in ſubſerviency to your holy principles and ends; and rather be well content with ſo much, than to looſe too much time in a vain fatigation of your brains for more.

I have made ſome attempt to draw out ſo much, eſpecially de Mundo & de Homine, in my Methodus Theologiæ, though I expect it ſhould no more ſatisfie others, than any of theirs have ſatisfied me.

§. 16. Direct. 12. When you have well ſtated your Ontology, or Real Science, then review your Logick and Organical part of Metaphyſicks; and ſee that Verba rebus aptentur; fetch then your words and Organical notions from the Nature of the Things. Abundance are confounded by taking up Logical Notions firſt which are unſuitable to true Phyſical beings.

§. 17. Direct. 13. Somewhat of Ethicks may be well learnt of Philoſophers, but it's nothing to the Scriptures Chriſtian Ethicks.

§. 18. Direct. 14. Somewhat of artificial Rhetorick and Oratory ſhould be known: But the Oratory which is moſt natutal, from the evidence of things; well managed by a good underſtanding and elocution, which hath leaſt of appearing art or affectation, is ever the moſt effectual, and of beſt eſteem.

§. 19. Direct. 15. The doctrine of Politicks, eſpecially of the Nature of Government and Laws in general, is of great uſe to all that will ever underſtand the Nature of Gods Government and Laws, that is, of Religion. Though there be no neceſſity of knowing the Government aud Laws of the Land or of other Countries, any further than is neceſſary to our obedience or outward concernments, yet ſo much of Government and Laws as Nature and Scripture make common to all particular Forms and Countries, muſt be known by him that will underſtand Morality or Divinity, or will ever ſtudy the Laws of the Land And it is a prepoſterous courſe, and the way of ignorance and error, for a Divine to ſtudy Gods Laws, and a Lawyer Mans Laws, before either of them know, in general what a Law, or what Government is, as nature notifieth it to us.

§. 20. Direct. 16. When you come to Divinity, I am not for their way that would have you begin with the Fathers, and thence form a body of Divinity to your ſelves: If every young ſtudent muſt be put on ſuch a task, we may have many Religions quickly, but ſhall certainly have much ignorance and error. We muſt not be ſo blind or unthankful to God as to deny that later times have brought forth abundance of Theological writings, incomparably more methodical, judicious, full, clear, and excellently fitted alſo by application, to the good of Souls, than any that are known to us ſince the writing of the ſacred Scriptures. Reverence of antiquity hath its proper place and uſe, but is not to make Men Fools, Non-proficients, or Contemners of Gods greater Mercies.

My advice therefore is, that you begin with a conjunction of Engliſh Catechiſms, and the Confeſſions of all the Churches, and the practical holy writings of our Engliſh Divines: And that you never ſeparate theſe aſunder. Theſe practical Books do commonly themſelves contain the Principles, and do preſs them in ſo warm a working manner as is likeſt to bring them to the Heart: And till they are there, they are not received according to their uſe, but kept as in the Porch. Get then fix or ſeven of the moſt judicious Catechiſms and compare them well together, and compare all the Confeſſions of the Churches, where you may be ſure that they put thoſe which they account the weightieſt and ſureſt truths.) And with them read daily the moſt ſpiritual heart-moving Treatiſes, of Regeneration, and our Covenant with God in Chriſt, of Repentance, Faith, Love, Obedience, Hope, and of a Heavenly Mind and Life; as alſo of Prayer and other particular Duties, and of Temptations and particular Sins.

I mention not your reading the Scripture, as ſuppoſing it muſt be your conſtant work

And when you have gone through the Catechiſms, read over three or four of the ſoundeſt ſyſtemes of Divinity. And after that proceed to ſome larger Theſes, and then to the ſtudy of the cleareſt and exacteſt Methodiſts: And think not that you well underſtand Divinity, till 1. You know it as methodized and jointed in a due Scheme, and the ſeveral parts of it in their ſeveral Schemes, ſeeing you know not the beauty nor the true ſenſe of things, if you know them not in their proper places, where they ſtand in their ſeveral reſpects to other points: And 2. Till it be wrought into your very Hearts, and digeſted into a holy nature: For when all is done, it is only a holy and heavenly Life, that will prove you wiſe, and make you happy, and give you ſolid Peace and Comfort.

§. 21. Direct. 17. When you have gone ſo far, ſet your ſelves to read the Ancients: 1. And take them in order as they lived. 2. Obſerve moſt the Hiſtorical parts, what doctrines, and practiſes de facto did then obtain. 3. Some muſt be read wholly, and ſome but in part. 4. Councils and Church Hiſtory here have a chief place.

§. 22. Direct. 18. With them read the beſt Commentators on the Scriptures, old and new.

§. 23. Direct. 19. And then ſet your ſelves to the ſtudy of Church-Controverſies (though thoſe that the Times make neceſſary muſt be ſooner looked into). Look firſt and moſt into thoſe which your own Conſciences and Practice require your acquaintance with: And above all here, read well thoſe Writings that confute Atheiſts and Infidels, and moſt ſolidly prove the truth of the Chriſtian Religion: And then thoſe that defend the greateſt points. And think not much to beſtow ſome time and labour in reading ſome of the old School Divines.

§. 24. Direct. 20. When you come to form up your Belief of certainties in Religion, take in nothing as ſure and neceſſary, which the ancient Churches did not receive. Many other things may be taken for truths; and in perſpicuity and method the late times much excel them: But Chriſtian Religion is ſtill the ſame thing, and therefore we muſt have no other Religion in the great and neceſſary parts than they had.

§. 25. Direct. 21. Still remember, that Mens various capacities do occaſion a great variety of Duties: Some Men have clear and ſtrong Underſtandings, by nature: Theſe ſhould ſtudy Things as much as Books; for poſſibly they may excel and correct their Authors. Some are naturally of duller or leſs-judicious heads, that with no ſtudy of Things can reach half ſo high, as they may do by ſtudying the Writings of thoſe who are wiſer than ever they are like to be. Theſe muſt take more on truſt from their Authors, and confeſs their weakneſs.

§. 26. Direct. 22. After or with all Controverſies, be well verſt in the Writings of thoſe Reconcilers, who pretend to narrow or end the differences.

For

For uſually they are ſuch as know more than the Contenders.

I proceed now to give you ſome Names of Books.

Queſt. 174. What Books eſpecially of Theology ſhould one chooſe, who for want of Money or Time, can read but few?

Anſw. General. THE truth is, 1. It is not the reading of many Books which is neceſſary to make a Man wiſe or good: But the well reading of a few, could he be ſure to have the beſt. 2. And it is not poſſible to read over very many on the ſame ſubjects, without a great deal of loſs of precious time: 3. And yet the reading of as many as is poſſible tendeth much to the increaſe of knowledge, and were the beſt way, if greater matters were not that way unavoidably to be omitted: Life therefore being ſhort, and work great, and Knowledge being for Love and Practice, and no Man having leiſure to learn all things, a wiſe Man muſt be ſure to lay hold on that which is moſt uſeful and neceſſary. 4. But ſome conſiderable acquaintance with many Books is now become by accident neceſſary to a Divine. 1. Becauſe unhappily a young Student knoweth not which are the beſt, till he hath tryed them: And when he ſhould take another Mans word, he knoweth not whoſe word it is that he ſhould take: For among grave Men, accounted great Scholars, it's few that are truly judicious and wiſe, and he that is not wiſe himſelf cannot know who elſe are ſo indeed: And every Man will commend the Authors that are of his own opinion. And if I commend you to ſome Authors above others, what do I but commend my own judgment to you, even as if I commended my own Books, and perſwaded you to read them: When another Man of a different judgment will commend to you Books of a different ſort. And how knoweth a raw Student which of us is in the right? 2. Becauſe no Man is ſo full and perfect as to ſay all that is ſaid by all others: But though one Man excel in one or many reſpects, another may excel him in ſome particulars, and ſay that which he omitteth, or miſtaketh in. 3. But eſpecially becauſe many errors and adverſaries have made many Books neceſſary to ſome, for to know what they ſay, and to know how to confute them, eſpecially the Papiſts, whoſe way is upon pretence of Antiquity and Univerſality, to carry every Controverſie into a Wood of Church Hiſtory, and ancient Writers, that there you may firſt be loſt, and then they may have the finding of you: And if you cannot anſwer every corrupted or abuſed Citation of theirs out of Councils and Fathers, they triumph as if they had juſtified their Church-tyranny. 4. And the very ſubjects that are to be underſtood are numerous, and few Men write of all. 5. And on the ſame ſubject Men have ſeveral Modes of writing: As one excelleth in accurate Method, and another in clear convincing argumentation, and another in an affectionate taking ſtyle: And the ſame Book that doth one, cannot well do the other, becauſe the ſame ſtyle will not do it.

Object. But the ancient Fathers uſed not ſo many Books as we do, no not one for our hundreds: And yet we honour them above the Neotericks: They lived before theſe Libraries had a being. Yea, they exhort Divines to be learned in the holy Scriptures, and the fourth Council of Carthage forbad the reading of the Heathen Books: And many Hereticks are accuſed by the Fathers and Hiſtorians, as being ſtudied in Logick, and curious in common Sciences: And Paul ſaith, that the Scriptures are able to make us wiſe unto Salvation.

Anſw. 1. And yet the New Teſtament was written (or moſt of it) after the Scriptures which Paul is commonly ſuppoſed to mean, and ſome of it, after he ſaid ſo, which ſheweth that he meant not to exclude more writing.

2. The Scriptures are ſufficient for their proper uſe, which is to be a Law of Faith and Life, if they be underſtood. But 1. They are not ſufficient for that which they were never intended for: 2. And we may by other Books be greatly helpt in underſtanding them.

3. If other Books were not needful, Teachers were not needful: For writing is but the moſt advantagious way of teaching, by fixed Characters, which fly not from our Memory as tranſient words do, And who is it that underſtandeth the Scriptures that never had a Teacher? And why ſaid the Eunuch, [How ſhould I (underſtand what I read) unleſs ſome Man guide me?] Acts 8. 31. And why did Chriſt ſet Teachers in his Church to the end, till it be perfected, Epheſ. 4. 11, 12, 13. if they muſt not teach the Church unto the end? Therefore they may write unto the end.

4. Reverence to Antiquity muſt not make us blind or unthankful. Abundance of the Fathers were unlearned Men, and of far leſs knowledge than ordinary Divines have now: And the chief of them were far ſhort in knowledge of the chiefeſt that God of late hath given us. And how ſhould it be otherwiſe, when their helps were ſo much leſs than ours?

5. Knowledge hath abundantly encreaſed ſince Printing was invented: Therefore Books have been a means to it.

6. The Fathers then wrote voluminouſly: Therefore they were not againſt more writing.

7. Moſt of the Biſhops and Councils that cried down Common Learning, had little of it themſelves, and therefore knew not how to judge of it: No more than good Men now that want it.

8. They lived among Heathens that gloried ſo in their own Learning, as to oppoſe it to the Word of God, (as may be ſeen in Julian, and Porphyry, and Celſus:) Therefore Chriſtians oppoſed it, and contemned it; and were afraid while it was ſet in competition with the Scriptures, leſt it ſhould draw Men to Infidelity, if overvalued.

9. And finally, the truth is, that the ſacred Scriptures are now too much undervalued, and Philoſophy much overvalued by many both as to Evidence and Uſefulneſs: And a few plain certain truths which all our Catechiſms contain, well preſſed and practiſed, would make a better Church and Chriſtians, than is now to be found among us all. And I am one that after all that I have written, do heartily wiſh that this were the ordinary ſtate of our Churches. But yet by accident much more is needful, as is proved: 1. For the fuller underſtanding of theſe Principles: 2. For the defending of them (eſpecially by thoſe that are called to that work): 3. To keep a Miniſter from that Contempt which may elſe fruſtrate his labours: 4. And to be ornamental and ſubſervient to the ſubſtantial Truths.

And now I will anſwer the Queſtion more particularly in this order.

I. I will name you the Pooreſt or Smalleſt Library that is tolerable.

II. The Poorer (though not the pooreſt); where a competent addition is made.

III. The Poor Mans Library, which yet addeth ſomewhat to the former, but cometh ſhort of a rich and ſumptuous Library.

I. THE Pooreſt Library is, 1. The Sacred Bible: 2. A Concordance (Downames the leaſt, or Newmans the beſt). 3. A ſound Commentary or Annotations, either Diodates, the Engliſh Annotations, or the Dutch. 4. Some Engliſh Catechiſms, (the Aſſemblies two, Mr. Gouges, Mr. Crooks Guide,) Ameſius his Medulla Theologia & Caſus Conſcientiæ (which are both in Latin and Engliſh) and his Bellarminus Enarvatus. 5. Some of the ſoundeſt Engliſh Books which open the Doctrine of Grace, Juſtification, fication, and Free-will and Duty; as Mr. Truman's Great Propitiation, Mr. Bradshaw of Justification, Mr. Gibbons Sermon of Justification, in the Morning Exercises at St. Giles in the Fields, Mr. Hotchkis of Forgiveness of Sin. 6. As many Affectionate Practical English Writers as you can get; especially Mr. Richard Allen's Works, Mr. Gournall's, Dr. Preston, Dr. Sibbs, Mr. Robert Bolton, Mr. Whateley, Mr. Reyner, Mr. Scudder, Mr. T. Ford, Mr. How of Blessedness, Mr. Swinocke, Mr. Gouges, The Practice of Piety, The Whole Duty of Man, Dr. Hammonds Practical Catechism, Dr. Pierson on the Creed, Dr. Downame on the Lords Prayer, Mr. Dod on the Commandments, Bishop Andrews on the Commandments, Mr. Jo. Brinsleyes True Watch, Mr. Greenhams Works, Mr. Hildersham's Works, Mr. Anthony Burges Works, Mr. Perkins Works, Dr. Harris Works, Mr. Burroughs, Mr. Thomas Hooker, Mr. Pinkes Sermons, Jo. Downames Christian Warfare, Richard Rogers, John Rogers of Faith and Love, Dr. Stoughton, Dr. Thomas Tailor, Mr. Elton, Mr. Daniel Dike, Jeremy Dike, Mr. Jo. Ball of Faith, of the Covenant, &c. Culverwell of Faith, Mr. Ranew, Mr. Teate, Mr. Shaw, Mr. Rawlet, Mr. Janeway, Mr. Vincent, Mr. Doolittle, Mr. Samuel Wards Sermons, Mr. W. Fenner, Mr. Rutherfords Letters, Mr. Joseph Allens Life and Letters, and Treatise of Conversion, Mr. Samuel Clarks Lives and his Martyrology, The Morning Exercises at St. Giles Cripplegate, and at St. Giles in the Fields, Mr. Benjamin Baxters Sermons, Mr. George Hopkins Salvation from Sin, Dr. Edward Reignolds, Mr. Meades Works, Mr. Vines Sermons, Henry Smith, Samuel Smith, Tho. Smiths, Mr. Strong, Jos. Simonds; as many of them as you can get. 7. And for other Learning, Alstedius his Encyclopædia alone; supposing that you are past the Grammar School, and have necessary Lexicons, specially Martinius and Leighs Critica Sacra: If you can have more, get Bellarm. de Scriptor. Eccles. Cooks Censura Patrum, Sculteti Medulla Patrum, Clem. Rom. Justin, Tertullian & Cyprian; Helvici Chronolog. Hammonds and Beza's Annotations, with Junius & Tremel. Calvin on the New Testament: Thaddæi Conciliationes, Alstedii Definit. & distinct. Castanei Distinct. Ursini Catechis. Wendelini Theolog. Snecani Method. Descriptio, Davenants Works, and Camero's, le Blank's Theses, Grotius de Satisfact. Caranza's Epitom. Concil. Ushers Annals, and Answer to the Jesuite, & de Success. Eccles. Stat. Drelincourts and Pooles Manual, Corpus Confessionum.

II. When you can get more, the next Rank must have all the former with these Additions following.

I. FOR Lexicons; 1. For Latin besides Goldman, or Holyoke or rather Huttons Morellius, or Cowper, get Martinii Onomasticon: 2. For Greek, Scapula, Pasor, Leigh, Simpson and Henricpetri Lexicon. 3. For Hebrew, Buxtorfe, Schindler, Leigh.

II. For Logick: 1. Fasciculus Logicus, or Smith, Keckerman, Burgersdicius. 2. Of the moderate Ramists that take in both, Henry Gutberleth.

III. For Physicks: 1. Magirus, Combachius, Burgersdicius, Wendeline, and Sennertus. 2. Commenius. 3. Mr. Gott. 4. Bacon and Mr. Boile.

IV. More particularly, De Anima, Tolet, Melanthon with Vives and Amerbachius (they are Printed together in one Book) Sennerti Hypomnemata, Scaligers Exercitations.

V. De Corpore Humano, Galen, Fernelius, Bartholine, Harvy de Generatione animalium.

VI. De Motu, Mousnerius, Dr. Wallis.

VII. Of Astronomy, Gassendus, Riolanus.

VIII. Of Geography: Cluverius or Abbot, Ortelius, Mercator, Heylin, the Globe or Map. Georg. Nubiens.

IX. Of Mathematicks in general: Euclide, Barrow, Rami Schol. cum prolegom. Snellii, Bettinus, Herigone.

X. Arithmetick in particular: Record, Wingate, &c.

XI. Geometry: Ramus cum Comment. Snellii, & Schoners, Metii, Dr. Wallis, &c.

XII. Musick: Tho. Morley, Simpson.

XIII. Of Chronology and General History: Helvici Chronol. Ushers Annals, Idea Histor. Universf. Bucholtzer, Calvisius, Functius, Jacob. Capellus, Raleigh.

XIV. Particular History is endless: Among so many I scarce know what to say more, than read as many as you can: Especially,

1. The Roman Historians, (which are joyned together.)
2. The Greek Historians.
3. Diog. Laertius and Eunapius de vitis Philosoph.
4. Plutarchs Lives.
5. Of England, Matth. Paris, Hovedon, Cambden, Speed, Rushworths Collections.
6. Of France, Thuanus, (who also taketh in most of the Europæan History of his Time) Commines, Serres.
7. Of Belgia, Grimston, and Grotius, and Strada.
8. Of Germany, the Collections of Pistorius, Ruberus and Freherus.
9. Of Italy, Guicciardine.
10. Knowles Turkish History, and Leunclavius.
11. Of Abassia, Godignus, and Damianus a Goes.
12. Of Judæa, George Sandyes Travels, and Brocardus.
13. Of Armenia and Tartary, Haitho Armenius, and the rest in the Novus Orbis; especially Paulus Venetus there.
14. Of Africa and India, Leo Afer, and Ludovicus Romanus.
15. Of China, Siam, Japan, &c. Varenius, Maffæi Histor. Indica cum Epist. Jesuit. Alvarez and Martinius.
16. Of Indostan, Terry.
18. Of Muscovy, Sigismundus.
18. Of Sweden, Olaus Magnus (but fabulous).
19. Of Scotland, Jo. Major, Hector Boethius, Dempster.
20. Of Antiquities, Rosinus Rom. Antiquit. Godwin, Selden de diis Syris, &c. Ferrarii Lexicon.

XV. Of Church History: Josephus, Eusebius, Russinus Tripartite, above all Socrates and Sozomen, Orosius, Sulpitius Severus, Theodoret, Victor Uticensis, Beda, Jacobus a Vitriaco, Nicephorus Callist. Platina & Massonius de vitis Pontif. Abbas Urspergensis, Sleidan, Micrælius, Gentii Hist. Jud. Molani Martyrolog. Clarks Martyrol. Hottinger, Illyrici Catalogus Testium Veritatis, or Morneys Mystery of Iniquity. Perin and Morlands History of Piedmont, and the Waldenses, Histor. Persecut. Bohem. Sculteti Annales, & curriculum vitæ suæ: Knoxes and Spotswood's Hist. Scot. Regenvolscius Hist. Eccl. Sclavon. Ushers Primordia Eccles. Brit. Parkers Antiquitates Eccles. Brit. Melchior Adami Vitæ Theolog. Medicorum, Juris-Consult. & Philosoph. German. Fullers Church History, Clarks Lives, many particular Lives, as Jewells by Dr. Humphry, Mr. Jos. Allein, &c. Boltons, &c. Also read the Epistles of Melanthon, Calvin, Beza, Saravia.

XVI. Of Medicine, Study no more than such as Horstius de Sanitate Studiosorum tuenda, or Follinus or Gratcrolus, or an Herbal, except you can go quite through with it; lest by a half skill you kill your self or others: But take 1. Sufficient exercise ad Sudorem, (aliquando largiorem, in habitu seroso vel pituitoso). 2. Temperance: 3. A pleased and contented mind. 4. Warmth and avoiding inward and outward Cold: 5. And experience for your best Physick; and meddle with no more without necessity, and the advice of a very able experienced Man.

XVIII. More of the Fathers I need not Name: If you can get and read them, you may find their Names; e. g. in Bellarmin. de Script. Eccleſ. Get the Bibliothec. Patrum of de la Bigne, and Macarius Hom. Ephrem Syrus, (plain honeſt things) Theodoret, Cyril Hieroſ. Cyril Alexand. Iſidore Peluſiota, Theophylact & Oecumenius, Sedulius & Primaſius, Remigius, Beda, &c. But many of them are very weak and dry. The chief uſe of the Fathers is to know Hiſtorically what Doctrine was then taught.

XIX. Schoolmen more; *Bonaventure, Alenſis, Cajetane, Bannez Biel, Cameracenſis, Franc. Mayro, Capreolus, Ri. Armachanus, Bradwardine, Faber Faventinus, Hervæus, Joh. & Fr. Pici Mirandul. Fr. XX. Antipapiſts: Pappus of their Contradictions; Gentiletus, Mortons Apology and Grand Impoſture. Buckeridge Roffenſis for Kings: Crakenthorpe; Paræus cont. Bellarm. Junius on Bellar. Birkbeck's Proteſtants Evidence, Hunnii Eccleſ. Rom. non eſt Chriſt. Holtoman, Brutum fulmen, &c. Euſebius Captivus, Joh Crocius de Schiſmate; Jewel, all Whitaker, Andrews Tortura Torti, Wotton, Dr. Jer. Tailors Diſſwaſive. But they are almoſt numberleſs.

He that would have more Booksmay ſee Voetius Bibliothec. and many other Catalogues.

Note 1. THat theſe may ſeem too many though they are few to a full and rich Library.

2. That it is not my Advice that you read over all theſe or half; for that would but make them a ſnare for ſinning, and waſte of time: But a Miniſter of the Goſpel ſhould have more Books by him than he can read over, for particular uſes, and to ſee the Authors Judgment occaſionally, and to try other Mens Citations.

3. That a Miniſter muſt neither ſtudy the Matter without the help of other Mens Studies by Reading much; nor yet read much without ſtudying the Thing it ſelf.

4. That though a Man muſt not ſpeak or write before he knoweth what and how, yet thus Exerciſing the Knowledge that we have doth greatly increaſe it. And no Miniſter muſt be ſtudying, when he ſhould be Preaching, Praying, Catechizing or Viſiting or Inſtructing his Flock.

5. It is but few Men that are born with an acumen fit for Writings and Controverſies; thoſe few muſt read the more to be fit for it: The reſt may take up with ſuch Preparations as they have uſe for, and exerciſe them, viz. in the Paſtoral overſight of the Flocks, and propagating plain and neceſſary Truths: And therefore though I am one that have been thought to burden Mens underſtandings with Methods, Diſtinctions, Directions and Controverſies, it is but few that I perſwade to uſe them; and am as much as any for moſt Mens adhering to plain Fundamentals, and Truths of daily uſe, and love and honour thoſe that go no further, and are faithful in this Work: So be it, they have not the Pride to think that they know more than they do, and to wrangle againſt that which they underſtand not, and ſet not the Church on Fire as ancient Ignorance did, by accuſing thoſe of Hereſie that knew more than themſelves, when they got but the Throne or the Major Vote.

6. That though I chiefly commend Syſtemes of Theology, I know not one whoſe Method ſatisfieth me, as well agreeing with Scripture, and the Matter (elſe I had not troubled my ſelf ſo much to ſeek a right Method, and propoſe what I found): And I think no common Method more genuine, than theirs that expound the Creed, Lords Prayer, and Decalogue, and the Sacraments, as the ſum of all.

7. I mention none of my own Writings; for it will ſeem vanity: But, as many as they are, I wrote none which I thought needleſs at the time of writing them.

8. Though none ſhould have ſo great fitneſs for the Holy Education of Children and Government of Families as Miniſters, yet ſo great is the work of overſeeing the Flock, requiring more Time and Parts than all that we have, and ſo great are the Matters of our ſtudies and labours, requiring our total and moſt ſerious Thoughts that I earneſtly adviſe all that can poſſibly to live ſingle and without a Family, leſt they marr their work by a divided mind: For nunquam bene fit, quod fit præoccupato animo, ſaith Hierome truly.

The whole Man, and whole Time is all too little in ſo great a Work.

The End of the Third TOME.

Chriſtian Politicks.

READER,

THink not by the Title of this Part, that I am doing the ſame Work which I lately revok'd in my Political Aphoriſms: Though I concluded that Book to be quaſi non ſcriptum, I told you I recanted not the Doctrine of it, which is for the Empire of God, and the Intereſt of Government, Order, and Honeſty in the World. This is no place to give you the Reaſons of my Revocation, beſides that it offended my Superiors, and exerciſed the Tongues of ſome in places, where other Matters would be more profitable: Paſs by all that concerneth our particular States and Times, and you may know by that what Principles of Policy I judge Divine. And experience teacheth me, That it is beſt for Men of my Profeſſion, to meddle with no more, but to leave it to the Contzeus, the Arniſæus's, and other Jeſuites, to promote their cauſe by Voluminous Politicks: The Popes falſe named Church, is a Kingdom, and his Miniſters may write of Politicks more congruouſly, and (it ſeems) with leſs offence than we. Saith the Geographia Nubienſis aptly [There is a certain King dwelling at Rome, called The Pope, &c.] when he goeth to deſcribe him. Nothing well ſuits with our Function, but the pure Doctrine of Salvation: Let States-men and Lawyers mind the reſt.

Two things I muſt apologize for in this Part. 1. That it is maimed by defect of thoſe Directions to Princes, Nobles, Parliament-men, and other Magiſtrates, on whoſe duty the happineſs of Kingdoms, Churches, and the World dependeth. To which I anſwer, That thoſe muſt teach them whom they will hear: While my Reaſon and Experience forbid me, as an unacceptable Perſon, to ſpeak to them without a ſpecial invitation, I can bear the Cenſures of Strangers, who knew not them, or me. I am not ſo proud as to expect that Men ſo much above me, ſhould ſtoop to read any Directions of mine; much leſs to think me fit to teach them. Every one may reprove a poor Servant, or a Beggar; it is part of their Priviledge.) But great Men muſt not be ſo much as admoniſhed, by any but themſelves, and ſuch as they will hear. At leaſt nothing is a duty, which a Man hath reaſon to think, is like to do much more harm than good. And my own judgment is much againſt pragmatical preſumptuous Preachers, who are over-forward to meddle with their Governors, or their Affairs, and think that God ſendeth them to reprove Perſons, and things that are ſtrange to them, and above them; and vent their diſtaſtes upon uncertain Reports, or without a Call.

2. And I expect both to be blamed and miſ-underſtood, for what I here ſay in the Confutation of Maſter Richard Hooker his Political Principles, and my own Citation of B. Bilſon, and ſuch others: But they muſt obſerve, 1. That it is not all in Maſter Hookers Firſt and Eighth Book, which I gainſay; but the principle of the Peoples being the Fountain of Authority, or that Kings receive their Office it ſelf from them, with the conſequents hereof. How far the People have, in any Countries, the power of electing the Perſons, Families, or Forms of Government, or how far Nature giveth them propriety, and the conſequents of this, I meddle not with at all. 2. Nor do I chuſe Maſter Hooker out of any envy to his name and honour, but I confeſs I do it, to let Men know truly whoſe Principles theſe are. And if any (cauſeleſly) queſtion, whether the Eighth (imperfect) Book be in thoſe Paſſages his own, let them remember that the ſum of all that I confute, is in his Firſt Book, which is old, and highly honoured, by——you know whom. And I will do him the honour, and my ſelf the diſhonour to confeſs, that I think the far greater number of Caſuiſts and Authors of Politicks, Papiſts, and Proteſtants, are on his ſide, and feweſt on mine: But truth is truth.

On the Subjects duty I am larger, becauſe, if they will not hear, at leaſt I may boldly and freely inſtruct them. If in the latter part there be any uſeful Caſes of Conſcience left out, it is becauſe I could not remember them.

Farewel.

CHAP. I.

General Rules for an upright Converſation.

SOLOMON ſaith, Prov. 10. 9. He that walketh uprightly walketh ſurely. And Perfection and Uprightneſs are the Characters of Job, Chap. 1. 1. 8. and 2. 3. And in the Scripture to be upright or righteous, and to walk uprightly, and to do righteouſly are the Titles of thoſe that are acceptable to God. And by uprightneſs is meant not only Sincerity as oppoſed to Hypocriſie; but alſo alſo rectitude of Heart and Life, as oppoſed to crookedneſs or ſin; and this as it is found in various degrees: Of which we uſe to call the loweſt degree that is ſaving by the name of ſincerity, and the higheſt by the name of Perfection.

§. 2. Concerning Uprightneſs of Life, I ſhall I. Briefly tell you ſome of thoſe bleſſings that ſhould make us all in love with it, and II. Give you ſome neceſſary Rules of Practice.

§. 3. 1. Uprightneſs of Heart and Life is a certain fruit of the Spirit of Grace, and conſequently a mark of our Union with Chriſt, and a proof of our acceptableneſs with God, Pſal. 7. 10. My defence is of God, who ſaveth the upright in heart, Pſal. 11. 7. For the righteous Lord loveth righteouſneſs, and his countenance doth behold the upright. It is a title that God himſelf aſſumeth, Pſal. 25. 8. Good and upright is the Lord. Pſal. 92. 15. To ſhew that the Lord is upright, He is my Rock, and no unrighteouſneſs is in him. And God calleth himſelf the Maker, the Director, the Protector, and the Lover of the upright, Eccl. 7. 29. God made man upright. Pſal. 1. 6. The Lord knoweth the way of the righteous. Pſal. 25. 12. What man is he that feareth the Lord? him will he teach in the way that he ſhall chooſe. Prov. 2. 7. He layeth up ſound wiſdom for the righteous? he is a Buckler to them that walk uprightly.

2. The upright are the Pillars of humane Society, that keep up Truth and Juſtice in the World; without whom it would be but a company of Lyars, Deceivers, Robbers and Enemies, that live in conſtant rapine and hoſtility. There were no truſt to be put in one another, further than ſelf-intereſt did oblige Men: Pſal. 15. 1. 2. Lord who ſhall abide in thy Tabernacle? Who ſhall dwell in thy holy hill? He that walketh uprightly, and worketh righteouſneſs, and ſpeaketh the truth in his heart. Therefore the wicked and the enemies of Peace, and deſtroyers of Societies, are ſtill deſcribed as Enemies to the upright. Pſal. 11. 2, 3. For lo the wicked bend their bow, they make ready their arrow upon the ſtring that they may privily ſhoot at the upright in heart. If the foundations be deſtroyed, what can the righteous do? Job 12. 4. The juſt and upright man is laughed to ſcorn. Pſal. 37. 14. The wicked have drawn out the Sword to ſlay ſuch as be of upright converſation. And indeed it is for the uprights ſake that Societies are preſerved by God, as Sodom might have been for Ten Lots. At leaſt they are under the protection of Omnipotency themſelves, Iſa. 33. 15, 16. He that walketh righteouſly and ſpeaketh uprightly, he that deſpiſeth the gain of oppreſſion, that ſhaketh his hands from holding of bribes, that ſtoppeth his ear from hearing of Blood, that ſhutteth his eyes from ſeeing evil; He ſhall dwell on high, his place of defence ſhall be the munitions of Rocks; bread ſhall be given him; his waters ſhall be ſure; Thine eyes ſhall ſee the King in his beauty; they ſhall behold the Land that is very far off, Prov. 28. 10. The upright ſhall have good things in poſſeſſion; Prov. 14. 11 The houſe of the wicked ſhall be overthrown; but the Tabernace of the upright ſhall flouriſh.

3. Uprightneſs affordeth Peace of Conſcience, and quietneſs and holy ſecurity to the Soul. This was Pauls rejoicing, the teſtimony of his Conſcience, that in ſimplicity and godly ſincerity he had had his converſation in the world, and not in fleſhly wiſdom, 2Cor. 1. 12. And this was Davids comfort, 2Sam. 22. 22, 23, 24. For I have kept the ways of the Lord, and have not wickedly departed from my God; For all his judgments were before me, and as for his Statutes I did not depart from them. I was alſo upright before him, and have kept my ſelf from mine iniquity. Therefore hath the Lord recompenſed me according to my Righteouſneſs,——with the merciful thou wilt ſhew thy ſelf merciful, and with the upright thou wilt ſhew thy ſelf upright; Yea, peace is too little; exceeding joy is the portion, and moſt beſeeming condition of the upright. Pſal. 32. 11. Be glad in the Lord, and rejoice ye righteous, and ſhout for joy, all ye that are upright in heart, Pſal. 33. 1. Rejoice in the Lord, O ye righteous, for praiſe is comely for the upright, Pſal. 64. 10. The righteous ſhall be glad in the Lord, and truſt in him, and all the upright in heart ſhall glory. Pſal. 97. 11. Light is ſown for the righteous, and gladneſs for the upright in heart. The Spirit that ſanctifieth them, will comfort them.

4. As the upright, ſo their upright Life and Duties are ſpecially delightful and acceptable to God. Prov. 15. 8. The Prayer of the upright is his delight, Pſal. 15. 2. Therefore God bleſſeth their duties to them, and they are comforted and ſtrengthned by experience of ſucceſs, Prov. 10. 29. The way of the Lord is ſtrength to the upright, but deſtruction ſhall be to the workers of iniquity. Mic. 2. 7. Do not my words do good to him that walketh uprightly?

5. No carnal Policies, no worldly Might, no help of Friends, nor any other humane means, doth put a Man in ſo ſafe a ſtate, as uprightneſs of Heart and Life. To walk uprightly, is to walk ſurely, becauſe ſuch walk with God, and in his way, and under his favour, and his promiſe: And if God be not ſufficient ſecurity for us, there is none. Pſal. 140. 13. Surely the righteous ſhall give thanks unto thy name; the upright ſhall dwell in thy preſence. Prov. 11. 3, 6. The integrity of the upright ſhall guide them, but the perverſeneſs of Tranſgreſſors ſhall deſtroy them. The righteouſneſs of the upright ſhall deliver them, but Tranſgreſſors ſhall be taken in their own naughtineſs.

6. Laſtly, The failings and weakneſſes of the upright are pardoned, and therefore they ſhall certainly be ſaved, Rom. 7. 25. and 8. 1. The upright may ſay in all their weakneſſes as Solomon, 1 Chron. 29. 17. I know alſo, my God, that thou tryeſt the heart, and haſt pleaſure in uprightneſs; As for me, in the uprightneſs of my Heart I have willingly offered all theſe things. God will do good to them that are good, and to them that are upright in their hearts, Pſal. 125. 4. The upright love him, Cant. 1. 4. and are loved by him. No good thing will he withhold from them, Pſal. 84. 11. The way to right comforting the Mind of Man, is to ſhew to him his uprightneſs, Job 33. 23. And who ſo walketh uprightly ſhall be ſaved, Prov. 28. 18. For the high way of the upright is to depart from evil, and he that keepeth his way preſerveth his Soul. Prov. 16. 17. I conclude with Pſal. 37. 37. Mark the upright man, and behold the juſt, for the end of that man is peace.

§ 4. II. The true Rules of an upright Life are theſe that follow. Pſal. 73. 25. & 63. 3.

1. He that will walk uprightly muſt be abſolutely devoted and ſubjected unto God: He muſt have a God, and the true God, and but one God; not notionally only, but in ſincerity and reality: He muſt have a God whoſe word ſhall be an abſolute Law to him: A God that ſhall command himſelf, his time, his eſtate, and all that he hath, or that he can do: A God whoſe will muſt be his will, and may do with him what he pleaſe; and who is more to him than all the World; whoſe love will ſatisfie him as better than Life, and whoſe approbation is his ſufficient encouragement and reward. 1 Cor. 4. 3, 4. Phil. 3. 8, 9, 18, 19. Pſal. 4. 7, 8. Luk. 12. 4. Mat. 6. 1, 2, 3.

2. His hope muſt be ſet upon Heaven as the only felicity of his Soul: He muſt look for his Reward and the end of all his labours and patience in another World; and not with the Hypocrite, dream of a felicity that is made up firſt of worldly things, and then of Heaven, when he can keep the World no longer. He that cannot, that doth not in Heart, quit all the World, for a heavenly Treaſure, and venture his All upon the promiſe of better things hereafter, and forſaking all, take Chriſt and everlaſting Happineſs for his portion, cannot be upright in Heart or Life. Luke 14. 26, 27, 33, 34. Luke 18. 22. Mat. 6. 19, 20. 1 John 2. 15. Phil. 3. 18, 21.

3. He muſt have an infallible Teacher (which is only Chriſt) and the encouragement of pardoning grace when he faileth, that he ſink not by deſpair: And therefore he muſt live by faith on a Mediator. John 12. 16. John 15. 1, &c. John 35. 6.

Rom.8. 8, 9. And he muſt have the fixed principle of a nature renewed by the Spirit of Chriſt.

2 Tim. 3. 15. 4. He that will walk uprightly, muſt have a certain, juſt, infallible Rule: And muſt hold to that,

Iſa. 8. 20. 1 Theſ. 5. 12. and muſt try all by it: And this is only the word of God. The teachings of Men muſt be valued as helps Iſa.33.21. Jam.4.12. Heb.8.10, 16. Neh.9.13 14. Pſal.19.7. & 119. 1, 2, 3. to underſtand this word; and the judgments of our Teachers, and thoſe that are wiſer than our ſelves, muſt be of great authority with us in ſubordination to the Scripture. But neither the Learned, nor the Godly, nor the Great, muſt be our Rule in co-ordination with the word of God.

5. He that will walk uprightly, muſt have both a ſolid and a large und erſtanding, to know things truly as they are, and to ſee all particulars which

Prov.1. 5. & 10. 23. & 17. 27. & 3. 4. Pſal. 111. 10. Epheſ. 1. 10. Acts 26. 18. Col. 1. 9. & 2. 2. 2 Tim. 2, 7. 1 Cor. 14. 5, 20. muſt be taken notice of, in all the caſes which he muſt determine, and all the actions which his integrity is concerned in. 1. There is no walking uprightly in the dark. Zeal will cauſe you to go apace; but not at all to go right, if Judgment guide it not. Erroneous zeal will make you do evil with double violence, and with blaſphemous fathering your Sins on God, and with impenitence and juſtification of your ſin. This made Paul mad in perſecuting the Church. Prov. 15. 21. Folly is joy to him that is deſtitute of wiſdom, but a man of underſtanding walketh uprightly. No Man can do that well which he underſtandeth not well. Therefore you muſt ſtudy and take unwearied pains for knowledge; Wiſdom never grew up with idleneſs, though the conceit of Wiſdom doth no where more proſper. This Age hath told us to what dangerous precipices Men will be carried by an ignorant zeal. 2. And the underſtanding muſt be large, or it cannot be ſolid; when many particulars are concerned in an action, the over-looking of ſome one may ſpoil the work. Nar-

Luke 24. 45. Mat. 15. 16. Epheſ. 5. 17. 1 Tim. 1. 7. Prov. 8.5. John 12. 40. 2 Pet. 2. 12. row minded Men are turned as the weather-cock, with the wind of the times, or of every temptation; and they ſeldom avoid one Sin, but by falling into another. It is prudence that muſt manage an upright Life: And Prudence ſeeth all that muſt be ſeen, and putteth every circumſtance into the ballance: For want of which much miſchief may be done, while you ſeem to be doing the greateſt good. The prudent man looketh well to his going, Prov. 14. 15. See therefore that ye walk circumſpectly (at a hairs breadth) not as fools, but as wiſe.

But becauſe you will object, that, alas, few even of the upright, have wits ſo ſtrong as to be fit for this, I add, that he that will walk uprightly, muſt in the great eſſential parts of Religion have this fore ſaid knowledge of his own, and in the reſt at leaſt he muſt have the conduct of the wiſe. And therefore. 1. He muſt be wiſe in the great matters of his Salvation, though he be weak in other things. 2. And he muſt labour to be truly acquainted, who are indeed wiſe Men, that are meet to be his guides: And he muſt have recourſe to ſuch in caſes of Conſcience, as a ſick Man to his Phyſician. It is a great mercy to be ſo far wiſe, as to know a wiſe Man from a Fool, and a Counſellor from a Deceiver.

Prov. 14. 29. Col. 3. 8. 7. He that will walk uprightly muſt be the maſter of his paſſion, not ſtupid, but calm and ſober. Though ſome paſſion is needful to excite the underſtanding to its duty, yet that which is inordinate doth powerfully deceive the mind. Men are very apt to be confident of what they paſſionately apprehend. And paſſionate judgments are frequently miſtaken, and ever to be ſuſpected; it being exceeding difficult to entertain any paſſion which ſhall not in ſome meaſure pervert our reaſon. Which is one great reaſon why the moſt confident are ordinarily the moſt erroneous and blind. Be ſure therefore when ever you are injured, or paſſion any way engaged, to ſet a double guard upon your judgments.

8. He that will walk uprightly, muſt not only Mat.9.1 & 12. 7 Pſal.40. & 51. 16 1 Sam.15. 22. difference between ſimple Good and Evil, but between a greater Good and a leſs: For moſt ſin in the World conſiſteth in preferring a leſſer Good before a greater. He muſt ſtill keep the ballance in his hand, and compare good with good: Otherwiſe he will make himſelf a Religion of Sin, and prefer Sacrifice before Mercy; and will hinder the Goſpel and Mens Salvation for a Ceremony, and violate the bonds of Love and Faithfulneſs for every opinion which he calleth Truth: And will tythe Mint and Cummin, while he neglecteth the great things of the Law. When a leſſer good is preferred before a greater, it is a ſin, and the common way of ſinning. It is not then a duty when it is inconſiſtent with a greater good.

9. He muſt ever have a conjunct reſpect to the 2 Cor. 10. 8. & 13. 10 Command and the End: The good of ſome actions Rom.15. is but little diſcernable any where, but in the Com- & 14. 9. mand; and others are evidently good becauſe of 1 Cor. 10. the good they tend to. We muſt neither do evil 26. and break a Law, that good may come by it; nor 2 Cor.12. yet pretend obedience to do miſchief, as if God had 19. made his Laws for Deſtruction of the Church or Rom. 3.8 Mens Souls, and not for Edification.

10. He muſt keep in Union with the Univerſal Eph.4.12 Church, and prefer its intereſt before the intereſt of &c. any party whatſoever, and do nothing that tendeth 1 Cor.12. to its hurt.

11. He muſt love his Neighbour as himſelf, and Matth.22 do as he would be done by, and love his Enemies, 39. & 5. and forgive wrongs; and bear their defamations as 43, 44. & his own. 7. 12.

12. He muſt be Impartial and not loſe his Judg- Jam. 3. ment and Charity in the opinion or intereſt of a 16, 17, 18 Party or Sect: Nor think all right that is held or Gal. 2.13 done by thoſe that he beſt liketh; nor all wrong 14. that is held or done by thoſe that are his adverſaries. Deut. 25 But judge of the words and deeds of thoſe that are 16. againſt him, as if they had been ſaid or done by thoſe 1Cor.6.9 of his own ſide: Elſe he will live in ſlandering, backbiting and groſs unrighteouſneſs.

13. He muſt be deliberate in judging of Things Matth. 7 and Perſons: Not raſh or haſty in believing reports 1, 2. or receiving opinions: Not judging of Truths by Joh. 7.24 the firſt appearance, but ſearch into the naked evi- Rom. 14. dence: Nor judging of Perſons by prejudice, fame 10, 13. and common talk. 1 Pet. 1, 17.

14. He muſt be willing to receive and obey the Luke 14. Truth at the deareſt rate; eſpecially of laborious 26, 33. & ſtudy, and a ſelf-denying Life? Not taking all to be 12. 4. Truth that coſteth Men dear, nor yet thinking that Prov. 23. Truth indeed can be over-prized. 23.

15. He muſt be humble and ſelf-ſuſpicious, and Mat.18. come to Chriſts School as a little Child; and not Prov. 26 have a proud over-valuing of himſelf and his own 12, 16. & understanding. The proud and ſelfiſh are blind and 28. 11. croſs, and have uſually ſome opinions or intereſts of 1 Cor. 3. their own, that lye croſs to duty, and to other Mens 18. good. Prov. 3.7

16. He muſt have an eye to poſterity, and not only to the preſent time or age; and to other Nations, and not only to the Country where he liveth. Many things ſeem neceſſary for ſome preſent ſtrait, or work that we would do (which in the next age may be of miſchievous effects;) eſpecially in Eccleſiaſtical and Political Profeſſions, Covenants and Impoſitions, we muſt look further than our preſent needs. And many things ſeem neceſſary for a local narrow intereſt, which thoſe at a diſtance will otherwiſe eſteem. Judg. 8. 27. 1 Cor. 7. 35. 1King. 1 16. & 15 26. Deut. 25 22. Exod. 12 26. Joſ. 4. 6, 22. & 22 24, 25.

17. He that will walk uprightly muſt be able to 1 Cor. 4 bear the diſpleaſure of all the World, when the inte- 3, 4. reſt of truth requireth it; yea, to be rejected of Joh. 5. 4 learned

Luke 14. 26. learned and good Men themſelves; and account Mans favour no better than it is; not to deſpiſe it as
Gal. 2.13, 14. it is a means to any good, but to be quite above it as Acts 11. 2, 3. to his own intereſt. Not that uprightneſs doth uſe to make a Man deſpiſed by the upright; but that it may bring him under their cenſure in ſome particulars, which are not commonly received or underſtood to be of God.

Col. 3. 4, 5. Rom. 6. 1, &c. & 13. 12, 13. & 8. 13. 18. He muſt make it a great part of the work of his Life to kill all thoſe carnal deſires, which the ſenſual make it their work and felicity to pleaſe; that Appetite, Senſe, and Luſt, and Self-will may not be the conſtant perverters of his Life; as a fool in a Dropſie ſtudieth to pleaſe his thirſt, and a wiſe Man to cure it.

Mat. 24. 42. & 25. 13. Mark 13. 37. 1 Theſ. 5. 6. 1 Pet. 4. 7. 1 Cor. 16. 13. Mat. 6. 13. & 26. 41. 19. He muſt live a Life of conſtant and skilful watchfulneſs, apprehending himſelf in continual danger; and knowing his particular Corruptions, Temptations and Remedies. He muſt have a tender Conſcience, and keep as far as poſſible from temptation, and take heed of unneceſſary approaches or delightful thoughts of ſin. O what ſtrong Reſolutions, what ſound Knowledge, have the near-baits of ſenſuality (meat, drink, luſt and pleaſures) overcome? Never think your ſelves ſafe among near-temptations and opportunities of ſinning.

Eccleſ. 7. 2, 3, 4, 5, 6. 2 Cor. 4. 16. & 5. 1, 7, 8. Luke 12. 17, 18, 19, 20. & 16. 20, &c. Matth. 25. 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8. Acts 7. 56, 60. 20. Live as thoſe that are going to the Grave; die daily, and look on this World, as if you did look on it out of the World to which you go. Let Faith as conſtantly behold the World unſeen, as your eye ſeeth this. Death and Eternity make Men wiſe: We eaſily confeſs and repent of many things when we come to die, which no Counſels or Sermons could make us penitently confeſs before. Death will anſwer a Thouſand Objections and Temptations, and prove many Vanities to be Sin, which you thought the Preacher did not prove: Dying Men are not drawn to drunkenneſs, filthineſs, or time-waſting Sports; nor flattered into Folly by ſenſual baits: Nor do they then fear the face or threats of Perſecutors. As it is from another World, that we muſt fetch the Motives, ſo alſo the Defenſative of an upright Life. And O happy are they that faithfully practiſe theſe Rules of Uprightneſs!

Among the Jews it was all one to be a Lawyer and a Divine; but not to be a Lawyer and a Prieſt.

THough it be my Judgment that much more of the Doctrine of Politicks or civil Government belongeth to Theology, than thoſe Men underſtand, who make Kings and Laws to be mere humane Creatures, yet to deliver my Reader from the fear leſt I ſhould meddle with matters that belong not to my calling, and my Book from that reproach, I ſhall over-paſs all theſe Points, which elſe I ſhould have treated of, as uſeful to practice in Governing and Obeying. 1. Of Man as ſociable, and of Communities and Societies, and the Reaſon of them, of their Original and the Obligation on the Members. 2. Of a City, and of Civility. 3. Of a Republick in general. 1. Of its Inſtitution. 2. Of its Conſtitution, and of its Parts. 3. Of its Species. 4. Of the difference between it. 1. And a Community in general. 2. A Family. 3. A Village. 4. A City. 5. A Church. 6. An accidental meeting. 5. Of its Adminiſtration. 6. Of the Relation between Gods Government and mans, and Gods Law and mans, and of their difference; and between Mans Judging and Gods Judging. Nay, I will not only gratifie you, by paſſing over this and much more in the Theory, but alſo as to the practical part, I ſhall paſs over, 1. The Directions for Supream Governours. 2. And for inferiour Magiſtrates towards God, and their Superiours, and the People. 3. And the Determination of the queſtion, How far Magiſtrates have to do in matters of Religion? Whether they be Chriſtian or Heathen? 4. How far they ſhould grant or not grant Liberty of Conſcience (as it is called) viz. of Judging, Profeſſing and Practiſing in matters of Religion: With other ſuch matters belonging to Government: And all the Controverſies about Titles and Supremacy, Conſervations, Forfeitures, Decaies, Dangers, Remedies, and Reſtorations, which belong either to Politicians, Lawyers or Divines; all theſe I pretermit, ſave only that I ſhall venture to leave a few brief Memorandums with civil Governours (inſtead of Directions) for ſecuring the intereſt of Chriſt and the Church and Mens Salvation: Yet aſſuring the Reader that I omit none of this out of any contempt of the matter or of Magiſtracy, or as if I thought them not worthy of all our Prayers and Aſſiſtance, or thought their Office of ſmall concerment, to the welfare of the World and of the Church; but for thoſe Reaſons, which all may know that know me and the Government under which we live, and which I muſt not tell to others.

CHAP. II.

MEMORANDUMS to Civil Rulers for the Intereſt of Chriſt, the Church, and Mens Salvation.

§. 1. Memor. 1. REmember that your Power is from God, and therefore for God, and not againſt God; Rom. 13. 2, 3, 4. You are his Miniſters, and can have no Power except it be given you from above, John 19. 11. Remember therefore that as Conſtables are your Officers and Subjects, ſo you are the Officers and Subjects of God, and the Redeemer; and are infinitely more below him, than the loweſt Subject is below you: And that you owe him more Obedience, than can be due to you; and therefore ſhould Study his Laws (in Nature and Scripture) and make them your daily Meditation and Delight. Joſh. 1. 3, 4, 5. Pſal. 1. 2, 3. Deut. 17. 18, 19, 20. And remember how ſtrict a Judgment you muſt undergo, when you muſt give account of your Stewardſhip, and the greater your Dignities and Mercies have been, if they are abuſed by ungodlineſs, the greater will be your Puniſhment, Luke 16. 2. & 12. 48. Memor. 1. Finis ad quem Rex principaliter intendere debet in ſeipſo & in ſubditis, eſt æterna beatitudo, quæ in viſione Dei conſiſtit. Et quia iſta viſio eſt perfectiſſimum bonum maximè movere debet Regem & quemcunque Dominum, ut hunc finem ſubditi conſequantur. Lib. de Regem. Principium Thomæ ad ſcript. Grot. de Imper. ſum. Pot. p. 9. Even Ariſtotle could ſay Polit. 7. c. 1, 2. & Eadem. fine. that each Mans active and contemplative Life, is the end of Government and not only the publick Peace; and that is the beſt Life which conduceth moſt to our Conſideration of God, and that is the worſt, which calleth us off from conſidering and worſhipping him. Vide Grot. de Imper. ſum. Pot. p. 10. Quam multa injuſte fieri poſſunt, quæ nemo poſſit reprehendere. Cicero de fin. Read Plutarchs Precepts of Policy, and that old Men ſhould be Rulers.

§. 2. Memorand. 2. Remember therefore and watch moſt carefully, that you never own or eſpouſe any Intereſt which is adverſe to the Will or Intereſt of Chriſt; and that you never fall out with his Intereſt or his Ordinances: And that no Temptation ever perſwade you that the Intereſt of Chriſt and the Goſpel and the Church, is an enemy to you, or againſt your real Intereſt: And that you keep not up Suſpicions againſt them: But ſee that you devote your ſelves and your Power wholly to his Will and Service, and make all your Intereſt ſtand in a pure ſubſervience to him, as it ſtands in a real dependance on him. Memor. 2. Read often Pſal. 2. & 101.

§. 3. Memorand. 3. Remember that under God, your end is the publick good: Therefore deſire nothing to your ſelves, nor do nothing to others, which is really againſt your End. Memor. 3.

§. 4. Memorand. 4. Remember therefore that all your Laws are to be but ſubſervient to the Laws of God, to promote the Obedience of them with your Subjects, and never to be either contrary to them, nor co-ordinate, or independent on them: But as the By-Laws of Corporations are in reſpect to the Laws and Will of the Soveraign Power, which have all their Life and Power therefrom. Memor. 4.

§. 5. Memorand. 5. Let none perſwade you that you are ſuch terreſtrial animals that have nothing to do with the Heavenly Concernments of your Subjects: For if once Men think that the end of your Office is only the bodily Proſperity of the People, and the End of the Miniſtry is the good of their Souls, it will tempt them to prefer a Miniſter before Memor. 5.

fore you, as they prefer their Souls before their Bodies: And they that are taught to contemn these Earthly Things, will be ready to think they must contemn your Office; seeing no means, as such, can be better than the end. There is no such thing as a Temporal Happiness to any People, but what tendeth to the Happiness of their Souls; and must be thereby measured, and thence be estimated. Though Ministers are more immediately imployed about the Soul, yet your Office is ultimately for the Happiness of Souls, as well as theirs; though bodily things (Rewards or Punishments) are the means, by which you may promote it; which Ministers, as such, may not meddle with. Therefore you are custodes utriusque Tabulæ; and must bend the force of all your Government, to the saving of the Peoples Souls. And as to the Objection from Heathen Governours, distinguish between the Office, and an Aptitude to exercise it: The Office consisteth, 1. In an Obligation to do the Duty: 2. And in Authority to do it. Both these, a Heathen Ruler hath (else the omission were a Duty, and not a Sin. But it is the Aptitude to do the Duty of his Place which a Heathen wanteth; and he wanteth it culpably; and therefore the omission is his Sin: Even as it is the Sin of an insufficient Minister that he doth not Preach. For the Question is of the like Nature, and will have the like solution: Whether an ignorant Minister be bound to Preach, who is unable or Heretical? It is Aptitude that he wanteth, and neither Authority nor Obligation, if he be really a Minister: But he is obliged in this Order, first to get Abilities, and then to Preach. So is it in the present Case.

Read Bilson of Subject. pag. 129. to the end of the Second Part, specially Pag. 140, 141, 142. The Laws of Charles the Great. And Grotius de Imperio sum. Pot. circa Sacra, cap. 1. Et per totum.

Memor. 6. §. 6. Memorand. 6. Incourage and strengthen a Learned, Holy, Self-denying, Serious, Laborious Ministry: As knowing, that the same Lord hath commissioned them in the Institution of their Office, who instituted yours; and that it is such Men that are suited to the Work, for which their Office was appointed; and that Souls are precious: And those that are the Guides and Physicians of Souls, can never be too well furnished, nor too diligent. And the Church hath no where prospered on Earth, but in the Prosperity of the Abilities, Holiness, and Diligence of their Pastors: God hath always built by such, and the Devil hath pulled down, by pulling down such.

Memor. 7. Jul. Capitolin. saith of the Antonines, That they would not be saluted by filthy Persons. And Lampridius of Alexander Severus that Nisi honestos & bonæ famæ homines ad salutationem non admisit. Fussitque ut nemo ingrediatur, nisi qui se innocentum novit: Per præconem edixit, ut nemo salutaret principem qui se furem esse nosset, ne aliquando detectus capitali supplicio subderetur. Read Sebastian. Foxius de Regno Regisque institutione. §. 7. Memorand. 7. Remember that the People that are seriously Religious, that love, and worship, and obey the Lord, with all their Heart, are the best of your Subjects, and the Honour of your Dominions: See therefore that serious Godliness be every where incouraged, and that the prophane and ignorant Rabble be never incouraged in their Enmity and Opposition to it: And that true Fanaticism, Hypocrisie, and Schism, be so prudently discountenanced and suppressed, that none may have incouragement to set themselves against Godliness, under the slander or pretension of such Names. If Christianity be better than Heathenism, those Christians then are they that must be * countenanced, who go further in Holiness, and Charity, and Justice, than Heathens do, rather than those that go no further (besides Opinions and Formalities) than a Cato, a Plato, a Socrates, have done. If all Religion were a deceit, it were fit to be banished, and Atheism professed, and Men confess themselves to be but bruits. But if there be a God, there must be a Religion: And if we must be Religious, we must sure be so in seriousness, and not Hypocrisie and Jest. It being no such small contemptible Matter, to be turned into dissembling Complement.

Ii supplicio subderetur. Read Sebastian. Foxius de Regno Regisque institutione. * Even Cræsus, Dionysius, and Julian, were liberal to Philosophers, and ambitious of their converse. Vera civitatis fælicitas est, ut Dei sit amans & amata Deo; illum sibi regem, se illius populum agnoscat, August. de Civit. Dei, l. 5. c. 14.

§. 8. Memorand. 8. Indeavour the Unity and Concord of all the Churches, and Christians that are under your Government, and that upon the Terms which all Christs Churches have sometime been united in; that is, In the Holy Scriptures implicitely, as the General Rule; in the ancient Creeds explicitely, as the sum of our Credenda; and in the Lords Prayer, as the summary of our Expetenda; and in the Decalogue, as the summary of our Agenda: Supposing, that we live in peaceable Obedience to our Governours, whose Laws must rule us not only in Things Civil, but in the ordering of those Circumstances of Worship and Discipline, which God hath left to their Determination. Memor. 8.

§. 9. Memorand. 9. Let all things in Gods Worship be done to Edification, decently, and in order, and the Body honour God, as well as the Soul: But yet see that the Ornaments or Garments of Religion, be never used against the Substance; but that Holiness, Unity, Charity, and Peace, have alway the precedency. Memor. 9.

§. 10. Memorand. 10. Let the fear of sinning against God, be cherished in all, and let there be a tenderness for such as are over scrupulous and fearful in some smaller Things; and let not things be ordered so, as shall most tend to the advantage of debauched Consciences, that dare say, or do any thing for their carnal ends. For they are truest to their Governours, that are truest to their God; and when it is the Wrath of God and Hell, that a Man is afraid of, it is pity he should be too eagerly spurred on: The unconscionable sort will be true to their Governors, no longer than it serves their interest; therefore Conscientiousness should be incouraged. Memor. 10

Aug. Ep. Bonifac. Omnes Reges qui populo Dei non prohibuerunt nec everterunt quæ contra Dei præcepta fuerunt instituta, culpantur.

Qui prohibuerunt & everterunt, super aliorum merita, laudantur.

§. 11. Memorand. 11. If the Clergy, or most Religious People offend, let their Punishment be such as falleth only on themselves, and reacheth not Christ, nor the Gospel, nor the Church. Punish not Christ for his Servants failings, nor the Gospel for them that Sin against it; nor the Souls of the People, for their Pastors faults; but see that the interest of Christ and Mens Souls, be still secured. Memor. 11

When Hunnerichus the Arrian Vandal King, was resolved to banish, imprison, and otherwise persecute the Orthodox Bishops and Pastors, he first trieth them by Threatnings, and divers Cruelties, and after appointeth a publick Disputation; where his Bishops and Officers having no better pretence, cruelly beat the People and Pastors, and then falsly tell the King, That by tumult and clamor, they avoided disputing: And at last he calleth together all the Pastors that were met for the Disputation, and to insnare them, putteth an Oath upon them, [That after the Kings death, they would take his Son for their King; and that they would send no Letters beyond Sea.] This Oath divided the Orthodox among themselves. For one part of the Bishops and Pastors said [If we refuse a Lawful Oath, our People will say, That we forsake them, and the Dissolution of the Churches will be imputed to us.] The other part perceiving the snare, were fain to pretend Christs command [Swear not at all] The King having separated them, and the Officers took all their names, sendeth them all to Prison. To those that took the Oath, they said [Because that contrary to the command of the Gospel, you would swear, you shall see your Cities and Churches no more, but be sent into the Country to Till the Ground: But so, that you presume not to sing Psalms, or Pray, or carry a Book, or Baptize, or Ordain, or Absolve.] To those that refused the Oath, they said, [Because you desired not the Reign of the Kings Son, and therefore refused the Oath, You shall be banished to the Isle of Corsica, to cut Wood for the Ships.] Victor. Utic. pag. (mihi) 456, 457. *Generalis Jesuitarum ex nimio absoluti imperii amore, delaturas inferinia sua admittit, iisque credit, non audito eo qui accusatur: Quod injustitiæ genus ab ethnicis ipsis improbatur. Aphor. 84. cap. 12, &c. 14, 89. Aphor. 87, &c. The rest is worth the Reading, as a warning from a Jesuite to the Governours of State nd Church, Aphor. 80. c. 11. Superiores Societatis

Societatis noſtræ ſunt homines indigni, qui officiis præſint, eam generalis metuat ac ſublatos velit, quorum eminentes ſunt virtutes. Boni quam mali ei ſuſpectiores ſunt. This, and abundance more, ſaith Mariana, a Jeſuite of Ninety ſix Years of Age, learned in Hebrew, Chaldee, Syriack, Greek, and Latine, of his own Society.

Memor. 12 §. 12. Memorand. 12. If the Diſſentions of Lawyers or States-men make Factions in the Commonwealth, let not the fault be laid on Religion, though ſome Divines fall into either Faction: When the difference is not in Divinity, but in Law Caſes; blame not Religion for that, which it hath no hand in: And watch againſt Satan, who alway laboureth to make Civil Factions or Differences tend to the diſhonour of Religion, and the detriment of the Church and Goſpel.

Memor. 13 §. 13. Memorand. 13. Take thoſe that are covetous, ambitious, or ſelfiſh, and ſeek for preferment, to be the unfitteſt to be conſulted with in the Matters of Religion, and the unfitteſt to be truſted with the charge of Souls. And let the humble, mortified, ſelf-denying Men, be taken as fitter Paſtors for the Churches.

Memor. 14 §. 14. Memorand. 14. Side not with any Faction of contentious Paſtors, to the Oppreſſion of the reſt, when the difference is in tolerable Things: But rather drive them on to Unity, upon condeſcending and forbearing Terms: For there will elſe be no end; but the Faction which you ſide with, will break into more Factions, and the Church will receive damage by the loſs of the oppreſſed Party; and by the Diviſion much more. What lamentable work the Contentions of the Biſhops have made in the Churches, in all Ages, ſince the Primitive Times; all Hiſtory doth too openly declare! And how much a holy prudent, peaceable Magiſtrate can do, to keep Peace among them, more than will be done, if their own impetuoſity be left unreſtrained, it is eaſie to obſerve; eſpecially, if he keep the Sword in his own hand, and truſt it not in the hands of Churchmen, eſpecially of one Faction to the Oppreſſion of the reſt.

§. 15. Memorand. 15. Believe not the Accuſations that are brought againſt the faithful Miniſters of Chriſt, till they are proved, and judge not them, or any of his Servants, upon the reports of Adverſaries, till they have ſpoken for themſelves: For the common Corruption of depraved Nature, doth ingage all the Ungodly in ſuch an enmity againſt Holineſs, that there is little Truth or Righteouſneſs to be expected from wicked and malicious Lips, for any holy cauſe or perſon. And if ſuch Perſons find but entertainment and incouragement, their malice will abound, and their Calumnies will be impudent; which is the ſenſe of, Prov. 29. 12. If a Ruler hearken to lies, all his Servants are wicked. The example of Saul and Doeg is but ſuch, as would be ordinary, if Rulers would but hearken to ſuch Calumniators.

Memor. 16 §. 16. Memorand. 16. When the Caſe is doubtful about uſing puniſhments and ſeverities againſt the ſcrupulous in the Matters of Religion, remember your General Directions, and ſee what influence they muſt have into ſuch Particulars; as, That the very work and end of your Office is, that under your Government the People may live quietly and peaceably in godlineſs and honeſty, 1 Tim. 2. 2. And that Rulers are not a terror to good Works, but to evil; and for the Praiſe of them that do good; and Miniſters of God to us for good; and Revengers to execute Wrath upon them that do evil, Rom. 13. 3, 4. And remember the danger of Perſecution, as deſcribed Matth. 18. 6, 10, 14. 1 Theſ. 2. 15, 16. 2 Chron. 36. 14, 15, 16, 17. And that he that doubteth of things indifferent, is damned if he do them, becauſe he doth them not of Faith, Rom. 14. 23. And remember whom, and what it is that God himſelf forgiveth and forbeareth. And always difference the Infirmities of ſerious conſcionable Chriſtians, from the wickedneſs of unconſcionable and ungodly Men. Yet not extenuating the wickedneſs of any, becauſe of his hypocritical Profeſſion of Religion.

Quis mihi imponat neceſſitatem vel credendi quod nolim, vel quod velim non credendi, Lactant. lib. 5. c. 13.

§. 17. Memorand. 17. Remember that you muſt be Examples of Holineſs to the People; and ſhun all thoſe ſins which you would have them ſhun, and be eminent in all thoſe Virtues which you would commend unto them. This is not only neceſſary to the Happineſs of thoſe under you, but alſo for the ſaving of your ſelves. As Paul ſaith to *Timothy, Take heed unto thy ſelf, and unto the Doctrine, * continue in them; for in doing this, thou ſhalt both ſave thy ſelf, and them that hear thee,* 1 Tim. 4. 16. So may I ſay to Rulers, Take heed to your ſelves, and unto Government, and continue herein: For in doing this, you will ſave your ſelves, and thoſe you govern. They that are good, are likeſt to do good; but the wicked will do wickedly, Dan. 12. 10.

Memor. 17 Laert. in Solon. reciteth one of his ſayings [Populi rector prius ſe quam populum recte inſtituere debet: Et principes & majores ſecundum leges vixerint, unaquæque civitas optime rege peribit, Page 31. Or ſpend thy time in them, Dr. Hammond. Luke 18. 22, 24. Deut. 17. 20. Prov. 29. 14. & 22. 29. & 16. 13. & 31. 3, 4. 2 Chr. 32. 25. & 20. 16. Ezek. 28. 2, 5, 17. Luke 12. 19, 20 & 16. 19, 20, 25. It is a ſad obſervation of Acoſta, lib. 5. cap. 9. pag. 474. Ac reipſa ceutoque uſu obſervatum eſt, eas Indorum nationes plures ac graviores ſuperſtitionis diabolicæ ſpecies tenuiſſe, in quibus Regum ac Reipublicæ maxime potentia & peritia excelluit. Contra qui tenuiorem fortunam minuſque Reipublicæ accommodata ſortiti ſunt, in his multo Idololatria parcior eſt: Uſque adeo ut nonnullas Indorum gentes omni Idolorum religione vacare, quidam pro certo confirment. Ex bonæ fidei ſcriptoribus ſuper alias innumeras, hæc præcipua capitur utilitas; quod non alia res æque vel bonorum Regum animos ad res cum laude gerendas accendit, vel Tyrannorum cupiditates cohibet, ac refrænat, dum utrique cernunt horum literis ſuam vitam omnem, mox in totius orbis, imo ſæculorum omnium theatrum producendam. Et quicquid in abdito nunc vel patrant, vel adſcito fuco prætexunt, vel metu diſſimulari cogunt, verius quam ignorari, paulo poſt clariſſimam in lucem ſub oculis omnium traducendum: Quum jam metu pariter ac ſpe libera poſteritas, nec ullo corrupta ſtudio, magno conſenſu recte factis applaudet, parique libertate his diverſa explodet, exibilabitque. Eraſm. Præfat. in Sueton.

The chief means for Rulers to become thus holy and exemplary is, 1. To hearken to the Doctrine and Counſel of the Word of the Lord, and to meditate in it day and night, Joſh. 1. 3, 4. Deut. 17. 18, 19, 20. And to have faithful, holy, and ſelf-denying Teachers, 2 Chron. 20. 20. 2. To beware of the Company and Counſels of the Wicked, Prov. 25. 4, 5. Take away the wicked from before the King, and his Throne ſhall be eſtabliſhed in Righteouſneſs. 3. To watch moſt carefully againſt the ſpecial temptations of their great Places, eſpecially againſt Senſuality and Pride, and preferring their own Honour, and Intereſt, and Will, before the Honour, and Intereſt, and Will of Jeſus Chriſt, Eccleſ. 10. 16, 17. Wo to thee, O Land, when thy King is a Child, and thy Princes eat in the morning: Bleſſed art thou, O Land, when thy King is the Son of Nobles, and thy Princes eat in due ſeaſon, for ſtrength, and not for drunkenneſs. It is an abomination to Kings to commit wickedneſs; for the Throne is eſtabliſhed by Righteouſneſs, Prov. 16. 12. 4. To remember always the end of Holineſs. How ſure a way it is to Glory hereafter, and to leave a ſweet and glorious Name and Memorial upon Earth; when Wickedneſs is the certain way to ſhame on Earth, and Miſery for ever.

Memor. 18 §. 18. Memorand. 18. Rulers ſhould not be contented to do good at home, and to be the joy and bleſſing of their own Subjects; but alſo ſet their Hearts to the promoting of Faith, and Holineſs, and Concord, throughout the Churches of the World: And to improve their Intereſts in Princes and States, by amicable Correſpondencies and Treaties to theſe ends; that they may be Bleſſings, to the utmoſt extent of their Capacities. As Conſtantine interceded with the Perſian King, to forbear the perſecuting of Chriſtians in his Dominion, &c. But I ſhall preſume to ſpeak no farther to my Superiours; in the Golden Age theſe Memorandums will be practiſed.

Euſeb. in vita Conſt.

I will only annex Eraſmus his Image of a good Prince, and of a Bad, recited by Alſtedius Encyclop. Lib. 23. Polit. cap. 3. pag. 173, 174.

The Image of a good Prince out of Eraſmus.

If you will draw the Picture of a good Prince, delinedte ſome Celeſtial Wight, liker to God than to a Man; abſolute in all Perfections of Virtue; given for the good of all; yea, ſent from Heaven for the relief of of Mortal Mens affairs; which being (oculatiſſimum) moſt diſcerning, looketh to all! To whom nothing is more regarded, nothing more ſweet than the Commonwealth; who hath more than a fatherly affection unto all. To whom every ones Life is dearer than his own; who night and day is doing and endeavouring nothing elſe, but that it may be very well with all; who hath rewards in readineſs for all that are good; and pardon for the bad, if ſo be they will betake them to a better courſe: That ſo freely deſireth to deſerve well of his Subjects, that if it be needful, he will not ſtick to preſerve their ſafety by his own peril; that taketh his Countries Commodity to be his own gain; that always watcheth, that others may ſleep quietly; that leaveth himſelf no quiet vacancy, that his Country may live in quiet vacancy, or Peace; that afflicteth himſelf with ſucceſſive cares, that his Subjects may enjoy Tranquility To conclude, on whoſe Virtue it is, that the publick Happineſs doth depend.

The Image of a bad Prince. Ibid.

If you would ſet forth a bad Prince to the eye, you muſt paint ſome ſavage horrid Beaſt, made up of ſuch monſtroſities as a Dragon, a Woolf, a Lion, a Viper, a Bear, &c. every way armed, with Six Hundred Eyes; every way Toothed; every way terrible with hooked Talons, of an inſatiable Paunch; fed with Mens Bowels; drunk with Mans Blood; that watcheth to prey upon the Lives and Fortunes of all the People; troubleſome to all, but ſpecially to the good; a fatal evil to the World, which all curſe and hate, who wiſh well to the Commonwealth; which can neither be endured, becauſe of his Cruelty, not yet taken away without the great calamity of the World, becauſe wickedneſs is armed with Guards and Riches.

CHAP. III.

Directions for SUBJECTS concerning their Duty to their RULERS.

BEing now to ſpeak of the Duties which I muſt practiſe; and to thoſe of my own rank, I ſhall do it with ſome more freedom, confidence, and expectation, of regard and practice.

§. 1. Direct. 1. Though I ſhall paſs by moſt of the Theory, and eſpecially of the Controverſal Points in Politicks, and not preſume to play the Lawyers part; yet I muſt adviſe you to underſtand ſo much of the Cauſe, and Nature, and End of Government, as is neceſſary to direct you in your obedience, and to preſerve you from all temptations to Rebellion. Eſpecially take heed of thoſe miſtakes which confound Soveraignty and Subjection, and which delude the People with a conceit, that they are the Original of Power, and may intruſt it as they pleaſe; and call their Rulers to account, and take the forfeiture, and recal their truſt, &c. It is not to flatter Kings, but to give God his due, that I ſhall caution you againſt theſe miſtakes of Popularity. And firſt, I ſhall briefly lay down the truth, and then anſwer ſome few of the chief Objections.

Nihil Deo qui omnem mundum hunc regit, acceptius, quam concilia cœtuſque nomis num quæ civitates appellantur. Cicero.

§. 2. Propoſ. 6. That there be Government in general, and obedience thereto, is determined even in Nature, by the God of Nature, in making Man a ſociable Creature, and each Man inſufficient for himſelf, and in making Republicks neceſſary to the welfare and ſafety of individuals, and Government neceſſary to theſe Republicks. This therefore is not left to the Peoples wills; though ſome odd Caſes may be imagined, in which ſome individual Perſons may live out of a Commonwealth, and not be obliged to live under Civil Government; yet that Exception doth but confirm the General Rule: Even as all Men ordinarily are bound to live in Communion with ſome particular Church, and know their own Paſtor, though yet ſome few may be excepted, as ſome Embaſſadors, Travellers, Seamen, Soldiers, Baniſhed Men, &c. So here, the obligation to live under Government lieth upon the generality of the World, though ſome few may be excepted.

§. 3. Propoſ. 2. Rulers therefore are Gods Officers, placed under him in his Kingdom, as he is the Univerſal abſolute Soveraign of the World; and they receive their power from God, who is the only Original of Power. Not only their ſtrength from his ſtrength, but their Authority or Governing Power, (which is Jus Regendi) from his Supream Authority; as Majors and Bailiffs and Corporations receive their power from the King. Rom. 13. 1, 2, 3. There is no power, but of God; the powers that be, are ordained of God.

§. 4. Propoſ. 3. This Governing Power in genere, is not an empty Name, but in the very inſtitution containeth in it thoſe things materially which are abſolutely neceſſary to the end of Government.

§. 5. Propoſ. 4. Yet God hath left that which is commonly called The Specification of Government; and ſome lower parts of the Matter, and Manner of exerciſe, undetermined; as alſo, The Individual Perſons or Families that ſhall Rule. In theſe three therefore it is that Communities interpoſe. 1. Whether the Soveraignty ſhall be in one, or two, or ten, or how many, and how divided for their exerciſe, God hath not determined. 2. Nor hath he determined of every particular, whether the power ſhall extend to this, or that, or the other thing, or not? Nor whether it ſhall be exerciſed thus or thus, by ſtanding Courts, or Temporary Judges, &c. 3. Nor hath he named the Perſon or Family that ſhall rule.

Grotius de Imper. Sum Poteſt. c. 1. p. 7, 8. Sum qui objiciant Reges quædam imperare non poſſe, niſi conſenſus, Ordinum acceſſerit: Sed hi non vident quibus in locis id juris eſt, ibi ſummum Imperium non eſſe penes Reges, ſed aut penes Ordines, aut certe penes id corpus, quod Rex & juncti conſtituunt, ut Bodinus, Suarezius, Victoria, aliique, aliunde demonſtrarunt: Certum ſummum Imperium totum, & aliquid imperare non poſſe, ideo tantum quod alter vetet aut intercedat, plane juris ἀσύνατα.

§. 6. Propoſ. 5. Though theſe in the conſtitution are determined of by explicite or implicite contract or conſent, between the Ruler and the Community, yet by none of theſe three can the People be truly and properly ſaid to give the Ruler his Power of Government. Not by the firſt or laſt; for both thoſe do but determine who ſhall be the Recipient of that Power; whether one or more, and who individually. Not the ſecond, for that is but a limiting, or bounding, or regulating the governing Power, that it be not exerciſed to their hurt; the bounding and regulating of their Power, is not the giving them power. The People having the ſtrength, cannot be ruled againſt their concordant wills: And therefore, if they contract with their Governors, that they will be ruled thus and thus, or not at all; this is not to Give them power. Yet Propriety they have, and there they may be givers. So that this bounding, or regulating, and chuſing the Form, and Perſons, and Giving of their Propriety, is all that they have to do. And the chuſing of the Family or Perſon, is not at all a Giving the Power. They are but ſine quibus non to that; they do but open the door to let in the Governor; they do but name the Family or Man, to whom God, and not they, ſhall give the power.

As, when God hath already determined what authority the Husband ſhall have over the Wife, the Wife by chuſing him to be her Husband, giveth him not his power, but only chuſeth the Man, to whom God giveth it by his ſtanding Law: Though about the diſpoſing of her eſtate, ſhe may limit him by Precontracts; but if ſhe contract againſt his Government, it is a contradiction and null. Nor if he abuſe his power, doth it at all fall into her hands.

If the King by Charter give power to a Corporation to chuſe their Mayor, or other Officer, they do but nominate the Perſons that ſhall receive it; but it is the Kings Charter, and not they that give him the power.

If a Soldier voluntarily liſt himſelf under the Kings

Kings General, or other Commanders; he doth but chuſe the Man that ſhall command him, but it is the Kings Commiſſion that giveth him the power to command thoſe that voluntarily ſo liſt themſelves. And if the authority be abuſed or forfeited, it is not into the Soldiers hands, but into the Kings.

§. 7. Propoſ. 6. The Conſtituting Conſent or Contract of Anceſtors obligeth all their Poſterity, if they will have any of the Protection, or other benefit of Government, to ſtand to the Conſtitution; elſe Governments ſhould be ſo unſetled and mutable, as to be uncapable of their proper End.

So fooliſh and bad is the multitude too often, that it made Ariſtippus hold it, as probable, that a wiſe man ſhould not endanger himſelf, for his Country, becauſe Wiſdom is not to be caſt away for the commodity of Fools. Laert. in Ariſtip. But a wiſe man muſt be wiſe for others, and not only for himſelf.

§ 8. Propoſ. 7. God hath neither in Nature or Scripture, eſtated this Power of Government, in whole or in part, upon the People of a meer Community, (much leſs on Subjects) whether Noble or Ignoble, Learned or Unlearned, the part of the Community, or the whole Body, Real or Repreſentative. The People as ſuch, have not this Power, either to uſe or to give: But the abſolute Soveraign of all the World, doth communicate the Soveraign Power in every Kingdom, or other ſort of Commonwealth from himſelf immediately, I ſay, immediately; not without the Mediation of an Inſtrument ſignifying his will: For the Law of Nature and Scripture are his Inſtrument, and the Charter of Authority: Nor yet ſo immediately, as without any kind of medium; for the Conſent and Nomination of the Community before expreſſed, may be Conditio ſine qua non, ſo far as aforeſaid. But it is ſo immediately from God, as that there is no immediate recipient, to receive the power firſt from God, and convey it to the Soveraign.

It was one of the Roman Laws of the Twelve Tables, Vendendi filium Patri poteſtas eſto. But this Law rather giveth the Father that Power, than declareth it to be naturally in him. Nature alloweth him no other ſelling of him, than what is for his Childs own good.

§ 9. Propoſ. 8. The Natural Power of Individual Perſons over themſelves, is tota ſpecie different from this Political or Civil Power. And it is not the Individuals Reſignation of this Natural Power of Self-diſpoſal, unto one or more, which is the efficient Cauſe of Soveraignty or Civil Power.

§ 10. Propoſ. 9. If you take the word [Law] properly, For the expreſſion of a Rulers will obliging the Governed, or making their Duty, ; and not improperly for meer Contracts between the Soveraign and the People, then it is clear in the definition it ſelf, that neither Subjects, nor the Community, as ſuch have any Legiſlative Power. Neither Nature nor Scripture, hath given the People a power of making Laws, either by themſelves, or with the Soveraign; either the ſole power, or a part of it. But the very Nature of Government requireth, that the whole Legiſlative Power, that is, the Power of making of Governing Laws, belong to the Summa Majeſtas, or Soveraign alone. (Unleſs when the Summa Poteſtas is in many hands, you compare the partakers among themſelves, and call One Party the Soveraign, as having more of the Soveraignty than the reſt.) For thoſe that are no Governors at all, cannot perform the chief Act of Government, which is the making of Governing Laws; but the People are no Governors at all, either as a Community, or as Subjects: So that you may eaſily perceive, that all the Arguments for a Natural Democracy, are built upon falſe Suppoſitions; and where ever the People have any part in the Soveraignty, it is by the After-Conſtitution, and not by Nature: And that Kings receive not their Power from the Peoples gift, (who never had it themſelves to uſe or give,) but from God alone.

§. 11. Propoſ. 10. Though God have not made an Univerſal determination for any one ſort of Government, againſt the reſt; whether Monarchy, Ariſtocracy, or Democracy,) becauſe that is beſt for one People, which may be worſe for others, yet ordinarily Monarchy is accounted better than Ariſtocracy; and Ariſtocracy better than Democracy. So much briefly of the Original of Power.

§. 12. Object. 1. But (ſaith worthy Mr. Richard Hooker) Eccleſ. Polit. lib. 1. ſect. 10. p. 21. [That which we ſpake of the Power of Government, muſt here be applied to the Power of making Laws, whereby to govern, which Power, God hath over all, and by the Natural Law, whereto he hath made all ſubject, the lawful Power of making Laws to command whole Politick Societies of Men, belongeth ſo properly to the ſame entire Societies, that for any Prince or Potentate of what kind ſoever upon Earth, to exerciſe the ſame of himſelf, and not either by expreſs Commiſſion immediately and perſonally received from God, or elſe by Authority derived at firſt from their Conſent, upon whoſe Perſons they impoſe Laws, it is no better than meer Tyranny. Laws they are not therefore, which publick approbation hath not made ſo.

Obj. 1 So P. 23. the ſame Error of the Original of Power hath Acoſta, l. 2. c. 2. p. 208. with many other Jeſuites and Papiſts.

Anſw. Becauſe the Authority of this famous Divine is with his party ſo great, I ſhall adventure to ſay ſomething, leſt his words do the more harm; but not by confident oppoſition, but humble propoſal and ſubmiſſion of my judgment to Superiors and wiſer Men, as being conſcious of my own inferiority and infirmity. I take all this to be an aſſertion no where by him proved; (and by me elſewhere diſproved fully.) Laws are the effects and ſigns of the Rulers Will; and inſtruments of Government. Legiſlation is the firſt part of Government; and if the whole Body are naturally Governours, the pars imperans and pars ſubdita are confounded. If the moſt abſolute Monarch can make no Laws, then diſobeying them were no fault. It is enough that their power be derived from God immediately, though the Perſons be choſen by Men. Their Authority is not derived from the Peoples conſent, but from God, by their conſent, as a bare condition ſine qua non. What if a Community ſay all to their elected King. [We take not our ſelves to have any governing power to give or uſe, but we only chooſe you or your Family to that Office which God hath inſtituted, who in that inſtitution giveth you the power upon our choice;] Can any Man prove, that ſuch a King hath no power, but is a Tyrant? Becauſe the People diſclaim the giving of the power; when indeed they do their duty. Remember that in all this we ſpeak not of the Government of this or that particular Kingdom; but of Kingdoms and other Commonwealths indefinitely.

Biſhop Andrews in Tortur. Tort. p. 385 Acutus homo non diſtinguit inter Formam, atque Authoritatem regiminis: Forma de hominibus eſſe poteſt: de cœlo ſemper eſt authoritas. An Rex ſit ſupra Leges, Vid. Seb. Fox. lib. 2. de Inſtit. Reg.

Object. 2. But, ſaith he, Lib. 8. p. 192. [Unto me it ſeemeth almoſt out of doubt and controverſie, that every independent multitude before any certain form of Regiment eſtabliſhed, hath under God ſupream Authority, full Dominion over it ſelf, ——] Obj. 2.

Anſw. If by Dominion were meant Propriety, every Individual hath it; but for Governing Power, it ſeemeth as clear to me, that your independent multitude hath no Civil Power of Government at all; but only a Power to chooſe them Governours; while they have no Governours, they have no Governing Power, for that maketh a Governour. Anſw.

§. 14. Object. 3. Ibid. A Man who is Lord of himſelf, may be made anothers Servant, &c] Obj. 3.

Anſw. 3. He may hire out himſelf to labour for another; becauſe he hath ſo far the power of himſelf, and his Labour is his own, which he may ſell for wages; but in a Family, that the Maſter be the Governour to ſee Gods Laws obeyed by his Servants, is of Divine appointment, and this Governing Power the Servant giveth not to his Maſter, but only maketh himſelf the object of it. 2. The power that nature giveth a Man over himſelf, is tota ſpecie diſtinct from Civil Government; (as Dr. Hammond hath well ſhewed againſt I. G.) An individual Perſon hath not that power of his own Life as the King hath. He may not put himſelf to death, for that Anſw.

which the King may put him to death for. 3. If this were true, that every individual, by self-resignation might give a King his power over him; yet à posse ad esse non valet consequentia; and that it is not so is proved, in that God the Universal Soveraign hath prevented them, by determining himself, of his own Officers, and giving them their power in the same Charter by which he enableth the People to choose them. Therefore it is no better reasoning than to say, [if all the Persons in London subjected themselves to the Lord Mayor, he would thereby receive his power from them,] when the King hath prevented that already, by giving him the power himself in his Charter; and leaving only the choice of the Person to them; and that under the direction of the Rules which he hath given them.

Dion. Cass. saith that when Euphates the Philosopher would kill himself, Veniam dederat ei Adrianus citra ignominiam & infamiam, ut cicutam tum propter senectutem, tum etiam propter gravem morbum, bibere posset. In vita Adriani.

Obj. 4. §. 15. Object. 4. But, saith he, pag. 193. l. 8. [In Kingdoms of this quality, (as this we live in) the Highest Governour hath indeed universal Dominion, but with dependency upon that whole entire Body over the several parts whereof he hath dominion; so that it standeth for an axiome in this case, The King is major singulis, universis minor.

Answ. Answ. If you had included himself, its certain that he cannot be greater than the whole, because he cannot be greater than himself. But seeing you speak of the whole in contradistinction from him, I answer, That indeed in genere causæ finalis the Soveraign is Universis Minor, that is, The whole Kingdom is naturally more worth than One, and their felicity a greater good; or else the bonum publicum, or salus populi could not be the End of Government; but this is nothing to our case; for we are speaking of Governing Power as a means to this end; and so in genere causæ efficientis the Soveraign (yea, and his lowest Officer) hath more Authority or Jus Regendi than all the People as such, (for they all as such have none at all;) Even as the Church is of more worth than the Pastor, and yet the Pastor alone hath more Authority to administer the Sacraments, and to govern the People, than all the flock hath; for they have none either to use or give (whatever some say to the contrary,) but only choose him to whom God will give it.

Against the Peoples being the Givers of Power, by conjoining all their own in one, in Church or State, see Mr. D. Cawdry's Review of Mr. Hooker's Survey, p. 154, &c.

Obj. 5. §. 16. Object 5. Saith the Reverend Author lib. 8. p. 194. [Neither can any Man with reason think, but that the first institution of Kings, (a sufficient consideration wherefore their power should always depend on that from which it did always flow) by original influence of power from the Body into the King, is the cause of Kings dependency in power upon the body; by dependency we mean subordination and subjection.]

Answ. Answ. 1. But if their institution in genere was of God, and that give them their power, and it never flowed from the body at all, then all your superstructure falleth with your ground-work. 2. And here you seem plainly to confound all Kingdoms by turning the pars imperans into the pars subdita, & vice versa; if the King be subject, how be they his Subjects? I will not infer what this will lead them to do, when they are taught that Kings are in subordination and subjection to them. Sad experience hath shewed us what this very principle would effect.

Obj. 6. So Lib. 3. p. 211. & p. 218. & p. 220. §. 17. Object. 6. Ibid. [A manifest token of which dependency may be this; as there is no more certain argument, that Lands are held under any as Lords, than if we see that such Lands in defect of Heirs fall unto them by Escheat; in like manner it doth follow rightly that seeing Dominion when there is none to inherit it, returneth unto the body, therefore they which before were inheritors of it, did hold it in dependance on the body; so that by comparing the body with the head as touching power, it seemeth always to reside in both; fundamentally and radically in one, in the other derivatively; in one the habit, in the other the Act of Power.

Answ. Power no more falleth to the multitude by Escheat, than the power of the Pastor falls to the Church, or the power of the Physician to the Hospital, or the power of the Schoolmaster to the Scholars: That is, not at all: When all the Heirs are dead, they are an ungoverned Community, that have power to choose a Governour, but no power to govern, neither (as you distinguish it) in Habit nor in Act; originally nor derivatively. As it is with a Corporation when the Mayor is dead, the power falleth not to the People. Answ.

Therefore there is no goodground given for your following question, [May a body politick then at all times withdraw in whole or in part the influence of Dominion which passeth from it, if inconveniences do grow thereby? Though you answer this question soberly your self, it's easie to see how the multitude may be tempted to answer it on your grounds, especially if they think your inconvenience turn into a necessity, and what use they will make of your next words, [It must be presumed that supream Governours will not in such cases oppose themselves, and be stiff in detaining that, the use whereof is with publick detriment.] A strange presumption.

§. 18. Object. 7. [The Axioms of our Regal Government are these, Lex facit Regem: The Kings grant of any favour made contrary to Law is void; Rex nihil potest nisi quod jure potest.] Obj. 7.

Answ. If Lex be taken improperly for the constituting contract between Prince and People, and if your facit have respect only to the species and Person, and not the substance of the power it self, then I contradict you not. But if Lex be taken properly, for Authoritativa constitutio debiti, or the signification of the Soveraigns will to oblige the Subject, then Lex non facit Regem, sed Rex Legem. Answ. Lib. 8. p. 195. Trita in Scholis, Neminem sibi imperare posse; neminem sibi legem posse dicere, a qua mutata voluntate nequeat recedere: Summum ejus esse Imperium qui ordinario jure derogare valeat. Et quibus evincitur jus summæ potestatis non limitari per legem positivum. Hinc & Augustinus dixit Imperatorem non esse subjectum legibus suis —— Grotius de Imp. p. 149. 150.

§. 19. Object. 8. Lib. 8. p. 210. [When all which the wisdom of all sorts can do is done for the devising of Laws in the Church, it is the general consent of all that giveth them the form and vigor of Laws: Without which they could be no more to us than the Counsels of Physicians to the sick: Well might they seem as wholsome admonitions and instructions, but Laws could they never be, without consent of the whole Church to be guided by them, whereunto both nature and the practice of the Church of God set down in Scripture, is found every way so fully consonant, that God himself would not impose, no not his own Laws upon his People, by the hand of Moses, without their free and open consent.] Obj. 8.

Answ. 1. Wisdom doth but prepare Laws, and Governing Power enacteth them, and giveth them their form. But the whole Body hath no such Governing Power, therefore they give them not their form. 2. The Peoples consent to Gods Laws gave them not their Form or Authority; this opinion I have elsewhere confuted, against a more erroneous Author. Their consent to Gods Laws was required indeed, as naturally necessary to their obedience, but not as necessary to the Being or Obligation of the Law. Can you think that it had been no sin in them to have disobeyed Gods Laws, unless they had first consented to them? Then all the World might escape Sin and Damnation, by denying consent to the Laws of God. 3. This Doctrine will teach Men that * we have no Church Laws; for the whole Church never signified their consent. Millions of the poorer sort have no voices in choosing Parliament Men or Convocations; and this will teach the minor differing part, to think themselves disobliged for want of Answ. Hanc videò sapientissimorum fuisse sententiam. Legem nec hominum ingeniis excogitatam, nec scitum aliquod esse populorum; sed æternum quiddam, quod universum mundum regeret, imperandi prohibendi que sapientia. Cicero de Leg.

of consenting, and will give every dissenting Part or or Person a Negative voice to all Church Laws. 4. A single Bishop hath a Governing Power over his particular Church, and they are bonud to obey him; Heb. 13. 7, 17. And if the Governing Power of one Pastor be not suspended for want of the consent of any or all the People, then much less, the Governing Power of King and Parliament.

* How considerable a part of England, is London? Yet in this Convocation, which hath made the new changes in the Liturgy and Book of Ordination, London had not one Clerk of their choosing: For being to choose but two, they chose only Mr. Calamy and my self; who were neither of us accepted, or ever there. Now if your opinion be true; Quer. 1. Whether you make not this Convocations, Decrees to be but Counsels to us: 2. Or at least whether the City of London, or the London Ministers be not made free from detriment, as not consenters: You will free them and me, especially from detriment for our conforming to this Convocations Acts as such; upon reasons which I do not own my self, as generally by you laid down.

Object. 9. §. 20. Object. 9. Lib. 8. p. 220, [It is a thing even undoubtedly natural that all free and independent Societies should themselves make their own Laws; and that this power should belong to the whole, not to any certain part of a politick body.——]

Answ. Answ. This is oft affirmed, but no proof at all of it; in many Nations the Representatives of the whole Body have the Legislative Power, or part of it. But that is from the special constitution of that particular Commonwealth, and not from Nature, nor common to all Nations. All that naturally belongeth to the People as such, was but to choose their Law-makers, and secure their Liberties, and not to make Laws themselves, by themselves, or meer Representers.

Obj. 10. §. 21. Object. 10. Lib 8. p. 221. [For of this thing no Man doubteth, namely, that in all Societies, Companies and Corporations, what severally each shall be bound unto, it must be with all their assents ratified, Against all equity it were, that a Man should suffer detriment at the hands of Men, for not observing that which he never did either by himself or by others, mediately agree to——] Answ. Answ. I am one that more than doubt of that which you say no Man doubteth of. Do you not so much as except God's Laws, and all those that only do enforce them, or drive Men to obey them? As Men are obliged to obey God, whether they consent or not; so are they to obey the Laws of their Sovereigns, though they never consented to them, no nor to their Soveraignty, as long as they are Members of that Common-wealth, to the Government whereof the Sovereign is lawfully called, Millions of Dissenters may be bound to obey, till they quit the Society.

Obj. 11. §. 22. Object. 11. Lib. 8. p. 221. [If Magistrates be Heads of the Church, they are of necessity Christians]

Answ. Answ. That can never be proved. A Constitutive Head indeed must be a Christian and more, even a Pastor to a particular Church, and Christ to the Universal. This Headship our Kings disclaim; But a Head of the Church, that is, over the Church, or a Coercive Governour of it, the King would be if he were no Christian. As one that is no Physician may be Head over all the Physicians in his Kingdom; or though he be no Philosopher, or Artist, he may be Head over all the Philosophers and Artists; and in all their causes have the supreme coercive power; so would the King over all Protestants if he were no Protestant, and over all Christians if he were no Christian: But you think, that he that is no Member of the Church cannot be the Head of it. I answer, Not a Constitutive Essential Head as the Pastor is; but he may be the Head over it, and have all the coercive power over it. What if the King be not a Member of many Corporations in his Kingdom? Yet as he is Head of the Kingdom, he is Head of, or over them as they are parts of it.

Obj. 12. §. 23. Object. 12. Lib. 8. p. 218, 223, 224. [What power the King hath, he hath it by Law; the bounds and limits of it are known; the entire community giveth order, &c. p. 223. As for them that exercise power altogether against Order, although the kind of Power which they have, may be of God, yet is their exercise thereof against God, and therefore not of God, otherwise than by permission, as all injustice is, p. 224. Usurpers of Power, whereby we do not mean them, that by violence have aspired unto places of highest Authority, but those that use more Authority than they did ever receive in form and manner before mentioned—— Such Usurpers thereof as in the exercise of their Power, do more than they have been authorised to do, cannot in conscience bind any Man to obedience.]

Answ. Answ. It is true that no Man can exercise more power than he hath: The power that we speak of being ἐξουσία, Jus regendi, it is impossible to use more Authority than they have; though they may command beyond and without Authority. And it is true, that where a Man hath no authority or right to command, he cannot directly bind to obedience. But yet a Ruler may exercise more power than Man ever gave him, and oblige Men to obedience thereby. God giveth them power to govern for his Glory, according to his Laws, and to promote obedience to those Laws of God (in Nature and Scripture) by subordinate Laws of their own. And all this the Soveraign may do, if the People at the choice of him or his Family, should only say, We take you for our Sovereign Ruler: For then he may do all that true Reason or Scripture make the work of a Sovereign Ruler; even govern the People by all such just means, as tend to the publick good and their everlasting happiness: And yet that People that should do no more but choose Persons or Families to govern them, and set them no bounds, do give no power to those they choose, but determine of the Persons that shall have power from God. Yet it is granted you, That if the Person or Family chosen contract with them to govern only with such and such Limitations, they have bound themselves by their own contract; and thus both specifications of Governments and Degrees of power come in by Men: But alway distinguish, 1. Between the Peoples giving away their Propriety (in their Goods, Labours, &c.) (which they may do) and giving Authority, or governing power (which they have not to give.) 2. Between their naming the persons that shall receive it from the universal King, and giving it themselves. 3. Between bounding and limiting Power, and giving Power. 4. And between a Sovereigns binding himself by contract, and being bound by the Authority of others. If they be limited by Contracts, which are commonly called the constitutive or fundamental Laws, it is their own consent and contract that effectively obligeth and limiteth them; of which indeed the Peoples will may be the occasion, when they resolve that they will be governed on no other terms: But if the Contract limit them not, but they be chosen simply to be the summæ potestates, without naming any particular Powers either by concession or restraint, then as to Ruling they are absolute as to Men, and limited only by God, from whose highest power they can never be exempt, who in Nature and Scripture restraineth them from all that is impious and unjust, against his Laws and Honour, or against the publick happiness and safety. And here also remember, That if any shall imagine that God restraineth a Magistrate when it is not so, and that the commands of their Governours are contrary to the Word of God, when it is no such matter, their error will not justifie their disobedience.

Potestas Maritalis est a Deo: applicatio ejus potestatis ad certam personam ex consensu venit quo tamen ipsum jus non datur. Nam si ex consensu daretur, posset consensu etiam dissolvi matrimonium, aut conveniri ne maritus fœminæ imperaret. Quod minime verum est. Imperatoria potestas non est penes Electores: ergo nec ab ipsis datur; sed ab ipsis tamen certæ personæ applicatur. Filii vitæ & necis non est penes cives antequam in republicam coeant. Privatus enim jus vindictæ non habet: ab iisdem tamen applicatur ad cœtum aut personam aliquam. Grotius de Imperio p. 272.

Though I have answered these Passages of this Reverend Author, it is not to draw any to undervalue his learned Writings, but to set right the Reader in the Principles of his obedience, on which the practice doth so much depend.

And I confeſs, that other Authors of Politicks, ſay as much as Mr. Hooker ſaith, both Papiſts and Proteſtants; but not all, nor I think the ſoundeſt: I will inſtance now in Alſtedius only (an excellent Perſon, but in this miſtaken) who ſaith, Encyclop. l. 23. Polit. c. 3. p. 178. I will not venture to recite the concluſion, cap. 12. pag. 199. R 5. de reſiſtendo Tyranno.

Many other Authors go the ſame way, and ſay that the people have the Majeſtas Realis, (both Papiſts, and Proteſtants, and Heathens.) But I ſuppoſe that what I have ſaid againſt Hooker, will ſerve to ſhew the weakneſs of their grounds: Though it is none of my purpoſe to contradict either Hooker or any other, ſo far as they open the odiouſneſs of the ſin of Tyranny (which at this day keepeth out the Goſpel from the far greateſt part of the World, and is the greateſt Enemy to the Kingdom of Chriſt;) nor yet as they plead for the juſt Liberties of the People; But I am not for their Authority.

Dir. 2. §. 24. Direct. 2. Begin with an abſolute Univerſal reſolved obedience to God, your Creator and Redeemer, who is your Sovereign King, and will be your final righteous Judge. As he that is no loyal Subject to the King, can never well obey his Officers: ſo he that ſubjecteth not his Soul to the Original power of his Creator, can never well obey the Derivative power of earthly Governours.

Object. But, you may ſay, experience teacheth us, that many ungodly People are obedient to their Superiours as well as others. I anſwer, Materially they are, but not Formally and from a right principle, and to right ends: As a Rebel againſt the King, may obey a Juſtice of Peace for his own ends, as long as he will let him alone, or take his part. But not formally as he is the King's Officer. So ungodly Men may flatter Princes and Magiſtrates for their own ends, or on ſome low and by-account, but not ſincerely as the Officers of God. He is not like to be truly obedient to Man, that is ſo fooliſh, diſhoneſt and impious as to rebel againſt his Maker, nor to obey that Authority which he firſt denieth, in its Original and firſt efficient cauſe. Whatever Satan and his Servants may ſay, and however ſome Hypocrites may contradict in their practices the Religion which they profeſs, yet nothing is more certain, than that the moſt ſerious godly Chriſtians, are the beſt Subjects upon earth. As their Principles themſelves will eaſily demonſtrate.

Dir. 3. §. 25. Direct. 3. Having begun with God, obey your Governours as the Officers of God, with an obedience ultimately Divine. All things muſt be done in Holineſs by the Holy. That is, God muſt be diſcerned, obeyed, and intended in all: and therefore in Magiſtrates in a ſpecial manner. In two reſpects, Magiſtrates are obeyed or rather flattered by the ungodly; Firſt, as they are Men that are able to do them corporal good or hurt: As a Horſe, or Dog, or other Brute will follow you for his belly, and loveth to be where he fareth beſt: Secondly, As the Head of his Party, and encourager of him in his evil way, when he meets with Rulers that will be ſo bad. Wicked Men love wicked Magiſtrates for being the Servants of Satan; But faithful Men muſt honour and obey a Magiſtrate, as an Officer of God; even a Magiſtrate as a Magiſtrate, and not only as Holy, is an Officer of the Lord of all. Therefore the fifth Commandment is as the hinge of the Two Tables; Many of the Ancients thought that it was the laſt Commandment of the firſt Table, and the Moderns think it is the firſt Commandment of the laſt Table: For it commandeth our duty to the nobleſt ſort of Men; but not merely as Men, but as the Officers of God. They debaſe Magiſtrates, that look at them meerly, as thoſe that maſter other Men, as the ſtrongeſt Beaſt doth by the weaker: Nothing will make you ſincere and conſtant in your honouring and obeying him, but taking them as the Officers of God, and remembring by whoſe Commiſſion they rule, and whoſe work they do; that they are Miniſters of God to us for good, Rom. 13. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5. If you do not this, 1. You wrong God, whoſe Servants they are; For he that deſpiſeth, deſpiſeth not Man but God. 2. You wrong the Magiſtrate, as much as you ſhould do an Ambaſſadour, if you took him to be the Meſſenger of ſome Jack-ſtraw, or ſome fellow that ſignifieth no more than his perſonal worth importeth. 3. And you wrong your ſelves: For while you neglect the Intereſt and Authority of God in your Rulers, you forfeit the Acceptance, Protection and Reward of God. Subjects as well as Servants muſt learn that great Leſſon, Col. 3. 23, 24, 25. And whatſoever ye do, do it heartily as to the Lord, and not unto Men: knowing, that of the Lord ye ſhall receive the reward of the Inheritance, for ye ſerve the Lord Chriſt: But he that doth wrong, ſhall receive for the wrong that he hath done, and there is no reſpect of Perſons. So Eph. 6. 5, 6, 7, 8. Magiſtrates are as truly God's Officers as Preachers: And therefore as he that heareth Preachers, heareth him, ſo he that obeyeth Rulers obeyeth him: The Exceptions are but the like in both caſes: It is not every thing that we muſt receive from Preachers; nor every thing that we muſt do at the command of Rulers; but both in their proper place and work, muſt be regarded as the Officers of God, and not as Men that have no higher Authority than their own to bear them out.

Greg. Nazianzen cited by Bilſon of Subjection, p. 361. Thou reigneſt together with Chriſt; ruleſt with him; thy ſword is from him; thou art the Image of God.

Dir. 4. §. 26. Direct. 4. Let no vices of the Perſon cauſe you to forget the dignity of his Office: The Authority of a ſinful Ruler is of God, and muſt accordingly be obeyed: Of this read Biſhop Bilſon at large in his excellent Treatiſe of Chriſtian Subjection, againſt the Papiſts that excommunicate and depoſe Princes whom they account Hereticks, or Favourers of them. Thoſe Sins which will damn a Man's Soul and deprive him of Heaven, will not deprive him of his Kingdom, nor diſoblige the Subjects from their Obedience. An Infidel, or an ungodly Chriſtian (that is, an Hypocrite) is capable of being a Prince, as well as of being a Parent, Husband, Maſter: And the Apoſtle hath taught all as well as Servants their duty to ſuch, 1 Pet. 2 18, 19, 20, 21. Servants, be ſubject to your Maſters with all fear; and not only to the good and gentle, but alſo to the froward; For this is thankworthy, if a Man for conſcience toward God, endure grief, ſuffering wrongfully? For what glory is it, if when you are buffeted for your faults, you take it patiently? but if when ye do well and ſuffer for it ye take it patiently, this is acceptable with God; For even hereunto were that even to an Arrian persecuting Usurping Tyrant, Pro rebus sibi commissis semper fidelissimus habebatur; and the like of Sebastian and others, p. 460.

Dir. 5. §. 27. Direct. 5. Do not either divulge or aggravate the vices of your Governours to their dishonour: For their Honour is necessary to the publick good. If they have not care of their own honour, yet their subjects must have a care of it. If once they be dishonoured, they will the more easily be contemned, hated and disobeyed. Therefore the dishonouring of the Rulers tendeth to the dissolution of the Government, and ruine of the Common-wealth. Only in two cases did the ancient Christians aggravate the wickedness of their Governours. 1. In case they were such cruel Monsters as Nero, who lived to the misery of Mankind. 2. In case they were not only open Enemies of the Church of Christ, but their Honour stood in competition with the Honour of Christianity, Piety and Honesty, as in Julians case; I confess against Nero and Julian both living and dead (and many like them) the Tongues and Pens of wise and sober Persons have been very free; But the fifth Commandment is not to be forgotten, Honour thy Father and Mother. And 1 Pet. 2. 17. Fear God, Honour the King; Though you must not call evil good, yet you may conceal and hide evil. Cham was cursed for opening his Father's Nakedness. Though you must flatter none in their sins, nor hinder their Repentance, but further it by all righteous means, yet must you speak honourably of your Rulers, and endeavour to breed an honourable esteem of them in the Peoples minds; and not as some, that think they do well, if they can secretly make their Rules seem odious, by opening and aggravating their faults.

Mark 7. 10. & 10. 19.

Dir. 6. §. 28. Direct. 6. Subdue your Passions, that no injuries which you may suffer by them, may disturb your reason, and make you dishonour them by way of revenge. If you may not revenge your selves on private Men, much less on Magistrates; and the tongue may be an unjust Revenger, as well as the hand. Passion will provoke you to be telling all Men, [Thus and thus I was used.] and to perswade you that it is no sin to tell the truth of what you suffered: But remember, that the publick Good, and the honour of God's Officers, are of greater value, than the righting of a particular Person that is injured. Many a discontented Person hath set Kingdoms on fire, by divulging the faults of Governours for the righting of themselves.

Object. But shall cruel and unrighteous or persecuting Men do mischief, and not hear of it, nor be humbled for it?

Answ. 1. Preachers of the Gospel, and others that have opportunity, may privately tell them of it, to bring them to repentance (if they will indure it) without dishonoring them by making it publick. 2. Historians will tell posterity of it, to their perpetual Infamy, (if repentance and well-doing recover not their honour. Flatterers abuse the living, but Truth will dishonor their wickedness when they are dead: For it is God's own Decree, That the memory of the just is blessed, but the name of the wicked shall rot, Prov. 10. 7. 3. And God himself will fully be avenged upon the impenitent for ever, having told you, That it were better for him that offendeth one of his little ones, that a Millstone were hanged about his Neck, and he were drowned in the depth of the Sea. And is not all this enough, without the revenge of your passionate tongues? To speak evil of Dignities, and despise Dominion, and bring railing Accusations, are the Sins of the old licentious Hereticks. Christ left us his example, not to revile the meanest, when we are reviled, 1 Pet. 2. 23. If you believe, that God will justifie the innocent, and avenge them speedily, Luk. 18. 7, 8. What need you be so forward to justifie and avenge your selves?

Lamprid. faith of Alex. Severus that, Amavit literatos homines, vehementer eos etiam reformidans, ne quid de se asperum scriberent. Universal. Histor. p. 132. Tiberius bellua luto & sanguine macerata; sui tegendi periitissimus artifex; totus tamen posteritatis oculis patuit, Deo hypocrisim detractione larvæ plectente. * Matth. 18. 6. Mark 9. 42. Luk. 17. 2. Jud. 7, 8, 9.

Object. If God will have their names to rot, and spoken evil of when they are dead, why may I not do it while they are alive?

Answ. There is a great deal of difference between a true Historian, and a Self avenger in the reason of the thing, and in the effects: To dishonour bad Rulers while they live, doth tend to excite the People to Rebellion, and to disable them to govern: But for Truth to be spoken of them, when they are dead, doth only lay an odium upon the sin, and is a warning to others that they follow them not in evil: And this no wicked Prince was ever so great and powerful as to prevent; for it is a part of God's resolved judgment. Yet must Historians so open the faults of the Person, as not to bring the Office into contempt, but preserve the reverence due to the Authority and Place of Governours.

Sext. Aurel Victor. de Calig. De quo nescio an decueris memoriæ prodi, nisi forte quia juvat de principibus nosse omnia, ut improbi saltem famæ metu talia declinent.

§ 29. Direct. 7. By all means overcome a selfish mind, and get such a holy and a publick Spirit, as more regardeth God's Honour, and the publick Interest, than your own. It is SELFISHNESS that is the great Rebel and Enemy of God, and of the King and of our Neighbour. A selfish private Spirit careth not what the Common-wealth suffereth, if he himself may be a gainer by it. To revenge himself, or to rise up to some higher place, or increase his Riches, he will betray and ruine his King, his Countrey, and his nearest Friends. A selfish, ambitious, covetous Man, is faithful to no Man, longer than he serveth his ends, nor is he any further to be trusted, than his own interest will allow. Self-denial, and a a publick Spirit, are necessary to every faithful Subject.

Dir. 8. §. 30. Direct. 8. Wish not evil to your Governours in your secret thoughts; but if any such thought would enter into your hearts, reject it with abhorrence. Eccles. 10. 20. Curse not the King, no not in thy thoughts; and curse not the rich in thy Bed-chamber: For a Bird of the Air shall carry the voice, and that which hath Wings shall tell the matter. A Feaverish misguided Zeal for Religion, and a passionate discontent for personal Injuries, do make many greatly guilty in this point; they would be much pleased, if God would shew some grievous judgment upon Persecutors; and take no warning by Christ's rebukes of James and John, but secretly are wishing for Fire from Heaven, not knowing what manner of Spirit they are of. They cherish such thoughts as are pleasing to them, though they dare not utter them in words. And he that dare wish hurt, is in danger of being drawn by temptation to do hurt.

Object. But may we not pray for the cutting off of Persecutors? And may we not give God thanks for it, if he do it himself, without any sinful means of ours?

Answ. Every Ruler that casteth down one Sect or Party of Christians, and setteth up another (perhaps as true to the interest of Christianity as they) is not to be prayed against, and his destruction wish'd by the suffering party. 2. If he be a Persecutor of Christianity and Piety it self, as Heathens, and Infidels are, yet if his Government do more good, than his Persecution doth harm, you may not so

They are dangerous Passages which Petrarch hath, though a good learned and moderate Man. Dial. 49. Non tot passim essent Domini nec tam late furerent, nisi populi insanirent & cuique civium pro se charior foret res privata quam publica; voluptas quam gloria, pecunia quam libertas, Vita quam Virtus —— Et statim —— Et sane si vel unum patria civem bonum habeat, malum Dominum diutius non habebit. The meaning is too plain; abundance of the most Learned Writers have such Passages which must be read with caution: Though I would draw none to the other extream. Petrarchs 68. Dial. & 85. Dialog. de bono Domino, is as smart as the former: but yet speaketh not all that contra Reges which he doth contra Dominos. However he says, that Inter Regem & Tyrannum non discernunt Graii, &c. —— So Sir Thomas More in his Poems: Regibus e multis Regnum bene qui reget unum; Vix tamen unus erit, si tamen unus erit. And that of *Senec. much much as wish his downfal. 3. If he were a Nero, or a Julian, you must pray first for his Conversion and if that may not be, then next for his restraint, and never for his destruction, but on supposition, that neither of the former may be attained (which you cannot say.) 4. You must pray for the deliverance of the persecuted Church, and leave the way and means to God, and not prescribe to him. Hurtful Desires and Prayers are seldom of God. 5. You may freelier rejoyce afterwards, than desire it before; because when a Julian is cut off, you know that Gods righteous Will is accomplished; when before you knew not that it was his Will; Yet after, it is the deliverance of the Church, and not the hurt of a Persecutor as such, that you must give thanks for: Be very suspicious here, lest partiality and passion blind you.

Dir. 9. Bias interrogatus, quidnam esset difficile? Ferre, inquit, fortiter mutationem rerum in deterius. Laert. p. 55.

§. 31. Direct. 9. Learn how to suffer; and know what use God can make of your Sufferings, and think not better of prosperity, and worse of Suffering, than you have cause. It is a carnal unbelieving heart, that maketh so great a matter of Poverty, Imprisonment, Banishment, or Death, as if they were undone, if they suffer for Christ, or be sent to Heaven before the time: As if Kingdoms must be disturbed to save you from suffering: This better beseems an Infidel and a Worldling, that takes his Earthly Prosperity for his portion, and thinks he hath no other to win or lose. Do you not know what the Church hath gained by suffering? How pure it hath been when the fire of Persecution hath refined it? And how Prosperity hath been the very thing that hath polluted it, and shattered it all to pieces; by letting in all the ungodly World, into the visible Communion of the Saints, and by setting the Bishops on contending for Superiority, and over-topping Emperors and Kings? Many thousands that would be excellent Persons in adversity, cannot bear a high or prosperous state, but their Brains are turned, and Pride and Contention maketh them the scorn of the Adversaries that observe them.

Dir. 10.

§. 32. Direct. 10. Trust God, and live by Faith; and then you will find no need of rebellions or any sinful means. Do you believe, that both the Hearts and Lives of Kings, and all their Affairs, are in the hand of God? If not, you are Atheists. If you do, then do you not think that God is fitter than you to dispose of them, He that believeth, will not make haste? Deliverance from Persecutions must be prayed and waited for, and not snatcht by violence, as a hungry Dog will snatch the Meat out of his Masters hands, and bite his fingers: Do you believe, That all shall work together for good to them that love God? Rom. 8. 28. And do you believe, that the godly are more than Conquerors; when they are killed all day, and counted as Sheep unto the slaughter? Vers. 32, 33, 34, 35. And do you believe, that it is cause of exceeding joy, when for the sake of Righteousness you are hated and persecuted, and all manner of evil is falsly spoken of you? Matth. 5. 10, 11, 12. If you do not, you believe not Christ; if you do, will you strive by sinful means against your own good and happiness, and joy. Will you desire to conquer when you may be more than Conquerors? Certainly, the use of sinful means doth come from secret unbelief and diffidence? Learn to trust God, and you will easily be subject to your Governors.

Dir. 11.

§. 33. Direct. 11. Look not for too great matters in the World: Take it but for that Wilderness which is the way to the promised Land of rest. And then you will not count it strange to meet with hard usage and sufferings from almost all. 1 Pet. 4. 12, 13. Beloved, think it not strange concerning the fiery trial, which is to try you, as if some strange thing happened to you; but rejoice in that ye are partakers of the sufferings of Christ. Are you content with God and Heaven for your portion? If not, how are you Christians; if you are, you have small Temptation to rebel or use unlawful means for Earthly Priviledges. Paul saith, He took pleasure in persecution, 2 Cor. 12. 10. Learn you to do so, and you will easily bear them.

Phil. 3. 7, 8, 11, 12.

Dir. 12.

§. 34. Direct. 12. Abhor the popular spirit of envy, which maketh the poor, for the most part, think odiously of the rich and their superiors; because they have that which they had rather have themselves. I have long observed it, that the poor labouring People, are very apt to speak of the rich, as sober Men speak of Drunkard; as if their very estates, and dignity, and greatness, were a vice. And it is very much to flatter their own Conscience, and delude themselves with ungrounded hopes of Heaven. When they have not the Spirit of Regeneration and Holiness, to witness their title to eternal Life, they think their Poverty will serve the turn; and they will ordinarily say, That they hope God will not punish them in another World, because they have had their part in this: But they will easily believe, that almost all rich and great Men go to Hell; And when they read Luk. 16. of the rich Man and Lazarus, they think they are the Lazarus and read it as if God would save Men meerly for being poor, and damn Men for being great and rich; when yet they would themselves be as rich and great, if they knew how to attain it. They think that they are the maintainers of the Commonwealth, and the rich are the Caterpillers of it, that live upon their Labours, like Drones in the Hive, or Mice and Vermine that eat the Honey, which the poor labouring Bees have long been gathering. For they are unacquainted with the Labours and Cares of their Governours, and sensible only of their own. This envious spirit exceedingly disposeth the poor to Discontents, and Tumults, and Rebellions; but it is not of God, Jam. 3. 15, 16, 17.

§. 35. Direct. 13. Keep not company with envious murmurers at Government; for their words fret like a canker, and their sin is of an infecting kind. What a multitude were drawn into the Rebellion of Korah, who, no doubt, were provoked by the Leaders discontented words. It seemeth they were for Popularity, Num. 6. 3, 13, 14. Ye take too much upon you, seeing all the Congregation are holy, every one of them, and the Lord is among them: Wherefore then lift you up your selves above the Congregation of the Lord—— Is it a small thing that thou hast brought us up out of a Land that floweth with Milk and Honey, to kill us in the Wilderness; except thou make thy self altogether a Prince over us?——Wilt thou put out the eyes of these Men? What confidence, and what fair pretences are here? So probable and plausible to the People, that it is no wonder that Multitudes were carried to Rebellion by it? Though God disowned them by a dreadful judgment, and shewed whom he had chosen to be the Governours of his People,

Dir. 14.

§. 36. Direct. 14. Keep humble, and take heed of Pride. The humble is ready to obey and yield, and not only to be subject to Magistrates, but to all Men, even voluntarily to be subject to them that cannot constrain them. 1 Pet. 5. 5. Be all of you subject one to another. It is no hard matter for a twig to bow, and for a humble Soul to yield and obey another, in any thing that is lawful. But the Proud take subjection for vassalage, and obedience for slavery, and say, *Who is Lord over us? Our Tongues are our own, what Lord shall controul us? Will we be made slaves to such and such! If you would please God, know, and keep your places, as Soldiers in an Army, which is their comely order, and their strength.

Matth. 7. 1, 2, 3.

Dir. 16. §. 39. Direct. 16. Consider the great temptations of the rich and great; and pity them that stand in so dangerous a station, instead of murmuring at them, or envying their greatness. You little know what you should be your selves, if you were in their places, and the World, and the Flesh, had so great a stroke at you, as they have at them. He that can swim in calmer Water, may be carried down a violent stream. It is harder for that Bird to fly, that hath many pound weights tied to keep her down, than that which hath but a straw to carry to her Nest. It is harder mounting Heaven-wards with Lordships and Kingdoms, than with your less impediments. Why do you not pity them that stand on the top of barren Mountains, in the stroke of every storm and wind, when you dwell in the quiet fruitful vales? Do you envy them that must go to Heaven, as a Camel through a Needles eye, if ever they come there? And are you discontented, that you are not in their condition? Will you rebel and fight to make your Salvation, as difficult as theirs? Are you so unthankful to God for your safer station, that you murmur at it, and long to be in the more dangerous place?

Dir. 17. §. 40. Direct. 17. Pray constantly and heartily for the spiritual and corporal welfare of your Governours. And you have reason to believe, that God who hath commanded you to put up such Prayers, will not suffer them to be wholly lost, but will answer them some way to the benefit of them that perform the duty, 1 Tim. 2. 1, 2, 3. And the very performance of it will do us much good of it self: For it will keep the Heart well disposed to our Governous, and keep out all sinful desires of their hurt; or control them, and cast them out, if they come in: Prayer is the exercise of love and good desires; and exercise increaseth and confirmeth habits. If any ill wishes against your Governours should steal into your minds, the next time you pray for them, Conscience will accuse you of Hypocrisie, and either the sinful desires will corrupt or end your Prayers, or else your Prayers will cast out those ill desires. Certainly the faithful fervent Prayers of the Righteous, do prevail much with God: And things would go better than they do in the World, if we prayed for Rulers as heartily as we ought.

Object. §. 41. Object. For all the Prayers of the Church five parts of six of the World, are yet Idolaters, Heathens, Infidels, and Mahometans: And for all the Prayer of the Reformed Churches, most of the Christian part of the World, are drowned in Popery, or gross Ignorance and Superstition, and the poor Greek Churches have Mahometan or Tyrannical Governours, and carnal, proud, usurping Prelates domineer over the Roman Church; and there are but three Protestant Kings over the whole Earth! And among the Israelites themselves, who had Priests and Prophets to pray for their Princes, a good King was so rare; that when you have named five or six over Judah, (and never a one after the division over Israel) you scarce know where to find the rest. What good then do your Prayers for Kings and Magistrates?

Answ. Answ. 1. As I said before, they keep the hearts of subjects in an obedient holy frame. 2. Were it not for Prayers, those few good ones would be fewer, or worse than they are; and the bad ones might be worse, or at least do more hurt to the Church, than they now do. 3. It is not to be expected, that all should be granted in kind, that Believers pray for: For then not only Kings, but all the World, should be converted and saved: For we should pray for every one. But God who knoweth best how to distribute his Mercies, and to honour himself, and refine his Church by the malice and persecution of his Enemies, will make his Peoples Prayers a means of that measure of good which he will do for Rulers, and by them in the World: And that is enough to encourage us to pray. 4. And indeed, if when proud, ungodly Worldlings, have sold their Souls by wicked means, to climb up into places of Power, and command, and domineer over others; the Prayers of the faithful should presently convert, and save them all, because they are Governours. This would seem to charge God with respect of Persons, and defect of Justice, and would drown the World in Wickedness, Treasons, Bloodshed, and Confusion; by encouraging Men by Flatteries, or Treacheries, or Murders, to usurp such places, in which they may both gratifie their Lusts, and after save their Souls, while the godly are obliged to pray them into Heaven. It is no such hearing of Prayers for Governours which God hath promised. 5. And yet, I must observe, that most Christians are so cold and formal in their Prayers for the Rulers of the World, and of the Church, that we have great reason to impute the unhappiness of Governours, very much to their neglect: Almost all Men are taken up so much with their own concernments, that they put off the publick concernments of the World, and of the Church and State, with a few customary heartless words; and understand not the meaning of the three first Petitions of the Lords Prayer, and the Reason of their precedency, or put them not up with that feeling, as they do the other three. If we could once observe, that the generality of Christians were more earnest and importunate with God, for the [illegible] ing of his name through all the World, and the coming of his Kingdom, and the obeying of his Will in Earth, as it is in Heaven, and the Conversion of the Kings and Kingdoms of the World, than for any of their personal concernments, I should take it for a better prognostick of the happiness of Kings and Kingdoms, than any that hath yet appeared in our days. And those that are taken up with the expectations of Christs visible reign on Earth, would find it a more lawful and comfortable way, to promote his Government thus by his own appointed Officers, than to rebel against Kings, and seek to pull them down, on pretence of setting up him that hath appointed them, whose Kingdom (personally) is not of this World.

Object. Si id juris ordinis obtineat status religionis erit instabilis: Mutato regis animo religio mutabitur. Pasp. Unicum hic [illegible] est providentia [illegible] animos Deus in potestate sua habet; sed speciali quodam modo Cor Regis in manu Domini. Nempe si pius est qui imperat, si diligens lector sacræ Scripturæ, si assiduus in precibus, si Ecclesiæ Catholicæ reverens, si peritos attente audiens, multum per illum proficit veritas. Sin distorto est & corrupto judicio, pejus id ipsi cedit quam ecclesiæ. Nam ipsum grave manet judicium Regis Ecclesiæ, qui ecclesiam inultam non sinet. Grotius de Imper. p. 210. Joh. 18. 36.

Dir. 18. §. 42. Direct. 18. When you are tempted to dishonorable thoughts of your Governours, look over the face of all the Earth, and compare your case with the Nations of the World, and then your murmurings may be turned into thankfulness for so great a Mercy. What cause hath God to difference us from other Nations, and give us any more than an equal proportion of Mercy, with the rest of the World. Have we deserved to have a Christian King, when five parts of the World have Rulers that are Heathens and Mahometans? Have we deserved to have a Protestant King, when all the World hath but two more? How happy were the World if it were so with all Nations, as it is with us? Remember how unthankfulness forfeiteth our happiness.

Dir. 19. §. 43. Direct. 19. Consider as well the benefits which you receive by Governours, as the sufferings which you undergo; and especially consider of the common benefits, and value them above your own. He that knoweth what Man is, and what the World is and what the temptations of great Men are, and what he himſelf deſerveth; and what need the beſt have of affliction, and what good they may get by the right improvement of it, will never wonder nor grudge, to have his Earthly Mercies mixt with Croſſes, and to find ſome Salt or Sowerneſs in the Sawce of his pleaſant Diſhes. For the moſt luſcious is not of beſt concoction. And he that will more obſerve his few afflictions, than his many benefits, hath much more ſelfiſh tenderneſs of the fleſh, than ingenuous thankfulneſs to his Benefactor. It is for your good that Rulers are the Miniſters of God, Rom. 13. 3, 4, 5. Perhaps you will think it ſtrange, that I ſay to you (what I have oft ſaid,) that I think there are not very many Rulers, no not Tyrants and Perſecutors ſo bad, but that the godly that live under them, do receive from their Government more good than hurt: And (though it muſt be confeſs'd, that better Governours would do better, yet) almoſt the worſt are better than none. And none are more beholden to God for Magiſtrates, than the godly are, however none ſuffer ſo much by them in moſt places of the World. My reaſon is, 1. Becauſe the multitude of the needy, and the diſſolute Prodigals, if they were all ungoverned, would tear out the Throats of the more wealthy and induſtrious, and as Robbers uſe Men in their Houſes, and on the High-way, ſo would ſuch Perſons uſe all about them, and turn all into a conſtant War. And hereby all honeſt induſtry would be overthrown, while the fruit of Mens labours were all at the Mercy of every one that is ſtronger than the owner; and a Robber can take away all in a Night, which you have been labouring for many years, or may ſet all on fire over your heads: And more Perſons would be killed in theſe Wars by thoſe that ſought their Goods, than Tyrants and Perſecutors uſe to kill (unleſs they be of the moſt cruel ſort of all.) 2. And it is plain, that in moſt Countries, the univerſal enmity of corrupted nature to ſerious Godlineſs, would inflame the rabble, if they were but ungoverned, to commit more murders and cruelties upon the godly, than moſt of the Perſecutors in the World have committed. Yet I deny not, in moſt places there are a ſober ſort of Men of the middle rank, that will hear Reaſon, and are more equal to Religion than the higheſt, or the loweſt uſually are. But ſuppoſe theſe ſober Men were the more numerous, yet is the vulgar rabble the more violent, and if Rulers reſtrained them not, would leave few of the faithful alive on Earth. As many volumes as are written of the Martyrs, who have ſuffered by Perſecutors, I think they ſaved the Lives of many more than they murdered. Though this is no thanks to them, it is a mercy to others: As many as Queen Mary martyred, they had been far more, if ſhe had but turned the rabble looſe upon them, and never meddled with them by Authority. I do not think Nero or Dioclefian, martyred near ſo many, as the People turned looſe upon them would have done. Much more was Julian, a Protector of the Church from the popular rage, though in compariſon of a Conſtantine or Theodoſius, he was a Plague. If you will but conſider thus the benefits of your common Protection, your thankfulneſs for Rulers would overcome your murmurings. In ſome places, and at ſome times, perhaps the People would favour the Goſpel, and flock after Chriſt, if Rulers hindered them not; but that would not be their ordinary caſe, and their unconſtancy is ſo great, that what they built up one day in their zeal, the next day they would pull down in fury.

and

§. 44. Direct. 20. Think not that any change of the Form of Government, would cure that which is cauſed by the Peoples ſin, or the common pravity of Humane Nature. Some think they can contrive ſuch Forms of Government, as that Rulers ſhall be able to do no hurt: But either they will diſable them to do good, or elſe their Engine is but Glaſs, and will fail or break when it comes to execution. Men that are themſelves ſo bad and unhumbled, as not to know how bad they are, and how bad Mankind is, are ſtill laying the blame upon the Form of Government, when any thing is amiſs, and think by a change to find a cure. As if when an Army is infected with the Plague, or compoſed of Cowards, the change of the General, or Form of Government, would prove a cure. But if a Monarch be faulty, in an Ariſtocracy, you will but have many faulty Governours for one; and in a Democracy, a multitude of Tyrants.

Dir. 21. Bad people make bad Governours: In moſt places the people are ſo wilful and tenacious of their ſinful cuſtoms, that the beſt Rulers, are not able to reform them. Yea many a Ruler hath caſt off his Government being wearied with mutinous and obſtinate people: Plato would not meddle with Government in Athens. Quia plebs altis inſtitutis & moribus aſſueverat. Laert. in Platone: And many other Philoſophers that were fitteſt for Government, refuſed it on the ſame account, through the diſobedience of the People.

§. 45. Direct. 21. Set your ſelves much more to ſtudy your duty to your Governours, than the duty of your Governors to you; as knowing, that both your Temporal and Eternal Happineſs dependeth much more upon your ſelves, than upon them. God doth not call you to ſtudy other Mens duties ſo much as your own. If your Rulers ſin, you ſhall not anſwer for it; but if you ſin your ſelves, you ſhall. If you ſhould live under the Turk, that would oppreſs and perſecute you, your Souls ſhall ſpeed never the worſe for this. It is not you, but he that ſhould be damned for it. If you ſay, But it is we that ſhall be oppreſſed by it. I anſwer, 1. How ſmall are temporal things to a true Believer, in compariſon of eternal things? Have not you a greater hurt to fear, than the killing of your Bodies by Men? Luk. 12. 4. 2. And even for this Life, do you not believe, that your Lives and Liberties are in the power of God, and that he can relieve you from the oppreſſion of all the World, by leſs than a word, even by his will? If you believe not this, you are Atheiſts: If you do, you muſt needs perceive that it concerneth you more to care for your duty to your Governours, than for theirs to you: And not ſo much to regard what you receive, as what you do; nor how you are uſed by others, as how you behave your ſelves to them. Be much more afraid leſt you ſhould be guilty of murmuring, diſhonouring, diſobeying, flattering, not praying for your Governours, than leſt you ſuffer any thing unjuſtly from them, 1 Pet. 4. 13, 14, 15, 16, 17. Let none of you ſuffer as a murderer, or as a thief, or as an evil doer, or as a buſie-body in other Mens matters; yet if any man ſuffer as a Chriſtian, let him not be aſhamed, but let him glorifie God on this behalf——If ye be reproached for the name of Chriſt, ye are happy——. Live ſo, that all your Adverſaries may be forced to ſay, as it was ſaid of Daniel, Dan. 6. 5. We ſhall not find any occaſion againſt this Daniel, except we find it againſt him concerning the Law of his God, Let none be able juſtly to puniſh you as Drunkards, or Thieves, or Slanderers, or Fornicators, or Perjured, or Deceivers, or Rebellious, or Seditious, and then never fear any ſuffering for the ſake of Chriſt, or Righteouſneſs. Yea, though you ſuffer as Chriſt himſelf did, under a falſe accuſation of diſloyalty, fear not the ſuffering nor the infamy, as long as you are free from the guilt. See that all be well at home, and that you be not faulty againſt God, or your Governours, and then you may boldly commit your ſelves to God, 1 Pet. 2. 23, 24.

Direct. 23. Therefore believe not them that would exempt the Clergy from ſubjection to the Civil Powers: As none ſhould know the Law of God ſo well as they, ſo none ſhould be more obedient to Kings and States, when the Law of God ſo evidently commandeth it. Of this read Bilſon of Chriſtian Subjection, (who beſides many others, ſaith enough of this.) The Arguments of the Papiſts from the ſuppoſed

Dir. 24. §. 48. Direct. 24 Abase not Magistrates so far, as to think their Office and Power extendeth not to Matters of Religion, and the Worship of God. Were they only for the low and contemptible Matters of this World, their Office would be contemptible and low. To help you out in this, I shall answer some of the commonest doubts.

Quest. 1. Who shall be Judge in Points of Faith and Worship? §. 49. Quest. 1. Is the Civil Magistrate Judge in Controversies of Faith and Worship?

Anſ. It hath many a time grieved me to hear so easie a Question frequently propounded, and pitifully answered, by such as the publick good required, to have had more understanding in such things. In a word, Judgment is publick or private. The private Judgment, which is nothing but a rational discerning of Truth and Duty, in order to our own choice and practice, belongeth to every rational Person. The publick Judgment is ever in order to Execution. Now the Execution is of two sorts. 1. By the Sword. 2. By Gods Word applied to the Case and Person. One is upon the Body or Estate; the other is upon the Conscience of the Person, or of the Church, to bring him to Repentance, or to bind him to avoid Communion with the Church, and the Church to avoid Communion with him. And thus publick Judgment is Civil or Ecclesiastical: Coercive and violent in the Execution; or only upon Consenters and Voluntiers. In the first, the Magistrate is the only Judge, and the Pastors in the second. About Faith or Worship, if the Questionbe, Who shall be protected as Orthodox, and who shall be punished by the Sword as Heretical, Idolatrous, or Irreligious; here the Magistrate is the only Judge. If the Question be, Who shall be admitted to Church Communion as Orthodox, or ejected and Excommunicate as Heretical or Prophane; here the Pastors are the proper Judges. This is the truth, and this is enough to end all the voluminous wranglings upon the Question, Who shall be Judge? And to answer the Cavils of the Papists against the Power of Princes in Matters of Religion. It is pity that such gross and silly Sophisms, in a Case that a Child may answer, should debase Christian Princes, and take away their chief Power, and give it to a proud and wrangling Clergy, to persecute and divide the Church with.

Of these things see my Propositions of the difference of the Magistrates and Pastors Power to Dr. Lud. Moul.

The Rex Sacrorum among the Romans, was debarred from exercising any Magistracy. Plut. Rom. Quest. 63.

Quest. 2. Of the Oath of Supremacy. See Bilson of Subject. pag. 238. 256. Princes only be Governours in things and Causes Ecclesiastical; that is, With the Sword — But if you infer, ergo, Bishops be no Governours in those things, meaning, No Dispensers, Guiders, nor Directors of those things, your conclusion is larger, &c. So pag. 256.

§. 50. Quest. 2. May our Oath of Supremacy be lawfully taken, wherein the King is pronounced Supream Governour in all Causes Ecclesiastical as well as Civil?

Anſ. There is no reason of scruple to him that understandeth, 1. That the Title [Causes Ecclesiastical] is taken from the ancient usurpation of the Pope, and his Prelates, who brought much of the Magistrates Work into their Courts, under the name of [Causes Ecclesiastical.] 2. That our Canons, and many Declarations of our Princes, have expoundeded it fully, by disclaiming all proper Pastoral Power. 3. That by [Governour] is meant only one that governeth Coercively, or by Sword: So that it is no more than to swear, That in all Causes Ecclesiastical, so far as Coercive Government is required, it belongeth not to Pope or Prelates under him; but to the King and his Officers or Courts alone: Or, That the King is chief in Governing by the Sword, in Causes Ecclesiastical as well as Civil. So that if you put [Spiritual] instead of Ecclesiastical, the word is taken materially, and not formally: Not that the King is chief in the Spiritual Government, by the Keys of Excommunication and Absolution, but that he is chief in the Coercive Government about Spiritual Matters, as before explained.

Quest. 3. §. 51. Quest. 3. Is not this to confound the Church and State, and to give the Pastors Power to the Magistrate?

Anſw. Not at all: It is but to say, that there may be need of the use both of the Word and Sword against the same persons, for the same offence; and the Magistrate only must use one, and the Pastors the other. An Heretical Preacher may be silenced by the King upon pain of Banishment, and silenced by the Church, upon pain of Excommunication. And what confusion is there in this?

Quest. 4. §. 52. Quest. 4. But hath not the King Power in Cases of Church Discipline, and Excommunication it self?

Anſw. There is a Magistrates Discipline, and a Pastoral Discipline. Discipline by the Sword, is the Magistrates work: Discipline by the Word, is the Pastors Work. And there is a Coercive Excommunication, and a Pastoral Excommunication. To command upon pain of corporal punishment, that a Heretick or Impenitent wicked Man, shall forbear the Sacred Ordinances and Priviledges, a Magistrate may do: But to command it only upon Divine and Spiritual Penalties, belongeth to the Pastors of the Church. The Magistrate hath power over their very Pastoral Work, though he have not power in it, so as to do it himself. Suppose but all the Physicians of the Nation to be of Divine Institution, with their Colledges and Hospitals, and in the Similitude you will see all the Difficulties resolved, and the next Question fully answered.

It was somewhat far that Carolus Magnus went, to be actual guide of all in his Chappel in Reading even in all their stops, as it is at large declared by Aobas Usperg. Chro. pag. 181.

§ 53. Quest. 5. Seeing the King, and the Pastors of the Church, may command and judge to several Ends in the same Cause, suppose they should differ: Which of them should the Church obey? Quest. 5.

Anſw. Distinguish here, 1. Between a right Judgment, and a wrong. 2. Between the Matter in question; which is either, 1. Proper in its primary State to the Magistrate. 2. Or proper primarily to the Pastor. 3. Or common to both (though in several sorts of Judgment.) And so I answer the question thus.

1. If it be a Matter wherein God himself hath first determined, and his Officers do but judge in subordination to his Law, and declare his Will, then we must obey him that speaketh according to the Word of God, if we can truly discern it; and not him, that we know goeth contrary to God. As if the Magistrate should forbid communion with Arrians or Hereticks, and the Pastors command us to hold communion with them as no Hereticks; Here the Magistrate is to be obeyed (because God is to be obeyed) before the Pastors, though it be in a matter of Faith and Worship. If you say, Thus you make all the People Judges. I answer you, and so you must make them such private Judges, to discern their own duty, and so must every Man; or else you must rule them as Beasts, or Mad-men, and prove, That there is no Heaven or Hell for any in the World, but Kings and Pastors; or, at least, that the people shall be saved or damned, for nothing but obeying, or not obeying their Governors: And if you could prove that, you are never the nearer reconciling the contradictory commands of those Governours.

Bishop Bilson, pag. 313. [We grant, they must rather hazard their lives, than Baptize Princes which believe not, or distribute the Lord's Misteries to them that repent not; but give wilful and open signification of impiety, &c.] Beda Hist. Eccles. lib. 2. c. 5. telleth us, That Melitus Bishop of London, (with Justus) was banished by the Heirs of King Sabereth, because he would not give them the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper, which they would needs have before they were Baptized.

2. But if the Matter be not fore-determined by God, but left to Man; then 1. If it be the Magistrates proper Work, we must obey the Magistrate only. 2. If it be about the Pastors proper Work, the Pastor is to be obeyed; though the Magistrate gainsay it, so be it he proceed according to the general Rules of his Instructions, and the Matter be of weight. As if the Magistrate and the Pastors of the Church do command different Translations or Expositions of the Bible to be used, or one forbiddeth, and another commandeth the same individual Person to be Baptized, or receive the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper, or to be esteemed a Member of the Church: If the people know not which of them judgeth right, it seemeth to me, they should first obey their Pastors, because it is only in Matters intimately pertaining to their Office. I speak only of formal Obedience, and that of the people only, for materially prudence may require us rather to do as the Magistrate commandeth (quod, non quia) to avoid a greater evil. And its always supposed, that we patiently bear the Magistrates Penalties, when we obey not his commands. 3. But in Points common to them both, the Case is more difficult. But here you must further distinguish, first, Between Points equally common, and Points unequally common; secondly, Between determinations of good, or bad, or indifferent Consequences as to the main End, and Interest of God and Souls. 1. In Points equally common to both, the Magistrate is to be obeyed against the Pastors: Because he is more properly a commanding Governour, and they are but the Guides or Governours of Voluntiers: And because, in such Cases, the Pastors themselves should obey the Magistrate; and therefore the people should first obey him. 2. Much more in Points unequally common, which the Magistrate is more concerned in, than the Pastors; the Magistrate is undoubtedly to be first obeyed. Of both, there might Instances be given about the Circumstantials or Adjuncts of God's Worship. As the Place of publick Worship, the Scituation, Form, Bells, Fonts, Pulpits, Seats, precedency in Seats, Tables, Cups, and other Utensils; Church Bounds by Parishes, Church Ornaments, Gestures, Habits, some Councils, and their Order, with other such like; in all which, cæteris paribus, for my part, I would rather obey the Laws of the King, than the Canons of the Bishops, if they should disagree. 3. But in Cases common to both, in which the Pastor's Office is more nearly and fully concerned than the Magistrates; the case is more difficult: As at what hour the Church shall assemble; what part of Scripture shall be read? what Text the Minister shall preach on? How long Prayer, or Sermon, or other Church Exercises shall be? What Prayers the Minister shall use? In what method he shall preach? And, what Doctrine he shall deliver, and the people hear? With many such like. These do most nearly belong to the Pastoral Office, to judge of, as well as to execute: But yet in some cases the Magistrate may interpose his Authority? And herein, 1. If the one Party do determine clearly to the necessary preservation of Religion, and the other to the ruine of it; the disparity of Consequents, maketh a great disparity in the Case: For here God himself hath predetermined, who commandeth that all be done to edification. As for instance, If a Christian Magistrate ordain, that no Assembly shall consist of above forty or an hundred Persons, when there are so many Preachers and places of Meeting, that it is no detriment to Mens Souls; and especially, when the danger of infection, or other evil warranteth it, then I would obey that command of the Magistrate, though the Pastors of the Church were against it, and commanded fuller Meetings. But if a Julian should command the same thing, on purpose to wear out the Christian Religion, and when it tendeth to the ruine of Mens Souls, (as when Preachers are so few, that either more must meet together, or most must be untaught, and excluded from God's Worship, here I would rather obey the Pastors that command the contrary, because they do but deliver the command of God, who determineth consequently of the necessary means, when he determineth of the end. But if the consequents of the Magistrates and the Pastors commands should be equally indifferent, and neither of them discernably good or bad, the difficulty then would be at the highest, and such as I shall not here presume to determine.

Bishop Andrews in Tort. Tort. pag. 383. Cohibeat Regem Diaconus, si cum indignus sit, idque palam constet, accedat tamen ad Sacramentum: Cohibeat & Medicus si ad noxium quid vel insalubre manum admoveat: Cohibeat & Equiso inter equitandum adigat equum per locum præruptum, vel fidelium, cui fidit periculum: Etiamne Medico? Etiamne Equisoni suo judex Rex? Sed de Majori potestate loquitur; sed ea, ad rem noxiam procul arcendam. Qua in re Charitatis semper Potestas maxima. Here you see what Church Government is, and how Kings are under it, and how not, in Bishop Andrews sense.

No doubt but the King is the Supream Governour over all the Schools, and Physicians, and Hospitals in the Land, that is, he is the Supream in the Civil Coercive Government: He is Supream Magistrate over Divines, Physicians, and School Masters; but not the Supream Divine, Physician, or School Master. When there is any Work for the Office of the Magistrate, that is, for the Sword, among any of them, it belongeth only to him, and not at all to them: But when there is any Work for the Divine, the Physician, the School Master, or if you will, for the Shoomaker, the Taylor, the Watch-maker, this belongeth not to the King to do, or give particular commands for: But yet it is all to be done under his Government; and on special Causes, he may make Laws to force them all to do their several Works aright, and to restrain them from abuses. As (to clear the case in hand) the King is informed, that Physicians take too great Fees of their Patients; that some through ignorance, and some through covetousness give ill compounded Medicines, and pernitious Drugs: No doubt but the King, by the advice of understanding Men, may forbid the use of such Drugs as are found pernitious to his Subjects, and may regulate not only the Fees, but the Compositions and Attendances of Physicians. But if he should command, that a Man in a Feaver, or Dropsie, or Consumption, shall have no Medicine, but this, or that, and so oft, and in such, or such a Dose, and with such or such a Diet; and the Physicians, whom my reason bindeth me to trust (and perhaps my own experience also) do tell me, that all these things are bad for me, and different tempers and accidents require different Remedies, and that I am like to die, or hazard my Health, if I obey not them contrary to the Kings commands: Here I should rather obey my Physicians; partly, because, else I should sin against God, who commandeth me the preservation of my Life; and partly because this matter more belongeth to the Physician, than to the Magistrate. Mr. Richard Hooker, Eccles. Polit. lib. 8. pag. 223, 224. giveth you the reason more fully.

Too many particular Laws about little matters breed contention. Alex. Severus would have distinguished all orders of Men by their Apparel. Sed hoc Ulpiano, & Paulo displicuit; dicentibus plurimum rixarum fore, si faciles essent homines ad injurias. And the Emperor yielded to them. Lamprid. in Alex. Severus. Lipsius, ubi leges multæ, ibi lites multæ & vitæ moresque pravi. Non multæ leges bonos mores faciunt, sed paucæ fideliter servatæ.

§. 54. Direct. 25. Give not the Magistrates Power to any other; whether to the People, on pretence of their Majestas Realis (as they call it) or to the Pope, or Prelates, or Pastors of the Church, upon pretence of authority from Christ, or of the distinction of Ecclesiastical Government and Civil. The Peoples pretensions to Natural Authority, or Real Majesty, or Collation of Power, I have confuted before, and more elsewhere: The Popes, Prelates, and Pastors power of the Sword in Causes Ecclesiastical, is disproved so fully by Bishop Bilson ubi supra, and many more, that it is needless to say much more of it. All Protestants, so far as I know are agreed, that no Bishop or Pastor hath any power of the Sword, that is, of Coercion, or force upon Mens Bodies, Liberties or Estates, except as Magistrates derived from their Soveraign. Their spiritual power is only upon Consenters, in the use of Gods Word upon the Conscience, either generally in Preaching, or with personal application in Discipline. No Courts or Commands can compel any to appear or submit, nor lay the mulct of a Penny upon any, but by their own consent, or the Magistrates authority. But this the Papists will few of them confess: For if once the Sword were taken from them, the World would quickly see that their Church had the Hearts of few of those multitudes, whom by Fire and Sword, they forced to seem their Members; or at least, that when the Window were opened, the light would quickly deliver poor Souls from the servitude of those Men of Darkness, For then few would fear the unrighteteous Excommunications of meer Usurpers. It is a manifold Usurpation by which their Kingdom is upheld. (For a Kingdom it is rather to be called than a Church.) 1. They usurp the Power of the Keys or Ecclesiastical Government over all the World, and make themselves Pastors of those Churches, which they have nothing to do to govern. Their Excommunications of Princes or People in other Lands or Churches that never took them for their Pastors, is an Usurpation the more odious; by how much the Power usurped is more holy, and the performance in so large a Parish, as the whole World, is naturally impossible to the Roman Usurper. 2. Under the name of Ecclesiastical Jurisdiction, they usurp the Magistrates Coercive Power in such Causes as they call Ecclesiastical. 3. Yea, and they claim an immunity to their Clergy from the Civil Government, as if they were no Subjects of the King, or the King had not power to punish his offending Subjects. 4. In ordine ad spiritualia, they claim yet more of the Magistrates power. 5. And one part of them give the Pope directly in Temporals a Power over Kings and Kingdoms. 6. Their most eminent Divines do ordinarily maintain, that the Pope may excommunicate Kings, and interdict Kingdoms, and that an excommunicated King is no King, and may be killed. It is an Article of their Religion, determined of in one of their approved General Councils, (Later. Sub. Innoc. 3. Can. 3.) That if Temporal Lords will not exterminate Hereticks from their Lands (such as the Albigenses, that denied Transubstantiation mentioned Can. 2.) the Pope may give their Dominions to others, and absolve their Vassals from their fealty: And when some of late would have so far salved their honour, as to invalidate the authority of that Council, they will not endure it, but have strenuously vindicated it, and indeed what ever it be to us, with them it is already enrolled among the Approved General Councils. Between the Erastians who would have no Government, but by Magistrates, and the Papists who give the Magistrates power to the Pope and his Prelates, the truth is in the middle, That the Pastors have a Nunciative and Directive Power from Christ, and a Discipline to exercise by the Word alone, on Voluntiers; much like the power of a Philosopher in his School, or a Physician in his Hospital, supposing them to be by Divine Right.

§. 56. Direct. 27. Think not that either the Pope, or any Power in the World, can dispence with this your Oath, or absolve you from the bond of it, or save you from the Punishment due from God, to the perjured and perfidious Of this see what I have written before against Perjury.

Dir. 28. §. 57. Direct. 28. Do nothing that tendeth to bring the sacred Bonds of Oaths, into an irreligious contempt, or to make Men take the horrid crime of Perjury to be a little Sin. Soveraigns have no sufficient security of the fidelity of their Subjects, or of their Lives, or Kingdoms: If once Oaths, and Covenants be made light of, and Men can play fast and loose with the Bonds of God, which lie upon them. He is vertually a Traytor to Princes and States, who would bring Perjury and Perfidiousness into credit, and teacheth Men to violate Oaths and Vows. For there is no keeping up Humane Societies and Governments, where there is no trust to be put in one another. And there is no trust to be put in that Man, that maketh no Conscience of an Oath or Vow.

Perjurii pœna divina exitium, humana dedecus. Cicero Agesilaus sent thanks to his Enemies for their Perjury, as making them no question of their overthrow. Plutarch. Perjuri numinis contemptores. Theodosius execrabatur cum legisset superbiam dominantium, præcipue perfidos & ingratos. Paul. Diaconus, l. 2.

§. 58. Direct. 29. Be ready to your power to defend your Governours, against all Treasons, Conspiracies, and Rebellions. For this is a great part of the duty of your Relation. The Wisdom and Goodness necessary to Government, is much personal in the Governours themselves; but the strength (without which Laws cannot be executed, nor the People preserved) is in the People, and the Princes interest in them: Therefore if you withdraw your help, in time of need, you desert and betray your Rulers, whom you should defend. If you say, it is they that are your Protectors. I answer, True; but by your selves. They protect you by Wisdom, Counsel, and Authority, and you must protect them by Obedience and Strength. Would you have them protect you rather by Mercenaries or Foreigners? If not, you must be willing to do your parts, and not think it enough in Treasons, Invasions or Rebellions, to sit still and save your selves, and let him that can lay hold on the Crown, possess it. What Prince would be the Governour of a People, that he knew would forsake him in his need?

Dir. 29. See the instance of loyalty in Malcelzer against his own Brotner Gildo (a Rebel) Paul. Dixcon. lib. 3. initio.

§ 59. Direct. 30. Murmur not at the payment of those necessary Tributes, by which the common safety must be preserved, and the due honour of your Governours kept up. Sordid Covetousness hath been the ruin of many a Commonwealth. When every one is shifting for himself, and saving his own, and murmuring at the charge by which their safety must be defended, as if Kings could fight for them, without Men and Mony: This Selfishness is the most pernicious Enemy to Government, and to the common good. Tribute and Honour must be paid to whom it doth belong. Rom. 13. 6, 7. For they are Gods Ministers, attending continually on this very thing. And none of your Goods or Cabins will be saved, if by your Covetousness the Ship should perish.

Dir. 30.

§. 60. Direct. 31. Resist not, where you cannot actually obey: And let no appearance of probable good that might come to your selves, or the Church by any unlawful means (as Treason, Sedition, or Rebellion) ever tempt you to it. For evil must not be done, that good may come by it: And all evil means, are but palliate and deceitful cures, that seem to help a little while, but will leave the malady more perilous at last, than it was before. As it is possible, that lying or perjury might be used to the seeming service of a Governour at the time, which yet would prepare for his after danger, by teaching Men perfidiousness; even so Rebellions and Treasons, may seem at present to be very conducible to the ends of a People or Party that think themselves oppress'd; but in the end, it will leave them much worse than it found them.

Dir. 31. Bilson of Subject. p. 236. [Princes have no right to call or confirm Preachers, but to receive such as be sent of God, and give them liberty for their Preaching, and security for their Persons: And if Princes refuse so to do, Gods Labourers must go forward with that which is commanded them from Heaven; not by disturbing Princes from their Thrones, nor invading their Realms, as your Holy Father doth, and defendeth he may do; but by mildly submitting themselves to the Powers on Earth, and meekly suffering for the defence of the Truth, what they shall inflict.] So he.

§. 61. Object. But if we must let Rulers destroy us at their pleasure, the Gospel will be rooted out of the Earth: When they know that we hold it unlawful to resist them, they will be emboldned to destroy us, and sport themselves in our Blood: As the Papists did by the poor Albigenses, &c.

Object.

Answ. All this did signifie something if there were no God, that can easilier restrain and destroy them at his pleasure, than they can destroy or injure you.

Answ.

But if there be a God, and all the World is in his hand, and with a word he can ſpeak them all into duſt; and if this God be engaged to protect you, and hath told you, that the very hairs of your head are numbered, and more regardeth his Honour, and Goſpel, and Church, than you do, and accounteth his Servants as the Apple of his Eye, and hath promiſed to hear them and avenge them ſpeedily, and forbid them to avenge themſelves; then it is but Atheiſtical diſtruſt of God, to ſave your ſelves by ſinful means, as if God either could not, or would not do it: Thus he that ſaveth his Life ſhall loſe it. Do you believe, that you are in the hands of Chriſt, and that Men cannot touch you but by his permiſſion; and that he will turn all your ſufferings to your exceeding benefit? And yet will you venture on Sin and Hell to ſcape ſuch ſufferings from Men? Wolves, and Bears, and Lions, that fight moſt for themſelves, are hated and deſtroyed by all; ſo that there are but few of them in the Land. But though a hundred Sheep will run before a little Dog, the Maſter of them taketh care for their preſervation. And little Children that cannot go out of the way from a Horſe or Cart, every one is afraid of hurting. If Chriſtians behaved themſelves with that eminent Love, and Lowlineſs, and Meekneſs, and Patience, and Harmleſneſs, as their Lord hath taught them and required, perhaps the very cruelty and malice of their Enemies would abate and relent; and when a mans ways pleaſe God, he would make his Enemies to be at peace with him; but if not, their fury would but haſten us to our Joy and Glory. Yet note, that I ſpeak all this only againſt Rebellion, and unlawful Arms and Acts.

Prov. 16. 7.

Dir. 32. §. 62. Direct. 32. Obey Inferior Magiſtrates according to the authority derived to them from the Supream, but never againſt the Supream, from whom it is derived. The ſame Reaſons which oblige you to obey the Perſonal Commands of the King, do bind you alſo to obey the loweſt Conſtable, or other Officer: For they are neceſſary inſtruments of the Soveraign Power, and if you obey not them, the obedience of the Soveraign ſignifieth almoſt nothing. But no Man is bound to obey them beyond the meaſure of their authority; much leſs againſt thoſe that give them their authority.

Dir. 33. Rom. 13. 1, 2, 3, 4. & 11. 36. §. 63. Direct. 33. No Humane Power is at all to be obeyed againſt God: For they have no power, but what they receive from God; and all that is from him, is for him. He giveth no power againſt himſelf; he is the firſt efficient, the chief dirigent, and ultimate final cauſe of all. It is no act of Authority, but reſiſtance of his Authority, which contradicteth his Law, and is againſt him. All Humane Laws are ſubſervient to his Laws, and not co-ordinate, much leſs Superior. Therefore they are ipſo facto null, or have no obligation, which are againſt him: Yet is not the Office it ſelf null, when it is in ſome things thus abuſed; nor the Magiſtrates Power null, as to other things. No Man muſt commit the leaſt Sin againſt God, to pleaſe the greateſt Prince on Earth, or to avoid the greateſt corporal ſuffering. Luk. 12. 4. Fear not them that can kill the body, and after that have no more that they can do; but fear him, who is able to deſtroy both body and ſoul in Hell: Yea, I ſay unto you, fear him. Acts 5. 29. Whether we ought to obey God rather than men, judge ye. Heb. 11. 27. Not fearing the wrath of the King: For he endured, as ſeeing him that is inviſible. Verſ. 35. Others were tortured not accepting deliverance, &c. Dan. 3. 18. Be it known unto thee, O King, that we will not ſerve thy Gods, nor worſhip the golden Image, &c.

Si aliquid jubeat Proconſul, aliud jubeat Imperator, quid faciat? Si aliquid dubitatur, illo contempto, illi eſſe ſerviendum? Ergo ſi aliud Imperator, aliud jubeat Deus, quid judicatur? Major poteſtas Deus: Da veniam O Imperator. Auguſt. de Verb. Domin. Matth. Serm. 6.

Object. §. 64. Object. If we are not obliged to obey, we are not obliged to ſuffer: For the Law obligeth primarily to obedience, and only ſecondarily ad pœnam, for want of obedience. Therefore where there is no primary obligation to obedience, there is no ſecondary obligation to puniſhment.

Anſw. The word [obligation] being Metaphorical, muſt in controverſie be explained by its proper terms: The Law doth firſt conſtituere debitum obedientiæ, & propter inobedientiam debitum pœnæ. Here then you muſt diſtinguiſh, 1. Between Obligation in foro conſcientiæ, and in foro humano. 2. Between an obligation ad pœnam by that Law of Man, and an obligation ad patiendum by another Divine Law. And ſo the anſwer is this: Firſt, If the Higher Powers, e.g. forbid the Apoſtles to preach upon pain of death or ſcourging, the dueneſs both of the obedience and the penalty, is really null, in point of Conſcience; however in foro humano they are both due; that is, ſo falſly reputed in that Court: Therefore the Apoſtles are bound to preach notwithſtanding the Prohibition, and ſo far as God alloweth they may reſiſt the penalty, that is, by flying: For properly there is neither debitum obedientiæ nec pœnæ. Secondly, But then God himſelf obligeth them not to reſiſt the higher powers, Rom. 13. 1, 2, 3. And in their patience to poſſeſs their Souls. So that from this command of God, there is a true obligation ad patiendum, to patient ſuffeering and non-reſiſtance, though from the Law of Man againſt their Preaching, there was no true obligation aut ad obedientiam, aut ad pœnam. This is the true reſolution of this Sophiſm. Anſw.

Dir. 34. §. 65. Direct. 34. It is one of the moſt needful duties to Governors; for thoſe that have a call and opportunity (as their Paſtors) to tell them wiſely and ſubmiſſively of thoſe ſins which are the greateſt Enemies to their Souls; and not the ſmalleſt Enemies to their Government, and the Publick Peace. All Chriſtians will confeſs, that ſin is the only forfeiture of Gods Protection, and the cauſe of his diſpleaſure, and conſequently the only danger to the Soul, and the greateſt Enemy to the Land. And that the ſins of Rulers, whether Perſonal, or in their Government, have a far more dangerous influeuce upon the publick State, than the ſins of other Men. Yea, the very ſins which upon true repentance may be pardoned as to the everlaſting Puniſhment, may yet be unpardoned as to the publick ruin of a State: As the ſad inſtance of Manaſſeh ſheweth, 2 King. 23. 26. Notwithſtanding the Lord turned not from the fierceneſs of his great wrath, wherewith his anger was kindled againſt Judah, becauſe of all the provocations that Manaſſeh had provoked him withal. 2 King. 24. 3, 4. Surely at the commandment of the Lord came this upon Judah, to remove them out of his ſight for the ſins of Manaſſeh according to all that he did; and alſo for the innocent blood that he ſhed (for he filled Jeruſalem with innocent blood) which the Lord would not pardon. And yet this was after Joſiah had reformed: So Solomons ſin did cauſe the renting of the Ten Tribes from his Sons Kingdom: Yea, the bearing with the High Places, was a provoking ſin in Kings, that otherwiſe were upright. Therefore ſin being the fire in the Thatch, the quenching of it muſt needs be an act of duty and fidelity to Governours: And thoſe that tempt them to it, or ſooth and flatter them in it, are the greateſt Enemies they have. But yet it is not every Man that muſt reprove a Governour; but thoſe that have a Call and Opportunity; nor muſt it be done by them imperiouſly, or reproachfully, or publickly to their diſhonour, but privately, humbly, and with love, honour, reverence, and ſubmiſſiveneſs.

Vetus eſt verumque dictum, Miſer eſt Imperator cui vera reticentur. Grotius de Imp. p. 245. Principi conſule non dulciora, ſed optima. Is one of Solons Sentences in Laert. de Solon. therefore it is a horrid villany of the Jeſuites, which is expreſſed in Secret. Inſtruct. in Arcanis Jeſuit. p. 5, 6, 7, 8, 11. To indulge great Men and Princes in thoſe opinions and ſins which pleaſe them, and to be on that ſide that their Liberty requireth, to keep their favor to the Society. So Maffæius, l. 3. c. 11. *in vita ipſius Loyolæ. §. 66.

Object. §. 66. Object. But great Men have great Spirits, and are impatient of Reproof, and I am not bound to that which will do no good, but ruine me.

Answ. Answ. 1. It is an abuse of your Superiours, to censure them to be so proud and bruitish, as not to consider that they are the Subjects of God, and have Souls to save or lose, as well as others: Will you judge so hardly of them before trial, as if they were far worse and foolisher than the poor, and take this abuse of them to be an excuse for your other sin? No doubt there are good Rulers in the World, that will say to Christ's Ministers, as the Prince Elector Palatine did to Pitiscus, charging him to tell him plainly of his faults, when he chose him to be the Pastor Aulicus.

Melch. Adam. in vit. Barth. Pitisci.

2. How know you before hand what success your words will have? Hath the Word of God well managed no Power? Yea, to make even bad Men good? Can you love your Rulers, and yet give up their Souls in despair, and all for fear of suffering by them?

3. What if you do suffer in the doing of your duty? Have you not learned to serve God upon such terms as those? Or do you think it will prove it to be no duty, because it will bring suffering on you? These Reasons savor not of Faith.

Dir. 35. §. 67. Direct. 35. Think not that it is unlawful to obey in every thing which is unlawfully commanded. It may in many Cases be the Subjects duty, to obey the Magistrate who sinfully commandeth him. For all the Magistrates sins in commanding, do not enter into the matter or substance of the thing commanded: If a Prince command me to do the greatest duty, in an ill design, to some selfish end, it is his sin so to command; but yet that command must be obeyed (to better ends.) Nay, the matter of the command may be sinful in the Commander, and not in the obeyer. If I be commanded without any just reason to hunt a Feather, it is his sin that causlesly commandeth me so to lose my time; and yet it may be my sin to disobey it, while the thing is lawful: Else Servants and Children must prove all to be needful, as well as lawful, which is commanded them before they must obey. Or the command may at the same time be evil by accident, and the obedience good by accident, and per se. Very good accidents, consequence, or effects, may belong to our obedience, when the accidents of the command it self are evil. I could give you abundance of instances of these things.

Dir. 36. §. 68. Direct. 36. Yet is not all to be obeyed that is evil but by accident, nor all to be disobeyed that is so: But the accidents must be compared; and if the obedience, will do more good than harm, we must obey; if it will evidently do more harm than good, we must not do it. Most of the sins in the World, are evil by accident only, and not in the simple act denuded of its accidents, circumstances, or consequents. You may not sell poyson to him that you know would poyson himself with it, though to sell poyson of it self be lawful. Though it be lawfully simply to lend a Sword, yet not to a Traytor that you know would kill the King with it, no nor to one that would kill his Father, his Neighbour or himself. A command would not excuse such an act from sin. He was slain by David, that killed Saul at his own command, and if he had but lent him his Sword to do it, it had been his sin. Yet some evil accidents may be weighed down by greater evils, which would evidently follow upon the not doing of the thing commanded.

It was one of the Roman Laws of the Twelve Tables, Justa imperia juntos, iisque cives modeste ac sine recusatione parento.

Dir. 37. §. 69. Direct. 37. In the question, whether Humane Laws bind Conscience, the doubt is not of that nature, as to have necessary influence upon your practice. For all agree, that they bind the subject to obedience, and that God's Law bindeth us to obey them. And if God's Law bind us to obey Man's Law, and so to disobey them, be materially a sin against God's Law; this is as much as is needful to resolve you in respect of practice: No doubt, Man's Law hath no primitive obliging power at all, but a Derivative from God, and under him; and what is it to bind the Conscience (an improper Speech) but to bind the person to judge it his duty (conscire) and so to do it. And no doubt, but he is bound to judge it his duty, that that is, immediately by Human Law, and remotely by Divine Law, and so the contrary to be a sin proximately against Man, and ultimately against God. This is plain, and the rest is but logomachy.

Dir. 38. §. 70. Direct. 38. The question is much harder, whether the violation of every Human Penal Law be a sin against God, though a Man submit to the penalty? (And the desert of every sin is death.) Master Richard Hookers last Book unhappily ended, before he gave us the full reason of his judgment in this case, these being the last words. [Howbeit, too rigorous it were, that the breach of every Human Law, should be a deadly sin: A mean there is between those extremities, if so be we can find it out——] Aniesius hath diligently discust it, and many others. The reason for the Affirmative is, because God bindeth us to obey all the lawful Commands of our Governors: And suffering the penalty, is not obeying; the penalty being not the primary intention of the Law-giver, but the duty; and the penalty only to inforce the duty: And though the suffering of it satisfie Man, it satisfieth not God, whose Law we break by disobeying. Those that are for the Negative, say, That God binding us but to obey the Magistrate, and his Law binding but aut ad obedientiam, aut ad pœnam, I fulfil his Will, if I either do or suffer: If I obey not, I please him by satisfying for my disobedience. And it is none of his Will, that my chusing the penalty, should be my sin or damnation. To this it is replied, That the Law bindeth ad pœnam, but on supposition of disobedience; and that disobedience is forbidden of God: And the penalty satisfieth not God, though it satisfie Man. The other rejoyn, That it satisfieth God, in that it satisfieth Man; because God's Law is but to give force to Mans, according to the nature of it. If this hold, then no disobedience at all is a sin in him that suffereth the penalty. In so hard a case, because more distinction is necessary to the Explication, than most Readers are, willing to be troubled with, I shall now give you but this brief decision. There are some Penalties which fulfil the Magistrates own will as much as obedience, which indeed have more of the nature of a Commutation, than of Penalty: (As he that watcheth not or mendeth not the High-ways, shall pay so much to hire another to do it. He that shooteth not so oft in a year, shall pay so much: He that eateth flesh in Lent, shall pay so much to the poor: He that repaireth not his Hedges shall pay so much:) And so in most Amercements, and divers Penal Laws; in which, we have reason to judge, That the Penalty satisfieth the Law-giver fully, and that he leaveth it to our choice. In these Cases I think we need not afflict our selves with the Conscience or fear of sinning against God. But there are other Penal Laws, in which the Penalty is not desired for it self, and is supposed to be but an imperfect satisfaction to the Law-givers will, and that he doth not freely leave us to our choice, but had rather we obeyed than suffered; only he imposeth no greater a Penalty, either because there is no greater in his power, or some inconvenience prohibiteth: In this case, I should fear my disobedience were a sin, though I suffered the Penalty. (Still supposing it an act, that he had Power to command me.)

Eccl. Polit. l. 8. p. 224.

On second thoughts this case is fullier opened afterward.

Dir. 39. §. 71. Direct. 39. Take heed of the pernicious design of those Atheistical Politicians, that would make the World believe, that all that is excellent among Men, is at enmity with Monarchy, yea and Government it self: And take heed on the other side, that the most excellent things be not turned against it by abuse.

Here, I have two dangers to advertise you to beware: The first is of some Machiavellian pernicious principles; and the second of some erroneous unchristian practices.

§. 72. I. For

§. 72. I. For the firſt, there are two ſorts of Atheiſtical Politicians guilty of them. The firſt ſort are ſome Atheiſtical Flatterers, that to ingage Monarchs againſt all that is good, would make them believe, that all that is good is againſt them and their intereſt. By which means, while their deſign is to ſteal the help of Princes, to caſt out all that is good from the World, they are moſt pernicious undermeners of Monarchy it ſelf. For what readier way to ſet all the World againſt it, than to make them believe that it ſtandeth at enmity to all that is good. Theſe ſecret Enemies would ſet up a Leviathan to be the Butt of common Enmity and Oppoſition.

The other ſort are the profeſſed Enemies of Monarchy, who in their zeal for popular Government, do bring in all that is excellent, as if it were, adverſe to Monarchy. 1. They would (both) ſet it at enmity with Politicians. 2. With Lawyers. 3. With Hiſtory. 4. With Learning. 5. With Divines. 6. With all Chriſtian Religion. 7. And with Humanity it ſelf.

Obj. 1. §. 73. Object. 1. The Painters of the Leviathan ſcorn all Politicks, as ignorant of the Power of Monarchs, except the Atheiſtical Inventions of their own brains. And the Adverſaries of Monarchy ſay, The reading of Politicks will ſatisfie Men againſt Monarchy: For in them you ordinary find that the Majeſtas Realis is in the people, and the Majeſtas Perſonalis in the Prince; that the Prince receiveth all his power from the people, to whom it is firſt given, and to whom it may be forfeited and eſcheat: With much more of the like, as is to be ſeen in Politicians of all Religions.

Anſw. Anſw. 1. It is not all Politicks that go upon thoſe Principles: And one miſtake in Writers is no diſgrace to the true Doctrine of Politicks, which may be vindicated from ſuch miſtakes. 2. As almoſt all Authors of Politicks take Monarchy for a lawful ſpecies of Government, ſo moſt, or very many (eſpecially of the Moderns) do take it to be the moſt excellent ſort of unmixt Government. Therefore they are no Enemies to it.

Object. 2. §. 74. Object. 2. For Lawyers they ſay, That Civilians ſet up reaſon ſo high, that they dangerouſly meaſure the Power of Monarchs by it: In ſo much, that the moſt famous pair of zealous and learned Defenders of Monarchy, Barclay and Grotius, do aſſign many Caſes, in which, it is lawful to reſiſt Princes by Arms, and more than ſo. 2. And the Common Lawyer, they ſay, are all for the Law, and ready to ſay as Hooker, [Lex facit Regem;] And what power the King hath, he hath it by Law. The bounds are known, Pag. 218. He is Singulis major, & Univerſis minor, &c.

Leg. quæ de Grotio poſt p. 731.

Anſw. Anſw. 1. Sure the Roman Civil Laws were not againſt Monarchy, when Monarchs made ſo many of them. And what power Reaſon truly hath, it hath from God, whom none can over-top; and that which Reaſon is abuſed unjuſtly to defend, may be well contradicted by Reaſon indeed. 2. And what power the Laws of the Land have, they have by the King's Conſent and Act: And it is ſtrange impudency to pretend, that his own Laws are againſt him. If any miſ-interpret them, he may be confuted.

Obj. 3. §. 75. Object. 3. For Hiſtorians, ſay they, be but well verſt in Ancient Hiſtory, Greek, and Roman, and you ſhall find them ſpeak ſo ill of Monarchy, and ſo much for Popularity, and Liberty, and magnifying ſo much the Defenders of the Peoples Liberty againſt Monarchs, that it will ſecretly ſteal the diſlike of Monarchy, and the love of popular Liberty into your minds.

Anſ. It muſt be conſidered in what times and places the ancient Greek and Roman Hiſtorians did live. They that lived where popular Government was in force and credit, wrote according to the time and Government which they lived under, yet do they extol the Virtues and heroick Acts of Monarchs, and often ſpeak of the vulgar giddineſs and unconſtancy. And for my part, I think he that readeth in them thoſe popular tumults, irrationalities, furies, unconſtancies, cruelties, which even in Rome and Athens they committed, and all Hiſtorians Record; will rather find his heart much alienated from ſuch Democratical confuſions. And the Hiſtorians of other times and places do write as much for Monarchy, as they did for Democracy.

So Hollingſhead maketh Parliaments ſo mighty, as to take down the greateſt Kings, &c. As Aug. Traj. Antonines, &c. It is confeſſed that moſt Hiſtorians write much for Liberty againſt Tyranny. But the Heathens do it much more than the Chriſtians.

§. 76. Object. 4. Some of them revile at Ariſtotle and all Univerſities, and ſay, That while multitudes muſt be taſters and pretenders to the Learning which they never thorowly can attain, they read many dangerous Books, and receive falſe notions; and theſe half-witted Men, are the diſturber of all Societies. Do you not ſee, ſay they, that the two ſtrongeſt Kingdoms in the World, are kept up by keeping the Subjects ignorant. The Greek and Latin Empires were ruined by the contention of Men that did pretend to Learning. The Turk keepeth all in quiet by ſuppreſſing it: And the Pope confineth it almoſt all to his Inſtruments in Government, and keepeth the common People in ignorance; which keepeth them from matter of quarrel and diſobedience.

Obj. 4. Langius ſaith, that in his own hearing Jodocus Præſes Senat. Mechlin. Magna contentione tuebatur, nequicquam ſciret in bonis literis, & addebat, vix eſſe tres in orbe qui leges Cæſareas intelligerent. Minem poſſe vel unus legis intelligentiam conſequi, Anſw. I hope you will not ſay, that Rome or Athens of old did take this courſe. And we will not deny, but Men of knowledge are more ſubject to debates and queſtionings and quarrels, about right and wrong, than Men of utter ignorance are. Beaſts fall not out about Crowns or Kingdoms, as Men do. Dogs and Swine will not ſcramble for Gold, as Men will do, if you caſt it among them: And it is eaſier to keep Swine or Sheep quiet, than Men; and yet it is not better to be Swine or Sheep, than Men; nor to be Governours of Beaſts, than Men. Dead Men are quieter than the living, and blind Men will ſubmit to be led more eaſily than thoſe that ſee; and yet it is not better to be a King of Bruits, or blind Men, or dead Men, than of the living that have their ſight. A King of Men that have many diſagreements, is better than a King of Beaſts that all agree. And yet true knowledge tendeth to concord, and to the ſureſt and conſtanteſt obedience.

Anſw.

Object. 5. §. 77. Object. 5. But their chief calumniations are againſt Divines. They ſay that Divines make a trade of Religion, and under pretence of Divine Laws, and Conſcience, and Eccleſiaſtical Diſcipline, they ſubjugate both Prince and People to their will, and ſet up Courts which they call Eccleſiaſtical, and keep the People in dependance on their dictates, and teach them to diſobey upon pretence, that God is againſt the Matter of their Obedience, and alſo by contending for their opinions, or for ſuperiority and domination over one another, they fill Kingdoms with quarrels, and break them into Sects and Factions, and are the chief diſturbers of the Publick Peace.

Tort. Tort. p. 384.

Anſw. We cannot deny, but that carnal, ignorant, worldly, proud, unholy Paſtors, have been and are the great calamity of the Churches: But that is no more diſgrace to their Office, or to Divinity, than it is to Philoſophy or Reaſon, that Philoſophers have been ignorant, erroneous, divided, and contentious; nor then it is to Government, that Kings and other Rulers, have been imperfect, bad, contentious, and filled the World with Wars and Bloodſhed. Nay, I rather think that it is a proof of the excellency of Divinity: As the reaſon of the aforeſaid imperfections and faultineſs of Philoſophers and Rulers, is becauſe that Philoſophy and Government are things ſo excellent, that the corrupt imperfect nature of Man, will not reach ſo high, as to qualifie any Man to manage them, otherwiſe than with great defectiveneſs; ſo alſo Divinity, and the Paſtoral Office, are are things so excellent and sublime, that the nature of lapsed Man will not reach to a capacity of being perfect in them. So that the faultiness of the nature of Man, compared with the excellency of things to be known and practised by Divines, is the cause of all these faults which they complain of; and Natures vitiosity, if any thing, must be blamed. Certainly, the Pastoral Office hath Men as free from ignorance, worldliness, pride, and unquietness, as any Calling in the World. To charge the faults of Nature upon that Profession, which only discovereth, but never caused them, yea, which would heal them, if they are to be healed on Earth, judge whether this dealing be not foolish and injurious, and what will be the consequents if such unreasonable Persons may be heard. And therefore, though Leviathan and his Spawn, among all that is good, bring down Divines, and the Zealots for Democracy have gloried of their new Forms of Commonwealths, as inconsistent with a Clergy, their glory is their shame to all but Infidels. Let them help us to take down and cure the ignorance, pride, carnality, worldliness, and contentiousness of the Clergy, and we will be thankful to them: but to quarrel with the best of Men for the common pravity of Nature, and to reproach the most excellent Science and Function, because depraved Nature cannot attain or manage them in perfection, this is but to play the professed Enemies of Mankind.

Object.6. § 78. Object. 6. These Atheists or Infidels also do spit their venome against Christianity and Godliness it self, and would make Princes believe, that the principles of it are contrary to their interest, and to Government and Peace: And they fetch their cavils, 1. From the Scriptures contemptuous expressions of worldly wealth and greatness. 2. From its prohibition of revenge and maintaining our own right. 3. From the setting it above all Humane Laws, and by its authority and obscurity, filling the minds of Men with scrupulosity. 4. From the divisions which Religion occasioneth in the World: And 5. From the testimonies of the several Sects against each other. I shall answer them particularly, though but briefly.

Object.1. Just such occasions as Papists bring against the Reformers, did the Heathens bring against the Christians as you may see in Ennapius in Ædesio. At egregii illi viri & bellicosi confusis perturbatisque rebus omnibus debellasse Deos incruentis quidem, sed ab avaritiæ crimine non puris manibus gloriabantur, sacrilegium & impietatis crimen laudi sibi assumentes. Iidem postea in Sacra loca invexerunt Monachos, sic dictos homines quidem specie, sed vitam turpem porcorum more exigentes, qui in popatulo infinita & infanda scelera committebant, quibus tamen pictatis pars videbatur, sacri loci reverentiam proculcari. O partiality!

§ 79. Object. 1. Say the Infidel Politicians, How can Subjects have honourable thoughts of their Superiours, when they believe that to be the Word of God, which speaketh so contemptuously of them? As Luk. 6. 24. Wo to you that are rich; for ye have received your consolation. Jam. 5. 1, 2, 3. Go to now ye rich men, weep and howl for your miseries that shall come upon you. Vers. 5, 6. Ye have lived in pleasure on Earth, and been wanton—— Ye have condemned and killed the just——Luk. 12. 21. & 16. The Parable of the rich man and Lazarus, is spoken to make Men think of the rich as miserable damned Creatures. Ezek. 21. 25. Thou prophane wicked Prince of Israel. Prov. 25. 5. Take away the wicked from before the King—— Prov. 29. 12. If a Ruler hearken to lies, all his servants are wicked; the contempt of greatness is made a part of the Christian Religion.

Answ. Aasw. 1. As if there were no difference between the contempt of riches and worldly prosperity, and the contempt of Government? He is blind that cannot see that riches and authority are not the same: Yea, that the over-valuing of riches is the cause of seditions, and the disturbance of Governments, when the contempt of them removeth the chief impediments of obedience and peace. 2. And may not Governours be sufficiently honoured, unless they be exempted from the Government of God? And unless their sin must go for virtue? And unless their duty, and their account, and the danger of their Souls be treacherously concealed from them? God will not flatter dust and ashes; great and small are alike to him. He is no respecter of Persons: When you can save the greatest from death and judgment, then they may be excepted from all those duties which are needful to their preparation. 3. And is it not strange, that God should teach Men to contemn the power which he himself ordaineth? And which is his own? Hath he set Officers over us, for the work of Government, and doth he teach us to despise them? There is no shew of any such thing in Scripture; there are no principles in the World, that highlier advance and honour Magistracy, than the Christian Principles, unless you will make Gods of them, as the Roman Senate did of the Antonines, and other Emperors.

§ 80. Object. 2. How can there be any Government, when Men must believe that they must not resist evil, but give place to wrath, and turn the other cheek to him that smiteth them, and give their Coat to him that taketh away their Cloak, and lend, asking for nothing again! Is not this to let Thieves and violent rapacious Men rule all, and have their will, and go unpunished? What use is there then for Courts or Judges? And when Christ commandeth his Disciples, that though the Kings of the Nations rule over them, and exercise authority, and are called Benefactors, yet with them it shall not be so. Object.2. Rom. 12. 17, 19, 20. Luk. 6. 28, 29, 30. Matth. 5. 39, 40, 41. Luk. 20. 25, 26.

Answ. These were the old cavils of Celsus, Porphyry, and Julian; but very impudent. As though Love and Patience were against Peace and Government. Christ commandeth nothing in all these words, but that we love our Neighbour as our selves, and love his Soul above our wealth, and that we do as we would be done by, and use not private revenge, and take not up the Magistrates work: And is this doctrine against Government? It is not Magistrates, but Ministers, and private Christians, whom he commandeth not to resist evil, and not to exercise Lordship, as the Civil Rulers do: When it will do more hurt to the Soul of another, than the benefit amounteth, we must not seek our own right by Law, nor must private Men revenge themselves. All Law suits and contentions and hurting of others, which are inconsistent with loving them as our selves, are forbidden in the Gospel. And when was Government ever disturbed by such principles and practices as these? Nay, when was it disturbed but for want of these? When was there any Sedition, Rebellion, or unlawful Wars, but through self love of earthly things, and want of love to one another? How easily might Princes rule Men, that are thus ruled by Love and Patience? Answ.

§ 81. Object. 3. Christianity teacheth Men to obey the Scriptures before their Governours, and to obey no Law that is contrary to the Bible: And when the Bible is so large and hath so many passages hard to be understood, and easily perverted, some of these will be always interpreted against the Laws of Men: And then they are taught to fear no Man against God, and to endure any pains or death, and to be unmoved by all the penalties which should enforce obedience; and to rejoice in this, as a blessed Martyrdom, to the face of Kings; and those that punish them, are reproached as Persecutors, and threatned with damnation, and made the vilest Men on Earth, and represented odious to all. Object.3. Le Blank in his Travels, pag. 88. saith of some Heathen Kings, They are all jealous of our Religion, holding, that the Christians adore one God, great above the rest, but will not suffer any others, and that he sets a greater esteem and value upon innocent poor and simple People, than upon Rich, Kings and Princes, and that Princes had need to preserve themselves the affections and esteem of their Subjects, to reign with greater ease.

Answ. The sum of all this Objection is, That there is a God. For if that be not denied, no Man can deny that he is the Universal Governour of the World; and that he hath his proper Laws and Judgment, and Rewards and Punishment, or that Magistrates are his Ministers, and have no power but from him; and not in respect that all things be subject to their wills, which were plain Tyranny, not Christian authority: But that all Persons within their Realms are bound to obey their Laws, or abide their Pains. So Answ. So Bishop Bilson of Subject. p. 243. Princes be Supream; consequently, that the commands, and threats, and promises of God, are a thousand fold more to be regarded, than those of Men! He is a Beast and not a Man that feareth not God more than Man, and that feareth not Hell more than bodily Sufferings: And for the Scriptures, 1. Are they any harder to be understood than the Law of nature it self? Surely, the Characters of the Will of God in natura rerum, are much more obscure than in the Scriptures. Hath God sent so great a Messenger from Heaven, to open to Mankind the Mysteries of his Kingdom, and tell them what is in the other World, and bring Life and Immortality to Light, and yet shall his Revelation be accused as more obscure than nature it self is? If an Angel had been sent from Heaven to any of these Infidels by name, to tell them but the same that Scripture telleth us, sure they would not have reproached his message, with such Accusations. 2. And are not the Laws of the Land about smaller matters, more voluminous and difficult? And shall that be made a reproach to Government? And for mis-interpretation it is the fault of Humane Nature, that is ignorant and rash, and not of the Scriptures. Will you tell God, that you will not obey him, unless he will make his Laws so, as no Man can misinterpret them? When or where, were there ever such Laws? God will be God, and Judge of the World, whether you will or not: And he will not be an underling to men, nor set their Laws above his own, to avoid your Accusations. If there be another Life of joy or misery, it is necessary that there be Laws according to which those rewards and punishments are to be adjudged. And if Rulers oppose these who are appointed to promote obedience to them, they must do it at their perils: For God will render to all according to their Works.

Obj. 4. The differences are oft among the Lawyers which set the Commonwealth on fire, and then they are charged on Divines, e.g. Grotius de Imper. pag. 55. Si arma in eos reges sumpta sunt in quos totum populi jus translatum erat, ac qui proinde non precario sed proprio jure imperabant laudari salva pietate non possunt, quemcunque tandem prætextum aut eventum habuerint. Sin alicubi Reges tales fuere qui pactis, sive positivis legibus, & Senatus alicujus aut Ordinum decretis astringerentur, in eos ut summum Imperium non obtinent, arma ex optimatum tanquam superiorum sententia, sumi, justis de causis potuerint. Multi enim Reges, etiam qui sanguinis jure succedunt, Reges sunt nomine magis quam Imperio —— Sed fallit imperitos quod illam quotidianam & maxime in oculos incurrentem rerum Administrationem, quæ sæpe in optimatum statu penes unum est, ab interiore Reipublicæ constitutione non satis discernunt. Quod de Regibus dixi, idem multo magis de iis acceptum velo, qui & re nomine non Reges sed Principes fuere, h. e. non summi; sed Primi, p. 54.

§. 82. Object. 4. Doth not experience tell the World, that Christianity every where causeth divisions? And sets the World together by the ears? What a multitude of Sects are there among us at this day? And every one thinketh that his Salvation lieth upon his Opinion? And how can Princes govern Men of so contrary minds, when the pleasing of one party is the losing of the rest? We have long seen that Church Divisions shake the safety of the State. If it were not that few that are called Christians are such indeed, and serious in the Religion which themselves profess, there were no quietness to be expected: For those that are most serious, are so full of scruples, and have Consciences still objecting something or other against their obedience, and are so obstinate in their way, as thinking it is for their Salvation, that all Ages and Nations have been fain to govern them by force as Beasts, which they have called Persecution.

Answ. 1. There is no Doctrine in the World so much for Love and Peace and Concord as the Doctrine of Christ is. What doth it so much urge and frequently inculcate? What doth it contain but Love and Peace from end to end? Love is the sum and end of the Gospel, and the fulfilling of the Law. To love God above all, and our neighbours as our selves, and to do as we would be done by, is the Epitome of the Doctrine of Christ and his Apostles. 2. And therefore Christianity is only the occasion and not the cause of the divisions of the earth. It is mens blindness and passions and carnal interests rebelling against the Laws of God, which is the make-bate of the World, and filleth it with strife. The wisdom from above is first pure, then peaceable, gentle, easie to be intreated, full of mercy and good Fruits: It blesseth the peace-makers and the meek: But it is the rebellious wisdom from beneath, that is earthly, sensual and devilliſh, which causeth envy and strife, and thereby confusion and every evil work. Jam. 3. 15, 16, 17. Matth. 5. 6, 7, 8. So that the true genuine Christian is the best subject and peaceablest Man on earth: But seriousness is not enough to make a Christian; A Man may be passionately serious in an errour; Understanding must lead and seriousness follow. To be zealous in errour is not to be zealous in Christianity; For the errour is contrary to Christian verity. 3. As I said before, it is a testimony of the excellency of Religion that it thus occasioneth contention. Dogs and Swine do not contend for Crowns and Kingdoms; nor for sumptuous houses or apparel; nor do Infants trouble the World or themselves with Metaphysical or Logical or Mathematical disputes; Ideots do not molest the World with Controversies, nor fall thereby into Sects and Parties. Nor yet do wise and learned persons contend about chaff or dust or trifles. But as excellent things are matters of search, so are they matter of controversie, to the most excellent wits. The hypocritical Christians that you speak of, who make God and their Salvation give place to the unjust commands of Men, are indeed no Christians; as not taking Christ for their Soveraign Lord; And it is not in any true honour of Magistracy, that they are so ductile, and will do any thing, but it is for themselves, and their carnal interest; and when that interest requireth it, they will betray their Governours, as Infidels will do. If you can reduce all the World to be Infants or Ideots or Brutes, yea or Infidels, they will then trouble the State with no contentions for Religion or matters of Salvation. But if the Governed must be bruitified, what will the Governours be? 4. All true Christians are agreed in the substance of their Religion; There is no division among them about the necessary points of Faith or Duty. Their agreement is far greater than their disagreement; which is but about some smaller matters, where differences are tolerable; Therefore they may all be governed without any such violence as you mention; If the common Articles of Faith, and Precepts of Christian Duty be maintained, then that is upheld which all agree in; and Rulers will not find it needful to oppress every party or opinion, save one, among them that hold the common truths: Wise and sober Christians lay not Mens Salvation upon every such controversie; nor do they hold or manage them unpeaceably to the wrong of Church or State, nor with the violation of Charity, Peace or Justice. 5. Is there any of the Sciences which afford not matter of Controversie? If the Laws of the Land did yield no matter of Controversie, Lawyers and Judges would have less of that Work than now they have. And was there not greater diversity of Opinions and Worship among the Heathens than ever was among Christians. What a multitude of Sects of Philosophers and Religions had they? And what a multitude of God's had they to worship? And the number of them still increased as oft as the Senate pleased to make a God of the better sort of their Emperours when they were dead. Indeed one Emperour (of the Religion of some of these Objectors) Heliogabalus, bestir'd himself with all his Power to have reduced all Religion to Unity, that is, he would have all the Worship brought to his God to whom he had been Priest: Saith Lampridius in his life, Dicebat Judæorum & Samaritanorum religiones & Christianum devotionem, illuc transferendam, &c. And therefore he robbed and maimed and destroyed the other Gods, id agens ne quis Romæ Deus nisi Heliogabalus coleretur. But as the effect of his monstrous, abominable filthiness of life was to be thrust into a privy, killed and drag'd drag'd about the Streets and drowned in Tybur; ſo the effect of his deſired Unity, was to bring that one God or Temple into contempt, whereto he would confine all Worſhip. The differences among Chriſtians are nothing in compariſon of the differences among Heathens. The truth is, Religion is ſuch an illuſtrious noble thing, that diſſentions about it, like ſpots in the Moon, are much more noted by the World, than about any lower common matters. Men may raiſe Controverſies in Philoſophy, Phyſick, Aſtronomy, Chronology, and yet it maketh no ſuch noiſe nor cauſeth much offence or hatred in the World: But the Devil and corrupted nature have ſuch an enmity againſt Religion, that they are glad to pick any quarrel againſt it, and blame it for the imperfections of all that learn it and ſhould practice it: As if Grammar ſhould be accuſed for every errour or fault that the Boys are guilty of in learning it: Or the Law were to be accuſed for all the differences of Lawyers or contentions of the People: or Phyſick were to be accuſed for all the differences or errours of Phyſicians, or meat and drink were culpable becauſe of Mens Exceſſes and Diſeaſes: There is no Doctrine nor Practice in the World, by which true Unity and Concord can be maintained, but by ſeriouſneſs in the true Religion. And when all contention cometh for want of Religion, it's impudence to blame Religion for it, which is the only Cure. If Rulers will protect all that agree in that which is juſtly to be called the Chriſtian Religion, both for Doctrine and Practice, and about their ſmall and tolerable differences, will uſe no other violence, but only to compel them to live in peace, and to ſuppreſs the ſeditious, and thoſe that abuſe and injure Government or one another; they will find that Chriſtianity tendeth not to Diviſions, nor to the hindrance or diſturbance of Government or Peace. It is Paſſion and Pride and Selfiſhneſs that doth this, and not Religion: Therefore let theſe and not Religion be reſtrained. But if they will reſolve to ſuffer none to live in peace, but thoſe that in every punctilio are all of one opinion, they muſt have but one Subject that is ſincere in his Religion (for no two will be in every thing of the ſame apprehenſion, no more than of the ſame complexion) and all the reſt muſt be worldly Hypocrites, that while they are heartily true to no Religion, will profeſs themſelves of any Religion which will ſerve their preſent turns: And theſe nominal Chriſtians will be ready to betray their Rulers, or do any miſchief which their carnal intereſt requireth.

Eunapius ſaith of his Maſter Chryſanthius, that when Julian had made him, Primarium Pontificem totius illius ditionis, in munere tamen ſuo non moroſe ac ſuperbe ſe geſſit; junioribus urgendo haud gravis (ſicut pleriq; omnes in unum conſentientes, callide ferventerque faciundum cenſebant:) neq; Chriſtianis moleſtus admonum quippe tanta erat morum in eo lenitas atque ſimplicitas, ut per Lydiam propemodum ignorata fuerit ſacrorum in priſtinum reſtitutio. Eo factum eſt, ut cum priora aliter cecidiſſent, nihil innovatum neque mutatio inſignis accepta videretur, ſed præter expectationem cuncta placide ſapirentur, Moderation in a Heathen was his benefit.

Obj. 5. Veſtra doctrina eſt, niſi principes vobis ex animo ſit, quantumvis legitimus hæres ſit, Regno excludi, alium eligi poſſe. Poſſe dixi? immo oportere. Hæc Clementina veſtra fuit: B. Andrews of the Papiſts, Tort. Tort. p. 327.

§. 83. Object. 5. What witneſs need we more than their own Accuſations of one another. For the Papiſts, How many Volumes have the Proteſtants written againſt them as Enemies to all Civil Government? alledging even the Decrees of their General Councils, as Later. ſub Innoc. 3. Can. 3. And for the Proteſtants, they are as deeply charged by the Papiſts, as you may ſee in the Image of both Churches, and Philanax Anglicus and abundance more: For Calvin and the Presbyterians and Puritans, let the Prelates tell you how peaceable they are: And the Papiſts and Puritans ſay, that the Prelatiſts are of the ſame mind, and only for their own ends, pretend to greater Loyalty than others: There are no two among them more famous for defending Government, than Hooker and Bilſon; and what Hooker ſaith for popular Power, his firſt and eighth Books abundantly teſtifie; And even B. Bilſon himſelf defendeth the French and German Proteſtant Wars; and you may judge of his Loyal Doctrine by theſe words, pag. 520. Of Chriſtian Subjection [If a Prince ſhould go about to ſubject his Kingdom to a foreign Realm, or change the form of the Common wealth, from Impery to Tyranny, or neglect the Laws eſtabliſhed by common conſent of Prince and People, to execute his own pleaſure: In theſe and other Caſes, which might be named, if the Nobles and Commons joyn together, to defend their ancient and accuſtomed Liberty, Regiment and Laws, they may not well be counted Rebels.] So p. 381, 382. [If others do but ſtand on their guard to keep their lives and Families from the bloody rage of their Enemies, ſeeking to put whole Towns and Provinces of them to the Sword againſt all Law and Reaſon, and to diſturb the Kingdoms in the minority of the right Governours: Or if they defend their antient and chriſtian Liberties, covenanted and agreed on by thoſe Princes, to whom they firſt ſubmitted themſelves, and ever ſince confirmed and allowed by the Kings that have ſucceeded. If in either of theſe two caſes, the godly require their right and offer no wrong, impugn not their Princes, but only ſave their own lives; you cry, rebellious Hereticks, rebellious Calviniſts, furie, phrenſie, mutinie; and I know not what: You may purſue, depoſe, and murder Princes, when the Biſhop of Rome biddeth you, and that without breach of Duty, Law or Conſcience to God or man, as you vaunt, though neither Life nor Limbs of yours be touched. We may not ſo much as beſeech Princes that we may be uſed like Subjects, not like Slaves; like men, not like Beaſts, that we may be convented by Laws before Judges; not murthered in corners by Inquiſitors; We may not ſo much as hide our heads, nor pull our necks out of the greedy jaws of that Romiſh Wolf, but the foam of your unclean mouth, is ready to call us by all the names you can deviſe.) So far Bilſon.

Anſw. 1. If it be clear that Chriſtianity as to its Principles, is more for Love, and Concord and Subjection, than any other rational Doctrine in the World, then if any Sect of Chriſtians ſhall indeed be found to contradict theſe Principles, ſo far they contradict Chriſtianity; And will you blame Religion becauſe Men contradict it? or blame Chriſt's Doctrine becauſe Men diſobey it? Indeed every Sect that hath ſomething of its own to make it a Sect, beſides Chriſtian Religion which maketh Men meer Chriſtians, may eaſily be guilty of ſuch errrour as will corrupt the Chriſtian Religion. And as a Sect, they have a divided Intereſt which may tempt them to dividing Principles: But none more condemn ſuch Diviſions than Chriſt. 2. And indeed, though a Chriſtian as ſuch is a credible witneſs; yet a Sect or Faction as ſuch, doth uſe to poſſeſs Men with ſuch an envious calomniating diſpoſition, that they are little to be believed when they accuſe each other! This factious Zeal is not from above, but is earthly, ſenſual and deviliſh; and therefore, where this is, no wonder if there be ſtrife, and falſe accuſing, and confuſion, and every evil Work. But as theſe are no competent witneſſes, ſo whether or no they are favoured by Chriſt, you may judge if you will read but thoſe three Chapters: Matth. 5 Rom. 12. Jam. 3. I may ſay here as B. Bilſon in the place which is accuſed, pag. 521. [IT IS EASIE FOR A RUNNING AND RANGING HEAD TO SIT AT HOME IN HIS CHAMBER AND CALL MEN REBELS, HIMSELF BEING THE RANKEST.] 3. For the Papiſts I can juſtifie them from your Accuſation, ſo far as they are Chriſtians; but as they are Papiſts let him juſtifie them that can. Indeed Uſurpation of Government is the very eſſence of Popery; for which all other Chriſtians blame them; And therefore there is ſmall reaſon that Chriſtianity ſhould be accuſed for them. 4. And for the Proteſtants, both Epiſcopal and Diſciplinarians, the ſober and moderate of them ſpeak of one another in no ſuch Language as you pretend. For the Epiſcopal, I know of none but railing Papiſts, that accuſe them univerſally of any Doctrines of Rebellion; And for the Practices of ſome particular Men, it is not to be alledged againſt their Doctrine; Do you think that Queen Elizabeth, to whom B. Bilſon's Book was dedicated, or K. Charles to whom Mr. Hooker's Book was dedicated, took either of them to be teachers of Rebellion? It is not every different opinion in Politicks that proveth Men to be againſt Subjection, He that can read ſuch a Book as Bilſons for Chriſtian Subjection againſt Antichriſtian Rebellion, and yet deny him to be a Teacher of Subjection, hath a very hard forehead. For the Controverſies I ſhall say no more of them here, but what I have said before to Mr. Hooker. And as for Calvin and the Disciplinarians or Puritans as they are called, they subscribe all the confessions for Magistracy, and take the same Oaths of Allegiance and Supremacy, as others do; and they plead and write for them; so that for my part I know not of any difference in their Doctrine; Hear what B. Andrews saith (who was no Rebel,) in his Tortura Torti, pag. 379, 380. [Calvinus autem ut Papam Regem; ita Regem Papam non probavit; neque nos quod in Papa detestamur, in Rege approbamus; at & ille nobiscum, & nos cum illo sentimus, easdem esse in Ecclesia Christiana Regis Jacobi partes, quæ Josiæ fuerunt in Judaica; nec nos ultra quicquam fieri ambimus——] that is, (But Calvin neither liked a Pope-King, nor a King-Pope; nor do we approve of that in the King, which we detest in the Pope. But he with us, and we with him do judge, that King James hath as much to do in a Christian Church, as Josias had in the Jewish Church; and we go not about to get any more——] And after [Sub Primatus nomine, Papatum novum Rex non invehit in Ecclesiam, sic enim statuit ut non Aaroni Pontifici, ita nec Jeroboamo Regi, jus ullum esse constatum a se vitulum populo proponendi, ut adoret, (id est) non vel fides novos articulos, vel cultus Divini novas formulas procudendi,] that is, the King doth not bring into the Church a new Papacy, under the name of Primacy; For thus he judgeth, (or determineth) that neither Aaron the Priest, nor Jeroboam the King, had any right to propose the Calf which they had made, to the People to be adored; that is, neither to hammer (or make) new Articles of Faith, or new Forms of Divine Worship, And pag. 379, 380. [Quos vero puritanos appellat, si Regium primatum detestantur, detestandi ipsi. Profitentur enim, subscribunt, jurant in lies; sed & illi quod faciunt ingenue faciunt, & societatem in hoc Torti, ipsumque adeo Tortum, tam quam mendacem hominem, (& alibi de aliis, & hic de se,) ac sycophantem egregium destantur;] that is, [And for those he calleth Puritans, if they detest the Kings Supremacy, they are to be detested; for they daily profess, subscribe and swear to it; and what they do, they do ingenuously; and they detest the society of Tortus in this, and Tortus himself, as a lying Man, (elsewhere of others, and here of themselves) and an egregious sycophant,] By these testimonies judge what Protestants think of one another in point of loyalty.

5. And why are not all the other Christians taken into your enumeration? The Armenians. Abassins, and all the Greek Churches? Whom the Papists so frequently reproach as flatterers or servile, because they still gave so much to their Emperors? Have you any pretence for your accusation as against them? Unless perhaps from the tumults which Alexandria in its greatness was much addicted to, which is nothing to the doctrine of Christianity, nor to the practice of all the rest.

Christianity is most for Loyalty and Subjection.

§. 84. Having answered these cavils of the late Atheistical or Infidel Politicians, I shall next shew, though briefly, yet by plentiful evidence, that Christianity and true Godliness is the greatest strength of Government, and bond of Subjection, and means of Peace, that ever was revealed to the World: Which will appear in all these evidences following.

1. Christianity teacheth Men to take the higher Powers as ordained of God, and to obey them as Gods Ministers or Officers, having an Authority derived immediately from God; so that it advanceth the Magistrate as Gods Officer, as much higher than Infidels advance him, (who fetch his power no higher than Force or Choice) as a Servant of God is above a Servant of Men; which is more than a Man is above a Dog.

Rom. 15. 1, 2, 3, 4.

§. 85. 2. Christianity telleth us that our obedience to Magistrates is Gods own command, and so that we must obey him by obeying them. And as obedience to a Constable is more procured by the Kings Laws than by his own Commands, so obedience to a King is far more effectually procured by Gods Laws than by his own. If God be more above a King, than a King is above a Worm, the command of God must be a more powerful obligation upon every understanding Person, than the Kings. And what greater advantage can a King have in Governing, than to have Subjects whose Consciences do feel themselves bound by God himself, to obey the King and all his Officers.

Object. Object, But this is still with exception, if it be not in things forbidden of God? And the Subjects are made Judges whether it be so or no?

Answ. Answ. And woe to that Man that grudgeth that God must be obeyed before him! And would be himself a God to be obeyed in things which God is against! The Subjects are made no publick Judges, but private discerners of their duties: And so you make them your selves: Or else they must not judge whether the King or an Usurper were to be obeyed; or whether the word of a King or of a Constable, if they be contradictory is to be preferred. To judge what we must choose or refuse is proper to a Rational Creature: Even Brutes themselves will do something like it by instinct of Nature, and will not do all things according to your will: You would have us obey a Justice of Peace no further than our Loyalty to the King will give leave: And therefore there is greater reason that we should obey the higher Powers no further than our Loyalty to God will give leave. But if Men pretend Gods commands for any thing which he commandeth not, Magistrates bear not the Sword in vain, and Subjects are commanded by God not to resist: If they punish them rightfully, God will bear the Rulers out in it; if they punish them wrongfully or persecute them for well doing, God will severely punish them, who so wronged his subjects and abused the authority which he committed to their trust.

B. Bilson Ubi sub. p. 259. [As Bishops ought to discern which is truth before they teach; so must the People discern who teacheth right before they believe.] Pag. 261, 262. (Princes as well as others must yield obedience, to Bishops speaking the word of God: But if Bishops pass their Commission, and speak beside the word of God, what they list, both Prince and People may despise them. See him further, pag. 259, 260, 261, 262. proving that all have a judicium discretionis.

§. 86. 3. The Christian Religion bindeth Subjects to obedience upon lorer penalties than Magistrates can inflict; even upon pain of Gods displeasure, and everlasting damnation, Rom. 13. 2, 3. And how great a help this is to Government it is so easie to discern, that the simpler sort of Atheists do perswade themselves, that Kings devised Religion to keep People in obedience with the fears of Hell. Take away the fears of the Life to come and the punishment of God in Hell upon the wicked, and the World will be turned into worse than a Den of Serpents and wild Beasts; Adulteries and Murders, and poysoning Kings and all abomination will be freely committed, which wit or power can think to cover or bear out! Who will trust that Man that believeth not that God doth judge and punish?

§. 87. 4. The Christian Religion doth encourage Obedience and Peace with the promise of the Reward of endless Happiness (cæteris paribus;) Heaven is more than any Prince can give. If that will not move Men, there is no greater thing to move them. Atheism and Infidelity have no such motives.

§. 88. 5. Christianity teacheth Subjects to obey not only good Rulers but bad ones, even Heathens themselves, and not to resist when we cannot obey. Whereas among Heathens, Princes ruled no longer than they pleased the Soldiers or the People; so that Lampridius marvelled that Heliogabalus was no sooner butchered, but suffered to reign Three Years; Mirum fortasse cuipiam videatur Constantine venerabilis, quod hac clades quam retuli loco principum fuerit; & quidem prope triennio, ita ut nemo inventus fuerit qui istum a gubernaculis Romanæ Majestatis abduceret, cum Nerone, Vitellio, Caligulæ cæterisque hujusmodi nunquam tyrannicida defuerit.

Cicero saith, that every good man was in his heart, or as much as in him lay, one that killed Cæsar.

§. 89. 6.

§. 89. 6. Christianity and Godliness do not only restrain the outward acts, but rule the very Hearts, and lay a charge upon the thoughts, which the Power of Princes cannot reach. It forbiddeth to curse the King in our Bed-chamber, or to have a thought or desire of evil against him: It quencheth the first sparks of disloyalty and disorder: And the rule of the outward Man followeth the ordering of the Heart: And therefore Atheism which leaveth the Heart free and open to all desires and designs of Rebellion, doth kindle that fire in the minds of Men, which Government cannot quench! It corrupteth the fountain, it breaketh the spring that should set all a going, It poysoneth the heart of Commonwealths.

1 Pet. 4. 12.

§. 90. 7. Christianity and Godliness teach Men Patience, that it may not seem strange to them to bear the Cross, and suffer injuries from high and low: And therefore that Impatience which is the beginning of all Rebellion being repressed, it stayeth the distemper from going any further.

§. 91. 8. Christianity teacheth Men self-denyal as a great part of their Religion: And when selfishness is mortified, there is nothing left to be a principle of Rebellion against God or our Superiours: Selfishness is the very predominant principle of the ungodly: It is only for themselves that they obey when they do obey; no wonder therefore if the Author of Leviathan allow Men to do any thing when the saving of themselves requireth it. And so many selfish Persons as there be in a Kingdom, so many several Interests are first sought, which for the most part stand cross to the Interests of others: The Godly have all one common Center: They unite in God, and therefore may be kept in Concord: For Gods will is a thing that may be fulfilled by all as well as one: But the selfish and ungodly are every one his own Center, and have no common Center to unite in, their interests being ordinarily cross and inconsistent.

Luke 14. 9, 33.

Ungebantur Reges non per dominum, sed qui cæteris crudeliores existerint, & paulo post ab unctoribus non pro veri examinatione, trucidabantur, aliis electis truci oribus. Gildas de exc. Brit.

§. 92. 9. Christianity teacheth Men by most effectual arguments, to set light by the Riches and Honours of the World, and not to strive for superiority; but to mind higher things, and lay up our Treasure in a better World, and to condescend to Men of low degree! It forbiddeth Men to exalt themselves lest they be brought low; and commandeth them to humble themselves that God may exalt them; and he that knoweth not that Pride and Covetousness are the great disquieters of the World, and the cause of Contentions and the ruin of States, knoweth nothing of these matters. Therefore if it were but by the great urging of Humility and Heavenly Mindedness, and the strict condemning of Ambition and Earthly-mindedness, Christianity and Godliness must needs be the greatest preservers of Government, and of order, peace and quietness in the World.

§. 93. 10. Christianity teacheth Men to live in the Love of God and Man! It maketh Love the very heart, and life, and sum and end of all other duties of Religion. Faith it self is but the Bellows to kindle in us the sacred flames of Love. Love is the end of the Gospel, and the fulfilling of the Law. To love all Saints with a special Love, even with a pure Heart and fervently, and to love all Men heartily with a common love; to love our Neighbour as our selves; and to love our very Enemies; this is the Life which Christ requireth, upon the penalty of damnation; and if Love thus prevail, what should disturb the Government, Peace or Order of the World?

§. 94. 11. Christianity teacheth Men to be exact in Justice, distributive and commutative; and to do to others as we would they should do to us; and where this is followed Kings and States will have little to molest them, when Gens sine justitia est sine remige navis in unda.

§. 95. 12. Christianity teacheth Men to do good to all Men as far as we are able, and to abound in good works as that for which we are redeemed and new made; and if Men will set themselves wholly to do good, and be hurtful and injurious to none, how easie will it be to govern such?

§. 96. 13. Christianity teacheth Men to forbear and to forgive, as ever they will be forgiven of God, and the strong to bear the infirmities of the weak, and not to please themselves, but one another to their edification; not to be censorious, harsh or cruel, nor to place the Kingdom of God in Meats, and Drinks, and Days, but in Righteousness, Peace and Joy in the Holy Ghost; to bear one anothers burdens, and to restore them with the Spirit of meekness that are overtaken in a fault, and to be peaceable, gentle, easie to be intreated, full of mercy and good fruits, without Partiality and Hypocrisie, and to speak evil of no Man; and where this is obeyed, how quietly and easily may Princes govern?

Rom. 14. & 15. 1. Gal. 6. 1, 2, 3, 4. James 3. 15, 16, 17. Titus 3. 2.

§. 97. 14. Christianity setteth before us the perfectest pattern of all this humility, meekness, contempt of worldly wealth and greatness, self-denyal, and obedience, that ever was given in the World, The Eternal Son of God incarnate, would condescend to earth and flesh, and would obey his Superiours after the flesh, in the repute of the World; and would pay tribute, and never be drawn to any contempt of the Governours of the World, though he suffered death under the false accusation of it. He that is a Christian, endeavoureth to imitate his Lord: And can the imitation of Christ, or of his peaceable Apostles, be injurious to Governours? Could the World but lay by their Serpentine enmity against the holy doctrine and practice of Christianity, and not take themselves engaged to persecute it, nor dash themselves in pieces on the stone which they should build upon, nor by striving against it, provoke it to fall on them and grind them to powder, they never need to complain of disturbances by Christianity or Godliness.

Luke 20. 18. Matth. 21. 42, 44. Acts 4. 11. 1 Pet. 2. 7, 8. Zech. 12. 3.

§. 98. 15. Christianity and true Godliness containeth, not only all those Precepts that tend to peace and order in the World, but also strength and willingness and holy dispositions for the practising of such precepts: Other Teachers can speak but to the ears, but Christ doth write his Laws upon the heart: So that he maketh them such as he commandeth them to be: Only this is the remnant of our unhappiness, that while he is performing the cure on us, we retain a remnant of our old diseases, and so his work is yet imperfect: And as sin in strength is it that setteth on fire the course of nature, so the relicts of it will make some disturbance in the World, according to its degree: But nothing is more sure than that the Godliest Christian is the most orderly and loyal Subject, and the best Member (according to his parts and power) in the Commonwealth; and that sin is the cause, and holiness the cure, of all the disorders and calamities of the World.

§. 99. 16. Lastly, Consult with experience it self, and you will find, that all this which I have spoken, hath been ordinarily verified. What Heathenism tendeth to, you may see even in the Roman Government (for there you will confess it was at the best.) To read of the Tumults, the Cruelties, the popular Unconstancy, Faction and Injustice: How rudely the Soldiers made their Emperors, and how easily and barbarously they murdered them! Read the lives of all the Philosophers, Orators, and famous men of Greece or Rome, and try whether the Christians or they were more for Monarchy. Arcesilaus Regum neminem magnopere coluit: Quamobrem legatione ad Antigonum fungens pro patria, nihil obtinuit. Hesich. in Arces. Its one of Thales sayings in Laert. Quid difficile? Regem vidisse tyrannum senem. Chrysippus videtur aspernator Regum modice fuisse. Quod cum tam multa scripserit (libros 705.) nulli unquam regi quicquam adscripserit. Seneca saith (Traged. de Herc. fur.) perillously, Victima haud ulla amplior potest, magisque opima mactari Jovi, quam Rex iniquus. Cicero pro Milon. Non se obstrinxit sceleresiquis Tyrannum occidat, quamvis familiarem. Et 5. Tusc. Nulla nobis cum Tyrannis societas est, neque est contra naturam spoliare eum quem honestum est necare. Plura habet similia.

And how few of them from the days of Christ till Constantine did die the common death of all Men, and escape the hands of those that were their Subjects; I think this will satisfie you, whither Mens enmity to Christianity tendeth! And then to observe how suddenly the case was altered, as soon as the Emperours and Subjects became Cristians, (till in the declining of the Greek Empire, some Officers and Courtiers, who aspired to the Crown did murder the Emperours:) And further to observe, that the rebellious Doctrines and Practices against Governours, have been all introduced by Factions and Heresies, which forsook Christianity so far before they incurred such guilt; and that it is either Papal Usurpation (which is in its nature an enemy to Princes) that hath deposed and trampled upon Emperours and Kings, or else some mad Enthusiasticks that over-run Religion and their wits, that at Munster (and in England some lately) by the advantage of their prosperity, have dared to do violence against Soveraignty; but the more any Men were Christians and truly godly, the more they detested all such things: All this will tell you that the most serious, and religious Christians, are the best Members of the civil Societies upon Earth.

§ 100. II. Having done with the first part of my last Direction, I shall say but this little of the second; Let Christians see that they be Christians indeed, and abuse not that which is most excellent to be a cloak to that which is most vile. 1. In reading Politicks, swallow not all that every Author writeth in conformity to the Polity that he liveth under: What perverse things shall you read in the Popish Politicks, (Contzen, and abundance such!) What usurpation on Principalities, and cruelties to Christians, under the pretence of defending the Church, and suppressing Heresies?

2. Take heed in reading History, that you suffer not the Spirit of your Author, to infect you with any of that partiality which he expresseth to the cause which he espouseth. Consider in what times and places all your Authors lived, and read them accordingly with the just allowance. The name of Liberty was so precious, and the name of a King so odious to the Romans, Athenians, &c. that it is no wonder if their Historians be unfriendly unto Kings.

3. Abuse not Learning it self, to lift you up with self-conceitedness against Governours! Learned Men may be ignorant of Polity; or at least unexperienced, and almost as unfit to judge, as of matters of War or Navigation.

4. Take heed of giving the Magistrates power to the Clergy, and setting up secular coercive Power under the name of the Power of the Keys: And it had been happy for the Church, if God had perswaded Magistrates in all Ages to have kept the Sword in their own hands, and not have put it into the Clergies hands, to fulfil their Wills by: For, 1. By this means, the Clergy had escaped the odium of usurpation and domineering, by which atheistical Politicians, would make Religion odious to Magistrates for their sakes. 2. And by this means greater unity had been preserved in the Church, while one faction is not armed with the Sword to tread down the rest: For if Divines contend only by dint of Argument, when they have talkt themselves and others a weary they will have done: But when they go to it with dint of Sword, it so ill becometh them, that it seldom doth good; but the party often that trusteth least to their reason, must destroy the other, and make their cause good by Iron Arguments. 3. And then the Romish Clergy had not been armed against Princes to the terrible concussions of the Christian World, which Histories at large relate; if Princes had not first lent them the Sword which they turned against them. 4. And then Church Discipline would have been better understood, and have been more effectual; which is corrupted and turned to another thing and so cast out, when the Sword is used instead of the Keys, under pretence of making it effectual: None but Consenters are capable of Church-communion: No Man can be a Christian, nor Godly, nor saved against his Will: And therefore Consenters and Voluntiers only are capable of Church-discipline: As a Sword will not make a Sermon effectual, no more will it make Discipline effectual; which is but the management of God's word to Work upon the conscience. So far as Men are to be driven by the Sword to the use of means, or restrained from offering Injury to Religion, the Magistrate himself is fittest to do it. It is noted by Historians as the dishonour of Cyrill of Alexandria (though a famous Bishop) that he was the first Bishop that like a Magistrate used the Sword there, and used violence against Hereticks and Dissenters.

5. Above all, abuse not the name of Religion for the resistance of your lawful Governours: Religion must be defended and propagated by no irreligious means. It is easie before you are aware, to catch the Feaver of such a passionate zeal as James and John had, when they would have had fire from Heaven to consume the refusers and resisters of the Gospel: And then you will think that any thing almost is lawful, which doth but seem necessary to the prosperity of Religion. But no means but those of God's allowance do use to prosper, or bring home that which Men expect: They may seem to do wonders for a while, but they come to nothing in the latter end, and spoil the Work, and leave all worse than it was before.

§. 101. Direct. 40. Take heed of mistaking the nature of that liberty of the People, which is truly valuable and desirable, and of contending for an undesirable liberty in its stead. It is desirable to have liberty to do good, and to possess our own, and enjoy Gods mercies, and live in peace: But it is not desirable to have liberty to sin, and abuse one another, and hinder the Gospel, and contemn our Governours: Some mistake Liberty for Government it self; and think it is the Peoples Liberty to be Governours: And some mistake Liberty for an exemption from Government, and think they are most free, when they are most ungoverned, and may do what they list: But this is a misery, and not a mercy, and therefore was never purchased for us by Christ. Many desire servitude and calamity under the name of Liberty: Optima est Reipublicæ forma, saith Seneca, ubi nulla Libertas deest, nisi licentia pereundi. As Mr. Rich. Hooker saith, Lib. 8. p. 195. [I am not of opinion, that simply in Kings the most, but the best limited power is best, both for them and the People: The most limited is that which may deal in fewest things: the best, that which in dealing is tied to the soundest, perfectest and most indifferent Rule, which Rule is the Law: I mean not only the Law of Nature and of God, but the National Law consonant thereunto: Happier that people, whose Law is their King in the greatest things, than that whose King is himself their Law.] Dir. 40. 1 Pet. 2. 16. Gal. 5. 13. 2 Pet. 2. 19. Gal. 4. 26. 2 Cor. 3. 17.

Yet no doubt, but the Law-givers are as such above the Law as an Authoritative Instrument of Government, but under it, as a Man is under the obligation of his own Consent and Word: It ruleth Subjects in the former sense: It bindeth the summam Potestatem in the latter.

§. 102. Direct. 41. When you have done all that you can in just obedience, look for your reward from God alone; Let it satisfie you that he knoweth and approveth your sincerity. You make it a holy Work if you do it to please God; and you will be fixed Dir. 41.

See Bilson of Subject. p. 525, 526. Proving from Chrysost. Hilary. Origen, that Pastors may use no force or terror, but only perswasion, to recover their wandering sheep. Ibid. p. 541. Parliaments have been kept by the King and his Barons, the Clergy wholly excluded, and yet their Acts and Statutes good: And when the Bishops were present, their voices from the Conquest to this day were never negative. Thus Bishop Bilson: So p. 358.

and conſtant, if you take Heaven for your Reward, (which is enough, and will not fail you;) But you make it but a ſelfiſh carnal Work, if you do it only to pleaſe your Governours, or get Preferment, or eſcape ſome hurt which they may do you, and are ſubject only in flattery, or for fear of wrath, and not for conſcience ſake. And ſuch obedience is uncertain and unconſtant; For when you fail of your hopes, or think Rulers deal unjuſtly or unthankfully with you, your ſubjection will be turned into paſſionate deſires of revenge. Remember ſtill the example of your Saviour, who ſuffered Death as an Enemy to Cæſar, when he had never failed of his duty ſo much as in one thought or word. And are you better than your Lord and Maſter? If God be all to you, and you have laid up all your hopes in Heaven, it is then but little of your concernment, (further than God is concerned in it) whether Rulers do uſe you well or ill, and whether they interpret your actions rightly, or what they take you for, or how they call you; But it is your concernment that God account you Loyal, and will judge you ſo, and juſtifie you from Mens accuſations of diſloyalty, and reward you with more than Man can give you. Nothing is well done, eſpecially of ſo high a nature as this, which is not done for God and Heaven, and which the Crown of Glory is not the moitve to.

I have purpoſely been the larger on this Subject, becauſe the times in which we live require it, both for the ſetling of ſome, and for the confuting the falſe Accuſations of others, who would perſwade the World that our Doctrine is not what it is; when through the ſinful Practices of ſome, the way of truth is evil ſpoken of, 2 Pet. 2. 2.

Tit. 2. A fuller Reſolution of the Caſes, 1. Whether the Laws of Men do bind the Conſcience: 2. Eſpecially ſmaller and Penal Laws?

THe Word [Conſcience] ſignifieth either, 1. In general according to the notion of the Word, The knowledge of our own matters; Conſcire; The knowledge of our ſelves, our duties, our faults, our fears, our hopes, our diſeaſes, &c. 2. Or more limitedly and narrowly, The knowledge of our ſelves and our own matters in Relation to God's Law and Judgment; Judicium hominis de ſeipſo prout ſubjicitur judicio Dei, as Ameſius defineth it.

2. Conſcience is taken, 1. Sometime for the Act of ſelf-knowing; 2. Sometime for the Habit; 3. Sometime for the faculty, that is, for the intellect it ſelf, as it is a faculty of ſelf-knowing. In all theſe ſenſes it is taken properly. 2. And ſometimes it is uſed (by cuſtom) improperly, for the Perſon himſelf, that doth Conſcire; or for his Will, (another faculty.)

3. The Conſcience may be ſaid to be bound, 1. Subjectively, as the ſubjectum quod, or the faculty obliged; 2. Or Objectively, as Conſcire, the Act of Conſcience, is the thing ad quod, to which we are obliged.

And upon theſe neceſſary diſtinctions I thus anſwer to the firſt Queſtion.

Prop. 1. The Act or the Habit of Conſcience are not capable of being the ſubject obliged; no more than any other act or duty; The Act or Duty is not bound, but the Man to the Act or Duty.

2. The Faculty or Judgment is not capable of being the Object or Materia ad quam, the thing to which we are bound. A Man is not bound to be a Man, or to have an Intellect, but is made ſuch.

3. The Faculty of Conſcience (that is the Intellect) is not capable of being the immediate or neareſt ſubjectum quod, or ſubject obliged. The reaſon is, Becauſe the Intellect of it ſelf is not a free-working faculty, but acteth neceſſarily per modum naturæ, further than it is under the Empire of the Will; And therefore Intellectual and Moral habits are by all Men diſtinguiſhed.

4. All Legal or Moral Obligation falleth directly upon the Will only; and ſo upon the Perſon as a voluntary Agent, So that it is proper to ſay, The Will is bound, and The Perſon is bound.

5. Improperly and remotely it may be ſaid, The Intellect (or faculty of Conſcience) is bound, or the Tongue, or Hand, or Foot is bound; as the Man is bound to uſe them.

6. Though it be not proper to ſay, that the Conſcience is bound, it is proper to ſay, that the Man is bound to the Act and Habit of Conſcience, or to the exerciſe of the Faculty.

7. The common meaning of the phraſe, that we are [bound in Conſcience] or that [Conſcience is bound] is that [we are bound to a thing by God] or [by a Divine Obligation] and that it is [a Sin againſt God to violate it;] So that Divines uſe here to take the word Conſcience in the narrower Theological ſenſe, as reſpect to Gods Law and Judgment, doth enter the definition of it.

8. Taking Conſcience in this narrower ſenſe, To ask, Whether Mans Law as Mans do bind us in Conſcience, is all one as to ask, Whether Man be God. Having ſpoken of this Controverſie, in my Life of Faith, as an eaſie thing, in which I thought we were really agreed, while we ſeemed to differ, which I called a pitiful Caſe, ſome Brethren (who ſay nothing againſt the truth of what I ſaid) are offended at me as ſpeaking too confidently, and calling that ſo eaſie which Biſhop Sanderſon and ſo many others did make a greater matter of: I retract the words, if they be unſuitable either to the matter or the Readers: But as to the matter and the truth of the words, I deſire the Reader but to conſider how eaſie a caſe Mr. P. maketh of it Eccl. Pol. and how heinous a matter he maketh of our ſuppoſed diſſent: And if after all this it ſhall appear, that the Non-conformiſts do not at all differ from Hooker, Biſſon, and the generality of the Conformiſts in this point, let him that is, willing to be repreſented as odious and intolerable to Rulers and to mankind, for that in which we do not differ, proceed to backbite me for ſaying that it is a pitiful caſe; and pretending that we are agreed.

9. And taking Conſcience in the large or general ſenſe, to ask whether Mans Laws bind us in Conſcience, ſubjectively is to ask whether they bind the Underſtanding to know our duty to Man? And the tenour of them will ſhew that; While they bind us to an outward act, or from an outward act, it is the Man that they bind to or from that act, and that is, as he is a Rational Voluntary Agent; ſo that a human Obligation is laid upon the Man, on the Will, and on the Intellect by humane Laws.

10. And humane Laws while they bind us to or from an outward Act, do thereby bind us as Rational-free Agents, knowingly to chooſe or refuſe thoſe Acts; Nor can a Law which is a Moral Inſtrument any otherwiſe bind the Hand, Foot or Tongue, but by firſt binding us to chooſe or refuſe it knowingly, that is, conſcientiouſly, ſo that a humane Bond is certainly laid on the Mind, Soul or Conſcience taken in the larger ſenſe.

11. Taking Conſcience in the ſtricter ſenſe, as including eſſentially a relation to Gods Obligation, the full ſenſe of the queſtion plainly is but this, Whether it be a ſin againſt God to break the Laws of Man? And thus plain Men might eaſily underſtand it. And to this it muſt be anſwered, that it is in two reſpects a ſin againſt God to break ſuch Laws or Commands as Rulers are authorized by God to make: 1. Becauſe God commandeth us to obey our Rulers: Therefore he that (ſo) obeyeth them not, ſinneth againſt a Law of God. God obligeth us in general to obey them in all things which they are authorized by him to command: But their Law determineth of the particular matter: Therefore God obligeth us (in Conſcience of his Law) to obey them in that particular. 2. Becauſe by making them his Officers, by his Commiſſion he hath given them a certain beam of Authority, which is Divine as derived from God: Therefore they can command us by a power derived from God: Therefore to diſobey is to ſin againſt a power derived from God. And thus the general caſe is very plain and eaſie, How Man ſinneth againſt God in diſobeying the Laws of Man, and conſequently how (in a tolerable ſenſe of that Phraſe) it may be ſaid, that Mans Laws do or do not bind the Conſcience (or rather, bind us in point of Conſcience;) or by a Divine Obligation, Man is not God; and therefore as Man, of himſelf can lay no Divine Obligation on us. But Man being Gods Officer, 1. His own Law layeth on us an obligation derivatively Divine (for it is no Law which hath no obligation, and it is no authoritative obligation which is not derived from God.) 2. And Gods own Law bindeth us to obey Mans Laws.

Queſt. 2. BUT is it a ſin to break every Penal Law of Man?

Anſw. 1. You muſt remember that Mans Law is eſſentially the ſignification of Mans Will; and therefore obligeth no further than it truly ſignifieth the Rulers Will.

2. That it is the Act of a Power derived from God; and therefore no further bindeth, than it is the exerciſe of ſuch a Power.

3. That it is given, 1. Finally for Gods Glory and Pleaſure, and for the common good (comprehending the Honour of the Ruler and the Welfare of the Society ruled.) And therefore obligeth not when it is, 1. Againſt God. 2. Or againſt the common good. 2. And it is ſubordinate to Gods own Laws, (in Nature and Scripture) and therefore obligeth not to ſin, or to the violation of Gods Law.

Is it not Mr. Humphrey alone that hath written that Laws bind not in Conſcience to obedience which are againſt the publick good. The greateſt Caſuiſts ſay the ſame, excepting the caſe of ſcandal: He that would ſee this in them may chooſe but theſe two ſpecial Authors. Bapt. Fragoſ. de Regimine Reipublicæ, & Greg. Sayrus in his Clavis Regia, and in them he ſhall find enough more cited. Though I think ſome further Cautions would make it more ſatisfactory.

4. You muſt note that Laws are made for the Government of Societies as ſuch univerſally; and ſo are fitted to the common caſe, for the common good. And it is not poſſible but that a Law which preſcribeth a duty which by accident is ſo to the moſt, ſhould meet with ſome particular ſubject to whom the caſe is ſo circumſtantiated as that the ſame act would be to him a ſin: And to the ſame Man it may be ordinarily a duty, and in an extraordinary caſe a ſin. Thence it is that in ſome caſes (as Lent Faſts, Marriages, &c. Rulers oft authorize ſome Perſons to grant diſpenſations in ſome certain caſes; and hence it is ſaid, that Neceſſity hath no Law.

Hereupon I conclude as followeth.

1. It is no ſin to break a Law which is no Law as being againſt God, or not authorized by him (as of a Uſurper, &c.) See R. Hooker Concluſ. Lib. 8.

2. It is no Law ſo far as it is no ſignification of the true Will of the Ruler, what ever the words be: Therefore ſo far it is no ſin to break it.

3. The Will of the Ruler is to be judged of, not only by the Words, but by the Ends of Government, and by the Rules of Humanity.

4. It being not poſſible that the Ruler in his Laws can fore-ſee and name all exceptions, which may occur, it is to be ſuppoſed that it is his Will, that the Nature of the thing, ſhall be the notifier of his Will, when it cometh to paſs: And that if he were preſent, and this caſe fell out before him, which the ſenſe and end of the Law extendeth not to, he would ſay, This is an excepted Caſe.

5. There is therefore a wide difference between a General Law, and a perſonal particular Mandate; as of a Parent to a Child, or a Maſter to a Servant, for this latter fully notifieth the Will of the Ruler in that very caſe, and to that very Perſon; and therefore it cannot be ſaid that here is any exception, or that it is not his Will; but in an Univerſal or General Law, it is to be ſuppoſed that ſome particular excepted caſes will fall out extraordinarily, though they cannot be named; and that in thoſe caſes, the Rulers Will diſpenſeth with it.

6. Sometimes alſo the Ruler doth by the meer neglect of preſſing or executing his own Laws, permit them to grow obſolete, and out of uſe; and ſometimes he forbeareth the execution of them for ſome time, or to ſome ſort of Perſons; and by ſo doing doth notifie, that it was not his Will that at ſuch a time, and in ſuch caſes they ſhould oblige. I ſay not, that all remiſsneſs of execution is ſuch a ſign; but ſometimes it is; and the very word of the Law-giver, may notifie his Diſpenſation or ſuſpending Will. As for inſtance, upon the burning of London, there were many Laws (about coming to Pariſh Churches, and relief of the Poor of the Pariſh, and the like,) that the People became uncapable of obeying, and it was to be ſuppoſed, that the Rulers Will would have been to have excepted ſuch caſes if foreſeen; and that they did diſpence with them when they fell out.

7. Sometimes alſo the penalty of violating a Law, is ſome ſuch mulct or ſervice, which the Ruler intendeth as a Commutation for the duty, ſo that he freely leaveth it to the choice of the ſubject which he will chooſe. And then it is no ſin to pay the Mulct, and omit the action; becauſe it croſſeth not the Law-givers will.

8. Sometimes alſo the Law may command this principally for ſome Mens ſake, which ſo little concerns others, that it ſhould not extend to them at all, were it not leſt the liberty of them ſhould be an impediment to the obedience of others, and conſequently of the common good; in which caſe, if thoſe Perſons ſo little concerned, do but omit the action ſecretly, ſo as to be no ſcandal or publick hurt, it ſeemeth that they have the implicite Conſent of the Rulers.

9. Sometimes particular duties are commanded with this expreſs exception, [Unleſs they have juſt and reaſonable impediment] As for coming every Lords Day to Church, &c.) which ſeemeth to imply, that (though in caſes where the publick good is concerned, the Perſon himſelf ſhall not be judge, nor at all as to the penalty; yet that) in actions of an indifferent nature in themſelves, this exception is ſtill ſuppoſed to be implyed, [Unleſs we have juſt and reaſonable impediments] of which in private caſes, as to the Crime, we may judge.

10. I need not mention the common natural exceptions; as that Laws bind not to a thing when it becometh naturally impoſſible; or, ceſſante materia, vel capacitate ſubjecti obligati, &c.

11. Laws may change their ſenſe in part by the change of the Law-giver; for the Law is not formally to us his Law that is dead and was once our Ruler, but his that is alive and is now our Ruler. If Henry the eighth make a Law about the outward acts of Religion (as for coming to Church, &c.) and this remain unrepealed in King Edward's, Queen Maries, Queen Elizabeths, King James his days, &c. even till now; as we are not to think that the Law-givers had the ſame ſenſe and will, ſo neither that the Law hath the ſame ſenſe and obligation; for if the general words be capable of ſeveral ſenſes, we muſt not take it as binding to us in the ſenſe it was made in, but in the ſenſe of our preſent Law-givers or Rulers; becauſe it is their Law.

12. Therefore if a Law had a ſpecial Reaſon for it at the firſt making (as the Law for uſing Bows and Arrows) that Reaſon ceaſing we are to ſuppoſe the Will of the Law-giver to remit the obligation, if he urge not the execution, and renew not the Law.

13. By theſe plain principles many particular difficulties may be eaſily reſolved, which cannot be foreſeen and named: e.g. The Law againſt relieving a Beggar bindeth not, when he is like to die if he be not relieved; or in ſuch a caſe as after the burning of London, when there was no Pariſh to bring him to. A Law that is but for the ordering of Mens charity, (to Soul, or Body, by preaching of alms) will not diſoblige me from the Duties of Charity themſelves, in caſes where Scripture or Nature ture proveth them to be impoſed by God. A Law for faſting will not bind me, when it would be deſtructive to my Body; even on Gods Sabbaths duties of Mercy were to be preferred to Reſt and Sacrifices.

14. If Gods own Laws muſt be thus expounded, that [When two duties come together, and both cannot be done, the leſſer ceaſeth at that time to be a duty, and the greater is to be preferred,] Mans Laws muſt alſo be neceſſarily ſo expounded: And the rather becauſe Mans Laws may be contradictory when Gods never are ſo, rightly underſtood.

15. Where the Subject is to obey, ſo far he muſt diſcern which of the Laws inconſiſtent, is to be preferred: But in the Magiſtratical execution, the Magiſtrate or Judge muſt determine.

E. g. One Law commandeth that all the needy poor be kept on the Pariſh where they were born or laſt lived. Another Law ſaith, that Non-conformable Miniſters of the Goſpel who take not the Oxford Oath ſhall not come within five miles of City or Corporation (though they were born there) or any place where they have been Preachers. In caſe of neceſſity, what ſhall they do? Anſw. Whither they ſhall go for relief, they muſt diſcern as well as they can: But whither they ſhall be carried or ſent, the Magiſtrate or Conſtable muſt diſcern, and judge.

Alſo whether he ſhall go with a Conſtable that by one Law bringeth him to a place which by the other Law he is forbid on pain of ſix Months impriſonment in the common Goal to come to? Anſw. If he be not voluntary in it, it is not his fault: And if one bring him thither by force, and another impriſon him for being there, he muſt patiently ſuffer for it.

16. But out of ſuch excepted caſes, the Laws of our Rulers (as the commands of Parents) do bind us as is afore explained; and it is a ſin againſt God to violate them.

17. Yea, when the reaſon of the Law reacheth not our particular caſe and Perſon, yet when we have reaſon to judge, that it is the Rulers will that all be bound for the ſake of ſome, and the common order and good will be hindered by our exemption, we muſt obey to our corporal detriment, to avoid the publick detriment, and to promote the publick good.

CHAP. IV.

Directions to Lawyers about their Duty to God.

GEntlemen, you need not meet theſe Directions with the uſual cenſures or ſuſpicions, that Divines are buſying themſelves with the matters of your Calling, which belong not to them, and which they do not underſtand: You ſhall ſee that I will as much forbear ſuch matters as you can well deſire. If your Calling be not to be ſanctified by ſerving God in it, and regulating it by his Law, it is then neither honourable nor deſirable. But if it be, permit me very briefly ſo far to direct you.

Legum mihi placet autoritas; ſed earum uſus hominum nequitia depravatur: Itaque piguit perdiſcere, quo inboneſte uti nollem, & boneſte vix poſſem, etſi vellem. Petrarch. in vita ſua.

Dir. 1. §. 1. Direct 1. Take the whole frame of Polity together, and ſtudy each part in its proper place, and know it in its due relation to the reſt: That is, underſtand firſt the Doctrine of Polity and Laws in genere, and next the Univerſal Polity and Laws of God in ſpecie; and then ſtudy Humane Polity and Laws as they ſtand in their due ſubordination to the Polity and Laws of God, as the by-Laws of Corporations do to the General Laws of the Land.

§. 2. He that underſtandeth not what Polity and Law is in genere, is unlike to underſtand what Divine or Humane Polity or Law is in ſpecie; He that knoweth not what Government is, and what a community, and what a politick Society is; will hardly know what a Commonwealth or Church is; And he that knoweth not what a Commonwealth is in genere, what is its end, and what its conſtitutive Parts, and what the efficient cauſes, and what a Law, and Judgment, and Execution is, will ſtudy but unhappily the Conſtitution or Laws of the Kingdom which he liveth in.

§ 3. And he that underſtandeth not the Divine Dominium & Imperium as founded in Creation (and refounded in Redemption) and Mans Subjection to his abſolute Lord, and the Univerſal Laws, which he hath given in Nature and Scripture to the World, can never have any true underſtanding of the Polity or Laws of any Kingdom in particular; no more than he can well underſtand the true ſtate of a Corporation, or the Power of a Mayor, or Juſtice, or Conſtable, who knoweth nothing of the ſtate of the Kingdom, or of the King, or of his Laws. What ridiculous diſcourſes would ſuch a Man make of his Local Polity or Laws? He knoweth nothing worth the knowing, who knoweth not that all Kings and States have no power but what is derived from God, and ſubſervient to him, and are all his Officers, much more below him, than their Juſtices and Officers are to them; and that their Laws are of no force againſt the Laws of God, whether of Natural or Supernatural Revelation. And therefore it is moſt eaſie to ſee, that he that will be a good Lawyer muſt firſt be a Divine, and that the Atheiſts that deride or ſlight Divinity, do but play the fools in all their independent broken ſtudies. A Man may be a good Divine, that is no Lawer, but he can be no good Lawyer, that underſtandeth not Theology. Therefore let the Government and Laws of God, have the firſt and chiefeſt place in your ſtudies, and in all your obſervation and regard.

1. Becauſe it is the Ground of Humane Government, and the Fountain of Mans Power and Laws.

2. Becauſe the Divine Polity is alſo the end of Humane Policy: Mans Laws being ultimately to promote our obedience to the Laws of God, and the Honour of his Government.

3. Becauſe Gods Laws are the meaſure and bounds of Humane Laws; againſt which no Man can have power.

4. Becauſe Gods Rewards and Puniſhments are incomparably more regardable than Mans: Eternal Joy or Miſery being ſo much more conſiderable than temporal Peace or Suffering: Therefore though it be a diſhonour to Lawyers to be ignorant of Languages, Hiſtory and other needful parts of learning, yet it is much more their diſhonour to be ignorant of the Univerſal Government and Laws of God.

Male ſe rectum putat, qui regulam ſummæ rectitudinis ignorat. Ambroſ. de Offic.

§. 4. Direct. 2. Be ſure that you make not the getting of Money to be your principal end, in the exerciſe of your function; but the promoting of Juſtice, for the righting of the juſt, and the publick good; and therein the pleaſing of the moſt righteous God. For your work can be to you no better than your end. A baſe end doth debaſe your work. I deny not, but your competent gain and maintenance may be your lower end, but the promoting of juſtice muſt be your higher end, and ſought before it. The queſtion is not, Whether you ſeek to live by your Calling; for ſo may the beſt; nor yet whether you intend the promoting of Juſtice, for ſo may the worſt in ſome degree.) But the queſtion is, which of theſe you prefer? And which you firſt and principally intend? He that looketh chiefly at his worldly gain, muſt take that gain inſtead of Gods reward, and look for no more than he chiefly intended: for that is formally no good work, which is not intended chiefly to pleaſe God; and God doth not reward the Servants of the World, nor can any Man rationally imagine, that he ſhould reward a Man with happineſs hereafter, for ſeeking after Riches here. And if you ſay, that you look for no Reward but Riches, you muſt look for a Puniſhment worſe than Poverty; for the neglecting of God and your ultimate end, is a ſin that deſerveth the privation of

Dir. 4. It was an ill time when Petr. Bleſ. ſaid [Officium officialium eſt hodie jura confundere, lites ſuſcitare, tranſactiones reſcindere, dilationes innectere, ſupprimere veritatem, fovere mendacium, quæſtum ſequi, equitatem vendere, inhiare actionibus, verſutias connare.] of all which you neglect; and leaveth not your Actions in a state of innocent indifferency.

Dir. 3. §. 5. Direct. 3. Be not Counsellors or Advocates against God, that is, against Justice, Truth, or Innocency. A bad cause would have no Patrons, if there were no bad or ignorant Lawyers. It's a dear bought Fee, which is got by sinning; especially by such a wilful aggravated Sin, as the deliberate pleading for Iniquity, or opposing of the Truth. Judas his gain, and Achitophel's counsel will be too hot at last for conscience; and sooner drive them to hang themselves in the review, than afford them any true content; As St. James saith to them that he calleth to weep and howl, for their approaching misery, Your Riches are corrupted, and your Garments moth eaten, your Gold and Silver is cankered, and the rust of them shall be a witness against you, and shall eat your flesh as it were fire: ye have heaped treasure together for the last days. Whatever you say or do against Truth, and Innocency, and Justice, you do it against God himself. And is it not a sad case, that among professed Christians, there is no cause so bad but can find an Advocate for a Fee? I speak not against just counsel to a Man that hath a bad Cause (to tell him it is bad, and perswade him to disown it;) Nor I speak not against you for pleading against excessive Penalties or Damages: For so far your Cause is good, though the main Cause of your Client was bad; But he that speaketh or counselleth another for the defence of sin, or the wronging of the innocent, or the defrauding another of his right, and will open his mouth to the injury of the Just, for a little Money, or for a friend, must try whether that Money or Friend will save him from the vengeance of the Universal Judge (unless Faith and true Repentance, which will cause Confession and Restitution do prevent it.)

Plutarch saith, that Callicratidas being offered a great Sum of Money, (of which he had great need to pay his Seamen) if he would do an unjust act, refused; To whom saith Cleander his Counsellor, Ego profecto hæc accepissem, fuissem Callicratidas: He answered, Ego accepissem si fuissem Cleander.

The Romans called them Thieves, that by Fraud, or Plea, or Judgment got unlawful Gain, and deprived others of their right.

Lampridius saith of Alexander Severus, Tanti eum stomachi fuisse in eos judices qui furtorum fama laborassent, etiamsi damnati non essent, ut si eos casu aliquo videret, commotione animi stomachi choleram evomeret, toto vultu inardescente, ita ut nihil posset loqui. And afterwards, Severissimus judex contra fures, appellans eosdem quotidianorum scelerum reos, & solos hostes inimicosque respublicæ. Adding this instance, Eum notarium, qui falsum causæ brevem in consilio imperatorio retulisset, incisis digitorum, nervis ita ut nunquam posset scribere, deportavit. And that he caused Turinus one of his Courtiers to be tied in the Market-place to a Stake, and choaked to death with Smoak, for taking Mens Money on pretence of furthering their Suits with the Emperour; Præcone dicente, Fumo punitur, qui vendidit fumum. He strictly prohibited buying of Offices, saying, Necesse est ut qui emit, vendat: Ego vero non patiar mercatores potestatum: quos si patiar, damnare non possum. The frowns or favour of Man, or the love of Money, will prove at last a poor defence against his Justice, whom by injustice you offend.

Facile est justitiam homini justissimo.

The Poet could say,

Justum & tenacem propositi virum,
Non civium ardor prava jubentium
Non vultus instantis tyranni,

But if Men would first be just, it would not be so hard to bring them to do justly; saith Plautus.

[Justa autem ab injustis petere insipientia est:
Quippe illi iniqui jus ignorantneq; tenent.]

§. 6. Direct. 4. Make the cause of the innocent, as it were your own; and suffer it not to miscarry through your slothfulness and neglect. He is a lover of money more than Justice, that will sweat in the cause of the Rich that pay him well, and will slubber over, and starve the cause of the Poor, because he getteth little by them. Whatever your place obligeth you to do, let it be done diligently, and with your might; both in your getting Abilities, and in using them. Scævola was wont to say, (ut lib. Pandect. 42. tit. refer.) [Jus civile vigilantibus scriptum est, non dormientibus.] Saith Austin, [Ignorantia judicis plerumque est calamitas innocentis.] And as you look, every Labourer that you hire should be laborious in your Work, and your Physician should be diligent in his Employment for your health; so is it as just that you be diligent for them whose cause you undertake, and where God who is the lover of Justice doth require it.

Dir. 4.

Vix potest negligere, qui novit æquitatem: nec facile erroris vitio fordescit quem doctrina purgaverit. Cassiodor.

§. 7. Direct. 5. Be acquainted with the Temptations which most endanger you in your place, and go continually armed against them with the true remedies, and with Christian Faith, and watchfulness and resolution. You will keep your innocency, and consequently your God, if you see to it that you love nothing better than that which you should keep. No Man will chaffer away his Commodity for any thing which he judgeth to be worse and less useful to him. Know well how little Friends or Wealth will do for you in comparison of God, and you will not hear them when they speak against God, (Luke 14. 26. 17. 33.) When one of his Friends was importunate with P. Rutilius to do him an unjust courtesie, and angrily said, [What use have I of thy friendship, if thou wilt not grant my request?] he answered him [And what use have I of thy friendship, if for thy sake I must be urged to do unjustly?] It is a grave saying of Plutarch, Pulchrum quidem est justitia regnum adipisci: pulchrum etiam regno justitiam anteponere: Nam virtus alterum sibi illustrem reddidit, ut regno dignus judicaretur; alterum ita magnum ut id contemneret. Plut. in Lycurg. & Numa. But specially remember who hath said, What shall it profit a Man to win all the World, and lose his Soul? And that Temptations surprize you not, be deliberate and take time, and be not too hasty in owning or opposing a cause or Person, till you are well informed; As Seneca saith of Anger, so say I here, Dandum semper est tempus: Veritatem enim dies aperit. Potest pœna dilata exigi; cum non potest exacta revocari. It's more than a shame to say, I was mistaken, when you have done another Man wrong by your Temerity.

Dir. 5.

Chilon in Laert. p. 43. (mihi) saith, Sibi non esse conscium in tota vita ingratitudinis: una tamen re se modice moveri, quod cum semel inter amicos illi judicandum esset, neque contra jus agere aliquid vellet, persuaserit amico judicium a se provocaret, ut si nimirum utrumque & legem & amicum servaret. This was his injustice of which he repented.

CHAP. V.

The Duty of Physicians.

NEither is it my purpose to give any occasion to the learned Men of this honourable Profession, to say that I intermeddle in the mysteries of their Art. I shall only tell them, and that very briefly, what God and Conscience will expect from them.

Dir. 31. §. 1. Direct. 1. Be sure that the saving of Mens lives and health, be first and chiefly in your Intention, before any gain or honour of your own. I know you may lawfully have respect, both to your maintenance and honour; But in a second place only, as a far lesser good than the lives of Men. If Money be your ultimate end, you debase your Profession, which as exercised by you, can be no more to your honour or comfort, than your own intention carrieth it. It is more the End than the Means, that ennobleth or debaseth Men; If Gain be the thing which you chiefly seek, the matter is not very great (to you) whether you seek seek it by medicining Men or Beasts, or by lower means than either of them. To others indeed it may be a very great benefit, whose lives you have been a means to save; but to your selves it will be no greater, than your intention maketh it. If the honouring and pleasing God, and the publick good, and the saving of Mens Lives, be really first and highest in your desires, then it is God that you serve in your profession: Otherwise you do but serve your selves. And take heed lest you here deceive your selves, by thinking that the good of others is your end, and dearer to you than your gain, because your reason telleth you it is better, and ought to be preferred: For God and the publick good are not every Mans end, that can speak highly of them, and say they should be so. If most of the World do practically prefer their carnal Prosperity even before their Souls, while they speak of the World as disgracefully as others, and call it Vanity; how much more easily may you deceive your selves, in preferring your gain before Mens Lives, while your tongue can speak contemptuously of gain.

Dir. 2. §. 2. Direct. 2. Be ready to help the poor as well as the rich: Differencing them no farther than the publick good requireth you to do. Let not the health or lives of Men be neglected, because they have no money to give you: Many poor People perish for want of means, because they are discouraged from going to Physicians, through the emptiness of their Purses: In such a case you must not only help them gratis, but also appoint the cheapest Medicines for them.

Dir. 3. §. 3. Direct. 3. Adventure not unnecessarily on things beyond your skill, but in difficult cases perswade your patients to use the help of abler Physicians, if there be any to be had, though it be against your own commodity. So far should you be from envying the greater esteem and practice of abler Men, and from all unworthy aspersions or detraction, that you should do your best to perswade all your Patients to seek their Counsels, when ever the danger of their lives or health requireth it. For their Lives are of greater value than your gain. So abstruse and conjectural is the business of your profession, that it requireth very high accomplishments to be a Physician indeed! If there concur not, 1. A natural strength of Reason and Sagacity. 2. And a great deal of Study, Reading, and acquaintance with the way of excellent Men. 3. And considerable experience of your own, to ripen all this; you have cause to be very fearful and cautelous in your practice, lest you sacrifice Mens Lives to your ignorance and temerity. And one Man that hath all these accomplishments, in a high degree may do more good, than a Hundred smatterers: And when you are conscious of a defect in any of these, should not Reason and Conscience command you, to perswade the sick, to seek out to those that are abler than your selves? Should Mens lives be hazzarded, that you may get by it a little sordid gain? It is so great a doubt whether the ignorant unexperienced sort of Physicians, do cure or hurt more, that it hath brought the vulgar in many Countries, into a contempt of Physicians.

As over-valuing Mens own understandings in Religion, is the ruine of Souls and Churches; so over-valuing Mens raw unexperienced apprehensions in Physick costeth multitudes their Lives. I know not whether a few able, judicious, experienced Physicians cure more or the rest kill more?

Dir. 4. §. 4. Direct. 4. Depend on God for your direction and success. Earnestly crave his help and blessing in all your undertakings. Without this all your labour is in vain. How easie is it for you, to overlook some one thing, among a multitude that must be seen, about the Causes and Cure of Diseases; unless God shall open it to you, and give you a clear discerning, and an universal observation? And when Twenty considerable things are noted, a Mans Life may be lost, for want of your discerning one point more. What need have you of the help of God, to bring the fittest remedies to your memory? And much more to bless them when they are administred? As the experience of your daily practice may inform you (where Atheism hath not made Men fools.

§. 5. Direct. 5. Let your continual observation of the fragility of the flesh, and of Mans mortality, make you more spiritual than other Men, and more industrious in preparing for the Life to come, and greater contemners of the vanities of this World. He that is so frequently among the sick, and a spectator of the dead and dying, is utterly unexcusable if he be himself unprepared, for his sickness or for death. If the Heart be not made better, when you almost dwell in the house of mourning, it is a bad and deplorate Heart indeed. It is strange that Physicians should be so much suspected of Atheism as commonly they are; and Religio medici should be a word that signifieth irreligiousness; sure this conceit was taken up in some more irreligious Age or Country; for I have oft been very thankful to God, in observing the contrary, even how many excellent pious Physicians there have been in most Countries where the purity of Religion hath appeared, and how much they promoted the work of Reformation, (such as Crato, Platerus, Erastus, and abundance more that I might name;) and in this Land and Age, I must needs bear witness, that I have known as many Physicians religious proportionably as of any one Profession, except the Preachers of the Gospel. But as no Men are more desperately wicked, than those that are wicked after pious education, and under the most powerful means of their reformation; so it is very like that those Physicians that are not truly good are very bad; because they are bad against so much light, and so many warnings; and from some of these it's like this censorious Proverb came. And indeed Mans nature is so apt to be affected with things that are unusual, and to lose all sense of things that are grown common, that no Men have more need to watch their Hearts, and be afraid of being hardened, than those that are continually under the most quickning helps and warnings. For it is very easie to grow customary and senseless under them; and then the danger is, that there are no better means remaining, to quicken such a stupid hardened Heart. Whereas those that enjoy such helps but seldom, are not so apt to lose the sense and benefit of them. The sight of a sick or dying Man, doth usually much awaken those that have such sights but seldom; but who are more hardened than Soldiers and Seamen, that live continually as as among the dead? When they have twice or thrice seen the field covered with Mens Carkasses, they usually grow more obdurate than any others. And this is it that Physicians are in danger of, and should most carefully avoid. But certainly an Atheistical or ungodly Physician, is unexcusably blind. To say, as some do, that they study nature so much, that they are carried away from God; is as if you should say, [They study the work so much, that they forget the Workman;] or [They look so much on the Book, that they overlook the Sense;] or that [They study Medicine so much, that they forget both the Patient and his Health.] To look into Nature and not see God, is as to see the Creatures, and not the light by which we see them; or to see the Trees and Houses, and not to see the Earth that beareth them. For God is the Creating, Conserving, Dirigent, Final cause of all. Of him and through him and to him are all things; He is all in all. And if they know not that they are the Subjects of this God, and have immortal Souls, they are ill proficients in the study of Nature, that know no better the nature of Man. To boast of their acquisitions in other Sciences, while they know not what a Man is, or what they are themselves, is little to the honour of their understandings. You that live still as in the sight of death, should live as in the sight of another World, and excel others in spiritual Wisdom and Holiness and

Dir. 5.

Sobriety, as your advantages by these quickning helps excel.

Dir. 6. §. 6. Direct. 6. Exercise your Compassion and Charity to Mens Souls, as well as to their Bodies; and speak to your Patients, such words as tend to prepare them for their change. You have excellent opportunities, if you have hearts to take them. If ever Men will hear, it is when they are sick; and if ever they will be humbled and serious, it is when the approach of death constraineth them. They will hear that counsel now with patience, which they would have despised in their health. A few serious words about the danger of an unregenerate state, and the necessity of Holiness, and the use of a Saviour, and the everlasting state of Souls, for ought you know, may be blest to their Conversion and Salvation. And it is much more comfortable for you to save a Soul, than cure the Body. Think not to excuse your selves by saying, It is the Pastors duty: For though it be theirs ex officio, it is yours also, ex charitate. Charity bindeth every Man, as he hath opportunity to do good to all; and especially the greatest good. And God giveth you opportunity, by casting them in your way: The Priest and Levite that past by the wounded Man, were more to be blamed for not relieving him, than those that never went that way, and therefore saw him not, Luk. 10. 32. And many a Man will send for the Physician, that will not send for the Pastor: And many a one will hear the Physician that will despise the Pastor. As they reverence their Landlords, because they hold their estates from them, so do they the Physician, because they think they can do much to save their Lives. And, alas, in too many places the Pastors either mind not such work, or are insufficient for it; or else stand at odds and distance from the People: So that there is but too much need of your charitable help. Remember therefore that he that converteth a sinner from the error of his way, shall save a soul from death, and shall hide a multitude of sins, Jam. 5. 20. Remember that you are to speak to one that is going into another World, and that must be saved now or never! And that all that ever must be done for his Salvation must be presently done, or it will be too late. Pity humane Nature, and harden not your Hearts against a Man in his extream necessity. O speak a few serious words for his Conversion (if he be one that needs them) before his Soul be past your help, in the World from which there is no return.

CHAP. VI.

Directions to School-Masters about their Duty for their Childrens Souls.

PAssing by all your Grammatical employment, I shall only leave you these brief Directions, for the higher and more noble exercises of your Profession.

Dir. 1. §. 1. Direct. 1. Determine first rightly of your end; and then let it be continually in your eye, and let all your endeavours be directed in order to the attainment of it. If your end be chiefly your own Commodity or Reputation, the means will be distorted accordingly, and your labours perverted, and your calling corrupted, and embased (to your selves,) by your perverse intentions. See therefore, 1. That your ultimate end, be the pleasing and glorifying of God. 2. And this by promoting the publick good, by fitting youth for publick service. And 3. Forming their minds to the love and service of their Maker. 4. And furthering their Salvation, and their welfare in the World. These noble designs will lift up your minds, to an industrious and cheerful performance of your duties! He that seeketh great and heavenly things, will do it with great resolution and alacrity! When any drowsiness, creeping pace, and deceitful superficial humours, will satisfie him that hath poor and selfish ends. As God will not accept your labours as any service of his, if your ends be wrong, so he useth not to give so large a blessing, to such Mens labours as to others.

§. 2. Direct 2. Understand the excellency of your calling, and what fair opportunities you have to promote those noble ends; and also how great a charge you undertake; that so you may be kept from sloth and superficialness, and may be quickned to a diligent discharge of your undertaken trust. 1. You have not a charge of Sheep or Oxen, but of rational Creatures. 2. You have not the care of their Bodies, but of their Minds: You are not to teach them a Trade to liveby only in the World, but to inform their Minds with the knowledge of their Maker, and to cultivate their Wits, and advance their Reason, and fit them for the most Man-like Conversations. 3. You have them not (as Pastors) when they are hardened in sin by prejudice and long custom; but you have the tenderest twigs to bow, and the most tractable age to tame: You have Paper to write on, (not wholly white, but that) which hath the fewest blots and lines to be expunged. 4. You have them not as Volunteers, but as obliged to obey you, and under the correction of the Rod; which with tender age is a great advantage. 5. You have them not only for your auditors in a general Lecture (as Preachers have them at a Sermon:) but in your neerest converse, where you may teach them as particularly as you please, and examine their profiting, and call them daily to account. 6. You have them not once a Week (as Preachers have them) but all the Week long, from day to day, and from morning until night. 7. You have them at that age, which doth believe their Teachers, and take all upon trust, before they are grown up to self-conceitedness, and to contradict and quarrel with their Teachers (as with their Pastors they very ordinarily do.) All these are great advantages to your ends. Dir. 2.

§. 3. Direct. 3. Labour to take pleasure in your work, and make it as a recreation, and take heed of a weary or diverted Mind. 1. To this end consider often what is said above; think on the excellency of your ends, and of the worth of Souls, and of the greatness of your advantages. 2. Take all your Scholars as committed to your charge by Jesus Christ: As if he had said to you; Take these whom I have so dearly bought, and train them up for my Church and Service. 3. Remember what good one Scholar may do, when he cometh to be ripe for the service of the Church or Commonwealth! How many Souls some of them may be a means to save. Or if they be but fitted for a private Life, what blessings may they be to their Families and Neighbours! And remember what a joyful thing it will be, to see them in Heaven with Christ for ever! How cheerfully should such excellent things be sought? If you take pleasure in your work, it will not only be an ease and happiness to your selves, but greatly further your diligence and success. But when Men have a base esteem of their employment, and look at Children as so many Swine or Sheep, or have some higher matters in their eye, and make their Schools but the way to some preferment, or more desired life, then usually they do their work deceitfully, and any thing will serve the turn, because they are weary of it, and because their heaats are somewhere else. Dir. 3.

Many of the greatest Divines have given God great thanks for their School-masters, and left their names on record with honour, as Calvin did by Corderius, Beza by Melchior, Volmarius, &c.

§. 4. Direct. 4. Seeing it is Divinity that teacheth them the beginning, and the end of all their other studies, let it never be omitted or slightly slubbered over, and thrust into a corner: But give it the precedency, and teach it them with greater care and diligence, than any other part of learning; especially teach them the Catechism and the Holy Scriptures. If you think that this is no part of your work, few wise Men will choose such Teachers for their Children. If you say as some Sectaries, that Children should not be taught to speak holy words, till they are more capable to understand the Sense, because it is Hypocrisie, or taking the Dir. 4.

the Name of God in vain; I have anſwered this before; and ſhewed that words being the ſigns, muſt be learned in order to the underſtanding of the ſenſe, or thing that is ſignified: and that this is not to uſe ſuch words in vain, how holy ſoever, but to the proper end for which they are appointed. Both in Divine and Humane Learning, the Memories of Children muſt firſt be furniſhed in order to the furniſhing of their Underſtandings afterwards. And this is a chief point of the Maſters skill, that time be not loſt, nor labour fruſtrated. For the Memories of Children are as capacious as Mens of riper Age; and therefore they ſhould be ſtored early, with that which will be uſeful to them afterwards: But till they come to ſome maturity of Age, their Judgments are not ripe for Information, about any high or difficult points. Therefore teach them betimes the words of Catechiſms and ſome Chapters of the Bible; and teach them the meaning by degrees as they are capable. And make them perceive that you take this for the beſt of all their Learning.

Dir. 5. §. 5. Direct. 5. Beſides the Forms of Catechiſm, which you teach them, ſpeak often to them ſome ſerious words, about their Souls, and the Life to come, in ſuch a plain familiar manner, as tendeth moſt to the awakening of their Conſciences, and making them perceive how greatly what you ſay concerneth them. A little ſuch familiar ſerious Diſcourſe, in an interlocutory way, may go to their hearts, and never be forgotten; when meer Forms alone are lifeleſs and unprofitable. Abundance of good might be done on Children, if Parents and School maſters did well perform their parts in this.

Dir. 6. §. 6. Direct. 6. Take ſtrict account of their ſpending the Lords day! How they hear, and what they remember; and how they ſpend the reſt of the day. For the right ſpending of that day, is of great importance to their Souls! And a cuſtom of play, and idleneſs on that day, doth uſually debauch them, and prepare them for much worſe. Though they are from under your eye on the Lords day, yet if on Monday they be called to account, it will leave an awe upon them in your abſence..

Dir. 7. §. 7. Direct. 7. Pray with them, and for them. If God give not the increaſe by the dews of Heaven, and ſhine not on your labours, your planting and watering will be all in vain. Therefore Prayer is as ſuitable a means as Teaching, to do them good; and they muſt go together. He that hath a heart to pray earneſtly for his Scholars, ſhall certainly have himſelf moſt comfort in his labours; and it is likely that he ſhall do moſt good to them.

Dir. 8. §. 8. Direct. 8. Watch over them, by one another, when they are behind your backs, at their ſports or converſe with each other. For it is abundance of wickedneſs that Children uſe to learn and practiſe, which never cometh to their Maſters ears; eſpecially in ſome great and publick Schools. They that came thither to learn Sobriety and Piety of their Maſters, do oftentimes learn prophaneneſs, and ribaldry, and curſing, and ſwearing, and ſcorning, deriding, and reviling one another, of their ungracious School fellows. And thoſe Leſſons are ſo eaſily learnt, that there are few Children but are infected with ſome ſuch debauchery, though their Parents and Maſters watch againſt it; and perhaps it never cometh to their knowledge. So alſo for gaming and robbing Orchards, and fighting with one another, and reading Play-books and Romances, and lying, and abundance other Vices which muſt be carefully watched againſt.

Dir. 9. §. 9. Direct: 9. Correct them more ſharply for ſins againſt God, than for their dulneſs and failing at their Books. Though negligence in their Learning, is not to be indulged, yet ſmart ſhould teach them, eſpecially to take heed of ſinning; that they may underſtand that ſin is the greateſt evil.

Dir. 10. §. 10. Direct. 10. Eſpecially curb or caſhire the Leaders of Impiety and Rebellion, who corrupt the reſt. There are few great Schools but have ſome that are notoriouſly debauched; that glory in their wickedneſs; that in filthy talking, and fighting, and curſing, and reviling words, are the infecters of the reſt. And uſually they are ſome of the bigger ſort, that are the greateſt fighters, and maſter the reſt, and by domineering over them, and abuſing them, force them both to follow them in their ſin, and to conceal it. The correcting of ſuch, or expelling them, if incorrigible, is of great neceſſity to preſerve the reſt; for if they are ſuffered, the reſt will be ſecretly infected and undone, before the Maſter is aware. This cauſeth many that have a care of their Childrens Souls, to be very fearful of ſending them to great and Publick Schools, and rather chuſe Private Schools that are freer from that denger; it being almoſt of as great concernment to Children, what their Companions be, as what their Maſter is.

CHAP. VII.

Directions for Soldiers, about their Duty in Point of Conſcience.

THough it is likely that few Soldiers will read what I ſhall write for them, yet for the ſake of thoſe few that will, I will do as John Baptiſt did, and give them ſome few neceſſary Directions, and not omit them as ſome do, as if they were a hopeleſs ſort of Men.

§. 1. Direct 1. Be careful to make your peace with God, and live in a continual readineſs to die. This being the great duty of every Rational Man, you cannot deny it to be eſpecially yours, whoſe calling ſetteth you ſo frequently in the Face of Death. Though ſome Gariſon Soldiers are ſo ſeldom, if ever, put to fight, that they live more ſecurely than moſt other Men, yet a Soldier, as ſuch, being by his place ingaged to fight, I muſt fit my Directions to the ordinary condition and expectation of Men in that imployment. Dir. 1. It is a moſt irrational and worſe than beaſtly negligence, for any Man to live careleſly in an unpreparedneſs for Death, conſidering how certain it is, and how uncertain the time, and how unconceivably great is the change which it inferreth: But for a Soldier to be unready to die, who hath ſuch ſpecial reaſon to expect it, and who liſteth himſelf into a ſtate which is ſo near it, this is to live and fight like Beaſts, and to be Soldiers before you underſtand what it is to be a Chriſtian or a Man. Firſt therefore, make ſure that your Souls are regenerate and reconciled unto God by Chriſt; and that when you die, you have a part in Heaven; and that you are not yet in the ſtate of Sin and Nature: An unrenewed unſanctified Soul is ſure to go to Hell, by what death, or in what cauſe ſoever he dieth. If ſuch a Man be a Soldier, he muſt be a Coward or a Mad-man; if he will run upon Death, when he knoweth not whither it will ſend him, yea, when Hell is certainly the next ſtep, he is worſe than mad: But if he know and conſider the terribleneſs of ſuch a change, it muſt needs make him tremble when he thinks of dying. He can be no good Soldier that dare not die; and who can expect that he ſhould dare to die, who muſt be damned when he dieth? Reaſon may command a Man to venture upon death; but no reaſon will allow him to venture upon Hell. I never knew but two ſorts of Valiant Soldiers: The one was Boys, and bruitiſh ignorant Sots, who had no ſenſe of the concernments of their Souls; and the other (who only were truly valiant) were thoſe that had made ſuch preparations for Eternity, as, at leaſt, perſwaded them that it ſhould go well with them when they died. And many a debauched Soldier I have known, whoſe Conſcience hath made them Cowards, and ſhift or run away when they ſhould venture upon death, becauſe they knew they were unready to die, and were more afraid of Hell, than of the Enemy. He that is fit to be a Martyr, is the fitteſt Man to be a Soldier; he that is regenerate, and hath laid up his treaſure, and his hopes in Heaven, and ſo hath overcome the fears of death, may be bold as a Lion, and ready for any thing, and fearleſs in the greateſt perils. For, what ſhould he fear, who hath eſcaped Hell, and Gods diſpleaſure, and hath conquered the King of Terrors? But fear is the duty and moſt rational temper of a guilty Soul; and the more fearleſs ſuch are, the more fooliſh and more miſerable.

Dir. 2. §. 2. Direct. 2. Be ſure you have a warrantable Cauſe and Call. In a bad cauſe it is a dreadful thing to conquer, or to be conquered. If you conquer, you are a murderer of all that you kill; if you are conquered and die in the proſecution of your ſin, I need not tell you what you may expect. I know we are here upon a difficulty which muſt be tenderly handled; if we make the Soveraign Power, to be the abſolute, and only Judge, whether the Soldiers cauſe and call be good; then it would follow, that it is the duty of all the Chriſtian Subjects of the Turk, to fight againſt Chriſtianity as ſuch, and to deſtroy all Chriſtians when the Turk commandeth it; and that all the Subjects of other Lands, are bound to invade this or other ſuch Chriſtian Kingdoms, and deſtroy their Kings, when ever their Popiſh, or malicious Princes or States ſhall command them; which being intollerable conſequences, prove the Antecedent to be intollerable. And yet on the other ſide, if Subjects muſt be the Judges of their Cauſe and Call, the Prince ſhall not be ſerved, nor the common good ſecured, till the intereſt of the Subjects will allow them to diſcern the goodneſs of the Cauſe. Between theſe two intollerable conſequents, it is hard to meet with a juſt diſcovery of the mean. Moſt run into one of the extreams, which they take to be the leſs, and think that there is no other avoiding of the other. The grand errors in this, and an hundred like caſes, come from not diſtinguiſhing aright the caſe de eſſe, from the caſe de apparere, or cognoſcere, and not firſt determining the former, as it ought, before the latter be determined. Either the Cauſe which Subjects are commanded to fight in, is really lawful to them, or it is not. (Say not here importunely, Who ſhall judge? For we are now but upon the queſtion de eſſe.) If it be not lawful in it ſelf, but be meer robbery or murder, then come to the caſe of Evidence; either this evil is to the Subject diſcernable by juſt means, or not: If it be, I am not able for my part to juſtifie him from the ſin, if he do it, no more than to have juſtified the three witneſſes, Dan. 3. If they had bowed down to the Golden Calf, or Dan. 6. if he had forborn Prayer, or the Apoſtles, if they had forborn Preaching, or the Soldiers for apprehending and crucifying Chriſt, when their Superiors command them. For God is firſt to be obeyed and feared. But if the evil of the Cauſe be ſuch, as the Subject cannot by juſt and ordinary means diſcern, then muſt he come next to examine his Call; and a Voluntier unneceſſarily he may not be in a doutful Cauſe; it is ſo heinous a ſin to murder Men, that no Man ſhould unneceſſarily venture upon that which may prove to be Murder, for ought he knoweth. But if you ask what Call may make ſuch a doubtful action neceſſary, I anſwer, It muſt be ſuch as warranteth it, either from the end of the Action, or from the Authority of the Commander, or both. And from the end of the Action, the caſe may be made clear, That if a King ſhould do wrong to a Foreign Enemy, and ſhould have the worſe cauſe, yet if the revenge which that Enemy ſeeketh, would be the deſtruction of the King, and Countrey, or Religion; it is lawful, and a duty to fight in the defence of them. And if the King ſhould be the aſſailant, or beginner, that which is in offenſive War in him (for which he himſelf muſt anſwer) may be but a defenſive War in the commanded Subjects, and they be innocent; even on the High-way, if I ſee a ſtranger provoke another by giving him the firſt blow, yet I may be bound to ſave his life from the fury of the avenging party. But whether, or how far, the bare command of a Soveraign may warrant the Subjects to venture in a doubtful cauſe, (ſuppoſing the thing lawful in it ſelf, though they are doubtful) requireth ſo much to be ſaid to it, which civil Governours may poſſibly think me too bold to meddle with, that I think it ſafeſt to paſs it by; only ſaying, that there are ſome caſes in which the Ruler is the only competent Judge, and the doubts of the Subject are ſo unreaſonable, that they will not excuſe the ſin of his diſobedience; and alſo, that the degree of the doubt is oft very conſiderable in the caſe. But ſuppoſe the cauſe of the War be really lawful in it ſelf, and yet the Subject is in doubt of it, yea, or thinketh otherwiſe; then is he in the caſe, as other Erroneous Conſciences are, that is, intangled in a neceſſity of ſinning, till he be undeceived, in caſe his Rulers command his ſervice. But which would be the greater ſin, to do it or not, the Ends and Circumſtances may do much to determine: But doubtleſs in true neceſſity to ſave the King and State, Subjects may be compelled to fight in a juſt Cauſe, notwithſtanding, that they miſtake it for unjuſt: And if the Subject have a private diſcerning Judgment, ſo far as he is a voluntary Agent, yet the Soveraign hath a publick determining Judgment, when a neglecter is to be forced to his duty. Even as a Man that thinketh it unlawful to maintain his Wife and Children, may be compelled lawfully to do it.

So that it is apparent, that ſometime the Soveraigns Cauſe may be good, and yet an erroneous Conſcience may make the Soldiers cauſe bad, if they are Voluntiers, who run unneceſſarily upon that which they take for Robbery and Murder; and yet that the higher Powers may force even ſuch miſtakers to defend their Countrey, and their Governours, in a caſe of true neceſſity. And it is manifeſt that ſometimes the Cauſe of the Ruler may be bad; and yet the Cauſe of the Soldier good; and that ſometimes the Cauſe may be bad and ſinful to them both; and ſometime good and lawful unto both.

§. 3. Direct. 3. When you are doubtful, whether your Cauſe and Call be good, it is (ordinarily) ſafeſt to ſit ſtill, and not to venture in ſo dangerous a caſe, without great deliberation and ſufficient evidence to ſatisfie your Conſciences. Neander might well ſay of Solons's Law, which puniſhed them that took not one part or other in a Civil War or Sedition, Admirabilis autem illa atque plane incredibilis, quæ honoribus abdicat eum, qui orta ſeditione nullam factionem ſecutus ſit. No doubt, he is a culpable Neuter that will not defend his Governours and his Countrey, when he hath a Call: But it is ſo dreadful a thing to be guilty of the Blood, and Calamities of an unjuſt War, that a wiſe Man will rather be abuſed as a Neuter, than run himſelf into the danger of ſuch a caſe. Dir. 3. Neander in Chron. p. 104.

§. 4. Direct. 4. When neceſſity forceth you to go forth in a juſt War, do it with ſuch humiliation and unwillingneſs as beſeemeth one that is a Patient, a Spectator, and an Actor, in one of the foreſt of Gods temporal Judgments. Go not to kill Men, as if you went to a Cock-fight, or a Bear-baiting. Make not a ſport of a common Calamity; be not inſenſible of the diſpleaſure of God, expreſſed in ſo great a Judgment. What a ſad condition is it to your ſelves, to be imployed in deſtroying others: If they be good, How ſad a thought is it, that you muſt kill them? If they are wicked, how ſad is it that by killing them, you cut off all their hopes of Mercy, and ſend them ſuddenly to Hell? How ſad an Imployment is it, to ſpoil and undo the poor Inhabitants where you come? To caſt them into terrors, to deprive them of that which they have long been labouring for? To prepare for Famine, and be like a conſuming Peſtilence where you come. Were it Dir. 4.

but to see such Desolations, it should melt you into compassion; much more to be the Executioners your selves: How unsuitable a Work is it to the grace of Love. Though I doubt not but it is a service, which the Love of God, our Countrey, and our Rulers; may sometimes justifie and command, yet (as to the Rulers, and Masters of the business) it must be a very clear and great necessity that can warrrant a War. And, as to the Soldiers, they must needs go with great regret, to kill Men by thousands, whom they love as themselves. He that loveth his Neighbour as himself, and blesseth, and doth good to his persecuting Enemy, will take it heavily to be imployed in killing him, even when necessity maketh it his duty. But the greatest Calamity of War is the perniciousness of it to Mens Souls. Armies are commonly that to the Soul, as a City infected with the Plague is to the Body. The very Nurseries and Academies of Pride, and Cruelty, and Drunkenness, and Whoredom, and Robbery, and Licentiousness; and the bane of Piety, and common Civility and Humanity. Not that every Soldier cometh to this pass; the hottest Pestilence killeth not all: But oh! how hard is it to keep up a Life of Faith and Godliness, in an Army? The greatness of their business, and of their fears and cares, doth so wholly take up their minds and talk, that there is scarce any room found for the Matters of their Souls, though unspeakably greater. They have seldom leisure to hear a Sermon, and less to pray. The Lords day is usually taken up in Matters that concern their lives, and therefore can pretend necessity: So that it must be a very resolute, confirmed, vigilant Person, that is not alienated from God. And then it is a course of Life, which giveth great opportunity to the Tempter, and advantage to Temptations, both to Errors in Judgment, and vitiousness of Heart and Life: He that never tried it, can hardly conceive how difficult it is to keep up Piety and Innocency in an Army. If you will suppose that there is no difference in the Cause, or the Ends and Accidents; I take it to be much more desirable to serve God in a Prison, than in an Army: and that the condition of a Prisoner, hath far less in it to tempt the foolish, or to afflict the wise, than a Military. (Excepting those whose life in Garisons and lingring Wars, doth little differ from a State of Peace.) I am not simply against the lawfulness of War (nor as I conceive, Erasmus himself, though he saw the sinfulness of that sort of Men; and use to speak truly of the horrid wickedness and misery of them, that thirst for Blood, or rush on Wars without necessity.) But it must be a very extraordinary Army, that is not constituted of Wolves and Tygers; and is not unto common Honesty and Piety, the same that a Stews or Whore-house is to Chastity. And, Oh! How much sweeter is the Work of an honest Physician that saveth Mens lives, than of a Soldier, whose Vertue is shewed in destroying them? Or a Carpenters, or Masons, that adorneth Cities with comely Buildings, than a Soldiers that consumeth them by fire!

And though I ignore not that it is a much more fashionable and celebrated practice in young Gentlemen to kill Men, than to cure them; and that mistaken Mortals think it to be the noblest exercise of Virtue, to destroy the noblest Workmanship of Nature, (and indeed in some few cases, the requisiteness and danger of destructive Valour, may make its Actions become a virtuous Patriot) yet when I consider the Character given of our great Master and Exemplar, that he went about doing good, and healing all manner of Sicknesses ——I cannot but think such an Imployment worthy of the very noblest of his Disciples. Mr. Boyles Experiment. Philos. p. 303, 304.

Dir. 5. §. 5. Direct. 5. Be sure first, that your Cause be better than your lives, and then resolve to venture your lives for them. It is the hazarding of your lives, which in your Calling you undertake: And therefore be not unprepared for it; but reckon upon the worst, and be ready to undergo what ever you undertake. A Soldiers Life is unfit for one that dare not die. A Coward is one of the most pernicious Murderers: He verifieth Christs saying in another sense, He that saveth his life shall lose it. While Men stand to it, it is usually but few that die; because they quickly daunt the Enemy, and keep him on the defensive Part; but when once they rout, and run away, they are slain on heaps, and fall like Leaves in a windy Autumn. Every Coward that pursueth them is imboldned by their fear, and dare run them through, or shoot them behind, that durst not so near have looked them in the face, and maketh it his sport to kill a Fugative, or one that layeth down his Weapons, that would flie himself from a daring presence. Your cowardly fear betrayeth the cause of your King and Countrey; it betrayeth the lives of your Fellow Soldiers, while the running of a few affrighted Dastards, lets in ruine upon all the rest; and it casteth away your own lives which you think to save. If you will be Soldiers, resolve to conquer or to die. It is not so much skill or strength that conquereth, as boldness. It is fear that loseth the day, and fearlesness that winneth it. The Army that standeth to it, getteth the Victory, though they fight never so weakly: For if you will not run, the Enemy will. And if the lives of a few be lost by courage, it usually saveth the lives of many; (though Wisdom still is needful in the Conduct.) And if the cause be not worth your lives, you should not meddle with it.

§. 6. Direct. 6. Resolve upon an absolute obedience to your Commanders, in all things consistent with your obedience to God, and the Soveraign Power. Disobedience is no where more intolerable than in an Army; where it is often unfit for a Soldier to know the reason of his Commands; and where Self-conceitedness and Wilfulness is inconsistent with their Common Safety, and the lives of many may pay for the Disobedience of a few. If you cannot obey, undertake not to be Soldiers. Dir. 6.

§. 7. Direct. 7. Especially detest all Murmurings, Mutinies, Sidings, and Rebellions. For these are to an Army like violent Feavers to the Body, or like a Fire in a City; and would make an Army the greatest Plague to their King and Countrey. How many Emperours, Kings, and Commanders, have lost their Dignities and Lives, by the fury of mutinous inraged Soldiers: And how many Kingdoms and other Common-wealths have been thus over-thrown, and betrayed into the Enemies hand? And how many Thousands and Millions of Soldiers have thereby lost their Lives? In your discontents and murmuring Passions, you may quickly set the House on Fire over your Heads, and when you feel your misery repent too late. Passion may begin that which fruitless penitence must end. The Leaders of Mutinies may easily have many fair pretences to inflame an Army into discontents: They may aggravate many seeming Injuries; they may represent their Commanders as odious and unworthy, by putting an ill appearance on their Actions: But in the end it will appear, that it was their own advancement which they secretly aimed at, and the destruction of the present Government, or the Soldiers ruin which is like to be the effect. A mutinous Army is likest Hell of any thing I know among God's Creatures; and next Hell, there is scarce a worse place for their Commanders to be in. Dir. 7.

§ 8. Direct. 8. Use not your power or liberty to the robbing, or oppressing, or injury of any. Though Military Thieves and Oppressors, may scape the Gallows, more than others, they shall come as soon to Hell as any. If you plunder, and spoil, and tyranize over the poor People, under pretence of supplying your own wants, there is a God in Heaven that will hear their cries, and will avenge them speedily, though you seem to go scot-free for a time. You may take a pride in domineering over others, and Dir. 8.

and making your ſelves Lords by violence of other Mens Eſtates, and when you ſee none that will queſtion you for it, you may take that which you have moſt mind of: But the poor and oppreſſed have a juſt Defender, who hath a ſeverer puniſhment for you than the Sword or Gallows! And though he take you not in the very fact, and his ſentence is not preſently executed, yet be certain of it, that your day is coming.

Dir. 9. §. 9. Direct. 9. Take heed leſt cuſtom, and the frequency of Gods judgments, do harden your hearts into a reprobate ſtupidity. Many a Man that formerly by the ſight of a Corpſe, or the groanings of the ſick, was awakened to a ſerious thought of his latter end, when he cometh into an Army, and hath often ſeen the dead lie ſcattered on the Earth, and hath often ſcaped death himſelf, groweth utterly ſenſeleſs, and taketh blockiſhneſs to be valour, and cuſtom maketh ſuch warnings to be of no effect. You can ſcarce name a more ſtrange and lamentable proof, of the madding and hardening nature of ſin! That Men ſhould be moſt ſenſeleſs, when they are in the greateſt danger! And leaſt fear God, when they are among his dreadful judgments! And leaſt hear his Voice, when his Calls are loudeſt! And live as if they ſhould not die, when they look death ſo often in the face, and ſee ſo many dead before them! That they ſhould be moſt regardleſs of their endleſs Life, when they are neareſt it; and Senſe it ſelf hath ſuch notable advadtage to tell them of all this! What a monſtrous kind of ſottiſh ſtupidity is this? Think whither the Soul is gone when you ſee the Carkaſs on the Earth; and think where your own muſt be for ever.

Dir. 10. § 10. Direct. 10. Take heed of falling into drunkenneſs and ſenſuality, though Temptations and Liberty be never ſo great. It is too common with Soldiers, becauſe they are oft put to thirſt and wants, to think they may lawfully pour it in, when they come at it, without moderation or reſtraint: Even as many poor Men take a gluttonous meal for no ſin, becauſe they have ſo many days of hunger, ſo is it with ſuch Soldiers in their drink: Till drunkenneſs firſt have wounded their Conſciences, and afterwards grow common, till it have debauched and ſcared them; and then they have drowned Religion and Reaſon, and are turned ſottiſh miſerable Bruits.

Dir. 11. § 11. Direct. 11. If neceſſity deprive you of the benefits of Gods publick or ſtated Worſhip, ſee that you labour to repair that loſs, by double diligence in thoſe ſpiritual duties, which yet you have opportunity for. If you muſt march or watch on the Lords days, redeem your other time the more: If you cannot hear Sermons, be not without ſome profitable Book, and often read it; and let your Meditations be holy, and your Diſcourſes edifying. For theſe you have opportunities, if you have hearts.

Dir. 12. §. 12. Direct. 12. Take heed that Command or Succeſſes do not puff you up; and make you over-value your ſelves, and incline you to rebel againſt your Governours. What lamentable effects hath England lately ſeen of this! A ſilly half-witted Soldier, if he be but made a Captain, doth carry it as if he were wiſer than the Preachers, or the Judge! As if his dignity had added to his wit! When Victories have laid the power at Mens feet; and they think now that none is able to control them, how few are they that abuſe not ſuch ſucceſs to their undoing, and are not conquered by the pride of their own hearts, when they have conquered others? How ordinarily do they miſ expound the Providence of God, and think he hath put the Government into their hands, becauſe they have the ſtrength; and from the Hiſtories of former ſucceſsful Rebels; and the fairneſs of their opportunity encourage themſelves to rebel, and think they do but what is their duty? How eaſily do they juſtifie themſelves in thoſe unlawful deeds, whith impartial by-ſtanders ſee the evil of? And how eaſily do they quiet their Conſciences, when they have but power enough to raiſe up flatterers, and to ſtop the mouth of wholſome reprehenſion? How lamentably doth Proſperity make them drunk, and ſudden advancement overturn their brains! And their Greatneſs together with their Pride and Fury, preſerveth them from the acceſſes of Wiſdom, and of ſober Men, that ſo their malady may have no remedy: And there like a drunken Man, they rave a while, and ſpeak big words, and lay about them, and glory in the honour of a Peſtilence, that they can kill Men, and we muſt not ſpeak to them, till their heads are ſettled and they come to themſelves, and that is not uſually till the hand of God have laid them lower than it found them; and then perhaps they will again hear Reaſon, unleſs Pride hath left their Souls as deſperate, as at laſt it doth their Bodies or Eſtates. The experience of this age may ſtand on Record, as a Teacher to future Generations, what Power there is in great Succeſſes, to conquer both Reaſon, Religion, Righteouſneſs, Profeſſions, Vows, and all Obligations to God and Man, by puffing up the heart with Pride, and thereby making the Underſtanding drunken.

CHAP. VIII.

Advice againſt Murder.

§. 1. THough Murder be a ſin which humane Nature and Intereſt do ſo powerfully riſe up againſt, that one would think beſides the Laws of Nature, and the fear of temporal puniſhment, there ſhould need no other argument againſt it: And though it be a ſin which is not frequently committed, except by Soldiers, yet becauſe Mans corrupted heart is liable to it, and becauſe one ſin of ſuch a heinous nature, may be more miſchievous than many ſmall infirmities, I ſhall not wholly paſs by this ſin, which falls in order here before me. I ſhall give Men no other advice againſt it, than only to open to them, 1. The Cauſes. 2. The Greatneſs. And 3. The Conſequents of the Sin.

§. 2. 1. The Cauſes of Murder, are either the neareſt, or the more radical and remote. The opening of the neareſt ſort of Cauſes, will be but to tell you, how many ways of murdering the World is uſed to! And when you know the cauſe, the contrary to it, is the prevention. Avoid theſe cauſes, and you avoid the ſin.

§. 3. 1. The greateſt cauſe of the cruelleſt Murders, is Unlawful Wars. All that a Man killeth in an unlawful War, he murdereth; and all that the Army killeth, he that ſetteth them a work by Command or Counſel, is guilty of himſelf. And therefore, how dreadful a thing is an unrighteous War? And how much Men have need to look about them, and try every other lawful way, and ſuffer long, before they venture upon War? It is the skill and glory of a Soldier, when he can kill more than other Men. He ſtudieth it; he maketh it the matter of his greateſt care, and valour, and endeavour: He goeth through very great difficulties to accompliſh it; this is not like a ſudden or voluntary act. Thieves and Robbers kill ſingle Perſons; but Soldiers murder Thouſands at a time: And becauſe there is none at preſent to judge them for it, they waſh their hands, as if they were innocent, and ſleep as quietly, as if the avenger of Blood would never come. O what Devils are thoſe Councellers and Incendiaries to Princes and States, who ſtir them up to unlawful Wars!

§. 4. 2. Another cauſe and way of Murder, is by the Pride and Tyranny of Men in power. When they do it eaſily, becauſe they can do it; when their Will and Intereſt is their Rule, and their Paſſion ſeemeth a ſufficient warrant for their injuſtice. It is not only Neroes, Tiberiuſes, Domitians, &c. that are guilty of this crying crime; but O what Man that careth for his Soul, had not rather be tormented a Thou-

Thouſand Years, than have the Blood-guiltineſs of a famous applauded Alexander, or Cæſar, or Tamerlane, to anſwer for! So dangerous a thing it is to have Power to do miſchief, that Uriah may fall by a Davids guilt, and Criſpus may be killed by his Father Conſtantine. O what abundance of horrid Murders do the Hiſtories of almoſt all Empires and Kingdoms of the World afford us? The Maps of the Affairs of Greeks and Romans, of Tartarians, Turks, Ruſſians, Germans, of Heathens and Infidels, of Papiſts, and too many Proteſtants, are drawn out with too many Purple Lines, and their Hiſtories written in Letters of Blood. What write the Chriſtians of the Infidels, the Orthodox of the Arrians (Romans, or Goths, or Vandals,) or the moſt impartial Hiſtorians of the Mock-Catholicks of Rome, but Blood, Blood, Blood! how proudly and loftily doth a Tyrant look, when he telleth the oppreſſed Innocent that diſpleaſeth him, Sirrah, I will make you know my power! Take him, Impriſon him, Rack him, Hang him! Or as Pilate to Chriſt, Joh. 9. 10. Knoweſt thou not that I have power to crucifie thee, and have power to releaſe thee? I will make you know that your life is in my hand: Heat the Furnace ſeven times hotter, Dan. 3. Alas poor Worm! Haſt thou power to kill? So hath a Toad or Adder, or Mad Dog, or Peſtilence, when God permitteth it. Haſt thou power to kill? But haſt thou power alſo to keep thy ſelf alive? And to keep thy Corps from rottenneſs and duſt? And to keep thy Soul from paying for it in Hell? Or to keep thy Conſcience from worrying thee for it, to all Eternity? With how trembling a heart, and ghaſtly look wilt thou at laſt hear of this, which now thou glorieſt in. The Bones and Duſt of the oppreſſed Innocents, will be as great and honourable as thine; and their Souls perhaps in reſt and joy, when thine is tormented by infernal Furies. When thou art in Nebuchadnezzars glory, what a mercy were it to thee, if thou mighteſt be turned out among the Beaſts, to prevent thy being turned out among the Devils. If killing and deſtroying be the glory of thy greatneſs, the Devils are more honourable than thou, and as thou agreeſt with them in thy work and glory, ſo ſhalt thou in the reward.

§. 5. 3. Another moſt heinous cauſe of Murders, is, A malignant enmity againſt the godly, and a perſecuting deſtructive zeal. What a multitude of Innocents hath this conſumed! And what innumerable companies of holy Souls are ſtill crying for vengeance on thoſe Proſecutors? The enmity began immediately upon the fall, between the Womans and the Serpents ſeed. It ſhewed it ſelf preſently in the two firſt Men that were born into the World. A malignant envy againſt the accepted Sacrifice of Abel, was able to make his Brother to be his Murderer. And it is uſual with the Devil, to caſt ſome Bone of carnal Intereſt alſo between them, to heighten the malignant enmity. Wicked Men are all covetous, voluptuous, and proud; and the doctrine and practice of the godly, doth contradict them and condemn them; and they uſually eſpouſe ſome wicked intereſt, or engage themſelves in ſome ſervice of the Devil, which the Servants of Chriſt are bound in their ſeveral places and callings to reſiſt. And then not only this reſiſtance, though it be but by the humbleſt words or actions, yea, the very conceit that they are not for their intereſt and way, doth inſtigate the befooled World to perſecution! And thus an Iſhmael, and an Iſaac, an Eſau, and a Jacob, a Saul, and a David, cannot live together in Peace. Gal. 4. 29. But as then he that was born after the fleſh, perſecuted him that was born after the ſpirit, even ſo it is now. Saul's intereſt maketh him think it juſt to perſecute David; and religiouſly he bleſſeth thoſe that furthered him! 1 Sam. 23. 21. Bleſſed be ye of the Lord, for ye have compaſſion on me. He juſtifieth himſelf in murdering the Prieſts, becauſe he thought that they helped David againſt him; and Doeg ſeemeth but a dutiful Subject, in executing his bloody command, 1 Sam. 22. And Shimei thought he might boldly curſe him, 2 Sam. 16. 7, 8. And he could ſcarce have charged him with more odious ſin, than to be [A Bloody Man, and a Man of Belial.] If the Prophet ſpeak againſt Jereboams Political Religion, he will ſay, Lay hold on him! 1 King. 13. 4. Even Aſa will be raging wrathful, and impriſon the Prophet that reprehendeth his ſin, 2 Chron. 16. 10. Ahab will feed Michaiah in a Priſon with the Bread and Water of affliction, if he contradict him, 1 King. 22. 27. And even Jeruſalem killed the Prophets, and ſtoned them, which were ſent to gather them under the gracious wing of Chriſt, Matth. 23. 37. Which of the Prophets did they not perſecute? Acts 7. 52. And if you conſider, but what ſtreams of Blood ſince the death of Chriſt, and his Apoſtles, have been ſhed for the ſake of Chriſt and Righteouſneſs, it will make you wonder, that ſo much cruelty can conſiſt with humanity, and Men and Devils ſhould be ſo like! The ſame Man, as Paul, as ſoon as he ceaſeth to ſhed the blood of others, muſt look in the ſame way to loſe his own. How many Thouſands were murdered by Heathen Rome, in the Ten Perſecutions? And how many by the Arrian Emperors and Kings! And how many by more Orthodox Princes in their particular diſtaſtes! And yet how far hath the pretended Vicar of Chriſt out-done them all! How many Hundred Thouſands of the Albigenſes, Waldenſes, and Bohemians, hath the Papal rage conſumed? Two Hundred Thouſand the Iriſh murdered in a little ſpace; to outgo, the Thirty or Forty Thouſand which the French Maſſacre made an end of! The Sacrifices offered by their fury in the flames, in the Marian perſecution here in England, were nothing to what one day hath done in other parts. What Volumes can contain the particular Hiſtories of them? What a Shambles was their Inquiſition in the Low Countries? And what is the employment of it ſtill! So that a doubting Man would be inclined to think, that Papal Rome is the murderous Babylon, that doth but conſider, How drunken ſhe is with the Blood of the Saints, and the Martyrs of Jeſus; and that the Blood of Saints, will be found in her day of tryal? Revel. 17. 6. & 18. 24. If we ſhould look over all the reſt of the World, and reckon up the Torments and Murders of the Innocent, (in Japan, and moſt parts of the World, where ever Chriſtianity came) it may increaſe your wonder, that Devils and Men are ſtill ſo like! Yea, though there be as loud a teſtimony in Humane Nature againſt this Bloodineſs, as almoſt any ſin whatſoever; and though the names of Perſecutors always ſtink to following Generations, how proudly ſoever they carried it for a time; and though one would think a Perſecutor ſhould need no cure, but his own Pride, that his Name may not be left as Pilates in the Creed, to be odious in the Mouths of the Ages that come after him; yet for all this, ſo deep is the enmity, ſo potent is the Devil; ſo blinding a thing is ſin, and intereſt, and paſſion, that ſtill one Generation of Perſecutors doth ſucceed the others; and they kill the preſent Saints, while they honour the dead ones, and build them Monuments, and ſay, If we had lived in the days of our Fathers, we would not have been partakers with them in the Prophets Blood. Read well Matth. 23. 29. to the end. What a Sea of Righteous Blood hath Malignity and Perſecuting Zeal drawn out?

§. 6. 4. Another cauſe of Murder is, raſh and unrighteous Judgment. When Judges are ignorant, or partial, or perverted by Paſſion, or Prejudice, or reſpect of Perſons: But though many an Innocent hath ſuffered this way, I hope among Chriſtians, this is one of the rareſt Cauſes.

§. 7. 5. Another way of Murder is by Oppreſſion and Uncharitableneſs; when the poor are kept deſtitute of neceſſaries to preſerve their Lives: Though few of them die directly of Famine, yet Thouſands of of them die of thoſe ſickneſſes which they contract, by unwholſome food. And all thoſe are guilty of their Death, either that cauſe it by Oppreſſion, or that relieve them not, when they are able and obliged to it, Jam. 5. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5.

§. 8. 6. Another way and cauſe of Murder is, by Thieves and Robbers that do it to poſſeſs themſelves of that which is another Mans; when Riotouſneſs or Idleneſs hath conſumed what they had themſelves, and Sloath and Pride will not ſuffer them to labour, nor Senſuality ſuffer them to indure want, then they will have it by right or wrong, what ever it coſt them. Gods Laws or Mans, the Gallows or Hell, ſhall not deter them; but have it they will, though they rob and murder, and are hanged and damned for it. Alas, How dear a purchaſe do they make! How much eaſier are their greateſt wants, than the wrath of God, and the pains of Hell?

§. 9. 7. Another cauſe of Murder is, Guilt and Shame. When wicked People have done ſome great diſgraceful ſin, which will utterly ſhame them, or undo them, if it be known, they are tempted to murder them that know it, to conceal the Crime, and ſave themſelves. Thus many a Whoremonger hath murdered her, that he hath committed Fornication with; and many a Whore hath murdered her Child (before the birth or after) to prevent the ſhame. But how madly do they forget the day, when both the one, and the other, will be brought to light? And the Righteous Judge will make them know, that all their wicked ſhifts will be their confuſion, becauſe there is no hiding them from him?

§. 10. 8. Another cauſe is, furious Anger, which maſtereth Reaſon, and for the preſent makes them mad; and Drunkenneſs which doth the ſame. Many a one hath killed another in his fury, or his drink; ſo dangerous is it to ſuffer Reaſon to loſe its Power, and to uſe our ſelves to a Bedlam courſe! And ſo neceſſary is it, to get a ſober, meek, and quiet Spirit, and mortifie and maſter theſe turbulent and beaſtly Vices.

§. 11. 9. Another cauſe of Murder is, Malice and Revenge! When Mens own wrongs or ſufferings are ſo great a matter to them, and they have ſo little learned to bear them, that they hate that Man that is the cauſe of them, and boil with a revengeful deſire of his ruine. And this ſin hath in it ſo much of the Devil, that thoſe that are once addicted to it, are almoſt wholly at his command! He maketh Witches of ſome, and Murderers of others, and Wretches of all! Who ſet themſelves in the place of God, and will do Juſtice as they call it, for themſelves, as if God were not juſt enough to do it! And ſo ſweet is Revenge to their furious Nature, (as the damning of Men is to the Devil) that revenged they will be, though they loſe their Souls by it: And the impotency and baſeneſs of their Spirits is ſuch, that they ſay, Fleſh and Blood is unable to bear it.

§. 12. 10. Another cauſe of Murder is, A wicked Impatience with near Relations, and a hatred of thoſe that ſhould be moſt dearly loved. Thus many Men and Women have murdered their Wives and Husbands, when either Adulterous Luſt hath given up their hearts to another, or a croſs, impatient, diſcontented Mind, hath made them ſeem intollerable burdens to each other; and then the Devil that deſtroyed their love, and brought them thus far, will be their teacher in the reſt, and ſhew them how to eaſe themſelves, till he hath led them to the Gallows, and to Hell. How neceſſary is it to keep in the way of duty, and abhor and ſuppreſs the beginnings of ſin?

§. 13. 11. And ſometimes Covetouſneſs hath cauſed Murder, when one Man deſireth another Mans Eſtate. Thus Ahab came by Naboths Vineyards to his coſt. And many a one deſireth the death of another, whoſe Eſtate muſt fall to him at the others death. Thus many a Child in heart is guilty of the murder of his Parents, though he actually commit it not; yea, a ſecret gladneſs when they are dead, doth ſhew the guilt of ſome ſuch deſires while they were living: And the very abatement of ſuch moderate Mourning, as natural affection ſhould procure (becauſe the Eſtate is thereby come to them as the Heirs) doth ſhew that ſuch are far from innocent. Many a Judas for covetouſneſs hath betrayed another! Many a falſe witneſs for covetouſneſs hath ſold anothers life; many a Thief for covetouſneſs hath taken away anothers life, to get his Money; and many a covetous Landlord hath longed for his Tenants death, and been glad to hear of it; and many a covetous Soldier hath made a trade of killing Men for Money. So true is it, That the love of Money is the root of all evil; and therefore is one cauſe of this.

§. 14. 12. And Ambition is too common a cauſe of Murder, among the great ones of the World. How many have diſpatched others out of the World, becauſe they ſtood in the way of their advancement? For a long time together, it was the ordinary way of riſing, and dying to the Roman and Greek Emperors; for one to procure the murder of the Emperor, that he might uſurp his Seat, and then to be ſo murdered by another himſelf; and every Soldier that looked for preferment by the change, was ready to be an inſtrument in the Fact. And thus hath even the Roman Seat of his Mock-holineſs, for a long time, and oft received its Succeſſors, by the Poyſon, or other murdering of the Poſſeſſors of the deſired place. And alas, how many thouſands hath that See devoured to defend its Univerſal Empire, under the name of the Spiritual Headſhip of the Church? How many unlawful Wars have they raiſed or cheriſhed, even againſt Chriſtian Emperors and Kings? How many thouſands have been Maſſacred? How many aſſaſſinated, as Henry the Third, and Henry the Fourth of France? Beſides thoſe that Fires and Inquiſitions have conſumed; and all theſe have been the Flames of Pride. Yea, when their Fellow-Sectaries in Munſter, and in England, (the Anabaptiſts and Seekers) have catched ſome of their proud Diſeaſe, it hath worked in the ſame way of blood and cruelty.

§. 15. But beſides theſe Twelve great ſins, which are the neareſt cauſe of Murder, there are many more which are yet greater, and deeper in nature, which are the Roots of all; eſpecially theſe.

1. The firſt cauſe, is the want of true Belief of the Word of God, and the Judgment and Puniſhment to come, and the want of the Knowledge of God himſelf: Atheiſm and Infidelity.

2. Hence cometh the want of the true Fear of God, and Subjection to his holy Laws.

3. The predominance of Selfiſhneſs in all the unſanctified, is the radical Inclination to Murder, and all the injuſtice that is committed.

4. And the want of Charity, or loving our Neighbour as our ſelves, doth bring Men near to the execution, and leaveth little inward reſtraint.

§. 16. By all this you may ſee how this ſin muſt be prevented! (And let not any Man think it a needleſs work! Thouſands have been guilty of Murder, that once thought themſelves as far from it as you.) 1. The Soul muſt be poſſeſſed with the Knowledge of God, and the true Belief of his Word and Judgment. 2. Hereby it muſt be poſſeſſed of the fear of God, and ſubjection to him. 3. And the love of God muſt mortifie the power of Selfiſhneſs. 4. And alſo much poſſeſs with a true love to our Neighbours, yea, and Enemies for his ſake. 5. And the Twelve fore-mentioned Cauſes of Murder, will thus be deſtroyed at the Root.

§. 17. 11. And ſome further help it will be to underſtand the greatneſs of this ſin. Conſider therefore, 1. It is an unlawful deſtroying, not only a Crea-

Creature of God, but one of his nobleſt Creatures upon Earth! Even one that beareth (at leaſt the Natural) Image of God. Gen. 9. 5, 6. And ſurely, your blood of your lives will I require; at the hand of every beaſt will I require it; and at the hand of Man; at the hand of every Mans Brother will I require the life of Man. Whoſo ſheddeth Mans blood, by Man ſhall his blood be ſhed; for in the Image of God made he Man. Yea, God will not only have the Beaſt ſlain that killeth a Man, but alſo forbiddeth there the eating of Blood, Verſ. 4. That Man might not be accuſtomed to cruelty.

2. It is the opening a door to confuſion, and all Calamity in the World: For if one Man may kill another without the ſentence of the Magiſtrate, another may kill him; and the World will be like Maſtiffs or Mad-dogs, turned all looſe on one another, kill that kill can.

3. If it be a wicked Man that is killed, it is the ſending of a Soul to Hell, and cutting off his time of repentance, and his hopes. If it be a godly Man, it is a depriving of the World of the Bleſſing of a profitable Member, and all that are about him of the benefits of his goodneſs, and God of the ſervice, which he was here to have performed. Theſe are enough to infer the dreadful conſequents to the Murderer, which are ſuch as theſe.

III. 1. It is a ſin which bringeth ſo great a guilt, that if it be repented of, and pardoned, yet Conſcience very hardly doth ever attain to peace and quietneſs in this World: And if it be unpardoned, it is enough to make a Man his own Executioner and Tormenter.

2. It is a ſin that ſeldom ſcapeth vengeance in this life: If the Law of the Land take not away their lives, as God appointeth, Gen. 9. 6. God uſeth to follow them with his extraordinary Plagues, and cauſeth their ſin to find them out; ſo that the Blood-thirſty Man doth ſeldom live out half his days. The Treatiſes purpoſely written on this Subject, and the experience of all Ages, do give us very wonderful Narratives of God's Judgments, in the detecting of Murderers, and bringing them to puniſhment. They go about a while like Cain, with a terrified Conſcience, afraid of every one they ſee, till ſeaſonable vengeance give them their reward; or rather ſend them to the place where they muſt receive it.

3. For it is eternal torment, under the wrath of God, which is the final puniſhment which they muſt expect, (if very great Repentance, and the Blood of Chriſt, do not prevent it.) There are few I think that by ſhame, and terror of Conſcience, are not brought to ſuch a Repentance for it, as Cain and Judas had, or as a Man that hath brought calamity on himſelf; and therefore wiſh they had never done it, becauſe of their own unhappineſs thereby (except thoſe Perſecutors or Murderers that are hardned by Error, Pride, or Power:) But this will not prevent the Vengeance of God in their damnation: It muſt be a deep Repentance proceeding from the love of God and Man, and the hatred of ſin, and ſenſe of Gods diſpleaſure for it, which is only found in ſanctified Souls! And alas, how few Murderers ever have the Grace, to manifeſt any ſuch Renovation and Repentance?

Tit. 2. Advice againſt Self-Murder.

THough Self-Murder be a ſin which Nature hath as ſtrongly inclined Men againſt, as any ſin in the World that I remember, and therefore I ſhall ſay but little of it; yet experience telleth us, That it is a ſin that ſome Perſons are in danger of, and therefore I ſhall not paſs it by.

The prevention of it lieth in the avoiding of theſe following Cauſes of it.

Dir. 1. §. 1. Direct. 1. The commoneſt cauſe is prevailing Melancholy, which is near to madneſs: Therefore to prevent this ſad Diſeaſe, or to cure it if contracted, and to watch them in the mean time, is the chief prevention of this ſin. Though there be much more hope of the Salvation of ſuch, as want the uſe of their Underſtandings, becauſe ſo far it may be called Involuntary, yet it is a very dreadful caſe, eſpecially ſo far as reaſon remaineth in any power. But it is not more natural for a Man in a Feaver to thirſt and rave, than for Melancholy, at the height, to incline Men to make away themſelves. For the Diſeaſe will let them feel nothing but miſery and deſpair, and ſay nothing, but, I am forſaken, miſerable, and undone! And not only maketh them a weary of their lives (even while they are afraid to die) but the Devil hath ſome great advantage by it, to urge them to do it; ſo that if they paſs over a Bridge, he urgeth them to leap into the Water: If they ſee a Knife, they are preſently urged to kill themſelves with it; and feel, as if it were, ſomething within them importunately provoking them, and ſaying, Do it, do it now; and giving them no reſt. In ſo much, that many of them contrive it, and caſt about ſecretly how they may accompliſh it.

Though the Cure of theſe poor People belong as much to others care as to their own, yet ſo far, as they yet can uſe their reaſon, they muſt be warned,

1. To abhor all theſe Suggeſtions, and give them not room a moment in their minds.

And 2. To avoid all occaſions of the ſin, and not to be neer a Knife, a River, or any Inſtrument which the Devil would have them uſe in the Execution.

And 3. To open their caſe to others, and tell them all, that they may help to their preſervation.

4. And eſpecially to be willing to uſe the means, both Phyſick, and ſatisfying Counſel, which tends to cure their Diſeaſe. And if there be any rooted cauſe in the mind that was antecedent to the Melancholy, it muſt carefully be looked to in the Cure.

§. 2. Direct. 2. Take heed of worldly trouble and diſcontent; for this alſo is a common Cauſe. Dir. 2. Either it ſuddenly caſteth Men into Melancholy, or without it of it ſelf overturneth their Reaſon, ſo far as to make them violently diſpatch themſelves; eſpecially, if it fall out in a mind where there is a mixture of theſe two Cauſes: 1. Unmortified love to any Creature. 2. And an impotent, and paſſionate Mind; their Diſcontent doth cauſe ſuch Unquietneſs, that they will furiouſly go to Hell for eaſe. Mortifie therefore firſt your worldly Luſts, and ſet not too much by an Earthly thing: If you did not fooliſhly overvalue your ſelves, or your Credit, or your Wealth or Friends, there would be nothing to feed your diſcontent: Make no greater a matter of the World than it deſerveth, and you will make no ſuch great matter of your Sufferings.

And 2. Mortifie your turbulent Paſſions, and give not way to Bedlam fury to overcome your Reaſon. Go to Chriſt, to beg and learn to be meek and lowly in Spirit, and then your troubled minds will have reſt, Matth. 11. 28, 29. Paſſionate Women, and ſuch other feeble ſpirited Perſons, that are eaſily troubled and hardly quieted and pleaſed, have great cauſe to bend their greateſt endeavours, to the curing of this impotent temper of mind, and procuring from God ſuch ſtrengthening Grace, as may reſtore their Reaſon to its power.

§. 3. Direct 3. And ſometimes ſudden paſſion it ſelf, without any longer diſcontent, hath cauſed Men to make away themſelves. Dir. 3. Mortifie therefore and watch over ſuch diſtracting Paſſions.

§. 4. Direct. 4. Take heed of running into the guilt of any heinous ſin. Dir. 4. For though you may feel no hurt from it at the preſent, when Conſcience is awakened, it is ſo diſquieting a thing, that it maketh many a one hang himſelf. Some grievous ſins are ſo tormenting to the Conſcience, that they give many no reſt, till they have brought them to Judaſes or Achitophel's end. Eſpecially take heed of ſinning againſt Conſcience, and of yielding to that for fear of Men, which God and Conſcience charge you to forbear. For the caſe of many a hundred as well as Spira, may tell you into what calamity this may caſt you. If Man be the maſter of your Religion, you have no Religion; for what is Religion, but the ſubjection of the Soul to God, eſpecially in the matters of his Worſhip: And if God be ſubjected to Man, he is taken for No-God. When you Worſhip a God that is inferior to a Man, then you muſt ſubject your Religion to the will of that Man. Keep God and Conſcience at peace with you, if you love your ſelves, though thereby you loſe your peace with the World.

Dir. 5. §. 5. Direct. 5. Keep up a Believing foreſight of the ſtate which Death will ſend you to: And then, if you have the uſe of Reaſon, Hell, at leaſt, will hold your hands, and make you afraid of venturing upon death. What Repentance are you like to have, when you die in the very act of ſin? And when an unmortified Luſt or Love of the World, doth hurry you to the halter by ſinful diſcontent? And what hope of Pardon without Repentance? How exceeding likely therefore is it, that whenever you put your ſelves out of your preſent pain and trouble, you ſend your Souls to endleſs torments. And will it eaſe you to paſs from proverty or croſſes into Hell? Or will you damn your Souls, becauſe another wrongeth you? O the madneſs of a ſinner? Who will you think hath wronged you moſt, when you feel Hell fire? Are you a weary of your lives, and will you go to Hell for eaſe? Alas, how quickly would you be glad to be here again, in a painfuller condition, than that which you were ſo weary of? yea, and to indure it a thouſand years? Suppoſe you ſaw Hell before your eyes? Would you leap into it? Is not time of Repentance a Mercy to be valued? Yea, a little reprieve from endleſs miſery is better than nothing. What need you make haſte to come to Hell? Will it not be ſoon enough, if you ſtay thence as long as you can? And why will you throw away your hopes, and put your ſelves paſt all poſſibility of recovery, before God put you ſo himſelf?

Dir. 6. §. 6. Direct. 6. Underſtand the wonders of Mercy revealed, and beſtowed on mankind in Jeſus Chriſt; and underſtand the tenour of the Covenant of Grace. The ignorance of this is it that keepeth a bitter taſte upon your Spirits; and maketh you cry out, Forſaken and Undone; when ſuch miracles of Mercy are wrought for your Salvation. And the ignorance of this is it that maketh you fooliſhly cry out. There is no hope; The day of grace is paſt; It is too late; God will never ſhew me mercy! When his word aſſureth all that will believe it, that who ever confeſſeth and forſaketh his ſins, ſhall have mercy! Prov. 28. 13. And if we confeſs our ſins, he is faithful and juſt to forgive. 1 John 1. 9. And that whoever will, may freely drink of the waters of life, Rev. 22. 17. And that whoever believeth in him, ſhall not periſh, but have everlaſting life. I have no other hope of my Salvation, but that Goſpel, which promiſeth Pardon and Salvation unto all, that at any time, repent and turn to God by Faith in Chriſt: And I dare lay my Salvation on the truth of this, that Chriſt never rejected any Sinner how great ſoever, that at any time in this Life, was truly willing to come to him, and to God by him, John 6. 37. He that cometh unto me, I will in no wiſe caſt out. But the malicious Devil would fain make God ſeem odious to the Soul, and repreſenteth Love it ſelf as our Enemy, that we might not love him! Deſpair is ſuch a part of Hell, that if he could bring us to it, he would think he had us half in Hell already: And then he would urge us to diſpatch our ſelves, that we might be there indeed, and our deſpair might be uncurable. How blind is he that ſeeth not the Devil in all this?

CHAP. IX.

Directions for the forgiving of Enemies, and thoſe that injure us; againſt Wrath, and Malice, and Revenge, and Perſecution.

§. 1. IT is not only actual Murder which is forbidden in the ſixth Commandment, but alſo all inordinate Wrath, and Malice and deſires of Revenge, and injuring the Perſon of our Neighbour or our Enemy: For ſo the Prophet and Judge of the Church hath himſelf expounded it, Mat. 5. 21, 22. Anger hath a hurting inclination, and Malice is a fixed Anger, and Revenge is the fruit of both or either of them. He that will be free from injurious actions, muſt ſubdue the Wrath and Malice which is their cauſe. Heart-murders and injuries muſt be carefully rooted up: For out of the heart proceed all evil thoughts and murders, &c. Matth. 15. 19. This is the fire of Hell on which an evil tongue is ſet, James 3. 6. And this muſt be quenched if you would be innocent.

§. 2. Direct. 1. See God in your neighbour, and love him for that of God which is upon him. If he be holy, he hath the Moral Image of God. If he be unholy, he hath his Natural Image as he is a Man. He is not only Gods Creature, but his Reaſonable Creature, and the Lord of his inferior works: And art thou a Child of God, and yet canſt not ſee him, and love him in his works? Without God he is nothing, whom thou art ſo much offended with: And though there be ſomewhat in him which is not of God, which may deſerve thy hatred, yet that is not his Subſtance or Perſon: Hate not, or wrong not that which is of God, It would raiſe in you ſuch a Reverence, as would aſſwage your Wrath, if you could but ſee God in him that you are diſpleaſed with. Dir. 1.

§. 3. Direct. 2. To this end obſerve more the good which is in your Neighbour, than the evil. Malice overlooketh all that is good and amiable, and can ſee nothing but that which is bad and deteſtable: It hearkeneth more to them that diſpraiſe and open the faults of others, than to thoſe that praiſe them and declare their virtues: Nor that Good and Evil muſt be confounded: But the Good as well as the Evil muſt be acknowledged. We have more uſe of our ſelves for the obſervation of their virtues than of their faults: And it is more our duty: And were it never ſo little good that is in them, the right obſerving of it, at leaſt would much diminiſh your diſlike, Dir. 2.

§. 4. Direct. 3. Learn but to love your Neighbour as your ſelf, and this will make it eaſie to you both to forbear him and forgive him. With your ſelf you are not apt to be ſo angry. Againſt your ſelf you bear no malice, nor deſire no revenge that ſhall do you hurt. As you are angry with your ſelf penitently for the faults you have committed, but not ſo as to deſire your own deſtruction, or final hurt; but with ſuch a diſpleaſure as tendeth to your recovery; ſo alſo muſt you do by others. Dir. 3.

Direct. 4. To this end be ſure to mortifie your ſelfiſhneſs. For it is the inordinate reſpect that Men have to themſelves, which maketh them aggravate the faults of all that are againſt them, or offend them. Be humble and ſelf-denying, and you will think your ſelves ſo mean and inconſiderable, that no fault can be very great, nor deſerve much diſpleaſure, meerly as it is againſt you. A proud ſelf-eſteeming Man is eaſily provoked, and hardly reconciled without great ſubmiſſion: Becauſe he thinketh ſo highly of himſelf, that he rhinketh heinouſly of all that is ſaid or done againſt him; and he is ſo over-dear to himſelf, that he is impatient with his adverſary. Dir. 4.

§. 5. Direct. 5. Be not your own Judge in caſes of ſettled malice or revenge; but let ſome impartial ſober by-ſtander be the Judge. For a ſelfiſh, paſſionate, diſtempered mind is very unlike to judge aright. And moſt Men have ſo much of theſe diſeaſes, that they Dir. 5.

are very unfit to be Judges in their own caſe. Ask firſt ſome wiſe impartial Man, whether it be beſt for thee to be malicious and revengeful againſt ſuch a one that thou thinkeſt hath greatly wronged thee, or rather to love him and forgive him.

Dir. 6. §. 6. Direct. 6. Take time to deliberate upon the matter, and do nothing raſhly in the heat of paſſion againſt another. Wrath and Malice will vaniſh, if you bring the matter into the light, and uſe but thoſe effectual Conſiderations which will ſhew their ſinfulneſs and ſhame; I ſhall therefore next here ſet down ſome ſuch Conſiderations, as are moſt powerful to ſuppreſs them.

Conſid. 1. § 7. Conſid. 1. Remember firſt, That whoever hath offended you, hath offended God by greater injuries, and if God forgive him the greater, why ſhould not you forgive the leſs? The ſame fault which he did againſt you, is a greater crime as againſt God, than as againſt you! And many a hundred more hath he committed; it's a ſmall matter to diſpleaſe ſuch a Worm as Man, in compariſon of the diſpleaſing of Almighty God; and ſhould not his Children imitate their Heavenly Father! Doth he remit the pains of Hell, and cannot you forbear your paſſionate revenge? Let me ask you, whether you deſire that God ſhould forgive him his ſins or not? (both that and all the reſt which he hath committed;) If you ſay, No, you are Deviliſh and inhumane, who would not have God forgive a ſinner; if you ſay, yea, you condemn, yea, and contradict your ſelves! While you ſay you would have God forgive him, and yet your ſelves will not forgive him; (I ſpeak not of neceſſary Correction but Revenge.)

Conſid. 2. §. 8. Conſid. 2. Conſider alſo that you have much more your ſelves to be forgiven by God, or you are undone for ever. There is no compariſon between other Mens offences, againſt you, and your offences againſt God; either for the number of them, or the greatneſs, or the deſert. Doſt thou owe to God Ten Thouſand Talents, and wilt thou lay hold on thy Brother for an hundred pence? See then thy doom, Matth. 18. 34. The Tormenters ſhall exact thy debt to God. Doth it beſeem that Man to aggravate or revenge his little injuries, who deſerveth damnation, and forfeiteth his Soul every day and hour? And hath no hope of his own Salvation, but by the free forgiveneſs of all his Sins?

Conſid. 3. §. 9. Conſid. 3. Either thou art thy ſelf a member of Chriſt or not! If not, thou art yet under the guilt of all the ſins that ever thou didſt commit. And doth it beſeem that Man to be ſevere and revengeful againſt others, that muſt for ever be damned for his own tranſgreſſions, if a ſpeedy converſion do not prevent it? Sure you have ſomewhat elſe to think on, than of your petty injuries from Men! But if thou be indeed a Member of Chriſt, thy ſins are all pardoned by the price of thy Redeemers Blood! And canſt thou feel the ſweetneſs of ſo great a mercy, and not feel a ſtrong obligation on thee, to forgive thy Brother? Muſt Chriſt be a Sacrifice for thy offences? And muſt thy Brother, who offended thee, be ſacrificed to thy wrath?

Conſid. 4. §. 10. Conſid. 4. Thou art not forgiven of God, if thou doſt not forgive. For, 1. If ever the Love of God and the Blood of Chriſt had come in power upon thy heart, they would undoubtedly have cauſed thee to forgive thy Brother. 2. Yea, God hath made thy forgiving others, to be a condition, without which he will not finally or plenarily forgive thee. Thou haſt no warrant to pray or hope for pardon upon any lower terms: But [Forgive us our treſpaſſes, as we forgive them that treſpaſs againſt us; For if ye forgive not men their treſpaſſes, neither will your Father forgive your treſpaſſes, Matth. 6. 14, 15. Likewiſe, (ſaith Chriſt) ſhall my heavenly Father do alſo unto you (even deliver you to the tormentors) if from your hearts ye forgive not every one his Brother their treſpaſſes, Matth. 18. 35. For he ſhall have judgment without mercy that hath ſhewed no mercy, and mercy rejoiceth againſt judgment, Jam. 2. 13.]

Conſid. 5. §. 11. Conſid. 5. Remember alſo that you have need of forgiveneſs from others, as well as they have need of it from you. Have you wronged none? Have you provoked none? Have you not paſſions which muſt be pardoned? And a nature which muſt be born with? Can ſo corrupt a Creature as Man is, be no annoyance to thoſe he liveth with? Sure all the Sins which burden your ſelf, and diſpleaſe the Lord; muſt needs be ſome trouble to all about you: And he that needeth pardon, is obliged more to pardon others.

Conſid. 6. §. 12. Conſid. 6. Nay, it is the unhappineſs of all mankind, that their corruptions will in ſome meaſure be injurious to all that they have to do with; and it is impoſſible for ſuch diſtempered ſinners to live together, and not by their miſtakes, or ſelfiſhneſs, or paſſions, to exerciſe the patience and forbearance of each other. Therefore you muſt either be malicious and revengeful againſt all mankind, or elſe againſt none on ſuch accounts as are common to all.

Conſid. 7. §. 13. Conſid. 7. Obſerve alſo how eaſily you can forgive your ſelves, though you do a Thouſand fold more againſt your ſelves, than ever any Enemy did. It is not their wrongs or offences againſt you, that you are in any danger of being damned for: You ſhall not ſuffer for their ſins, but for your own! In the day of judgment, it is not your ſufferings from others, but your own offences againſt God that will be charged upon you: And if ever you be undone, it will be by theſe! Men or Devils can never do that againſt you, which by every ſin you do againſt your ſelves! No Robber, no Oppreſſor, no Perſecutor, no Deceiver, can ever hurt you ſo much as you hurt your ſelves: And yet how gently do you take it at your own hands? How eaſily do you pardon it to your ſelves? How lovingly do you think of your ſelves? So far are you from malice or revenge againſt your ſelves, that you can ſcarce endure to hear plainly of your ſins. But are more inclined to bear malice againſt thoſe that do reprove you. Judge whether this be equal dealing, and loving your Neighbours as your ſelves?

Conſid. 8. §. 14. Conſid. 8. Conſider how great a crime it is, for a Worm to uſurp the authority of God, and cenſure him for not doing juſtice, and to preſume to anticipate his judgment, and take the Sword as it were out of his hands, as all do that will be their own avengers. It is the Magiſtrate and not you that beareth the Sword of publick Juſtice; and what he doth not, God will do in his time and way: Dearly beloved, avenge not your ſelves, but rather give place unto wrath; for it is written, Vengeance is mine, I will repay, ſaith the Lord. Therefore if thine enemy hunger feed him; if he thirſt give him drink: For in ſo doing thou ſhalt heap coals of fire on his head. Be not overcome of evil (that is, the evil that is done againſt you) But overcome evil with good: Rom. 12. 19, 20, 21. He that becometh a Revenger for himſelf, doth by his Actions as it were ſay to God, Thou art unjuſt, and doſt not do me juſtice, and therefore I will do it for my ſelf. And ſhall ſuch an impatient blaſpheming Atheiſt go unpuniſhed?

Conſid. 9. §. 15. Conſid. 9. Conſider how much fitter God is than you, to execute revenge and juſtice on your Enemies. He hath the higheſt authority, and you have none; He is impartial and moſt juſt, and you are unrighteous and perverted by ſelfiſhneſs and partiality. He is Eternal and Omniſcient, and ſeeth to the end, and what will be the conſequent; and therefore knoweth the fitteſt ſeaſon and degree; but you are ſhort ſighted Creatures, that ſee no further than the preſent day, and know not what will be to morrow, and therefore may be ignorant of an hundred things, which would ſtop you and change your Counſel if you had foreſeen them. He is moſt wiſe and good, and knoweth what is fit for every Perſon, and how to do good with as little hurt as may be in the doing of it: But you are ignorant of your ſelves, and blinded by intereſt and paſſion, and are ſo bad your ſelves, that you are inclined to do hurt to others. At leaſt, for ought you know, you may miſcarry in your paſſion, and come off with guilt and a wounded Conſcience; but you may be ſure that God will not miſcarry, but will do all in perfect Wiſdom, and Righteouſneſs and Truth.

Conſid. 10. §. 16. Conſid. 10. Do you not underſtand that your paſſion, malice and revenge, 1. Do hurt your ſelves much more than they can hurt another. and 2. Much more than any other can hurt you? Would you be revenged on another! And will you therefore hurt your ſelves? The ſtone of reproach which you caſt at him, doth fly back into your face, and wound your ſelves. Do you feel that the fire of paſſion and malice, are like a ſcorching Feaver, which overthrow your health and quietneſs, and fill you full of reſtleſneſs and pain? And will you do this againſt your ſelves, becauſe another hath abuſed you? Did not he that offended you, do enough againſt you? If you would have more, why are you offended with him? If you would not have more, why do you inflict it on your ſelves? If you love diſquietneſs, why do you complain of him that doth diſquiet you! If you do not, why do you diſquiet your ſelves? And that much more thanhe can do? He that wrongeth you, toucheth but your Eſtates, or Bodies or Names; it may be but a blaſt of wind, the words of his mouth; and will you therefore wound your ſelves at the very heart? God hath lockt up your heart from others; none can touch that but your ſelves; their words, their wrongs cannot reach your Hearts, unleſs you open them the door, yea, unleſs it be your own doing! Will you take the Dagger which pierced but your skin, and pierce your own hearts with it, becauſe another ſo much wronged you? If you do, blame no one for it ſo much as your ſelves: Blame them for touching your Eſtates or Names, but blame your ſelves for all that is at your Hearts. And if you might deſire anothers hurt, it is folly to hurt your ſelves much more, and to do a greater miſchief to your ſelves, that ſo you may do a leſs to him: If you rail at him, or ſlander, or defame him, you touch but his Reputation; if you trouble him at Law, you touch but his Eſtate: If you beat him, it reacheth but to his fleſh! But the paſſion and guilt is a fire in your own hearts; and the wrath of God which you procure, doth fall upon your Souls for ever! I have heard but of a few that have ſaid openly [I am contented to be damned, ſo I may but be avenged:] But many Thouſands ſpeak it by their deeds. And O how juſt is their damnation, who will run into Hell that they may hurt another. Even as I have heard of ſome paſſionate Wives and Children, who have hanged themſelves, or cut their Throats, to be revenged on their Husbands or Children by grieving them.

Conſid. 11. §. 17. Conſid. 11. Remember that malice and hurtfulneſs are the ſpecial Sins and Image of the Devil. All ſin is from him as the Tempter: But ſome Sins are are ſo eminently his own, that they may be called the Nature and Image of the Devil; and thoſe are principally, Rebellion againſt God; Malignity or Enmity to good; Pride or Self-exaltation; Lying and Calumny; and Malice, Hurtfulneſs and Murder; theſe are above the ſins of meer ſenſuality or carnality, and moſt properly denominate Men (in whom they prevail) the Serpents Seed. I ſpeak but as Chriſt himſelf hath ſpoken, Joh 8. 44. to thoſe that were eſteemed the wiſeſt and moſt (ceremoniouſly) Religious of thoſe times; Ye are of your Father the Devil, and the luſts of your Father ye will do: He was a murderer from the beginning, and abode not in the truth, becauſe there is no truth in him: When he ſpeaketh a lye, he ſpeaketh of his own: for he is a lyar, and the father of it. And what pity is it that a Man that ſhould bear the Image of God, ſhould be transformed as it were into an incarnate Devil, by being like to Satan, and bearing his Image!

Conſid. 12. §. 18. Conſid. 12. The perſon that you are angry with, is either a Child of God, or of the Devil, and one that muſt live either in Heaven or Hell. If he be a Child of God, will not his Fathers Intereſt and Image reconcile you to him? Will you hate and hurt a Member of Chriſt! If you have any hope of being ſaved your ſelves, are you not aſhamed to think of meeting him in Heaven, whom you hated and perſecuted here on Earth? If there were any ſhame and grief in Heaven, it would overwhelm you there with ſhame and grief, to meet thoſe in the Union of thoſe bleſſed joys, whom you hated and abuſed. Believe unfeignedly that you muſt dwell with them for ever in the deareſt intimacy of Eternal Love, and you cannot poſſibly rage againſt them, nor play the Devils againſt thoſe, with whom you muſt live in Unity before God. But if they be wicked Men, and ſuch as muſt be damned (as malice will make you eaſily believe,) are they not miſerable enough already, in being the ſlaves of Sin and Satan? And will they not be miſerable time enough and long enough in Hell? Do you thirſt to have them tormented before the time! O cruel Men! O deviliſh Malice! Would you wiſh them more puniſhment than Hell fire? Can you not patiently endure to ſee a poor Sinner have a little proſperity and eaſe, who muſt live in everlaſting flames? But the truth is, malicious Men are ordinarily Atheiſts, and never think of another World; and therefore deſire to be the avengers of themſelves, becauſe they believe not, that there is any God to do it, or any future Judgment and Execution to be expected.

Conſid. 13. §. 19. Conſid. 13. And remember how near both he and you are to death and judgment, when God will judge righteouſly betwixt you both. There are few ſo cruelly malicious, but if they both lay dying, they would abate their malice and be eaſily reconciled, as remembring that their duſt and bones will lie in quietneſs together, and malice is a miſerable caſe to appear in before the Lord! Why then do you cheriſh your vice, by putting away the day of death from your remembrance? Do you not know that you are dying? Is a few more days ſo great a matter with you, that you will therefore do that becauſe you have a few more days to live, which elſe you durſt not do or think of? O hearken to the dreadful Trumpet of God, which is ſummoning you all to come away, and methinks this ſhould ſound a retreat to the malicious, from perſecuting thoſe with whom they are going to be judged. God will ſhortly make the third, if you will needs be quarrelling! Unleſs it be maſtiff Dogs or fighting Cocks, there are ſcarce any creatures but will give over fighting, if Man or Beaſt do come upon them, that would deſtroy or hurt them both.

Conſid. 14. §. 20. Conſid. 14. Wrathful and hurtful creatures are commonly hated and purſued by all: And loving, gentle, harmleſs, profitable creatures, are commonly beloved: And will you make your ſelves like wild beaſts or Vermine, that all men naturally hate and ſeek to deſtroy? If a Wolf, or a Fox, or an Adder, do but appear, every Man is ready to ſeek the death of him, as a hurtful creature, and enemy to mankind: But harmleſs creatures no one medleth with (unleſs for their own benefit and uſe:) So if you will be malicious hurtful Serpents that hiſs, and ſting, and trouble others, you will be the common hatred of the World, and it will be thought a meritorious work to miſchief you: Whereas if you will be loving, kind and profitable, it will be taken to be Mens intereſt to love you, and deſire your good.

Conſid. 15. §. 21. Conſid. 15. Obſerve how you unfit your ſelves for all holy duties, and communion with God, while you cheriſh wrath and malice in your hearts. Do you find your ſelves fit for Meditation, Conference or Prayer while you are in wrath? I know you cannot: It both both undiſpoſeth you to the duty, and the guilt affrighteth you, and telleth you that you are unfit to come near to God. As a Feaver taketh away a Mans appetite to his meat, and his diſpoſition to labour, ſo doth wrath and malice deſtroy both your diſpoſition to holy duties, and your pleaſure in them. And Conſcience will tell you that it is ſo terrible to draw near God in ſuch a caſe, that you will be readier (were it poſſible) to hide your ſelves as Adam and Eve, or fly as Cain, as not enduring the preſence of God. And therefore the Common-Prayer Book above all other ſins, enableth the Paſtor to keep away the malicious from the Sacrament of Communion; and Conſcience maketh many that have little conſcience in any thing elſe, that they dare not come to that Sacrament, while wrath and malice are in their breaſts: And Chriſt himſelf ſaith, Matth. 5. 23, 24, 25. If thou bring thy gift unto the Altar, and there thou remembreſt that thy brother hath ought againſt thee; Leave there thy gift before the Altar, and go thy way, firſt be reconciled to thy brother, and then come and offer thy gift. Agree with thine adverſary quickly while thou art in the way with him, leſt at any time the adverſary deliver thee to the Judge, and the Judge deliver thee to the Officer, and thou be caſt into Priſon, &c.

Conſid. 16. §. 22. Conſid. 16. And your ſin is aggravated, in that you hinder the good of thoſe that you are offended with, and alſo provoke them to add ſin to ſin, and to be as furious and uncharitable as your ſelves. If your Neighbour be not faulty, why are you ſo diſpleaſed with him? If he be, why will you make him worſe? Will you bring him to amendment by hatred or cruelty? Do you think one vice will cure another? Or is any Man like to hearken to the counſel of an Enemy? Or to love the words of one that hateth him? Is malice and fierceneſs an attractive thing? Or rather is it not the way to drive Men further, from their duty, and into ſin, by driving them from you who pretend to reform them by ſuch unlikely contrary means as theſe? And as you do your worſt to harden them in their faults, and to make them hate whatever you would perſwade them to: So at preſent you ſeek to kindle in their breaſts, the ſame fire of malice or paſſion which is kindled in your ſelves. As love is the moſt effectual way to cauſe love; ſo paſſion is the the moſt effectual cauſe of paſſion; and malice is the moſt effectual cauſe of malice; and hurting another is the powerfulleſt means; to provoke him to hurt you again if he be able: (And weak things are oft-times able to do hurt, when injuries boil up their paſſions to the height, or make them deſperate.) If your ſinful provocations fill him alſo with rage, and make him curſe, or ſwear, or rail, or plot revenge, or do you a miſchief, you are guilty of this ſin, and have a hand in the damnation of his Soul, as much as in you lyeth.

Conſid. 17. §. 23. Conſid. 17. Conſider how much fitter means there are at hand, to right your ſelf, and attain any ends that are good, than by paſſion, malice or revenge. If your end be nothing but to do miſchief, and make another miſerable, you are to the World as mad Dogs, and Wolves, and Serpents to the Countrey; and they that know you will be as glad when the World is rid of you, as when an Adder or a Toad is killed. But if your end be only to right your ſelves, and to reclaim your Enemy, or reform your Brother, fury and revenge is not the way. God hath appointed Governours to do juſtice in Common-wealths and Families, and to thoſe you may repair, and not take upon you to revenge your ſelves: And God himſelf is the moſt righteous Governour of all the World, and to him you may confidently refer the caſe, when Magiſtrates and Rulers fail you; and his Judgment will be ſoon enough and ſevere enough. And if you would rather have your Neighbour reclaimed than deſtroyed, it is love and gentleneſs that are the way, with peaceable Convictions, and ſuch Reaſonings as ſhew that you deſire his good! Overcome him with kindneſs, if you would melt him into repentance, and heap Coals of fire on his head. If thy enemy hunger, feed him; if he thirſt, give him drink; This is overcoming evil with good, (and not by beaſtly fury to overcome him,) but when you are drawn to ſinful paſſion and revenge, you are overcome of evil, Rom. 12. 19, 20, 21. If you would do good, it muſt be by good, and not by evil.

Conſid. 18. §. 24. Conſid. 18. Remember alſo how little you are concerned in the Words or Action of other Men towards you, in compariſon of your carriage to your ſelves and them. You have greater matters to mind, than your little Sufferings by them; even the preſerving of your innocency and your peace with God! It is your own actions, and not theirs that you muſt anſwer for. You ſhall not be condemned for ſuffering wrong, but for doing wrong you may. All their injuries againſt you, make you not the leſs eſteemed of God, and therefore diminiſh not your felicity; it is themſelves that they mortally wound, even to damnation, if they impenitently oppreſs another; keep your ſelves and you keep your Salvation, whatever others do againſt you.

Conſid. 19. §. 25. Conſid. 19. Remember that injuries are your tryals and temptations; God tryeth you by them, and Satan tempteth you by them! God tryeth your love and patience and obedience; that you may be perfect as your Heavenly Father is perfect, and may be indeed his Children, while you love your enemies, and bleſs them that curſe you, and do good to them that hate you, and pray for them that deſpitefully uſe you and perſecute you, Matth. 5. 44, 45. and being tryed you may receive the Crown of Life. Jam. 1. 3, 4, 12. And Satan on the other ſide is at work, to try whether he can draw you by injuries to impatiency, and to hatred, malice, revenge or cruelty, and ſo damn your Souls by the hurting of your Bodies. And when you foreknow his deſign, will you let him overcome? Hear every provoking word that's given you, and every injury that's done unto you, as if a meſſenger from Satan were ſent to buffet you, or to ſpeak that provoking language in his name; and as if he ſaid to you [I come from the Devil to call thee all that's nought and to abuſe thee, and to try whether I can thus provoke thee to paſſion, malice, railing or revenge, to ſin againſt God and damn thy Soul.] If you knew one came to you from the Devil on this errand, tell me how you would entertain him; And do you not know that this is indeed the caſe? Rev. 2. 10. Fear none of thoſe things which thou ſhalt ſuffer; behold the Devil ſhall caſt ſome of you into Priſon that ye may be tryed, and ye ſhall have tribulation ten days; be thou faithful to the death and I will give thee a Crown of Life. As trying impriſonments ſo all other trying injuries are from the Devil by Gods permiſſion, whoever be his inſtruments: And will you be overcome by him when you foreknow the the end of his attempts?

Conſid. 20. §. 26. Conſid. 20. Laſtly, ſet before you the example of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt: See whether he was addicted to wrath and malice, hurtfulneſs or revenge! If you will not imitate him, you are none of his Diſciples! nor will he be your Saviour. A ſerious view of the holy Pattern of love and meekneſs, and patience, and forgiveneſs, which is ſet before us in the Life of Chriſt, is a moſt powerful remedy againſt malice and revenge; and will cure it, if any thing will cure it. Phil. 2. 5, 6, 7. Let this mind be in you, which was alſo in Chriſt Jeſus, who being in the form of God—— yet made himſelf of no Reputation, and took upon him the form of a Servant. 1 Pet. 4. 1. Foraſmuch then as Chriſt hath ſuffered in the fleſh, arm your ſelves likewiſe with the ſame mind. 1 Pet. 2. 19, to the 25. For this is thank-worthy, if a Man for Conſcience toward God, endure grief ſuffering wrong.

wrongfully; For what glory is it, if when ye be buffeted for your faults, ye shall take it patiently? But if when ye do well and suffer for it, ye take it patiently, this is acceptable with God. For even hereunto were ye called: Because Christ also suffered for us, leaving us an ensample that ye should follow his steps; who did no sin, neither was guile found in his mouth: who when he was reviled, reviled not again; when he suffered he threatned not, but committed it to him that judgeth righteously. Think not to live and reign with Christ, if you will not follow him and suffer with him. It is impudent presumption and not faith, to look to be like the Saints in glory, while you are like the Devil in malice and cruelty.

CHAP. X.

Cases resolved about forgiving Injuries and Debts, and about Self-defence, and seeking Right by Law or otherwise.

THE Cases about forgiving, and revenging are many, and some of them difficult: I shall resolve those of ordinary use in our practice, and pass by the rest.

Quest. 1. § 1. Quest. 1. Is a Man bound to forgive all injuries and damages that are done him? If not, What injuries be they which every Man is obliged to forgive?

Answ. To both these Questions I briefly answer, 1. We must distinguish between a Crime or sin against God, and the common good; and an injury or damage to our selves. 2. And between publick Justice and private Revenge. 3. And between those damages which fall upon my self only, and those that by me redound to others (as Wife or Children, &c.) 4. And between the remitting of a punishment, and the remitting of reparations of my loss. 5. And between the various punishments to be remitted. He that will confound any of these shall sooner deceive himself and others, than resolve the doubts.

§. 2. Prop. 1. It frequently falleth out, that it is not in our power to remit the penalty of a crime; no not the temporal Penalty. For this is a wrong to God the Universal Governour, and God only can forgive it, and Man no farther than God hath commissionated him: Murder, Whoredom, Drunkenness, Swearing, &c. as they are sins against God, the Magistrate is bound to punish; and private Men to endeavour it by the Magistrate; And if it may be said that the Soveraign Ruler of a Nation, hath power to forgive such Crimes; the meaning is no more than this, 1. That as to the Species of these sins, if he do forgive the temporal punishment which in his Office he should have inflicted, yet no humane Power can question him for it; because he hath none on Earth above him; But yet God will question him, and shew him that he had no power to dispense with his Laws, nor disoblige himself from his duty. 2. And that in some cases an individual crime may be forgiven by the Magistrate as to the temporal punishment, even where the Ends of the Law and Government require it: But this must not be ordinary.

§. 3. Prop. 2. It is not alway in the power of the Magistrate to remit the temporal punishment, of heinous Crimes against the common good. Because it is ordinarily necessary to the common good that they be punished; and his power is for the common good, and not against it; The Enemies of the publick Peace must by punishment be restrained.

§. 4. Prop. 3. Much less is it in the power of a private Man, to remit a penalty to be inflicted by a Magistrate. And what I say of Magistrates, holdeth of Parents, and other Governours, caeteris paribus, according to the proportion of their Authority.

§. 5. Prop. 4. I may by just means exact satisfaction for damages to my self, in my reputation or Estate, when the ends of Christianity, even the honour of God and the publick good, and the benefit of Mens Souls require it; that is, when I only vindicate these by lawful means, as they are the Talents which God hath committed to me for his service, and for which he will call me to account. It may fall out, that the vindicating of a Ministers or other Christians name from a slander, may become very needful for the interest and honour of Religion, and for the good of many Souls; And if I have an Estate which I resolve to use for God, and a Thief, or a deceiver take it from me, who will do no good with it but hurt, I may be bound to vindicate it; that I may be enabled to do good, and may give God a comfortable account of my Stewardship; besides the suppressing of Thievery and deceit as they are against the common good.

§. 6. Prop. 5. When my Estate is not entirely my own, but Wife or Child or any other is a sharer in it, it is not wholly in my power to remit any Debt or Damage out of it, but I must have the consent of them that are Joynt-owners; Unless I be entrusted for them.

§. 7. Prop. 6. If I be primarily obliged to maintain Wife and Children, or any others with my Estate, I am bound on their behalf, to use all just means to vindicate it from any that shall injuriously invade it: Otherwise I am guilty of their Sufferings whom I should maintain; I may no more suffer a Thief than a Dog, to go away with my Childrens Meat.

§. 8. Prop. 7. And as I must vindicate my Estate for others to whom I am entrusted to Administer it by God, so must I for my self also, so far as God would have me use it my self. For he that hath charged me to provide for my Family, requireth also that I famish not my self: And he hath required me to love my Neighbour but as my self; And therefore as I am bound to vindicate and help my Neighbour if a Thief or Oppressor would rob him, (according to my place and power), so must I do also for my self; in all these Seven cases I am not obliged to forgive.

§. 9. But on the other side in all these cases following, I am bound to forgive and let go my right.

Prop. 1. As the Church may declare to penitent sinners, the remission of the eternal punishment, so may it remit the temporal punishment of excommunication to the penitent: Yea, this they are obliged by Christ to do, ministerially as under him.

§. 10. Prop. 2. When the Repentance and satisfaction of the Sinner, is like to conduce more to the publick good, and the honour of God, and other ends of Government, than his punishment would do, a private Man may not be obliged to prosecute him before the Magistrate, and the Magistrate hath power to forgive him as to the penalty which it belongeth to him to inflict: (Though this may not extend to the remitting of Crimes ordinarily and frequently, nor to the remitting of some sort of heinous crimes at all; because this cannot attain the ends of Government as aforesaid.)

§. 11. Prop. 3. All personal wrongs so far as they are merely against my self, and disable me not from my duty to God and my Neighbour, I may and must forgive: For my own interest is put more in my own power; and here it is that I am commanded to forgive. If you say that I am bound to preserve my own Life and Soul as much as anothers; I answer, It's true, I am bound to perserve my own and anothers ultimately for the service and glory of God; and Gods interest in me I cannot remit or give away. As there is no obligation to duty but what is Originally from God, so there is none but what is ultimately for God, even to please and glorifie him.

Obj. But if this be all, I shall forgive no wrongs: for there is none which doth not some way hinder me in my

my duty: Answ. Yes, there may be many to your body, your estate and name, which yet may be no disablement or hinderance to you, except you make it so your self: As if you receive a box on the Ear, or be slandered or reviled when none heareth it but your self, or such as will make no evil use of it, or if a little be diminished injuriously out of a superfluous estate, or so as to be employed as well as you would have done. 2. But I further answer this objection in the next Propositions.

§. 12. Prop. 4. If my patient suffering a personal injury, which somewhat hindereth me from my duty, be like to be as great a service to God, or to do more good, than by that duty I should do, I ought to pass by and forgive that injury: Because then Gods interest obligeth me not to vindicate my right.

§. 13. Prop. 5. If when I am injured, and thereby disabled from doing some good which I should else have done, I am not able by seeking reparation or the punishment of the Person, to recover my capacity, and promote the service of God, I am bound to pass by and remit that injury (I speak not of the criminal part, but the injury as such: For a Man may be bound to bring a Thief to punishment, on the account of Gods honour, and the common good, (though else he might forgive the injury to himself.)

§. 14. Prop. 6. If it be probable that he that defraudeth me of my Estate, will do more good with it than I should have done, I am not bound to vindicate it from him for my own interest (though as he is criminal, and the crime is hurtful, as an ill example, to the common good, so I may be bound to it:) Nay, were it not for the said criminal respect, I am bound rather to let him take it than to vindicate it by any such means as would break Charity and do more hurt than good.

§. 15. Prop. 7. If I am absolutely trusted with the Person or Estate of another, I may so far forgive the wrongs done to that other, upon sufficient reasons as well as against my self.

§. 16. Prop. 8. A private Man may not usurp the Magistrates power, or do any act which is proper to his office, nor yet may he break his Laws for the avenging of himself: He may use no other means than the Law of God and his Soveraign do allow him. Therefore he may not rail or revile or slander or rob or strike or hurt any (unless in case of defence as afterward,) nor take any other prohibited course.

§. 17. Prop. 9. No rigor or severity must be used to right my self, where gentler means may probably do it; but the most harmless way must first be tryed.

§. 18. Prop. 10. In general, all wrongs, and debts and damages must be forgiven, when the hurt is like to be greater which will come by our righting our selves, than that which by forbearance we shall sustain: And all must be forgiven where Gods Law or Mans forbiddeth us not to forgive. Therefore a Man that will here know his duty, must conduct his actions by very great prudence (which if he have not himself, he must make use of a guide or Counsellor:) and he must be able to compare the Evil which he suffereth with the Evil which will in probability follow his vindication, and to discern which of them is the greater: Or else he can never know how far and when he may and must forgive. And herein he must observe,

§. 19. 1. That hurt that cometh to a Mans Soul is greater than the hurt that befalleth the Body: And therefore if my suing a Man at Law be like to hurt his Soul by uncharitableness, or to hurt my own, or the Souls of others by scandal or disturbances, I must rather suffer any meer bodily injuries, than use that means: But if yet greater hurt to Souls would follow that bodily suffering of mine, the case is then altered the other way. So if by forgiving debts or wrongs, I be liker to do more good to the Soul of him whom I forgive, or others, than the recovery of my own, or the righting of my self is like any way to equal, I am obliged to forgive that debt or wrong.

§. 20. 2. The good or hurt which cometh to a community or to many, is cæteris paribus to be more regarded than that which cometh to my self or any one alone. Because many are of more worth than one; and because Gods honour (cæteris paribus) is more concerned in the good of many than of one. Therefore I must not seek my own right to the hurt of many, either of their Souls or Bodies, unless some greater good require it.

§. 21. 3 The good or hurt of publick Persons, Magistrates or Pastors is (cæteris paribus) of more regard than the good or hurt of single Men: Therefore cæteris paribus I must not right my self to the dishonour or the hurt of Governours (no though I were none of their Charge or Subjects:] because the publick good is more concerned in their honour or welfare than in mine. The same may be said of Persons by their gifts and interests more eminently serviceable to God and the common good than I am.

§ 22. 4. The good or hurt of a near relation, of a dear friend, of a worthy Person, is more to be regarded by me cæteris paribus than the good or hurt of a vile unworthy Person, or a stranger: And therefore the Israelites might not take Usury of a poor Brother, which yet they might do of an alien of another Land! The Laws of nature and friendship may more oblige me to one than to another, though they were supposed equal in themselves: Therefore I am not bound to remit a debt or wrong to a Thief or Deceiver or a vile Person, when a nearer or a worthier Person would be equally damnified by his benefit; and thus far, if without any partial self-love a Man can justly estimate himself] he may not only as he is neareſt in himself, but also for his real worth, prefer his own commodity before the commodity of a more unworthy and unserviceable Person.

§ 23. 5. Another Mans necessities are more regardable than our own superfluities; as his life is more regardable than our corporal delights. Therefore it is a great sin for any Man to reduce another to extremity, and deprive him of necessaries for his life, meerly to vindicate his own right in superfluities for the satisfaction of his concupiscence and sensual desires; if a poor Man steal to save his own or his Childrens lives, and the rich Man vindicate his own, meerly to live in greater fulness or gallantry in the World, he sinneth both the sin of sensuality and uncharitableness; (but how far for the common good he is bound to prosecute the Thief as criminal, is a case which depends on other circumstances) And this is the most common case, in which the forgiving of debts and damages is required in Scripture, viz. When the other is poor and we are rich, and his necessities require it as an act of Charity (And also the former case, when the hurt by our vindication is like to be greater than our benefit will countervail.

§. 24. Quest. 2. What is the meaning of those words of Christ, Matth. 5. 38, 39, 40, 41, 42. Ye have heard that it hath been said, An eye for an eye, and a tooth for a tooth: But I say unto you that ye resist not evil; but whosoever shall smite thee on the right cheek, turn to him the other also: and if any man will sue thee at the Law and take away thy Coat, let him have thy Cloak also: And whosoever shall compel thee to go a mile, go with him two: Give to him that asketh thee; and from him that would borrow of thee turn thou not away? Quest. 2.

Answ. The meaning of the Text is this: As if he had said [Because you have heard that Magistrates are required to do justice exactly between Man and Man, and to take an Eye for an Eye, &c. therefore you may perhaps believe those Teachers who would per-perswade you that for any Man to exact this satisfaction, is no fault: But I tell you that duties of Charity must be performed, as well as Justice must be done: And though it must be the Magistrates duty to do you this Justice, it is not your duty always to require it, but Charity may make the contrary to be your duty. Therefore I say unto you, overvalue not the concernments of your flesh, nor the trifles of this World, but if a man abuse you, or wrong you in these trifles, make no great matter of it, and be not presently inflamed to revenge, and to right your selves; but exercise your Patience, and your Charity to him that wrongeth you, and by a habituated stedfastness herein, be ready to receive another injury with equal patience, yea many such, rather than to fly to an unnecessary vindication of your right: For what if he give you another Stroke? Or what if he also take your Cloak? Or what if he compel you to another mile for him? Let him do it; let him take it; how small is your hurt? What inconsiderable things are these? Your resistance and vindication of your right may violate Charity and Peace, and inflame his passion, and kindle your own, and hurt both your Souls, and draw you into other sins, and cost you dearer than your right was worth: Whereas your patience, and yieldingness, and submission, and readiness to serve another, and to let go your own for Peace and Charity, may shame him, or melt him, and prevent contention, and keep your own and the publick peace, and may shew the excellency of your Holy Religion, and win Mens Souls to the love of it, that they may be saved. Therefore instead of exacting or vindicating your utmost right, set light by your corporal sufferings and wrongs, and study and labour with all your power, to excel in Charity, and to do good to all, and to stoop to any service to another, and humble your selves, and exercise patience, and give and lend according to your abilities; and pretend not justice against the great duties of Charity and Patience.] So that here is forbidden both violent and legal revenge for our Corporal abuses, when the Law of Charity or Patience is against it: But this disobligeth not Magistrates to do Justice, or Men to seek it, in any of the Cases mentioned in the Seven first Propositions.

§. 25. Quest. 3. Am I bound to forgive another, if he ask me not forgiveness? The reason of the question is, because Christ saith, Luke 17. 3, 4. If thy brother trespass against thee, rebuke him: and if he repent forgive him: and if he trespass against thee seven times in a day, and seven times in a day turn again to thee, saying, I repent, thou shalt forgive him.

Answ. In the resolving of this; while some have barely affirmed, and others denied, for want of distinguishing, they have said worse than nothing. It is necessary that we distinguish,

1. Between the forgiving of an Enemy, and of a Stranger, and of a Neighbour, and of a Brother, as such.

1. Between the several penalties to be remitted (as well as revenges to be forborn.) And so briefly the case must be thus resolved.

Prop. 1. An Enemy, a Stranger, and a Neighbour, as such, must be forgiven (in the cases before asserted) though they ask not forgiveness, nor say, I repent: For,

1. Many other Scriptures absolutely require it.

2. And forgiving them as such, is but the continuing them in our common Charity, as Men, or Neighbours; that is, our not endeavouring to ruin them, or do them any hurt, and our hearty desiring and endeavouring their good, according to their capacities or ours; and thus far we must forgive them.

Prop. 2. A Brother must be also thus far forgiven, though he say not, I repent: That is, we must love him as a Man, and wish and endeavour his good to our power.

Prop. 3. A Brother as a Brother, is not to be so forgiven, as to be restored to our estimation, and affection, and usage of him as a Brother, either in spiritual account, or intimate special love and familiarity, as long as he is impenitent in his gross offences; and that is, till he turn again and say, I repent. A Natural Brother is still to be loved as a Natural Brother. For that kind of love dependeth not on his honesty or repentance. But,

1. A Brother in a religious sense.

2. Or a bosom familiar friend, are both unfit for to be received in these capacities, till they are penitent for gross offences; therefore the Church is not to pardon the impenitent, in point of Communion, nor particular Christians to pardon them in their esteem and carriage; nor am I bound to take an unfit Person to be my bosom friend to know my secrets; therefore if either of these offend, I must not forgive them, that is, by forgiveness continue them in the respect and usage of this Brotherhood, till they repent; and this, (first especially) is the Brother mentioned in the Text.

§. 26. Quest. 4. Is it lawful to sue a Brother at Law? The reason of the question is, from the words of the Apostle Paul, 1 Cor. 6. 7. There is utterly a fault among you, because ye go to Law one with another: Why do you not rather take wrong? Why do you not rather suffer your selves to be defrauded? Quest. 4.

Answ. 1. Distinguish betwixt going to Law before Heathens, or other Enemies to the Christian Religion, and before Christian Magistrates.

2. Between going to Law in malice for revenge, and going meerly to seek my right, or to seek the suppression and reformation of sin.

3. Between going to Law when you are bound to forgive, and when you are not.

4. And between going to Law in haste and needlessly, and going to Law as the last remedy, in case of necessity when other means fail.

5. And between going to Law when the hurt is like to be greater than the benefit, and going to Law when it is likely to do good. There is a great deal of difference between these cases.

§. 27. Prop. 1. Christans must rather suffer wrong, than go to Law before the Enemies of Religion, when it is like to harden them, and to bring Christianity into contempt.

Prop. 2. It is not lawful to make Law and Justice the means of private unlawful revenge; nor to vent our malice, nor to oppress the innocent.

Prop. 3. When ever I am bound to forgive the trespass, wrong, or debt, then it is unlawful to seek my own at Law. For that is not forgiving.

Prop. 4. There are many other remedies which must first be tryed (ordinarily) before we go to Law; As

1. To rebuke our Neighbour for his wrong, and privately to desire necessary reparations.

2. To take two or three to admonish him; or to refer the matter to Arbitrators (or in some cases to a Lot.) And if any make Law their first remedy needlesly, while the other means should first be used, it is a sin.

Prop. 5. It is not lawful to go to Law-suits, when prudence may discern that the hurt which may come by it, will be greater than the benefit; (either by hardning the Person, or disturbing ourselves, or scandalizing others against Religion, or drawing any to ways of unpeaceableness and revenge, &c.) The foreseen consequences may over-rule the case.

§. 28. But on the other side, Prop. 1. It is lawful to make use of Christian Judicatories, so it be done in a lawful manner; yea, and in some cases, of the Judicatories of Infidels.

Prop. 2. The suppressing of sin, and the defending of the innocent, and righting of the wronged, being the duty of Governours, it is lawful to seek these benefits at their hands.

Prop. 3. In cases where I am not obliged to forgive (as I have shewed before some such there be,) I may justly make use of Governours as the Ordinance of God.

Prop. 4.

Prop. 4. The Order and Seaſon is when I have tryed other means in vain! When Perſwaſion or Arbitration will do no good, or cannot be uſed with hope of ſucceſs.

Prop. 5. And the great condition to prove it lawful, is, when it is not like to do more hurt than good, either directly of it ſelf, or by Mens abuſe; when Religion, or the Soul of any Man, or any ones Body, or Eſtate, or Name, is not like to loſe more than my Gain, or any other Benefits will compenſate; When all theſe concur, it's lawful to go to Law.

Queſt. 5. §. 29. Queſt. 5. Is it lawful to defend my Perſon, Life or Eſtate againſt a Thief, or Murderer, or unjuſt Invader by force of Arms?

Anſw. You muſt diſtinguiſh, 1. Between ſuch Defence as the Law of the Land alloweth, and ſuch as it forbiddeth.

2. Between Neceſſary and Unneceſſary Actions of Defence.

Prop. 1. There is no doubt, but it is both lawful, and a duty to defend our ſelves by ſuch convenient means, as are likely to attain their end, and are not contrary to any Law, of God or Man! We muſt defend our Neighbour if he be aſſaulted or oppreſſed, and we muſt love our Neighbours as our ſelves.

Prop. 2. This Self-defence by force, is then lawful, when it is Neceſſary, and other more gentle means have been uneffectual, or have no place, (ſuppoſing ſtill that the means be ſuch as the Law of God or Man forbiddeth not.)

Prop. 3. And it is neceſſary to the lawfulneſs of it, that the means be ſuch as in its nature is like to be ſucceſsful, or like to do more good than harm.

§. 30. But on the other ſide: Prop. 1. We may not defend our ſelves, by any ſuch force as either the Laws of God, or our Rulers, thereto authorized by him, ſhall forbid. For,

1. The Laws are made by ſuch as have more power over our lives, than we have over them our ſelves.

2. And they are made for the good of the Common-wealth: which is to be preferred before the good or life of any ſingle Perſon. And what ever ſelfiſh Infidels ſay, both Nature and Grace do teach us to lay down our lives, for the welfare of the Church or State, and to prefer a multitude before our ſelves. Therefore it is better to be robbed, oppreſt, or killed, than to break the Peace of the Commonwealth.

Prop. 2. Therefore a private Man may not raiſe an Army to defend his Life againſt his Prince, or lawful Governour. Perhaps he might hold his hands, if perſonally he went about to murder him, without the violation of the publick Peace: But he cannot raiſe a War without it.

Prop. 3. We may not do that by blood or violence, which might be done by perſwaſion, or by any lawful gentle means: Violence muſt be uſed, even in defence, but in caſe of true neceſſity.

Prop. 4. When Self-defence is like to have conſequents ſo ill, as the ſaving of our ſelves cannot countervail, it is then unlawful finis gratia, and not to be attempted.

Prop. 5. Therefore if Self-defence be unlikely to prevail, our ſtrength being inconſiderable, and when the Enemy is but like to be the more exaſperated by it, and our Sufferings like to be the greater; Nature and Reaſon teach us to ſubmit, and uſe the more effectual (lawful) means.

Queſt. 6. §. 31. Queſt. 6. Is it lawful to take away anothers Life, in the defending of my Purſe or Eſtate?

Anſw. 1. You muſt again diſtinguiſh between ſuch defence, as the Law of the Land alloweth, and ſuch as it forbiddeth.

2. Between what is neceſſary, and what is unneceſſary.

3. Between a life leſs worth than the prize which he contendeth for, and a life more worth than it, or than mine own.

4. Between the ſimple defence of my Purſe, and the defence of it, and my life together.

5. Between what I do with purpoſe and deſire, and what I do unwillingly through the aſſailants temerity or violence.

6. And between what I do in meer defence, and what I do to bring a Thief or Robber unto legal puniſhment. And ſo I anſwer.

Prop. 1. You may not defend your Purſe, or your Eſtate by ſuch Actions, as the Law of the Land forbiddeth. (Unleſs it go againſt the Law of God:) Becauſe it is to be ſuppoſed, that it is better a Mans Eſtate or Purſe be loſt, than Law and publick Order violated.

Prop. 2. You may not (againſt an ordinary Thief or Robber) defend your Purſe with the probable hazard of his life, if a few good words, or other ſafe and gentle means, which you have opportunity to uſe, be like to ſerve turn without ſuch violence.

Prop. 3. If it might be ſuppoſed that a Prince, or other Perſon of great uſe and ſervice to the Common-wealth, ſhould in a frolick or otherwiſe aſſault your Perſon for your Eſtate, or Purſe, it is not lawful to take away his life by a defenſive violence, if you know it to be he: Becauſe (though in ſome Countreys the Law might allow it you, yet) finis gratia it is unlawful; becauſe his life is more neceſſary to the common good, than yours.

Prop. 4. If a pilfering Thief would ſteal your Purſe, without any violence which hazardeth your life, (ordinarily) you may not take away his life in the defending of it. Becauſe it is the work of the Magiſtrate to puniſh him by publick Juſtice, and your defence requireth it not.

Prop. 5. All this is chiefly meant, of the voluntary deſigned taking away of his life; and not of any lawful Action, which doth it accidently againſt your will.

§. 33. On the other ſide. Prop. 1. If the Law of the Land allow you to take away a Mans Life in the defending of your Purſe, it removeth the ſcruple, if the weight of the matter alſo do allow it: Becauſe it ſuppoſeth, that the Law taketh the Offender to be worthy of death, and maketh you in that caſe the Executioner of it. And if indeed, the crime be ſuch as deſerveth death, you may be the Executioner when the Law alloweth it.

Prop. 2. And this is more clear, when the Robber for your Money doth aſſault your Life, or is like for ought you ſee to do it.

Prop. 3. And when gentler means will not ſerve the turn, but Violence is the only remedy which is left you, which is like to avail for your defence.

Prop. 4. And when the Perſon is a vile Offender, who is rather a plague and burden to the Commonwealth, than any neceſſary Member of it.

Prop. 5. If you deſire not, and deſign not his Death, but he ruſh upon it himſelf in his fury, while you lawfully defend your own, the caſe is yet leſs queſtionable.

Prop. 6. If a Thief have taken your Purſe, though you may not take away his life after to recover it (becauſe it is of leſs value) nor yet in revenge (becauſe that belongeth not to private Men;) yet if the Law require or allow you to purſue him to bring him to a judicial Tryal, if you kill him while he reſiſteth, it is not your ſin; becauſe you are but ſuppreſſing ſin in your place, according to the allowance of the Law.

Queſt. 7. §. 34. Queſt. 7. May I kill or wound another in the defence or vindication of my honour, or good name?

Anſw. No, not by private aſſault or violence: But if the crime be ſo great, that the Law of the Land doth puniſh it with death, if that Law be juſt, you may in ſome caſes ſeek to bring the offender to publick Juſtice: But that is rare, and otherwiſe you may not do it. For,

1. It belongeth only to the Magiſtrate, and not to you, to be the avenger.

2. And killing a Man can be no meet defence againſt calumny or ſlander: For if you will kill a Man for prevention, you kill the innocent; if you kill him afterward, it is no defence, but an unprofitable revenge, which vindicateth not your honour, but diſhonoureth you more. Your patience is your honour, and your bloody revenge doth ſhew you to be ſo like the Devil, the deſtroyer, that it is your greateſt ſhame.

3. It is odious Pride which maketh Men over-value their Reputation among Men, and think that a Man's Life is a juſt compenſation to them for their diſhonour! Such bloody Sacrifices are fit to appeaſe only the blood-thirſty Spirit! But what is it that Pride will not do and juſtifie?

CHAP. XI.

Special Directions to eſcape the guilt of Perſecuting. Determining alſo the Caſe about Liberty in Matters of Religion.

THough this be a Subject which the guilty cannot indure to hear of, yet the miſery of Perſecutors, the Blood, and Groans, and Ruines of the Church, and the lamentable Diviſions of Profeſſed Chriſtians, do all command me not to paſs it by in ſilence; but to tell them the truth, Whether they will hear, or whether they will forbear; though they were ſuch as Ezek. 3. 7, 8, 9, 11.

Dir. 1. §. 1. Direct 1. If you would eſcape this dreadful guilt, Underſtand well what Perſecution is, elſe you may either run into it ignorantly, or oppoſe a duty as if it were Perſecution.

§. 2. The Verb [Perſequor] is often taken in a good ſenſe, for no more than continuato muto vel ad extremum ſequor; and ſometime for the blameleſs Proſecution of a Delinquent: But we take it here, as the Engliſh Word [Perſecute] is moſt commonly taken, for [inimico affectu inſequor;] a malicious or injurious hurting or perſecuting another, and that for the ſake of Religion or Righteouſneſs. For it is not common Injuries which we here intend to ſpeak of. Three things then go to make up Perſecution. 1. That it be the hurting of another, in his Body, Liberty, Relations, Eſtate, or Reputation. 2. That it be done injuriouſly, to one who deſerveth it not, in the particular which is the Cauſe. 3. That it be for the cauſe of Religion, or of Righteouſneſs, that is, for the Truth of God which we hold or utter; or for the Worſhip of God which we perform; or for Obedience to the Will of God revealed in his Laws. This is the cauſe on the Sufferers part, what ever is intended by the Perſecuter.

§. 3. There are divers ſorts of Perſecutions. As to the Principles of the Perſecutors. 1. There is a Perſecution which is openly profeſſed to be for the cauſe of Religion; as Heathens and Mahometans perſecute Chriſtians as Chriſtians. And there is an Hypocritical Perſecution, when the pretended Cauſe is ſome odious Crime, but the real cauſe is Mens Religion, or obedience to God. This is the common Perſecution, which nominal Chriſtians exerciſe on ſerious Chriſtians, or on one another. They will not ſay that they perſecute them, becauſe they are godly or ſerious Chriſtians; but that is the true cauſe: For if they will but ſet them above God, and obey them againſt God, they will abate their Perſecution. Many of the Heathens thus perſecuted the Chriſtians too, under the name of ungodly, and evil doers; but the true cauſe was, becauſe they obeyed not their commands in the Worſhipping of their Idol Gods. So do the Papiſts perſecute and murder Men, not as Profeſſors of the Truth (which is the true cauſe) but under the name of Hereticks and Schiſmaticks, or Rebels againſt the Pope, or what ever their malice pleaſeth to accuſe them of. And prophane nominal Chriſtians ſeldom perſecute the ſerious and ſincere directly by that name, but under ſome nickname which they ſet upon them, or under the name of Hypocrites, or Self-conceited, or Factious Perſons, or ſuch like. And if they live in a Place, and Age, where there are many Civil Wars or Differences, they are ſure to fetch ſome odious Name or Accuſation thence: Which ſide ſoever it be that they are on; or if they meddle not on any ſide, they are ſure by every party whom they pleaſe not, to hear Religion loaded with ſuch Reproaches, as the times will allow them to vent againſt it. Even the Papiſts who take this courſe with Proteſtants, it ſeems by Acoſta are ſo uſed themſelves, not by the Heathens; but by one another, yea, by the multitude, yea, by their Prieſts. For ſo ſaith he ſpeaking of the Pariſh Prieſts among the Indians, having reproved their Dicing, Carding, Hunting, Idleneſs. Lib. 4. cap. 15. pag. 404, 405. Itaque is cui Paſtoralis Indorum cura committitur, non ſolum contra diaboli machinas & naturæ incentiva pugnare debet; ſed jam etiam confirmatæ hominum conſuetudini & tempore & turbæ præpotenti ſeſe objicere; & ad excipiendæ invidorum ac malevolorum tela forte pectus opponere; qui ſiquid a profano ſuo inſtituto abhorrentem viderint; proditorem, hypocritam, hoſtem clamant: That is, He therefore to whom the Paſtoral care of the Indians is committed, muſt not only fight againſt the Engines of the Devil, and the Incentives of Nature; but alſo now muſt object or ſet himſelf againſt the confirmed cuſtom of Men, which is grown very powerful both by time, and by the multitude; and muſt valiantly oppoſe his Breſt, to receive the Darts of the envious and malevolent, who if they ſee any thing contrary to their profane faſhion (or breeding) cry out, [A Traytor, an Hypocrite, an Enemy.] It ſeems then that this is a common courſe.

§. 4. 2. Perſecution is either done in Ignorance or Knowledge. The commoneſt Perſecution is that which is done in ignorance and error; when Men think a good cauſe to be bad, or a bad cauſe to be good, and to perſecute Truth, while they take it to be falſhood, or good, while they take it to be evil, or obtrude by violence their errors for truths, and their evils, as good and neceſſary things. Thus Peter teſtifieth of the Jews, who killed the Prince of Life, Acts 3. 13, 14, 17. [I know that through ignorance you did it, as did alſo your Rulers.] And Paul, 1 Cor. 2. 8. [Which none of the Princes of this World knew: For had they known it, they would not have crucified the Lord of Glory.] And Chriſt himſelf ſaith, Joh. 16. 3. Theſe things will they do unto you, becauſe they have not known the Father, or me. And Paul ſaith of himſelf, Acts 26. 9. I thought verily with my ſelf, that I ought to do many things contrary to the Name of Jeſus of Nazareth, which thing I alſo did, &c. And 1 Tim 1. 13. that it was ignorantly in unbelief, that he was a Blaſphemer, a Perſecutor, and Injurious. And on the other ſide, ſome perſecute Truth and Goodneſs, while they know it to be ſo. Not becauſe it is Truth or Goodneſs, but becauſe it is againſt their carnal worldly intereſt and inclination. As the Conſcience of a Worldling, a Drunkard, a Whoremonger, beareth witneſs againſt his ſin while he goeth on in it; ſo oft-times doth the Conſcience of the Perſecutor; and he hath ſecret Convictions, that thoſe whom he perſecuteth, are better and happier than himſelf.

§. 5. 3. As to the Cauſe, ſometime Perſecution is for Chriſtianity and Godlineſs in the groſs, or for ſome great eſſential Point; and ſometimes it is only for ſome particular Truth or Duty, and that perhaps of a lower nature; ſo ſmall or ſo dark, that it is become a great Controverſie, whether it be Truth or Error, Duty or Sin. In ſome reſpects, it is more comfortable to the perſecuted, and more heinous in the Perſecutor, that the ſuffering be for the greateſt things. For this leaveth no doubt in the mind, Mind, whether our cauſe be good, or not; and this ſheweth, that the Perſecutors mind is moſt alien from God and Truth: But in ſome other reſpect, it is an aggravation of the ſin of the Perſecutor, and of the comfort of the perſecuted, when it is for ſmaller truths and duties. For it is a ſign of great uncharitablneſs and cruelty, when Men can find in their hearts to perſecute others for little things: And it is a ſign of a heart that is true to God, and very ſincere, when we will rather ſuffer any thing from Man, than renounce the ſmalleſt Truth of God, or commit the ſmalleſt ſin againſt him, or omit the ſmalleſt duty, when it is a duty.

4. Sometime Perſecution is directly for Religion; that is, for matters of Profeſſed Faith or Worſhip: And ſometimes it is for a Civil or a Common Cauſe; yet ſtill it is for our obedience to God (or elſe it is not the perſecution which we ſpeak of) though the Matter of it be ſome common or civil thing: As if I were perſecuted meerly for giving to the poor, or helping the ſick, or for being Loyal to my Prince, and to the Laws, or for doing my duty to my Parents, or becauſe I will not bear falſe-witneſs, or tell a lie, or ſubſcribe a falſhood, or any ſuch like: This is truly perſecution, whatever the matter of it be, as long as it is truly for obeying God, that we undergo the ſuffering.

§. 6. I omit many other leſs conſiderable diſtributions; And alſo thoſe afflictions which are but improperly called Perſecutions; (as when a Man is puniſhed for a fault in a greater meaſure than it deſerveth. This is Injuſtice, but not Perſecution, (unleſs it be his Religion and Obedience to God, which is the ſecret cauſe of it.)

Dir. 2. §. 7. Direct. 2. Underſtand well the greatneſs of the ſin of Perſecution, that you may be kept in a due fear of being tempted to it. Here therefore I ſhall ſhew you how great a ſin it is.

§. 8. 1. Perſecution is a fighting againſt God: So it is called, Acts 5. 39. And to fight againſt God, is odious malignity, and deſperate folly. 1. It is venemous malignity, for a Creature to fight againſt his Creator, and a Sinner againſt his Redeemer who would ſave him; and for ſo blind a Worm to riſe up againſt the Wiſdom of the All-knowing God! And for ſo vile a Sinner to oppoſe the Fountain of Love and Goodneſs! 2. And what Folly can be greater, than for a Mole to reproach the Sun for darkneſs? Or a lump of Earth to take up Arms againſt the Almighty terrible God? Art thou able to make good thy cauſe againſt him? Or to ſtand before him when he is offended, and chargeth thee with ſin? Hear a Phariſee, Acts 6. 38, 39. [And now I ſay unto you, reſrain from theſe men, and let them alone; for if this counſel, or this work be of men, it will come to nought: But if it be of God, ye cannot overthrow it; leſt happily ye be found even to fight againſt God.] Or hear Chriſt himſelf, Acts 9. 4, 5. I am Jeſus whom thou perſecuteſt: It is hard for thee to kick againſt the pricks! With bare feet or hands to beat the Thorns! How unmeet a match is Man for God! He needeth not ſo much as a word to take away thy Soul, and cruſh thee to the loweſt Hell. His will alone can lay thee under thy deſerved pains. Canſt thou conquer the Almighty God? Wilt thou aſſault the Power which was never overcome, or ſtorm Jehovahs Throne or Kingdom? Firſt try to take down the Sun, and Moon, and Stars, from the Firmament, and to ſtop the courſe of the Rivers, or of the Sea; and to rebuke the Winds, and turn Night into Day, and Winter into Summer, and decrepit Age into vigorous Youth. Attempt not greater matters till thou haſt performed theſe: It is a greater matter than any of theſe, to conquer God, whoſe cauſe thou fighteſt againſt. Hear him again, Iſa. 45. 1. Wo unto him that ſtriveth with his Maker: Let the Potſherd ſtrive with the Potſherds of the Earth. Shall the Clay ſay to him that faſhioneth it, What makeſt thou?] Or thy work. [He hath no hands?] And Iſa. 45. 2. [Who would ſet the Bryars and Thorns againſt me in battel? I would go through them, I would burn them together.] Wo to the Man that is not content to go to fight with Men, but chuſeth the moſt dreadful God to be his Enemy! It had been better for thee, that all the World had been againſt thee!

§. 9. 2. Perſecution oppoſeth the gracious deſign of our Redeemer, and hindereth his Goſpel, and Work of Mercy to the World, and endeavoureth the ruine of his Kingdom upon Earth. Chriſt came to ſave Men, and Perſecutors raiſe up their power againſt him, as if they envied Salvation to the World. And if God have made the work of Mans Redemption, the moſt wonderful of all his works, which ever he revealed to the Sons of Men, you may eaſily conceive what thanks he will give them, that reſiſt him in ſo high and glorious a deſign. If you could pull the Stars out of the Firmament, or hinder the motions of the Heavens, or deny the Rain to the thirſty Earth, you might look for as good a reward for this, as for oppoſing the Merciful Redeemer of the World, in the bleſſed work of Mans Salvation.

§. 10. 3. Perſecution is a reſiſting or fighting againſt the Holy Ghoſt. Acts 7. 51. ſaith Stephen to the Jews, [Ye ſtiff-necked and uncircumciſed in heart and ears: ye do always reſiſt the Holy Ghoſt: As your Fathers did, ſo do ye!] If you ſilence the Miniſters who are the means by which the Spirit worketh, in the illuminating and ſanctifying of Souls, (Acts 26. 17, 18.) Or if you afflict Men for thoſe holy duties, which the Spirit of God hath taught them to perform, or would force Men from that which the Spirit of Chriſt is ſent to draw them to; this is to raiſe War againſt that Spirit, into whoſe Name you were your ſelves baptized.

§. 21. 4. Perſecution endeavoureth the damnation of Mens Souls, either by depriving them of the Preaching of the Goſpel which ſhould ſave them, or by forcing them upon that ſin for which God will condemn them. Yea, the baniſhing or ſilencing of one faithful Preacher, may conduce to the damnation of many hundreds? If it be ſaid, that others who are ſet up in their ſtead, may ſave Mens Souls as well as they. I anſwer, 1. God ſeldom, if ever, did qualifie ſupernumeraries for the work of the Miniſtry! Many a Nation hath had too few, but I never read of any Nation that had too many, who were well qualified for that great and difficult work, no not from the days of Chriſt till now! So that if they are all fit Men, there are none of them to be ſpared; but all are too few, if they conjoin their greateſt skill and diligence. Chriſt biddeth us pray the Lord of the Harveſt, to ſend forth more Labourers into his Harveſt; but never biddeth us pray to ſend out fewer, or to call any in that were but tolerably fitted for the work. 2. Many Perſecutors baniſh all Preachers of the Goſpel, and ſet up no other to do the ſervice which they were called to. And it is rarely ſeen, that any who can find in their hearts, to caſt out any faithful Miniſters of Chriſt, have hearts to ſet up better, or any that are competent in their ſtead: But it is ordinarily ſeen, that when the judgment is ſo far depraved, as to approve of the caſting out of worthy Men; it is alſo ſo far depraved as to think an ignorant, unskilful, heartleſs, or ſcandalous ſort of Miniſters, to be as fit to ſave Mens Souls as they. And how many poor Congregations in the Eaſtern and the Weſtern Churches (nay, how many Thouſands) have ignorant, ungodly, ſenſual Paſtors, who are ſuch unſavoury Salt, as to be unfit for the Land, or for the Dunghil? Whilſt Men are extinguiſhing the cleareſt Lights, or thruſting them into obſcurity. Matth. 5. 13, 14, 15. Luk. 14. 35. 3. And there may be ſomething of ſuitableneſs between a Paſtor, and the Flock, which may give him advantage to be more profitable to their Souls, than another Man of equal parts. 4. And, though God can work by the weakeſt means, yet ordinarily we ſee that his work upon Mens Souls is ſo far Moral, as that he uſually proſpereth Men, according to the fitneſs of their labours to the work! And ſome Men have far more ſucceſs than others. He that ſhould expel a dozen or twenty of the ableſt Phyſicians out of London, and ſay, There are enough left in their ſteads, who may ſave Mens lives, as well as they; might, notwithſtanding that Aſſertion, be found guilty of the Blood of no ſmall numbers. And as Men have ſometime an averſeneſs to one ſort of food, (as good as any to another Man,) and as this diſtemper is not laudable; and yet he that would force them to eat nothing elſe, but that which they ſo abhor, were liker to kill them, than to cure them; ſo is it with the Souls of many. And there are few who have any ſpiritual diſcerning and reliſh, but have ſome ſpecial ſenſe of what is helpful or hurtful to their Souls, in Sermons, Books, and Conference, which a ſtander by is not ſo fit to judge of, as themſelves. So that it is clear, that perſecution driveth Men towards their damnation! And, O how ſad a caſe it is, to have the damnation of one Soul to anſwer for! (Which is worſe than the murdering of many Bodies.) Much more to be guilty of the Perdition of a multitude.)

§. 12. 5. Perſecution is unjuſtice, and oppreſſion of the innocent! And what a multitude of terrible threatnings againſt this ſin, are found throughout the Holy Scriptures? Doth a Man deſerve to be cruelly uſed, for being faithful to his God, and for preferring him before Man? And for being afraid to ſin againſt him? Or for doing that which God commandeth him, and that upon pain of greater ſefferings than Man can inflict upon him? Is it not his Saviour that hath ſaid, Fear not them that can kill the body, and after that have no more that they can do; but fear him who after he hath killed, hath power to caſt into Hell, yea, I ſay unto you, fear him. Though Chriſtianity was once called A Sect which every where was ſpoken againſt, Acts 28. 22. And Paul was accuſed as a peſtilent fellow, and a mover of Sedition among the people, Acts 24. 5. And Chriſt was crucified as a Uſurper of the Crown; yet innocency ſhall be innocency ſtill in ſpight of malice, and lying accuſations; becauſe God will be the final Judge, and will bring all ſecret things to light, and will juſtifie thoſe whom injuſtice hath condemned, and will not call them as ſlandering Tongues have called them. Yea, the Conſciences of the Perſecutors are often forced to ſay, as they did of Daniel, Dan. 6. 5. We ſhall not find any occaſion againſt this Daniel, except we find it againſt him concerning the Law of his God. And therefore, the Net which they were fain to lay for him, was a Law againſt his Religion, or Prayers to God; for a Law againſt Treaſon, Sedition, Swearing, Drunkenneſs, Fornication, &c. would have done them no ſervice! And yet they would fain have aſperſed him there, Verſ. 4. Jer. 22. 13. Wo to him that buildeth his houſe by unrighteouſneſs, &c. Iſa. 33. 1. Wo to thee that ſpoileſt, and thou waſt not ſpoiled. Iſa. 5. 20. Wo to them that call evil good, and good evil, Jer. 2. 34. In thy ſkirts is found the Blood of the Souls of the poor innocents. Prov. 6. 16, 17. Hands that ſhed innocent blood, the Lord doth hate, &c.

Dæmones ex hominibus fieri quidam opinati ſunt, perpetua criminum licentia, &c. Quod ut forte tolerabiliter dictum ſit, malarum voluntatum ſimilitudo efficit, qua homo malus atque in malis obſtinatus pene dæmonem æquat. Petrarch. de Injuſto Domin.

§. 13. 6. Perſecution maketh Men likeſt unto Devils, and maketh them his moſt notable Servants in the World. Many wicked Men may neglect that duty which they are convinced they ſhould do. But to hate it, and malice Men that do it, and ſeek their ruin; this, if any thing, is a work more beſeeming a Devil, than a Man. Theſe are the Commanders in the Armies of the Devil, againſt the Cauſe and Kingdom of the Lord! Joh. 8. 42, 44. And accordingly ſhall they ſpeed.

§. 14. 7. Perſecution is an inhumane, diſingenuous ſin, and ſheweth an extinction of the Light of Nature. A good natured Man, if he had no grace at all, would abhor to be cruel, and to oppreſs his Brethren; and that meerly, becauſe they are true to their Conſciences, and obey their God, while they do no hurt to any others. If they had deſerved Execution, an ingenuous nature would not be forward to be their Executioner; much more when they deſerve incouragement and imitation: It is no honour to be numbred with Blood-thirſty Men.

§. 15. 8. It is a ſin that hath ſo little of commodity, honour, or pleaſure to invite Men to it, that maketh it utterly without excuſe, and ſheweth, that the ſerpentine nature is the cauſe, (Gen. 3. 15.) What get Men by ſhedding the Blood of Innocents, or ſilencing the Faithful Preachers of the Goſpel? What ſweetneſs could they find in cruelty, if a malicious nature made it not ſweet?

§. 16. 9. It is a ſin which Men have as terrible warnings againſt from God, as any ſin in the World, that I can remember. 1. In Gods threatnings. 2. In ſad Examples, and Judgments in this life, even on poſterity. 3. And in the infamy that followeth the names of Perſecutors, when they are dead.

§. 17. 1. How terrible are thoſe words of Chriſt, Matth. 18. 6. But who ſo ſhall offend one of theſe little ones that believe in me, it were better for him, that a Milſtone were hanged about his neck, and that he were drowned in the depth of the Sea. How terrible is that Character which Paul giveth of the Jews, 1 Theſ. 2. 15, 16. Who both killed the Lord Jeſus, and their own Prophets, and have perſecuted us: And they pleaſe not God, and are contrary to all Men; forbidding us to ſpeak to the Gentiles that they might be ſaved to fill up their ſins always; for the wrath is come upon them to the uttermoſt. Such Terrors againſt Perſecutors are ſo common through the Scriptures, that it would be tedious to recite them.

§. 18. 2. And for Examples, the Captivity firſt, and afterward the caſting off of the Jews, may ſerve inſtead of many, 2 Chron. 36. 16. But they mocked the Meſſengers of God, and deſpiſed his words, and miſuſed his Prophets, until the wrath of the Lord aroſe againſt his People, till there was no remedy. And of the caſting off, ſee Matth. 23. 37, 38. O Jeruſalem, Jeruſalem, thou that killeſt the Prophets, and ſtoneſt them that are ſent unto thee, How oft would I have gathered thy Children together, as a Hen gathereth her Chickens under her Wings, and ye would not? Behold your houſe is left unto you deſolate —— And Verſ. 34, 35, 36. Behold, I ſend unto you Prophets, and wiſe Men and Scribes; and ſome of them ye ſhall kill and crucifie, and ſome of them ſhall ye ſcourge in your Synagogues, and perſecute them from City to City; that upon you may come all the righteous bloodſhed upon the Earth, from the blood of righteous Abel, to the blood of Zacharias, Son of Barachias, whom ye ſlew between the Temple and the Altar. Verily I ſay unto you, All theſe things ſhall come on this Generation. To give you the particular Examples of Gods Judgments againſt Perſecutors, and their poſterity after them, would be a Voluminous work: You may find them in the Holy Scriptures, and the Churches Martyrologies.

§. 19. 3. And by a marvellous providence, God doth ſo over-rule the Tongue of Fame, and the Pens of Hiſtorians, and the Thoughts of Men, that commonly the names of Perſecutors ſtink when they are dead; yea, though they were never ſo much honoured and flattered, while they were alive! What odious names are the names of Pharaoh, Ahab, Pilate, Herod, Nero, Domitian, Dioclefian, &c? What a name hath the French Maſſacre left on Charles the Ninth! And the Engliſh Perſecution on Queen Mary? And ſo of others throughout the World! Yea, what a blot leaveth it on Aſa, Amaziah, or any that do but hurt a Prophet of the Lord! The Eleventh Chapter of the Hebrews, and all the Martyrologies tyrologies that are written to preſerve the name of the Witneſſes of Chriſt, are all the Records of the Impiety, and the perpetual ſhame of thoſe, by whom they ſuffered. Even Learning, and Wiſdom, and common Virtue, hath got that eſtimation in the Nature of Man, that he that perſecuteth but a Seneca, a Cicero, a Demoſthenes, or a Socrates, hath irrecoverably wounded his Reputation to Poſterity, and left his name to the hatred of all ſucceeding Ages. Prov. 10. 7. The memory of the juſt is bleſſed, but the name of the wicked ſhall rot.

§. 20. 4. The Perſecution of Godlineſs, as ſuch, in Miniſters or private Chriſtians, is one of the moſt viſible undoubted Marks, of one that is yet unſanctified, and in a ſtate of ſin and condemnation; for it ſheweth moſt clearly the predominancy of the Serpentine nature in the Perſecutor. Though Aſa in a peeviſh fit may impriſon the Prophet, and thoſe Chriſtians that are ingaged in a Sect or Party, may in a ſinful Zeal be injurious to thoſe of the contrary party; and yet there may remain ſome roots of uprightneſs within: Yet he that ſhall ſet himſelf to hinder the Goſpel, and the ſerious practice of Godlineſs in the World, and to that end, hinder or perſecute the Preachers, and Profeſſors and Practiſers of it, hath the plaineſt mark of a Child of the Devil, and the moſt viſible brand of the wrath of God upon his Soul, of any ſort of Men on Earth. If there might be any hope of Grace in him, that at preſent doth but neglect or diſobey the Goſpel, and doth not himſelf live a godly life (as indeed there is not) yet there can be no poſſibility that he ſhould have Grace at that preſent, who hateth and oppoſeth it; and that he ſhould be juſtified by the Goſpel who perſecuteth it, and that he ſhould be a godly Man, who ſetteth himſelf againſt the godly, and ſeeketh to deſtroy them.

§. 21. 10. And it is a far more heinous ſin in a Profeſſed Chriſtian, than in an Infidel or Heathen. For theſe do according to the darkneſs of their Education, and the Intereſt of their party, and the principles of their own Profeſſion. But for a profeſſed Chriſtian to perſecute Chriſtianity, and one that profeſſeth to believe the Goſpel, to perſecute the Preachers and ſerious Practiſers of the Doctrine of the Goſpel; this is ſo near that ſin which is commonly ſaid to be the unpardonable ſin againſt the Holy Ghoſt, that it is not eaſie to perceive a difference; and if I did conſent to that deſcription of the unpardonable ſin, I ſhould have little hope of the Converſion of any one of theſe. But however they make up ſuch a mixture of Hypocriſie, and Impiety, and Cruelty, as ſheweth them to exceed all ordinary ſinners, in malignity and miſery. They are a ſelf-condemned ſort of Men; out of their own mouths will God condemn them. They profeſs themſelves to believe in God, and yet they perſecute thoſe that ſerve him; they dare not ſpeak againſt the preaching and practiſing of the Doctrine of Godlineſs, directly, and in plain Expreſſions; and yet they perſecute them, and cannot indure them! They fight againſt the Intereſt and Law of God the Father, Son, and Holy Ghoſt, when they have in Baptiſm vowed themſelves unto his Service. Of all Men on Earth, theſe Men will have leaſt to ſay for their ſin, or againſt their condemnation.

§. 22. 11. Laſtly, Remember that Chriſt taketh all that is done by Perſecutors againſt his Servants for his Cauſe, to be done as to himſelf, and will accordingly in Judgment charge it on them. So ſpeaketh he to Saul, Acts 9. 5, 6. Saul, Saul, why perſecuteſt thou me? --- I am Jeſus whom thou perſecuteſt! And Matth. 25. 41, to 46. Even to them that did not feed, and cloath, and viſit, and relieve them, he ſaith, Verily, I ſay unto you, in as much as ye did it not to one of the leaſt of theſe, ye did it not to me. What then will he ſay to them that impoveriſhed and impriſoned them? Remember, that it is Chriſt reputatively, whom thou doſt hate, deride, and perſecute.

§. 23. Direct. 3. If you would eſcape the guilt of Perſecution, the Cauſe and Intereſt of Chriſt in the World, muſt be truly underſtood. He that knoweth not that Holineſs is Chriſt's end, and Scripture is his Word, and Law, and that the Preachers of the Goſpel are his Meſſengers, and that Preaching is his appointed means, and that ſanctified Believers are his Members, and the whole number of them are his Myſtical Body; and all that profeſs to be ſuch, are his Viſible Body, or Kingdom in the World; and that ſin is the thing which he came to deſtroy, and the Devil, the World, and the Fleſh, are the Enemies which he cauſeth us to conquer. I ſay, He that knoweth not this, doth not know what Chriſtianity or Godlineſs is; and therefore may eaſily perſecute it in his ignorance. If you know not, or believe not, that ſerious Godlineſs in heart and life, and ſerious Preaching and Diſcipline to promote it, are Chriſts great Cauſe and Intereſt in the World, you may fight againſt him in the dark, whileſt ignorantly you call your ſelves his followers. If the Devil can but make you think that Ignorance is as good as Knowledge, and Phariſaical Formality, and Hypocritical ſhews, are as good as Spiritual Worſhip, and Rational Service of God; and that ſeeming and Lip-ſervice is as good as ſeriouſneſs in Religion; and that the ſtrict and ſerious obeying of God, and living as we profeſs, according to the Principles of our Religion, is but Hypocriſie, Pride, or Faction, (that is, that all are Hypocrites who will not be Hypocrites, but ſeriouſly Religious:) I ſay, if Satan can bring you once to ſuch erroneous malignant thoughts as theſe; no wonder if he make you Perſecutors. O value the great Bleſſing of a ſound Underſtanding: For if Error blind you (either impious Error, or factious Error,) there is no wickedneſs ſo great, but you may promote it, and nothing ſo good and holy, but you may perſecute it, and think all the while that you are doing well. Joh. 16. 2. They ſhall put you out of the Synagogues; yea, the time cometh, that whoſoever killeth you, will think that he doth God ſervice. What Prophet ſo great, or Saint ſo holy, that did not ſuffer by ſuch hands? Yea, Chriſt himſelf was perſecuted as a ſinner, that never ſinned. Dir. 3.

§. 24. Direct. 4. And (if you would eſcape the guilt of Perſecution) the Cauſe and Intereſt of Chriſt, muſt be higheſt in your eſteem and preferred before all worldly carnal Intereſts of your own. Otherwiſe the Devil will be ſtill perſwading you, that your own intereſt requireth you, to ſuppreſs the Intereſt of Chriſt: For the truth is, the Goſpel of Chriſt is quite againſt the intereſt of Carnality and Concupiſcence; it doth condemn Ambition, Covetouſneſs, and Luſt; it forbiddeth thoſe ſins on pain of damnation, which the proud, and covetous, and ſenſual love and will not part with: And therefore it is no more wonder to have a proud Man, or a covetous Man, or a luſtful, voluptuous Man to be a Perſecutor, than for a Dog to flie in his face who takes his bone from him. If you love your Pride, and Luſt, and Pleaſures better than the Goſpel, and a holy Life, no marvel if you be Perſecutors; for theſe will not well agree together: And though ſometimes the Providence of God may ſo contrive things, that an ambitious Hypocrite may think that his worldly intereſt requireth him to ſeem religious, and promote the Preaching and Practice of Godlineſs; this is but ſeldom, and uſually not long. For he cannot chuſe, but quickly find that Chriſt is no Patron of his ſin, and that Holineſs is contrary to his worldly Luſts. Therefore if you cannot value the Cauſe of Godlineſs above your Luſts and carnal Intereſts, I cannot tell you how to avoid the guilt of Perſecution, nor the wrath and vengeance of Almighty God. Dir. 4.

§. 25. Direct. 5. Yea, though you do prefer Chriſts intereſt in the main, You muſt carefully take heed of ſtepping into any forbidden way, and eſpouſing any in- Dir. 5.

tereſt of your own or others, which is contrary to the Laws or intereſt of Chriſt. Otherwiſe in the defence or proſecution of your Cauſe, you will be carried into a ſeeming neceſſity of perſecuting before you are aware. This hath been the ruine of multitudes of great ones in the World. When Ahab had ſet himſelf in a way of ſin, the Prophet muſt reprove him; and then he hateth and perſecuteth the Prophet, becauſe he propheſied not good of him, but evil. When Jeroboam thought that his intereſt required him to ſet up Calves at Dan and Bethel, and to make Prieſts for them of the baſeſt of the People, the Prophet muſt ſpeak againſt his ſin; and then he ſtretcheth out his hand againſt him, and ſaith, Lay hold on him. If Aſa ſin, and the Prophet tell him of it, his rage may proceed to impriſon his reprover. If Amaziah ſin with the Idolaters, the Prophet muſt reprove him, and he will ſilence him, or ſmite him. And ſilenced he is, and what muſt follow? 2 Chron. 15. 16. The King ſaid to him, Art thou made of the Kings counſel? Forbear: Why ſhouldſt thou be ſmitten? (This ſeemeth to be gentle dealing.) Then the Prophet forbore and ſaid, I know that God hath determined to deſtroy thee, becauſe thou haſt done this, and haſt not hearkned to my counſel. If Pilate do but hear, [If thou let this Man go, thou art not Cæſars friend] he thinketh it his intereſt to crucifie Chriſt: As Herod thought it his intereſt to kill him, and therefore to kill ſo many other Infants, when he heard of the Birth of a King of the Jews. Becauſe of an Herodias and the honour of his Word, Herod will not ſtick to behead John Baptiſt; and another Herod will kill James with the Sword, and impriſon Peter, becauſe he ſeeth that it pleaſeth the Jews. Inſtances of this deſperate ſin are innumerable. There is no way ſo common, by which Satan hath ingaged the Rulers of the World, againſt the Kingdom of Jeſus Chriſt, and againſt the Preachers of his Goſpel, and the People that obey him, than by perſwading them as Haman did Ahaſuerus, Eſther 3. 8, 9. [There is a certain People ſcattered abroad, and diſperſed among the People in all the Provinces of thy Kingdom, and their Laws are divers from all People, neither keep they the Kings Laws: Therefore it is not for the Kings profit to ſuffer them; if it pleaſe the King, let it be written that they may be deſtroyed.] When once the Devil hath got Men, by error or ſenſuality, to eſpouſe an intereſt that Chriſt is againſt, he hath half done his work: For then he knoweth, that Chriſt or his Servants will never bend to the wills of ſinners, nor be reconciled to their wicked ways, nor take part with them in a ſinful Cauſe: And then it is eaſie for Satan to perſwade ſuch Men, that theſe preciſe Preachers and People are their Enemies, and are againſt their intereſt and honour, and that they are a turbulent ſeditious ſort of People, unfit to be governed (becauſe they will not be falſe to God, nor take part with the Devil, nor be friends to ſin.) When once Nebuchadnezzar hath ſet up his Golden Image, he thinks he is obliged in honour to perſecute them that will not bow down, as refractory Perſons that obey not the King. When Jeroboam is once ingaged to ſet up his Calves, he is preſently ingaged againſt thoſe that are againſt them; and that is againſt God, and all his Servants. Therefore as Rulers love their Souls, let them take heed what cauſe and intereſt they eſpouſe.

Joh. 19. 11.

Matth. 2. 16, 17, 18. & 14. 6, 7, 8, 9. Mark 6. 19, 21, 22. Acts 1. 2. 3, 4.

Dir. 6. §. 26. Direct. 6. To love your Neighbours as your ſelves, and do as you would be done by, is the infallible means to avoid the guilt of Perſecution. For Charity ſuffereth long, and is kind, it envieth not, it is not eaſily provoked, it thinketh no evil, rejoyceth not in iniquity, but rejoyceth in the truth; it beareth all things, believeth all things, hopeth all things, indureth all things, 1 Cor. 13. 4, 5, 6, 7. Love worketh no ill to his Neighbour; therefore love is the fulfilling of the Law, Rom. 13. 10. And if it fulfil the Law, it wrongeth no Man. When did you ſee a Man perſecute himſelf? Impriſon, baniſh, defame, ſlander, revile, or put to death himſelf (if he were well in his wits?) Never fear Perſecution from a Man that loveth his Neighbour as himſelf, and doth as he would be done by, and is not ſelfiſh and uncharitable.

Dir. 7. §. 27. Direct. 7. Pride alſo muſt be ſubdued, if you would not be Perſecutors. For a proud Man cannot indure to have his word diſobeyed, though it contradict the Word of God: Nor can he indure to be reproved by the Preachers of the Goſpel; but will do as Herod with John Baptiſt, or as Aſa, or Amaziah, by the Prophets! Till the Soul be humbled, it will not bear the ſharp Remedies which our Saviour hath preſcribed, but will perſecute him that would adminiſter them.

Dir. 8. §. 28. Direct. 8. Paſſion muſt be ſubdued, and the Mind kept calm, if you would avoid the guilt of Perſecution. Aſa was in a rage when he impriſoned the Prophet; (a fit work for a raging Man.) And Nebuchadnezzar was in a rage and fury when he commanded the Puniſhment of the three Witneſſes, Dan. 3. 13 The wrath of Man worketh not the Will of God, Jam. 1. 20. The nature of wrathfulneſs tendeth to hurting thoſe you are angry with. And wrath is impatient, and unjuſt, and will not hear what Men can ſay, but raſhly paſſeth unrighteous ſentence. And it blindeth Reaſon, ſo that it cannot ſee the truth.

Dir. 9. §. 29. Direct. 9. And hearkning to malicious backbiters, and ſlanderers, and favoring the Enemies of Godlineſs in their calumnies, will ingage Men in Perſecution ere they are aware. For when the wicked are in the favour, and at the ear of Rulers, they have opportunity to vent thoſe falſe Reports, which they never want a will to vent! And any thing may be ſaid of Men behind their backs, with an appearance of Truth, when there is none to contradict it. If Haman may be heard, the Jews ſhall be deſtroyed, as not being for the Kings profit, nor obedient to his Laws. If Sanballat and Tobiah may be heard, the building of the Walls of Jeruſalem, ſhall ſignifie no better than an intended Rebellion. They are true words, though to ſome ungrateful, which are ſpoken by the Holy Ghoſt, Prov. 29. 12. [If a Ruler hearken to lies, all his Servants are wicked,] (for they will ſoon accommodate themſelves to ſo vitious a humor.) Prov. 25. 4, 5. Take away the droſs from the ſilver, and there ſhall come forth a Veſſel for the finer: Take away the wicked from before the King, and his Throne ſhall be eſtabliſhed in Righteouſneſs. If the Devil might be believed, Job was one that ſerved God for gain, and might have been made to curſe him to his face. And if his Servants may be believed, there is nothing ſo vile which the beſt Men are not guilty of.

Dir. 10. §. 30. Direct. 10. Take heed of ingaging your ſelves in a Sect or Faction! For when once you depart from Catholick Charity, there groweth up inſtead of it, a partial reſpect to the intereſt of that Sect to which you joyn; and you will think that whatſoever doth promote that Sect, doth promote Chriſtianity; and what ever is againſt that Sect, is againſt the Church, or Cauſe of God. A narrow Sectarian ſeparating mind, will make all the Truths of God give place to the opinions of his party, and will meaſure the proſperity of the Goſpel in the World, by the proſperity of his party, as if he had forgot, that there are any more Men on the face of the Earth, or thought God regarded none but them. He will not ſtick to perſecute all the reſt of the Church of Chriſt, if the intereſt of his Sect require it. When once Men incorporate themſelves into a party, it poſſeſſeth them with another Spirit; even with a ſtrange uncharitableneſs, injuſtice, cruelty, and partiality! What hath the Chriſtian World ſuffered by one Sects perſecuting another, and Faction riſing up in fury to maintain its own intereſt, as if it had been to maintain the Being of all Religion! The Blood-thirſty Papiſts, whoſe Inquiſition, Maſſacres, and manifold Murders, have filled the Earth with the Blood of Innocents, is a ſufficient teſtimony of this. And ſtill here among us, they ſeem as thirſty of Blood as ever, and tell us to our faces, that they would ſoon make an end of us, if we were in their power: As if the Two hundred thouſand lately murdered in ſo ſhort a time in Ireland, had rather irritated than quenched their thirſt. And all Faction naturally tendeth to Perſecution. Own not therefore any dividing Opinions or Names; maintain the Unity of the Body of Chriſt (not of the Body of the Pope!) Let Chriſtian and Catholick be all your Titles, as to your Religion. Mark thoſe that cauſe Diviſions and Offences, and avoid them, Rom. 16. 17.

Blood

Dir. 11. §. 31. Direct. 11. To this end, Overvalue not any private or ſingular opinions of your own or others: For if once Spiritual Pride and Ignorance of your own weakneſs, hath made you eſpouſe ſome particular opinion as peculiarly your own; you will dote on the Brats of your own Brains, and will think your conceits to be far more illuminating and neceſſary than indeed they are, as if Mens ſincerity lay in the imbracing of them, and their Salvation on the receiving of them! And then you will make a party for your opinion, and will think all that are againſt it, deſerve to be caſt out, as Enemies to Reformation, or to the Truth of God, or to the Church: And perhaps twenty years after, experience may bring you to your wits, and make you ſee, either the falſhood or the ſmallneſs of all thoſe Points, which you made ſo great a matter of; and then what comfort will you have in your Perſecutions?

Dir. 12. §. 32. Direct. 12. Obey not the Solicitations of ſelfiſh paſſionate Diſputers. Biſhops and Divines falling out among themſelves, and then drawing Princes to own their Quarrels, when they find their Arguments will not ſerve, hath been the diſtraction, diviſion, and ruine of the Chriſtian World. And he that falleth in with one of the Parties, to bear out that by the ruines of the other, is loſt himſelf in their contentions. Would Rulers let wrangling Biſhops and Diſputers alone, and never lend them their Swords to end their differences, unleſs the ſubſtance of Religion be indangered, they would be weary of quarrelling, and would chide themſelves Friends, and no ſuch Tragical conſequents would follow, as do when the Sword interpoſeth to ſuppreſs the diſcountenanced party, and to end their Syllogiſms and wranglings in Blood.

Dir. 13. §. 33. Direct. 13. Take heed leſt an uncharitable hurting Spirit do prevail under the name of holy Zeal. As it did with James and John, when they would have fire from Heaven to have revenged the contempt of their Miniſtry: To whom Chriſt ſaith, Ye know not what manner of Spirit ye are of. The difference between a Chriſtian Zeal, and an envious, contentious, cenſorious, hurtful Zeal, is excellently deſcribed by the Apoſtle James, chap. 3. throughout, Where envying and ſtrife is, there is confuſion, and every evil work. The wiſdom from above is firſt pure, then peaceable, gentle, eaſie to be intreated, full of mercy and good Works, without partiality and hypocriſie.

Luk. 9. 55.

Dir. 14. §. 34. Direct. 14. The Catholick Church, and Particular Churches, and our Communion with each, muſt be diſtinguiſhed; and a Man muſt not be caſt out of our Catholick Communion, becauſe by ſome tolerable difference he is uncapable of Communion with ſome particular Church. If a Man be impatient in any Hereſie or Sin, which is contrary to the common Nature of Chriſtianity or Godlineſs, and ſo unfit for Catholick Communion, he is to be caſt out of Chriſtian Communion: But if ſome particular Church do impoſe any unneceſſary Doctrine or Practices, and he dare not approve it, or joyn in it (be it right or wrong;) yea, or if he withdraw himſelf from one Church, through the badneſs of the Miniſter, or through any falling out between them, and joyn to another that hath a Miniſter more ſuitable to his caſe. Theſe are not crimes to be puniſhed with ejection from Catholick Communion. He that is not fit for Communion with ſome one particular Church, may be fit for Communion with many others, that give him no ſuch occaſion of diſſentance or diſtaſte. Without Catholick Principles, Perſecution will not be avoided.

Dir. 15. §. 35. Direct. 15. Let Church Union and Communion be laid upon none but Catholick Terms, which are poſſible and fit for all to be agreed in. Common Reaſon will tell any impartial Man, that there can be no more effectual Engine to divide the Churches, and raiſe Contentions and Perſecutions, than to make Laws for Church-Communion requiring ſuch Conditions, as it is certain the Members cannot conſent to. If any Man knew that my Opinion is againſt the Doctrine of Tranſubſtantion, or of the Dominicans Predetermination, and he would make a Law, That no Man ſhall have Communion with that Church who ſubſcribeth not to theſe, he unavoidably excludeth me (unleſs I be ſuch a Beaſt, as to believe nothing ſoundly, and therefore to ſay any thing.) If ever the Churches agree, and Chriſtians be reconciled, it muſt be by leaving out all dividing Impoſitions, and requiring nothing as neceſſary to Communion, which all may not rationally be expected to conſent in. Now theſe Catholick Principles of Communion muſt be ſuch as theſe. Dir. 15. See my Treatiſe, of A true Catholick, and Catholick Church.

1. Such Points of Faith only as conſtitute Chriſtianity, and which every upright Chriſtian holdeth; and therefore only ſuch as are contained in our Baptiſmal Covenant or Profeſſion, which maketh us Chriſtians; and not thoſe other which only ſome ſtronger Chriſtians believe or underſtand; becauſe the weak are not to be caſt out of the Family of Chriſt.

2. Such Points as the Primitive Churches did agree in, and not Innovations, which they never practiced or agreed in: For they are our Pattern, and were better than we; and no more can be neceſſary to our Concord and Communion, than was to theirs. See Vincent. Lerinenſ.

3. Such Points as all the Church hath ſometime or other at leaſt agreed in: For what Reaſon can we have to think that the Churches ſhould now agree in that, which they never hitherto agreed in.

4. Such Points as all the true Chriſtians in the World are now agreed in: For otherwiſe we ſhall exclude ſome true Chriſtians from our Chriſtian Communion.

5. No Points of Worſhip, much leſs of Modes and Circumſtances, which are not neceſſary, and more neceſſary to the Churches good, than is the Communion of all thoſe Perſons, who by diſſenting are like to be ſeparated or caſt out; and whoſe omiſſion would not do more hurt than this ſeparation and diviſion is like to do.

6. Eſpecially no ſuch things muſt be made neceſſary to Communion, as the moſt Conſcientious are ordinarily fearful of and averſe to, and may be forborn without any great detriment to godlineſs.

Object. §. 36. Object. But, it will be ſaid, that Catholick Communion indeed requireth no more than you ſay: But particular Churches may require more of their Members; for that may be neceſſary or fit for a Member of this particular Church, which is not ſo to all.

Anſw. Catholick Communion is that which all Chriſtians and Churches have with one another, and the terms of it are ſuch as all Chriſtians may agree in. Catholick Communion is principally exiſtent and exerciſed in particular Churches, (as there is no exiſtent Chriſtianity or Faith, which exiſteth not in individual Chriſtians.) Therefore if one particular Church may ſo narrow the door of its Communion, then another and another, and every one may do ſo; if not by the ſame particular Impoſitions, yet by ſome other of the like nature; for what power one Church hath herein, others have; and then Catholick Communion will be ſcarce found exiſtent externally in the World: But a meer Catholick Chriſtian would be denied Communion in every particular Church he cometh to.

to. And how do you hold Catholick Communion, when you will admit no meer Catholick Chriſtian as ſuch to your Communion, but only ſuch as ſupererogate according to your private Church terms?

2. But grant that every Church may impoſe more upon its Members, it muſt be only that which is neceſſary to thoſe common things which all agree in; and then the neceſſity will be diſcernable to all ſober minded Perſons, and will prevent diviſions; as it is neceſſary that he that will communicate with our Churches, do join with them in the ſame Tranſlation of Scripture, and Verſion of Pſalms, and under the ſame Paſtor, as the reſt of the Church doth: For here the Church cannot uſe variety of Paſtors, Tranſlations, Verſions, &c. to fit the variety of Mens humours; there is an evident neceſſity, that if they will be one Society, they muſt agree in the ſame, in each of theſe. Therefore when the Church hath united in one, if any Man refuſe that one perſon or way which the Church is neceſſarily united in, he refuſeth Communion with that Church, and the Church doth not excommunicate him! But if that Church agree on things hurtful or unneceſſary, as neceſſary to its Communion, it muſt bear the blame of the Separations it ſelf.

3. And grant yet that ſome Churches cannot admit ſuch ſcrupulous Perſons to her Communion as dare not join in every punctilio, circumſtance or mode: It doth not follow that thoſe Perſons muſt therefore be excommunicated, or forbidden to worſhip God among themſelves without that which they ſcruple; or to join in, or with a Congregation which impoſeth no ſuch things upon them. Perſecution will unavoidably come in, upon ſuch domineering narrow terms as thoſe. The Man is a Chriſtian ſtill; though he ſcruple one of our Modes or Ceremonies, and is capable of Catholick Communion. And if private and little inconveniences ſhall be thought a ſufficient cauſe, to forbid all ſuch the publick worſhipping of God, on pretence that in one Nation, there muſt not be variety of modes, this is a dividing Principle, and not Catholick, and plungeth Men into the guilt of Perſecution. It was not ſo in the Churches of the Roman Empire. In the day of Baſil his Church, and that at Neocæſarea differed; and ordinarily ſeveral Biſhops uſed ſeveral Forms of Prayer and Worſhip, in their ſeveral Churches, without offence. And further,

Dir. 16. § 37. Direct. 16. Different faults muſt have different penalties: And excommunication or forbidding men all publick worſhip of God, muſt not be the penalty of every diſſent. Is there no ſmaller penalty ſufficient, if a doubtful ſubſcription or ceremony be ſcrupled, than to ſilence Miniſters therefore from Preaching the Goſpel, or excommunicating Men, and forbidding them to worſhip God at all, except they can do this? This is the higheſt Eccleſiaſtical Penalty that can be laid on Men for the greateſt hereſie or crime. Doubtleſs there are leſſer puniſhments that may ſuffice for leſſer faults.

Dir. 17. §. 38. Direct. 17. Every friend of Chriſt, and the Church, muſt chuſe ſuch penalties for Miniſters and private Chriſtians, who offend, as are leaſt to the hinderance of the Goſpel, or hurtful to the Peoples Souls. Therefore ſilencing Miniſters is not a fit penalty for every fault which they commit! The Providence of God (as I ſaid before) hath furniſhed the World with ſo few that are fit for that high and ſacred Work, that no Man can pretend that they are ſupernumeraries, or unneceſſary, and that others may be ſubſtituted to the Churches profit: For the number is ſo ſmall, that all are much too few; and ſo many as are ſilenced, ſo many Churches (either the ſame or others) muſt be unſupplied or ill. And God working ordinarily by means, we may conclude, that ſilencing of ſuch Preachers, doth as plainly tend to Mens damnation, as the prohibiting of Phyſicians doth to their Death, and more. And it is not the part of a friend, either of God or Men, to endeavour the damnation of one Soul, much leſs of multitudes, becauſe a Miniſter hath diſpleaſed him. If one Man muſt pay for another Mans ſins, let it be a pecuniary mulct, or the loſs of a Member, rather than the loſs of his Soul. It is more merciful every time a Miniſter offendeth, to cut off a hand, or an arm of ſome of his Flock, than to ſay to him, Teach them no more the way to Salvation, that ſo they may be damned. If a Father offend, and his Children muſt needs pay for all his faults, it is better to beat the Children or maim them, than forbid him to feed them, when there is none elſe to do it, and ſo to famiſh them. What Reaſon is there that Mens Souls ſhould be untaught, becauſe a Miniſter hath offended? I know ſtill, thoſe Men that care not for their own Souls, and therefore care as little for others, will ſay, What if the People have but a Reader, or a weak, ignorant, lifeleſs Preacher? Doth it therefore follow that the People muſt be damned? I anſwer, No: No more than it followeth, that the City that hath none but Women-Phyſicians muſt die of their ſickneſſes, or that they that live only upon Graſs or Roots muſt famiſh. Nature may do more to overcome a Diſeaſe without a Phyſician in one than in another. Some perhaps are converted already, and have the Law written in their hearts, and are taught of God, and can make ſhift to live without a Teacher: But for the reſt, whoſe diſeaſes need a skilful diligent Phyſician; whoſe ignorance and impenitence extreamly needeth a skilful diligent lively Teacher, he that depriveth them of ſuch, doth take the probable courſe to damn them! And it is the ſame courſe which the Devil himſelf would take; and he partly knoweth what tendeth to Mans damnation! He that knoweth what a caſe the Heathen, Infidel, Mahometan World is in for want of Teachers; and what a caſe the Greek Church, the Moſcovites, the Abaſſines, Syrians, Armenians, Papiſts, and moſt of the Chriſtians of the World are in, for want of able, ſkilful, godly Paſtors, will lay his hand on his mouth, and meddle with ſuch Reaſonings as theſe no more.

Object. But by this device you will have the Clergy lawleſs, or as tht Papiſts, exempt them from the Magiſtrates puniſhments, for fear of depriving the People of inſtruction. Object.

Anſw. No ſuch matter: It is the contrary that I am adviſing; I would have them puniſhed more ſeverely than other Men, as their ſins are more aggravated than other Mens. Yea, and I would have them ſilenced when it is meet, and that is in two caſes. Viz. 1. If they commit ſuch capital crimes, as God and Man would have puniſhed with death, it is fit they die, (and then they are ſilenced:) For in this caſe it is ſuppoſed that their lives, (by their impunity) are like to do more hurt than good. 2. If their Hereſie, Inſufficiency, Scandal, or any fault whatever, do make them more hurtful than profitable to the Church, it is fit they be caſt out. If their Miniſtry be not like to do more good, than their faults to do harm, let them be ſilenced! But if it be otherwiſe, then let them be puniſhed in their Bodies or Purſes, rather than the Peoples Souls ſhould ſuffer. The Laws have variety of Penalties for other Men! Will none of thoſe ſuffice for Miniſters? Anſw.

But alas? What talk I of their faults! Search all Church Hiſtory, and obſerve whether in all ages Miniſters have not been ſilenced rather for their duties, than their faults; or, for not ſubſcribing to ſome unneceſſary opinion or impoſition of a prevailing party; or about ſome wrangling Controverſies which Church diſturbers ſet afoot: There is many a poor Miniſter would work in Bridewel, or be tied to ſhovel the Streets all the reſt of the Week, if he might but have liberty to preach the Goſpel! And would not ſuch a penalty be ſufficient, for a diſſent in ſome unneceſſary point? As it is not every fault that a Magiſtrate is depoſed for by the Soveraign, but ſuch as make him unfit for the place; ſo is it alſo with the Miniſters.

Dir. 18. §. 39. Direct. 18. Malignity and prophaneneſs muſt not be gratified or encouraged. It muſt be conſidered, How the carnal mind is enmity againſt God; for it is not ſubject to his Law, nor can be: And that enmity is put between the Womans, and the Serpents ſeed; and that the whole buſineſs of the World, is but the proſecution of the War, between the Armies of Chriſt and Satan; and that malignity inclineth the ungodly World, to ſlander and reproach the Servants of the Lord; and they are glad of any opportunity to make them odious, or to exaſperate Magiſtrates againſt them; and that their ſilencing and fall, is the joy of the ungodly. And if there be any civil differences or ſidings, the ungodly rabble will take that ſide, be it right or wrong, which they think will do moſt to the downfal of the godly, whom they hate. Therefore beſides the merits of the particular cauſe, a Ruler that regardeth the intereſt of the Goſpel, and Mens Salvation, muſt have ſome care that the courſe which he taketh againſt godly Miniſters and People, when they diſpleaſe him, be ſuch as doth not ſtrengthen the hands of evil doers, nor harden them, increaſe them, or make them glad. I do not ſay, that a Ruler muſt be againſt what ever the ungodly part is for; or that he muſt be for that which the major part of godly Men are for, (I know this is a deceitful Rule.) But yet that which pleaſeth the malignant rabble, and diſpleaſeth or hurteth the generality of godly Men, is ſo ſeldom pleaſing to God, that it is much to be ſuſpected.

Rom. 8. 7, 8. Gen. 3. 15.

Dir. 19. §. 40. Direct. 19. The ſubſtance of Faith and the practice of Godlineſs muſt be valued above all opinions, and parties, and worldly intereſts: And godly Men accounted, as they are, (cæteris paribus) the beſt Members both of Church and State. If Rulers once knew the difference between a Saint and a Senſualiſt, a vile perſon would be contemned in their eyes, and they would honour them that fear the Lord, Pſal. 15. 4. And if they honoured them as God commandeth them, they would not perſecute them; and if the promoting of practical Godlineſs were their deſign, there were little danger of their oppreſſing thoſe that muſt be the inſtruments of propagating it, if ever it proſper in the World.

Dir. 20. §. 41. Direct. 20. To this end, Remember the near and dear Relation which every true Believer ſtandeth in, to God, the Father, Son, and Holy Ghoſt. They are called by God, His peculiar treaſure, his jewels, his children, the Members of Chriſt, the Temples of the Holy Ghoſt: God dwelleth in them by love, and Chriſt by faith, and the Spirit by all his ſanctifying gifts. If this were well believed, Men would more reverence them on Gods account, than cauſeleſly to perſecute them. Zech. 2. 8. He that toucheth you, toucheth the apple of my eye.

Exod. 19. 5. 1 Pet. 2. 9. Tit. 2. 14. 2 Cor. 6. 16, 17, 18. Mal. 3. 17, 18. Eph. 3. 17. 1 Cor. 3. 16 2 Tim. 1. 14 1 Joh. 4. 15, 16.

Dir. 21. §. 42. Direct. 21. Look not ſo much on Mens infirmities, as to overlook or make light of all that is good in them. But look as much at the good, as at the evil; and then you will ſee reaſon for lenity, as well as for ſeverity; and for love and tenderneſs, rather than for hatred and perſecution: And you will diſcern that thoſe may be ſerviceable to the Church, in whom blinded malice can ſee nothing worthy of honour or reſpect.

Dir. 22. §. 43. Direct. 22. Eſtimate and uſe all leſſer matters, as means to ſpiritual worſhip and practical holineſs. If there be any thing of worth in Controverſies, and Ceremonies, and ſuch other matters of inferior rank, it is as they are a means to the power of Godlineſs, which is their end. And if once they be no otherwiſe eſteemed, they will not be made uſe of againſt the intereſt of Godlineſs, to the ſilencing of the Preachers, and perſecuting the Profeſſors of it.

§. 44. Direct. 23. Remember that the Underſtanding is not free (ſave only participative, as it is ſubject to the will.) It acteth of it ſelf per modum naturæ, and is neceſſitated by its object (further than as it is under the power of the will.) A Man cannot hold what opinion he would himſelf, nor be againſt what he would not have to be true; much leſs can he believe as another Man commandeth him. My underſtanding is not at my own command; I cannot be of every Mans belief that is uppermoſt. Evidence and not force, is the natural means to compel the mind; even as goodneſs and not force, is the natural means to win Mens Love. It is as wiſe a thing to ſay, Love me, or I will kill thee; as to ſay, [Believe me, or I will kill thee.]

§. 45. Direct. 24. Conſider that it is eſſential to Religion, to be above the authority of Man, (unleſs as they ſubſerve the authority of God.) He that worſhippeth a God that is ſubject to any Man, muſt ſubject his Religion to that Man. (But this is no Religion, becauſe it is no God whom he worſhippeth:) But if the God, whom I ſerve, be above all Men, my Religion or Service of him, muſt needs be alſo above the will of Men. Dir. 23.

§. 46. Direct. 25. Conſider that an obedient diſpoſition towards Gods Law, and a tender Conſcience which feareth in the ſmalleſt matter to offend him, is a ſubſtantial part of holineſs, and of great neceſſity to Salvation. It is part of the excellency of the Soul; and therefore to be greatly encouraged by Governours. To drive this out of the World, is to drive out Godlineſs, and make Men rebels againſt their Maker. And nothing is more certain, than that the violent impoſing of unneceſſary diſputable things in the Worſhip of God, doth unavoidably tend either to debauch the Conſcience, and drive Men from their obedience to God, or to deſtroy them; or undo them in the World: For it is not poſſible, that all conſcionable Perſons ſhould diſcern the lawfulneſs of all ſuch diſputable things. Dir. 25.

§. 47. Direct. 26. Remember that ſuch violence in doubtful matters, is the way to ſet up the moſt debauched Atheiſts, and conſequently to undo Church and Commonwealth. For whatever Oaths or Subſcriptions you require, he that believeth not, that there is a God or a Devil, a Heaven or a Hell, will yield to all, and make no more of Perjury or a Lie, than to eat a bit of Bread! If you caſt out all Miniſters that will not ſwear or ſubſcribe this or that form about things doubtful, you will caſt out never an Atheiſt, or debauched Infidel by it. All that have no Conſcience, will be kept in; and all that are true to God, and their Conſcience, if they think it is ſin which you require of them, will be caſt out. And whither this tendeth, you may eaſily foreſee. Dir. 26.

§. 48. Direct. 27. Remember that if by force you do prevail with a Man to go againſt his Conſcience, you do but make him diſſemble and lye. And if Hypocrites be not hateful to you, why do you cry out ſo much againſt Hypocrites (where you cannot prove your accuſation?) But if they be ſo hateful, why do you ſo eagerly make Men Hypocrites? Whatever their Tongues may ſay, you can ſcarce believe your ſelves, that Priſons or Fire will change Mens judgments in matters of Faith, and duty to God. Dir. 27.

§. 49. Direct. 28. Conſider not only whether the thing which you impoſe be ſin in it ſelf, but alſo what it is to him that thinketh it a ſin. His own doubting Conſcience may make that a ſin to him, which is no ſin to another. And he that doubteth (whether ſuch or ſuch a Meat be lawful) is condemned if he eat, becauſe he eateth not of Faith: For whatſoever is not of Faith is ſin, Rom. 14. 23. And is it like to be damnation to him that doth it againſt his Conſcience? And will you drive on any Man towards damnation? Deſtroy not him with thy meat for whom Chriſt died, Rom. 14. 15. 1 Cor. 8. 11. Dir. 28.

§. 50. If it be objected, That then there will be no Object.

Government, if every Man muſt be left to his own Conſcience. I anſwer, That the Holy Ghoſt did not fear ſuch Objecters, when he laid down this Doctrine here expreſt. 1. It is eaſie to diſtinguiſh between things neceſſary, and things unneceſſary. 2. And between great Penalties and ſmall. And Firſt, It followeth, not that a Man muſt be left to his own Conſcience in every thing, becauſe he muſt be ſo in ſome things. In things neceſſary, as it is a ſin to do them doubtingly, ſo it may be a greater ſin to leave them undone; (As for a Man to maintain his Family, or defend his King, or hear the Word of God, &c.) He that can ſay, My Conſcience is againſt it, muſt not be excuſed from a neceſſary duty: And he that can ſay, My Conſcience bids me do it, muſt not be excuſed in a ſin. But yet the Apoſtle knew what he ſaid, when he (that was a greater Church Governour than you) determined the caſe of mutual forbearance, as in Rom. 14. and 15. and 1 Cor. 8. Secondly, And he is not wholly left to himſelf, who is puniſhed with a ſmall penalty for a ſmall offence: For if a Man muſt be ſtill puniſhed more, as long as he obeyeth God, and his Conſcience before Men, an honeſt Man muſt not be ſuffered to live. For he will certainly do it to the death.

Dir. 29. §. 51. Direct. 29. Remember the wonderful variety of Mens apprehenſions, which muſt be ſuppoſed in all Laws! Mens Faces are ſcarce more various and unlike, than their Underſtandings are: For beſides that Nature hath diverſified Intellects as well as Faces; the diverſity and unlikeneſs is much increaſed, by variety of Educations, Company, Repreſentations, Accidents, Cogitations, and many other Cauſes. It is wiſer to make Laws, that all Men ſhall take the ſame Phyſick, or eat only the ſame Meat, or that all Shooes ſhall be of a ſize, and all Cloaths of the ſame bigneſs, upon ſuppoſition, That all Mens Health, or Appetite, or Feet, or Bodies, are alike; than to make Laws that all Men ſhall agree (or ſay that they agree) in every Opinion, Circumſtance, or Ceremony, in Matters of Religion.

Dir. 30. §. 52. Direct 30. Remember eſpecially, that moſt Chriſtians are ignorant, and of weak Underſtandings, and not able to make uſe of all the diſtinctions and ſubtilties which are needful, to bring them over to your mind in doubtful and unneceſſary things. Therefore the Laws which will be the means of Peace, muſt ſuppoſe this weakneſs and ignorance of moſt Subjects! And how convenient it is, to ſay to a poor ignorant Chriſtian, [Know this, or profeſs this or that, which the ableſt godly Paſtors themſelves are not agreed in, or elſe thou ſhalt be impriſoned or baniſhed] I leave to equal Men to judge.

Dir. 31. §. 53. Direct. 31. Humane Infirmities muſt be ſuppoſed in the beſt and ſtrongeſt Chriſtians. All have their errors and their faults, Divines themſelves as well as others. Therefore either ſome errors and faults muſt be accounted tolerable, or elſe no two Perſons muſt tolerate one another in the World, but kill on till the ſtrongeſt only ſhall ſurvive. Gal. 6. 1, 2. Brethren, if a Man be overtaken in a fault, ye which are ſpiritual, reſtore ſuch a one in the Spirit of meekneſs; conſidering thy ſelf, leſt thou alſo be tempted. Bear ye one anothers burdens, and ſo fulfil the Law of Chriſt. And if the ſtrong muſt be born with themſelves, then they that are ſtrong ought to bear the Infirmities of the weak, and not to pleaſe themſelves: but every one to pleaſe his Neighbour for his good to edification: For even Chriſt pleaſed not himſelf, &c. Rom. 15. 1. 2, 3. And him that is weak in the Faith we muſt receive, but not to doubtful diſputations, Rom. 14. 1.

Dir. 32. §. 54. Direct. 32. The Paſtors muſt not be impatient under the abuſes which they receive from weak or diſtempered Brethren. We muſt excel others in patience and meekneſs and forbearance, as much as we do in knowledge and in other graces. If the Nurſe or Mother will take every Word or Action of the Child, as if it were the injury of an Enemy, there will be no preſervation of the Family in peace! If Children cry, or fight, or chide, or make any fowl or troubleſome work, the Mother will not therefore turn them out of doors, or uſe them like ſtrangers, but remember that it is her place and duty to bear with that weakneſs which ſhe cannot cure. The proud impatience of the Paſtors hath frequently brought them into the guilt of Perſecution, to the alienating of the Peoples hearts, and the diſtraction and diviſion of the Churches: when poor ſilly-pered Perſons are offended with them, and it may be revile them, and call them Seducers, or Anti-chriſtian, or Superſtitious, or what their Pride and Paſſion ſhall ſuggeſt; or if ſome weak ones raiſe up ſome erroneous Opinions; alas many Paſtors have no more wit or grace or pity, than preſently to be rough with them and revile them again, and ſeek to right themſelves by ways of force, and club down very error and contention, when they ſhould overcome them by evidence of Truth, and by Meekneſs, Patience and Love. (Though there be place alſo for ſeverity, with turbulent, implacable, impenitent Hereticks.)

Dir. 33. §. 55. Direct. 33. Time of learning and overcoming their miſtakes, muſt be allowed to thoſe that are miſinformed. We muſt not turn thoſe of the lower forms out of Chriſt's School, becauſe they learn not as much as thoſe of the higher forms in a few weeks or years. The Holy Ghoſt teacheth thoſe, who for the time might have been Teachers of others, and yet had need to be taught the firſt Principles, Heb. 5. 11, 12. He doth not turn them out of the Church for their Non-proficiency; and where there is ignorance, there will be error.

Dir. 34. §. 56. Direct. 34. Some inconveniences muſt be expected and tolerated, and no perfect Order or Concord expected here on earth. It is not good reaſoning to ſay, If we ſuffer theſe Men, they will cauſe this or that diſorder or inconvenience: But you muſt alſo conſider whither you muſt drive it, if you ſuffer them not; and what will be the conſequents: He that will follow his Conſcience to a Priſon, will likely follow it to death. And if nothing but Death or Priſon or Baniſhment can reſtrain them from what they take to be their duty, it muſt be conſidered how many muſt be ſo uſed; and whether (if they were truly faulty) they deſerve ſo much: and if they do, yet whether the evils of the Toleration or of the puniſhment are like to be the greater. Peace and Concord will never be perfect, till Knowledge and Holineſs be perfect.

Dir. 35. §. 57. Direct. 35. You may go further in reſtraining than in conſtraining; in forbidding Men to preach againſt approved Doctrines or Practices of the Church, than in forcing them to preach for them, or to ſubſcribe or ſpeak their approbation or aſſent: If they be not Points or Practices of great neceſſity, a Man may be fit for the Miniſtry and Church-communion, who meddleth not with them, but Preacheth the wholeſome truths of the Goſpel, and lets them alone. And, becauſe no duty is at all times a duty, a ſober Mans Judgment will allow him to be ſilent at many an error, when he dare not ſubſcribe to or approve the leaſt. But if here any proud and cruel Paſtors, ſhall come in with their leſſer ſelfiſh incommodities, and ſay, If they do not approve of what we ſay and do, they will ſecretly foment a Faction againſt us; I ſhould anſwer them, that as good Men will foment no Faction, ſo if ſuch proud, impatient, turbulent Men will endure none that ſubſcribe not to all their Opinions, or differ from them in a Circumſtance or a Ceremony, they ſhall raiſe a greater Faction (if they'll call it ſo) againſt themſelves, and make the People look on them as Tyrants, and not as Paſtors, and they ſhall ſee in the end, when they have bought their wit by dear experience, that they have but torn the Church in pieces, by preventing Diviſions by carnal means, and that they have loſt themſelves by by being over zealous for themſelves; and that DOCTRINE and LOVE are the Inſtruments of a wiſe Shepherd, that loveth the Flock, and underſtands his work.

Dir. 36. §. 58. Direct. 36. Diſtinguiſh between the making of new Laws or Articles of belief, and the puniſhing of Men for the Laws already made; And think not that we muſt have new Laws or Canons, every time the old ones are broken, or that any Law can be made which can keep it ſelf from being broken. Perverſneſs in this error hath brought the Church to the miſery which it endureth. God hath made an Univerſal Law ſufficient for the Univerſal Church, in matters of Faith and Holy Practice; leaving it to Men to determine of neceſſary Circumſtrnces which were unfit for an Univerſal Law: And if the ſufficiency of God's Law, were acknowledged in Mens Practices, the Churches would have had more peace: But when particular Countreys have their particular Volumes of Articles, Confeſſions Liturgies, and I know not what elſe to be ſubſcribed to, and none muſt Preach that will not ſay or write or ſwear, [that he believeth all this to be true and good, and nothing in it to be againſt the Word of God] this Engine wracks the Limbs of the Churches all to pieces; And then whats the pretence for this epidemical Calamity? Why no better than this [Every Heretick will ſubſcribe to the Scriptures, and take it in his own ſence:] And what followeth? Muſt we needs therefore have new Laws which Hereticks will not ſubſcribe to, or which they cannot break? It is the Commendation of Gods Law, as fit to be the means of Unity, that all are ſo eaſily agreed to it in terms, and therefore would agree in the ſenſe if they underſtood it. But they will not do ſo by the Laws of Men. All, or many Hereticks in the Primitive times, would profeſs aſſent to the Churches Creed; no doubt in a corrupt and private ſenſe; But the Churches did not therefore make new Creeds; till above Three hundred years after Chriſt, they began to put in ſome particular words to obviate Hereticks, which Hilary complained of as the cauſe of all their Diviſions; And what if Hereticks will ſubſcribe to all you bid them, and take it in their own corrupted ſenſe? Muſt you therefore be ſtill making new Laws and Articles, till you meet with ſome which they cannot miſ-underſtand, or dare not thus abuſe? What if Men will miſ-interpret and break the Laws of the Land? Muſt they be made new till none can miſ-expound or violate them? Sure there is a wiſer way than this. Gods word containeth inſufficient Expreſſions, all that is neceſſary to be ſubſcribed to; Require none therefore to ſubſcribe to any more, (in matters of Faith or holy Practice; But if you think any Articles need a ſpecial Interpretation, let the Church give her ſenſe of thoſe Articles; and if any Man Preach againſt that ſenſe, and corrupt the Word of God which he hath ſubſcribed, let his fault be proved, and let him be admoniſhed and cenſured as it deſerves: Cenſured I ſay, not for not ſubſcribing more than Scripture, but for corrupting the Scriptures to which he hath ſubſcribed, or breaking Gods Laws which he promiſed to obſerve.

Dir. 37. §. 59. Direct. 37. The good of Men, and not their ruine muſt be intended in all the Diſcipline of the Church: or the good of the Church, when we have but little hope of theirs. If this were done, it would eaſily be perceived, that Perſecution is an unlikely means to do good by.

Dir. 38. §. 60. Direct. 38. Neither unlimited Liberty in matters of Religion muſt be allowed, nor unneceſſary force and rigour uſed, but Tolerable differences and parties muſt be tolerated, and intollerable ones by the wiſeſt means ſuppreſt: And to this end, by the Counſel of the moſt prudent, peaceable Divines, the Tolerable and the Intolerable muſt be ſtatedly diſtinguiſhed! And thoſe that are only Tolerated, muſt be under a Law for their Toleration, preſcribing them their terms of good behaviour; and thoſe that are approved, muſt moreover have the Countenance and Maintenance of the Magiſtrate: And if this were done, 1. The advantage of the ſaid Encouragement from Governours. 2. With the regulation of the Toleration, and the Magiſtrates careful Government of the tolerated, would prevent both Perſecution, and moſt of the Diviſions and Calamities of the Church. Thus did the antient Chriſtian Emperours and Biſhops: (And was their experience nothing?) The Novatians (as good and Orthodox Men) were allowed their own Churches and Biſhops even in Conſtantinople, at the Emperours Noſe. Eſpecially if it be made the work of ſome Juſtices, 1. To judge of Perſons to be tolerated, and grant them Patents. 2. And to over-rule them and puniſh them when they deſerve it; No other way would avoid ſo many inconveniences.

Dir. 39. §. 61. Direct. 39. The things intolerable are theſe two; 1. (Not the believing, but) the preaching and propagating of Principles contrary to the eſſentials of Godlineſs or Chriſtianity, or Government, Juſtice, Charity or Peace. 2. The turbulent, unpeaceable management of thoſe Opinions which in themſelves are tolerable. If any would Preach againſt the Articles of the Creed, the Petitions of the Lord's Prayer, or any of the Ten Commandments, he is not to be ſuffered: And if any that is orthodox, do in their ſeparated Meetings, make it their buſineſs to revile at others, and deſtroy Mens Charity, or to ſtir Men up to Rebellion or Sedition, or contempt of Magiſtracy; none of this ſhould be endured.

§. 62. As for thoſe Libertines, that under the name of Liberty of Conſcience do plead for a Liberty of ſuch vitious Practices, and in order thereto, would prove, that the Magiſtrate hath nothing to do in matters of Religion, I have Preached and Wrote ſo much againſt them, whileſt that Error raigned, and I find it ſo unſeaſonable, now the conſtitution of things looks another way, that I will not weary my ſelf and the Reader with ſo unneceſſary a task as to confute them. Only I ſhall ſay, that Rom. 13. telleth us that Rulers are a terrour to them that do evil: and that Hereticks and turbulent fire-brands do evil: therefore Rulers ſhould be a terror to them; And that if all things are to be done to the glory of God, and his intereſt is to be ſet higheſt in the World, then Magiſtrates and Government are for the ſame end; And if no Action which we do, is of ſo baſe a nature, as ultimately to be terminated in the concernments of the fleſh, much leſs is Government ſo vile a thing, when Rulers are in Scripture called Gods, as being the Officers of God.

Dir. 40. §. 63. Direct. 40. Remember death, and live together as Men that are near dying, and muſt live together in another World. The fooliſh expectation of proſperity and long life, is it which ſetteth Men together by the ears. When Ridley and Hooper were both in Priſon, and preparing for the Flames, their contentions were ſoon ended, and Ridley repented of his perſecuting way. If the Perſecutors and perſecuted were ſhut up together in one houſe that hath the Plague, in the time of this lamentable Contagion, it's two to one but they would be reconciled. When Men ſee that they are going into another World, it takes off the edge of their bitterneſs and violence, and the apprehenſions of the righteous Judgment of God, doth awe them into a patience and forbearance with each other. Can you perſecute that Man on Earth, with whom you look to dwell in Heaven? (But to reſtrain a Man from damning Souls, by Hereſie or Turbulency or any ſuch courſe, my Conſcience would not forbid it me if I were dying)

Dir. 41. §. 64. Direct. 41. Let the Proud themſelves who will regard no higher motives, remember how Fame and Hiſtory will repreſent them to poſterity when they are dead. There is no Man that desireth his name should stink and be odious to future Generations; There is nothing that an ambitious Man desireth more, than a great surviving name. And will you knowingly and wilfully then expose it to perpetual contempt and hatred? Read over what History you please, and find out the name of one Persecutor if you can, that is not now a word of ignominy, and doth not rot, as God hath threatned? If you say, that it is only in the esteem of such as I, or the persecuted party; neither your Opinion shall be judge nor mine; but the Opinion and Language of Historians, and of the wisest Men, who are the Masters of Fame. Certainly that Report of Holy Scripture and History which hath prevailed, will still prevail; and while there are wise and good, and merciful Men in the World, the Names and Manners of the foolish, and wicked, and cruel will be odious; as they continue at this day.

§. 65. I have wrote these Directions to discharge my duty, for those that are willing to escape the guilt of so desperate a sin; But not with any expectation at all, that it should do much good with any considerable number of Persecutors; For they will not read such things as these; And God seldom giveth professed Christians over to this sin, till they have very grievously blinded their minds, and hardened their hearts, and by malignity and obstinacy are prepared for his sorest judgments; and I know that whoever will live godly in Christ Jesus (It is not said Who professeth to believe in Christ Jesus; but to live Godly) shall suffer persecution, and that the Cross must still be the passage to the Crown.

CHAP. XII.

Directions against Scandal as given.

Scandal being a murdering of Souls, is a violation of the general Law of Charity, and of the sixth Commandment in particular. In handling this Subject, I shall 1. Shew you what is true Scandal given to another: 2. What things go under the Name of Scandal, which are not it, but are falsly so named. 3. What are the particular ways and sorts of scandal. 4. The greatness of this sin. 5. Directions to avoid it.

Scandal what it is?

§. 2. I. I shall not need to stand upon the Etymology of the word [Scandal;] whether it come from σκάζω claudico, as Erasmus thought, or from σκάμβον curvum, &c. Martinius, Stephanus, Lyserut, &c. have sufficiently done it, whither I refer you; as for the sense of the word it is past doubt, that the ordinary use of it in Scripture is for a stumbling Block, for a Man to fall upon, or a trap to ensnare a Man; and in the Old Testament it is often used for a stumbling Stone, on which a Man may fall into any corporal calamity, or a snare to hurt or ruin a Man in the World; (As Exod. 10. 7. 1 Sam. 18. 21. & 25. 31. Psal. 119. 165. Ezek. 7. 19. Sept.) But in the New Testament, (which speaketh more of spiritual hurts) it is taken for a stumbling block or temptation, by which a Man is in danger of falling into sin, or spiritual loss, or ruin, or dislike of Godliness, or any way to be turned from God, or hindered in a religious holy way; (and if sometimes it be taken for Grieving or Troubling, it is as it hereby thus hindereth or ensnareth;) so that to Scandalize, is, sometimes taken for the doing of a blameless action, from which another unjustly taketh occasion to fall, or sin, or be perverted; but when it signifieth a sin (as we take it in this place) then to Scandalize is, By something unlawful of itself, or at least unnecessary, which may occasion the spiritual hurt or ruin of another: 1. The matter is either something that is simply sinful (and then it is a double sin) or something indifferent or unnecessary, and then it is simply the sin of Scandal. 2. It must be that which may [occasion] anothers fall; I say [occasion.] For no Man can forcibly cause another Man to sin, but only occasion it, or tempt him to it, as a Moral Cause.

What is not Scandal, that is by many so called?

§. 3. II. By this you may see, 1. That to scandalize, is not meerly to displease, or grieve another; for many a Man is displeased through his folly and vice, by that which tendeth to his good; and many a Man is tempted (that is scandalized) by that which pleaseth him; When Christ saith, [If thy right eye or hand offend, (or scandalize thee) pluck it out, or cut it off,] &c. Mat. 5 he doth not by [offending] mean [displeasing] or [grieving;] for by so offending it may profit us; but he plainly meaneth [If it draw thee to sin;] or else he had never added, that it is better to enter maimed into Life, than having two eyes or hands to be cast into Hell! That is, in a word, [Thy damnation is a greater hurt than the loss of hand or eye, and therefore if there were no other way to avoid it, this would be a very cheap way.] So pedem offendere in lapidem is to stumble upon a stone. The most censorious and humorous sort of Men, have got a notion, that whatever offendeth or displeaseth them is scandalous! And they think that no Man must do any thing which grieveth or displeaseth them, lest he be guilty of scandal; and by this trick whoever can purchase impatiency and pievishness enough, to be always displeased with the actions of others, shall rule the World. But the truth is, the ordinary way of scandaling these Men, is by pleasing them.

§. 4. I will give you one instance of Scandal in Scripture, which may help this sort of People, better to understand it. Gal. 2. 10, to 16. Peter there giveth true scandal to the Jews and Gentiles; He walked not uprightly according to the truth of the Gospel, but laid a stumbling block before the Jews and Gentiles; and this was not by displeasing the Jews, but by pleasing them. The Jews thought it a sin to eat with the Gentiles, and to have Communion with uncircumcised Men. Peter knew the contrary, but for fear of them of the circumcision, lest they should be offended at him as a sinner, he [withdrew and separated himself.] This scandal tended to harden the Jews in their sinful separation, and to seduce the Gentiles into a conceit of the necessity of circumcision; and Barnabas was carried away with the dissimulation. Here you may see, that if any think it a sin in us to have communion in such or such Congregations, with such Persons, in such worship, which God alloweth us not to separate from, it is a sin of scandal in us to separate to avoid these Mens offence. We scandalize them and others, even by pleasing them, and by avoiding that which they falsly called scandalous. And if we would not scandalize them, we must do that which is just, and not by our practice hide the sound Doctrine, which is contrary to their separating error.

§. 5. 2. And it is as apparent that to scandalize another, is not (as is vulgarly imagined by the ignorant,) to do that which is commonly reputed sinful, or which hath the appearance of a sin, or which will make a Man evil thought of, or spoken of by others; yet commonly when Men say, [This is a scandalous action,] they mean, it is an action which is reproachful or of evil report as a sin. And therefore in our English speech it is common to say of one that slandereth another, that he raised a scandal of him. But this is not the meaning of the word in Scripture; materially indeed scandal may consist in any such thing, which may be a stumbling block to another; but formally it is the tempting of another, or occasioning his fall, or ruin, or hurt, which is the nature of scandalizing. And this is done more seldom by committing open disgraceful sins, and doing that which will make the doer evil spoken of; for by that means others are the more assisted against the temptation of imitating him; but scandal is most commonly found in those actions, which are under least reproach among Men, or which have the most plausible plauſible appearance of good in them, when they are evil! For theſe are apter to deceive and overthrow another.

§. 6. 3. And it is alſo apparent, that it is no ſinful ſcandalizing to do a duty or neceſſary action, which I have not power to forbear, though I know that another will be offended, or fall by it into ſin. If God have made it my duty, even at this time, I muſt not diſobey him, and omit my duty, becauſe another will make it an occaſion of his ſin. It muſt be either a ſinful or an indifferent action, that is, ſcandal, or ſomething that is in my own power to do, or to forbear: Yet this muſt be added, that Affirmatives binding not ad ſemper, to all times, and no duty being a duty at every moment, it may oft fall out, that that which elſe would have been my duty at this time, may become at this time no duty but a ſin, by the evil conſequents which I may foreſee; as if another Man will make it an occaſion of his fall. So that this may oblige me to defer a duty to a fitter time and place. For all ſuch duties as have the nature of a means, are never duties when they croſs the intereſt of their chief ends, and make againſt that which they are uſed to effect. And therefore here Chriſtian prudence, foreſeeing conſequents, and weighing the Good and Evil together, is neceſſary to him that will know a duty from a ſin, and a ſcandal from no ſcandal.

The ſorts of ſcandalizing.

§. 7. III. The ſeveral ways of ſcandalizing are theſe following: 1. Scandal is either intended or not intended, either that which is done maliciouſly of ſet purpoſe, or that which is done through negligence, careleſneſs or contempt. Some Men do purpoſely contrive the fall or ruin of another, and this is a Deviliſh aggravation of the ſin: And ſome do hurt to others while they intend it not: Yet this is far from excuſing them from ſin; for it is voluntary as an Omiſſion of the Will, though not as its poſitive choice; that is called voluntary which the will is chargeable with, or culpable of; and it is chargeable with its Omiſſions, and ſluggiſh neglects of the duty which it ſhould do. Thoſe that are careleſs of the conſequent of their actions, and contemn the Souls of other Men, and will go their own way, come of it what will, and ſay, let other Men look to themſelves, are the commoneſt ſort of ſcandalizers; and are as culpable, as a Servant that would leave hot water or fire when the Children are like to fall into it; or that would leave Straw or Gunpowder near the fire, or would leave open the doors, though not of purpoſe to let in the Thieves.

§. 8. 2. Scandal is that which tendeth to anothers fall, either directly or indirectly, immediately or remotely. The former may eaſily be foreſeen; but the latter requireth a large forſeeing comparing underſtanding; yet this kind of ſcandal alſo muſt be avoided; and wiſe Men that would not undo Mens Souls while they think no harm, muſt look far before them, and foreſee what is like to be the conſequent of their actions at the greateſt diſtance and at many removes.

3. Scandals alſo are Aptitudinal or Actual, many things are apt to tempt, and occaſion the ruin of another; which yet never attain ſo bad an end, becauſe God diſappointeth them; but that is no thanks to them that give the ſcandal.

§. 9. 4. Scandal alſo as to the Means of it, is of ſeveral ſorts. 1. By Doctrine; 2. By Perſwaſion; 3. By alluring Promiſes; 4. By Threats; 5. By Violence; 6. By Gifts; 7. By Example; 8. By Omiſſion of duties, and by ſilence; by all theſe ways you may ſcandalize.

§. 10. 1. Falſe Doctrine is directly ſcandalous; for it ſeduceth the judgment, which then miſ-guideth the will, which then miſ-ruleth the reſt of the Faculties. Falſe Doctrine if it be in weighty practical points, is the pernicious plague of Souls and Nations.

§. 11. 2. Alſo the ſollicitations of ſeducers and of tempting People, are ſcandalous, and tend to the ruin of Souls; when People have no reaſon to draw a Man to ſin, they weary him out by tedious importunity. And many a one yields to the earneſtneſs, or importunity, or tediouſneſs of a perſwaſion, who could eaſily reſiſt it, if it came only with pretence of reaſon.

§. 12. 3. Alluring promiſes of ſome gain or pleaſure that ſhall come by ſin, is another ſcandal which doth cauſe the fall of many. The courſe that Satan tryed with Chriſt [All this will I give thee,] was but the ſame which he found moſt ſucceſsful with ſinners in the World. This is a bait which Sinners will themſelves hunt after, if it be not offered them. Judas will go to the Phariſees with a [What will ye give me, and I will deliver him unto you?] Peter ſaith of the ſcandalous Hereticks of his time, They allure through the luſt of the fleſh, through much wantonneſs thoſe that were clean eſcaped from them who live in error: While they promiſe them liberty, they themſelves are the ſervants of corruption, 2 Pet. 2. 18, 19.

§. 13. 4. Threatnings alſo and ſcorns are ſcandals, which frighten unbelieving Souls into ſin: Thus Rabſhekah thought to prevail with Hezekiah Thus Nebuchadnezzar, Dan. 3. thought to have drawn thoſe three Worthies to Idolatry; Thus the Phariſees thought to have frightned the Apoſtles, from Preaching any more in the Name of Chriſt. Acts 4. 17, 21. Thus Saul thought to have perverted the Diſciples, by breathing out threatnings againſt them, Acts 9. 1.

§. 14. 5. And what words will not do, the ungodly think to do by force; and it enrageth them, that any ſhould reſiſt their wills, and that their force is patiently endured. What cruel torments! What various ſorts of heavy ſufferings have the Devil and his inſtruments deviſed, to be ſtumbling blocks to the weak, to affright them into ſin?

§. 15. 1. Gifts alſo have blinded the eyes of ſome who ſeemed wiſe, Exod. 33. 8. As oppreſſion maketh a wiſe man mad, ſo a gift deſtroyeth the heart. What ſcandals have preferments proved to the World, and how many have they ruined? Few are able to eſteem the reproach of Chriſt to be greater riches than the treaſures of the World.

§. 16. 6. And evil examples are the commoneſt ſort of ſcandals; not as they offend or grieve, or are apparently ſinful; but as they ſeem good, and therefore are temptations to the weak to imitate them. So apt are Men to imitation, eſpecially in evil, that they will do what they ſee another do, without examining whether it be juſtifiable or not. Eſpecially if it be the example either of Great Men, or of Learned Men, or of Men reputed eminently Godly, or of a Multitude, any of theſe the People are apt to imitate; This therefore is the common way of ſcandal. When People do that which is evil as if it were good, and thereby draw the ignorant to think it good, and ſo imitate them. Or elſe when they do that which is lawful in it ſelf, in ſuch a manner as tendeth to deceive another, and draw him to that which is indeed unlawful; or to hinder him in any thing that is good. Heb. 11. 26.

§. 17. 8. Laſtly, Even Silence and Omiſſions alſo may be ſcandalous, and draw another into error and ſin. If by ſilence you ſeem to conſent to falſe Doctrine, or to wicked Works, when you have opportunity to control them, hereby you draw others to conſent alſo to the ſin; or if you omit thoſe publick or private duties, which others may be witneſſes of, you tempt them to the like omiſſion, and to think they are no duties, but indifferent things: For in evil they will eaſily reſt in your judgment, and ſay that you are wiſer than they: But they are not ſo ductile and flexible to good.

§. 18. 5. Scandals alſo are diſtinguiſhable by the effects: Which are ſuch as theſe:

1. Some Scandals do tempt Men to actual infidelity, and to deny or doubt of the truth of the Goſpel.

2. Some ſcandals would draw Men but into ſome particular error, and from ſome particular Truth, while he holds the reſt.

3. Some ſcandals draw Men to diſlike and diſtaſte the way of Godlineſs; and ſome to diſlike the Servants of God.

4. Some ſcandals tend to confound Men, and bring them to utter uncertainties in Religion.

5. Some tend to terrifie Men from the way of Godlineſs.

6. Some only ſtop them for a time, and diſcourage or hinder them in their way.

7. Some tend to draw them to ſome particular ſin.

8. And ſome to draw them from ſome particular duty.

9. And ſome tend to break and weaken their Spirits, by grief or perplexity of mind.

10. And as the Word is taken in the Old Teſtament, the Snares that malicious Men lay to intrap others in their Lives, or Liberties, or Eſtates, or Names, are called Scandals. And all theſe ways, a Man may ſinfully ſcandalize another.

§. 19. And that you may ſee that the ſcandal forbidden in the New Teſtament, is always of this nature, let us take notice of the particular Texts where the word is uſed: And firſt to ſcandalize is uſed actively in theſe following Texts. In Matth. 5. before cited, and in the other Evangeliſts citing the ſame words, the ſenſe is clear; that the offending of a hand or eye, is not diſpleaſing, nor ſeeking of ill Report; but hindering our Salvation by drawing us to ſin. So. in Matth. 18. 8. and Mark 9. 42, 43. where the ſenſe is the ſame. In Matth. 17. 27. [Leſt we ſhould offend them, &c.] is not only [Leſt we diſpleaſe them] but leſt we give them occaſion to diſlike Religion, or think hardly of the Goſpel, and ſo lay a ſtumbling block to the danger of their Souls. So Matth. 18. 6. and Mark 9. [Who ſo ſhall offend one of theſe little ones that believe in me, &c.] that is, not who ſhall diſpleaſe them, but who ſo by Threats, Perſecutions, Cruelties, or any other means, ſhall go about to turn them from the Faith of Chriſt, or ſtop them in their way to Heaven, or hinder them in a holy Life: Though theſe two Texts ſeem neareſt to the denied ſenſe, yet that is not indeed their meaning. So in Joh. 6. 6. Doth this offend you? That is, Doth this ſeem incredible to you, or hard to be believed, or digeſted? Doth it ſtop your Faith, and make you diſtaſte my Doctrine? So 1 Cor. 8. 13. If meat ſcandalize my Brother, our Tranſlators have turned it, If meat make my Brother to offend. So it was not diſpleaſing him only, but tempting him to ſin, which is the ſcandalizing here reproved.

§. 20. View alſo the places where the word [Scandal] is uſed, Matth. 13. 41. Πάντα τὰ σκάνδαλα All ſcandals, tranſlated [All things that offend,] doth not ſignifie All that is diſpleaſing; but all temptations to ſin, and hinderances or ſtumbling blocks that would have ſtopt Men in the ways to Heaven. So in Matth. 16.23.(a Text as like as any to be near the denied ſenſe; yet indeed) [Thou art a ſcandal to me] (tranſlated an offence) doth not only ſignifie, Thou diſpleaſeſt me, but, Thou goeſt about to hinder me in my undertaken Office, from ſuffering for the redemption of the World: It was an Aptitudinal ſcandal, though not effectual. So Matth. 18. 7. It muſt be that ſcandals come, (tranſlated Offences) that is, that there be many ſtumbling Blocks ſet before Men in their way to Heaven. So Luk. 17. 1. to the ſame ſenſe. And Rom. 9. 33. I lay in Zion a ſtumbling Stone, and a Rock of ſcandal (tranſlated of offence;) that is, ſuch as will not only be diſpleaſing, but an occaſion of utter ruine to the unbelieving perſecuting Jews; according to that of Simeon, Luk. 2. 34. This Child is ſet for the fall and riſing again of many in Iſrael.) Rom. 11. 9. Let their table be made a ſnare, a trap, and a ſtumbling block. The Greek word εἰς σκάνδαλον doth not ſignifie a diſpleaſure only, but an occaſion of ruine. So Rom. 14. 13. expoundeth it ſelf, [That no Man put a ſtumbling block, or an occaſion to fall into his Brothers way.] The Greek word is [or a ſcandal.] This is the juſt Expoſition of the word in its ordinary uſe in the New Teſtament. So Rom. 16. 17. Mark them which cauſe diviſions and ſcandals (tranſlated Offences;) that is, which lay ſtumbling blocks in the way of Chriſtians,and would trouble them in it,or turn them from it. So 1 Cor. 1. 23. To the Jews a ſtumbling block, that is, a ſcandal (as the Greek word is) as before expounded. So Gal. 5. 11. The ſcandal of the Croſs, tranſlated the offence, doth ſignifie not the bare reproach, but the reproach, as it is the tryal, and ſtumbling block of the World, that maketh believing difficult. So 1 Joh. 2. 10. There is no ſcandal in him, tranſlated, No occaſion of ſtumbling. Theſe are all the places that I remember where the word is uſed:

So Revel. 2. 14. Balaam did Βαλεῖν σκάνδαλον, lay a ſcandal, or ſtumbling block before the Iſraelites; that is, a temptation to ſin.

§. 21. The Paſſive Verb σκανδαλίζομαι, to be ſcandalized, is often uſed. As Matth. 11. 6. Bleſſed is he that is not ſcandalized (tranſlated [offended] in me;) that is, who is not diſtaſted with my Perſon and Doctrine through carnal prejudices; and ſo kept in unbelief: There were many things in the Perſon, Life and Doctrine of Chriſt, which were unſuitable to carnal Reaſon and Expectation. Theſe Men thought to be hard and ſtrange, and could not digeſt them, and ſo were hindered by them from believing: And this was being [offended in Chriſt.] So in Matth. 13. 57. and Mark 6. 3. They were offended in, or at him; that is, took a diſlike or diſtate to him for his words. And Matth. 13. 21. When Perſecution ariſeth, by and by they are offended; that is, they ſtumble and fall away. And Matth. 15. 12. The Phariſees were offended (or ſcandalized;) that is, ſo offended as to be more in diſlike of Chriſt. And Matth. 24. 10. Then ſhall many be offended (or ſcandalized;) that is, ſhall draw back and fall away from Chriſt. And Matth. 26. 31, 33. Mark 14. 27, 29. [All ye ſhall be offended becauſe of me, &c. Though all Men ſhall be offended (or ſcandalized) yet will I never be ſcandalized;] that is, brought to doubt of Chriſt, or to forſake him or deny him, or be hindered from owning their relation to him. So Joh. 16. 1. Theſe things have I ſpoken, that ye ſhould not be offended; that is, that when the time cometh, the unexpected trouble may not ſo ſurprize you, as to turn you from the Faith, or ſtagger you in your obedience or hope, Rom. 14. 21. doth exactly expound it. It is good neither to eat fleſh, or drink wine, or any thing whereby thy Brother ſtumbleth, or is ſcandalized, (or offended) or made weak; it is a making weak. So 2 Cor. 11. 29. Who is offended; that is, ſtumbled, or hindered, or ready to apoſtatize. So much for the nature and ſorts of Scandal.

Luk. 7. 23.

Mark 6. 3.

Mark 4. 17.

§. 22. IV. You are next to obſerve the aggravations of this Sin. Which briefly are ſuch as theſe.

1. Scandal is a murdering of Souls: It is a hindering of Mens Salvation, and an inticing or driving them towards Hell. And therefore in ſome reſpect worſe than murder, as the Soul is better than the Body.

2. Scandal is a fighting againſt Jeſus Chriſt, in his work of Mans Salvation. He came to ſeek and to ſave that which was loſt; and the ſcandalizer ſeeketh to loſe and deſtroy that which Chriſt would ſeek and ſave.

3. Scandal robbeth God of the hearts and ſervice of his Creatures: For it is a raiſing in them a diſtaſte of his People, and Word, and Ways, and of himſelf; and a turning from him the hearts of thoſe that ſhould adhere unto him.

4. Scandal is a ſerving of the Devil, in his proper work of enmity to Chriſt, and perdition of Souls,

Scan-

Scandalizers do his Work in the World, and propagate his Cauſe and Kingdom.

§. 23. V. The means of avoiding the guilt of Scandal, are as followeth.

Dir. 1. §. 23. Direct. 1. Miſtake not (with the vulgar) the nature of Scandal, as if it lay in that offending Men, which is nothing but grieving or diſpleaſing them; or in making your ſelves to be of evil Report: But remember that Scandal, is that offending Men, which tempteth them into ſin; from God and Godlineſs, and maketh them ſtumble and fall, or occaſioneth them to think evil of a holy Life. It is a pitiful thing to hear religious Perſons plead for the ſin of Man-pleaſing, under the name of avoiding ſcandal; yea, to hear them ſet up a uſurped dominion over the lives of other Men, and all by the advantage of the word [ſcandal] miſunderſtood! So that all Men muſt avoid whatever a cenſorious Perſon will call ſcandalous, when he meaneth nothing elſe himſelf by Scandal, than a thing that is of evil Report, with ſuch as he: Yea, Pride it ſelf is often pleaded for by this miſ-underſtanding of Scandal; and Men are taught to overvalue their Reputations, and to ſtrain their Conſciences to keep up their eſteem, and all under pretence of avoiding Scandal; and in the mean time they are really ſcandalous, even in that action, by which they think they are avoiding it. I need no other inſtance, than the caſe of unwarrantable Separation. Some will hold communion with none but the Rebaptiſed; ſome think an impoſed Liturgy is enough to prove communion with ſuch a Church unlawful (at leaſt in the uſe of it;) and almoſt every Sect do make their Differences a Reaſon for their ſeparating from other Churches. And if any one would hold Communion with thoſe that they ſeparate from, they preſently ſay, That it is ſcandalous to do ſo, and to joyn in any worſhip which they think unlawful: And by ſcandal they mean no more, but that it is among them of evil Report, and is offenſive or diſpleaſing to them! Whereas indeed the Argument from ſcandal ſhould move Men to uſe ſuch communion, which erroneous, uncharitable, dividing Men do hold unlawful. For elſe by avoiding that communion, I ſhall lay a ſtumbling block in the way of the weak; I ſhall tempt him to think that a duty is a ſin, and weaken his Charity, and draw him into a ſinful Separation, or the neglect of ſome Ordinances of God, or opportunities of getting good. And it is this Temptation which is indeed the ſcandal. This is before proved in the inſtance of Peter, Gal. 2. who ſcandalized, or hardened the Jews, by yielding to a ſinful Separation from the Gentiles, and fearing the Cenſoriouſneſs of the Jews, whom he ſought to pleaſe; and the offending of whom he was avoiding, when he really offended them, that is, was a ſcandal or temptation to them.

Dir. 2. §. 24. Direct. 2. He that will eſcape the guilt of Scandal, muſt be no contemner of the Souls of others, but muſt be truly charitable, and have a tender love to Souls. That which a Man highly valueth, and dearly loveth, he will be careful to preſerve, and loth to hurt. Such a Man will eaſily part with his own Rights, or ſubmit to Loſſes, Injuries, or Diſgrace, to preſerve his Neighbours Soul from ſin. Whereas a deſpiſer of Souls, will inſiſt upon his own Power, and Right, and Honour, and will intrap and damn a hundred Souls, rather than he will abate a word, or a ceremony which he thinks his intereſt requireth him to exact; Tell him that it will inſnare Mens Souls in ſin, and he is ready to ſay as the Phariſees to Judas, What is that to us? See thou to that. A Dog hath as much pity on a Hare, or a Hawk on a Partridge, as a carnal worldly ambitious Diotrephes, or an Elymas hath of Souls. Tell him that it will occaſion Men to ſin, to wound their Conſciences, to offend their God, it moveth him no more than to tell him of the ſmalleſt incommodity to himſelf: He will do more to ſave a Horſe, or a Dog of his own, than to ſave anothers Soul from ſin! To lay ſnares in their way, or to deprive them of the Preaching of the Goſpel, or other means of their Salvation, is a thing which they may be induced to, by the ſmalleſt intereſt of their own; yea, though it be but a point of ſeeming honour. And therefore when carnal worldly Men do become the diſpoſers of Matters of Religion, it is eaſie to ſee what meaſure and uſage Men muſt expect: Yea, though they aſſume the office and name of Paſtors, who ſhould have the moſt tender fatherly care of the Souls of all the Flocks, yet will their carnal Inclinations and Intereſts ingage them in the Work of Wolves, to intrap, or famiſh, or deſtroy Chriſt's Sheep.

§. 25. Direct. 3. Alſo you muſt be perſons who value your own Souls, and are diligently exerciſed in ſaving them from temptations; or elſe you are very like to be ſcandalizers and tempters of the Souls of others. Dir. 3. And therefore when ſuch a Man is made a Church-Governour as is unacquainted with the renewing Work of Grace, and with the inward Government of Chriſt in the Soul, what deviliſh Work is he like to make among the Sheep of Chriſt, under the name of Government! What corrupting of the Doctrine, Worſhip, or Diſcipline of Chriſt! What inventions of his own to inſnare Mens Conſciences? And driving them on, by armed force, to do that which, at leaſt, to them is ſin, and which can never countervail the loſs, either of their Souls, or of the Church, by ſuch diſturbances! How mercileſs will he be, when a poor Member of Chriſt, ſhall beg of him but to have pity on his Soul? And tell him, I cannot do this, or ſwear this, or ſubſcribe this, without the guilt of a deliberate ſin! And I cannot ſin without diſpleaſing God, and hindering my Salvation. He that dare wilfully ſin himſelf, and make it his deliberate choice, and dare play away his own Salvation at the pooreſt game that the Devil will invite him to, and will ſell his own Soul at the baſeſt price, even for a little pelf, or pleaſure, or high titles for ſo ſhort a time; certainly this Man is unlike to be very tender of the Souls of others, or to ſtick at ſcandalizing and inſnaring them, or to care any more to murder Souls, than a Butcher doth to kill a Hog: Judas his heart will make them ſell their Lord, or his Flock, at Judas his price; and prepare themſelves for Judas his reward. And hence it is, that the carnal Seed even within the Church, hath ordinarily perſecuted the Spiritual Seed. For ſaith Paul, As he that was born after the fleſh, perſecuted him that was born after the Spirit, even ſo it is now, Gal. 4. 29.

§. 26. Direct. 4. To be well acquainted with the methods of Satan, and the way of particular temptations, is a great help againſt your ſcandalizing others. Dir. 4. He that ſeeth the Devil as the principal in each temptation, and knoweth in what manner he ingageth his Inſtruments to carry on his Work, and whither all this tendeth at the laſt, will ſcarce be willing to ſerve ſuch a Maſter in ſo bad a Work. Remember that Scandalizers and Tempters of others, and hinderers of Mens Salvation, are the ſervants of the Devil, and are executing his malice, for the damnation of their Brethrens Souls. And what reward can they expect for ſuch a work from ſuch a Maſter? The Devil uſeth them, but as Men do Ferrets, whoſe mouths are ſealed, becauſe they muſt not partake of the prey; but only bring it to their Maſters hand. Live in a conſtant watchful reſiſtance of Temptations your ſelves, and you will have no mind to the drudgery of tempting others.

§. 27. Direct 5. Set not your ſelves upon any worldly ambitious deſign. Dir. 5. For the love of the riches and honours of the World, will not only ingage you in a courſe of ſinning, but alſo make it ſeem your intereſt, to make others as bad and miſerable as your ſelves, and to drive them on to ſerve your intereſts by their ſin.

§. 28. Direct. 6. Take heed leſt a fleſhly inclination Dir. 6.

do draw you to the love of fleſhly pleaſure! And that your minds be not ſet upon the pleaſing of your fancies, ſenſe, or appetite; either in meat, or drink, or cloaths, or dwellings, or recreations, or any ſuch delights: If once the love of theſe grow ſtrong, it will conquer your Reaſon, and ſeduce it into Libertiniſm, and make you think that a voluptuous fleſh-pleaſing Life, (ſo it be not by groſs diſgraced ſins) is but the lawful uſe of the Creature, which Chriſt hath purchaſed not only for our neceſſity, but for our delight; and that the contrary opinion is but the too much rigor of ſuch as underſtand not their Chriſtian Liberty,

Dir. 7. §. 29. Direct. 7. Be not raſhly and ignorantly zealous in ſoliciting and importuning others to your private opinions, before you are certain that they are of God O what abundance of zeal and labour hath many a Man laid out, to make others of his mind, in the Points of Antinomianiſm, Anabaptiſm, Separation, Popery, &c. thinking that the ſaving of their Souls had lain upon it; and at laſt they find, that as they erred themſelves, ſo all their labour was but to ſcandalize the weak, and lay a ſtumbling block in their way to Heaven?

Dir. 8. §. 30. Direct. 8. Never perſwade any Man, (much leſs compel him) to any thing unneceſſary, which he taketh to be a ſin (whatever you take it for your ſelves.) For if he judge it a ſin, it is a ſin to him! No Man can innocently do that which he thinketh is forbidden him of God. And ſhall a thing unneceſſary be preferred before the ſaving of a Soul? (Yea, before the Souls of Thouſands, as by many mercileſs Men it is.) Indeed, if there be an Antecedent neceſſity (as well as lawfulneſs in the thing) and ſuch a neceſſity as is not in your power to take away, then the doing it will be his ſin, and the not doing it his greater ſin; and the greater ſin, is greatlieſt to be avoided (but by convenient means.)

Dir. 9. §. 31. Direct. 9. Remember the charge which you have of the Souls of one another. Though you be not Magiſtrates or Paſtors: (For their care of Souls is ſo unqueſtionable and ſo great, that ſcandal in them is like Parents murdering their own Children.) Yet no private Man muſt ſay as Cain, Am I my Brothers keeper. Every Man is bound to do his beſt for the ſaving of his Neighbour; much more to forbear infecting, ſeducing, ſcandalizing, and deſtroying him.

Dir. 10. §. 32. Direct. 10. Keep up a ſpecial tenderneſs of the weak. So doth God himſelf, and ſo muſt we. He gathereth the Lambs with his Arms, &c. Iſa. 40. 11. If his Infants cry, he doth not therefore knock out their brains, or turn them out of doors! Nor doth he ſay, They are not his Children, for every ignorance or peeviſh paſſion which they are guilty of. Chriſt doth not turn Men out of his School, becauſe they want knowledge! For why then will he have little Children come? And what do they come for, but to learn? He doth not hate his new born Babes, but feedeth and nurſeth them with a ſpecial tenderneſs: And he hath commanded and communicated the like tenderneſs to his Miniſters; who muſt not be weak with the weak, and froward with the froward; but in meekneſs and patience muſt bear with the weak, and endure their bittereſt cenſures and requitals. For the ſervant of the Lord muſt not ſtrive, but be gentle to all men, apt to teach, patient, in meekneſs inſtructing thoſe that oppoſe themſelves, &c. 2 Tim. 2. 24, 25. And if they are long learning before they come to the knowledge of the Truth, they are not therefore to be caſt off. He that can read, Rom. 14. & 15. & 1 Cor. 12. 12. & 8. &Gal. 6. And yet can be ſo mercileſs and cruel, as to caſt Men out of the Miniſtry or Church, or to ruin them, for tolerable weakneſs, which God hath ſo earneſtly charged us to bear with, in our Brethren, either he doth not underſtand what he readeth, or not believe it, or hath ſomewhat elſe which he more regardeth at his heart, than the authority or love of God.

Dir. 11. §. 33. Direct. 11. Do not cenſure every Man to be wilful or obſtinate, who is not of your opinion, when he hath heard your Reaſons, how clear ſoever they may ſeem to you. Alas, how many things are there beſides wilful obſtinacy, to hinder one Man from being as wiſe as another! If a few times repeating over the Reaſons of an Opinion, is enough to implant it in all the hearers, why do your Children go ſo long to School, and after that to the Univerſities? And why are you ſo long Preaching to all your Pariſhioners? Sure you Preach not Novelties to them as long as you live! And yet Thirty or Forty Years painful Preaching, even of the ſame Fundamentals of of Religion, ſhall leave many ignorant of them in the beſt of Pariſhes in the Land. There muſt be a right and ripe diſpoſition in the hearers, or elſe the cleareſt reaſoning may be uneffectual. A diſuſed or unfurniſhed mind, that hath not received all the Truths, which are preſuppoſed to thoſe which you deliver, or hath not digeſted them into a clear underſtanding, may long hear the trueſt Reaſons, and never apprehend their weight. There is need of more ado than a bare unfolding of the Truth, to make a Man receive it in its proper evidence. Perhaps he hath been long pre-poſſeſſed with contrary opinions, which are not eaſily rooted out. Or if he be but confident of the Truth of ſome one Opinion, which is inconſiſtent with yours, no wonder if he cannot receive that which is contrary, to what he ſo verily believeth to be the Truth. There is a marvellous variety of Mens apprehenſions, of the ſame Opinions or Reaſons, as they are variouſly repreſented to Men, and variouſly pondered, and as the natural capacity of Men is various, and as the whole courſe of their lives, their education, company, and converſation, have variouſly formed their minds: It is like the ſetting together all the parts of a Watch when it is in pieces: If any one part of many be miſplaced, it may neceſſitate the miſplacing of thoſe that follow, without any wilful obſtinacy in him that doth it. If in the whole frame of ſacred Truth, there be but ſome one miſunderſtood, it may bring in other miſtakes, and keep out many Truths, even from an honeſt willing mind! And who is there that can ſay, he is free from Error? Have not you perceived in your ſelves, that the Truths which you heard an hundred times over, to little purpoſe, when you were Children, were received more convincingly and ſatisfyingly when you were Men! And that you have found a delightful clearneſs in ſome points on a ſudden, which before you either reſiſted, or held with little obſervation or regard? And yet it is common with the Scandalizers of Souls, to cry out againſt all that conform not to their Opinions and Will, as ſoon as they have heard their Reaſons, that they are ſtubborn, and refractory, and wilful, and factious, and ſo turn from Arguments to Clubs; as if they had never known themſelves, or others, nor how weak and dark the Underſtandings of almoſt all Men are! But they ſhall have judgment without mercy, who ſhew no mercy! And when their own Errors ſhall all be opened to them by the Lord, they will be loth they ſhould all be imputed to their wilful obſtinacy! And perhaps theſe very cenſorious Men, may prove themſelves to have been on the wrong ſide; for Pride and Uncharitableneſs are uſually erroneous.

Dir. 11 §. 34. Direct. 12. Engage not your ſelves in an evil cauſe. For if you do, it will engage you to draw in others; you will expect your Friends ſhould take your part, and think as you think, and ſay as you ſay; though it be never ſo much againſt Truth or Righteouſneſs.

Dir. 11 §. 35. Direct. 13. Speak not raſhly againſt any cauſe or perſons before you are acquainted with them; or have well conſidered what you ſay. Eſpecially take heed how you believe what a Man of any Sect in Religion, doth ſpeak or write againſt his Adverſaries of a contrary Sect.

If

Pſal. 119. 69. Vix equidem credar: Sed cum ſint promta falſi Nulla; ratam debet teſtis habere fidem. Ovid.

If experience had not proved it in our days, beyond contradiction, it would ſeem incredible how little Men are to be believed in this caſe, and how the falſeſt Reports will run among the People of the Sect, againſt thoſe whom the intereſt of their Opinion and Party, engageth them to miſ-repreſent! Think not that you are excuſable for receiving or venting an ill Report, becauſe you can ſay, He was an honeſt Man that ſpoke it: For many that are otherwiſe honeſt, do make it a part of their honeſty to be diſhoneſt in this. They think they are not zealous enough for thoſe Opinions which they call their Religion, unleſs they are eaſie in believing and ſpeaking evil of thoſe that are the Adverſaries of it. When it may be upon a juſt tryal, all proveth falſe, and then all the words which you ignorantly utter againſt the Truth, or thoſe that follow it, are ſcandals or ſtumbling blocks to the hearers, to turn them from it, and make them hate it. I am not ſpeaking againſt a juſt credulity: There muſt be humane belief, or elſe there can be no humane converſe; but ever ſuſpect partiality in a Party. For the intereſt of their Religion is a more powerful charm to the Conſciences of evil Speakers, than perſonal intereſt or bribes would be. How many Legends tell us this, how eaſily ſome Men counted godly, have been prevailed with to lie for God?

Rom. 3. 7, 8. Jam. 3, 14. Job 13. 7, 8.

Dir. 14. §. 36. Direct. 14. Take heed of mocking at a Religious Life; yea, or of breaking any jeſts or ſcorns at the weakneſſes of any in Religious Exerciſes, which may poſſibly reflect upon the Exerciſes themſelves. Many a Thouſand Souls have been kept from a holy Life, by the ſcorns of the vulgar, that ſpeak of it as a matter of deriſion or ſport. Reading the Scriptures, and holy Conference, and Prayer, and inſtructing our Families, and the holy obſervation of the Lord's Day, and Church Diſcipline, are commonly the deriſion of ungodly Perſons, who can ſcorn that which they can neither confute, nor learn. And weak People are greatly moved by ſuch ſenſeleſs means. A mock or jear doth more with them than an argument; they cannot endure to be made a laughing ſtock: Thus was the name of the Crucified God, the deriſion of the Heathens, and the ſcandal of the World, both Jews and Gentiles. And there is ſcarce a greater ſcandal or ſtumbling block at this day, which keepeth multitudes from Heaven, than when the Devil can make it, either a matter of danger or of ſhame to be a Chriſtian, or to live a holy mortified Life. Perſecution and Deriſion are the great ſucceſsful ſcandals of the World. And therefore ſeeing Men are ſo apt to be turned off from Chriſt and Godlineſs, never ſpeak unreverently or diſreſpectfully of them! It is a prophane and ſcandalous courſe of ſome, that if a Preacher have but an unhandſome tone or geſture, they make a jeſt of it, and ſay, He whined, or he ſpoke through the Noſe, or ſome ſuch ſcorn they caſt upon him; which the hearers quickly apply to all others, and turn to a ſcorn of Preaching, or Prayer, or Religion it ſelf: Or if Men differ from each other in Opinion in Matters of Religion, they are preſently inclined to deride them for ſomething in their Worſhipping of God! And while they deride a Man as an Anabaptiſt, as an Independant, as a Presbyterian, as Prelatical, they little know what a malignant tincture it may leave upon the hearers mind, and teach carnal Perſons to make a jeſt of all alike.

Dir. 15. §. 37. Direct. 15. Impute not the faults of Men to Chriſt, and blame not Religion for the faults of them that ſin againſt it. This is the malignant trick of Satan, and his blinded inſtruments: If an Hypocrite miſcarry, or if a Man that in all things elſe hath walked uprightly, be overthrown by a temptation in ſome odious ſin, they preſently cry out, Theſe are your Profeſſors! Your Religious People! That are ſo preciſe, and pure, and ſtrict! Try them, and they will appear as bad as others! If a Noah be once drunk, or a Lot be overthrown thereby, or a David commit Adultery and Murder, or a Peter deny his Maſter, or a Judas betray him, they preſently cry out, They are all alike! And turn it to the ſcorn of Godlineſs it ſelf. Unworthy Beaſts! As if Chriſts Laws were therefore to be ſcorned, becauſe Men break them? And Obedience to God were bad, becauſe ſome are diſobedient! Hath Chriſt forbidden the ſins which you blame, or hath he not? If he have not, blame them not, for they are no ſins; if he have, commend the juſtneſs and holineſs of his Laws! Either the offenders you blame, did well or ill! If they did well, why do you blame them? If they did ill, why do you not commend Religion, and the Scripture which condemneth them? Either it is beſt for all Men, to live in ſuch ſins as thoſe, which theſe lapſed Perſons or Hypocrites committed, or it is not. If it be, why are you offended with them for that, which you allow? If it be not, why do you ſooth up the wicked in their ſins, and excuſe an ungodly Life, becauſe of the falls of ſuch as ſeem Religious. There is no common ingenuity in this, but malicious ſpite againſt God and Holineſs, (of which, more in the next Chapter.)

§. 38. Direct. 16. Make not uſe of civil quarrels to lay an odium upon Religion. It is ordinary with ungodly malicious Men, to labour to turn the diſpleaſure of Rulers, againſt Men of integrity; and if there be any Broils or Civil Wars, to ſnatch any pretence, how falſe ſoever, to call them Traytors and Enemies to Government. If it be but becauſe they are againſt an Uſurper, or becauſe ſome Fanatick Perſons (whom they oppoſe,) have behaved themſelves rebelliouſly or diſobediently; a holy Life (which is the greateſt friend to Loyalty) muſt be blamed for all. And all is but to gratifie the Devil in driving poor Souls from God and Holineſs. Dir. 16.

§. 39. Direct. 17. When you think it your duty to ſpeak of the faults of Men that profeſs a godly Life, lay the blame only on the Perſon, but ſpeak as much and more in the commendations of Godlineſs it ſelf; and commend that which is good in them, while you diſcommend that which is evil. Is their Praying bad? Is their inſtructing their Families, and ſanctifying the Lords day, bad? Is their fearing ſin, and obeying God, bad? If not, why do you not ſay as much to commend them for theſe, or at leaſt to commend theſe in themſelves, as you do to diſcommend them for their faults? Why do you not fear leſt the hearers ſhould be drawn to diſlike a godly Life by your diſgracing Perſons accounted godly? And therefore warn them to think never the worſe of Godlineſs for this? You that give the Poyſon, ſhould in reaſon give an Antidote, if it be not your deſign to poyſon Souls. Is it really your deſign by ſpeaking againſt Men accounted godly, to draw the hearers to the hatred of Godlineſs, or is it not? If it be, you are incarnate Devils. If it be not, why do you endeavour it, by making odious the Perſons, under the name of Profeſſors and godly Men? And why do you not ſpeak more to draw People to a godly Life? And to imitate them in that which is good, while they diſclaim them in that which is evil? Dir. 17.

§. 40. Direct. 18. Be eſpecially tender of the reputations of thoſe, that the Souls of Men have moſt dependance on: As the Preachers of the Goſpel, and the eminenteſt Men for Knowledge and Religiouſneſs. Not that I deſire that ſin ſhould be the better thought of for being theirs, or that evil ſhould be called good in any: But experience hath told the World, ſince God and the Devil had their ſeveral ways and ſervants upon Earth, that it hath been the Devils moſt uſual ſucceſsful courſe, to wound Religion through the ſides of the Religious, and to blame the Perſons, when he would turn Men from the way! For he knoweth that Religious Perſons have their faults, and in them his malice may find ſomewhat to faſten on; but Religion hath no fault, and malice it ſelf is Dir. 36. Ita comparatum eſt ut virtutem non ſuſpiciamus, neque ejus imitandæ ſtudio corripimur niſi cum in quo ea conſpicitur, ſummo honore & amore proſequamur. Plutar. in Cat. Utic.

is ſeldom ſo impudent, as to ſpeak directly againſt a holy, heavenly Life. But the way is to make thoſe diſgraceful and odious, who are noted to lead ſuch a life; and then ſecretly to infer, [If thoſe that ſeem godly be no better, you need not be godly, you are as well as you are. This Religion is but a phanſie; a needleſs, if not a troubleſome, hurtful thing.] Seeing therefore that the Devil hath no blow at Religion, ſo fair as by ſtriking at the Perſons of the Preachers and Profeſſors of it, every Friend of Chriſt muſt be acquainted with his deſign, and muſt not ſerve him in it, but counter-work him, and preſerve the reputation even of the Perſons of the Religious: Not ſo much in Charity to them, but for the Peoples Souls, and the honour of Chriſt.

§. 41. Direct. 19. Let all that preach and profeſs the Goſpel, and a godly Life, be ſure that they live according to their Profeſſion. That the Name of God be not evil ſpoken of among the wicked through their miſdoings, Rom. 2. It was the aggravation of Davids ſin which God would not quite forgive, that he made the Enemies of the Lord blaſpheme. 2 Sam. 12. 14. Servants muſt count their Maſters worthy of all honour, that the Name of God and his Doctrine be not blaſphemed, 1 Tim. 6. 1. The Duties of good Women are particularly named by the Apoſtle, Tit. 2. 3, 4, 5. With this Motive to the practice of them [That the Word of God be not blaſphemed.] Obedience to Government, is commanded with this Motive, 1 Pet. 2. 15. For ſo is the Will of God, that with well doing, you may put to ſilence, the ignorance of fooliſh Men. And Verſ. 11, 12. Dearly beloved, I beſeech you, as ſtrangers and Pilgrims, abſtain from fleſhly luſts which war againſt the Soul: Having your converſation honeſt among the Gentiles, that whereas they ſpeak againſt you as evil doers, they may by your works which they ſhall behold, glorifie God in the day of Viſitation. And it was the aggravation of the Hereticks ſin, that [many ſhall follow their pernicious ways, by reaſon of whom the way of truth ſhall be evil ſpoken of] 2 Pet. 2.2. O then, how carefully ſhould Miniſters, and all that are godly walk! The blind World cannot read the Goſpel in it ſelf, but only as it is exemplified by the lives of Men: They judge not of the Actions of Men by the Law, but of the Law of God by Mens Actions! Therefore the ſaving or damning of Mens Souls, doth lie much upon the lives of the Profeſſors of Religion! Becauſe their liking or diſliking a holy Life doth depend upon them. Saith Paul of young Women [I will that——they give no occaſion to the adverſary to ſpeak reproachfully; for ſome are already turned aſide after Satan.] 1 Tim. 5. 14, 15. Hence it is, that even the appearance of evil is ſo carefully to be avoided, by all that fear God, leſt others be drawn by it to ſpeak evil of Godlineſs! Every ſcandal (truly ſo called) is a ſtab to the Soul of him that is ſcandalized, and a reproachful blot to the Chriſtian Cauſe. I may ſay of the faults of Chriſtians, as Plutarch doth of the faults of Princes. A wart or blemiſh in the face, is more conſpicuous and diſgraceful than in other parts.

§. 42. Direct. 20. Let no pretence of the evil of Hypocriſie make you ſo contented with your ſecret innocency, as to neglect the edification and ſatisfaction of your Neighbours. When it is only your own intereſt that is concerned in the buſineſs, then it is no matter whether any Man be acquainted with any good that you do; and it is a very ſmall matter how they judge, or what they ſay of you; the approbation of God alone is enough. No matter who condemneth you, if he juſtifie you. But when the vindication of your innocency, or the manifeſtation of your virtue, is neceſſary to the good of your Neighbours Souls, or to the honour of your ſacred Profeſſion: The neglect of it is not ſincerity, but cruelty.

CHAP. XIII.

Directions againſt Scandal taken, or an aptneſs to receive hurt, by the words or deeds of others.

§. 1. IT was not only an Admonition, but a Propheſie of Chriſt, when he ſaid, Wo to the World becauſe of offences! It muſt be that offence come. And, Bleſſed is he that is not offended or ſcandalized in me. He foreknew that the errors and miſdoings of ſome, would be the ſnare and ruine of many others; and that, when damnable hereſies ariſe, many will follow their pernicious ways, by reaſon of whom the way of truth ſhall be evil ſpoken of. 2 Pet. 1. 2. Like Men in the dark, where if one catch a fall, he that comes next him, falls upon him.

There are four ſorts of Perſons that uſe to be ſcandalized, or hurt by the ſins of others.

§. 2. 1. Malignant Enemies of Chriſt and Godlineſs, who are partly hardned in their malice, and partly rejoyced at the diſhonour of Religion, and inſult over thoſe that give the offence, or take occaſion by it to blaſpheme or perſecute.

2. Some that are more equal, and hopeful, and in greater poſſibility of Converſion, who are ſtopt by it in their deſires, and purpoſes, and attempts of a godly Life.

3. Unſound Profeſſors, or Hypocrites, who are turned by ſcandals from the way of Godlineſs, which they ſeemed to walk in.

4. Weak Chriſtians, who are troubled and hindered in their way of Piety, or elſe drawn into ſome particular error or ſin, though they fall not off.

§. 3. So that the effects of ſcandal may be reduced to theſe two. I. The perverting of Mens Judgments, to diſlike Religion, and think hardly, either of the Doctrine or Practice of Chriſtianity. II. The imboldning of Men to commit particular ſins, or to omit particular duties; or at leaſt the troubling and hindering them in the performance: Againſt which, I ſhall firſt give you diſtinctly ſome Meditative Directions, and then ſome Practical Directions againſt them both together.

§. 4. I. Direct. 1. Conſider what an evident ſign it is, of a very blind or malicious Soul, to be ſo apt to pick quarrels with God and Godlineſs, becauſe of the ſins of other Men. Dir. 1.

Love thinketh not ill of thoſe we love: Ill will and malice are ſtill ready to impute whatever is amiſs, to thoſe whom they hate. Enmity is contentious and ſlanderous; and will make a crime of virtue it ſelf, and from any Topick fetch matter of reproach. There is no witneſs ſeemeth incredible to it, who ſpeaketh any thing that is evil of thoſe they hate. An Argument A baculo ad verbera is ſufficient: Thus did the Heathens by the Primitive Chriſtians; and will you do thus by God? Will you terrifie your own Conſciences, when they ſhall awake, and find ſuch an ugly Serpent in your boſome, as Malice and Enmity againſt your Maker and Redeemer? It is the nature of the Devil, even his principal ſin. And will you not only wear his Livery, but bear his Image, to prove that he is your Father? And by community of natures, to prove that you muſt alſo have a communion with him in condemnation and puniſhment? And doth not ſo viſible a mark of Diviliſm upon your Souls, affright you, and make you ready to run away from your ſelves? Nothing but deviliſh malice can charge that upon God or Godlineſs, which is done by ſinners againſt his Laws. Would you uſe a Friend thus? If a Murder were done, or a Slander raiſed of you, or your Houſe were fired, or your Goods ſtoln, would you ſuſpect your Friend of it? Or any one that you honoured, loved, or thought well of? You would not certainly, but rather your Enemy, or ſome lewd and diſſolute Perſons that were moſt likely to be guilty. You are blinded by malice, if you ſee not how evident a proof of your devideviliſh malice this is, to be ready, when Men that profeſs Religion do any thing amiſs, to think the worſe of Godlineſs or Religion for it! The cauſe of this ſuſpicion is lodged in your own hearts.

Dir. 2. §. 5. Direct. 2. Remember that this was the firſt temptation, by which the Devil overthrew Mankind, to perſwade them to think ill of God, as if he had been falſe of his word, and had envied them their felicity. Gen. 3. 4, 5. Ye ſhall not ſurely die; For God doth know, that in the day ye eat thereof, then your eyes ſhall be opened, and ye ſhall be as Gods knowing good and evil. And will you not be warned by the calamity of all the World, to take heed of thinking ill of God, and of his Word, and of believing the Devils reports againſt him?

Dir. 3. §. 6. Direct. 3. Conſider that to think ill of God is to think him to be a Devil; and to think ill of godlineſs, is to take it to be wickedneſs: And can Man be guilty of a more deviliſh crime? Nay, is it not worſe than the Devil that tempteth you to it can commit? To be God, is to be Good, even the Infinite, Eternal, Perfect Good, in whom is no evil, nor none can be. To be a Devil, is to be Evil, even the chief that do evil, and would draw others ſo to do. It is not an ugly ſhape in which a Painter doth repreſent the Devil, which ſheweth us his uglineſs indeed: An Enemy of Godlineſs, is liker to him than that Picture: It is his ſinfulneſs againſt God, which is his true deformity. Therefore to ſuſpect God to be evil, is to ſuſpect him to be the Devil, ſo horrid a Blaſphemy doth this ſin partake of. And if Godlineſs be bad, then He that is the Author and End of it, cannot be Good.

Dir. 4. §. 7. Direct. 4. Conſider what horrible blindneſs it is to impute Mens faults to God, who is the greateſt adverſary to ſin in all the World, and who will moſt ſeverely puniſh it, and to Godlineſs which is perfectly its contrary, There is no Angel in Heaven ſo little to be ſuſpected to be the friend of ſin as God. Creatures are mutable in themſelves; Angels have the innocent imperfection of Creatures; Saints on Earth have a culpable imperfection through the remainder of ſin. If you had only ſuſpected theſe, you might have had ſome pretence for it; but to quarrel with God or Godlineſs, is madder than to think that Light is the cauſe of Darkneſs.

Dir. 5. §. 8. Direct. 5. And think what extremity of injury and injuſtice this is to God, to blame him or his Laws, for thoſe ſins of Men which are committed againſt him and his Laws. Who is it that ſin is committed againſt but God? Is it not he that made the Laws, which it is the tranſgreſſion of? Are not thoſe Laws think you, ſtrict enough againſt it? Is it not their ſtrictneſs which ſuch as you diſlike? Were they Laws that would give you leave to be worldly, ſenſual and proud, you would never quarrel with them; and yet you charge Mens ſins on theſe Laws, becauſe they are ſo ſtrict againſt them. Do you impute ſin to God, becauſe he will judge Men for it to Hell-fire, and caſt them for ever out of his glorious preſence into miſery? O curſed impudence! How righteous is God in condemning ſuch malicious Souls? Tell us if you can, Would you have had God to have forbidden ſin more ſtrictly? Or condemned it more ſeverely? Or puniſhed it more terribly? If you would, you pray for greater vengeance than Hell upon your ſelves? Wo to you, when he executeth but ſo much as he hath already threatned? Shall the crime of Rebels be imputed to the King, againſt whom they rebel? If a Thief ſhall rob you, or a Servant deceive you, or a Son deſpiſe you, is he juſt that will ſo much increaſe your injury, as to lay the blame of all upon your ſelves? You will ſay, It is not God that we are offended with. But if be at a holy life, it is at God: For what is Godlineſs, but the loving, and ſerving, and obeying God? If you ſay, that it is not Godlineſs neither; Why then do you diſtaſte or ſpeak againſt a godly life on this occaſion? If you ſay, It is theſe Hypocrites only that we diſlike: What do you diſlike them for? Is it for their Vertue or their Vices? If it be for their ſins, Why then do you not ſpeak, and do more againſt ſin, in your ſelves and others? We will concur with you to the utmoſt in oppoſing ſin where ever it be found. If it be their Hypocriſie that you blame, perſwade your ſelves and other Men to be ſincerely godly. How would you have Hypocriſie avoided? By an open profeſſion to ſerve the Devil? Or by ſincerity in ſerving God? If the latter, Why then do you think evil of the moſt ſerious obedience to God? Alas, all Chriſtian Countreys are too full of Hypocrites. Every one that is Baptized, and profeſſeth Chriſtianity, is a Saint, or an Hypocrite? All drunken, covetous, ambitious, ſenſual, unclean Chriſtians, are Hypocrites and not Chriſtians indeed. And theſe Hypocrites can quietly live a worldly fleſhly life, and never lament their own Hypocriſie, nor their perfidious violating their Baptiſmal Vow: But if one that ſeemeth diligent for his Soul, prove an Hypocrite, or fall into any ſcandalous ſin, here they preſently make an outcry; not to call the Man from his ſin, but to make a godly diligent life ſeem odious to all, by telling Men, Theſe are your godly Men. It is Godlineſs that they quarrel with, while they pretend only to find fault with ſin. Why elſe do not you find fault with the ſame ſin equally in all? Or, at leaſt, perſwade Men by ſuch Examples to be leſs ſinful, and more watchful, and not to be leſs religious and more looſe. Tell me truly of any one that is more againſt ſin than God, or any thing more contrary to it than Godlineſs and true Religion, or any Men that do more againſt it than the moſt religious, and then I will joyn with you in preferring thoſe. Till then remember how you condemn your ſelves, when you condemn them that are better than your ſelves.

Dir. 6. §. 9. Direct. 6. Think what a fooliſh, audacious thing it is, to ſet your ſelves againſt your God and Judge. Will you accuſe him of evil, becauſe Men do evil? Are you fit to judge him? Are guilty Worms either Wiſe or Juſt enough for ſuch an attempt, or ſtrong enough to bear it out? What do you but ſet your faces againſt Heaven, and profeſs Rebellion againſt God, when you blame his Laws and Government, and think the obeying and ſerving him to be evil?

Dir. 7. §. 10. Direct. 7. Conſider what cruelty it is to your ſelves, to turn the faults of others to your ruine, which ſhould be your warning to avoid the like. If another Man ſin, will you not only do ſo too, but be the more averſe to Repentance and Reformation? Will you cut your throat, becauſe another cut his finger, or did ſo before you? Why ſhould you do your ſelves ſuch miſchief?

Dir. 8. §. 11. Direct. 8. Remember that this was the deſign of the Devil in tempting Religious people to ſin, not only to deſtroy them, but to undo you and others by their falls. If he can make you think the worſe of Religion, he hath his deſign and will; he hath killed many at a blow. Yea, perhaps the ſinner may repent, and be forgiven, when you that are driven from Repentance and Godlineſs by the ſcandal, may be damned. And will you ſo far gratifie the Devil, in the wilful deſtruction of your ſelves? Sin is contagious; and this is your catching of the infection, if it prevail to drive you further from God. And thus this Plague devoureth multitudes.

Dir. 9. §. 12. Direct. 9. He that will think ill of Godlineſs for Mens ſins, ſhall never want occaſion of ſuch offence, nor ſuch temptations to flie from God. If you are ſo fooliſh or malignant, as to pick quarrels with God and Godlineſs for Mens faults (which nothing but God and Godlineſs can reform) you may ſet up your Standard of defiance againſt Heaven, and ſee what you will get by it in the end. For God will not remove all occaſion of your ſcandal. There ever have been, and will be Hypocrites in the Church on Earth.

Noahs Ark had a Cham; Abrahams Family had an Ishmael, and Isaacs an Esau, and Davids an Absalom, and Christs a Judas. The falls of good Men are cited in Scripture, to admonish you to take heed. Noah, Lot, David, Josephs Brethren, &c. have left a mark behind them where they fell, that you may take a safer way. If you will make all such, the occasion of your malignity, you turn your medicine into your Poyson, and chuse Hell, because some others chuse it, or because some stumbled in the way to Heaven.

§ 13. AND for those who are emboldned in sin, because they see their Superiors or Religious Men commit it, or read, that David, Noah, Peter, &c. fell, let them consider,

Dir. 1. Direct. 1. That it is Rule, and not Example that you must chiefly live by. Do the Laws of God by which you must be judged, allow of sin? If they do, then fear it not.

Dir. 2. §. 14. Direct. 2. Is not the example of Christ much better than a sinners? If you will follow examples, follow the best, even that which was given you purposely to imitate. The greatest and most learned Man is fallible, and the most religious is not wholly free from Sin: Sincerity writeth after a perfect Copy, though it cannot reach it.

Dir. 3. §. 15. Direct. 3. Consider that sin is not the better but the worse, for being committed by a Religious, a great or a learned Man. Their place, their knowledge and profession aggravateth it. And shall that embolden you which God most hateth?

Dir. 4. §. 16. Direct. 4. And consider that when he that falleth by a surprize, doth rise again by Repentance, and is pardoned; those that are hereby emboldned to sin deliberately and impenitently, shall be condemned. You may sin with David or Peter when you will, but you cannot rise with them by true Repentance, without that Grace which you wilfully resist and forfeit.

Dir. 5. § 17. Direct. 5. Lastly, Consider that the best men, and the greatest, are the most dangerous tempters, when they mislead us. A David was a stronger temptation to Bathsheba, than another Man could have been. A Peter might sooner mislead Barnabas, and others, into a sinful dissimulation and separation, than another could have done. Therefore do not think that where your danger is greatest, your venturousness should be most.

Practical Directions against Offence and Hurt by others.

Dir. 1. §. 18. Direct. 1. Lay well your foundation, and understand the Nature and Reasons of Religion; and then you will be so far from disliking it for the errors and falls of others, that it will be written upon your minds, as with a beam of the Sun, That there can be no Reason against obeying God, and against the careful securing of our Salvation. This will be the first and undoubted Principle, which nothing in the World can make you question. What ever Scandals, Persecutions, or Sufferings, may attend a holy Life, you will still be past doubt, that there is no other way? No other eligible, no other tolerable, no other rational, or that will lead to Happiness. What ever falls out in the World, if the most great, or learned, or religious fall away, it will not make you question, Whether a Man be a living Creature, nor whether the Sun be Light, nor whether two and two be four. No more should it make you question, Whether God be better than the Creature, Heaven than Earth, or a life of holiness, than a life of sin. You will say as Peter, Lord, whither should we go? Thou hast the words of eternal life, Joh. 6. What ever Scandals are given, or whatever befal the Church, or if all the Disciples of Christ forsake him, this remaineth as sure as that the Earth is under us, that there is no other way than holiness, for a wise Man once to take into his thoughts.

§ 19. Direct. 2. Get once a sincere love to God, and a holy life, and then no scandals will make you jealous of it, nor think of looking any other way. It is want of true and hearty love, that maketh you so easily taken off.

Dir. 3. §. 20. Direct. 3. To this end, know Religion by experience; and this will put you past all doubt of its goodness. He that never tasted Sugar, may be perswaded by argument that it is not sweet, or may think it bitter when he seeth another spit it out: And he that knoweth Godliness, but by looking on, or hearsay, may thus be drawn to think it bad: But so will not he that hath truly tried it; I mean not only to try what it is to hear, and read, and pray; but what it is to be humble, holy, and heavenly, both in heart and life.

Dir. 4. §. 21. Direct. 24. When you see any man sin, be sure you do that duty which it calls you to. Every fall that you see of others doth call you to see the odiousness of sin (as you will do when you see a Drunkard spewing, or a Thief at the Whipping-post.) And it calleth you to search for, and lament the root of such sin in your selves; and to set your Watch more strictly upon such a warning: And it calls you to compassionate the sinner, and if you have hope and opportunity to endeavour his recovery. If you will conscionably do this duty which is your own, you will be the less in danger of hurt by Scandal. It is duty that must help to prevent infection.

Dir. 5. §. 22. Direct. 5. Be watchful among all Men, high and low, learned or unlearned, good and bad. Venture not blindly upon the singular opinion of any Men whatsoever; nor into a new unproved way. Remember that all Men are a temptation to others; and therefore be armed and watch against such temptation. Know well what it is, that is the peculiar temptation, which the quality of those that you have to do with, layeth before you. Spend no day or hour in any company good or bad, without a wise and careful vigilancy.

Dir. 6. §. 23. Direct. 6. Be as little as you can in Scandalous and Tempting Company. Presume not to touch Pitch, and promise your selves to scape defilement; especially fly from two sorts of scandals. First, The Discourses and Societies of Heretical or Schismatical Men, who speak perverse things to draw away Disciples after them, Acts 20. 30. Those that presume to run into such snares, and think their own understanding and stability, is sufficient to preserve them, do shew by their Pride that they are near a fall, 1 Cor. 10. Secondly, The Company of Sensual Persons, at Stage-plays, Gaming, inordinate Plays, and wanton Dalliance. For this is to bring your Tinder and Gunpowder to the fire; and the less you fear it, the greater is your danger.

Dir. 7. §. 24. Direct. 7. Look more at the good that is in others, than at their faults and falls. The Flie that will fall on none but the galled ulcerous place, doth feed accordingly. Is a Professor of Religion, Covetous, Drunk, or other ways scandalous? Remember that it is his Covetousness or Drunkenness that is bad. Reprove that, and flie from it, and spare not; but Religion is good: Let that therefore be commended and imitated. Leave the Carrion to Dogs and Crows to feast upon; but do you chuse out the things that are commendable, and mind, and mention, and imitate those.

Dir. 8. §. 25. Direct. 8. Lastly, Think and speak as much against the sin and danger of taking Scandal, as against the sin and danger of giving it. When others cry out, These are your Religious People, do you cry out as much against their malignity and madness, who will dislike or reproach Religion for Mens sins? Which is to blame the Law-makers or Laws, because they are broken; or to fall out with Health, because many that once were in health, fall sick; or to find fault with Eating, because some are lean; or with Cloathing, because some are cold. Open to your selves and others, what a wicked and perilous thing this this is, to fall out with Godlineſs, becauſe ſome are ungodly, that ſeemed godly. Many cry out againſt Scandal, that never think what a heinous ſin it is to be ſcandalized, or to ſuffer Mens ſins to be a ſcandal to you; and to be the worſe, becauſe that others are ſo bad. No one muſt differ from them in an Opinion, or a faſhion of Apparel, or in a mode or form of Worſhip, but ſome are preſently ſcandalized; not knowing that it is a greater ſin in them to be ſcandalized, than in the other by ſuch means (ſuppoſing them to be faulty) to give them the occaſion. Do you know what it is to be ſcandalized or offended in the Scripture ſenſe? It is not meerly to be diſpleaſed, or to diſlike anothers actions (as is before ſaid;) but it is to be drawn into ſome ſin, or hindered from ſome duty, or ſtopped in the courſe of Religion, or to think the worſe of Truth, or Duty, or a Godly Life, becauſe of other Mens words or actions; and do you think him a good Chriſtian, and a faithful or conſtant Friend to Godlineſs, who is ſo eaſily brought to quarrel with it? Or is ſo eaſily turned from it, or hindered in it? Some peeviſh childiſh Perſons are like ſick ſtomachs, that no meat can pleaſe; you cannot dreſs it ſo curiouſly, but they complain that it is naught, or this aileth it, or that aileth it, when the fault is in themſelves; or like Children, or ſick Perſons that can ſcarce be touched, but they are hurt: Do you think that this ſicklineſs or curioſity in Religion, is a credit to you? This is not the tenderneſs of Conſcience which God requireth, to be eaſily hurt by other Mens differences or faults: As it is the ſhame of many Ladies and Gentlewomen, to be ſo curious and troubleſomely neat, that no Servant knoweth how to pleaſe them; ſo is it in Religion, a ſign of your childiſh folly, and worſe, to be guilty of ſuch proud curioſity, that none can pleaſe you, who are not exactly of your mind and way. All Men muſt follow your humours in geſtures, faſhions, opinions, formalities, and modes, or elſe you are troubled, and offended, and ſcandalized; as if all the World were made to pleaſe and humour you! Or you were wiſe enough, and great, and good enough, to be the rule of all about you? Deſire and ſpare not, that your ſelves, and all Men ſhould pleaſe God as exactly as is poſſible! But if the want of that exactneſs in doubtful things, or a difference in things diſputable and doubtful among true Chriſtians, do thereupon abate or hinder your love or eſtimation of your Brethren, or communion with them, or any other Chriſtian duty, or tempt you into cenſoriouſneſs or contempt of your Brethren, or to Schiſm, Perſecution, or any other ſin: It is you that are the great Offenders, and you that are like to be the Sufferers; and have cauſe to lament that ſinful aptneſs to be thus ſcandalized.

CHAP. XIV.

Directions againſt Soul-Murder, and partaking of other Mens Sins.

THE ſpecial Directions given Part. 3. Chap. 22. to Parents and Maſters, will in this caſe, be of great uſe to all others; but becauſe it is here ſeaſonable to ſpeak of it further, under the Sixth Commandment, and the matter is of greateſt conſequence, I ſhall 1. Tell you how Men are guilty of Soul-murder. 2. And then give you ſome general Directions for the furthering of Mens Salvation. 3. And next give you ſome ſpecial Directions for Chriſtian Exhortation and Reproofs.

§. 1. Firſt, Men are guilty of Soul-murder by all theſe ways. 1. By Preaching falſe Soul-murdering Doctrine. Such as denieth any neceſſary point of Faith, or holy living; ſuch as is oppoſite to a holy Life, or to any particular neceſſary Duty; ſuch as maketh ſin to be no ſin: Which calls good evil, and evil good; which putteth darkneſs for light, and light for darkneſs.

§. 2. 2. By falſe Application of true Doctrine, indirectly reflecting upon, and diſgracing that holineſs of Life, which in terms they Preach for; by prevarication undermining that cauſe which their Office is appointed to promote; as they do, who purpoſely ſo deſcribe any vice, that the hearers may be drawn to think that ſtrict and godly practices, are either that ſin it ſelf, or but a Cloak to hide it.

§. 3. 3. By bringing the Perſons of the moſt Religious into hatred, by ſuch falſe Applications, Reflections, or ſecret Inſinuations, or open Calumnies: Making Men believe that they are all but Hypocrites, or Schiſmaticks, or Seditious, or Fanatical ſelf-conceited Perſons! Which is uſually done either by impudent ſlanders raiſed againſt ſome particular Men, and ſo reflected on the reſt; or by the advantage of Factions, Controverſies, or Civil Wars; or by the falls of any Profeſſors, or the crimes of Hypocrites: Whereupon they would make the World believe that they are all alike; as if Chriſts Family were to be judged of by Peters fall, or Judas falſhood. And the odious repreſentation of godly Men doth greatly prevail to keep others from godlineſs, and is one of the Devils moſt ſucceſsful means for the damnation of multitudes of Souls.

§ 4. 4. The diſgrace of the Perſons of the Preachers of the Goſpel, doth greatly further Mens damnation. For when the People think their Teachers to be Hypocrites, Covetous, Proud, and ſecretly as bad as others, they are very like to think accordingly of their Doctrine, and that all ſtrict Religion is but Hypocriſie, or at leaſt to refuſe their help and counſels. Even Plutarch noted, that [It ſo comes to paſs, that we entertain not virtue, nor are rapt into a deſire of imitating it, unleſs we highly honour and love the Perſon in whom it is diſcerned.] And if they ſee, or think the Preacher himſelf to be of a looſe, and careleſs and licentious Life, they will think that the like is very excuſable in themſelves; and that his Doctrine is but a Form of Speech, which his Office bindeth him to ſay; but is no more to be regarded by them, than by himſelf.

Two ways is Mens damnation thus promoted. 1. By the ill lives of Hypocritical ungodly Preachers, who actually bring their own Perſons into diſgrace, and thereby alſo the Perſons of others, and conſequently their ſacred Work and Function. 2. By wicked Preachers and People, who, through a malignant hatred of thoſe that are abler, and better than themſelves, and an envy of their Reputation, do labour to make the moſt zealous and faithful Preachers of the Goſpel, to be thought to be the moſt Hypocritical, or Erroneous, or Factious and Schiſmatical.

§. 5. 5. The neglect of Miniſterial Duties is a common cauſe of ſin, and of Mens damnation. When they that take the charge of Souls, are either unable or unwilling to do their Office; when they teach them too ſeldom, or too unskilfully, in an unſuitable manner; not chuſing that Doctrine which they moſt need, or not opening it plainly and methodically in a fitneſs to their capacities, or not applying it with neceſſary ſerioufneſs and urgency to the hearers ſtate. When Men preach to the ungodly who are near to damnation, in a formal pace, like a Schoolboy ſaying his Leſſon, or in a drowſie reading tone, as if they came to Preach them all aſleep, or were afraid of wakening them. When they ſpeak of Sin, and Miſery, and Chriſt, of Heaven and Hell, as if by the manner they came to contradict the matter, and to perſwade Men that there are no ſuch things.

The ſame miſchief followeth the neglect of private perſonal inſpection. When Miniſters think that they have done all, when they have ſaid a Sermon; and never make Conſcience of labouring perſonally to convince the ungodly, and reclaim Offenders, and draw Sinners to God, and confirm the weak.

And

And the omiſſion (much more the perverſion and abuſe) of Sacred Diſcipline, hath the like effects. When the Keys of the Church are uſed to ſhut out the good, or not uſed when they ought to rebuke or to ſhut out the impenitent wicked ones; nor to difference between the precious and the vile, it hardeneth multitudes in their ungodlineſs, and perſwadeth them, that they are really of the ſame Family of Chriſt, as the godly are, and have their ſins forgiven, becauſe they are partakers of the ſame holy Sacraments. (Not knowing the difference between the Church myſtical and viſible, nor between the Judgment of Miniſters, and of Chriſt himſelf.)

§. 6. 6. Parents neglect of inſtructing Children, and other parts of holy Education, is one of the greateſt cauſes of the perdition of Mankind, in all the World: But of this elſewhere.

§. 7. 7. Magiſtrates perſecution or oppoſition to Religion, or diſcountenancing thoſe that Preach it, or moſt ſeriouſly practiſe it, tendeth to deceive ſome, who over-reverence the Judgement of Superiors, and to affright others from the Obedience of God.

§. 8. 8. Yea, the negligence of Magiſtrates, Maſters, and other Superiors, omitting the due rebuke of ſinners, and due correction of the offenders, and the due incouragement of the good, is a great cauſe of the wickedneſs and damnation of the World.

§. 9. 9. But above all, when they make Laws for ſin, or for the contempt, or diſhonour or ſuppreſſion of Religion, or the ſerious practice of it; this buildeth up Satans Kingdom moſt effectually, and turneth Gods Ordinance againſt himſelf: Thouſands under Infidel and ungodly Princes, are conducted by Obedience to damnation; and their Rulers damn them as honourably as the Phyſician killed his Patients, who boaſted that he did it ſecundum artem, according to the Rules of Art.

§ 10. 10. The vulgar Example of the multitude of the ungodly, is a great cauſe of Mens impiety and damnation. They muſt be well reſolved for God and Holineſs, who will not yield to the major Vote, nor be carried down the common ſtream, nor run with the rabble to exceſs of riot. When Chriſtianity is a Sect which is every where ſpoken againſt, it proveth ſo narrow a way, that few have a mind to walk in it. Men think that they are at leaſt excuſable, for not being wiſer and better than the multitude. Singularity in honour, or riches, or ſtrength, or health, is accounted no crime; but ſingularity in Godlineſs, is, at leaſt, thought unneceſſary. [What! will you be wiſer than all the Town; or, than ſuch and ſuch Superiors?] Is thought a good reprehenſion of Godlineſs, where it is rare; even by them who hereby conclude their Superiors, or all the Town to be wiſer than God.

§. 11. 11. Alſo the vulgars ſcorning and deriding Godlineſs, is a common cauſe of murdering Souls; becauſe the Devil knoweth, that there cannot one word of ſolid reaſon be brought againſt the reaſon of God, and ſo againſt a holy Life; he therefore teacheth Men to uſe ſuch weapons as they have! A Dog hath Teeth, and an Adder hath a Sting, though they have not the weapons of a Man. A Fool can laugh, and jeer, and rail; and there is no great wit or learning neceſſary, to ſmile, or grin, or call a Man a Puritan, or Preciſian, or Heretick, or Schiſmatick, or any name which the malice of the age ſhall newly coyn. Mr. Robert Bolton largely ſheweth how much the malignity of his age, did vent it ſelf againſt Godlineſs, by the reproachful uſe of the word Puritan. When Reaſon can be bribed to take the Devils part (either natural or literate reaſon) he will hire it at any rate; but when it cannot, he will make uſe of ſuch as he can get! Barking or hiſſing may ſerve turn, where talking and diſputing cannot be procured. Drum and Trumpets in an Army, ſerve the turn inſtead of Oratory, to animate Cowards, and drown the noiſe of dying Mens complaints and groans. Thouſands have been mocked out of their Religion, and Salvation at once, and jeered into Hell; who now know, whether a ſcorn, or the fire of Hell, be the greater ſuffering. As Tyrants think that the greateſt, and ableſt, and wiſeſt Men, muſt either be drawn over to their party or deſtroyed; ſo the Tyrant of Hell, who ruleth in the Children of diſobedience, doth think that if Reaſon, Learning and Wit, cannot be hired to diſpute for him againſt God, they are to be ſuppreſſed, ſilenced, and diſgraced; which the noiſe of rude clamours, and fooliſh jeers is fit enough to perform.

§. 12. 12. Alſo idle, ſenſleſs prating againſt Religion as a needleſs thing, doth ſerve turn to deceive the ſimple: Ignorant People, who converſe with no wiſer Men, are ordinarily taken with the ſilly cavils of a drunken ſot, who hath but a little more volubility or looſneſs of tongue than his companions. It would make ones head and heart to ake, to hear with what reverend nonſence one of them will talk againſt the Doctrines or Practices of Godlineſs, and how ſubmiſſively the tractable herd receiveth, and conſenteth to his documents!

§. 13. 13. Alſo it tendeth much to the helping of Satan, and murdering of Souls, to keep up the reputation of the moſt ungodly, and to keep down the reputation of the good. The Devil knoweth that ſin it ſelf, is ſuch a thing, as few Men can love bare-faced, or commend; and that goodneſs or holineſs is ſuch a thing, as few Men can hate, or at leaſt, condemn, in its proper name and colours. Therefore he ſeeketh to make the reputation of the Perſons ſerve, to promote or hinder the cauſe which he is for or againſt. He that is aſhamed to ſay of Drunkenneſs or Whoredom, that they are good and honeſt practices, dare yet ſay of Drunkenneſs and Whoremongers [They are very honeſt Men:] And by their reputation take off ſome of the odiouſneſs of the ſin, and reconcile the hearers to it. And he that cannot for ſhame ſay of the forbearing of ſin, and living a holy Life, in Heavenly Contemplation, Prayer, and Obedience, that [Theſe are Hypocriſie, Schiſm, or Sedition, Covetouſneſs, Deceit and Pride.] Yet dare ſay of the Perſon who practiſeth them, that [He is as Covetous, Deceitful, Proud, Hypocritical, Schiſmatical, or Sedtiious, as any others who make no Profeſſion of Religion] And the Devil knoweth, that though good Doctrine hath no mixture of evil, nor Chriſt himſelf any blemiſh or ſpot, yet the beſt perſons are ſo faulty or defectible, that an ill report of them is leſs incredible, there being too much matter to raiſe a ſuſpicion on. And through their ſides, it is eaſieſt to wound the Doctrine or Holineſs which they profeſs.

§. 14. 14. Alſo perſwading ſinners to do evil, and diſſwading them from a godly life, is another way of murdering Souls. The Devils temptations are moſt by Inſtruments; he hath his Preachers as well as Chriſt; and it were well if they did not overgo us in earneſtneſs, frequency, and conſtancy. Where is there a poor Soul that is moved by God to turn and live, but the Devil hath ſome at hand to drive them from it? By perſwading them that it is needleſs, and that all is well with them, and telling them ſome diſmal ſtories of a holy life.

§. 15. 15. Another way of Soul murder, is by laying Baits of deceit and ſin, before the ſinner: As Men deſtroy Rats and Mice by Baits, and ſweetned Poyſon; or catch Fiſhes or Birds by covering their death with ſomething which they moſt love. So doth the Devil and his Inſtruments deſtroy Souls. the baits of a pleaſant Cup, or pleaſant Company, or pleaſant Meats, or pleaſant Sports, or Plays, or Games: A Feaſt, a Tavern, an Ale-houſe, a Whore, a Stage-play, a Romance, a Pair of Cards or Dice, can do the deed. If he can poſſibly, he will prove it a venial ſin; if that cannot be, he will drown conſideration, and ſtop the mouth of Reaſon and Conſcience, and cry, Drive on. Some have yet higher Baits than theſe, Lordſhips and Lands, Dominion and Honour, to choak their Souls.

§. 16. 16. Alſo an honeſt name for ſin, and a diſhoneſt name for duty to God, doth ſerve the turn for many Mens perdition. To call Drunkenneſs [good fellowſhip, or take a Cup], and Gluttony [good houſe-keeping,] and Voluptuouſneſs [recreation or paſtime,] and Pride [the maintaining of their honour,] and Worldlineſs [good husbandry,] and Prodigality [liberality] and Luſt and Whoredom [Love, and having a Miſtriſs,] and Oppreſſion [the ſeeking of their due,] and Perfidious Diſſimulation [Courtſhip,] and Jeering [wittineſs.] Theſe and more ſuch are traps for Souls. And of the ſame uſe is the calling of Duties by names of Vice, which tend to make them odious or contemptible.

§. 17. 17. Alſo the flattering of ſinners, and praiſing them in their ſin, is a Soul-murdering incouragement to them in ill doing; and great ſinners ſeldom want ſuch Enemies.

§. 18. 18. An obedient readineſs to all that wicked ſuperiors command, is an incouragement to them to proceed in miſchief. If Parents or Maſters command their Inferiors to ſpend the Lords day in dancing, or other unlawful Exerciſes; or bid them ſteal, or lie, or forbid them to worſhip God; thoſe that obey them, do harden them in their ſin. As Daniel and the three Witneſſes had done the King, if they had obeyed him. Dan. 3. and 6.

§. 19. 19. Alſo when thoſe that have power to hinder ſin, and further godlineſs, do not do it. When they either give Men leave to ſin, or forbear their duty when they ſhould reſtrain it. He that ſtands by, and ſeeth his Neighbour robbed or murdered, and doth not what he can to ſave him, is guilty of the ſin, and the Sufferers hurt.

§. 20. 20. Silence when we are obliged to reprove a ſinner, or to inſtruct the ignorant, or exhort the obſtinate, or any way ſpeak for Mens Salvation, is injurious to their Souls, and maketh us partakers of their ſin. Soul murder may be done by bare omiſſions.

§. 21. 21. Oppoſing Magiſtrates, Miniſters, or any others, in the diſcharge of their duty for godlineſs, or againſt ſin, is an act of hoſtility againſt God, and Mens Salvation.

§ 22. 22. An unneceſſary occaſion of ſin, or doing that needleſly, which we may foreſee that by accident, another will deſtroy himſelf by, is to be guilty of his ſin and deſtruction: As he is that would ſell poyſon to him, that he might foreſee, would kill himſelf with it; or lend fire to his Neighbour, who he knoweth will burn his houſe with it. But of this before, in the Chapter of Scandal.

§. 23. 23. They that are guilty of Schiſms or Church-diviſions, are Murderers of Souls: By depriving them of that means (the concord and harmony of Believers) which God hath appointed for Mens Converſion and Salvation; and by ſetting up before them the greateſt ſcandal, to bring Religion into contempt, and debilitate the godly. Joh. 17. 21, 25.

§. 24. 24. Thoſe alſo that mourn not for the ſins of the times, and confeſs them not to God, and pray not againſt them, and pray not for the ſinners when they ought, are thus guilty. Ezek. 9. 5. Zeph. 3. 17, 18.

§. 25. 25. And ſo are they that ſecretly rejoyce in ſin, or conſent to it, or approve it, when it is done; which if they manifeſt, it is pernicious to others alſo.

§. 26. 26. Laſtly, A coldneſs or indifferency in the doing of our duty againſt ſin, without juſt zeal, and pity to the ſinner, and reverence to the Truth, is a way of guilt, and hurteth others. To reprove ſin, as Eli did his Sons; or to ſpeak againſt it lightly, as between jeſt and earneſt, is the way to make the ſinner think, that it is a ſmall or jeſting matter: To perſwade Men to converſion or a godly life, without a melting love and pity to their Souls, and without the reverence of God, and ſerioufneſs of mind, which the nature and weight of the thing requireth, is the way to harden them in their ſin and miſery. All theſe ways may a Man be guilty, Firſt, Of the ſin; and ſecondly, The perdition of another.

§. 27. But here (on the Negative part) take notice of theſe things following.

How we are not guilty of other Mens ſin or ruine?

1. That properly no Man doth partake of the ſame formal numerical ſin, which is anothers; nexa caput ſequitur. The ſin is individuated and informed by the individual will of the offender. It is not poſſible, that another Mans ſin ſhould be properly and formally mine, unleſs I were individually and formally that ſame Man, and not another. If two Men ſet their hands to the ſame evil deed, they are diſtinct Cauſes and Subjects of the diſtinct formal guilt; though Con-cauſes, and partial Cauſes of the effect: So that it is only by multiplication that we make the ſin or guilt of another to become the matter of ſin to us, the form reſulting from our ſelves.

§. 28. 2. All Men that are guilty of the ſin and damnation of other Men, are not equally guilty: Not only as ſome are pardoned upon repentance, and ſome remain impenitent and unpardoned; but as ſome contribute wilfully to the miſchief, and with delight, and in a greater meaſure; and ſome only in a ſmall degree, by an over-ſight, or ſmall omiſſion, or weak performance of a duty, by meer infirmity or ſurprize.

§. 29. 3. All that do not hinder Sin, or reprove it, are not guilty of it; no more than all that do not puniſh it: But thoſe only that have power and opportunity, and ſo are called by God to do it.

§. 30. 4. If another Man will ſin, and deſtroy his Soul by the occaſion of my neceſſary duty, I muſt not ceaſe my duty to prevent ſuch Mens ſin or hurt; elſe one or other will by their perverſneſs, excuſe me from almoſt all the duty which I ſhould do: I muſt not ceaſe Praying, Hearing, Sacraments, not withdraw from Church Communion, becauſe another will turn it to his ſin; elſe Satan ſhould uſe the ſin of others to fruſtrate all Gods Worſhip. Yet I muſt add, that many things ceaſe to be a duty, when another will be ſo hurt by them.

§. 31. 5. I am not guilty of all Mens ſins, which are committed in my preſence; no, though I know before-hand that they will ſin. For my Calling or Duty may lead me into the preſence of thoſe, that I may foreknow will ſin. Wicked Men ſin in all that they do, and yet it followeth not, that I muſt have nothing to do with them. Many a failing which is his ſin, may a Miniſter or Church be guilty of, even in that publick worſhip of God, which yet I am bound to be preſent at.

But of all theſe ſomewhat is ſaid before, Chap. 12.

CHAP. XV.

General Directions for the furthering of the Salvation of others.

THE great Means which we muſt uſe for the Salvation of our Neighbours are,

§. 1. Direct. 1. Sound Doctrine: Let thoſe who are their Inſtructers, inculcate the wholſome Principles of Godlineſs; which are, Self-denial, Mortification, the Love of God and Man, the Hopes of Heaven, univerſal abſolute Obedience to God; and all this by Faith in Jeſus Chriſt, according to the holy Scripture. Inſtead of Novelties or vain Janglings, and perverſe Diſputings, teach them theſe Principles here briefly named, over and over an hundred times; open theſe plainly, till they are well underſtood. Theſe are the neceſſary ſaving things; this is the Doctrine which is according to godlineſs, which will make ſound Chriſtians, of ſound Judgment, ſound Hearts, ſound Con- Dir. 1.

Converſations, and ſound Conſciences! God ſanctifieth his choſen Ones by theſe Truths.

Dir. 2. §. 2. Direct. 2. Therefore do your beſt to help others to the benefit of able and faithful Paſtors and Inſtructors. A Fruitful Soil is not better for your Seed; nor a good Paſture for your Horſe or Cattle, nor wholſome diet for your ſelves, than ſuch Inſtructers are for your Neighbours Souls. If you love them, you ſhould be more deſirous to help them to good Teachers, or plant them under a ſound and powerful Miniſtry, than to procure them any worldly benefits. One time or other the Word may prevail with them: It is hopeful to be ſtill in Mercies way.

Dir. 3. §. 3. Direct. 3. The concord of their Teachers among themſelves, is a great help to the ſaving of the flock. 1 Joh. 17. 21, 25. That they all may be one, as thou Father art in me, and I in thee, that they alſo may be one in us; that the world may believe that thou haſt ſent me. Concord much furthereth Reverence and Belief; and conſequently Mens Salvation, (ſo it be a holy Concord.)

Dir. 4. §. 4. Direct. 4. The Concord alſo of godly private Chriſtians hath the ſame effect. When the ignorant ſee here a Sect, and there a Sect, and hear them condemning one another, it teacheth them to contemn them all, and think contemptibly of Piety it ſelf: But Concord layeth an awe upon them.

Dir. 5. §. 5. Direct. 5. The blameleſs, humble, loving heavenly lives of Chriſtians, is a powerful means of winning Souls. Preach therefore every one of you, by ſuch a converſation to all your Neighbours, whom you deſire to ſave.

Dir. 6. §. 6. Direct. 6. Keep thoſe whom you would ſave in a humble, patient, learning poſture; and keep them from proud wranglings, and running after Novelties and Sects. The humble Learner takes root downward, and ſilently groweth up to Wiſdom: But if once they grow ſelf-conceited, they turn to wranglings, and place their Religion in eſpouſed ſingular Opinions, and in being on this or that ſide, or Church; and fall into divided Congregations, where the buſineſs is to build up Souls by deſtroying Charity, and Teaching Sectaries to overvalue themſelves, and deſpiſe Diſſenters. Till at laſt they run themſelves out of breath, and perhaps fall out with all true Religion.

Dir. 7. §. 7. Direct. 7. Do what you can to place them in good Families, and when they are to be married, to join them to ſuch as are fit to be their helpers. In Families and Relations of that ſort People, are ſo near together, and in ſuch conſtant converſe, that it will be very much of the help or hinderance of their Salvation.

Dir. 8. §. 8. Direct. 8. Keep them alſo as much as is poſſible in good company, and out of bad ſeducing company; eſpecially thoſe that are to be their familiars. The Worlds experience telleth us what power company hath, to make Men better or worſe: And what a great advantage it is to work any thing on Mens minds, to have intereſt in them, and intimacy with them; eſpecially with thoſe that are yet to receive their deepeſt impreſſions,

Dir. 9. §. 9. Direct. 9. Keep them from the moſt dangerous baits, opportunities, and temptations to ſenſuality. Withdraw the Tinder and Gunpowder from the fire. There is no curing a Drunkard ordinarily in an Alehouſe or Tavern, or a Fornicator, while he is near the objects of his Luſt, nor a Glutton at a full enticing Table. Set them at farther diſtance from the danger, if you would have them ſafe. Nemo diu tutus periculo proximus. Senec.

Dir. 10. §. 10. Direct. 10. Take the advantage of their perſonal afflictions, or any other notable warnings that are near them. Keep them oft in the Houſe of Mourning, where death may be as in their ſight; and keep them out of the houſe of fooliſh mirth. The time of ſickneſs is an awakening time, and powerfully openeth the ear to counſel. The ſight of the dead or dying Perſons, the hearing of ſick Mens wiſhes and complaints, the ſight of Graves, and dead Mens Bones (if not too oft to make it cuſtomary) doth often force the moſt fooliſh and obſtinate, to ſome Manlike profitable thoughts. When the noiſe of fooliſh mirth and ſports, at rabble Meetings, Stage-plays, and May-games, riotings, or immoderate, rude or tempting Plays, do kill all ſober ſaving Motions, and undiſpoſe the mind to all that is good. Though ſeaſonable and uſeful delights are lawful, yet ſuch as are unſeaſonable, immoderate, enſnaring, ſcandalous, or unprofitable, are pernicious and poyſon to the Soul.

Dir. 11. §. 11. Direct. 11. Engage them in the reading of the holy Scriptures, and of ſuch Books of Practical Divinity, as do at once moſt plainly acquaint them with the Principles of Religion, and piercingly ſet them home upon the Conſcience; that Judgment and Affection, Head and Heart may be edified at once. Such ſuitable Books may be daily their Companions; and it is a great advantage to them, that they may have a powerful ſermon when they pleaſe, and read over the ſame [illegible] as oft as the frailty of their memories do require. Such private innocent Companions have ſaved [illegible] a Soul.

Dir. 12. Engage them in a conſtant courſe of Prayer, (whether it be with a Book, or Form, or without, according to the parts and condition of the Perſon.) For the often approaching to God in ſo holy a work, will affright or ſhame a Man from Sin, and ſtir him up to ſerious thoughts of his Salvation, and engage him to a godly Life.

Dir. 13. §. 13. Direct. 13. If you would have all theſe means effectual to Mens converſion and ſalvation, ſhew them all hearty love and kindneſs, and do them all the good you can. Men are naturally more eaſily ſenſible of the good of their Bodies, than of their Souls; and a kindneſs to the Body is thankfully received, and may prepare them to receive a greater benefit. What you are unable to do for them your ſelves, ſollicite thoſe that are able to do; or, if you cannot do that neither, at leaſt, ſhew your pity and good will. Love is the moſt powerful Preacher in the World.

Dir. 14. §. 14. Direct. 14. Be ſure that you have no fallings out, or quarrels, with any that you would do good upon! And to that end, uſually it is the beſt way, to have as little to do with them in buying and ſelling, or any worldly matters, where Mine and Thine may come in competition, as poſſibly as you can: Or, if you cannot avoid it, you muſt be content to part with ſomewhat of your right, and ſuffer ſome wrongs for fear of hurt to your Neighbours Soul. Even godly Perſons, yea, Parents Children, Brethren and Siſters, uſually fall out about Mine and Thine! And when Self-intereſt hath bred the quarrel, they uſually think ill of the Perſon who is ſuppoſed to injure them; and then they are made uncapable of receiving any Spiritual good by him: And if he ſeem Religious, they are oft alienated from Religion for his ſake. And all unconverted Perſons are ſelfiſh, and uſually look that you ſhould fulfil their deſires, and ſuit your ſelves to their intereſt, without reſpect to right or wrong, or to your own ſufferings! Yet ſuch as theſe muſt be pitied and helped: And therefore it is uſually beſt to avoid all chaffering or worldly dealings with them, leſt you loſe them. And when that cannot be, you muſt judge a little departing from your own right, to be a very cheap price to procure the good of a Neighbours Soul.

Dir. 15. §. 15. Direct. 15. See that in Matters of Religion you neither run too far from ſuch Men in things lawful, nor yet do any thing ſinful in compliance with them. By concurring with them in any ſin, you will harden them and hinder their converſion; and ſo you will by ſingular or violent oppoſition in things indifferent. Thoſe Perſons are quite miſtaken, who think that godly Men muſt go as far from the ungodly as ever they can, in lawful things; and ſay, The ungodly do thus, and therefore we muſt do otherwiſe! Paul was

was of another mind and practice, when he circumciſed Timothy, and became all things to all Men, to ſave ſome. To place Religion in things indifferent, and to cry out againſt lawful things as ſinful, or to flie from others by needleſs ſingularities, is a great cauſe of the hardning and perdition of multitudes, turning their hearts againſt Religion, and making them think that it is but unneceſſary ſcruple, and that Religious Perſons are but ſelf-conceited brain-ſick People, that make to themſelves a duty of their ſuperſtition, and condemn all that be not as humorous as they. Lay not ſuch ſtumbling blocks before any whoſe Souls you deſire to ſave.

CHAP. XVI.

Special Directions for Chriſtian Conference, Exhortation, and Reproof.

Tit. 1. Motives to Chriſtian Conference and Exhortation.

THe right uſe of Speech being a duty of ſo great importance, as I have before ſhewed about the Government of the Tongue; and it being a way of Communication, by which we are all obliged to exerciſe our love to one another, even in the greateſt matter, the ſaving of Souls I ſhall firſt indeavour to perſwade them to this duty, who make too little Conſcience of it; and that by theſe following Conſiderations.

§. 1. Mot. 1. Conſider that it is the exerciſe of our Humanity: Reaſon and Speech do difference us from Brutes. If by being reaſonable we are Men, then by uſing Reaſon we live as Men; and the firſt communicative uſe of Reaſon is by Speech; by thinking we exerciſe Reaſon for our ſelves; by ſpeaking, we exerciſe it (firſt) for others. Therefore if our Reaſon be given us for the higheſt uſes to our ſelves, (to know God and Eternal Life, and the Means thereto) then certainly our Speech is alſo given us, for the ſame higheſt uſes, by way of Communication unto others. Uſe therefore your Tongues to thoſe noble Ends, for which they were given you. Uſe them as the Tongues of Men, to the Ends which Humane Nature is created for.

§. 2. Mot. 2. There is no Subject ſo ſublime and honourable, for the Tongue of Man to be imployed about, as the Matters of God, and Life Eternal. Children will talk of childiſh toys, and Countrey-men talk of their Corn and Cattle, and Princes and Stateſmen look down on theſe with contemptuous Smiles, as much below them: But Crowns and Kingdoms are incomparably more below the buſineſs of a holy Soul! The higher Subjects Philoſophers treat of, the more honourable (if well done) are their Diſcourſes. But none is ſo high as God and Glory.

§. 3. Mot. 3. It is the moſt profitable Subject to the Hearers. A Diſcourſe of Riches, at the moſt, can but direct them how to grow rich; a Diſcourſe of Honours uſually puffeth up the minds of the ambitious: And if it could advance the Auditors to Honour, the Fruit would be a vanity little to be deſired. But a Diſcourſe of God and Heaven, and Holineſs, doth tend to change the hearers minds, into the nature of the things diſcourſed of: It hath been the means of converting and ſanctifying many a thouſand Souls. As learned Diſcourſes tend to make Men learned in the things diſcourſed off; ſo holy Diſcourſes tend to make Men holy. For as Natural Generation begetteth not Gold or Kingdoms, but a Man; ſo Speech is not made to communicate to others (directly) the wealth, or health, or honours, or any extrinſecal things which the ſpeaker hath; but to communicate thoſe Mental Excellencies which he is poſſeſt of. Prov. 16. 21, 22. The ſweetneſs of the lips increaſeth Learning. Underſtanding is a well-ſpring of life to him that hath it. Prov. 10. 13, 21. In the lips of him that hath underſtanding, wiſdom is found—— The lips of the righteous feed many. Prov. 15. 7. The lips of the wiſe diſperſe knowledge, but the heart of the fooliſh doth not ſo. Prov. 20. 15. There is Gold, and a multitude of Rubies, but the lips of knowledge are a precious Jewel. Prov. 10. 20. The Tongue of the juſt is as choice ſilver; the heart of the wicked is little worth.

§. 4. Mot. 4. Holy diſcourſe is alſo moſt profitable to the ſpeaker himſelf. Grace increaſeth by the exerciſe. Even in inſtructing others and opening truth, we are oft-times more powerfully led up to further truth our ſelves, than by ſolitary ſtudies. For Speech doth awaken the intellectual faculty, and keepeth on the thoughts in order, and one truth oft inferreth others, to a thus excited and prepared mind. And the tongue hath a power of moving on our hearts; when we blow the fire to warm another, both the exerciſe, and the fire warm our ſelves: It kindleth the flames of holy love in us, to declare the praiſe of God to others; it increaſeth a hatred of ſin in us, to open its odiouſneſs to others. We ſtarve our ſelves, when we ſtarve the Souls which we ſhould cheriſh.

§. 5. Mot. 5. Holy and heavenly diſcourſe is the moſt delectable. I mean in its own aptitude, and to a mind that is not diſeaſed by corruption. That which is moſt Great, and Good, and Neceſſary, is moſt delectable. What ſhould beſt pleaſe us, but that which is beſt for us? And beſt for others; and beſt in it ſelf? The excellency of the Subject maketh it delightful! And ſo doth the exerciſe of our Graces upon it; and ſerious conference doth help down the truth into our hearts, where it is moſt ſweet. Beſides that Nature and Charity make it pleaſant to do good to others. It can be nothing better than a Subverſion of the appetite by carnality and wickedneſs, that maketh any one think idle Jeſts, or Tales, or Plays, to be more pleaſant than Spiritual heavenly conference; and the talking of Riches, or Sports, or Luſts, to be ſweeter than to talk of God, and Chriſt, and Grace, and Glory. A holy mind hath a continual Feaſt in it ſelf in meditating on theſe things, and the communicating of ſuch thoughts to others, is a more common, and ſo a more pleaſant Feaſt.

§. 6. Mot. 6. Our faithfulneſs to God obligeth us to ſpeak his praiſe, and to promote his truth, and plead his cauſe againſt iniquity. Hath he given us Tongues to magnifie his name, and ſet before us the admirable frame of all the World, to declare his glory in? And ſhall we be backward to ſo ſweet and great a work? How precious and uſeful is all his holy word? What light, and life, and comfort may it cauſe? And ſhall we bury it in ſilence? What company can we come into almoſt, where either the bare-faced committing of ſin, or the defending it, or the oppoſition of Truth or Godlineſs, or the frigidity of Mens hearts towards God, and ſupine neglect of holy things, do not call to us, if we are the Servants of God, to take his part; and if we are the Children of Light, to bear our teſtimony againſt the darkneſs of the World, and if we love God, and Truth, and the Souls of Men, to ſhew it by our prudent ſeaſonable Speech? Is he true to God, and to his Cauſe, that will not open his mouth to ſpeak for him?

§. 7. Mot. 7. And how precious a thing is an immortal Soul, and therefore not to be neglected. Did Chriſt think Souls to be worth his Mediation, by ſuch ſtrange condeſcenſion, even to a ſhameful death? Did he think them worth his coming into Fleſh, to be their teacher? And will you not think them worth the ſpeaking to?

§. 8. Mot. 8. See alſo the greatneſs of your ſin, in the negligence of unfaithful Miniſters. It is eaſie to ſee the odiouſneſs of their ſin, who preach not the Goſpel, or do no more than by an hours dry and dead diſcourſe ſhift off the ſerious work which they ſhould do; and think they may be excuſed from all perſonal over-ſight and helping of the Peoples Souls, all the Week after. And why ſhould you not perceive that a dumb private Chriſtian is alſo to be condemned, as well as a dumb Miniſter? Is not profitable conference your duty, as well as profitable Preaching is his? How many Perſons condemn themſelves, while they ſpeak againſt unfaithful Paſtors? Being themſelves as unfaithful to Families and Neighbours, as the other are to the Flock?

§. 9. Mot. 9. And conſider how the cheapneſs of the means, doth aggravate the ſin of your neglect! And ſhew much unmercifulneſs to Souls. Words coſt you little; indeed alone, without the company of good works, they are too cheap for God to accept of. But if an Hypocrite may bring ſo cheap a Sacrifice, who is rejected, what doth he deſerve that thinketh it too dear? What will that Man do for God, or for his Neighbours Soul, who will not open his mouth to ſpeak for them? He ſeemeth to have leſs love than that Man in Hell, Luk. 16. who would ſo fain have had a Meſſenger ſent from another World, to have warned his Brethren, and ſaved them from that place of torment.

§. 10. Mot. 10. Your fruitful conference is a needful help to the Miniſterial work. When the Preacher hath publickly delivered the word of God to the Aſſemby, if you would ſo far ſecond him, as in your daily converſe, to ſet it home on the hearts of thoſe that you have opportunity to diſcourſe with, how great an aſſiſtance would it be to his ſucceſs? Though he muſt teach them publickly, and from Acts 20. houſe to houſe, yet is it not poſſible for him to be ſo frequent and familiar in daily conference with all the ignorant of the place, as thoſe that are ſtill with them may be. You are many, and he is but one, and can be but in one place at once. Your buſineſs bringeth you into their company, when he cannot be there. O happy is that Miniſter, who hath ſuch a People, who will daily preach over the matter of his publick Sermons, in their private conference with one another? Many hands make quick work. This would moſt effectually prevail againſt the powers of darkneſs, and caſt out Satan from multitudes of miſerable Souls.

§. 11. Mot. 11. Yea, when Miniſters are wanting, through ſcarcity, perſecution, or unfaithfulneſs and negligence, the peoples holy profitable conference, would do much towards the ſupplying of that want. There have few places and ages of the World been ſo happy, but that learned, able, faithful Paſtors have been ſo few, that we had need to pray to the Lord of the Harveſt to ſend forth more. And it is nothing unuſual to have thoſe few ſilenced or hindered from the Preaching of the Goſpel, by the factions or the malignity of the World! And it is yet more common to have ignorant or ungodly Perſons in that Office, who betray the Peoples Souls by their uſurpation, impiety, or ſlothfulneſs. But if in all ſuch wants, the People that fear God, would do their part in private conference, it would be an excellent ſupply. Miniſters may be ſilenced from publick Preaching, when you cannot be ſilenced from profitable diſcourſe.

§. 12. Mot. 12. It is a duty that hath many great advantages for ſucceſs. 1. You may chuſe your ſeaſon; if one time be not fit you may take another. 2. You may chuſe the Perſon, whom you find to have the greateſt neceſſity or capacity, and where your labour is likelieſt to take. 3. You may chuſe your ſubject, and ſpeak of that which you find moſt ſuitable. There is no reſtraint nor impoſition upon you, to hinder your liberty in this. 4. You may chuſe your Arguments by which you would inforce it. 5. Interlocutory conference keepeth your Auditors attentive, and carrieth them on along with you as you go. And it maketh the Application much more eaſie, by their nearneſs, and the familiarity of the diſcourſe; when Sermons are uſually heard but as an inſignificant ſound, or words of courſe. 6. You may at your pleaſure go back and repeat thoſe things which the hearer doth not underſtand, or doth forget; which a Preacher, in the Pulpit, cannot do without the cenſure of the more curious Auditors. 7. You may perceive by the anſwers of them, whom you ſpeak to, what particulars you need moſt to inſiſt on, and what Objections you ſhould moſt carefully reſolve; and when you have ſatisfied them, and may proceed. All which it is hard for a Miniſter to do in publick Preaching; and is it not a great ſin to neglect ſuch an advantageous duty?

§. 13. Mot. 13. And it ſhould ſomewhat encourage you to it, that it is an unqueſtionable duty, when many other are brought into Controverſie. Miniſters Preach under the Regulation of Humane Laws and Canons, and it is a great Controverſie with many, whether they ſhould Preach when they are ſilenced or forbidden by their Superiors; but whether you may ſpeak for God, or for Mens Salvation in your familiar Conference, no Man queſtioneth, nor doth any Law forbid it.

§. 14. Mot. 14. Hath not the fruitful conference of others, in the days of your ignorance, done good to you? Have you not been inſtructed, convinced, perſwaded, and comforted by it? What had become of you, if all Men had let you alone, and paſt you by, and left you to your ſelves? And doth not Juſtice require that you do good to others, as others have done to you; in the uſe of ſuch a tryed means?

§. 15. Mot. 15. Conſider how forward the Devils ſervants are to plead his cauſe! How readily and fiercely will an ignorant drunken Sot pour out his reproaches and ſcorns againſt Religion? And ſpeak evil of the things which he never underſtood? How zealouſly will a Papiſt, or Heretick, or Schiſmatick, promote the intereſt of his Sect, and labour to proſelyte others to his Party? And ſhall we be leſs zealous and ſerviceable for Chriſt, than the Devils Servants are for him? And do leſs to ſave Souls, than they will do to damn them?

§. 16. Mot. 16, Nay, in the time of your ſin and ignorance, if you have not ſpoken againſt Religion, nor taught others to curſe, or ſwear, or ſpeak in ribbald filthy language, yet, at, leaſt, you have ſpent many an hour in idle fruitleſs talk? And doth not this now oblige you, to ſhew your repentance by more fruitful conference? Will you ſince your Converſion, ſpeak as unprofitably as you did before?

§. 17. Mot. 17. Holy conference will prevent the guilt of fooliſh idle talk. Men will not be long ſilent, but will talk of ſomewhat; and if they have not profitable things to talk of, they will prate of vanity. All the fooliſh chat, and frothy jeſts, and ſcurrilous ribbaldry, and envious backbiting, which taketh up Mens time, and poyſoneth the hearers, is cauſed by their want of edifying diſcourſe, which ſhould keep it out. The rankeſt Wits and Tongues will have moſt weeds, if they be not cultivated and taught to bear a better crop.

§. 18. Mot. 18. Your Tongues will be inſtrumental to publick good, or publick hurt. When filthy, vain, and impious Language is grown common, it will bring down common Plagues and Judgments? And if you croſs not the cuſtom, you ſeem to be conſenters, and harden Men in their ſin. But holy conference may, atleaſt, ſhew that ſome partake not of the evil, and may free them from the Plague, if they prevail not with others ſo far as to prevent it. Mal. 3. 16, 17, 18. Then they that feared the Lord ſpake often one to another, and the Lord hearkned, and heard it; and a Book of Remembrance was written before him for them, that feared the Lord, and thought upon his Name. And they ſhall be mine, ſaith the Lord of Hoſts, in that day when I make up my jewels, and I will ſpare them as a Man ſpareth his own Son that ſerveth him.

§. 19. Mot.

§. 19. Mot. 19. Conſider what great neceſſity there is every where of fruitful edifying Speech. 1. In the multitude of the ignorant; and the greatneſs of their ignorance. 2. The numbers of the ſenſual and obſtinate. 3. The power of blindneſs, and of every ſin: What root it hath taken in the moſt of Men. 4. The multitude of baits which are every where before them. 5. The ſubtilty of Satan and his inſtruments in tempting. 6. The weakneſs and unconſtancy of Man, that hath need of conſtant ſollicitation. 7. The want of holy faithful Paſtors, which maketh private Mens diligence the more neceſſary. And in ſuch neceſſity to ſhut up our Mouths, is to ſhut up the bowels of our compaſſion, when we ſee our Brothers need; and how then doth the love of God dwell in us? 1 Joh. 3. 17. To withhold our Exhortation, is as the withholding of Corn from the poor in a time of Famine, which procureth a curſe, Prov. 11. 26. And though in this caſe Men are inſenſible of their want, and take it not ill to be paſt by, yet Chriſt that died for them, will take it ill.

§. 20. Mot. 20. Laſtly conſider how ſhort a time you are like to ſpeak; and how long you muſt be ſilent. Death will quickly ſtop your breath, and lay you in the dark, and tell you that all your opportunities are at an end. Speak now, for you have not long to ſpeak. Your Neighbours lives are haſtening to an end, and ſo are yours; they are dying and muſt hear no more, (till they hear thnir doom) and you are dying, and muſt ſpeak no more; and they will be loſt for ever, if they have not help: Pity them then, and call on them to foreſee the final day; warn them now, for it muſt be now or never: There is no inſtructing and admoniſhing them in the Grave. Thoſe Sculls which you ſee caſt up, had once Tongues which ſhould have praiſed their Creator and Redeemer, and have helped to ſave each others Souls; but now they are Tongueleſs. It is a great grief to us that are now here ſilenced, that we uſed not our Miniſtry more laboriouſly and zealouſly while we had time. And will it not be ſo with you, when Death ſhall ſilence you, that you ſpake not for God while you had a Tongue to ſpeak?

Let all theſe conſiderations ſtir up all that God hath taught a holy Language, to uſe it for their Maſters ſervice while they may, and to repent of ſinful ſilence.

Tit. 2. Directions for Chriſtian Conference and Edifying Speech.

Dir. 1. §. 1. Direct. 1. THE moſt neceſſary direction for a fruitful Tongue, Is to get a well furniſhed mind, and a holy heart, and to walk with God in holineſs your ſelves: For out of the abundance of the heart the mouth will ſpeak. That which you are fulleſt of, is readieſt to come forth; 1. Spare for no ſtudy or labour, to get underſtanding in the things of God: It is a wearineſs to hear Men talk fooliſhly of any thing; but no where ſo much as about Divine and Heavenly things. A wiſe Chriſtian inſtructed to the Kingdom of God, hath a treaſury in his mind, out of which he can bring forth things new and old, Matth. 13. 52. Prov. 14. 7. Go from the preſence of a fooliſh man, when thou perceiveſt not in him the lips of knowledge. 2. Get all that holineſs in your ſelves, to which you would perſwade another. There is a ſtrange communicating power in the courſe of Nature, for every thing to produce its like. Learning and good utterance is very helpful; but it is holineſs that is apteſt to beget holineſs in others. Words which proceed from the love of God, and a truly heavenly mind do moſt powerfully tend to breed in others, that love of God and Heavenly-mindedneſs. 3. Live in the practice of that which you would draw your Neighbour to practice. A Man that cometh warm from holy Meditation, or fervent Prayer, doth bring upon his heart a fulneſs of matter, and an earneſt deſire, and a fitneſs to communicate that good to others, which he himſelf hath felt.

Dir. 2. §. 2. Direct. 2. Eſpecially ſee that you ſoundly believe your ſelves what you are to ſpeak to others. He that hath ſecret infidelity at his heart, and is himſelf unſatisfied, whether there be a Heaven and Hell, and whether ſin be ſo bad, and holineſs ſo neceſſary as the Scripture ſpeaks, will ſpeak but heartleſly of them to another: But if we believe theſe things, as if we ſaw them with our eyes, how heartily ſhall we diſcourſe of them?

Dir. 3. §. 3. Direct. 3, Keep a compaſſionate ſenſe of the miſery of ignorant, ungodly, impenitent Souls. Think what a miſerable bondage of darkneſs and ſenſuality they are in; and that it is Light that muſt recover them: Think oft how quickly they muſt die, and what an appearance they muſt make before the Lord, and how miſerable they muſt be for ever, if now they be not convinced and ſanctified? And ſure this will ſtir up your Bowels to pity them, and make you ſpeak.

Dir. 4. §. 4. Direct. 4. Subdue fooliſh ſhame or baſhfulneſs, and get a holy fortitude of mind. Remember what a ſin it is to be aſhamed of ſuch a Maſter, and ſuch a cauſe and work, which all would be glad to own at laſt. And that when the wicked are not aſhamed of the ſervice of the Devil, and the baſeſt works. And remember that threatning, Mark 8. 8. Whoſoever ſhall be aſhamed of me, and of my words, in this adulterous and ſinful generation, of him alſo ſhall the Son of Man be aſhamed, when he cometh in the glory of his Father, with the holy Angels.

Dir. 5. §. 5. Direct. 5. Be always furniſhed with thoſe particular truths which may be moſt uſeful in this ſervice. Study to do your work (in your degree) as Miniſters ſtudy to do theirs: Who are not contented with the habitual furniture of their minds, but they alſo make particular preparations, for their particular work. If you are to go into the field to your labour, you will take thoſe tools with you, by which it muſt be done; ſo do when you go abroad among any that you may do good to, and be not unfurniſhed for edifying diſcourſe.

Dir. 6. §. 6. Direct. 6. Speak moſt of the greateſt things, (the folly of Sin, the vanity of the World, the certainty and nearneſs of Death and Judgment, the overwhelming weight of Eternity, the neceſſity of Holineſs, the work of Redemption, &c.) and chuſe not the ſmaller Matters of Religion to ſpend your time upon, (unleſs upon ſome ſpecial reaſon.) Among good Men that will not loſe their time on vanity, the Devil too oft prevaileth, to make them loſe it by ſuch Religious Conference, as is little to edification, that greater matters may be thereby thruſt out; ſuch as Paul calleth, vain janglings, and doting about queſtions which ingender ſtrife, and not godly edifying. As about their ſeveral Opinions, or Parties, or comparing one Preacher or Perſon with another, or ſuch things as tend but little to make the hearers more wiſe, or holy, or heavenly.

Dir. 7. §. 7. Direct. 7. Suit all your diſcourſe to the quality of your Auditors, That which is beſt in it ſelf, may not be beſt for every hearer. You muſt vary both your ſubject and manner of diſcourſe, 1. According to the variety of Mens knowledge; the wiſe and the fooliſh muſt not be ſpoken to alike. 2. According to the variety of their Moral qualities; one may be very pious, and another weak in Grace, and another only teachable and tractable, and another wicked and impenitent, and another obſtinate and ſcornful, Theſe muſt not be talked to with the ſame manner of diſcourſe. 3. According to the variety of particular ſins which they are inclined to; which in ſome is pride, in ſome ſenſuality, luſt or idleneſs, in ſome covetouſneſs, and in ſome an erroneous zeal againſt the Church and Cauſe of Chriſt! Every wiſe Phyſician will vary his Remedies, not only according to the kind of the diſeaſe, but according to its various Accidents, and the complexion alſo of the Patient.

Dir. 8. §. 8. Direct. 8. Be ſure to do moſt, where you have moſt authority and obligation. He that will neglect and ſlight his Family, Relations, Children, and Servants, who are under him, and always with him, and yet be zealous for the converſion of ſtrangers, doth diſcover much Hypocriſie, and ſheweth, that it is ſomething elſe than the love of Souls, or ſenſe of Duty which carrieth him on.

Dir. 9 §. 9. Direct. 9. Never ſpeak of holy things, but with the greateſt reverence and ſeriouſneſs you can. The manner as well as the matter is needful to the effect. To talk of ſin, and converſion, of God and Eternity, in a common, running, careleſs manner, as you ſpeak of the Men, and the matters of the World, is much worſe than ſilence, and tendeth but to debauch the hearers, and bring them to a contempt of God and holineſs. I remember my ſelf, that when I was young, I had ſometime the company of one antient godly Miniſter, who was of weaker parts than many others, but yet did profit me more than moſt; becauſe he would never in Prayer or Conference ſpeak of God, or the life to come; but with ſuch marvellous ſeriouſneſs and reverence, as if he had ſeen the Majeſty and Glory which he talked of.

Dir. 10. §. 10. Direct. 10. Take heed of inconſiderate, imprudent Paſſages, which may mar all the reſt; and give malignant Auditors advantage of contempt and ſcorn. Many honeſt Chriſtians through their ignorance, thus greatly wrong the cauſe they manage (I would I might not ſay, Many Miniſters.) Too few words is not ſo bad, as one ſuch imprudent fooliſh word too much.

Dir. 11. §. 11. Direct. 11. Condeſcend to the weak, and bear with their infirmity. If they give you fooliſh anſwers, be not angry and impatient with them; yea, or if they perverſly cavil and contradict. For the Servant of the Lord muſt not ſtrive, but be gentle to all Men, apt to teach, patient, in meekneſs inſtructing Oppoſers, if God peradventure will give them repentance to the acknowledging of the truth, 2. Tim. 2. 24, 25. He is a fooliſh Phyſician that cannot bear the words of a phrenetick or delirant Patient.

Dir. 12. §. 12. Direct. 12. When you are among thoſe that can teach you, be not ſo forward to teach as to learn. Be not eager to vent what you have to ſay, but deſirous to hear what your betters have to ſay. Queſtions in ſuch a caſe ſhould be moſt of your part: It requireth great skill and diligence to draw that out of others, which may profit you; and be not impatient if they croſs your opinions, or open your ignorance. Yea, thoſe that you can teach in other things, yet in ſome things may be able to add much to your knowledge.

Tit. 3. Special Directions for Reproof and Exhortation for the good of others.

THis duty is ſo great, that Satan hindereth it with all his power, and ſo hard, that moſt Men quite omit it (unleſs an angry reproach may go for Chriſtian Exhortation:) And ſome ſpoil it in the management; and ſome proud cenſorious Perſons miſtake the exerciſe of their Pride and Paſſion, for the exerciſe of a charitable Chriſtian Duty; and ſeem to be more ſenſible of their Neighbours ſin and miſery, than of their own. Therefore that you miſcarry not in ſo needful a work, I ſhall add theſe following Directions.

Dir. §. 1. Direct. 1. Be ſure firſt that your reproof have a right end; and then let the manner be ſuited to that end. If it be to convince and convert a Soul, it muſt be done in a manner likely to prevail; if it be only to bear down the Argument of a Deceiver, to preſerve the Standers by, to vindicate the honour of God and godlineſs, and to diſhonour Sin, and to diſgrace an obſtinate Factor for the Devil, then another courſe is fit. Therefore reſolve firſt, by the quality of the Cauſe and Perſon, what muſt be your end.

§. 2. Direct. 2. Be ſure that you reprove not that as a ſin, which is no ſin; either by miſtaking the Law, or the Fact. To make duties and ſins of our own opinions and inventions, and then to lay out our zeal on theſe, and cenſure or reprove all that think not as hardly of ſuch things as we. This is to make our ſelves the objects of the hearers pity; and not to exerciſe juſt pity towards others! Such reproofs deſerve reproof! For they diſcover great ignorance, and pride, and ſelf-conceitedneſs, and very much harden ſinners in their way; and make them think that all reproof is but the vanity of fantaſtical Hypocrites: In ſome caſes with a Child, or Servant, or private Friend, or for prevention, we may ſpeak of faults upon hearſay or ſuſpicion; but it muſt be as of things uncertain, and as a warning rather than a reproof. In ordinary reproof, you muſt underſtand the caſe before you ſpeak: It is a ſhame to ſay after, I thought it had been otherwiſe. Such an erroneous reproof is worſe than none. Dir. 2.

§. 3. Direct. 3. Chuſe not the ſmalleſt ſins to reprove, nor the ſmalleſt duties to exhort them to. For that will make them think that all your zeal is taken up with little matters, and that there is no great neceſſity of regarding you; and conſcience will be but little moved by your Speech: When greater things will greatly and more eaſily affect Men. Dir. 3.

§. 4. Direct. 4. Stop not (with unregenerate Men) in the mention of particular ſins or duties; but make uſe of particulars to convince them of a ſtate of ſin and miſery. It is eaſie to convince a Man that he is a ſinner; and when that is done, he is never the more humbled or converted: For he will tell you, that all are ſinners; and therefore he hopeth to ſpeed as well as you. But you muſt make him diſcern his ſinful ſtate, and ſhew him the difference between a penitent ſinner, and an impenitent; a converted ſinner, and an unconverted; a juſtified pardoned ſinner, and an unjuſtified unpardoned one, or elſe you will do him but little good. Dir. 4.

§. 5. Direct. 5. Suit the manner of your reproof to the quality of the perſon. It is ſeldom that a Parent, Maſter, or Superior, muſt be reproved by a private Inferior; and when it is done, it muſt be done with great ſubmiſſion and reſpect. An angry, peeviſh Perſon muſt be dealt with tenderly, as you handle thorns; but a duller ſottiſh Perſon, muſt be more earneſtly and warmly dealt with. So alſo a greater ſin muſt be roughly handled, or with greater deteſtation, than a leſs. Dir. 5.

§. 6. Direct. 6. Take a fit Seaſon. Not when a Man is in drink, or paſſion, or among others where the diſgrace will vex and harden him; but in ſecret between him and you (if his converſion be your end.) Dir. 6.

§. 7. Direct. 7. Do all in love and tender pity. If you convince not the hearer, that you do it in unfeigned love, you muſt (uſually) expect to loſe your labour; becauſe you make not advantage of his ſelf-love, to promote your Exhortations: Therefore the exhorting way ſhould be more frequent than the reproving way: For Reproof diſgraceth and exaſperateth, when the ſame thing contrived into an Exhortation may prevail. Dir. 7. 2 Theſ. 3. 15. 2 Cor. 2. 4. Gal. 6. 1. 2 Tim. 2. 25. 1 Theſ. 5. 13.

§. 8. Direct. 8. Therefore be as much or more in ſhewing the good, which you would draw them to, as the evil which you would turn them from. For they are never ſavingly converted, till they are won to the love of God and holineſs: Therefore the opening of the riches of the Goſpel, and the love of God, and the joys of Heaven, muſt be the greateſt part of your treaty with a ſinner. Dir. 8.

§. 9. Direct. 9. And labour ſo to help him to a true underſtanding of the nature of Religion, that he may perceive, that it is not only a neceſſary, but a pleaſant thing. Dir. 9.

thing. All love delights: It is the ſlander and miſrepreſentation of godlineſs by the Devil, the World, and the Fleſh, which maketh miſtaken ſinners ſhun it. The way to convert them, and win their hearts to it, is to make them know how good and pleaſant it is, and to confute thoſe calumnies.

Dir. 10. §. 10. Direct. 10. Yet always inſert the remembrance of Death, and Judgment, and of Hell. For the drowſie mind hath need to be awakened; and love worketh beſt, when fear ſubſerveth it. It is hard to procure a ſerious audience and conſideration of things, from hardened hearts, if the ſight of Death and Hell do not help to make them ſerious. Danger which muſt be eſcaped, muſt be known and thought on. Theſe things put weight and power into your Speech.

Dir. 11. §. 11. Direct. 11. Do all as with Divine Authority; and therefore have ready ſome plain Texts of Scripture for the duty, and againſt the ſin you ſpeak of. Shew them where God himſelf hath ſaid it.

Col. 3. 16.

Dir. 12. §. 12. Direct. 12. Seaſonable Expoſtulations, putting themſelves to judge themſelves in their anſwer, hath a convincing and ingaging force. As when you ſhew them Scripture, ask them, [Is not this the Word of God? Do you not believe that it is true? Do you think he that wrote this, knoweth not better than you or I, &c?]

Dir. 13. §. 13. Direct. 13. Put them on ſpeedy practice, and prudently ingage them to it by their promiſe. As if you ſpeak to a drunkard, draw him to promiſe you to come no more (at leaſt, of ſo long time) into an Alehouſe? Or not drink Ale or Wine, but by the conſent of his Wife, or ſome ſober houſhould Friend, who may watch over him: Ingage the voluptuous, the unchaſte, and gameſter, to forſake the company which inſnareth them? Ingage the ungodly to read the Scripture, to frequent good Company, to pray morning and night (with a Book, or without, as they are beſt able.) Their promiſe may bring them to ſuch a preſent change of practice, as may prepare for more.

Dir. 14. Ezek. 33. and 34. Gal. 6. 1. Tit. 2. 4. §. 14. Direct. 14. If you know any near you, who are much fitter than your ſelves, and liker to prevail, procure them to attempt that which you cannot do ſucceſsfully. At leaſt when ſinners perceive that it is not only one Mans opinion, it may ſomewhat move them to reverence the Reproof.

Dir. 15. §. 15. Direct. 15. Put ſome good Book into their hands, which is fitted to the work which you would have done. And get them to promiſe you ſeriouſly to read it over, and conſider it; as if it be for the converſion of a careleſs ſinner, Mr. Whateleys, or Mr. Swinnocks Treatiſe of Regeneration; or ſome other Treatiſe of Repentance and Converſion. If it be for one that is prejudiced againſt a ſtrict Religious life, Mr. Allens Vindication of Godlineſs; if it be an idle voluptuous Perſon, who waſteth precious time in Plays, or needleſs Recreations, in gaming or an idle Life, Mr. Whateleys Sermon, called The Redemption of Time. If it be a Prayerleſs Perſon, Dr. Preſtons Saints daily Exerciſe; if it be a drunkard, Mr. Harris Drunkards Cup: And for many reigning particular ſins, a Book called Solomons Preſcription againſt the Plague; for Directions in the daily practice of Godlineſs, The Practice of Piety, or Mr. Thomas Gouges Directions, &c. Such Books may ſpeak more pertinently than you can; and be as conſtant food to their ſober thoughts, and ſo may further what you have begun.

Dir. 16. Ezek. 9. 4. 2. Pet. 2. 7. 8. §. 16. Direct. 16. When you cannot ſpeak, or where your ſpeaking prevaileth not, mourn for them, and earneſtly pray for their recovery. A ſad countenance of Nehemiah remembred Artaxerxes of his duty. A ſigh or a tear for a miſerable ſinner, may move his heart, when Exhortation will not. He hath a heart of ſtone, who will have no ſenſe of his condition, when he ſeeth another weeping for him.

Queſt. §. 17. Queſt. But is it always a duty to reprove or exhort a ſinner? How ſhall I know when it is my duty, and when it is not?

Anſw. It is no duty in any of theſe Caſes following. 1. In general, When you have ſufficient reaſon to judge, that it will do more harm than good, and will not attain its proper end: For God hath not appointed us to do hurt under pretence of duty; it is no means which doth croſs the end which it ſhould attain. As Prayer and Preaching may be a ſin, when they are like to croſs their proper end; ſo alſo may reproof be.

2. Therefore it muſt not be uſed when it apparently hindereth a greater good. As we may not pray or preach when we ſhould be quenching a fire in the Town, or ſaving a Mans life: So when Reproof doth exclude ſome greater duty or benefit, it is unſeaſonable, and no duty at that time. Chriſt alloweth us to forbear the caſting of Pearls before Swine, or giving that which is holy to Dogs, becauſe of theſe two Reaſons fore-mentioned, It is no means to the contemptuous, and they will turn again and all to rend us. Much more, if he be ſome potent Enemy of the Church, who will not only rend us, but the Church it ſelf if he be ſo provoked: Reproving him then is not our duty.

Prov. 9. 7, 8. Matt. 7. 6.

3. Particularly, When a Man is in a paſſion, or drunk, uſually it is no ſeaſon to reprove him.

4. Nor when you are among others, who ſhould not be witneſſes of the fault, or the reproof; or whoſe preſence will ſhame him, and offend him (except it be only the ſhaming of an incorrigible or malicious ſinner which you intend.)

5. Nor when you are uncertain of the fact which you would reprove, or uncertain whither it be a ſin.

6. Or when you have no witneſs of it, (though you are privately certain) with ſome that will take advantage againſt you as ſlanderers, a reproof may be omitted.

7. And when the offenders are ſo much your ſuperiors, that you are like to have no better ſucceſs than to be accounted arrogant: A groan or tears is then the beſt reproof.

8. When you are ſo utterly unable to manage a reproof, that imprudence or want of convincing reaſon, is like to make it a means of greater hurt than good.

9. When you foreſee a more advantageous ſeaſon, if you delay.

10. When another may be procured to do it with much more advantage, which you doing it may rather hinder.

In all theſe Caſes, that may be a ſin, which at another time may be a duty.

§. 18. But ſtill remember, Firſt, That pride, and paſſion, and ſlothfulneſs, is wont to pretend ſuch reaſons falſly, upon ſome ſleight conjectures, to put by a duty. Secondly, That no Man muſt account another a Dog or Swine, to excuſe him from his duty without cogent evidence. And it is not every wrangling oppoſition, nor reproach and ſcorn, which will warrant us to give a Man up as remedileſs, and ſpeak to him no more; but only ſuch, 1. As ſheweth a heart utterly obdurate, after long means. 2 Or will procure more ſuffering to the reprover, than good to the offender. 3. That when the thing is ordinarily a duty, the reaſons of our omiſſion muſt be clear and ſure, before they will excuſe us.

Gen. 2. 36. Job. 15. 13. Heb. 10. 25. 2 Pet. 2. 1. 2 Tim. 2. 25, 26.

§. 19. Queſt. Muſt we reprove Infidels or Heathens? What have we to do to judge them that are without?

Anſw. Not to the ends of Excommunication, becauſe they are not capable of it; which is meant, 1 Cor. 5. But we muſt reprove them, Firſt, In common compaſſion to their Souls. What were the Apoſtles, and other Preachers ſent for, but to call all Men from their ſins to God? Secondly, And for the defence of Truth and Godlineſs, againſt their words or ill examples.

CHAP. XVII.

Directions for keeping Peace with all Men.

§. 1. PEace is so amiable to Nature it self, that the greatest destroyers of it do commend it; and those Persons in all times and places, who are the cause that the World cannot enjoy it, will yet speak well of it, and exclaim against others as the enemies of Peace: As if there were no other name but his own, sufficient to make their Adversaries odious. As they desire Salvation, so do the ungodly desire Peace; which is with a double error; one about the Nature of it, and another about the Conditions and other Means. By Peace they mean, the quiet undisturbed enjoyment of their Honours, Wealth and Pleasures; that they may have their lusts and will without any contradiction: And the conditions on which they would have it are, the complyance of all others with their Opinions and Wills, and humble submission to their domination, passions, or desires. But Peace is another thing, and otherwise to be desired and sought. Peace in the mind is the delightful effect of its internal harmony, as Peace in the body is nothing but its pleasant health, in the natural position, state, action and concord of all the parts, the humours and spirits: And Peace in Families, Neighbourhoods, Churches, Kingdoms, or other Societies, is the quietness, and pleasure of their order and harmony; and must be attained and preserved by those following means.

Dir. 1. § 2. Direct. 1. Get your own hearts into a humble frame; and abhor all the motions of Pride and Self-exalting. A humble Man hath no high expectations from another, and therefore is easily pleased or quieted! He can bow and yield to the pride and violence of others, as the Willow to the impetuous Winds. His language will be submissive; his patience great; he is content that others go before him! He is not offended that another is preferred. A low mind is pleased in a low condition. But Pride is the Gunpowder of the Mind, the Family, the Church and State: It maketh Men ambitious, and setteth them on striving who shall be the greatest; a proud Mans Opinion must always go for truth, and his Will must be a Law to others, and to be slighted or crossed seemeth to him an unsufferable wrong. And he must be a Man of wonderful complyance, or an excellent Artificer in Man-pleasing and flattery, that shall not be taken as an injurious undervaluer of him: He that overvalueth himself, will take it ill of all that do not also overvalue him. If you (forgetfully) go before him, or overlook him, or neglect a complement, or deny him something which he expected, or speak not honourably of him, much more if you reprove him, and tell him of his faults, you have put fire to the Gun-powder; you have broke his peace, and he will break yours if he can. Pride broke the Peace between God and the Apostate Angels; but nothing unpeaceable must be in Heaven; and therefore by self-exalting they descended into darkness: And Christ by self-humbling ascended unto Glory. It is a very great matter of difficulty to live peaceably in any Family, Church or any Society with any one that is very proud. They expect so much of you, that you can never answer all their expectations, but will displease them by your omissions, though you neither speak nor do any thing to displease them. What is it but the lust of Pride which causeth most of the Wars and Blood-shed, throughout the World? The Pride of two or three Men, must cost many Thousands of their Subjects, the loss of their Peace, Estates and Lives. Delirant Reges, Plectuntur Achivi. What were the Conquests of those Emperors, Alexander, Cæsar, Tamberlane, Mahumet, &c. but the pernicious effects of their infamous Pride! Which like Gunpowder taking fire in their Breasts, did blow up so many Cities and Kingdoms, and call their Villanies by the name of Valour, and their Murders and Robberies by the name of War. If one Mans Pride do swell so big, that his own Kingdom cannot contain it, the Peace of as much of the World as he can conquer is taken to be but a reasonable Sacrifice, to this Infernal Vice: The lives of Thousands both Subjects and Neighbours (called Enemies by this malignant Spirit,) must be cast away meerly to make this one Man the Ruler of the rest, and subdue the Persons of others to his will. Who perhaps when he hath done, will say that he is no Tyrant, but maketh the Bonum publicum his end; and is kind to Men against their wills; and killeth and burneth and depopulateth Countries; for Mens Corporal welfare; as the Papists poyson and burn and butcher Men for the saving of Souls. Cuncta ferit dum cuncta timet, desævit in omnes. They are the Turbines, the Hurricanes or Whirlwinds of the World, whose work is to overturn and ruin. Tantum ut noceat cupit esse potens.—— Whether they burn and kill by right or wrong, is little of their enquiry; but How many are killed? And how many have submitted to their Pride and Wills: As when Q. Flavius complained that he suffered innocently, Valerius answered him, Non sua re interesse, dummodo periret! That was nothing to his business or concernment so he did but perish. Which was plainer dealing than these glorious Conquerors used, but no whit worse. He that cannot command the putrid humours out of his Veins, nor the Worms out of his Bowels, nor will be able shortly to forbid them to crawl or feed upon his Face, will now damn his Soul and shed Mans Blood, to obtain the predomination of his Will. And when he hath conquered many, he hath but made him many enemies, and may find, that in tot populis vix una fides. A quiet Man can scarce with all his wit tell how to find a place where he may live in Peace, where Pride and Cruelty will not pursue him, and the flames of War will not follow him or find him out: And perhaps he may be put to say as Cicero of Pompey and Cæsar, Quem fugiam scio; quem sequar nescio. And if they succeed by Conquest, they become to their Subjects almost as terrible as to their Enemies. So that he that would approach them with a petition for justice, must do it as Augustus spake to a fearful Petitioner, as if he did assem dare Elephanto; or as if they dwelt in the inaccessible Light, and must be served as God with fear and trembling. And those that flatter them as glorious Conquerors, do but stir up the fire of their Pride, to make more ruines and calamities in the Earth, and do the work of a raging Pestilence. As an Athenian Orator said to the Men of Athens, when they would have numbered Alexander with the gods, Cavete ne dum Cœlum liberaliter donetis, terram & domicilia propria amittatis: Take heed while you so liberally give him Heaven, lest he take away your part of Earth. And when their Pride hath consumed and banished Peace; what have they got by it? That which a Themistocles after tryal, would prefer a grave to, Si una via ad solium duceret, altera ad sepulchrum.—— That which Demosthenes preferred banishment before: That which the wisest Philosophers refused at Athens, The great trouble of Government. Inexpertus ambit; expertus odit. Cyneas asked Pyrrhus when he was preparing to invade the Romans, What shall we do when we have conquered the Romans? He answered, We will go next to Sicily? And what shall we do when Sicily is conquered? said he: Pyrrhus said, We will go next to Africk: And what shall we do next, said the other? Why then said he, We will be quiet and merry and take our ease: And said Cyneas, if that be last and best, Why may we not do so now? It is for quietness and peace that such pretend to fight and break Peace: But they usually die before they obtain it! (as Pyrrhus did:) And might have better permitted Peace to stand, than pull it down to build better. As one askt an old Man at Athens, Why they called themselves Philosophers? Who answered, Because we seek after Wisdom:

Saith

Saith he, If you are but ſeeking it at this age, when do you think to find it? So I may ſay to the proud Warriers of the World, If ſo many Men muſt be killed, and ſo many conquered in ſeeking Peace, when will it that way be found? But perhaps they think that their wiſdom and goodneſs is ſo great, that the World cannot be happy unleſs they govern it: But what could have perſwaded them to think ſo, but their Pride? Nihil magis ægris prodeſt, quam ab eo curari a quo voluerint, ſaith Seneca! Patients muſt chooſe their own Phyſicians Men uſe to give them but little thanks, who drench them with ſuch benefits, and bring them to the potion of Peace ſo hot, that the touch of the Cup muſt burn their Lips, and who in goodneſs cut the throats of one part, that their Government may be a bleſſing to the Survivers. In a word it is Pride that is the great incendiary of the World, whether it be found in high or low. It will permit no Kingdom, Family or Church to enjoy the pleaſant Fruits of Peace.

Dir. 2. §. 3. Direct. 2. If you would be peaceable, be not covetous lovers of the World, but be contented with your daily bread. Hungry Dogs have ſeldom ſo great plenty of meat, as to content them all, and keep them from falling out about it. If you over-love the World, you will never want occaſions of diſcord: Either your Neighbour ſelleth too dear, or buyeth too cheap of you, or over-reacheth you, or gets before you, or ſome way or other doth you wrong: As long as he hath any thing which you deſire, or doth not ſatisfie all your Expectations. Ambitious and Covetous Men muſt have ſo much room, that the World is not wide enough for many of them: And yet (Alas) too many of them there are: And therefore they are ſtill together by the ears, like Boys in the Winter nights, when the Bed cloaths are too narrow to cover them: One pulleth, and another pulleth, and all complain: You muſt be ſure that you treſpaſs not in the ſmalleſt meaſure, nor incroach on the leaſt of his commodities, that you demand not your own, nor deny him any thing that he deſireth, nor get any thing which he would have himſelf, no nor ever give over feeding his greedy expectations, and enduring his injuſtice and abuſe, if you will live peaceably with a worldly-minded Man.

Dir. 3. §. 4. Direct. 3. If you will be peaceable, Love your Neighbours as your ſelves. Love neither imagineth nor ſpeaketh, nor worketh any hurt to others: It covereth infirmities: It hopeth all things: It endureth all things: 1 Cor. 13. Selfiſhneſs and want of Love to others, cauſeth all the contentions in the World. You can bear with great faults in your ſelves, and never fall out with your ſelves for them: But with your Neighbours you are quarrelling for thoſe that are leſs! Do you fall out with another becauſe he hath ſpoken diſhonourably or ſlightly of you, or ſlandered you, or ſome way done you wrong? You have done a thouſand times worſe than all that againſt your ſelves, and yet can bear too patiently with your ſelves? If another ſpeak evil of you, he doth not make you evil: It is worſe to make you bad than to call you ſo: And this you do againſt your ſelves. Doth your Neighbour wrong you in your Honour or Eſtate? But he endangereth not your Soul: He doth not forfeit your Salvation! He doth not deſerve damnation for you, nor make your Soul diſpleaſing to God: But all this you do againſt your ſelves (even more than all the Devils in Hell do) and yet you are too little offended with your ſelves: See here the power of blind ſelf-love! If you loved your Neighbours as your ſelves, you would agree as peaceably with your Neighbours almoſt as with your ſelves. Love them more and you will bear more with them, and provoke them leſs.

Dir. 4. § 5. Direct. 4. Compoſe your minds to Chriſtian gentleneſs and meekneſs, and ſuffer not Paſſion to make you either turbulent and unquiet to others, or impatient and troubleſome to your ſelves. A gentle and quiet mind hath a gentle quiet tongue. It can bear as much wrong as another can do (according to its meaſure:) It is not in the power of Satan: He cannot at his pleaſure ſend his emiſſary, and by injuries or foul words, procure it to ſin: But a paſſionate Perſon is frequently provoking or provoked. A little thing maketh him injurious to others; and a little injury from others, diſquieteth himſelf. He is daily troubling others or himſelf, or both. Coals of fire go from his lips: It is his very deſire to provoke and vex thoſe that he is angry with: His Neighbours Peace and his own are the fuel of his anger, which he conſumeth in a moment. To converſe with him and not provoke him, is a task for ſuch as are eminently meek and ſelf-denying: He is as the leaves of the Aſp-tree, that never reſt, unleſs the day be very calm. The ſmalleſt breath of an angry Tongue, can ſhake him out of his tranquility, and turn him into an Ague of diſquietneſs. The ſails of the Windmill are ſcarce more at the Winds command, than his heart and tongue is at the command of Satan: He can move him almoſt when he pleaſe. Bid but a Neighbour ſpeak ſome hard ſpeeches of him, or one of his Family neglect or croſs him, and he is preſently like the raging Sea, whoſe waves caſt up the mire and dirt. An impatient Man hath no ſecurity of his own Peace for an hour; Any Enemy or angry Perſon, can take it from him when they pleaſe. And being troubled, he is troubleſome to all about him. If you do not in patience poſſeſs your Souls, they will be at the mercy of every one that hath a mind to vex you. Remember then that no Peace can be expected without Patience; nor Patience without a meek and gentle mind: Remember the ornament of a meek and quiet ſpirit, is of great price in the ſight of God, 1 Pet. 3. 4. And that the wiſdom from above is firſt pure and then peaceable, gentle, and eaſie to be intreated, Jam. 3. 17. And that the eternal wiſdom from above, hath bid you learn of him to be meek and lowly in ſpirit as ever you would find reſt to your ſouls, Mat. 11. 28, 29. And he that loſeth his own Peace is likeſt to break the peace of others.

Dir. 5. §. 6. Direct. 5. Be careful to maintain that Order of Government and Obedience, which is appointed of God for the preſervation of Peace, in Families, Churches, and Commonwealths. If you will break this veſſel, Peace will flow out and be quickly ſpilt. What Peace in Schools but by the authority of the Schoolmaſter? Or in Armies but by the authority of the General? If an unwiſe and ungodly Governour, do himſelf violate the foundations and boundaries of Peace, and either weakly or wilfully, make dividing Laws, no wonder if ſuch wounds do ſpend the vital blood and ſpirits of that Society; it being more in the power of the Governours than of the Subject to deſtroy Peace or to preſerve it. And if the Subjects make not conſcience of their duty to their Superiors, the banks of peace will ſoon be broken down, and all will be overwhelmed in tumult and confuſion. Take heed therefore of any thing which tendeth to ſubvert Government: Diſobedience or Rebellion ſeldom wanteth a fair pretence: But it more ſeldom anſwereth the Agents expectation. It uſually pretendeth the weakneſſes, miſcarriages, or injurious dealings of Superiors: But it as uſually mendeth an inconvenience with a miſchief. It ſetteth fire on the houſe to burn up the Rats and Mice that troubled it. It muſt be indeed a grievous malady that ſhall need ſuch a miſchief for its remedy. Certainly it is no means of Gods appointment. Take heed therefore of any thing which would diſſolve theſe bonds. Entertain not diſhonourable thoughts of your Governours, and receive not, nor utter not any diſhonourable words againſt them; if they be faulty, open not their ſhame: Their honour is their intereſt, and the Peoples too: Without it they will be diſabled for effectual Government: When Subjects, or Servants, or Children are sawcily censorious of Superiors, and make themselves Judges of all their Actions, even those which they do not understand, and when they presume to defame them, and with petulant Tongues to cast contempt upon them, the fire is begun, and the sacred Bonds of Peace are loosed. When Superiors rule with Piety, Justice and true love to their Subjects, and inferiors keep their place and rank, and all conspire the publick good, then Peace will flourish, and not till then.

Dir. 6. §. 7. Direct. 6. Avoid all revengeful and provoking Words. When the poyson of Asps is under Mens lips, (Rom. 3. 13.) no wonder if the hearers Minds that are not sufficiently antidoted against it, fester. Death and life are in the power of the tongue: Prov. 18. 21. When the tongue is as a Sword, yea, a sharp Sword, (Psal. 57. 4.) and when it is purposely whetted, (Psal. 64. 3.) no marvel if it pierce and wound them that are unarmed. But by long forbearing a Prince is perswaded, and a soft tongue breaketh the bone, Prov. 25. 15. A railer is numbred with those that a Christian must not eat with, 1 Cor. 5. For Christianity is so much for Peace, that it abhorreth all that is against it. Our Lord when he was reviled, reviled not again, and in this was our example, 1 Pet. 2. 21, 23. A scorning, railing, reproachful Tongue, is set (as James saith, 3. 6.) on fire of Hell, and it setteth on fire the course of nature, even Persons, Families, Churches, and Common-wealths. Many a ruined Society may say by experience, Behold, how great a matter a little fire kindleth, Jam. 3. 5.

Dir. 7. §. 8. Direct. 7. Engage not your selves too forwardly or eagerly in disputes, nor at any time without necessity: And when necessity calleth you, set an extraordinary watch upon your passions. Though disputing is lawful, and sometime necessary to defend the truth, yet it is seldom the way of doing good to those whom you dispute with: It engageth Men in partiality and passionate provoking words before they are aware: And while they think they are only pleading for the truth, they are militating for the honour of their own understandings. They that will not stoop to hear you as learners, while you orderly open the truth in its coherent parts; will hardly ever profit by your contendings; when you engage a proud Person, to bend all his wit and words against you. The Servant of the Lord must not strive, but be gentle to all Men, apt to teach, &c.

1 Tim. 6. 4, 5, 6. 2 Tim. 2. 24.

Dir. 8. §. 9. Direct. 8. Have as little to do with Men, in matters which their commodity is concerned in as you can: As in chaffering, or in any other thing where Mine and Thine is much concerned: For few Men are so just as not to expect that which others account unjust: And the neareſt Friends have been alienated hereby.

Dir. 9. § 10. Direct. 9. Buy peace at the price of any thing which is not better than it. Not with the loss of the favour of God, or of our innocency, or true peace of conscience, or with the loss of the Gospel, or ruine of Mens Souls: But you must often part with your Right for Peace, and put up wrongs in word or deed. Money must not be thought too dear to buy it, when the loss of it will be worse than the loss of Money, to your selves or those that you contend with. If a Soul be endangered by it, or societies ruined by it, it will be dear bought Mony which is got or saved by such means. He is no true friend of Peace, that will not have it, except when it is cheap.

Dir. 10. §. 11. Direct. 10. Avoid Censoriousness: which is the judging of Men or Matters that you have no call to meddle with, and the making of matters worse than sufficient proof will warrant you. Be neither busie-bodies, medling with other Mens matters, nor peevish aggravaters of all Mens faults. Judge not, that ye be not judged; for with what measure you mete, it shall be measured to you again, Matth. 7. 1, 2. You shall be censured, if you will censure: And if Christ be a true discerner of Minds, it is they that have beams in their own eyes, who are the quickest perceivers of the motes in others: Censorious Persons are the great dividers of the Church, and every where adversaries to Peace; while they open their mouths wide against their Neighbours, to make the worst of all that they say and do, and thus sow the seeds of discord amongst all.

Dir. 11. §. 12. Direct. 11. Neither talk against Men behind their backs, nor patiently hearken to them that use it. Though the detecting of a dangerous Enemy, or the prevention of anothers hurt, may sometimes make it a duty to blame them that are absent; yet this case which is rare, is no excuse to the back-biters sin. If you have any thing to say against your Neighbour, tell it him in a friendly manner to his face, that he may be the better for it: If you tell it only to another, to make him odious, or hearken to backbiters that defame Men secretly, you shew that your business is not to do good, but to diminish love and peace.

Dir. 12. §. 13. Direct. 12. Speak more of the good than of the evil, which is in others. There is none so bad, as to have no good in them: Why mention you not that? which is more useful to the hearer, than to hear of Mens faults. But of this more afterward.

Dir. 13. §. 14. Direct. 13. Be not strange, but lovingly familiar with your Neighbours. Backbiters and slanders, and unjust suspicious, do make Men seem that to one another, which when they are acquainted, they find is nothing so: Among any honest well meaning Persons, familiarity greatly reconcileth. Though indeed there are some few so proud and fiery, and bitter Enemies to honest peace, that the way to be at peace with them is to be far from them, where we may not be remembred by them: But it is not so with ordinary Neighbours nor Friends that are fallen out, nor differing Christians: It's nearness that must make them Friends.

§. 15. Direct 14. Affect not a distance and sowr singularity in lawful things. Come as near them as you can, as they are Men and Neighbours; and take it not for your duty to run as from them, lest you run into the contrary extream.

Dir. 15. §. 16. Direct. 15. Be not over stiff in your own opinions, as those that can yield in nothing to another. Nor yet so facile and yielding as to betray or lose the truth. It greatly pleaseth a proud Mans mind, when you seem to be convinced by him, and to change your mind upon his Arguments, or to be much informed and edified by him: But when you deny this honour to his understanding, and contradict him, and stifly maintain your opinion against him, you displease and lose him: And indeed, a wise Man should gladly learn of any that can teach him more; and should most easily of any Man let go an error, and be most thankful to any that will increase his knowledge: And not only in errors to change our minds, but in small and indifferent things to submit by silence, beseemeth a modest peaceable Man.

Dir. 16. §. 17. Direct. 16. Yet build not Peace on the foundation of impiety, injustice, cruelty or faction: for that will prove but the way to destroy it in the end. Traitors, and Rebels, and Tyrants, and Persecutors, and ambitious covetous Clergy Men, do all pretend peace for their Iniquity: But what Peace with Jezabels Whoredoms? Satans Kingdom is supported by a Peace in sin: which Christ came to break that he might destroy it: while this strong Man armed keepeth his house, his Goods are in peace, till a stronger doth bind him: overcome him, and cast him out. Deceitful sinful means of Peace, have been the grand Engine of Satan and the Papal Clergy, by which they have banished, and kept out Peace so many Ages from most of the Christian World.

Impiis

Impiis mediis Eccleſiæ paci conſulere, was one of the three means which Luther foretold would caſt out the Goſpel. Where Perjury or falſe Doctrine, or any ſin, or any unjuſt, or inconſiſtent terms, are made the condition of Peace, Men build upon ſtubble and bryers, which God will ſet fire to, and ſoon conſume, and all that peace will come to naught.

Directions for Church-peace I have laid down before; to which I muſt refer you.

CHAP. XVIII.

Directions againſt all Theft and Fraud, or injurious getting and keeping that which is anothers, or deſiring it.

§ 1. HE that would know what Theft is, muſt know what Propriety is: And it is that plenary title to a thing, by which it is called our own; It is that right to any thing as Mine, by which I may juſtly have it, poſſeſs it, uſe it, and diſpoſe of it. This Dominion or Propriety is either abſolute, (and that belongeth to none but God) or ſubordinate, reſpective and limited (which is the only propriety that any Creature can have.) Which is ſuch a Right, which will hold good againſt the claim of any fellow Creature, though not againſt Gods. And among Men, there are Proprietors or Owners which are Principal, and ſome who are but dependant ſubordinate and limited. The ſimple Propriety may remain in a Land-lord or Father, who may convey to his Tenant or his Child, a limited dependant Propriety under him. Injuriouſly to deprive a Man of this Propriety, or of the thing in which he hath Propriety, is the ſin which I ſpeak of in this Chapter; which hath no one name, and therefore I expreſs it here by many. Whether it be Theft, Robbery, Couſenage, Extortion, or any other way of depriving another injuriouſly of his own. Theſe General Directions are needful to avoid it.

Dir. 1. §. 2. Direct. 1. Love not the World, nor the things that are in the World, 1 Joh. 2. 15. Cure Covetouſneſs, and you will kill the root of fraud and theft. As a Drunkard would eaſily be cured of his Drunkenneſs, if you could cure him of his thirſt and love to drink; ſo an Extortioner, Thief or Deceiver would eaſily be cured of their outward ſin, if their hearts were cured of the diſeaſe of Worldlineſs. The love of Money is the root of all this evil. Value theſe things no more than they deſerve.

Dir. 2. §. 3. Direct. 2. To this end, acquaint your hearts with the greater riches of the life to come: And then you will meet with true ſatisfaction. The true hopes of Heaven will cure your greedy deſires of Earth. You durſt not then forfeit your part in that perpetual Bleſſedneſs, for the temporal ſupply of ſome bodily want: You durſt not with Adam part with Paradiſe for a forbidden bit; nor as Eſau prophanely ſell your birth-right for a morſel. It is the unbelief and contempt of Heaven, which maketh Men venture it for the poor Commodities of this World.

Dir. 3. §. 4. Direct. 3. Be contented to ſtand to Gods diſpoſal; and ſuffer not any carking diſcontented thoughts to feed upon your hearts. When you ſuffer your minds to run all day long upon your neceſſities and ſtraits, the Devil next tempteth you to think of unlawful Courſes to ſupply them. He will ſhew you your Neighbours Money, or Goods, or Eſtates, and tell you, how well it would be with you if this were yours: He ſhewed Achan the Golden Wedge: He told Gehazi how unreaſonable it was that Naamans Money and Rayment ſhould be refuſed: He told Balaam of the hopes of preferment which he might have with Balak: He told Judas how to get his thirty pieces: He perſwaded Ananias and Saphirah, that it was but reaſonable to retain part of that which was their own. Nay, commonly it is diſcontents and cares which prepareth poor wretches for thoſe appearances of the Devil, which draweth them to Witchcraft for the ſupplying of their wants. If you took God for your God, you would take him for the ſufficient diſpoſer of the World, and one that is fitter to meaſure out your part of earthly things than you your ſelves: and then you would reſt in his Wiſdom, Will, and Fatherly Providence; and not ſhift for your ſelves by ſinful means. Diſcontentedneſs of mind, and diſtruſt of God, are the cauſe of all ſuch frauds and injuries. Truſt God, and you will have no need of theſe.

§. 5. Direct. 4 Remember what promiſes God hath Dir. 4. made for the competent ſupply of all your wants. Godlineſs hath the promiſe of this life and of that to come: All other things ſhall be added to you, if you ſeek firſt Gods Kingdom and the righteouſneſs thereof, Matth. 6. 33. They that fear the Lord ſhall want nothing that is good, Pſal. 37. All things ſhall work together for good to them that love God? Rom. 8. 28. Let your converſation be without Covetouſneſs, and be content with ſuch things as ye have: for he hath ſaid, I will never leave thee nor forſake thee, Heb. 13. 5. Live by Faith on theſe ſufficient promiſes, and you need not ſteal.

§. 6. Direct. 5. Overvalue not the accommodation Dir. 5. and pleaſure of the fleſh, and live not in the ſins of gluttony, Drunkenneſs, Pride, Gaming, or riotous Courſes, which may bring you into want, and ſo to ſeek unlawful Maintenance. He that is a Servant to his fleſh cannot endure to diſpleaſe it, nor can bear the want of any thing which it needeth. But he that hath maſtered and mortified his Fleſh, can endure its labour and hunger, yea, and death too, if God will have it ſo. Large Revenues will be too little for a fleſhly minded Perſon: But a little will ſerve him that hath brought it under the power of reaſon. Magna pars libertatis eſt bene moratus venter, ſaith Seneca: A well nurtured fair-conditioned belly is a great part of a Mans liberty, becauſe an ill-taught and ill-conditioned belly is one of the baſeſt ſlaveries in the World. As a Philoſopher ſaid to Diogenes, If thou could'ſt flatter Dionyſius, thou needeſt not eat herbs: But ſaith Diogenes, If thou couldeſt eat herbs thou needeſt not flatter Dionyſius: He took this for the harder task: So the Thief and Deceiver will ſay to the poor, if you could do as we do, you need not fare ſo hardly: But a contented poor Man may better anſwer him and ſay, If you could fare hardly as I do, you need not deceive or ſteal as you do. A proud Perſon that cannot endure to dwell in a Cottage, or to be ſeen in poor or patcht Apparel, will be eaſily tempted to any unlawful way of getting, to keep him from diſgrace, and ſerve his Pride. A Glutton, whoſe Heaven is in his throat, muſt needs fare well, however he come by it: A Tipler muſt needs have proviſion for his guggle, by right or by wrong. But a humble Man, and a temperate Man can ſpare all this, and when he looketh on all the proud Mans Furniture, he can bleſs himſelf as Socrates did in a Fair, with Quam multa ſunt quibus ipſe non egeo? How many things be there which I have no need of? And he can pity the ſenſual deſires which others muſt needs fulfil; even as a ſound Man pitieth another that hath the itch, or the thirſt of a ſick Man in a Fevor, that crieth out for drink. As Seneca ſaith, It is Vice and not Nature which needeth much: Nature, and Neceſſity, and Duty are contented with a little. But he that muſt have the pleaſure of his ſin, muſt have proviſion to maintain that pleaſure. Quench the fire of Pride, Senſuality and Luſt, and you may ſpare the coſt of fuel, Rom. 13: 13, 14. & 8. 13.

§. 7. Direct. 6. Live not in idleneſs or ſloth: But be Dir. 6. laborious in your Callings, that you may eſcape that need or poverty which is the temptation to this ſin of Theft.

Idleneſs is a crime which is not to be tolerated in Chriſtian Societies. 2 Theſ. 2. 6, 8, 10, 12. Now we command you, brethren. in the name of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, that ye withdraw your ſelves from every brother that walketh diſorderly, and not after the tradition which he received of us: For ye know how ye ought to follow us; for we behaved not our ſelves diſorderly among you, neither did we eat any Mans bread for nought; but workt with labour and travel night and day, that we might not be chargeable to any of you: Not becauſe we have not power, but to make our ſelves an enſample to you to follow us: For when we were with you, this we commanded you, that if any would not work, neither ſhould he eat: For we hear that there are ſome among you which walk diſorderly, working not at all, but are buſie bodies: Now them that are ſuch, we command and exhort by our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, that with quietneſs they work and eat their own bread. Eph. 4. 28. Let him that ſtole, ſteal no more, but rather let him labour, working with his hands the thing which is good, that he may have to give to him that needeth. He that ſtealeth to maintain his Idleneſs, ſinneth that he may ſin; and by one ſin getteth proviſion for another: You ſee here that you are bound, not only to work to maintain your ſelves, but to have to give to others in their need.

Dir. 7. §. 8. Direct. 7. Keep a tender Conſcience, which will do its office, and not ſuffer you to ſin without remorſe. A ſeared ſenſleſs Conſcience will permit you to lye, and ſteal, and deceive, and will make no great matter of it, till God awaken it by his grace or vengeance. Hence it is that Servants can deceive their Maſters, or take that which is not allowed them, and buyers and ſellers over-reach one another, becauſe they have not tender conſciences to reprove them.

Dir. 8. §. 9. Direct. 8. Remember always that God is preſent, and none of your ſecrets can be hid from him. What the better are you to deceive your Neighbour, or your Maſter, and to hide it from their knowledge, as long as your Maker and Judge ſeeth all? When it is he that you moſt wrong, and with him that you have moſt to do, and he that will be the moſt terrible avenger? What blinded Atheiſts are you, who dare do that in the preſence of the moſt righteous God, which you durſt not do if Men beheld you?

Dir. 9. §. 10. Direct. 9. Forget not how dear all that muſt coſt you, which you gain unlawfully. The reckoning time is yet to come. Either you will truly repent, or not: If you do, it muſt coſt you remorſe and ſorrow, and ſhameful confeſſion, and reſtitution of all that you have got amiſs: And is it not better forbear to ſwallow that morſel, which muſt come up again with heart-breaking grief and ſhame. But if you repent not unfeignedly, it will be your damnation: It will be opened in Judgment to your perpetual confuſion, and you muſt pay dear for all your gain in Hell. Never look upon the gain therefore, without the ſhame and damnation which muſt follow. If Achan had foreſeen the ſtones, and Gehazi the Leproſie, and Ahab the mortal arrow, and Jezabel the licking of her blood by Dogs, and Judas the hanging or precipitation, and Ananias and Saphirah the ſudden death, or any of them the after miſery, it might have kept them from their pernicious gain. Uſually even in this life, a curſe attendeth that which is ill gotten, and bringeth fire among all the reſt.

Dir. 10. §. 11. Direct. 10. If you are poor, conſider well of the mercy which that condition may bring you, and let it be your ſtudy how to get it ſanctified to your good. If Men underſtood and believed that God doth diſpoſe of all for the beſt, and make them poor to do them good, and conſidered what that good is which poverty may do them, and made it their chief care, to turn it thus to their gain, they would not find it ſo intolerable a thing, as to ſeek to cure it by fraud or thievery, Think what a mercy it is, that you are ſaved from thoſe temptations to over-love the World, which the Rich are undone by. And that you are not under thoſe temptations to intemperance, and Exceſs and Pride as they are: And that you have ſuch powerful helps for the mortification of the Fleſh, and Victory over the deceiving World. Improve your poverty, and you will ſcape theſe ſins.

§. 12. Direct. 11. If you are but willing to eſcape this ſin, you may eaſily do it by a free Confeſſion, to thoſe whom you have wronged or are tempted to wrong. He that is not willing to forbear his ſin, is guilty before God, though he do forbear it. But if you are truly willing, it is eaſie to abſtain. Do not ſay, that you are willing till neceſſity pincheth you or you ſee the bait: For if you are ſo, you may eaſily prevent it; at that time when you are willing. If ever you are willing indeed, take that opportunity, and if you have wronged any Man, go and confeſs it to him (in the manner I ſhall afterward direct.) And this will eaſily prevent it: For ſhame will engage you, and ſelf preſervation will engage him to take more heed of you. Or if you have not yet wronged any, but are ſtrongly tempted to it, if you have no other ſufficient remedy, go tell him or ſome other fit Perſon, that you are tempted to ſteal and to deceive in ſuch or ſuch a manner, and deſire them not to truſt you: If you think the ſhame of ſuch a Confeſſion too dear a price to ſave you from the ſin, pretend no more that you are truly willing to forbear it, or that ever you did unfeignedly repent of it. Dir. 11.

Tit. 2. Certain Caſes of Conſcience about Theft and Injury.

§. 1. Queſt. 1. IS it a ſin for a Man to ſteal in abſolute neceſſity, when it is meerly to ſave his life? Queſt. 1.

Anſw. The caſe is very hard: I ſhall, 1. Tell you ſo much as is paſt controverſie, and then ſpeak to the controverted part. 1. If all other unqueſtionable means be not firſt uſed, it is undoubtedly a ſin. If either labouring, or begging will ſave our lives, it is unlawful to ſteal. Yea, or if any others may be uſed to intercede for us. Otherwiſe it is not ſtealing to ſave a Mans life, but ſtealing to ſave his labour, or to gratify his Pride and ſave his Honour. 2. It is undoubtedly a ſin, if the ſaving of our lives by it, do bring a greater hurt to the Commonwealth, or other Men than our lives are worth. 3. And it is a ſin if it deprive the owner of his life, he being a Perſon more worthy and uſeful to the common good. Theſe caſes are no matter of Controverſie.

§ 2. 4. And it is agreed of, that no Man may ſteal beforehand out of a diſtruſtful fear of want. 5. Or if he take more than is of neceſſity to ſave his life. Theſe caſes alſo are put as out of Controverſie.

§. 3. But whether in an innocent, abſolute neceſſity, it be lawful to ſteal ſo much as is meerly ſufficient to ſave ones life, is a thing that Caſuiſts are not agreed on. They that think it lawful, ſay that the preſervation of life is a natural duty, and preſervation of propriety is but a ſubſervient thing which muſt give place to it. So Ameſius de Conſcient. l. 5. c. 50. maketh it one caſe of lawful taking that which is anothers, Si irrationabiliter cenſeatur Dominus invitus: ut in eis quæ accipit aliquis ex alieno ad extremam & præſentem ſuam neceſſitatem ſublevandam, cui alia ratione ſuccurrere non poteſt. Hoc enim videtur eſſe ex jure naturali, diviſione rerum antiquiore & ſuperiore; quod jure humano quo facta eſt diviſio rerum non potuit abrogari: Quo ſenſu non male dicitur, omnia fieri communia in extrema neceſſitate.

§. 4. On

§. 4. On the other side, those that deny it say, that the same God that hath bid us preserve our Lives, hath appointed propriety, and forbid us to steal, without excepting a case of necessity, and therefore hath made it simply evil, which we may not do for the procurement of any good: And the saving of a Mans Life will not prove so great a good: As the breaking of Gods Law will be an evil.

§. 5. For the true determining of this case, we must distinguish of Persons, Places and Occasions. 1. Between those whose Lives are needful to the publick good and safety, and those that are not of any such concernment. 2. Between those that are in an Enemies or a strange Country, and those that are in their own. 3. Between those that are in a Commonwealth, and those that are either in a community, or among People not embodyed or conjoined. 4. Between those that take but that which the refuser was bound to give them, and those that take that which he was not bound to give them: And so I answer.

§ 6. 1. Whensoever the preservation of the Life of the taker, is not in open probability, like to be more serviceable to the common good, than the violation of the right of Propriety will be hurtful, the taking of another Mans goods is sinful, though it the only to save the takers Life. For the common good is to be preferred before the good of any individual.

§. 7. 2. In ordinary cases, the saving of a Mans Life will not do so much good, as his stealing will do hurt. Because the Lives of ordinary Persons are of no great concernment to the common good: And the violation of the Laws may encourage the poor to turn Thieves, to the loss of the estates and lives of others, and the overthrow of peace and order. Therefore ordinarily it is a duty, rather to die, than take another Mans goods against his will, or without his consent.

§. 8. 3. But in case that the common good apparently more require the preservation of the Persons Life, than the preservation of propriety and keeping of the Law in that instance, it is then no sin (as I conceive:) which may fall out in many instances.

As, 1. In case the King and his Army, should march through a Neighbour Princes Country, in a necessary War against their Enemies; if food be denyed them in their march, they may take it rather than perish. 2. In case the Kings Army in his own Dominions, have no pay, and must either disband or die, if they have not provision, they may rather take free quarter, in case that their obedience to the King and the preservation of the Country forbiddeth them to disband. 3. When it is a Person of so great honour, dignity and desert, as that his worth and serviceableness will do more than recompence the hurt: As if Alexander or Aristotle were on Ship-board with a covetous Ship-master, who would let them die rather than relieve them. 4. When a Child taketh Meat from a cruel Parent that would famish him, or a Wife from such a cruel Husband! Or any Man taketh his own by stealth from another who unjustly detaineth it, when it is to save his life. For here is a fundamental right ad rem, and the heinousness of his crime that would famish another rather than give him his own, or his due, doth take off the scandal and evil consequents, of the manner of taking it. 5. But the greatest difficulty is, in case that only the common Law of humanity and charity bind another to give to one that else must die, and he that needeth may take it so secretly that it shall in likelyhood never be known, and so never be scandalous, nor encourage any other to steal? May not the needy then steal to save his Life? This case is so hard, that I shall not venture to determine it: But only say that he that doth so in such a case, must resolve when he hath done, to repay the owner if ever he be able (though it be but a piece of bread; or to repay him by his labour and service, if he have no other way, and be thus able; or if not so, to confess it to him that he took it from, and acknowledge himself his debtor (unless it be to one whose cruelty would abuse his confession.)

§ 9. Quest. 2. If another be bound to relieve me and do not; may I not take it, though it be not for the immediate saving of my life! Quest. 2.

Answ. If he be bound only by Gods Law to relieve you, you must complain to God, and stay till he do you right, and not break his Law and Order, by righting your self, in case you are not in the necessity aforesaid. If he be bound also by the Law of Man to relieve you, you may complain to the Rulers, and seek your right by their assistance? but not by stealth.

§. 10. Quest. 3. If another borrow or possess my goods or mony, and refuse to pay me, and I cannot have law and justice against him, or am not rich enough to sue him, may I not take them if I have an opportunity? Quest. 3.

Answ. If he turn your enemy in a time of War, or live under another Prince, with whom you are at War, or where your Prince alloweth you to take it; there it seemeth undoubtedly lawful to take your own by that Law of Arms, which then is uppermost. But when the Law that you are under forbiddeth you, the case is harder. But it is certain that Propriety is in Communities, and is in order of nature antecedent to humane Government in Republicks: And the preservation of it is one of the ends of Government: Therefore I conceive that in case you could take your own so secretly, or in such a manner as might no way hinder the ends of Government as to others, by encouraging thievery or unjust violence, it is not unlawful before God, the end of the Law being the chief part of the Law: But when you cannot take your own without either encouraging theft or violence in others, or weakning the power of the Laws and Government by your disobedience (which is the ordinary case) it is unlawful: Because the preservation of order and of the honour of the Government and Laws, and the suppression of theft and violence, is much more necessary than the righting of your self, and recovering your own.

§. 11. Quest. 4. If another take by Theft or force from me, may I not take my own again from him, by force or secretly, when I have no other way? Quest. 4.

Answ. Not when you do more hurt to the Commonwealth by breaking Law and Order, than your own benefit can recompence: For you must rather suffer than the Commonwealth should suffer: But you may, when no such evils follow it.

§. 12. Quest. 5. If I be in no necessity my self, may I not take from rich Men to give the poor who are in extream necessity? Quest. 5.

Answ. The answer to the first case may suffice for this: In such cases wherein a poor Man may not take it for himself, you may not take it for him. But in such cases he may take it for himself, and no one else is fit to do it, he himself being unable, yon may do it (when no accidental consequents forbid you.

§. 13. Quest. 6. If he have so much as that he will not miss it; and I be in great want, though not like to die of famine; may I not take a little to supply my want? Quest. 6.

Answ. No, because God hath appointed the means of just propriety; and what is not gotten by those means, is none of yours by his approbation. He is the giver of Riches; and he intendeth not to give to all alike: If he give more to others he will require more of them. And if he give less to you, it is the measure which he seeth to be meetest for you; and the condition in which your obedience and patience must be tryed: And he will not take it well, if you will alter your measure by forbidden means. and be carvers for your selves, or level others.

Quest. 7. §. 14. Quest. 7. There are certain measures which humanity obligeth a Man to grant to those in want, and therefore Men take without asking: As to pluck an Apple from a Tree, or as Christs Disciples, to rub the ears of Corn to eat: If a Nabal deny me such a thing, may I not take it?

Answ. If the Laws of the Land allow it you, you may: Because Mens propriety is subjected to the Law for the common good. But if the Law forbid it you, you may not: Except when it is necessary to save your life, upon the terms expressed under the first question.

Quest. 8. §. 15. Quest. 8. May not a Wife or Child or Servant take more than a cruel Husband or Parent or Master doth allow? Suppose it be better meat or drink?

Answ. How far the Wife hath a true propriety her self, and therefore may take it, dependeth on the Contract and the Laws of the Land; which I shall not now meddle with. But for Children and Servants, they may take no more than the most cruel and unrighteous Parents, or Masters do allow them; except to save their lives upon the conditions in the first case: But the Servant may seek relief of the Magistrate: And he may leave such an unrighteous Master: And the Child must bear it patiently as the Cross by which it pleaseth God to try him: Unless that the Government of the Parent be so bad, as to tend to his undoing: And then I think he may leave his Parents for a better condition: (except it be when their own necessity obligeth him to stay and suffer for their help and benefit). For it is true that a Child oweth as much to his Parents as he can perform, by way of gratitude, for their good: But it is true also, that a Parent hath no full and absolute propriety in his Child, as Men have in their Cattle: But is made by nature, their guardian for their benefit: And therefore when Parents would undo their Childrens Souls or Bodies, the Children may forsake them, as being forsaken by them; further than as they are obliged in gratitude to help them, as is aforesaid.

Quest. 9. §. 16. Quest. 9. If a Man do deserve to lose somewhat which he hath, by way of punishment, may I not take it from him?

Answ. Not, unless the Law either make you a Magistrate or Officer to do it, or allow and permit it at the least: Because it is not to you that the forfeiture is made: Or if it be, you must execute the Law according to the Law, and not against it; for else you will offend in punishing offences.

Quest. 10. §. 17. Quest. 10. But what if I fully resolve, when I take a thing in my necessity, to repay the owner, or make him satisfaction if ever I be able?

Answ. That is some extenuation of the sin, but no justification of the fact; which is otherwise unjustifiable, because it is still without his consent.

Quest. 11. §. 18. Quest. 11. What if I know not whether the owner would consent, or not?

Answ. In a case where common custom and humanity alloweth you to take it for granted that he would not deny it you (as to pluck a ear of Corn, or gather an herb for Medicine in his field) you need not scruple it: Unless you conjecture that he is a Nabal and would deny you. But otherwise if you doubt of his consent, you must ask it, and not presume of it without just cause.

Quest. 12. §. 19. Quest. 12. What if I take a thing from a friend but in a way of jest; intending to restore it?

Answ. If you have just grounds to think that your friend would consent if he knew it, you will not be blamable: But if otherwise, either you take it for your own benefit and use, or you take it only to make sport by: The former is theft, for all your jest: The latter is but an unlawful way of jesting.

Quest. §. 20. Quest. 13. What if I take it from him, but to save him from hurting his body with it: As if I steal poyson from one that intended to kill himself by it: Or take a sword from a drunken Man, that would hurt himself; or a knife from a melancholy Man! Or what if it be to save another; as to take a mad mans sword from him, who would kill such as are in his way, or any angry Mans that will kill another.

Answ. This is your duty according to the sixth Commandment, which bindeth you to preserve your Neighbours life: So be it these conditions be observed: 1. That you keep not his Sword for your benefit and advantage, nor claim a Propriety in it: But give it his friends, or deliver it to the Magistrate. 2. That you do nothing without the Magistrate, in which you may safely stay for his Authority and help: But if two be fighting, or Thieves be robbing or murdering a Man, or anothers Life be in present danger, you must help them without staying for the Magistrates Authority. 3. That you make not this a pretence for the usurping of Authority, or for resisting or deposing your lawful Prince, or Magistrate, or Parent, or Master, or of exercising your own Will and Passions against your Superiors; pretending that you take away their Swords to save themselves or others from their rage, when it is indeed but to hinder justice.

Quest. 14. §. 21. Quest. 14. May I not then much more take away that by which he would destroy his own or other Mens souls: As to take away Cards or Dice from Gamesters; or heretical or seditious Books; or Play-books and Romances, or to pull down Idols which the Idolaters do adore; or are instruments of idolatry.

Answ. There is much difference in the cases, tho' the Soul be more precious than the Body: For, 1. Here there is supposed to be so much leisure and space as that you may have time to tell the Magistrate of it, whose duty primarily it is: Whereas in the other case it is supposed that so much delay would be a Mans death Therefore your duty is to acquaint the Magistrate with the sin and danger; and not to anticipate him, and play the Magistrate your self. Or in the case of Cards and Dice and hurtful Books, you may acquaint the Persons with the sin, and perswade them to cast them away themselves. 2. Your taking away these instruments is not like to save them: For the love of the sin, and the will to do it remaineth still: And the sinner will but be hardned by his indignation against your irregular course of Charity. 3. Men are bound to save Mens Bodies whether they will or not: Because it may be so done: But no Man can save anothers Soul against his Will! And it is Gods Will that their Salvation or Damnation shall be more the fruit of their own Wills, than of any others. Therefore though its possible to devise an instance, in which it is lawful to steal a poysonous Book or Idol from another (when it is done so secretly as will encourage no disobedience or disorder; nor is like to harden the sinner, but indeed to do him good, &c.) yet ordinarily all this is unlawful, for private Men, that have no Government of others, or extraordinary interest in them.

A Wife or near friend that is under no suspicion of alienating the thing to their own commodity, nor of ill designs, may go somewhat further in such cases, than an inferior or a stranger.

Quest. 15. §. 22. Quest. 15. May not a Magistrate take the Subjects goods, when it is necessary for their own preservation?

Answ. I answered this question once heretofore in my Political Aphorisms: And because I repent of medling with such Subjects, and of writing that Book, I will leave such cases hereafter for fitter Persons to resolve.

Quest. 16. §. 23. Quest. 16. But may I not take from another for a holy use: As to give to the Church, or maintain the Bishops: If David took the hallowed bread in his necessity, may not hallowed persons take common bread?

Answ. If holy Persons be in present danger of death, death, their lives may be ſaved as other Mens on the terms mentioned in the firſt caſe. Otherwiſe God hath no need of theft or violence; nor muſt you rob the Laity to cloath the Clergy; but to do ſuch evil on pretence of piety and good, is an aggravation of the ſin.

CHAP. XIX.

General Directions and particular Caſes of Conſcience, about Contracts in general, and about Buying and Selling, Borrowing and Lending, Uſury, &c. in particular.

Tit. 1. General Directions againſt injurious Bargaining and Contracts.

BEſides the laſt Directions Chap. 18. take theſe as more nearly pertinent to this caſe.

Dir. 1. §. 1. Direct. 1. See that your hearts have the two great principles of Juſtice deeply and habitually innaturalized or radicated in them, viz. The true love of your neighbour, and the denyal of your ſelf: which in one precept are called, The loving of your neighbour as your ſelf. For then you will be freed from the inclination to injuries and fraud, and from the power of thoſe temptations, which carry Men to theſe ſins. They will be contrary to your habitual will or inclination; and you will be more ſtudious to help your neighbour, than to get from him.

Dir. 2. § 2. Direct. 2. Yet do not content your ſelf with theſe habits, but be ſure to call them up to act, when ever you have any bargaining with others; and let a faithful Conſcience be to you as a Cryer to proclaim Gods Laws, and ſay to you, Now remember Love and Self-denyal, and do as you would be done by. If Alexander Severus ſo highly valued this ſaying, Quod tibi fieri non vis, alteri ne feceris, as to make it his Motto, and write and engrave it on his doors and buildings (having learned it of ſome Chriſtians or Jews ſaith Lampridius;) What a crime and ſhame is it for Chriſts own proteſt Diſciples neither to learn or love it! Put home the queſtion when you have any bargaining with others, how would I be dealt with my ſelf, if my caſe were the ſame with his?

Dir. 3. §. 3. Direct. 3. When the Tempter draweth you to think only of your own commodity and gain, remember how much more you will loſe by ſin, than your gain can any way amount to. If Achan, Gehazi, Ahab, Judas, &c. had foreſeen the end, and the greatneſs of their loſs, it would have curbed their covetous deſires. Believe Gods Word from the bottom of your heart, that you ſhall loſe things eternal if you ſinfully get things temporal, and then you will not make haſte to ſuch a bargain, to win the World and loſe your Souls.

Dir. 4. §. 4. Direct. 4. Underſtand your neighbours caſe aright, and meditate on his wants and intereſt. You think what you want your ſelf; but you think not whether his wants with whom you deal, may not be as great as yours: Conſider what his commodity coſteth him: Or what the toil of the Workmans labour is: What houſe-rent he hath to pay, and what a family to maintain? And whether all this can be well done upon the rates that you deſire to trade with him. And do not believe every common report of his riches, or of the price of his commodity; for fame in ſuch caſes is frequently falſe.

Dir. 5. §. 5. Direct. 5. Regard the publick good above your own commodity. It is not lawful to take up or keep up any oppreſſing Monopoly or Trade; which tendeth to enrich you by the loſs of the Commonwealth or of many.

Dir. 6. §. 6. Direct. 6. Therefore have a ſpecial regard to the Laws of the Country where you live: both as to your Trade it ſelf, and as to the price of what you ſell or buy. For the Law is made for the publick benefit, which is to be preferred before any private Mans. And when the Law doth directly or indirectly ſet rates upon labours or commodities, ordinarily they muſt be obſerved; or elſe you will commit two ſins at once, Injury and Diſobedience.

Dir. 7. §. 7. Direct. 7. Alſo have ſpecial reſpect to the common eſtimate, and to the Market price. Though it be not always to be our Rule, yet ordinarily it muſt be a conſiderable part of it; and of great regard.

Dir. 8. §. 8. Direct. 8. Let not imprudent thinking make you ſeem more covetous than you are. Some imprudent Perſons cannot tell how to make their markets without ſo many words, even about a penny or a trifle, that it maketh others think them covetous, when it is rather want of wit. The appearance of evil muſt be avoided. I know ſome that are ready to give a pound to a charitable uſe at a word, who will yet uſe ſo many words for a penny in their bargaining as maketh them deeply cenſured and miſunderſtood. If you ſee cauſe to break for a penny or a ſmall matter, do it more handſomely in fewer words, and be gone! And do not tempt the ſeller to multiply words, becauſe you do ſo.

Dir. 9. § 9 Direct. 9. Have no more to do in bargaining with others, eſpecially with cenſorious perſons, than you needs muſt: For in much dealing uſually there will be much miſunderſtanding, offence, cenſure and complaint.

Dir. 10. §. 10. Direct. 10. In doubtful caſes, when you are uncertain what is lawful, chooſe that ſide which is ſafeſt to the peace of your conſciences hereafter; though it be againſt your commodity, and may prove the loſing of your right.

Tit. 2. Caſes of Conſciences about Juſtice in Contracts.

Queſt. 1. §. 1. Queſt. 1. MUſt I always do as I would be done by? Or hath this Rule any Exceptions?

Anſw. The Rule intendeth no more but that your juſt ſelf-denial and love to others, be duly exerciſed in your dealings with all. And 1. It ſuppoſeth that your own will or deſires be honeſt and juſt, and that Gods Law be their Rule. For a ſinful will may not be made the Rule of your own actions or of other Mens. He that would have another make him drunk, may not therefore make another drunk: And he that would abuſe another Mans Wife, may not therefore deſire that another Man would luſt after or abuſe his Wife. He that would not be inſtructed, reproved, or reformed, may not therefore forbear the inſtructing or reproving others. And he that would kill himſelf, may not therefore kill another. But he that would have no hurt done to himſelf injuriouſly, ſhould do none to others: And he that would have others do him good, ſhould be as willing to do good to them.

2. It ſuppoſeth that the matter be to be varied according to your various conditions. A Parent that juſtly deſireth his Child to obey him, is not bound therefore to obey his Child; nor the Prince to obey his Subjects; nor the Maſter to do all the work for his Servants, which he would have his Servants do for him. But you muſt deal by another, as you would (regularly) have them deal by you, if you were in their caſe, and they in yours. And on theſe terms it is a Rule of Righteouſneſs.

Queſt. 2. §. 2. Queſt. 2. Is a Son bound by the Contract which his Parents or Guardians made for him in his infancy?

Anſw. To ſomething he is bound, and to ſome things not. The Infant is capable of being obliged by another upon four accounts: 1. As he is the Parents own; (or a Maſters to whom he is in abſolute ſervitude.) 2. As he is to be ruled by the Parents. 3. As he is a debtor to his Parents for benefits received. 4. As he is an expectant or capable of future benefits to be enjoyed upon conditions to be performed by him. 1. No Parents or Lord have an abſolute Propriety in any rational Creature; but they have a Propriety ſecundum quid, & ad hoc: And a

Parents

Parents Propriety doth in part expire or abate, as the Son groweth up to the full use of reason, and so hath a greater propriety in himself. Therefore he may oblige his Son only so far as his Propriety extendeth, and to such acts; and to no other: For in these his Will is reputatively his Sons Will. As if a Parent sell his Son to servitude, he is bound to such service as beseemeth one Man to put another to. 2. As he is Rector to his Child, he may by contract with a third Person promise that his Child shall do such acts, as he hath power to command and cause him to do: As to read, to hear Gods Word, to labour as he is able: But this is no longer than while he is under his Parents Government: And so long obedience requireth him to perform their contracts, in performing their commands. 3. The Child having received his being and maintenance from them, remains obliged to them as his Benefactors in the debt of gratitude as long as he liveth: And that so deeply that some have questioned whether ever he can requite them: (which quoad valorem beneficii he can do only by furthering their Salvation; as many a Child hath been the cause of the Parents Conversion.) And so far as the Son is thus a debtor to the Parents, he is obliged to do that which the Parents by contract with a third Person shall impose upon him. As if the Parents could not be delivered out of Captivity, but by obliging the Son to pay a great sum of Money, or to live in servitude for their release: Though they never gave him any Money, yet is he bound to pay the sum, if he can get it, or to perform the servitude: Because he hath received more from them, even his Being. 4. As the Parents are both Owners (secundum quid) and Rulers and Benefactors to their Child, in all three respects conjunct, they may oblige him to a third Person who is willing to be his Benefactor, by a conditional obligation to perform such conditions that he may possess such or such benefits: And thus a Guardian or any friend who is fit to interpose for him, may oblige him. As to take a lease in his name, in which he shall be bound to pay such a rent, or do such a service, that he may receive such a commodity which is greater. Thus Parents oblige their Children under Civil Governments to the Laws of the Society or Kingdom, that they may have the protection and benefits of Subjects. In these Cases the Child can complain of no Injury; for it is for his benefit that he is obliged: And the Parent (in this respect) cannot oblige him to his hurt: for if he will quit the benefit, he may be freed when he will from his obligation, and may refuse to stand to the Covenant if he dislike it. If he will give up his Lease, he may be disobliged from the Rent and Service.

§. 3. In all this you may see that no Man can oblige another against God or his Salvation: And therefore a Parent cannot oblige a Child to sin, nor to forbear hearing or reading the Word of God, or praying, or any thing necessary to his Salvation: nor can he oblige him to hear an Heretical Pastor, nor to marry an Infidel or wicked Wife, &c.

§. 4. And here also you may perceive on what grounds it is that God hath appointed Parents to oblige their Children in the Covenant of Baptism, to be the Servants of God, and to live in holiness all their days.

§. 5. And hence it is apparent, that no Parents can oblige their Children to be miserable, or to any such condition which is worse than to have no being.

§. 6. Also that when Parents do (as commonly they do) profess to oblige their Children as Benefactors for their good, the obligation is then to be interpreted accordingly: And the Child is then obliged to nothing which is really his hurt.

Yea; all the propriety and Government of Parents, cannot authorize them to oblige the Child to his hurt, but in order to some greater good, either to the Parents themselves, or to the Common-wealth, or others: At least that which the Parents apprehend to be a greater good: But if they err through ignorance or partiality, and bind the Child to a greater hurt for their lesser good (as to pay two hundred pounds to save them from paying one hundred pound) whether their injury and sin do excuse the Child from being obliged to any more than the proportion of the benefit required, I leave undetermined.

§. 7. Quest. 3. But what if the Parents disagree, and one of them will oblige the Child, and the other will not? Quest. 3:

Answ. 1. If it be an act of the Parents as meer Proprietors for their own good, either of them may oblige him in a just degree; because they have severally a propriety. 2. If it be an act of Government (as if they oblige him to do this or that act of service at their command in his minority,) the Father may oblige him against the Mothers consent, because he is the chief Ruler; but not the Mother against the Fathers Will; though she may without it.

§. 8. Quest. 4. Is a Man obliged by a contract which he made in ignorance or mistake of the matter? Quest. 4:

Answ. I have answered this before in the case of Marriage, Part. 3. Chap. 1. I add here.

1. We must distinguish between culpable and inculpable error: 2. Between an error about the principal matter, and about some smaller accidents or circumstances. 3. Between a case where the Law of the Land, or the common good interposeth, and where it doth not.

1. If it be your own fault that you are mistaken you are not wholly freed from the obligation: But if it was your gross fault, by negligence or vice, you are not at all freed: But if it were but such a frailty as almost all Men are liable to, so that none but a person of extraordinary virtue or diligence could have avoided the mistake, then equity will proportionably make you an abatement or free you from the obligation. So far as you were obliged to understand the matter, so far you are obliged by the contract; especially when another is a loser by your error.

2. An inculpable error about the circumstances, or smaller parts, will not free you from an obligation in the principal matter: But an inculpable error in the essentials will.

3. Except when the Law of the Land or the common good, doth otherwise over-rule the case: For then you may be obliged by that accident, In divers cases the Rulers may judge it necessary, that the effect of the contract shall depend upon the bare Words, or Writings, or Actions; lest false pretences of misunderstanding should exempt deceitful Persons from their Obligations; and nothing should be a security to contractors. And then Mens private commodity must give place to the Law and to the publick good.

4. Natural infirmities must be numbred with faults, though they be not moral Vices, as to the contracting of an obligation, if they be in a person capable of contracting. As if you have some special defect of memory, or ignorance of the matter which you are about! Another who is no way faulty by over-reaching you, must not be a loser by your weakness. For he that cometh to the Market, or contracteth with another that knoweth not his infirmity, is to be supposed to understand what he doth, unless the contrary be manifest: You should not meddle with matters which you understand not: Or if you do, you must be content to be a loser by your weakness.

5. Yet in such cases, another that hath gained by the bargain, may be obliged by the Laws of equity and charity, to remit the gain, and not to take advantage of your weakness: But he may so far far hold you to it, as to secure himself from loss: except in cases where you become the Object of his Charity, and not of Commutative Justice only.

Quest. 5. §. 9. Quest. 5. Is a drunken Man, or a Man in a transporting passion, or a melancholy person, obliged by a contract made in such a case?

Answ. Remember still, that we are speaking only of Contracts about matters of profits or worldly interest: and not of Marriage or any of another nature. And the Question as it concerneth a Man in Drunkenness or Passion, is answered as the former about culpable error: and as it concerneth a melancholy Man, it is to be answered as the former Question, in the case of natural infirmity. But if the melancholy be so great as to make him uncapable of bargaining, he is to be esteemed in the same condition as an Ideot, or one in deliration or distraction.

Quest. 6. §. 10. Quest. 6. But may another hold a Man to it, who in drunkenness or passion maketh an ill bargain, or giveth, or playeth away his Money; and repenteth when he is sober?

Answ. He may (ordinarily) take the money from the loser, or him that casteth it thus away: But he may not keep it for himself: But if the loser be poor, he should give it to his Wife or Children whom he robbeth by his sin: If not, he should either give it to the Magistrate or Overseer for the Poor, or give it to the poor himself. The reason of this determination is; Because the loser hath parted with his propriety, and can lay no farther claim to the thing: But yet the gainer can have no right from anothers crime: If it were from an injury, he might; so far as is necessary to reparations; But from a crime he cannot: For his loss is to be estimated as a mulct or penalty, and to be disposed of as such mulcts as are laid on Swearers and Drunkards are. Only the Person by his voluntary bargain, hath made the other party instead of the Magistrate, and authorized him (in ordinary cases) to dispose of the gain, for the poor or publick Good.

Quest. 7. §. 11. Quest. 7. Am I obliged by the words or writings which usually express a Covenant, without any Covenanting or self obliging intention in me, when I speak or write them?

Answ. Either you utter or write those words, with a purpose to make another believe that you intend a Covenant; or at least by culpable negligence, in such a manner as he is bound so to understand you, or justified for so understanding you: or else you so use the words, as in the manner sufficiently to signifie that you intend no Covenant or self obligation. In the former case you bind your self (as aboveſaid:) because another Man is not to be a loser, nor you a gainer, or a saver by your own fraud or gross negligence. But in the latter case you are not bound: Because an intent of self-obliging is the internal efficient of the obligation: and a signification of such an intent, is the external efficient, without which it cannot be. If you read over the words of a bond, or repeat them only in a Narrative, or ludicrously; or if a Scrivener write a form of Obligation of himself, to a boy for a Copy, or to a Scholar for a President, these do not induce any obligation in Conscience, nor make you a debtor to another. (Thus also the case of the intent of the Baptizer, or Baptized (or parent) is to be determined.)

Quest. 8. §. 12. Quest. 8. May a true Man promise a robber money, for the saving of his life or of a greater sum, or more precious commodity?

Answ. Yes, in case of necessity, when his life or estate cannot better be preserved: And so Taxes may be paid to an Enemy in Arms, or to a plundering Soldier, (supposing that it do no other hurt, which is greater than the good.) Any Man may part with a lesser good to preserve a greater: And it is no more voluntary or imputable to our wills, than the casting of our goods into the Sea to save the vessel and our lives.

§. 13. Quest. 9. May I give Money to a Judge or Justice or Court-officer, to hire him to do me Justice, or to keep him from doing me wrong; or to avoid persecution. Quest. 9.

Answ. You may not, in case your cause be bad, give any thing to procure injustice against another; no nor speak a word for it nor desire it: This I take as presupposed. You may not give Money to procure Justice, when the Law of the Land forbiddeth it, and when it will do more hurt accidentally to the others than good to you; when it will harden Men in the sin of Bribery, and cause them to expect the like from others. But except it be when some such accidental greater hurt doth make it evil, it is as lawful as to hire a thief not to kill me; when you cannot have your right by other means, you may part with a smaller matter for a greater.

§ 14. Quest. 10. But if I make such a Contract, may the other lawfully take it of me? Quest. 10.

Answ. No; for it is now supposed that it is unlawful on his part.

§. 15. Quest. 11. But if under necessity of force I promise Money to a Robber, or a Judge, or Officer, am I bound to perform it when my necessity is over? Quest. 11.

Answ. You have lost your own propriety by your Covenant, and therefore must not retain it; But he can acquire no right by his sin; and therefore some say, that in point of Justice you are not bound to give it him, but to give it to the Magistrate for the Poor; But yet prudence may tell you of other reasons a fine to give it the Man himself, though Justice bind you not to it; As in case, that else he may be revenged and do you some greater hurt; or some greater hurt is any other way like to be the consequent; which it is lawful by Money to prevent. But many think that you are bound to deliver the Money to the Thief or Officer himself; because it is a lawful thing to do it, though he have no just title to it; and because it was your meaning, or the signification of your words in your Covenant with him: And if it were not lawful to do it, it could not be lawful to promise to do it; otherwise your promise is a lye. To this, those of the other opinion say, that as a Man who is discharged of his promise by him that it was made to, is not to be accounted false if he perform it not; so is it as to the Thief or Officer in question; because he having no right, is to you as the other that hath quit his right. And this answer indeed will prove, that it is not strict injustice not to pay the Money promised; but it will not prove, that it is not a lye to make such a promise with an intent of not performing it, or that it is not a lye to make it with an intent of performing it, and not to do it when you may. Though here a Jesuite will tell you that you may say the words of a promise, with an equivocation or mental reservation, to a Thief or persecuting Magistrate; (Of which see more in the Chapters of Lying, Vows and Perjury.) I am therefore of Opinion, that your promise must be sincerely made, and according to the true intent of it, you must offer the Money to the Thief or Officer; except in case the Magistrate forbid you, or some greater reason lye against it, which you foresaw not when you made the promise. But the offender is undoubtedly obliged not to take the Money.

§. 16. The same determination holdeth as to all Contracts and Promises made to such Persons, who by injurious force constrained us to make them. There is on us an obligation to Veracity, though none to them in point of Justice, because they have no proper right; nor may they lawfully take our payment or service promised them. And in case that the publick good unexpectedly cross our performance, formance, we must not perform it, such like is the case of Conquerors, and those that upon Conquest become their vassals or subjects upon unrighteous terms. But still remember, that if it be not only a Covenant with Man, but a Vow to God, which maketh him a Party, the case is altered, and we remain obliged.

Quest. 12. §. 17. Quest. 12. But may I promise the Thief or Bribe-taker to conceal his fault? And am I obliged to the performance of such a promise?

Answ. This is a promise of omitting that which else would be a duty. It is ordinarily a duty to reveal a Thief and Bribe-taker that he may be punished. But affirmatives bind not ad semper; no act; (especially external) is a duty at all times, therefore not this, of revealing an offenders fault. And if it be not always a duty, then it must be none when it is inconsistent with some greater benefit or duty; for when two goods come together, the greater is to be preferred; therefore in case that you see in just probability, that the concealment of the sinner will do more hurt to the Commonwealth or the Souls of Men, than the saving of your Life is like to do good. You may not promise to conceal him: Or if you sinfully promise it, you may not perform it. But in case that your life is like to be a greater good than the not promising to conceal him, then such a promise is no fault; because the disclosing him is no duty. But to judge rightly of this is a matter of great difficulty. If it be less than life which you save by such a promise, it oft falls out that it is a lesser good, than the detecting of the offence.

§ 18. But it will here be said, If I promise not to conceal a Robber, I must conceal him nevertheless; for when he hath killed me, I cannot reveal him; and I must conceal the bribe-taker; for till I have promised secrecy, I cannot prove him guilty. And he that promiseth to forbear a particular good action whilst he liveth, doth yet reserve his life, for all other good works: Whereas if he die, he will neither do that nor any other. But this case is not so easily determined: If Daniel die, he can neither pray nor do any good on Earth. And if he live he may do much other good, though he never pray: And yet he might not promise to give over praying to save his life. I conceive that we must distinguish of duties essential to the outward part of Christianity, or of constant indispensible necessity; and duties which are alterable, and belong only to some Persons, times and places: Also between the various consequents of Omissions. And I conceive that ordinarily a Man may promise for the saving of his life, that he will forbear a particular alterable duty, or relation: as to read such a Commentary, to speak with such a Minister, to be a Magistrate or a Minister, &c. in case we have not before bound our selves never to give over our Calling till Death: And in case that the good which will follow our forbearance, is likely (to a judicious Person,) to be greater than the evil. But no Man may promise to omit such a duty as God hath made necessary during life: as not to love God, or fear or trust him: not to worship him and call upon him and praise him: Nor to do good to Mens Souls or Bodies in the general: Or, not to preach or pray while I am a Minister of Christ; or not at all to govern while you are a Governour: For all these contradict some former and greater promises or duties. Nor may you omit the smallest duty to save your life, at such a time when your death is like to do more good, than your life would do without that one duty. Apply this to the present case.

Quest. 13. § 19. Quest. 13. If another man deceive me into a Promise or Covenant against my good, am I bound to perform it when I have discovered the deceit.

Answ. Yes, 1. In case that the Law of the Land, or other reasons for the publick good require it: 2. Or in case that you were faulty by negligence, heedlessness, or otherwise guilty of your own deceit, in any considerable and avoidable degree. Otherwise, in that measure that he deceived you, and in those respects you are not obliged.

Quest. 14. §. 20. Quest. 14. If the contracting parties do neither of them understand the other, is it a Covenant: Or if it be, whose sense must carry it?

Answ. If they understand not each other in the Essentials of the Contract, it is no contract in point of Conscience: Except where the Laws for the publick safety do annex the obligation to bare external act. But if they understand not one another in some circumstances, and be equally culpable or innocent, they must come to a new agreement in those particulars: But if one Party only be guilty of the misunderstanding, he must bear the loss, if the other insist on it.

Quest. 15. §. 21. Quest. 15. Am I bound to stand to the bargains which my friend or trustee or servant maketh for me, when it proveth much to my injury or loss?

Answ. Yes; 1. If they exceed not the bounds of that commission or trust which they received from you: 2. Or if they do, yet if by your former trusting and using them, or by any other sign, you have given the other party sufficient cause to suppose them intrusted by you to do what they do, so that he is deceived by your fault, you are bound at least to see that he be no loser by you; though you are not bound to make him a gainer, unless you truly signified that you authorized them to make the contract. For if it be meerly your friends or servants error, without your fault, it doth not bind you to a third Person. But how far you may be bound to pardon that error to your friend or servant, is another question? And how far you are bound to save them harmless. And that must be determined by laying together all other obligations between them and you.

Quest. 16. §. 22. Quest. 16. If I say I will give such or such a one this or that, am I bound thereby to do it?

Answ. It is one thing to express your present mind and resolution, without giving away the liberty of changing it: And its another thing to intend the obliging of your self to do the thing mentioned. And that obligation is either intended to Man, or to God only; and that is either in point of rendition and use, or in point of veracity, or the performance of that moral duty of speaking truth. If you meant no more in saying, I will do it or I will give it; but that this is your present will and purpose and resolution, yea, though it add the confident perswasion that your will shall not change; yet this no further obligeth you than you are obliged to continue in that will: And a Mans confident resolutions may be lawfully changed upon sufficient cause. But if you intended to alienate the title to another, or to give him present right, or to oblige your self for the future to him by that promise; or to oblige your self to God to do it by way of peremptory assertion, as one that will be guilty of a lye if you perform it not; or if you dedicate the thing to God by those words as a Vow, then you are obliged to do accordingly (supposing nothing else to prohibit it.)

Quest. 17. §. 23. Quest. 17. Doth an inward promise of the mind not expressed oblige?

Answ. In a Vow to God it doth: And if you intend it as an assertion obliging you in point of Veracity, it doth so oblige you that you must lye. But it is no contract, nor giveth any Man a title to what you tacitly thought of.

Quest. 18. §. 24. Quest. 18. May I promise an unlawful thing (simply so) without an intention of performing it, to save my life from a Thief or Persecutor?

Answ. No: Because it is a lye, when the tongue agreeth not with the heart. Indeed those that think a lye is no sin when it hurteth not another, may justifie this, if that would hold good: But I have before confuted it Tom. 1. in the Chapter against Lying.

§. 25 Quest.

Queſt. 19. § 25. Queſt. 19. May any thing otherwiſe unlawful become a duty upon a promiſe to do it?

Anſw. This is anſwered before Tom. 1. Chapter of Perjury and Vows: A thing unlawful will be ſo ſtill, notwithſtanding a Vow or Promiſe: And ſome ſo of that alſo which is unlawful antecedently but by accident! As e. g. It is not ſimply unlawful to caſt away a Cup of Wine or a piece of ſilver: (for it is lawful upon a ſufficient cauſe.) But it is unlawful to do it without any ſufficient cauſe. Now ſuppoſe I ſhould contract with another that I will do it; am I bound by ſuch a contract? Many ſay No, becauſe the matter is unlawful though but by accident; and the contract cannot make it lawful. I rather think that I am bound in ſuch a caſe: But yet that my obligation doth not exclude me wholly from ſin: It was a ſin before I promiſed it (or vowed it) to caſt away a farthing cauſeleſly. And if I cauſeleſly promiſed it, I ſinned in that promiſe: But yet there may be cauſe for the performance; And if I have entangled my ſelf in a neceſſity of ſinning whether I do it or not, I muſt chooſe the leſſer ſin: for that is then my duty. (Though I ſhould have choſen neither as long as I could avoid it.) In a great and hurtful ſin I may be obliged rather to break my Covenant than to commit it, yet it is hard to ſay ſo of every accidental evil: My reaſons are, 1. Becauſe the Promiſe or Covenant is now an accident to be put into the ballance; and may weigh down a lighter accident on the other ſide: (But I know that the great difficulty is to diſcern which is indeed the preponderating accident.) 2. I think if a Magiſttate command me to do any thing which by a ſmall accident is evil (as to ſpend an hour in vain, to give a penny in vain, to ſpeak a word (which antecedently was vain) that I muſt do it; and that then it is not vain becauſe it manifeſteth my obedience. (Otherwiſe obedience would be greatly ſtreightned:) Therefore my own Contract may make it my duty: Becauſe I am able to oblige my ſelf as well as a Magiſtrate is. 3. Becauſe Covenant-breaking (and Perjury) is really a greater ſin than ſpeaking a vain word: And my error doth not make it no ſin; but only entangle me in a neceſſity of ſinning which way ſoever I take.

Queſt. 20. §. 26. Queſt. 20. If a Man make a contract to promote the ſin of another for a reward (as a corrupt Judge or Lawyer, Officer or Clerk to promote injuſtice; or a reſetter to help a Thief; or a Bawd or Whore, for the price of fornication, may he take the reward, when the ſin is committed, (ſuppoſe it repented of?)

Anſw. The offender that promiſed the reward, hath parted with his title to the Mony: Therefore you may receive it of him (and ought, except he will rightly diſpoſe of it himſelf:) But withal to confeſs the ſin and perſwade him alſo to repent: But you may not take any of that Mony as your own; (for no Man can purchaſe true propriety by iniquity) but either give it to the Party injured (to whom you are bound to make ſatisfaction,) or to the Magiſtrate or the Poor, according as the caſe particularly requireth.

Queſt. 21. §. 27. Queſt. 21. If I contract, or bargain, or promiſe to another, between us two, without any legal form or witneſs, doth it bind me to the performance?

Anſw. Yes, in foro conſcientiæ, ſuppoſing the thing lawful; but if the thing be unlawful in foro Dei, and ſuch as the Law of the Land only would lay hold of you about, or force you to, if it had been witneſſed, then the Law of the Land may well be avoided, by the want of Legal forms and witneſſes.

Queſt. 22. §. 28. Queſt. 22. May I buy an Office for Mony in a court of Juſtice?

Anſw. Some Offices you may buy, (where the Law alloweth it, and it tendeth not to injuſtice;) but other Offices you may not; the difference the Lawyers may tell you better than I, and it would be tedious to purſue inſtances.

Queſt. 23. §. 29. Queſt. 23. May one buy a place of Magiſtracy or Judicature for mony?

Anſw. Not when your own honour or commodity is your end; becauſe the common good is the end of Government; and to a faithful Governor, it is a place of great labour and ſuffering, and requireth much ſelf-denial and patience. Therefore they that purchaſe it as a place of honour, gain or pleaſure, either know not what they undertake, or have carnal ends: Elſe they would rather purchaſe their liberty and avoid it. But if a King or a Judge, or other Magiſtrate, ſee that a bad Man (more unfit to govern) is like to be put in, if he be put by, it is lawful for him to purchaſe the Peoples deliverance at a very dear rate; (even by a lawful War which is more than Mony, when the Soveraigns power is in ſuch danger:) But the Heart muſt be watch'd, that it pretend not the common good, and intend your own commodity and honour: And the probable conſequents muſt be weighed: And the Laws of the Land muſt be conſulted alſo: For if they abſolutely prohibit the buying of a place of Judicature, they muſt be obeyed. And ill effects may make it ſinful.

Whether the conſequent be good or hurt is like to be greater, muſt be well conſidered.

Queſt. 24. §. 30. Queſt. 24. May one ſell a Church benefice or Rectory or Orders.

Anſw. If the Benefice be originally of your own gift, it is at firſt in your power to give part or all? To take ſome deductions out of it or not: But if it be really given to the Church, and you have but the Patronage or Choice of the incumbent, it is Sacriledge to ſell it for any commodity of your own: But whether you may take ſomewhat out of a greater Benefice, to give to another Church which is poorer, dependeth partly on the Law of the Land, and partly upon the probable conſequents. If the Law abſolutely forbid it (ſuppoſing that unlawful contracts cannot be avoided unleſs ſome lawful ones be reſtrained,) it muſt be obeyed for the common good: And if the conſequent of a lawful contract be like to be the more hurtful encouragement of unlawful ones, ſuch examples muſt be forborn, though the Law were not againſt them. But to ſell Orders is undoubted Simony: (That is, the Office of the Miniſtry, or the Act of Ordination:) though Scribes may be paid for writing inſtruments.

Queſt. 25. § 31. Queſt. 25. May a Man give Mony for Orders or Benefices, when they cannot otherwiſe be had?

Anſw. 1. This is anſwered in Queſt. 22. 1. If the Law abſolutely forbid it, for the common ſafety you may not: 2. If your end be chiefly your own commodity, eaſe, or honour, you may not. But in caſe you were clear from all ſuch evils, and the caſe were only this, whether you might not give Mony to get in your ſelf, to keep out a Heretick, a Wolf, or inſufficient Man, who might deſtroy the Peoples Souls, I ſee not but it might well be done.

Queſt. 26. § 32. Queſt. 26. May I give Mony to Officers, Servants, or Aſſiſtants for their forbearance?

Anſw. For Writings or other ſervile Acts about the circumſtantials you may; but not (directly or indirectly) to promote the Simoniacal Contract. What you may not give to the principal Agent, you may not give his inſtruments or others for the ſame end.

Queſt. 27. §. 33. Queſt. 27. May I give or do any thing afterward by way of gratitude, to the Patron, Biſhop, or any others, their relations or retainers?

Anſw. Not when the expectation of that gratitude was a (ſecret or open) condition of the Preſentation or Orders; and you believe that you ſhould not elſe have received them; Therefore promiſed Gratitude is but a kind of contracting. Nor may you ſhew Gratitude by any ſcandalous way, which ſeemeth Simony. Otherwiſe, no doubt, but you may be prudently grateful for that or any other kindneſs.

Queſt. 28. §. 34. 28. Queſt. May not a Biſhop or Paſtor take Mony for Sermons, Sacraments, or other Offices?

Anſw. Nor for the things themſelves; he muſt not sell Gods Word or Sacraments, or any other holy thing. But they that serve at the Altar, may live on the Altar, and the Elders that rule well are worthy of double honour; and the mouth of the Ox that treadeth out the Corn should not be muzled? They may receive due maintenance while they perform Gods service; that they may be vacant to attend their proper work.

Quest. 29. § 35. Quest. 29. May one Person disoblige another of a promise made to him?

Answ. Yes, if it be no more than a promise to that Person; because a Man may give away his right; But if it be moreover a Vow to God, or you intend to oblige your self in point of Veracity under the guilt of a lye if you do otherwise, these alter the case, and no Person can herein disoblige you.

Quest. 30. § 36. Quest. 30. But what if the Contract be bound by an Oath, may another then release me?

Answ. Yes; If that Oath did only tye you to perform your promise; and were no Vow to God which made him a party by dedicating any thing to him; For then the Oath being but subservient to the promise, he that dischargeth you from the promise, dischargeth you also from the Oath which bound you honestly to keep it.

Quest. 31. §. 37. Quest. 31. Am I bound by a promise when the cause or reason of it proveth a mistake?

Answ. If by the Cause you mean only the extrinsical Reasons which moved you to it, you may be obliged nevertheless for finding your mistake; only so far as the other was the culpable Cause (as is aforesaid) he is bound to satisfie you; But if by the Cause you mean the formal reason, which constituteth the Contract, then the mistake may in some cases nullifie it; (of which enough before.)

Quest. 32. §. 38. Quest. 32. What if a following accident make it more to my hurt then could be foreseen?

Answ. In some Contracts it is supposed or expressed, that Men do undertake to run the hazard; and then they must stand obliged. But in some Contracts, it is rationally supposed that the parties intend to be free, if so great an alteration should fall out. But to give instances of both these Cases would be too long a work.

Quest. 33. §. 39. Quest. 33. What if something unexpectedly fall out, which maketh it injurious to a third person? I cannot sure be obliged to injure another.

Answ. If the case be the latter mentioned in the foregoing answer, you may be thus free; But if it be the former (you being supposed to run the hazard, and secure the other party against all others) then either you were indeed authorized to make this bargain, or not; If not, the third Person may secure his right against the other; but if you were, then you must make satisfaction as you can to the third Person. Yea, if you made a Covenant without Authority, you are obliged to save the other harmless, unless he knew your power to be doubtful, and did resolve to run the hazard.

Quest. 34. §. 40. Quest. 34. What if something fall out which maketh the performance to be a sin?

Answ. You must not do it; But you must make the other satisfaction for all the loss which you were the cause of, unless he undertook to stand to the hazard of this also, (explicitly or implicitly.)

Quest. 35. §. 41. Quest. 35. Am I obliged if the other break Covenant with me?

Answ. There are Covenants which make Relations (as between Husband and Wife, Pastor, and Flock, Rulers and Subjects;) and Covenants which convey title to Commodities, of which only I am here to speak. And in these there are some conditions which are essential to the Covenant; if the other first break these conditions, you are disobliged. But there are other conditions which are not essential, but only necessary to some following benefit; whose non performance will only forfeit that particular benefit; And there are conditions which are only undertaken subsequent duties, trusted on the honesty of the performer; and in these a failing doth not disoblige you. These latter are but improperly called Conditions.

Quest. 36. §. 42. Quest. 36. May I contract to perform a thing which I foresee is like to become impossible or sinful, before the time of performance come, though it be not so at present.

Answ. With all Persons you must deal truly; and with just Contractors openly: But with Thieves, and Murderers, and Persecutors, you are not always bound to deal openly. This being premised, either your Covenant is absolutely, This I will do, be it lawful or not, possible or impossible: And such a Covenant is sin and folly: Or it is Conditional, This I will do, if it continue lawful, or possible: This condition (or rather Exception) is still implyed where it is not expresst, unless the contrary be expresst: Therefore such a Covenant is lawful with a Robber with whom you are not bound to deal openly: Because it is but the concealing from him the event which you foresee. As e. g. you have intelligence that a Ship is lost at Sea, or is like to be shortly taken by Pyrates, which the Robber expecteth shortly to come safe into the Harbour: You may promise him to deliver up your self his Prisoner, when that Ship cometh home. Or you know a Person to be mortally sick, and will die before the next Week; you may oblige your self to marry, or serve that Person two Months hence: For it is implied, If he or she be then alive. But with equal Contractors, this is unlawful, with whom you are obliged, not only to Verity but to Justice; as in the following cases will be further manifested.

Tit. 3. Special Cases about Justice in Buying and Selling.

§. 1. Quest. 1. AM I bound to endeavour that he whom I deal with may be a gainer by the bargain as well as I? Quest. 1.

Answ. Yes, if you be equally in want, or in the like condition: But if he be very poor, and you be rich, Charity must be so mixt with Justice, that you must endeavour that it be more to his commodity than yours (if he be indeed one that you owe Charity to.) And if you be poor and he be rich, you may be willing to be the only gainer your self, so be it you covet not anothers, nor desire that he be wronged: For when he hath power to deal charitably, you may be willing of his Charity or kindness.

§. 2. Quest. 2. May I desire or take more than my labour or goods are worth, if I can get it? Quest. 2.

Answ. 1. Not by deceit, perswading another that they are worth more than they are. 2. Not by extortion working upon Mens ignorance, error or necessity (of which more anon.) 3. Not of any one that is poorer than your self, or of any one that intendeth but an equal bargain. 4. But if you deal with the rich, who in generosity stick not at a small matter, and are willing another should be a gainer by them, and understand what they do, it is lawful to take as much as they will give you.

§. 3. Quest. 3. May I ask in the Market more than my Goods are truly worth? Quest. 3.

Answ. In the case last mentioned you may; when you are selling to the rich, who are willing to shew their generosity, and to make you gainers: But then the honest way is to say, it is worth but so much; but if you will give so much more because I need it, I will take it thankfully. Some think also where the common custom is to ask more than the worth, and People will not buy unless you come down from your first demand, that then you may lawfully ask more, because else there is no trading with such People. My Judgement in this case is this, 1. That ordi-ordinarily it is better to ask no more at all but a just gain: And that the inconveniencies of doing otherwise are greater than any on the other side: For he that heareth you ask unjustly, may well think that you would take unjustly if you could get it, and consequently that you are unjust. 2. But this just gain lieth not always just in an indivisible quantity, or determinate price. A Man that hath a Family to maintain by his Trade, may lawfully take a proportionable moderate gain: Though if he take less he may get something to: To be always just at a word is not convenient: For he that may lawfully get two or three Shillings, or more in the pound of the rich, may see cause to let a poorer Person have it for less: But never ask above what its reasonable to take. 3. And if say you once peremptorily, I will take no less, then it is not fit to go from your Word. 4. And if you do meet with such fools or proud Gallants, who will not deal with you unless you ask dear, it is just that when they have given you more than it is worth, you tell them so, and offer them the overplus again. And for them that expect that you abate much of your asking, it is an inconvenience to be born, which will be ever to your advantage when you are once better known.

Quest. 4. §. 4. Quest. 4 How shall the worth of a commodity be judged of?

Answ. 1. When the Law setteth a rate upon any thing (as on bread and drink with us) it must be observed. 2. If you go to the Market, the Market price is much to be observed. 3. If it be in an equal Contract, with one that is not in want, you may estimate your Goods as they are to you, or are worth to you, though it be above the common price; seeing the buyer is free to take or leave them. 4. But if that which you have to sell, be extraordinary desirable, or worth to some one Person more than to you or another Man, you must not make too great an advantage of his convenience or desire; but be glad that you can pleasure him, upon equal, fair and honest terms. 5. If there be a secret worth in your Commodity which the Market will take no notice of (as it is usual in a Horse) it is lawful for you to take according to that true worth if you can get it. But it is a false Rule of them, that think their commodity is worth as much as any one will give.

Quest. 5. §. 5. Quest. 5. Is it lawful to make a thing seem better than it is, by trimming, adorning or setting the best side outward or in sight; or to conceal the faults of what I am to sell?

Answ. It is lawful to dress, polish, adorn, or set out your Commodity, to make it seem as it is indeed, but not to make it seem better than it is; except in some very few unusual cases: As if you deal with some phantastical fool, who will not buy it, nor give you the true worth except it be so set out, and made in some respects to seem better than it is. It is lawful so far to serve their curiosity or humour, as to get the worth of your Commodity. But if you do it, to get more than the worth by deceiving, it is a sin. And such glossing hath so notable an appearance of deceit, that for that scandal it should be avoided.

2. And as for concealing the fault the case is the same: You ought not to deceive your Neighbour, but to do as you would be done by: And therefore must not conceal any fault which he desireth, or is concerned to know: Except it be when you deal with one who maketh a far greater matter of that fault than there is cause, and would wrong you in the price if it were known: Yea, and that exception will not hold neither, except in a case when you must needs sell, and they must buy it: Because 1. You may not have another Mans Money against his Will, though it be no more than the thing is worth. 2. Because it will be scandalous when the fault is known by him that buyeth it.

§. 6. Quest. 6. What if the fault was concealed from me when I bought it, or if I were deceived or over-reacht by him that sold it me, and gave more than the worth, may I not repair my loss by doing as I was done by? Quest. 6.

Answ. No: no more than you may cut anothers purse, because yours was cut: You must do as you would be done by, and not as you are done by. What you may do with the Man that deceived you, is a harder question: But doubtless you may not wrong an honest Man, because you were wronged by a knave.

§. 7. Object. But it is taken for granted in the Market, that every Man will get as much as he can have, and that Caveat emptor is the only security; and therefore every Man trusteth to his own wit, and not to the sellers honesty, and so resolveth to run the hazard.

Answ. It is not so among Christians, nor Infidels who profess either truth or common honesty. If you come among a company of Cut-purses: where the match is made, Look thou to thy purse and I will look to mine, and he that can get most let him take it; then indeed you have no reason to trust another: But there are no Tradesmen or Buyers who will profess that they look not to be trusted, or say, I will lie or deceive you if I can. Among Thieves and Pirates such total distrust may be allowed: But among sober Persons in Civil Societies and Converse, we must in reason and Charity expect some truth and honesty, and not presume them to be all liars and deceivers, that we may seem to have allowance to be such our selves. Indeed we trust them, not absolutely as Saints, but with a mixture of distrust, as fallible and faulty Men: And so as to trust our own circumspection above their words when we know not the Persons to be very just. But we have no cause to make a Market a place of meer deceit, where every one saith, Trust not me, and I will not trust thee; but let us all take one another for cheaters and liars, and get what we can? Such censures savour not of Charity, or of just intentions.

§. 8. Quest. 7. What if I foresee a plenty and cheapness in a time of dearth, which the buyer foreseeth not, (as if I know that there are Ships coming in with store of that commodity, which will make it cheap) am I bound to tell the buyer of it, and hinder my own gain? Quest. 7.

Answ. There may be some instances in trading with Enemies, or with Rich Men, that regard not such matters, or with Men that are supposed to know it as well as you, in which you are not bound to tell them. But in your ordinary equal trading, when you have reason to think that the buyer knoweth it not, and would not give so dear if he knew it, you are bound to tell him: because you must love your Neighbour as your self, and do as you would be done by, and not take advantge of his ignorance.

§. 9. Quest. 8. If I foresee a dearth, may I not keep my Commodity till then? Quest. 8.

Answ. Yes; unless it be to the hurt of the Common-wealth, as if your keeping it in, be the cause of the dearth, and your bringing it forth would help to prevent it.

§. 10. Quest. 9. May one use many words in buying and selling? Quest. 9.

Answ. You must use no more than are true, and just, and useful: but there are more words needful with some Persons who are talkative and unsatisfied, than with others.

§. 11. Quest. 10. May I buy as cheap as I can get it, or give less than the thing is worth? Quest. 10.

Answ. If it be worth more to you than the Market price (through your necessity) you are not bound to give above the Market price: If it be worth less to you than the Market price, you are not bound to give more than it is worth to you, as suited to your use: But you must not desire nor seek to get anothers good or labour for less than it is worth in both these respects (in common estimate, and to you.)

Quest. 11. §. 12. Quest. 11. May I take advantage of anothers necessity to buy for less than the worth, or sell for more: As e. g. a poor Man must needs have mony suddenly for his goods though he sell them but for half the worth: And I have no need of them: Am I bound to give him the worth when I have no need? And when it is a great kindness to him to give him any thing in that straight? So also when I have no desire to sell my Horse, and anothers necessity maketh him willing to give more than he is worth, may I not take it?

Answ. To the first case: You must distinguish between an act of Justice and of Charity: And between your need of the thing, and the worth of it to you. Though you have no need of the poor Mans goods, yet if you buy them, both Justice and Charity require that you give him as much as they are worth to you, though not so much as they are worth in the Market: Yea, and that you buy them of him in his necessity: For if you give him but what they are worth to you, you are no loser by it: And you should do another good, when it is not to your own hurt or loss. By [what they are worth to you] I mean, so much as that you be no loser. As if it be meat or drink, though you have no present need, perhaps you will shortly have need, and if you buy not that, you must buy as much of somewhat else. In strict Justice you may be a saver, but not a gainer, by buying of the poor in their necessity. 2. But if you buy a durable commodity, for less than it is worth, you should take it but as a pledge, and allow the seller liberty to redeem it if he can, that he may get more after of another. 3. And to the poor in such necessity, Charity must be exercised as well as Justice. Therefore if you are able to lend them Mony to save them the loss of underselling, you should do it: (I account that Man only able who hath Mony which no greater service of God requireth.) And if you are not able your self, you should endeavour to get some others to relieve him, if you can without a greater inconvenience.

And for the second case, it is answered before: You may not take more than it is worth, ever the more for anothers necessity; nor in any other case than you might have done it in, if there had been no such necessity of his.

Quest. 12. §. 13. Quest. 12. May I not make advantage of anothers ignorance or error in bargaining?

Answ. Not to get more than your Commodity is worth, nor to get his goods for less than the worth: No nor to get the true worth against his will, or with scandal: But if it be only to get a true worth of your own commodity when he is willing, but would be offended if his ignorance in some point were cured, you may so far make use of his ignorance to a lawful end, as is said before in the case of concealing faults.

Quest. 13. §. 14. Quest. 13. May I strive to get before another, to get a good bargain which he desireth.

Answ. Yes, if you do it not out of a greedy mind, nor to the injury of one that is poorer than your self: You should rather further the supply of your Neighbours greater needs: Otherwise speed and industry in your Calling is no fault, nor yet the crossing of a Covetous Mans desires: You are not bound to let every Man have what he would have.

Quest. 14. §. 15. Quest. 14. May I buy a thing out of anothers hand, or hire a servant, which another is about, or treating with? Or may I call a Chapman from another to buy of me?

Answ. There are some cases in which you may not do it, and some in which you may. You may not do it out of a greedy Covetousness; nor to the injury of the poor; Nor when the other hath gone so far in the bargain that it cannot be honestly broken: For then you injure the third Person, and tempt the other to a sin: Nor may you do it so as to disturb the due and civil Order, which should be among moderate Men in trading. And it is a great matter how the thing is accounted of by the Custom of the Country or Market where you bargain: For where it is of ill report, and accounted as unjust, the scandal should make you avoid such a course. But yet in some cases it is lawful, and in some a needful duty. It is lawful when none of the foresaid reasons (or any such other) are against it: It is a duty when Charity to the poor or oppressed doth require it. As e.g. a poor Man must needs sell his Land, his Horse, his Corn or Goods: A Covetous Oppressor offereth him less than it is worth. The poor Man must take his offer if he can get no more: TheOppressor saith that is it injustice for any one to take his bargain out of his hand, or offer Mony till he have done: In this case it may be a duty, to offer the poor Man the worth of his commodity, and save him from the Oppressor. A covetous Man offereth a Servant or Labourer less than their service or labour is worth; and will accuse you, if you interrupt his bargain and would offer his Servant more: In this case it may be your duty to help the Servant to a better Master. A Chapman is ready to be cheated by an unconscionable Tradesman, to give much more for a commodity than its worth: Charity may oblige you in such a case to offer it him cheaper. In a word, if you do it for your own gain, in a greedy manner, it is a sin: But if you do it when it is not scandalous or injurious, or do it in charity for anothers good, it is lawful, and sometime a duty.

Quest. 15. §. 16. Quest. 15. May I dispraise anothers commodity to draw the buyer to my own?

Answ. This case is sufficiently answered in the former: 1. You may not use any false dispraise: 2. Nor a true one out of Covetousness, nor in a scandalous manner. 3. But you may help to save another from a Cheater, by opening the deceit in Charity to him.

Quest. 16. §. 17. Quest. 16. What should I do in doubtful cases, where I am uncertain whether the thing be just or not?

Answ. Causeless perplexing melancholy scruples, which would stop a Man in the course of his duty, are not to be indulged: But in rational doubts, first use your utmost diligence (as much as the nature of the cause requireth) to be resolved: And if yet you doubt, be sure to go the safer way, and to avoid sin rather than loss; and to keep your Consciences in peace.

Quest. 17. §. 18. Quest. 17. If the buyer lose the commodity between the bargain and the payment (as if he buy your Horse, and he die before payment or presently after) what should the seller do to his relief?

Answ. If it were by the sellers fault, or by any fault in the Horse which he concealed, he is to make the buyer full satisfaction. If it were casually only, rigorous Justice will allow him nothing: And therefore if it be either to a Man that is rich enough to bear it without any great sense of the loss, or in a case where in common custom the buyer always standeth to the loss, meer justice will make him no amends. But if it be where custom makes some abatement judged a duty, or where the Person is so poor as to be pinched by the loss, that common humanity, which all good Men use in bargaining, which tempereth Justice with Charity, will teach Men to bear their part of the loss; because they must do as they would be done by.

Quest. 18. §. 19. Quest. 18. If the thing bought and sold prove afterward of much more worth than was by either party understood (as in buying of Amber-chryse, and Jewels, it oft falleth out) is the buyer bound to give the seller more than was bargained for?

Answ. Yes, if it were the sellers meer ignorance and and insufficiency in that business, which caused him so to undersell it: (As if an ignorant Country-man sell a Jewel or Amber-chryse, who knoweth not what it is, a moderate satisfaction should be made him) But if it were the sellers trade, in which he is to be supposed to be sufficient, and if it be taken for granted before hand, that both buyer and seller will stand to the bargain whatever it prove, and that the seller would have abated nothing if it had proved less worth than the price, then the buyer may enjoy his gain: Much more if he run any notable hazard for it, as Merchants use to do.

Quest. 19. §. 20. Quest. 19. What if the title of the thing sold prove bad, which was before unknown?

Answ. If the seller either knew it was bad, or through his notable negligence was ignorant of it, and did not acquaint the buyer with so much of the uncertainty and danger as he knew; or if it was any way his fault that the buyer was deceived, and not the buyers fault, he is bound to make him proportionable satisfaction. As also in case that by Law or bargain he be bound to warrant the title to the buyer. But not in case that it be their explicit or implicit agreement that the buyer stand to the hazard, and the seller hath done his duty to make him know what is doubtful.

Quest. 20. §. 21. Quest. 20. What if a change of Powers or Laws do overthrow the title, almost as soon as it is sold (as it oft falls out about Offices and Lands;) who must bear the loss?

Answ. The case is near the same with that in Quest. 17. It is supposed that the seller should have lost it himself if he had kept it but a little longer; and that neither of them foresaw the Change: And therefore that the seller hath all his mony, rather for his good hap, than for his Lands or Office, (which the buyer hath not.) Therefore except it be to a rich Man that feeleth not the loss, or one that expresly undertook to stand to all hazards, foreseeing a possibility of them; Charity and Humanity, will teach the seller to divide the loss.

§. 22. The same is the case of London now consumed by fire; where thousands of suits are like to rise between the Landlords and the Tenants. Where the Providence of God (permitting the burning zeal of some Papists) hath deprived Men of the houses which they had hired or taken leases of, Humanity and Charity requireth the Rich to bear most of the loss, and not to exact their Rents, or Rebuilding from the poor, what ever the Law saith, which could not be supposed to forsee such accidents. Love your Neighbours as your selves: Do as you would be done by; and oppress not your poor Brethren; and then by these three Rules you will your selves decide a multitude of such doubts and difficulties, which the uncharitable only cannot understand.

Tit. 4. Cases of Conscience about Lending and Borrowing.

Quest. 1. §. 1. Quest. 1. MAY a poor Man borrow Mony, who knoweth that he is unable to repay it, and hath no rational proof that he is very likely to be able hereafter?

Answ. No, unless it be when he telleth the lender truly of his case, and he is willing to run the hazard: Else it is meer thievery covered with the cheat of borrowing: For the borrower desireth that of another, which he would not lend him, if he expected it not again: And to take a Mans mony or goods against his will is robbery.

Object. But I am in great necessity.

Answ. Begging in necessity is lawful: But stealing or cheating is not, though you call it borrowing.

Object. But it is a shame to beg.

Answ. The sin of thievish borrowing is worse than shame.

Object. But none will give me if I beg.

Answ. If they will give but to save your Life at the present, you must take it, though they give you not what you would have: The poorest beggars Life is better than the Thiefs.

Object. But I hope God may enable me to pay hereafter.

Answ. If you have no rational way to manifest the soundness of that hope to another, it is but to pretend faith and hope for thievery and deceit.

Object. God hath promised, that those that fear him shall want no good thing? And therefore I hope I may be able to repay it.

Answ. If you want not, why do you borrow? If you have enough to keep you alive by begging, God maketh good all his promises to you: Yea, or if you die by famine. For he only promiseth you that which is best; which for ought you know may be beggary or death. God breaketh not Promise with his Servants who die in common famine, no more than with them who die in Plagues or Wars. Make not God the Patron of sin. Yea, and your faith a pretence for your distrust. If you trust God, use no sinful means: If you trust him not, this pleading of his Promise is hypocrisie.

Quest. 2. § 2. Quest. 2. May a Tradesman drive a Trade with borrowed mony, when his success and so his repayment is utterly an uncertain thing?

Answ. There are some Trades where the gain is so exceeding probable, next to certain, as may warrant the borrowing of Mony to manage them, when there is no rational probability of failing in the payment. And there are some Tradesmen, who have estates of their own, sufficient to repay all the Money which they borrow. But otherwise when the Money is rationally hazardous, the borrower is bound in conscience to acquaint the lender fully with the hazard, that he may not have it against his will. Otherwise he liveth in constant deceit or thievery! And if he do happen to repay it, it excuseth not his sin.

Quest. 3. §. 3. Quest. 3. If a borrower be utterly unable to pay, and so break while he hath something, may he not retain somewhat for his food or rayment.

Answ. No: Unless it be in order to set up again in hope to repay his debts: For all that he hath being other Mens, he may not take so much as bread to his mouth, out of that which is theirs, without their consent.

Quest. 4. §. 4. Quest. 4. But if a Man have bound himself to his Wives friends upon marriage to settle so much upon her or her Children, and this obligation was antecedent to his debts, may he not secure that to his Wife or Children, without any injury to his Creditors?

Answ. The Law of the Land must much decide this controversie: If the Propriety be actually before transferred to Wife or Children, it is theirs, and cannot be taken from them: But if it were done after by a deed of gift to defraud the Creditors, then that deed of gift is invalid, till debts be paid. If it be but an obligation and no collation of propriety, the Law must determine who is to be first paid: And whether the Wife be supposed to run the hazard of gainiug or losing with the Husband: And though the Laws of several Countries herein differ, and some give the Wife more propriety than others do, yet must they in each place be conscientiously observed, as being the Rule of such propriety. But we must see that there be no fraudulent intent in the transaction.

Quest. 5. §. 5. Quest. 5. May not a Tradesman retain somewhat to set up again, if his crediors be willing to compound for a certain part of the debt?

Answ. If he truly acquaint them with his whole estate, and they voluntarily allow him part to himself, either in charity, or in hope hereafter to be satisfied, this is no unlawful course: But if he hide part from them, and make them belive that the rest is

is all, this is but a thievish procurement of their composition or consent.

Quest. 6. §. 6. Quest. 6. May a borrower lawfully break his day of promised payment, in case of necessity?

Answ. True necessity hath no Law: That is, a Man is not bound to do things naturally impossible: But if he might have foreseen that necessity, or the doubtfulness of his payment at the day, it was his sin to promise it, unless he put in some limitation [If I be able,] and acquainted the lender with the uncertainty. However it be, when the time is come, he ought to go to his Creditor, and tell him of his necessity, and desire further time, and endeavour to pay it as soon as he is able; and if he be not able, to make him what satisfaction he can, by his labour, or any other lawful way.

Quest. 7. §. 7. Quest. 7. May I borrow of one to pay and to keep my day with the first?

Answ. Yes; if you deal not fraudulently with the second, but are able to pay him, or acquaint him truly with your case.

Quest. 8. §. 8. Quest. 8. Suppose that I have no probability of paying the last Creditor, may I borrow of one to pay another, and so live upon borrowing; or must I rather continue in one Mans debt?

Answ. If you truly acquaint your Creditors with your state, you may do as is most to your convenience. If the first Creditor be able and willing rather to trust you longer, than that you should borrow of another to pay him, you may continue his debtor, till you can pay him without borrowing: But if he be either poor or unwilling to bear with you, and another that is able be willing to venture, you may better borrow of another to pay him. But if they be all equally unwilling to stand to any hazard by you, then you must rather continue in the first Mans debt, because if you wrong another, you will commit another sin: Nay, you cannot borrow in such a case, because it is supposed that the other will not lend, when he knoweth your case. And you must not at all conceal it from him.

Object. But it may be my ruine to open my full state to another.

Answ. You must not live upon cheating and thievery to prevent your ruine: And what can it be less to get another Mans Money against his will, if you hide your case, which if he knew he would not lend it you?

Object. But what if I tell him plainly, that I will pay him certainly by borrowing of another, though I cannot pay him for mine own, and though I be not like to pay the last?

Answ. If you truly thus open your case to every one that you borrow of, you may take it, if they will lend it: For then you have their consent: And it is supposed, that every one is willing to run the hazard of being the last Creditor.

Quest. 9. §. 9. Quest. 9. May I lend upon Pledges, Pawns, or Mortgages for my Security?

Answ. Yes, so you take not that from a poor Man for a pledge, which is necessary to his livelihood and maintenance: As the Bed which he should lie on, the Cloaths which he should wear, or the tools which he should work with; and be not cruel on pretence of mercy.

Quest. 10. § 10. Quest. 10. May I take the forfeiture and keep a Pledge or Mortgage upon Covenants?

Answ. If it be among Merchants and Rich Men, an Act of Merchandize, and not of meer security for Money lent, then it is another case: As if they make a bargain thus, [take this Jewel or this Land for your Money, and it shall be yours if I pay you not at such a day: I am willing to stand to the hazard of uncertainty, if I pay you not: Suppose it is for my own Commodity, and not through disability:] In this case it is lawful to take the forfeiture, or detain the thing. But if it be properly but a Pledge to secure the Money, then the final intent is but that your Money may be repayed: And you may not take the advantage of breaking a day, to take that from another which is none of your own. Justice will allow you only to take so much as your Money came to, and to give the overplus (if there be any) to the debtor. And mercy will require you rather to forgive the Debt, than to keep a Pledge which he cannot spare, but to his ruine and misery (as his Food, his Rayment, his Tools, his House, &c.) Unless you be in as great necessity as he.

Quest. 11. § 11. Quest. 11. May I take the Bond or Promise of a third Person as Security for my Money?

Answ. Yes; in case that other be able and willing to be responsible: For you have his own consent: But great caution should be used; that you take no Man that is insufficient, from whom mercy forbids you to take it in case the principal debtor fail; unless you take his suretiship but in terrorem, resolving not to take it of him: And also that you faithfully tell the Sureties that you must require it of them in case of non-payment, and therefore try whether indeed they are truly willing to pay it: For if you find such as truly presume that you will not take it of them, or will take it ill to be sued for it, you should not take their suretiship, unless you purpose not to seek it (except in necessity.)

Quest. 12. § 12. Quest. 12. Is it lawful to lend upon usury, or increase?

Answ. This Controversie hath so many full Treatises written on it, that I cannot expect that so few words as I must lay out upon it, should satisfie the studious Reader. All the disputes about the name of Usury I pass by: It being [The receiving of any additional gain as due for Money lent] which is commonly meant by the word, and which we mean in the question. For the questions, Whether we may bargain for it, or tie the Debtor to pay it? Whether we may take it after his gain as partaking in it; or before. Whether we must partake also in the loss, if the debtor be a loser, with other such like, are but subsequent to the main question? Whether any gain (called Use) may be taken by the lender, as his due for the Money lent? My Judgement is as follow[illegible].

1. There is some such Gain or Usury lawful and commendable. 2. There is some such Gain or Usury unlawful and a heinous sin. I shall first give my reasons of the first proposition.

13. If all Usury be forbidden, it is either by the Law of Nature, or by some positive Law of supernatural Revelation: If the latter, it is either by some Law of Moses, or by some Law of Christ: If the former, it is either as against the Rule of Piety to God, or against Justice or Charity to Men: That which is neither a violation of the Natural Laws of Piety, Justice or Charity; nor against the supernaturally revealed Laws of Moses or of Christ, is not unlawful. But there is some Usury which is against none of all these: Ergo there is some Usury which is not unlawful.

§. 14. I will first lay you down the instances of such Usury; and then prove it. There is a parcel of Land to be sold for a thousand pound, which is worth forty pound per Annum, and hath Wood on it worth a thousand pound: (Some such things we have known:) John N. is willing to purchase it; But he hath a poor Neighbour, T. S. that hath no Money, but a great desire of the bargain. J. N. loving his Neighbour as himself, and desiring his wealth, lendeth him the thousand pound upon Usury for one Year. T. S. buyeth the Land, and selleth the Wood for the same Money, and repayeth it in a Year, and so hath all the Land for almost nothing, as if J. N. had purchased the Land and freely given it him, after a year or two: The gift had been the same.

Object. Here you suppose the seller wronged by selling his Land almost for nothing.

Answ. 1. That is nothing at all to the present case, but a different case by it self: 2. I can put many cases in which such a sale may be made without any wrong to the seller: As when it is done by some Prince, or State, or noble and liberal Person, purposely designing the enriching of the Subjects or after a War as lately in Ireland. So that the question is, whether J. N. may not give T. S. a thousand or eight hundred pounds worth of Land, taking a years Rent first out of the Land, or a years use for the Mony, which cometh to the same sum.

§. 15. Another: A Rich Merchant trading into the East Indies, having five thousand pound to lay out upon his commodities in Traffick, when he hath laid out four thousand five hundred pound, lendeth in Charity the other five hundred pound to one of his Servants to lay out upon a commodity, which when it cometh home will be worth two thousand pound; and offereth him to secure the carriage with his own; requiring only the Use of his Mony at six per cent. Here the taking of thirty pound Use, is but the giving him one thousand four hundred and seventy pound, and is all one with deducting so much of the gift.

§. 16. Another Instance: Certain Orphans having nothing left them but so much Mony as will by the allowed use of it, find them bread and poor cloathing: The Guardian cannot lay it out in Lands for them: And if he maintain them upon the stock, it will be quickly spent, and he must answer for it: A Rich Man that is their Neighbour tradeth in Iron-works (Furnaces and Forges) or Lead-works or other such commodities, in which he constantly getteth the double of the stock which he employeth, or at least twenty pound or forty pound in the hundred: The Guardian dare not lend the Mony to any poor Man, lest he break and never be able to pay it: Therefore he lendeth it this rich Man. And if he have it without Usury, the poor Orphans give the rich Man freely twenty pound or forty pound a year, supposing their stock to be an hundred: If he take Usury, the rich Man doth but give the poor Orphans some part of his constant gain.

§. 17. Another Instance: In a City or Corporation where there is a rich Trade of Cloathing or making Silks, there is a stock of Mony given by Legacy for the poor, and entrusted into the hands of the richest of the City, to trade with and give the poor the Use of it: And there is another stock left to set up young beginners, who have not a stock to set up themselves: On condition that they give the third part of their gain to the poor, and at seven years end resign the stock: The question is, Whether the poor should be without this Use of their Mony, and let the rich go away with it? Or whether they may take it?

§. 18. Now I prove that such Usury is not forbidden by God. 1. It is not forbidden us by the Law of Moses: 1. Because Moses Law never did forbid it: For, 1. It is expresly forbidden as an act of unmercifulness; and therefore forbidden only to the poor and to brethren, Exod. 22. 25. Levit. 25. 36, 37. Yea, when the poor are not named, it is the poor that are meant: Because in that Country they did not keep up stocks for Merchandize or Trading, but lent usually to the needy only: At least the circumstances of the several Texts shew, that it is only lending to the needy, and not lending to drive on any enriching Trades, which is meant where Usury is forbidden. 2. And it is expresly allowed to be used to strangers, Deut. 23. 19, 20. to whom nothing unjust or uncharitable might be done; only such a measure of Charity was not required towards them, as unto brethren. And there were more Merchants of strangers that traded with them in foreign commodities, than of Jews that fetch'd them home: So that the prohibition of Usury is in the Law it self restrained only to their lending to the poor: But in the Prophets who do but reprove the sin, it is expressed without that limitation, partly because it supposeth the meaning of the Law to be known, which the Prophets did but apply: And partly because there was little or no lending used among the Jews, but to the needy as an act of Charity.

Exod. 20. 21. Thou shalt neither vex a stranger, nor oppress him. Exod. 23. 9. Thou shalt not oppress a stranger, &c. So that Usury to a stranger was no oppression

§. 19. 2. And if it had been forbidden in Moses Law only, it would not extend to Christians now: Because the Law of Moses as such, is not in force: The matter of it is much of the Law of Nature indeed; but as Mosaical, it was proper to the Jews and Proselytes: Or at least extended not to the Christian Gentiles: As is plain in 2 Cor. 3. 7. Gal. 3. 19, 24. & 5. 3. Eph. 2. 15. 1 Tim. 1. 7. Heb. 7. 12, 16, 19. Moses Law as such never bound any other Nations, but the Proselytes that joined themselves to the Jews (nor was all the World obliged so to be proselyted as to take up their Laws:) Much less do they bind us that are the Servants of Christ, so long after the dissolution of the Commonwealth. So much of them as are part of the Law of Nature, or of any positive Law of Christ, or of the Civil Law of any State, are binding as they are such Natural, Christian or Civil Laws. But not one of them as Mosaical: Though the Mosaical Law is of great use to help us to understand the Law of Nature in many particular instances, in which it is somewhat difficult to us.

§ 20. 2. There is no positive Law of Christ forbidding all Usury: As for Luke 6. 32, 35. it is plainly nothing to the case: For he saith not, [Lend, looking for no gain or increase,] but [looking for nothing again.] And the Context sheweth that the meaning must one of these two: Either q. d. [Lend not only to them that will lend to you again when you are in want; but even to the poor, that you can never hope to borrow of:] Or else [Lend not only to them that are able to pay you, and where your Stock is secured, but to the needy where your Mony is hazarded; and though they will pay you if they are able, yet you have little or no hope that ever they should be able to repay: Lend so, as to be willing to make a gift of it in case the borrower never repay it.] And there is no other Text that can be pretended against it, in the New Testament.

§. 21. 3 And that the Law of Nature doth not forbid all Usury, will appear by examining the several parts of it. The Law of Nature forbiddeth but three sorts of sins; 1. Those that are against Piety to God: 2. Those that are against our own welfare. 3. Those that are against our Neighbours good: And that is, 1. Against Justice: 2. Against Charity. There is none that falleth not under some of these heads.

1. And that Usury is not naturally evil as against Piety to God, 2. Or as against our selves, and our own welfare, I need not prove, because no reason nor reasonable Person doth lay any such accusation against it. Though they that think it absolutely unlawful, say that is consequently against God, as every violation of his Law is. But that is nothing to the case.

3. Therefore there is no doubt but the whole controversie is resolved into this last question, Whether all Usury be against Justice or Charity to our Neighbour. Justice obligeth me to give him his own: Charity obligeth me to give him more than his own, in certain cases; as one that love him as my self. That which is not against Justice, may be against Charity: But that which is against Charity, is not always against Justice strictly taken. And that which is an act of true Charity, is never against Justice: Because he that giveth his Neighbour more than his own, doth give him his own and more. There is a Usury which is against Justice and Charity. There is a Usury which is against Charity, but not against meer Justice: And there is an Usury which is against neither Justice nor Charity. If I prove it charitable it is superfluous to say more.

§. 22. All the instances before given are notoriously charitable. That which is for the preservation of the lives and comforts of the poor, and of Orphans, or for the enriching of my Neighbour, is an act of Charity: But such is some Usury, past all doubt; as is before declared. Where the contrary is an act of cruelty, the Usury is not against Charity, but for it. For the rich to deny to the poor and Orphans a part of that gain, which they make by the improvement of their own Money, is oppression and cruelty: If it be cruel to let a Beggar die or starve, when we should feed and cloath him of our own; much more to let the poor and Orphans starve and perish, rather than give them the increase of their own, or part of it at least. As for them that say, It may be as well improved otherwise, they are unexperienced Men: It is a known falshood as to the most: though some few may meet with such opportunities. At least it is nothing to them that cannot have other ways of improving it: Who are very many.

§. 23. Moreover, when it is not an act of Charity, yet it may be not against Charity in these cases: 1. When the lender is poor and the borrower rich: Yea, it may be a sin to lend it freely, Prov. 22. 16. He that oppresseth the poor to increase his riches, and he that gives to the rich shall surely come to want: It is a giving to the rich to lend freely that Money which they improve to the increase of their riches. 2. When the lender is not obliged to that act of Charity, though the borrower be poorer than himself. Which falleth out in a hundred cases: which may be comprized under this one general; When the lender is obliged to expend that same Money in some other greater, better work: As at the same time while a Man that is worth but twenty pound a year, is in debt to a Man that hath a thousand pound a Year; there may be a hundred or a thousand poor people worth nothing ready to perish, whom the rich is rather bound to succour, than him that hath but twenty pound a Year. And there may be works of piety (as to set up a School, or promote the preaching of the Gospel) which may be as great as either. And the richest that is, cannot do all the good that is to be done, nor relieve all the Persons that are in want: Therefore when he must leave much undone, if he would give all his substance, it is (cæteris paribus) a sin, to give that to a Man that can make shift without it, and pass by an hundred in much deeper necessity and distress: So that he who either exerciseth Charity in his Usury, or doth nothing against Charity and Justice, certainly sinneth not by that Usury. For all the Scriptures which speak against Usury, speak against it as a cruel or uncharitable thing.

§. 24. Obj. But it is sometimes necessary for a Law to forbid that which otherwise would be good, when it cannot be done, without encouraging others to a greater evil; such as ordinary usury is: and then that Law must be observed.

Answ. This is true in thesi, that such cases there are: But it is unproved and untrue in this case: For, 1. There is no such Law: 2. There is no such reason or necessity of such a Law. For God can as well make Laws against unrighteous or uncharitable increase or Usury, without forbidding that which is Charitable and Just, as he can make Laws against unrighteous or uncharitable buying and selling without condemning that which was good and just: Or as he can forbid gluttony drunkenness, idleness, pride, without forbidding eating, drinking, apparel or riches. He can easily tell Men of whom and in what case to take use, and when not.

He that would see all other Objections answered, and the case fully handled, hath many Treatises on both sides extant to inform him.

§. 25. II. That there is a sort of Usury which is evil I know of no Man that doubteth, and therefore need not stand to prove.

Quest. When is Usury sinful?

Answ. As is before said, When its against either Justice or Charity: 1. When its like cheating bargaining, which under pretence of consent and a form of Justice doch deceive, or oppress, and get from another that which is not truly ours but his. 2. When you lend for increase where Charity obligeth you to lend freely: even as it is a sin to lend expecting your own again, when Charity obligeth you to give it. 3. When you uncharitably exact that which your Brother is disabled utterly to pay, and use cruelty to procure it, (be it the Use or the Principal.) 4. When you allow him not such a proportion of the gain as his labour, hazard or poverty doth require; but because the Money is yours, will live at ease upon his labours. 5. When in case of his losses you rigorously exact your due without that abatement, or forgiving Debts (whether Use or Principal) which humanity and charity require. In a Word, when you are selfish and do not as, according to true Judgment, you may desire to be done by, if you were in his case.

§. 26. Quest. But when am I bound to exercise this Charity in not taking Use?

Answ. As I said before. 1. When ever you have no more urgent, and necessary, and excellent work, to lay out that Money on, which you are so to receive. 2. Yea, though another work may be in it self better, (as to relieve many poorer, better Men with that Money) yet when you cannot take it, without the utter undoing of the debtor, and bringing him into as bad a case, as any single Person whom you would relieve, it is the safer side to leave the other unrelieved, (unless it be a Person on whom the publick good much dependeth) rather than to extort your own from such a one to give another. Because that which you cannot get without a scandalous appearance of cruelty, is quoad jus in re not yours to give, till you can better get possession of it: And therefore God will not expect that you should give it to another.

§. 27. In all this I imply, that as you must prefer the lives of others in giving Alms, before your own conveniencies and comforts, and must not say, I cannot spare it, when your necessity may spare it, though not your pleasure: So also in taking Use of those that you are bound to shew charity to, the same rule and proportions must be observed in your charity.

§. 28. Note also, that in all this it appeareth, that the case is but gradually different, between taking the Use and taking the Principal. For when the reason for remitting is the same, you are as well bound to remit the Principal as the Use.

§. 29. But this difference there is, that many a Man of low Estate, may afford to lend freely to a poorer Man for a little time, who cannot afford to give it. And prudence may direct us to choose one Man to lend freely to for a time, because of his sudden necessity, when yet another is fitter to give it to.

§. 30. Quest. 13. Is lending a duty? If so, must I lend to all that ask me? or to whom? Quest. 13.

Answ. Lending is a duty, when we have it, and our Brothers necessity requireth it, and true prudence telleth us, that we have no better way to lay it out, which is inconsistent with that. And therefore rich Men ordinarily should both lend and give as prudence shall direct. But there is an imprudent and so a sinful lending: As, 1. When you will lend that which is anothers, and you have no power to lend. 2. When you lend that which you must needs require again, while you might easily foresee that the borrower is not like to pay. Lend nothing but what you have either great probability will be repayed, or else which you are willing to give, in case the Debtor cannot

cannot or will not pay; or at least when suing for it, will not have scandalous and worse effects than not lending. For it is very ordinary when you come to demand it and sue for it, to stir up the hatred of the debtor against you, and to make him your Enemy, and to break his Charity by your imprudent Charity: In such a case, if you are obliged to relieve him, give him so much as you can spare, rather than lend him that which you cannot spare, but must sue for. In such cases, if Charity go not without Prudence, nor Prudence without Charity, you may well enough see when to lend, and how much.

Quest. 14. § 31. Quest. 14. Is it lawful to take upon Usury in necessity, when the Creditor doth unjustly or unmercifully require it?

Answ. Not in case that the consequents (by encouraging sin or otherwise) be like to do more hurt, than the Money will do you good. Else, it is lawful when it is for your benefit: As it is lawful to take part of your wages for your work, or part of the worth of your commodity, when you cannot have the whole: And as it is lawful to purchase your rights of an Enemy, or your life of a Thief as is aforesaid. And Man may buy his own benefit of an unrighteous Man.

Quest. 15. §. 32. Quest. 15. Doth not contracting for a certain sum of gain, make Usury to be in that case unlawful, which might lawfully be taken of one that is free?

Answ. Yes, in case that contracting determine an uncertain case without sufficient cause: As if you agree, that whether the borrower gain or lose, and be poor or rich, I will have so much gain: That is, Whether it prove merciful or unmerciful, I will have it. But then in that case, if it so prove unmerciful, it may not be taken without contracting, if freely offered. No contract may tye the debtor to that which is against Justice or Charity: And no contract may absolutely require that which may prove uncharitable; unless there be a tacite condition, or exception of such a case implied. Otherwise I see no Scripture or Reason, why a Contract altereth the case, and may not be used to secure that increase which is neither unrighteous nor unmerciful: It may be the bond of Equity, but not of Iniqnity. As in case of a certain gain by the borrower, a certain use may be contracted for: And in case of uncertain gain to the borrower, a conditional Contract may be made. Yea, in case of Merchandize, where Mens poverty forbiddeth not such bargains, I see not but it is lawful to sell a greater uncertain gain, for a smaller certain gain; and so to make the Contracts absolute: (As Amesius Cas. Conse. on this question sheweth.) As all oppression and unmercifulness must be avoided, and all Men must do as they would (judiciously) be done by; So it is a bad thing to corrupt Religion, and fill the World with causeless scruples, by making that a sin which is no sin. Divines that live in great Cities and among Merchandize, are usually fitter Judges in this case, than those that live more obscurely (without experience) in the Countrey.

Tit. 5. Cases of Conscience about Lusory Contracts.

§. 1. Quest. 1. IS it lawful to lay wagers upon the credit or confidence of one anothers opinions or assertions in discourse? As e. g. I will lay you so much that I am in the right?

Answ. Yes, If these three things concur: 1. That the true end of the wager is, to be a penalty to him that shall be guilty of a rash and false assertion, and not to gratifie the Covetousness of the other. 2. That it be no greater a sum than can be demanded and paid, without breach of Charity, or too much hurt to the loser (as above the proportion of his error;) 3. That it be no other but what both Parties are truly willing to stand to the loss of, if either of them lose, and that beforehand they truly seem so willing to each other.

Quest. 2. § 2. Quest. 2. Is it lawful to lay Wagers upon Horse-races, Dogs, Hawks, Bear-baitings or such Games as depend upon the activity of Beast or Man?

Answ. Yes, upon the two last expreſt conditions; and 3. That it be not an exercise which is it self unlawful, by cruelty to Beasts, or hazard to the lives of Men (as in Fencing, Running, Wrestling, &c. it may fall out if it be not cautelously done,) or by the expence of an undue proportion of time in them which is the common Malignity of such recreations.

Quest. 3. § 3. Quest. 3. May I lawfully give Money to see such Sports, as Bear-baitings, Stage plays, Masks, Shews, Puppet plays, Activities of Man or Beast? &c.

Answ. There are many Shews that are desirable and laudable, (as of strange Creatures, Monsters, rare Engines, Activities, &c.) the sight of which it is lawful to purchase, at a proportionable price; As a prospect thorough one of Galilæus Tubs or such another, is worth much Money to a studious Person. But when the exercise is unlawful (as all Stage-plays are that ever I saw, or had just information of; yea, odiously evil; however it is very possible that a Comedy or Tragedy might with abundance of cautions be lawfully acted,) it is then (usually) unlawful to be a Spectator either for Money or on free cost. I say [usually] because it is possible that some one that is necessitated to be there, or that goeth to find out their evil to suppress them, or that is once only induced to know the truth of them, may do it innocently: But so do not they, who are present voluntarily and approvingly. 3. And if the recreation be lawful in it self, yet when vain persons go thither to feed a carnal fancy and vicious humour, which delighteth more in vanity, than they delight in piety, and when it wasteth their time and corrupteth their minds, and alienateth them from good, or hindreth duty, it is to them unlawful.

Quest. 4. §. 4. Quest. 4. Is it lawful to play at Cards or Dice for Money, or at any Lottery?

Answ. The greatest doubt is. Whether the Games be lawful, many learned Divines being for the Negative, and many for the Affirmative: And those that are for the Affirmative lay down so many necessaries or conditions to prove them lawful, as I scarce ever yet saw meet together: But if they be proved at all lawful, the case of Wagers is resolved as the next. Of Recreations see before Quest. 5. §. 5. Quest. 5. May I play at Bowls, Run, Shoot, &c. or use such personal activities for Money?

Answ. Yes, 1. If you make not the Game it self bad by any accident: 2. If your Wager be laid for sport, and not for covetousness (striving who shall get anothers Money, and give them nothing for it.) 3. And if no more be laid than is suitable to the sport, and the loser doth well and willingly pay.

Quest. 6. §. 6. Quest. 6. If the loser who said he was willing, prove angry and unwilling when it cometh to the paying, may I take it, or get it by Law against his will?

Answ. No, no not in ordinary cases, because you may not turn a sport to covetousness, or breach of Charity: But in case that it be a sport that hath cost you any thing, you may in Justice take your Charges, when prudence forbids it not.

Tit. 6. Cases of Conscience about Losing and Finding.

§. 1. Quest. 1. IF I find Money or any thing lost, am I bound to seek out the owner, if he seek not after me? And how far am I bound to seek him?

Answ. You are bound to use such reasonable means, as the nature of the case requireth, that the true owner may have his own again. He that dare keep another Mans Money, because he findeth it, its like would steal, if he could do it as secretly. Finding gives you no propriety, if the owner can be found: Do as you would be done by, and you may satisfie your conscience. If nearer enquiry will not serve, you are bound to get it cried in the Market, or proclaimed in the Church, or mentioned in the Curranto's that carry weekly news; or any probable way, which putteth you not upon unreasonable cost or labour.

Quest. 2. §. 2. Quest. 2. May I take any thing for the finding of it, as my due?

Answ. You may demand so much as shall pay for any labour or cost which you have been at about it, or finding out the owner. But no more as your due: Though a moderate gratuity may be accepted, if he freely give it.

Quest. 3. §. 3. Quest. 3. May I desire to find Money or any thing else in my way? or may I be glad when I have found it?

Answ. You should first be unwilling that your Neighbour should lose it; and be sorry that he hath lost it: But supposing that it be lost, you may moderately desire that you may find it rather than another: Not with a covetous desire of the gain; but that you may faithfully gratify the owner in restoring it, Or if he cannot be found may dispose of it as you ought. And you should be more sorry that it's lost, than glad that you find it, except for the owner.

Quest. 4. §. 4. Quest. 4. If no owner can be found, may I not take it and use it as mine own.

Answ. The Laws of the Land do usually regulate claims of propriety in such matters: Where the Law giveth it to the Lord of the Mannor, it is his, and you must give it him. Where it giveth it to no other, it is his that findeth it; and occupancy will give him propriety. But so as it behoveth him to judge, if he be poor, that Gods providence ordered it for his own supply; but if he be rich, that God sent it him but as to his Steward, to give it to the poor.

Quest. 5. §. 5. Quest. 5. If many be present when I find it, may I not wholly retain it to my self? or may I not conceal it from them if I can?

Answ. If the Law over-rule the case, it must be obeyed: But if it do not, you may if you can conceal it, and thereby become the only finder, and take it as your own, if the owner be not found: But if you cannot conceal it at the time of finding, they that see it with you, are partly the finders as well as you; though perhaps the largest share be due to the occupant.

Quest. 6. §. 6. Quest. 6. If I trust my Neighbour or Servant with Money or Goods, or if another trust me, who must stand to the loss if they be lost?

Answ. Here also the Law of the Land as regulating Proprieties must be very much regarded; and especially the true meaning of the Parties must be understood: If it was antecedently the expressed or implied meaning that one party in such or such a case should bear the loss, it must in strict justice be according to the true meaning of the parties. Therefore if a Carrier that undertaketh to secure it, loseth it; he loseth it to himself. Or if one that it is lent to on that condition (explicite or implicite) lose it, it is to himself. But if a friend to whom you are beholden for the carriage, lose it who undertook no more than to bestow his labour, the loss must be yours; yea, though it was his negligence or drunkenness that was the fault: For you took him and trusted him as he is. But if a servant or one obliged to do it by hire, do without any other agreement, only undertake to serve you in it, and loseth it the Law or Custom of the Countrey is instead of a Contract: For if the Law or Custom lay the loss on him, it is supposed that he consented to it in consenting to be your servant: If it lay it on you, it is supposed that you took your Servant on such terms of hazard. But if it be left undecided by Law and Custom, you may make your Servant pay only so much as is a proportionable penalty for his fault, but no more, as any satisfaction for your loss: except you agreed with him to repay such losses as were by his default. And when it is considered what strict Justice doth require, it must also be considered what Charity and Mercy doth require, that the poor be not oppressed.

Tit. 7. Directions to Merchants, Factors, Chaplains, Travellors, that live among Infidels.

Quest. 1. IS it lawful to put ones self, or Servants, especially young unestablished Apprentices, into temptations of an Infidel Countrey (or a Popish) for the getting of Riches, as Merchants do? Quest. 1. Leg. Steph. Vinan. Pigh. in Hercule prodigo pag. 130. 131, 132. Cui peregrinatio dulcis est, non amat patriam: si dulcis est patria, amara est peregrinatio. August.

Answ. This cannot be truly answered without distinguishing. 1. Of the Countreys they go from. 2. Of the places they go to. 3. Of the quality of the Persons that go. 4. Of the causes of their going.

I. Some Countreys that they go from may be as bad as those that they go to, or in a state of War, when it is better to be absent, or in a time of persecution, or at least of greater temptation than they are like to have abroad. And some are contrarily as a Paradise in comparison of those they go to, for holiness and helps to Heaven, and for peace and opportunities of serviceableness to God and the publick good.

II. Some Countreys which they may go to may have as good helps for their Souls as at home, if not by those of the Religion of the Nation, yet by Christians that live among them; or by the company which goeth with them: or at least there may be no great temptations to change their Religion, or debauch them, either through the Civility and Moderation of those they live among, or through their sottish ignorance and viciousness, which will rather turn Mens hearts against them. But some Countreys have so strong temptations to corrupt Mens understandings through the subtilty of Seducers, and some have such allurements to debauch Men, and some such cruelties to tempt them to deny the truth, that it is hard among them to retain ones innocency.

III. Some that go abroad are understanding settled Christians, able to make good use of other Mens errors, and sins, and ill examples or suggestions; and perhaps to do much good on others: But some are young, and raw, and unexperienced, whose heads are unfurnished of those evidences and Reasons by which they should hold fast their own profession, against the cunning Reasonings of an adversary; and their hearts unfurnished of that Love to Truth, and that serious resolution which is necessary to their safety; and therefore are like to be corrupted.

IV. Some are sent by their Princes as Agents or Embassadors, on employments necessary to the publick good: And some are sent by Societies on business necessary to the ends of the Society: And some go in case of extream poverty and necessity, having no other way of maintenance at home: And some go in obedience to their Parents and Masters that command it them: And some go to avoid the miseries of a War, or the danger of a sharp persecution at home; or the greater temptations of a debauched or seducing Age; or some great temptations in their Families. But some go for fancy, and some for meer covetousness without need.

By these distinctions the case may be answered by Men that are judicious and impartial. As,

I. Affirm. 1. It is lawful for Embassadors to go among Infidels that are sent by Princes or States: Because the publick good must be secured.

2. It is lawful for the Agents of lawful Societies or trading Companies to go (ceteris paribus, the Persons being capable:) Because Trade must be promoted which tendeth to the common good of all Countreys.

3. It is not only lawful, but one of the best works in the World, for fit persons to go on a design to convert the poor Infidels and Heathens where they go. Therefore the Preachers of the Gospel should not not be backward, to take any opportunity, as Chaplains to Embaſſadors, or to Factories, &c. to put themſelves in ſuch a way.

4. It is lawful for a Son or Servant (whoſe bonds extend to ſuch a ſervice) to go in obedience to a Superiours command; and Gods ſpecial protection may be truſted in a way of Obedience.

5. It is lawful for one in debt to go that hath probable hopes that way and no other to pay his debts. Becauſe he is a defrauder if he detain other Mens Mony, while a lawful way of repaying it may be taken.

6. It is lawful for a duly qualified Perſon to go in caſe of extream poverty, to be able to live in the World: And that Poverty may be called extream to one that was Nobly born and educated which would be no poverty to one that was bred in beggary.

7. It is lawful for a well qualified Perſon, who deſireth Riches to ſerve God, and to do good with to go in a way of trading, though he be in no poverty or neceſſity himſelf. Becauſe Gods bleſſing on a lawful Trade may be deſired and endeavoured, and he that ſhould do all the good he can, may uſe what lawful means he can to be enabled to do it. And other Mens wants ſhould be to us as our own, and therefore we may endeavour to be able to relieve them.

8. In a time of ſuch Civil War, when a Man knoweth not which ſide to take, it may be better for ſome Men to live abroad; yea, among Infidels.

9. There is little to diſſwade a Man whoſe Trade leadeth him into a Country that is better than his own, or ſo ſottiſh as to have ſmall temptation, and that hath the company of faithful Chriſtians, with which he may openly worſhip God, and privately converſe to his ſpiritual edification.

10. In urgent caſes one may go for a time, where he can have no uſe of publick Church-Worſhip; ſo be it he have private means and opportunities of holy living.

11. It is lawful on leſs occaſions to leave ones own Country in a time of debauchery, when temptations at home are greater than thoſe abroad, or in a time of ſuch perſecution as may lawfully be avoided, than at another time.

12. A ſettled Chriſtian may go more ſafely, and therefore lawfully on ſmaller urgencies, than a young, raw, luſtful, fanciful, unſetled Novice may.

II. Neg. 1. It is not lawful for any one to ſeek Riches or Trade abroad or at home, principally for the Love of Riches, to raiſe himſelf and family to fulneſs, proſperity or dignity; though all this may be deſired when it is a Means to Gods ſervice, and honour, and the publick good, and is deſired principally as ſuch a Means.

2. It is not lawful to go abroad, eſpecially into Infidel or Popiſh Countries, without ſuch a juſtifiable buſineſs, whoſe Commodity will ſuffice to weigh down all the loſſes and dangers of the remove.

3. The dangers and loſſes of the Soul are to be valued much above thoſe of the Body and Eſtate, and cannot be weighed down by any meer corporal commodity.

4. It is leſs dangerous uſually to go among Turks and Heathens (whoſe Religion hath no tempting power to ſeduce Men) than among Socinians, or Papiſts, whoſe errors and ſins are cunningly and learnedly promoted and defended.

5. It is not lawful for Merchants or others for Trade and Love of Wealth or Mony, to ſend poor raw unſetled youths into ſuch Countries where their Souls are like to be notably endangered, either by being deprived of ſuch teaching and Church-helps which they need, or by being expoſed to the dangerous temptations of the place: Becauſe their Souls are of more worth than Mony.

6. It is not lawful therefore for Maſter or Servant to venture his own Soul in ſuch a caſe as this laſt mentioned; that is, ſo far as he is free, and without neceſſity doth it only for commodity ſake.

7. We may not go where we cannot publickly worſhip God, without neceſſity, or ſome inducement from a greater good.

8. The more of theſe hinderances concur, the greater is the ſin: It is therefore a meer willful caſting away of their own Souls; when unfurniſhed unſetled youths (or others like them) ſhall for meer humour, fancy, or covetouſneſs leave ſuch a Land as this, where they have both publick and private helps for their Salvation, and to go among Papiſts, Infidels or Heathens, where talk or ill example is like to endanger them, and no great good can be expected to countervail ſuch a hazard, nor is there any true neceſſity to drive them, and where they cannot publickly worſhip God, no nor openly own the truth, and where they have not ſo much as any private company to converſe with, that is fit to further their preſervation and ſalvation, and all this of their own accord, &c.

Queſt. 2. May a Merchant or Embaſſador leave his Wife, to live abroad. Queſt. 6

Anſw. 1. We muſt diſtinguiſh between what is neceſſitated and what is voluntary, 2. Between what is done by the Wives conſent, and what is done without. 3. Between a Wife that can bear ſuch abſence, and one that cannot. 4. Between a ſhort ſtay, and a long or continued ſtay.

1. The command of the King, or publick neceſſities, may make it lawful, except in a caſe ſo rare as is not to be ſuppoſed (which therefore I ſhall not ſtand to deſcribe.) For though it be a very tender buſineſs to determine a difference between the publick authority or intereſt, and family relations and intereſt, when they are contradictory, and unreconcilable, yet here it ſeemeth to me, that the Prince and publick intereſt may diſpoſe of a Man contrary to the will and intereſt of his Wife: Yea, though it would occaſion the loſs, 1. Of her Chaſtity, 2. Or her underſtanding, 3. Or her Life: And though the Conjugal bond do make Man and Wife to be as one fleſh. For, 1. The King and publick intereſt may oblige a Man to hazard his own Life, and therefore his Wives. In caſe of War, he may be ſent to Sea or beyond Sea, and ſo both leave his Wife (as Uriah did) and venture himſelf. Who ever thought that no Married Man might go to forreign Wars without his Wives conſent? 2. Becauſe as the whole is more noble than the part, ſo he that marrieth obligeth himſelf to his Wife, but on ſuppoſition that he is a member of the Commonwealth, to which he is ſtill more obliged than to her.

2. A Man may for the benefit of his family leave his Wife for Travel or Merchandize, for a time, when they mutually conſent upon good reaſon that it is like to be for their good.

3. He may not leave her either without or with her own conſent, when a greater hurt is like to come by it, than the gain will countervail. I ſhall ſay no more of this, becauſe the reſt may be gathered from what is ſaid in the caſes about duties to Wives, where many other ſuch are handled.

Queſt. 3. Is it lawful for young Gentlemen to travel in other Kingdoms, as part of their education? Queſt. 7. Lege Euryc. Pateani Orat. 9.

Anſw. The many diſtinctions which were laid down for anſwer of the firſt queſtion, muſt be here ſuppoſed, and the anſwer will be moſtly the ſame as to that, and therefore need not be repeated.

1. It is lawful for them to travel that are neceſſarily driven out of their own Country, by perſecution, poverty, or any other neceſſitating cauſe.

2. It is lawful to them that are commanded by their Parents (unleſs in former excepted caſes, which I will not ſtay to name.)

3. It is the more lawful when they travel into Countries as good or better than their own, where they are like to get more good than they could have done at home.

4. It is more lawful to one hat is prudent and firmly setled both in Religion, and in Sobriety, and Temperance, against all temptations which he is like to meet with, than to one that is unfurnished for a due resistance of the temptations of the place to which he goeth.

5. It is more lawful to one that goeth in sober, wise and godly company, or is sent with a wise and faithful Tutor and Overseer, than to leave young unsetled Persons to themselves.

6. In a word, It is lawful when there is no rational probability, that they will not only get more good than hurt (for that will not make it lawful,) but also more good than they could probably have other ways attained.

II. But the too ordinary course of young Gentlemens travels out of England now practised, I take to be but a most dangerous hazarding, if not a plain betraying them to utter undoing, and to make them afterwards the plagues of their Country, and the instruments of the common calamity. For, 1. They are ordinarily sent into Countries far worse and more dangerous than their own, where the temptations are stronger than they are fit to deal with: Into some Countries where they are tempted to sensuality, and into some where they are tempted to Popery or Infidelity. In some Countries they learn to drink Wine instead of Beer; and arising from the smaller sort to the stronger, if they turn not drunkards, they contract that appetite to Wine and strong drink, which shall prove (as Clemens Alexandrinus calleth gluttony and tipling,) a Throat-madness, and a Belly-devil, and keep them in the sin of gulosity all their days. And in some Countries they shall learn the art of gluttony, to pamper their guts in curious, costly, uncouth fashions, and to dress themselves in novel fantastical garbs, and to make a business of adorning themselves, and setting themselves forth with proud and procacious fancies and affections, to be lookt upon as comely Persons, to the eyes of others. In some Countries they shall learn to waste their precious hours in Stage-plays, and vain spectacles, and ceremonies, attendances and visits, and to equalize their life with death, and to live to less use and benefit to the World, than the Horse that carrieth them. In most Countries they shall learn either to prate against Godliness, as the humor of a few melancholy fools, and be wiser than to believe God, or obey him, or be saved; or at least to grow indifferent and cold in holy affections and practices: For when they shall see Papists and Protestants, Lutherans and Calvinists of contrary minds, and hear them reproaching and condemning one another, this cooleth their zeal to all Religion, as seeming but a matter of uncertainty and contention: And when they also see, how the wise and holy are made a scorn in one Country, as Bigots and Hugonots, and how the Protestants are drnnkards and worldlings in another Country, and how few in the World have any true sense and savour of sound and practical Religion, and of a truly holy and heavenly Life, (as those few they are seldom so happy as to converse with) this first accustometh themselves to a neglect of holiness, and then draweth their minds to a more low indifferent opinion of it, and to think it unnecessary to Salvation. For they will not believe that so few shall be saved as they find to be holy in the World: And then they grow to think it but a fancy and a troubler of the world.

And it addeth to their temptation, that they are obliged by the carnal ends which drew them out to be in the worst and most dangerous company and places; that is, at Princes Courts, and among the splendid gallantry of the World: For it is the fashions of the great ones which they must see, and of which when they come home they must be able to discourse: So that they must travel to the Pest-houses of Pomp and Lust, of Idleness, Gluttony, Drunkenness, and Pride, of Atheism, Irreligiousness and Impiety, that they may be able to Glory, what acquaintance they have got of the grandeur and gallantry of the Suburbs of Hell, that they may represent the way to damnation delectable and honourable to others, as well as to themselves.

Read Bishop Hall's Quo Vadis on this subject.

But the greatest danger is of corrupting their Intellectuals, by converse with deceivers where they come; either Infidels or jugling Jesuites and Fryars: For when those are purposely trained up to deceive, how easie is it for them to silence raw unfurnished Novices (yea, even when all their five senses must be captivated, in the Doctrine of Transubstantiation.) And when they are silenced they must yield: Or at least they have deluding stories enough of the Antiquity, Universality, Infallibility, Unity of their Church, with a multitude of Lyes of Luther, Calvin, Zuinglius, and other Reformers, to turn their hearts and make them yield. But yet that they may be capable of doing them the more service, they are instructed for a time to dissemble their perversion, and to serve the Roman Pride and Faction in a Protestant garb and name.

Especially when they come to Rome, and see its glory, and the monuments of antiquity, and are allured with their splendor and civilities, and made believe that all the reports of their Inquisitions and Cruelties are false, this furthereth the fascination of unexperienced youths.

2. And usually all this while, the most of them lay by all serious studies, and all constant employment, and make idleness, and converse with the idle or with tempters to be their daily work. And what a mind is like to come to, which is but one half year or twelve month accustomed to idleness, and vain spectacles, and to a pleasing converse with idle and luxurious Persons, it is easie for a Man of any acquaintance with the World, or with humane nature to conjecture.

3. And they go forth in notable peril of their health or lives. Some fall into Feavors, and die by change of air and drinks: Some fall into quarrels in Taverns, or about their Whores, and are murdered. Some few prove so stedfast against all the temptations of the Papists, that it is thought conducible to the holy cause, that they should be killed in pretence of some quarrel, or be poysoned: Some by drinking Wine, do contract such sickness, as makes their lives uncomfortable to the last. And the brains of many are so heated by it, that they fall mad.

4. And all this danger is principally founded in the quality of the Persons sent to travel: Which are ordinarily empty Lads, between eighteen and twenty four years of age, which is the time of the Devils chief advantage; when naturally they are prone to those Vices which prove the ruin of the most, though you take the greatest care of them that you can. 1. Their lust is then in the highest and most untamed rage. 2. Their appetites to pleasing meats and drinks are then strongest. 3. Their frolick inclinations to sports and recreations are then greatest. 4. And ignorant and procacious Pride beginneth then to stir. 5. All things that are most vile and vain, are then apt to seem excellent to them, by reason of the novelty of the matter as to them, who never saw such things before, and by reason of the false esteem of those carnal Persons, to whose pomp, and consequently to whose judgment, they would be conformed. 6. And they are at that age exceedingly inclined to think all their own apprehensions to be right, and to be very confident of their own conceptions, and wise in their own eyes: Because their juvenile intellect being then in the most affecting activity, it seemeth still clear and sure to them, because it so much affects themselves. 7. But above all, they are yet unfurnished of almost all that solid Wisdom, and setled Holiness, and large Experience, which is most necessary to their improvement of their travels, and to their resistance of all these temptations. Alas, how few of them are able to deal with a Jesuite, or hold hold fast their Religion against deceivers? If the very Vices, the Ambition, the Carnal Policies and Pomps, the filthiness and worldliness of the Roman Clergy did not become a preservative to Mens minds, against the Temptations which would draw them to their way, and if the Atheism, Infidelity, Whoredoms, and Prophaneness of Papists did not become Antidotes, how few were like to return uninfected? And because the Jesuites know that they can never take this stumbling block out of the way, therefore too many of them have thought best to debauch those first whom they would Proselyte, and to reconcile them first to Plays, and Drunkenness, and Whoredoms, that so the dislike of these may not hinder their reconciliation with the Kingdom of Rome; yea, that a seeming necessity of a Priests Pardon, may make it seem necessary to become their subjects.

And as unfurnished are these young travellers usually to resist the temptations to this sensuality, lust and pomp, as those of Popery: So that they are perfidiously sent into a Pest-house, when they are in the greatest disposition to be infected. And if they come not home drunkards, gluttons, gamesters, idle, prodigal, proud, infidels, irreligious, or Papists, its little thanks to those perfidious Parents, who thus perform their promise for them in Baptism, by sending them to Satans Schools and University to be educated.

Whereas if they were but kept to their due studies, and under a holy government at home, till they were furnished with sound religious knowledge, and till they were rooted in holiness, and in a Love to a pious sober Life, and till they had got a setled hatred of intemperance and all sin, and till they had a Map of the Places, Persons and Affairs of the World well imprinted on their Minds by study and due information, then necessary travel would be more safe: And then they would be in a capacity to learn Wisdom from other Mens folly, and virtue from other Mens vice, and piety from other Mens impiety: Which Novices are rather apt to imitate.

5. And in the mean time the loss of all the helps which they should have at home, doth greatly tend to their destruction. For they oft travel into Countries, where they shall have no publick worship of God which is lawful, or which they understand: Or if they have, it is usually cold preaching, and dull praying, when they have need of the best, and all too little. And they have seldom such pious society to edify and quicken them by private converse, as they have or might have here at home: And seldom come into such well ordered religious families. And if humane nature be prone to infection by temptations, and so averse to holiness, that all means is too little, and even in the best families, folly and sensuality and a distaste of Godliness often thrives (as unsown Weeds overspread the Garden, where with great cost and labour only better things were sowed,) What then but sin and misery can be expected from those that by their own Parents are banished from their native Country, (not so well as into a Wilderness, but) into the pestilent infected Countries of the World?

Congressus sapientum confert prudentiam: non montes, non maria. Erasm.

I would ask those Parents that plead for this crime and cruelty as a kindness: Are you no wiser or better your selves, than the company into which you send your Children? Can you teach them and educate them no better, nor give them better examples than they are like to have abroad? Can you set them on no better work, for the improvement of their time? If not, Why do you not repent of this your shame and misery, and reform your selves? If you can, why will you then betray your Children? Or if you cannot, are there no Schools, no learned and pious Men, no religious families and company at home, in your own Land, where you might place them to better advantage, than thus to expose them to the Tempter? Undoubtedly there are; and such as may be had at cheaper rates.

6. And it is not the smallest part of the guilt and danger, that they are sent abroad without due oversight and conduct. They that do but get them some sober or honest servant to attend them, or some sober companion, think they have done well: When as they had need of some Divine or Tutor of great Learning, Piety, Prudence and Experience, whom they will reverence and obey, that may take the oversight of them, and be ready to answer any Sophister that would seduce them. But the charge of this is thought too great, for the safety of their own Children, whom they themselves expose to a necessity of it.

I know that carnal minds will distaste all this, and have Objections enough against it, and reasons of their own, to make it seem a duty to betray and undo their Childrens Souls, and to break their promise made for them in Baptism, [All this is but our preciseness: They must have experience and know the World, or else they will be contemptible Tenebriones or Owls? When ever they go it will be a temptation, and such they must have at home; there is no other part of their age so fit, or that can be spared, and we must trust God with them where ever they are, and they that will be bad, will be bad in one place as well as another; and many are as bad that stay at home.] And thus quos perdere vult Jupiter hos dementat: Yea, the poor Children, and Common-wealth, must suffer for such Parents sottish folly: And well saith Solomon, Prov. 28. 11. The rich man is wise in his own conceit. And because it is not Reason indeed but Pride, and the Rich Disease and Carnality which is here to be confuted, I shall not honour them with a distinct particular answer; but only tell them, if all companies be alike, send them to Bedlam or to a Whore-house. If all means be alike, let them be Janizaries, and bred up where Christ is scorned: If you think they need but little helps, and little watching, it seems you never gave them more: And it's pity you should have Children, before you know what a Man is, and how much nature is corrupted, and how much is needful to its recovery: And its pity that you dedicated them to God in Baptism, before you believed Christ, and knew what you did? And engaged them to renounce the World, the Flesh and the Devil, under a Crucified Christ, while you purposed like Hypocrites to train them in the School and Service of the World, the Flesh, and the Devil, and in the contempt of the Cross of Christ, or of a holy mortified Life. And if all ages be alike, and Novices be equal to experienced Persons, let the Scholars rule their Master, and let Boys be Parliament Men and Judges, and let them be your Guides at home? And if acquaintance with Courtship and the Customs of the World, and the reputation of such acquaintance, be worth the hazarding of their Souls, renounce God, and give up your names to Mammon, and be not such paultry Hypocrites, as to profess that you believe the Scriptures, and stand to your Baptismal Vows, and place your hope in a Crucified Christ, and your happiness in Gods favour and the life to come. And if the preaching of the Gospel, and all such religious helps be unnecessary to your unsettled Children, dissemble not by going to Church, as if you took them to be necessary to your selves. In a word, I say as Elias to the Israelites, Why halt ye between two opinions? If God be God, follow him, if the World be God, and Pride and Sensuality and the Worlds applause be your felicity, follow it, and let it be your Childrens portion. Do you not see more wise, and learned, and holy, and serviceable Persons among us, proportionably in Church and State, that were never sent for an education among the Papists and prophane, than of such as were?

But I will proceed to the Directions which are necessary ceſſary to thoſe that muſt or will needs go abroad, either as Merchants, Factors, or as Travellers.

Dir. 1. Direct. 1. Be ſure that you go not without a clear warrant from God; which muſt be (all things laid together) a great probability, in the Judgement of impartial, experienced, wiſe Men, that you may get or do more good than you were like to have done at home. For if you go ſinfully without a Call or Warrant, you put your ſelf out of Gods protection, as much as in you is, that is, you forfeit it: And whatever plague befalls you, it will arm your accuſing Conſciences to make it double.

Dir. 2. Direct. 2. Send with your Children that travel ſome ſuch pious, prudent Tutor or Overſeer as is afore deſcribed: And get them, or your Apprentices into as good company as poſſibly you can.

Dir. 3. Direct. 3. Send them as the laſt part of all their Education, when they are ſettled in knowledge, ſound Doctrine and Godlineſs, and have firſt got ſuch acquaintance with the ſtate of the World, as reading Maps, and Converſation, and Diſcourſe can help them to: And not while they are young, and raw, and uncapable of ſelf-defence, or of due improving what they ſee. And thoſe that are thus prepared, will have no great luſt or fancy to wander, and loſe their time, without neceſſity: For they will know, that there is nothing better (conſiderably) to be ſeen abroad, than is at home: That in all Countreys, Houſes are Houſes, and Cities are Cities, and Trees are Trees, and Beaſts are Beaſts, and Men are Men, and Fools are Fools, and Wiſe Men are Wiſe, and Learned Men are Learned, and Sin is Sin, and Virtue is Virtue. And theſe things are but the ſame abroad as at home: And that a Grave is every where a Grave, and you are travelling towards it, which way ever you go. And happy is he that ſpendeth his little time ſo, as may do God beſt ſervice, and beſt prepare him for the ſtate of immortality.

Dir. 4. Direct. 4. If experience of their youthful Luſt and Pride, and vicious folly, or unſettled dangerous ſtate, do tell you plainly, that your Child or Apprentice is unfit for travel, venture them not upon it, either for the carnal Ornaments of Education, or for your worldly gain. For Souls that coſt the blood of Chriſt, are more precious, than to be ſold at ſo low a rate: And eſpecially by thoſe Parents and Maſters that are doubly obliged to love them, and to guide them in the way to Heaven, and muſt be anſwerable for them.

Dir. 5. Direct. 5. Chooſe thoſe Countreys for your Children to travel in, which are ſoundeſt in Doctrine and of beſt Example, and where they may get more good than hurt: and venture them not needleſly into the places and company of greateſt danger; eſpecially among the Jeſuits and Fryars, or ſubtile Hereticks, or Enemies of Chriſt.

Dir. 6. Direct. 6. Study before you go, what particular Temptations you are like to meet with, and ſtudy well for particular Preſervatives againſt them all: As you will not go into a place infected with the Plague, without an Antidote. It is no ſmall task, to get a mind prepared for travel.

Dir. 7. Direct. 7. Carry with you ſuch Books as are fitteſt for your uſe, both for preſervation and edification: As to preſerve you from Popery, Drelincourts, and Mr. Pools ſmall Manual: for which uſe my Key for Catholicks, and Safe Religion, and Sheet againſt Popery, may not be uſeleſs. And Dr. Challoners Credo Eccleſiam Catholicam is ſhort and very ſtrong. To preſerve you againſt Infidelity, Vander Meulin in Latine, and Grotius, and in Engliſh, my Reaſons of the Chriſtian Religion, may not be unfit. For your practice, the Bible and the Practice of Piety, and Mr. Scudders Daily Walk, and Mr. Reyners Directions, and Dr. Ames Caſes of Conſcience.

Dir. 8. Direct. 8. Get acquaintance with the moſt able Reformed Divines, in the places where you travel and make uſe of their frequent converſe, for your edification and defence. For it is the wiſeſt and beſt Men in all Countreys where you come, that muſt be profitable to you, if any.

Dir. 9. Direct. 9. Set your ſelves in a way of regular ſtudy if you are Travellors, as if you were at home, and on a courſe of regular employment if you are Tradeſmen, and make not meer wandring and gazing upon Novelties, your Trade and Buſineſs: But redeem your time as laboriouſly as you would do in the moſt ſettled life. For time is precious, where ever you be: And it muſt be diligence every where that muſt cauſe your proficiency; For Place and Company will not do it, without your labour. It is not an Univerſity that will make a ſluggiſh Perſon wiſe, nor a foreign Land that will furniſh a ſenſual ſot with Wiſdom: Cœlum non animum mutant qui trans mare currunt. There is more ado neceſſary to make you wiſe, or bring you to Heaven, than to go long Journeys, or ſee many People.

Dir. 10. Direct. 10. Avoid temptations: If you acquaint your ſelves with the humours and ſinful opinions and faſhions of the time and places where you are, let it be but as the Lacodæmonians called out their Children to ſee a drunkard, to hate the ſin: Therefore ſee them, but taſte them not, as you would do by poiſon or loathſom things. Once or twice ſeeing a folly and ſin is enough. If you do it frequently, cuſtome will abate your deteſtation, and do much to reconcile you to it.

Dir. 11. Direct. 11. Set your ſelves to do all the good you can to the miſerable people in the places where you come. Furniſh your ſelves with the aforeſaid Books and Arguments, not only to preſerve your ſelves, but alſo to convince poor Infidels and Papiſts. And pity their Souls, as thoſe that believe, that there is indeed a life to come; where Happineſs and Miſery will ſhew the difference between the godly and the wicked. Eſpecially Merchants and Factors, who live conſtantly among the poor ignorant Chriſtians, Armenians, Greeks, Papiſts, who will hear them; and among Heathens (in Indoſtan and elſe where) and Mahometans (eſpecially the Perſians, who allow a liberty of diſcourſe.) But above all, the Chaplains of the ſeveral Embaſſies and Factories. O what an opportunity have they to ſow the ſeeds of Chriſtianity among the Heathen Nations? and to make known Chriſt to the Infidel people where they come! And how heavy a guilt will lie on them that ſhall neglect it? And how will the great Induſtry of the Jeſuits riſe up in Judgment againſt them and condemn them?

Dir. 12. Direct. 12. The more you are deprived of the benefit of Gods publick Worſhip, the more induſtrious muſt you be, in reading Scripture and good Books, and in ſecret Prayer, and Meditation, and in the improvement of any one godly Friend, that doth accompany you, to make up your loſs, and to be inſtead of publick means. It will be a great comfort among Infidels, or Papiſts, or ignorant Greeks, or profane People, to read ſound, and holy, and ſpiritual Books, and to confer with ſome one godly Friend, and to meditate on the ſweet and glorious Subjects, which from Earth and Heaven are ſet before us; and to ſolace our ſelves in the praiſes of God, and to pour out our ſuits before him.

Dir. 13. Direct. 13. And that your work may be well done, be ſure that you have right ends; and that it be not to pleaſe a ranging fancy, nor a proud, vain mind, nor a Covetous deſire of being Rich or high, that you go abroad: But that you do it purpoſely and principally to ſerve God abroad, and to be able to ſerve him the better when you come home, with your Wit, and Experience, and Eſtates. If ſincerely you go for this end, and not for the Love of Money, you may expect the greater comfort.

Peregrinatio omnis obſcura & fordida eſt iis quorum induſtria in patria poteſt eſſe illuſtris. Cicer.

Dir. 14. Direct. 14. Stay abroad no longer than your lawful ends and work do require: And when you come home, let let it be ſeen that you have ſeen ſin, that you might hate it; and that by the obſervation of the errors and evils of the World, you love ſound doctrine, ſpiritual worſhip and holy, ſober, and righteous living, better than you did before; and that you are the better reſolved and furniſhed for a godly, exemplary, fruitful Life.

Note. One thing more I will warn ſome Parents of; who ſend their Sons to travel to keep them from untimely marrying, leſt they have part of their eſtate too ſoon: That there are other means better than this, which Prudence may find out: If they would keep them low, from fulneſs and idleneſs, and bad company (which a wiſe ſelf-denying diligent Man may do, but another cannot) and engage them to as much ſtudy and buſineſs (conjunct) as they can well perform, and when they muſt needs marry, let it be done with prudent careful choice; and learn themſelves to live ſomewhat lower, that they may ſpare that which their Son muſt have, this courſe would be better than that hazardous one in queſtion.

CHAP. XX.

Motives and Directions againſt Oppreſſion.

§. 1. OPpreſſion is the injuring of inferiors, who are unable to reſiſt, or to right themſelves: When Men uſe Power to bear down Right. Yet all is not oppreſſion which is ſo called by the poor, or by inferiors that ſuffer: For they are apt to be partial in their own cauſe as well as others. There may be injuſtice in the expectations of the poor, as well as the actions of the rich. Some think they are oppreſſed, if they be juſtly puniſhed for their crimes: And ſome ſay, they are oppreſſed, if they have not their Wills, and unjuſt deſires, and may not be ſuffered to injure their Superiors: And many of the poor do call all that Oppreſſion, which they ſuffer from any that are above them, as if it were enough to prove it an injury, becauſe a rich Man doth it: But yet Oppreſſion is a very common and a heinous ſin.

In omni certamine qui opulentior eſt, etiamſi accipit injuriam, tamen quia plus poteſt, facere videtur. Saluſt. in Jugurth.

§. 2. There are as many ways of oppreſſing others, as there are advantages to Men of power againſt them. But the principal are theſe following.

§. 3. 1. The moſt common and heinous ſort is the malignant injuries and cruelties of the ungodly againſt Men that will not be as indifferent in the matters of God and Salvation as themſelves, and that will not be of their opinions in Religion, and be as bold with Sin, and as careleſs of their Souls as they. Theſe are hated, reproached, ſlandered, abuſed, and ſome way or other perſecuted commonly where ever they live throughout the World. But of this ſort of Oppreſſion I have ſpoken before.

§. 4. 2. A ſecond ſort is the Oppreſſion of the Subjects by their Rulers; either by unrighteous Laws, or cruel Executions, or unjuſt Impoſitions or Exactions, laying on the People greater Taxes, tributes or ſervitude, than the common good requireth, and than they are able well to bear. Thus did Pharoah oppreſs the Iſraelites, till their groans brought down Gods Vengeance on him. But I purpoſely forbear to meddle with the ſins of Magiſtrates.

§. 5. 3. Soldiers alſo are too commonly guilty of the moſt inhuman barbarous Oppreſſions; plundering the poor Country-men, and domineering over them, and robbing them of the fruit of their hard labours, and of the bread which they ſhould maintain their families with, and taking all that they can lay hold on as their own. But (unleſs it be a few that are a wonder in the World) this ſort of Men are ſo barbarous and inhumane, that they will neither read nor regard any counſel that I ſhall give them. (No Man deſcribeth them better than Eraſmus.

§. 6. 4. The Oppreſſion of Servants by their Maſters I have ſaid enough to before, and among us, where Servants are free to change for better Maſters, it is not the moſt common ſort of Oppreſſion; but rather ſervants are uſually negligent and unfaithful, becauſe they know that they are free: (Except in the caſe of Apprentices.)

§. 7. 5. It is too common a ſort of Oppreſſion for the Rich in all places to domineer too inſolently over the poor, and force them to follow their wills, and to ſerve their intereſt, be it right or wrong: So that it is rare to meet with a poor Man that dare diſpleaſe the rich, though it be in a cauſe where God and Conſcience do require it. If a Rich Man wrong them, they dare not ſeek their remedy at Law, becauſe he will tire them out by the advantage of his friends and wealth; and either carry it againſt them, be his cauſe never ſo unjuſt, or lengthen the ſuit till he hath undone them, and forced them to ſubmit to his oppreſſing will.

§. 8. 6. Eſpecially unmerciful Landlords are the common and ſore oppreſſors of the Country-men: If a few Men can but get Mony enough to purchaſe all the Land in a Country, they think that they may do with their own as they liſt, and ſet ſuch hard bargains of it to their Tenants, that they are all but as their Servants, yea, and live a more troubleſome Life than ſervants do: When they have laboured hard all the Year, they can ſcarce ſcrape enough to pay their Landlords Rent: Their neceſſities are ſo urgent, that they have not ſo much as leiſure, to pray Morning or Evening in their Families, or to read the Scriptures; or any good Book; nor ſcarce any room in their thoughts for any holy things: Their minds are ſo diſtracted with neceſſities and cares, that even on the Lords Day, or at a time of Prayer, they can hardly keep their minds intent upon the ſacred work which they have in hand: If the freeſt minds have much ado to keep their thoughts in ſerioufneſs and order, in meditation, or in the worſhipping of God; how hard muſt it needs be to a poor oppreſſed Man, whoſe body is tired with wearifom labours, and his mind diſtracted with continual cares, how to pay his rent, and how to have food and rayment for his family? How unfit is ſuch a troubled diſcontented Perſon, to live in thankfulneſs to God, and in his joyful Praiſes? Abundance of the voluptuous great ones of the World, do uſe their Tenants and Servants, but as their Beaſts, as if they had been made only to labour and toil for them, and it were their chief felicity to fulfil their will, and live upon their favour.

§. 9. Direct. 1. The principal means to overcome this ſin, is to underſtand the greatneſs of it. For the Fleſh perſwadeth carnal Men, to judge of it according to their ſelfiſh intereſt and not according to the intereſt of others, nor according to the true principles of Charity and Equity; and ſo they juſtifie themſelves in their oppreſſion. Dir. 1.

§. 10. 1. Conſid. That oppreſſion is a ſin not only contrary to Chriſtian Charity and Self-denial, but even to Humanity it ſelf. We are all made of one earth, and have Souls of the ſame kind: There is as near a kindred betwixt all Mankind, as a ſpecifical identity: As between one Sheep, one Dove, one Angel and another. As between ſeveral drops of the ſame water, and ſeveral ſparks of the ſame fire: Which have a natural tendency to Union with each other. And as it is an inhuman thing for one Brother to oppreſs another, or one Member of the ſame body to ſet up a proper intereſts of its own, and make all the reſt, how painfully ſoever, to ſerve that private intereſt: So it is for thoſe Men who are Children of the ſame Creator. Much more for them who account themſelves member of the ſame

Re-

Redeemer, and Brethren in Chriſt by grace and regeneration, with thoſe whom they oppreſs. Mal. 2. 10. Have we not all one Father? Hath not one God created us? Why do we deal treacherouſly every man againſt his brother? By profaning the Covenant of our Fathers? If we muſt not lye to one another, becauſe we are members of one another. Epheſ. 4. 25. And if all the members muſt have the ſame care of one another, 1 Cor. 12. 25. Surely then they muſt not oppreſs one another.

Pſal. 145. Matth. 5. Lam. 3. §. 11. 2. An Oppreſſor is an Anti-chriſt and an Anti-god, He is contrary to God, who delighteth to do good, and whoſe bounty maintaineth all the World: Who is kind to his enemies, and cauſeth his Sun to ſhine, and his Rain to fall on the juſt and on the unjuſt: And even when he afflicteth doth it as unwillingly, delighteth not to grieve the Sons of Men. He is contrary to Jeſus Chriſt, who gave himſelf a ranſom for his enemies, and made himſelf a Curſe to redeem them from the Curſe, and condeſcended in his incarnation to the nature of Man, and in his paſſion to the Croſs and ſuffering which they deſerved: and being rich and Lord of all, yet made himſelf poor, that we by his Poverty might be made rich. He endured the Croſs and deſpiſed the ſhame, and made himſelf as of no reputation, accounting it his honour and joy to be the Saviour of Mens Souls, even of the poor and deſpiſed of the World: And theſe Oppreſſors live as if they were made to afflict the juſt, and to rob them of Gods mercies, and to make croſſes for other Men to bear, and to tread on their Brethren as ſtepping ſtones of their own advancement. The Holy Ghoſt is the Comforter of the Juſt and Faithful. And theſe Men live as if it were their Calling to deprive Men of their comfort.

§. 12. 3. Yea, an Oppreſſor is not only the Agent of the Devil, but his Image: It is the Devil that is the deſtroyer, and the devourer, who maketh it his buſineſs to undo Men, and to bring them into miſery and diſtreſs. He is the grand oppreſſor of the World: Yet in this he is far ſhort of the malignity of Men-devils, 1. That he doth it not by force and violence, but by deceit, and hurteth no Man till he hath procured his own conſent to ſin; whereas our Oppreſſors do it by their brutiſh force and power. 2. And the Devil deſtroyeth Men, who are not his Brethren, nor of the ſame kind! But theſe Oppreſſors never ſtick at the violating of ſuch relations.

§. 13. 4. Oppreſſion is a ſin that greatly ſerveth the Devil, to the damning of Mens Souls, as well as to the afflicting of their Bodies. And it is not a few, but Millions that are undone by it. For as I ſhewed before, it taketh up Mens mind and time ſo wholly, to get them a poor living in the World, that they have neither mind nor time for better things. They are ſo troubled about many things, that the one thing needful is laid aſide. All the labours of many a worthy able Paſtor, are fruſtrated by Oppreſſors: To ſay nothing of the far greateſt part of the World, where the tyranny and oppreſſion of Heathen Infidels and Mahometan Princes, keepeth out the Goſpel, and the means of Life; nor yet of any other Perſecutors: If we exhort a Servant to read the Scriptures, and call upon God, and think of his everlaſting ſtate, he telleth us that he hath no time to do it, but when his weary body muſt have reſt: If we deſire the Maſters of Families to inſtruct and catechiſe their Children and Servants, and pray with them, and read the Scriptures and other good Books to them, they tell us the ſame) that they have no time, but when they ſhould ſleep, and that on the Lords day their tired bodies, and careful minds, are unfit to attend and ply ſuch work: So that neceſſity quieteth their Conſcience in their ignorance and neglect of heavenly things, and maketh them think it only the work of gentlemen and rich Men, who have leiſure (but are further alienated from it by proſperity, than theſe are by their poverty:) And thus Oppreſſion deſtroyeth Religion, and the Peoples Souls as well as their Eſtates.

§. 14. 5. Oppreſſion further endangereth both the Souls of Men, and the publick Peace, and the ſafety of Princes, by tempting the poor multitude into diſcontents, ſedition and inſurrections: Every Man is naturally a lover of himſelf above other: And the poor as well as the rich and Rulers, have an intereſt of their own which ruleth them: And they will hardly honour, or love, or think well of them by whom they ſuffer! It is as natural almoſt for a Man under oppreſſion, to be diſcontented and complain, as for a Man in a Feavor to complain of ſickneſs, heat and thirſt. No Kingdom on earth is ſo holy and happy as to have all or moſt of the Subjects ſuch confirmed eminent Saints, as will be contented to be undone, and will love and honour thoſe that undo them. Therefore Men muſt be taken as they are: If Oppreſſion maketh wiſe men mad, Eccleſ. 7. 7. much more the multitude, who are far from wiſdom. Miſery maketh Men deſperate, when they think that they cannot be much worſe than they are. How many Kingdoms have been thus fired, (as wooden wheels will be when one part rubbeth too hard and long upon the other.) Yea, if the Prince be never ſo good and blameleſs, the cruelty of the Nobles and the Rich Men of the Land, may have the ſame effects. And in theſe combuſtions, the Peace of the Kingdom, the Lives and Souls of the ſeditious are made a ſacrifice to the luſts of the Oppreſſors.

Dir. 3. §. 15. Direct. 2. Conſider with fear how Oppreſſion turneth the groans and cries of the poor, to the God of revenge againſt the Oppreſſors. And go to that Man that hath the tears and prayers of Oppreſſed Innocents, ſounding the alarm to the vindictive Juſtice, to awake for their relief. And ſhall not God avenge his own elect, which cry day and night to him, though he bear long with them? I tell you, that he will avenge them ſpeedily, Luke 18. 7, 8. The Lord will be a refuge to the oppreſſed, Pſal. 9. 9. To judge the fatherleſs and the oppreſſed, that the man of the earth may no more oppreſs, Pſal. 10. 18. The Lord executeth righteouſneſs and judgment for all that are oppreſſed, Pſal. 103. 6. & 146. 7. Yea, God is doubly engaged to be revenged upon Oppreſſors, and hath threatned a ſpecial execution of his judgment againſt them above moſt other ſinners: Partly as it is an act of mercy and relief to the oppreſſed; ſo that the matter of threatning and vengeance to the oppreſſor, is the matter of Gods promiſe and favour to the ſufferers: And partly as it is an act of his vindictive Juſtice againſt ſuch as ſo heinouſly break his Laws. The Oppreſſor hath indeed his time of Power, and in that time the oppreſſed ſeem to be forſaken and neglected of God; as if he did not hear their cries: But when his patience hath endured the tyranny of the proud, and his wiſdom hath tryed the patience of the ſufferers, to the determined time; how ſpeedily and terribly then doth vengeance overtake the Oppreſſors, and make them warnings to thoſe that follow them. In the hour of the wicked and power of darkneſs Chriſt himſelf was oppreſſed and afflicted, Iſa. 53. 7. and in his humiliation his judgment was taken away, Acts 8. But how quickly did the deſtroying revenge overtake thoſe bloody Zealots, and how grievous is the ruin which they lye under to this day, which they thought by that ſame murder to have ſcaped? Solomon ſaith, Eccl. 4. 1. He conſidered all the oppreſſions that are under the Sun, and behold the tears of ſuch as were oppreſſed, and they had no comforter; and on the ſide of the oppreſſors there was power, but they had no comforter. Which made him praiſe the dead and the unborn. But yet he that goeth with David into the Sanctuary, and ſeeth the end of the Oppreſſors, ſhall perceive them set in slippery places, and tumbling down to destruction in a moment, Psal. 37. & 73. The Israelites in Ægypt seemed long to groan and cry in vain; but when the determinate time of their deliverance came, God saith, I have surely seen the affliction of my People, and have heard their cry by reason of their Task masters; for I know their sorrows: and I am come down to deliver them——Behold, the cry of the Children of Israel is come up unto me, and I have also seen the oppression wherewith the Ægyptians oppress them. Exod. 3. 7, 8, 9. Deut. 26. 6, 7. The Ægyptians evily intreated us, and laid upon us hard bondage, and when we cried to the Lord God of our Fathers, the Lord heard our voice, and looked on our affliction, and our labour, and our oppression. See Psal. 107. 39, 40, 41, 42. So Psal. 12. 5, 6. For the oppression of the poor, for the sighing of the needy, now will I arise, saith the Lord; I will set him in safety from him that puffeth at him (or would ensnare him.) Thou shalt keep them, O Lord, thou shalt preserve them from this generation for ever. Trust not therefore in oppression, Psal. 62. 10. for God is the avenger and his plagues shall revenge the injuries of the oppressed.

Dir. 3. §. 16. Direct. 3. Remember what an odious name Oppressors commonly leave behind them upon Earth. No sort of Men are mentioned by posterity with greater hatred and contempt. For the interest of Mankind directeth them hereunto, and may prognosticate it, as well as the Justice of God. However the power of proud Oppressors, may make Men afraid of speaking to their faces what they think, yet those that are out of their reach, will pour out the bitterness of their Souls against them. And when once death hath tied their cruel hands, or any judgement of God hath cast them down, and knockt out their teeth, how freely will the distressed vent their grief; and fame will not be afraid to deliver their ugly Picture to posterity, according to their desert. Methinks therefore that even Pride it self should be a great help to banish oppression from the World? What an honourable name hath a Trajan, a Titus, an Antonine, an Alexander Severus? And what an odious name hath a Nero, a Caligula, a Commodus, a D' Alva, &c. Most proud Men affect to be extolled, and to have a glorious name survive them when they are dead: And yet they take the course to make their Memory abominable; So much doth Sin contradict and disappoint the sinners hopes!

Dir. 4. §. 17. Direct. 4. Be not straugers to the condition or complaints of any that are your inferiours. It is the misery of many Princes and Nobles, that they are guarded about with such as keep all the lamentations of their Subjects, and Tenants from their ears; or represent them only as the murmurings of unquiet, discontented Men: So that Superiours shall know no more of their inferiours case than their attendants please; nor no more of the reproach that falleth upon themselves. Their case is to be pitied; but the case of their inferiours more: (For it is their own wilful choice which hath imprisoned their understandings, with such informers; and it is their unexcusable negligence, which keepeth them from seeking truer information.) A good Landlord will be familiar with the meanest of his Tenants, and will encourage them freely to open their complaints, and will labour to inform himself, who is in poverty and distress, and how it cometh to pass; that when he hath heard all, he may understand, whether it be his own oppression or his Tenants fault, that is the cause: When proud self seeking Men disdain such inferiour converse, and if they have servants that do but tell them their Tenants have a good bargain, and are murmuring, unthrifty idle Persons, they believe them without any more enquiry; and in negligent ignorance oppress the poor.

Dir. 5. §. 18. Direct. 5. Mortifie your own lusts and sinful curiosity, which maketh you think that you need so much, as tempteth you to get it by oppressing others. Know well how little is truly necessary, and how little nature (well taught) is contented with? and what a priviledge it is to need but little? Pride and Curiosity are an insatiable gulf. Their daily trouble seemeth to them a necessary accommodation. Such abundance must be laid out on superfluous Recreations, Buildings, Ornaments, Furniture, Equipage, Attendants, Entertainments, Visitations, Braveries, and a World of need-nots, (called by the names of handsomeness, cleanliness, neatness, conveniencies, delights, usefulness, honour, civilities, comeliness, &c.) So much doth carnal concupiscence, pride and curiosity thus devour, that hundreds of the poor must be oppressed to maintain it: And many a Man that hath many score or hundred Tenants, who with all their families daily toil to get him provision for his fleshly lusts, doth find at the years end, that all will hardly serve the turn; but this greedy devourer could find room for more: when one of his poor Tenants could live and maintain all his family comfortably, if he had but so much as his Landlord bestoweth upon one suit of Cloaths, or one proud Entertainment, or one Horse, or one pack of Hounds. I am not perswading the highest to level their garb and expences equal with the lowest: But mortifie Pride, Curiosity and Gluttony; and you will find less need to oppress the poor, or to feed your concupiscence with the sweat and groans of the afflicted.

Dir. 6. §. 19. Direct. 6. Be not the sole Judge of your own actions in a controverted case; but if any complain of you, hear the Judgment of others that are wise and impartial in the case. For it is easie to misjudge where self-interest is concerned.

Dir. 7. §. 20. Direct. 7. Love your poor brethren as your selves, and delight in their welfare, as if it were your own. And then you will never oppress them willingly; and if you do it ignorantly, you will quickly feel it, and give over upon their just complaint: As you will quickly feel when you hurt your selves, and need no great Exhortation to forbear.

Tit. 2. Cases of Conscience about Oppression, especially of Tenants.

Quest. 1. Is it lawful for a mean Man, who must needs make the best of it, to purchase tenanted Land of a liberal Landlord, who setteth his Tenants a much better penniworth than the buyer can afford. Quest. 1.

Answ. Distinguish. 1. Between a seller who understandeth all this, and one that doth not: 2. Between a Tenant that hath by custom a half title to his easier Rent, and one that hath not: 3. Between a Tenant that consenteth and one that consenteth not: 4 Between buying it when a liberal Man might else have bought it, and buying it when a worse else would have bought it. 5. Between a case of scandal, and of no scandal.

And so I answer. 1. If the Landlord that selleth it, expect that the buyer do use the Tenants as well as he hath done, and sell it accordingly, it is unrighteous to do otherwise (ordinarily.) 2. In many Countreys it is the custom not to turn out a Tenant, nor to raise his Rent; so that many generations have held the same Land at the same Rent: which though it give no legal title, is yet a half title in common estimation. In such a case it will be scandalous, and infamous, and injurious, and therefore unlawful to purchase it with a purpose to raise the Rent, and to do accordingly. 3. In case that a better Landlord would buy it, who would use the Tenant better than you can do, it is not (ordinarily) lawful for to buy it. I either express, or imply [ordinarily] in most of my solutions; because that there are some exceptions lie against almost all such answers, in extraordinary cases; which the greatest Volume can scarce enumerate.

But if 1. It be the sellers own doing to withdraw his liberalty so far from his Tenants, as to sell his Land on hard rates, on supposition that the buyer will improve it: 2. And if it be a Tenant that cannot either by custom or any other plea, put in a claim in point of equity to his easie rented Land; 3. And if as bad a Landlord would buy it if you do not. 4. If it be not a real scandal; I say if all these four concur. 5. Or (alone) If the Tenant consent freely to your purchase on those terms; then it is no injury. But the common course is, for a covetous Man that hath Money, never to consider what a loser the Tenant is by his purchase, but to buy and improve the Land at his own pleasure; which is no better than Oppression.

Quest. 2. Quest. 2. May not a Landlord take as much for his Land as its worth?

Answ. 1. Sometimes it is Land that no Man can claim an equitable title to hold upon any easier rent, and sometimes it is otherwise, as aforesaid, by custom and long possession, or other reasons. 2. Sometimes the Tenant is one that you are obliged to shew mercy to; and sometimes he is one that no more than commutative Justice is due to. And so I answer, 1. If it be an old Tenant, who by custom or any other ground can claim an equitable title to his old pennyworth, you may not enhaunce the Rent to the full worth. 2. If it be one that you are obliged to shew Mercy as well as Justice to, you may not take the full worth. 3. The common case in England is, that the Landlords are of the Nobility or Gentry, and the Tenants are poor Men, who have nothing but what they get by their hard labour out of the Land which they hold: And in this case, some abatement of the full worth is but such a necessary Mercy, as may be called Justice. Note still, that by [the full worth] I mean, so much as you could set it for to a stranger who expecteth nothing but strict Justice, as Men buy and sell things in a Market.

But 1. If you deal with a Tenant as rich or richer than your self, or with one that needeth not your mercy, or is no fit object of it: 2. And if it be Land that no Man can by custom claim equitably to hold on lower terms; and so it is no injury to another, nor just scandal, then you may lawfully raise it to the full worth. Sometimes a poor Man selleth a House or Land to a rich Man, where the scruple hath no place.

Quest. 3. Quest. 3. May a Landlord raise his Rents, though he take not the full worth?

Answ. He may do it when there is just reason for it, and none against it. There is just reason for it when 1. The Land was much underset before: 2. Or when the Land is proportionably improved: 3. Or when the plenty of Money maketh a greater sum to be in effect no more than a lesser heretofore: 4. Or when an increase of Persons, or other accident maketh Land dearer than it was. But then it must be supposed. 1. That no Contract, 2. Nor Custom, 3. Nor Service and Merit, do give the Tenant any equitable right to his better penny-worth. And also that Mercy prohibit not the change.

Quest. 4. Quest. 4. How much must a Landlord set his Land below the full worth, that he may be no oppressor or unmerciful to his Tenants?

Answ. No one proportion can be determined of, because a great alteration may be made in respect to the Tenants ability, his merit, to the time and place, and other accidents. Some Tenants are so rich, as is said, that you are not bound to any abatement. Some are so bad, that you are bound to no more than strict Justice and common Humanity to them. Some years (like the last, when a longer drowth than any Man alive had known, burnt up the Grass) disableth a Tenant to pay his Rent. Some Countreys are so scarce of Money, that a little abatement is more than in another place: But ordinarily the common sort of Tenants in England, should have so much abated of the fullest worth, that they may comfortably live on it, and follow their labours with chearfulness of mind, and liberty to serve God in their Families, and to mind the matters of their Salvation, and not to be necessitated to such toil, and care, and pinching want, as shall make them liker Slaves than Freemen, and make their lives uncomfortable to them, and make them unfit to serve God in their Families, and seasonably mind eternal things.

Quest. 5. What if the Landlord be in debt, or have some present want of Money, may he not then raise the Rent of those Lands which were underlet before? Quest. 5.

Answ. If his Pride pretend want where there is none, (as to give extraordinary portions with his daughters, to erect sumptuous buildings, &c.) this is no good excuse for oppression. But if he really fall into want, then all that his Tenants hold as meer free gifts from his liberality, he may withdraw, (as being no longer able to give.) But that which they had by custom an equitable title to, or by contract also, a legal title to, he may not withdraw. (And yet all this is his sin, if he brought that poverty culpably on himself: It is his sin in the cause, though, supposing that cause, the raising of his Rent be lawful.) But it is not every debt in a rich Man, who hath other ways of paying it, which is a true necessity in this case: And if a present debt made it necessary only at that time, it is better (by Fine or otherwise) make a present supply, than thereupon to lay a perpetual burden on the Tenant, when the cause is ceased.

Quest. 6. What if there be abundance of honest people in far greater want than my Tenants are, (yea, perhaps Preachers of the Gospel,) And I have no other way to relieve them unless I raise my Rents? Am I not bound rather to give to the best and poorest, than to others? Quest. 6.

Answ. Yes, If it were a case that concerned meer giving: But when you must take away from one to give to another, there is more to be considered in it. Therefore in these two cases at least you may not raise your Tenants Rents to relieve the best or poorest whosoever: 1. In case that he have some equitable title to your Land, as upon the easier Rent: 2. Or in case that the scandal of seeming injustice or cruelty, is like to do more hurt to the interest of Religion and Mens Souls, than your relieving the poor with the addition would do good: Which a prudent Man by collation of probable consequents may satisfactorily discern: But if it were not only to preserve the the comforts, but to save the lives of other in their present famine, nature teacheth you to take that which is truly your own, both from your Tenants, and your Servant, and your own Mouths, to relieve Men in such extream distress: And nature will teach all Men to judge it your duty, and no scandalous oppression. But when you cannot relieve the ordinary wants of the poor, without such a scandalous raising of your Rents as will do more harm than your alms would do good, God doth not then call you to give such alms; but you are to be supposed to be unable.

Quest. 7. May I raise a Tenants Rent or turn him out of his House, because he is a bad man, by a kind of penalty? Quest. 7.

Answ. A bad Man hath a title to his own, as well as a good Man: And therefore if he have either legal or equitable title, you may not; nor yet if the scandal of it is like to do more hurt, than the good can countervail which you intend. Otherwise you may either raise his Rent, or turn him out, if he be a wicked, profligate, incorrigible Person, after due admonition: Yea, and you ought to do it, lest you be a cherisher of wickedness. If the Parents under Moses Law were bound to accuse their own Son to the Judges in such a case, and say, This our Son is stubborn and rebellious; he will not obey our voice: he is a glutton and a drunkard; and all the Men of the City must stone him till he die, to put away evil from among them, Deut. 21. 18, 19, 20, 21. Then surely a wicked Tenant is not so far to be spared, as to be cherished by bounty in his sin. It is the Magistrates work to punish him by governing Justice: But it is your work as a prudent Benefactor, to withhold your gifts of bounty from him. And I think it is one of the great sins of this Age, that this is not done, it being one of the noblest Means imaginable to reform the Land, and make it happy, if Landlords would thus punish, or turn out their wicked incorrigible Tenants, It would do much more than the Magistrate can do. The vulgar are most effectually ruled by their interest, as we rule our Dogs and Horses more by the Government of their bellies, than by force. They will most obey those on whom they apprehend their good or hurt to have most dependance. If Landlords would regard their Tenants Souls, so much as to correct them thus for their wickedness, they would be the greatest Benefactors and Reformers of the Land: But alas! Who shall first reform the Landlords? And when may it be hoped that many or most great Men will be such?

Quest. 8. Quest. 8. May one take a House over anothers head (as they speak) or take the Land which he is a Tenant to, before he be turned out of Possession?

Answ. Not out of a greedy desire to be rich, nor coveting that which is anothers: Not yet while he is any way injured by it: Nor yet when the act is like to be so scandalous, as to hurt Mens Souls more than it will profit your body. If you come with the offer of a greater Rent than he can give, or than the Landlord hath just cause to require of him, to get it out of his hands by over-bidding him, this is meer covetous oppression. But in other cases it is lawful to take the House and Land which another Tenant hath possession of: As, 1. In case that he willingly leave it, and consent. 2. Or if he unwillingly (but justly) be put out; and another Tenant must be provided against the time that he is to be dispossessed. 3. Yea, if he be unjustly put out, if he that succeeded him have no hand in it, nor by his taking the House or Land do promote the injury, nor scandalously countenance injustice. For when a Tenement is void, though by injury, it doth not follow, that no Man may ever live in it more: But if the title be his that is turned out, then you may not take it of another; because you will possess another Mans habitation. But if it should go for a standing rule, that no Man may in any case take a house over another Mans head, (as Countrey people would have it) then every Mans House and Land must be long untenanted, to please the will of every contentious or unjust possessor: And any one that hath no title, or will play the knave, may injure the true owner at his pleasure.

Quest. 9. Quest. 9. May a rich Man put out his Tenants, to lay their Tenements to his own Demesnes, and so lay House to House, and Land to Land?

Answ. In two cases he may not. 1. In case he injure the Tenant that is put out, by taking that from him which he hath right to, without his satisfaction and consent: 2. And in case it really tend to the injury of the Common-wealth, by depopulation, and diminishing the strength of it: Otherwise it is lawful: and done in moderation by a pious Man, may be very convenient: 1. By keeping the Land from beggery, through the multitudes of poor Families, that over set it. 2. By keeping the more Servants, among whom he may keep up a better Order, and more pious Government in his own House, (making it as a Church) than can be expected in poor Families: And his Servants will (for Soul and Body) have a much better life, than if they married and had Families, and small Tenements of their own: But in a Countrey that rather wanteth People, it is otherwise.

Quest. 10. Quest. 10. May one Man be a Tenant to divers Tenements?

Answ. Yes, if it tend not 1. To the wrong of any other. 2. Nor to depopulation, or to hinder the livelihood of others, while one Man ingrosseth more than is necessary or meet: For then it is unlawful.

Quest. 11. Quest. 11. May one Man have many Trades or Callings?

Answ. Not, when he doth, in a covetous desire to grow rich, disable his poor Neighbours to live by him on the same Callings, seeking to engross all the gain to himself: Nor yet when they are Callings which are inconsistent: Or when he cannot manage one aright, without the sinful neglect of the other. But otherwise it is as lawful to have two Trades as one.

Quest. 12. Quest. 12. Is it lawful for one Man to keep Shops in several Market Towns?

Answ. The same answer will serve as to the foregoing question.

CHAP. XXI.

Cases about, and Directions against Prodigality and sinful Wastefulness.

§ 1. BEcause Mens carnal interest and sensuality, is predominant with the greatest part of the World, and therefore governeth them in their Judgment about Duty and Sin, it thence cometh to pass that Wastefulness and Prodigality are easily believed to be faults, so far as they bring Men to shame or beggery, or apparently cross their own pleasure or commodity: But in other cases, they are seldom acknowledged to be any sins at all: Yea, all that are gratified by them, account them virtues, and there is scarce any sin which is so commonly commended: Which must needs tend to the increase of it, and to harden Men in their impenitency in it: And verily if covetousness, and selfishness, or poverty did not restrain it in more Persons than true conscience doth, it were like to go for the most laudable quality, and to be judged most meritorious of present praise and future happiness. Therefore in directing you against this sin, I must first tell you What it is: and then tell you wherein the malignity of it doth consist: The first will be best done in the definition of it, and enumeration of the instances, and examination of each one of them.

§. 2. Direct. 1. Truly understand what necessary frugality, or parsimony, and sinful wastefulness are. Dir. 1.

What necessary Frugality is?

Necessary frugality or sparing is an Act of fidelity, obedience and gratitude, by which we use all our Estates so faithfully for the chief Owner, so obediently to our chief Ruler, and so gratefully to our chief Benefactor, as that we waste it not any other way.

As we hold our Estates under God, as Owner, Ruler, and Benefactor, so must we devote them to him, and use them for him in each relation: And Christian Parsimony cannot be defined by a meer negation of active wastefulness, because idleness it self, and not using it aright, is real wastefulness.

Wastefulness what it is?

§. 3. Wastefulness or Prodigality is that sin of unfaithfulness, disobedience and ingratitude, by which either by action or omission we mispend or waste some part of our Estates to the injury of God, our absolute Lord, our Ruler and Benefactor: That is, Besides and against his Interest, his Command, and his Pleasure and Glory, and our ultimate End.

These are true Definitions of the Duty of Frugality, and the sin of Wastefulness.

§. 4. Inst. 1. One way of sinful wastefulness is, In pampering the belly in excess, curiosity, or costliness of Meat or Drink, of which I have spoken, Chap. 8. Tom. 1. Inst. 1.

Quest. 1. Are all Men bound to fare alike? Or when is it wastefulness and excess? Quest. 1.

Answ. This question is answered in the foresaid Chapter of Gluttony, Par. 4. Tit. 1. 1. Distinguish between Mens several tempers, and strength, and appetites: 2. And between the restraint of Want, and the restraint of Gods Law. And so it is thus resolved:

1. Such difference in quantity or quality as Mens health or strength, and real benefit requireth, may be made, by them that have no want.

2. When want depriveth the poor of that which would be really for their health, and ſtrength, and benefit, it is not their duty who have no ſuch want to conform themſelves to other Mens afflictions: Except when other reaſons do require it.

3. But all Men are bound to avoid real exceſs in matter, or manner, and curioſity, and to lay out nothing needleſly on their bellies; yea, nothing which they are called to lay out a better way. Underſtand this anſwer, and it will ſuffice you.

Inſt. 2. §. 5. Inſt. 2. Another way of Prodigality is by needleſs coſtly Viſits, and Entertainments.

Queſt. 2. Queſt. 2. What coſt upon Viſits and Entertainments is unlawful and prodigal?

Anſw. 1. Not only all that which hath an ill original, as pride or flattery of the rich; and all that hath an ill end, as being meerly to keep up a carnal unprofitable intereſt and correſpondency: But alſo all that which is exceſſive in degree. I know you will ſay, But that's the difficulty to know when it is exceſſive: It is not altogether impertinent to ſay, when it is above the proportion of your own Eſtate; or the ordinary uſe of thoſe of your own rank, or when it plainly tendeth to cheriſh gluttony or exceſs in others: But theſe anſwers are no exact ſolution. I add therefore, that it is exceſs when any thing is that way expended, which you are called to expend another way.

Object. But this leaveth it ſtill as difficult as before.

Anſw. When in rational probability a greater good may be done by another way of expence, conſideratis conſiderandis; and a greater good is by this way neglected, then you had a call to ſpend it otherwiſe, and this expence is ſinful.

Object. It is a doubt, whether of two goods it be a Mans duty always to chooſe the greater.

Anſw. Speaking of that good which is within his choice, it is no more doubt than whether Good be the Object of the will. If God be eligible as good, then the greateſt good is moſt eligible.

Whether a Man is bound to prefer the greateſt good?

Object. But this is ſtill a difficulty inſuperable: How can a Man in every action and expence diſcern, which way it is that the greateſt good is like to be attained? This putteth a Mans conſcience upon endleſs perplexities, and we ſhall never be ſure that we do not ſin: For when I have given to a poor Man, or done ſome good, for ought I know, there was a poorer that ſhould have had it, or a greater good that ſhould have been done.

Anſw. 1. The contrary opinion legitimateth almoſt all Villany, and deſtroyeth moſt good Works as to our ſelves or others. If a Man may lawfully prefer a known leſſer good before a greater, and be juſtified becauſe the leſſer is a real good, then he may be feeding his Horſe, when he ſhould be ſaving the life of his Child or Neighbour, or quenching a fire in the City, or defending the Perſon of his King: He may deny to ſerve his King and Countrey, and ſay, I was plowing or ſowing the while. He may prefer Sacrifice before mercy: He may neglect his Soul, and ſerve his body. He may plow on the Lords day, and neglect all Gods Worſhip. A leſſer duty is no duty but a ſin, when a greater is to be done. Therefore it is certain, that when two goods comes together to our choice, the greater is to be choſen, or elſe we ſin. 2. As you expect that your Steward ſhould proportion his expences, according to the neceſſity of your buſineſs, and not give more for a thing than it is worth, nor lay out your Money upon ſmaller commodity, while he leaveth your greater buſineſs unprovided for: And as you expect that your Servant who hath many things in the day to do, ſhould have ſo much skill as to know which to prefer, and not to leave undone the chiefeſt, whilſt he ſpendeth his time upon the leaſt: So doth God require that his Servants labour to be ſo skilful in his Service, as to be able to compare their buſineſſes together, and to know which at every ſeaſon to prefer: If Chriſtianity required no wiſdom and skill, it were below Mens common Trades and Callings. 3. And yet when you have done your beſt here, and truly endeavour to ſerve God faithfully, with the beſt skill and diligence you have, you need not make it a matter of ſcrupuloſity, perplexity, and vexation: For God accepteth you, and pardoneth your infirmities, and rewardeth your fidelity: And what if it do follow, that you know not but there may be ſome ſinful omiſſion of a better way? Is that ſo ſtrange or intolerable a concluſion, As long as a pardoned failing, which ſhould not hinder the comfort of your obedience? Is it ſtrange to you that we are all imperfect? And imperfect in every good we do; Even by a culpable ſinful imperfection? You never loved God in your lives without a ſinful imperfection in your love; And yet nothing in you is more acceptable to him than your love. Shall we think a caſe of Conſcience ill reſolved, unleſs we may conclude, that we are ſure we have no ſinful imperfection in our duty? If your Servant have not perfect skill, in knowing what to prefer in buying and ſelling, or in his work, I think you will neither allow him therefore to neglect the greater and better, knowingly, or by careleſs negligence, nor yet would you have him ſit down and whine, and ſay, I know not which to chooſe: But you would have him learn to be as skilful as he can, and then willingly and chearfully do his buſineſs with the beſt skill, and care, and diligence he can: and this you will beſt accept.

So that this holdeth as the trueſt and exacteſt ſolution, of this and many other ſuch caſes. He that ſpendeth that upon an entertainment of ſome great ones, which ſhould relieve ſome poor diſtreſſed Families, that are ready to periſh, doth ſpend it ſinfully: If you cannot ſee this in Gods cauſe, ſuppoſe it were the Kings, and you will ſee it: If you have but twenty pound to ſpend, and your Tax or Subſidy cometh to ſo much: If you entertain ſome noble Friend with that Money, will the King be ſatisfied with that as an excuſe? Or will you not be told that the King ſhould have firſt been ſerved? Remember him then who will one day ask, Have you fed, or cloathed, or viſited me? Matth. 25. You are not abſolute Owners of any thing, but the Stewards of God! And muſt expend it as he appointeth you: And if you let the poor lye languiſhing in neceſſities, whilſt you are at great charges to entertain the rich without a neceſſity or greater good, you muſt anſwer it as an unfaithful Servant.

And yet on the other ſide, it may fall out that a Perſon of quality, by a ſeaſonable, prudent, handſome reſpectful entertainment of his equals or ſuperiors, may do more good than by beſtowing that charge upon the poor: He may ſave more than he expendeth, by avoiding the diſpleaſure of Men in power: He may keep up his intereſt, by which if he be faithful, he may do God and his Countrey more ſervice, than if he had given ſo much to the poor. And when really it is a needful means to a greater good, it is a duty: and then to omit it, and give that coſt to the poor, would be a ſin.

§. 6. Object. But if this Rule hold, a Man muſt never do but one kind of good; when he hath found out the greateſt, he muſt do nothing elſe.

Anſw. He muſt always do the greateſt good: But the ſame thing is not at all times the greateſt good. Out of ſeaſon and meaſure a good may be turned to an evil: Praying in its ſeaſon, is better than plowing; and plowing in its ſeaſon is better than praying, and will do more good: For God will more accept and bleſs it.

§. 7. Object. Therefore it ſeemeth the prudenteſt way, to divide my expences according to the proportion of others of my quality; ſome to the poor, and ſome to neceſſary Charges, and ſome to actions of due civility?

Anſw. That there muſt be a juſt diſtribution is no queſtiquestion: Because God hath appointed you several duties for your expences: But the question is of the proportions of each respectively. Where God hath made many duties constantly necessary (as to maintain your own Bodies, your Children, to pay tribute to the King, to help the poor, to maintain the charges of the Church) there all must be wisely proportioned. But entertainments, recreations, and other such after to be mentioned, which are not constant duties, may be sometimes good, and sometimes sinful: And the measure of such expences must be varied only by the rule already laid down, viz. According to the proportion of the effect, or good which is like to follow: Though the custom of others of the same rank may sometimes intimate what proportion will be suitable to that lawful end: And sometimes the inordinate custom of others, will rather tell one what is to be avoided. Therefore true prudence (without a carnal byas) comparing the good effects together, which rationally are like to follow, is the only resolver of this doubt. Which having so largely shewed, I shall refer you to it, in the solution of many of the following questions.

Inst. 3. §. 8. Inst. 3. Another way of sinful wasting is upon unnecessary sumptuous buildings.

Quest. 3. Quest. 3. When is it prodigality to erect sumptuous Edifices?

Answ. Not when they are for the publick good, either in point of use, or ornament and honour, so be it, no greater good be thereby omitted: Therefore it is not Churches, Hospitals, Burses, or Common Halls that I am speaking of: Nor when they are proportioned to the quality of the Person, for the honour of Magistracy, or for a Mans necessary use. But when it is for ostentation of a Mans riches, or rather of his Pride, and for the gratifying of a carnal irrational fancy: And when a Man bestoweth more upon buildings, than is proportionable to his estate, and to his better expences; and (to speak more exactly) when he bestoweth that upon his buildings, which some greater service calleth for at that time: it is then his prodigality and sin.

Quest. 4. §. 9. Quest. 4. Here once for all let us enquire, Whether it be not lawful, as in dyet, so in buildings, recreation and other such things, to be at some charge for our delight, as well as for our necessities.

Answ. The question is thus commonly stated, but not well: For it seemeth to imply, that no Delights are necessary, and so putteth things in opposition, which are oft co-incident. Therefore I distinguish, 1. Of Necessity: Some things are necessary to our being, and some to our felicity, and some but to our smaller benefits! 2. Of delight: Some delight is sinful, as gratifying a sinful humour or disposition: Some is unnecessary or wholly useless, and some is necessary, either to our greater or our lesser good. And so the true solution is: 1. The sinful delight of a proud, a covetous, a lustful, a voluptuous mind, is neither to be purchased or used. 2. A Delight wholly needless, that is, unprofitable, is sinful if it be purchased, but at the price of a farthing, or of a bit of bread, or of a minutes time: Because that is cast away which purchaseth it. 3. A Delight which tendeth to the health of the body, and the alacrity of the mind, to fit it for our Calling and the service of God (being not placed in any forbidden thing) may be both indulged and purchased, so it be not above its worth. 4. So far as delight in house, or sports, or any creature, tendeth to corrupt our minds, and draw us to the love of this present World, and alienate our Hearts from Heaven, so far must they be resisted and mortified, or sanctified and turned a better way. 5. In the Utensils of our duty to God, usually a moderate natural delight, is a great help to the duty, and may become a spiritual delight: As a delight in many Books, in the Preachers utterance, in the melody of Psalms, in my study, and its conveniencies, in my walk for meditation, &c. And a delight in our food and recreations, maketh them much fitter to cherish health, and to attain their ends; so it be not corrupt, immoderate, or abused to evil ends.

§ 10. Inst. 4. Another way of Prodigality, is in needless costly Recreations. Inst. 4.

Quest. 5. Is all cost laid out upon recreations unlawful? Quest. 5.

Answ. No: But cæteris paribus, we should choose the cheapest, and be at no needless cost on them: Nor lay out any thing on them, which consideratis considerandis might be better bestowed. But of this before.

§ 11. Inst. Another way of Prodigality is in over-costly apparel. Inst. 5.

Quest. What may be accounted prodigality in the costliness of apparel? Quest. 6.

Answ. Not that which is only for a due distinction of Superiours from Inferiours, or which is needful to keep up the Vulgars reverence to Magistrates. But 1. All that which is meerly serviceable to Pride or vain curiosity, or amorous lust, or an affectation to be thought to be more comely and beautiful than others. 2. All that which hath more cost bestowed upon it than the benefit or end is worth. 3. Or which hath that cost which should be rather laid out another way, upon better uses. The cheapest apparel must be chosen which is warm and comely, and fittest to the right ends. And we must come nearer those that are below our rank, than those above it.

§. 12. Inst. 6. Also Prodigality is much shewed in the cost which is laid out for needless pomp and ostentation of greatness or curiosity, in keeping a numerous retinue, and in their gallantry, and in keeping many Horses and costly furniture and attendance. Inst. 6.

Quest. 7. When is a costly retinue and other pompous furniture to be accounted Prodigality? Quest. 7.

Answ. Not when they are needful to the honour of Magistracy, and so to the Government of the Common-wealth: Nor when it is made but a due means to some lawful end, which answereth the cost. But when it is either the fruits and maintenance of Pride, or exceedeth the proportion of Mens estates, or (especially) when it expendeth that which better and more necessary uses call for. It is a most odious and enormous crime, to waste so many hundred or thousand pounds a year in the vanities of pomp and fruitless curiosities and need-nots, while the publick uses of the State and Church are injured through want, and while thousands of poor families are rackt with cares, and pinched with necessities round about us.

§. 13. Inst. 7. Another way of Prodigality is that which is called by many, keeping a good house; that is, in unnecessary abundance, and waste of meat and drink, and other provisions. Inst. 7.

Quest. 8. When may great house-keeping be accounted Prodigality? Quest. 8.

Answ. Not when it is but a convenient work of Charity to feed the poor, and relieve the distressed, or entertain strangers, or to give such necessary entertainment to equals or superiors as is before described: But when the truest relief of the poor shall be omitted (and it may be poor Tenants wracked and oppressed) to keep up the fame and grandeur of their abundance, and to seem magnificent, and praised by Men for great house-keepers: The whole and large estates of many of the rich and great ones of the World goeth this way, and so much is devoured by it, as starveth almost all good works.

§. 14. Inst. 8. Another Act of Prodigality is Cards and Dice, and other gaming; in which whilst Men desire to get that which is anothers, they lose and waste their own. Inst. 8.

§. 15. Inst.

Inst. 9. §. 15. Inst. 9. Another Act of Prodigality is giving over-great portions with Children: It being a sinful waste of our Masters stock, to lay it out otherwise than he would have us, and to serve our Pride and Self-interest in our Children instead of him.

Quest. 9. Quest. 9. When may our Childrens portions be accounted prodigality, or too great?

Answ. Not when you provide for their comfortable living according to your estates, and give them that due proportion which consisteth with the discharge of other duties: But when all that Men can get is thought little enough for their Children; and the business of their lives is to live in fulness themselves as long as they can, and then to leave that to their posterity which they cannot keep themselves! When this gulf of self-pampering and providing the like for Children, devoureth almost all that you can gather, and the poor and other needful uses, are put off with some inconsiderable pittance: And when there is not a due proportion kept between your provision for your Children, and the other duties which God requireth of you: Psal. 49. 7, 8, 9, 11, 13. Their inward thought is, that their houses shall be perpetuated, and their dwelling places to generations: They call their Lands after their own names——This their way is their folly; yet their posterity approve their sayings, Psal. 73. 12. Behold, these are the ungodly who prosper in the World, they increase in riches: Psal. 17. 14. They have their portion in this life:——They are full of Children, (or, their Children are full,) and they leave the rest of their substance to their babes. A Parent that hath an heir, or other Children so wise, religious and liberal, as that they are like to be more charitable and serviceable to good uses, than any other whom he can trust with his estate; should not only leave such Children sufficient for themselves, but enable them as much as he can to do good: For they will be more faithful Trustees to him than strangers. But a Parent that hath but common and untrusty Children, should do all the good he can himself, and what he would have done when he is dead, he must commit to them that are more trusty; and allow his Children but their proper maintenance. And Parents that have debauched, wicked, ungodly Children (such as God commanded them to cause to be put to death, Deut. 21.) should allow them no more than their daily bread, if any thing at all (which is their own to dispose of.)

Inst. 10. §. 16. Inst. 10. Also to be careless in many small expences or losses, because they are but little things, and let any such thing be cast away, is sinful Prodigality.

Quest. 10. Quest. 10. How far is it a duty to be frugal in small matters, and the contrary a sin?

Answ. We must not over-value any thing, great or small: Nor be sparing out of Covetousness: Nor yet in an imprudent way, which seemeth to signifie baseness and worldliness when it is not so: Nor must we be too thinking in bargaining with others, when every penny which we get by it, is lost to one that needeth it more. But we must see that nothing of any use, be lost through satiety, negligence or contempt: For the smallest part is of Gods gifts and talents, given us, not to cast away, but to use as he would have us: And there is nothing that is good so small, but some one hath need of it, or some good use or other may be made of it. Even Christ when he had fed thousands by a Miracle, yet commanded his Disciples to gather up the broken bread or fragments, that nothing be lost, John 6. 12. Which plainly sheweth that it is a duty which the richest Man that is, is not exempted from, to be frugal, and sin in the greatest Prince to be wasteful of any thing that is good: But this must not be in forbid covetousness, but in obedience to God, and to do good to others. He is commendable who giveth liberally to the poor, out of his abundance: But he is much more commendable who is a good husband for the poor, as worldlings are for themselves; and frugally getteth and saveth as much as he can, and denyeth all superfluities to himself and all about him, that he may have the more to give to pious and charitable uses.

Inst. 11. §. 17. Inst. 11. Idleness also and negligence in our Callings, is sinful wastefulness and Prodigality: When either the pride of Gentility maketh People think themselves too good to labour, or to look after the matters of their families, or slothfulness maketh them think it a life too toilsome for their flesh to bear. Prov. 18. 9. He that is slothful in his work, is brother to him that is a great waster: These drones consume that which others labour for, but are no gatherers themselves.

Quest. 11. §. 18. Quest. 11. Is every one bound to labour in a Calling?

Answ. This is answered before in its due place Tom. 1. Every one that is able, rich or poor, must live in some profitable course of pain or labour.

Quest. 12. §. 19. Quest. 12. Is it a duty to desire and endeavour to get, and prosper, and grow rich by our labours; when Solomon saith, Labour not to be rich? Prov. 23. 4.

Answ. It is a sin to desire Riches as worldlings and sensualists do, for the provision and maintenance of fleshly lusts and Pride: But it is no sin, but a duty, to labour not only for labour sake, formally resting in the act done, but for that honest increase and provision, which is the end of our labour; and therefore to choose a gainful Calling rather than another, that we may be able to do good, and relieve the poor. Ephes. 4. 28. Let him labour, working with his hands the thing that is good, that he may have to give to him that needeth.

Quest. 13. §. 20. Quest. 13. Can one be prodigal in giving to the Church?

Answ. Yes, If it be in a blind zeal to maintain a useless pomp or superstition: Or if he give that which should be used or given otherwise: But this is a sin that few in these days are much in danger of. Read Erasmus Colloqu. Peregrin. Relig. Ergo Quest. 14. §. 21. Quest. 14. Can one be prodigal in giving to the poor?

Answ. Yes; When it is blindly done, to cherish idleness in wandring beggars; or with a conceit of meriting in point of Commutative Justice from God: Or when that is given to the poor, which should be given to other uses (as in publick tribute, maintenance of Children, furtherance of the Gospel, &c.) But this is a sin that few have need to be restrained from.

Quest. 15. §. 22. Quest. 15. May a rich Man expend any thing upon (otherwise) awful pomp, or conveniencies or pleasures, at such a time, when there are multitudes of poor families in extremity of want? As now, when the flames which consumed London, have left many thousands in distress?

Answ. Doubtless every Man should spare as much for the relief of others as he can: And therefore should not only forbear all needless expences, but those also that are needful but to such conveniencies and accommodations as may be spared without a greater hurt, than is the want of such as that charges would relieve. To save the Lives of People in want, we must spare any thing from our selves, which our own Lives can spare. And to relieve them in their deep poverty, we must abate much more than our superfluities. To expend any thing on pride and lust, is a double sin at such a time, when Lazarus is at our doors in want. If that Luke 16. were well studied (wherein it was that the rich Mans sin and danger lay, in being cloathed in Purple and Silk, and faring sumptuously every day, while Lazarus wanted) it would make some sensualists wiser than they are.

But yet it must be confessed, that some few Persons sons may be of so much worth and use to the Common-wealth (as Kings and Magistrates) and some of so little; that the maintaining of the honour and succours of the former, may be more necessary than the saving of the lives of the latter. But take heed lest Pride or Cruelty teach you, to misunderstand this, or abuse it for your selves.

§. 23. There are divers other ways of Prodigality or sinful waste, which I pass by, because they are such as few are concerned in: And my purpose is not to say all that may be said, but all that is needful. (As in needless Musick, Physick, Books, (which Seneca handsomely reproveth) Gifts to Servants which need not in meer ostenation of pride to be well spoken of, and many the like: And in unlawful Wars, which is the greatest sinful waster in all the World.) And as for expences in debauchery and gross wickedness, as Whoredom, Revenge; in sinful Law Suits, &c. I here pretermit them.

Dir. 2. §. 24. Direct. 2. Understand well the aggravations of this sin of Prodigality: viz.

1. It is a wasting of that which is none of our own, and a robbing God of the use or service due to him in the improvement of his gifts. They are his, and not ours; and according to his pleasure only must be used. 2. It is a robbing the poor of that which the common Lord of the World, hath appointed for them in his Law: And they will have their Action in Heaven against the Prodigal. 3. It is an inhumane vice, to waste that upon pleasures, pride and needless things, which so many distressed Persons stand in need of. 4. It is an injury to the Common-wealth, which is weakned by the wasteful. And the Covetous themselves (that are not oppressors) are much better members of publick Societies than the Prodigal. It feedeth a life of other vice and wickedness. It is a spending Gods gift to feed those lusts which he abhorreth. 6. It usually engageth many others in Trades and Labours which are unprofitable, that they may serve the lusts of these sensual prodigals. 7. And in the conclusion it prepareth a sad account, for these wretches when they must answer at the Bar of God, how they have used all his gifts and talents. Remember all these aggravations.

Dir. 3. §. 25. Direct. 3. Carefully mortify that greedy fancy and fleshly lusts, which is the wasting sin and the devouring gulf. Quench the fire, and you may spare all this fewel. Cure the Feavor or Dropsie, and you may spare both your drink and life. A greedy throat, and a diseased fancy are never satisfied, till they have wasted the peace of your Consciences with your Estates, and brought you to the end of bruitish sinners: Wisdom, and Duty, and real Benefit, are contented with a little: But lust is unsatiable: The voluptuous Brute saith, I must have my Cups, my Lust, my Pleasure, and the effeminate vitious fancy of those empty Souls that mind no great and solid things, is still ranging after some vanity or other; and like Children, crying for every thing that they see another have: And the most needless, yea, burdensome thing seem necessary to such: They say, I must needs have this, and I must needs have that, there is no being without it; when nothing needeth it, but a diseased mind, which much more needeth a cure by grace and true mortification. Subdue pride, and sensuality, and fancy, and you may escape Prodigality.

Dir. 4. §. 26. Direct. 4. Remember the nearness of your account, and ask your consciences what way of expences will please you best in the review. Whether at death and judgment it will be your comfort to find on your account, [so much laid out on needless bravery, to set out this carkass which is now turning into dust: Item, So much upon proud entertainments of great ones: Item, So much on Cards, and Dice, and Stage-plays; and so much on Hounds and needless Pleasures, &c. Or rather [So much to promote the preaching of the Gospel; So much to set poor Children to Prentice, or to School; so much to relieve distressed families, &c.] Let Matth. 25. be well read, and your account well thought on.

§ 27. Direct. 5. Keep an account of your expences, and peruse them before a Fast or a Sacrament: And ask conscience how it judgeth of them: Yea, ask some holy prudent friend, Whether such proportions are allowable before God, and will be comfortable to you in the day of your extremity. If you are but willing to be cured, such means as these will not be in vain. Dir. 5.

CHAP. XXII.

Cases and Directions against injurious Law Suits, Witnessing and Judgment.

Tit. 1. Cases of Conscience about Law-Suits, and Proceedings.

Quest. 1. IN what cases it it lawful to go to Law with others? Quest. 1.

Answ. 1. In case of necessary defence, when the the Plaintiff doth compel you to it. 2. When you are entrusted for Orphans or others whom you cannot otherwise right. 3. When your Children, or the Church, or Poor, whom you should do good to, are like to suffer, if you recover not your talent that God hath trusted you with, for such uses, from the hands of unjust Men: And they refuse all just arbitrations and other equal means which might avoid such suits. 4. When your own necessity constraineth you to seek your own; which you cannot get by easier means. 5. When your forbearance will do more hurt by encouraging Knaves in their injustice, than it will do good. 6. When ever your cause is just, and neither Mercy, Peace, nor the avoiding of scandal do forbid it: That is, when it is like to do more good than harm, it is then a lawful course.

But it is unlawful to go to Law, 1. When you neglect just arbitrations, patience and other needful means to avoid it. 2. When your Cause is unjust. 3. When you oppress the poor by it. 4. When it is done in Covetousness, Revenge or Pride. 5. When the scandal or hurt to your Brother, is like to be a greater harm than the righting of your self is like to do good: Then must you not go willingly to Law.

Quest. 2. May I sue a poor Man for a debt or trespass? Quest. 2.

Answ. 1. If he be so poor as that he cannot pay it, nor procure you satisfaction, the Suit is vain, and tendeth but to cruelty. 2. If he have no means to pay, but that which will deprive him of food and rayment, and the necessaries of his life or comfort, you may not sue him unless it be for the supply of as great necessities of your own; or in a trust for Orphans, where you have no power to remit the debt: Yea, and for them no cruelty must be used. 3. If your forbearance be like to make him abler by his diligence or other means, you should forbear if possible. 4. But if he be competently able, and refuse to pay through knavery and injustice, and you have better ways to use that Mony, if scandal forbid not, you may seek by Law to recover your own from him.

Quest. 3. May I sue a Surety whose interest was not concerned in the case? Quest. 3.

Answ. If his poverty make it not an act of cruelty, nor scandal prohibit it, you may: Because he was willing, and declared his consent, that you should have the debt of him, if the Principal pay not. To become Surety, is to consent to this: And it is no injury to receive a Mans mony by his own consent and Covenant. He knew that you had not lent it but on those terms; and you had reason to suppose, that he who would undertake to pay another Mans debt, had sufficient reason for it, either in relation or counter-security. But as you must use mercy to the principal debtor in his poverty, so must you use also to the surety.

to

Quest. 4. Quest. 4. May I sue for the use of Money as well as for the principal?

Answ. This dependeth on the Case of Usury before resolved. In those cases in which it may not be taken, it may not be sued for: Nor yet when the scandal of it will do more harm than the mony will do good. But in other cases it may be sued for on the terms as the Rent of Lands may.

Quest. 5. Quest. 5. May Law-Suits be used to disable or humble an insolent wicked Man?

Answ. You may not take up an ill cause against him, for any such good end: But if you have a good cause against him, which otherwise you would not have prosecuted, you may make use of it, to disable him from doing mischief, when really it is a probable means thereto; and when neither scandal nor other accidents do prohibit it.

Quest. 6. May a rich Man make use of his friends and purse in a just cause, to wear down or tire out a poorer Man that hath a bad cause?

Answ. Not by bribery or any evil means: For his proceeding must be just as well as his cause. But if it be an obstinate knave that setteth himself to do hurt to others, it is lawful to make use of the favour of a righteous Judge or Magistrate against him: And it is lawful to humble by the length and expensiveness of the Suit, when that is the fittest means, and no unjust action is done in it: Still supposing that scandal prohibit it not: But let no proud or cruel Person think, that therefore they may by purse, and friends, and tedious Law-Suits oppress the innocent, to attain their own unrighteous will.

Quest. 7. May one use such forms in Law-Suits as in the literal sense are gross untruths (in declarations, answers, or the like?)

Answ. The use of words is to express the mind: And common use is the interpreter of them: If they are such words as the notorious common use hath put another sense on, than the literal one, they must be taken in the sense which publick use hath put upon them. And if that publick sense be true or false, accordingly they may, or may not be used.

Quest. 8. May a guilty person plead not guilty or deny the fact?

Answ. Common use is the interpreter of words: If the common use of those words doth make their publick sense a lye, it may not be done. But if the forinsick common use of their denyal is taken to signifie no more but this, [Let him that accuseth me prove it: I am not bound to accuse my self] or [In foro I am not guilty till it be proved] then it is lawful to plead [Not guilty] and deny the fact, except in cases wherein you are bound to an open confession, or in which the scandal will do more hurt than the denial will do good.

Quest. 9. Is a man ever bound to accuse himself, and seek Justice against himself?

Answ. 1. In many cases a man is bound to punish himself: As when the Law against swearing, Cursing, or the like, must give the poor a certain mulct which is the penalty: He ought to give that money himself: And in cases where it is a necessary cure to himself: And in any case where the publick good requireth it: As if a Magistrate offend whom none else will punish, or who is the Judge in his own cause: He should so far punish himself as is necessary to the suppression of sin, and to the preserving of the honour of the Laws: As I have heard of a Justice that swore twenty Oaths, and Paid his twenty shillings for it. 2. A man may be bound in such a Divine vengeance or Judgment as seeketh after his particular sin, to offer himself to be a Sacrifice to Justice, to stop the Judgment: As Jonah, and Achan did. 3. A man may be bound to confess his gtilt and offer himself to Justice to save the innocent, who is falsly accused and condemned for his crime. 4. But in ordinary cases a Man is not bound to be his own publick accuser or executioner.

Quest. 10. May a witness voluntarily speak that truth which he knoweth will further an unrighteous cause, and be made use of to oppress the innocent?

Answ. He may not do it as a confederate in that intention: Nor may he do it when he knoweth that it will tend to such an event (though threatned or commanded,) except when some weightier accident doth preponderate for the doing it (as the avoiding of a greater hurt to others, than it will bring on the oppressed, &c.)

Quest. 11. May a witness conceal some part of the truth?

Answ. Not when he sweareth to deliver the whole truth: Nor when a good cause is like to suffer, or a bad cause be furthered by the concealment: Nor when he is under thy other obligation to reveal the whole.

Quest. 12. Must a Judge and Jury proceed secundum allegata & probata, according to evidence and proof, when they know the witness to be false, and the truth to be contrary to the testimony; but are not able to evince it?

Answ. Distinguish between the Negative and the Positive part of the verdict or Sentence: In the Negative they must go according to the evidence and testimonies, unless the the Law of the Land leave the case to their private Knowledge. As for Example, They must not sentence a Thief or Murderer to be punished upon their secret unproved knowledge: They must not adjudge either Moneys or Lands to the true owner from another, without sufficient evidence and proof: They must forbear doing Justice, because they are not called to it, nor enabled. But positively they may do no Injustice upon any evidence or witness against their own knowledge of the truth: As they may not upon known false witness, give away a mans Lands or Money or condemn the innocent: But must in such a case renounce the Office: The Judge must come off the Bench, and the Jury protest that they will not meddle, or give any verdict (what ever come of it;) Because God and the Law of Nature Prohibit their injustice.

Objection. It is the Law that doth it, and not we.

Answ. It is the Law and you; And the Law cannot justifie your agency in any unrighteous sentence. The case is plain and past dispute.

Tit. 2. Directions against Contentious Suits, False Witnessing, and Oppressive Judgment.

§. 1. Direct. 1. The first Cure for all these sins, is to know the intrinsick evil of them Good thoughts of sin are its life and strength. When it is well known, it will be hated, and when it is hated, it is so far cured. Dir. 1.

§. 1. The evil of Contentious and unjust Law-Suits.

1. Such contentious Suits do shew the power of selfishness in the sinner; How much self-interest is inordinately esteemed. 2. They shew the excessive love of the World; How much men overvalue the things which they contend for. 3. They shew mens want of Love to their neighbours; How little they regard another mans interest in comparison of their own. 4. They shew how little such men care for the publick good; which is maintained by the concord and Love of Neighbours. 5. Such contentions are powerful Engines of the Devil to destroy all Christian Love on both sides; and to stir up mutual enmity and wrath; And so to involve men in a course of sin, by further uncharitableness and injuries, both in heart, and word, and deed. 6. Poor men are hereby robbed of their necessary maintenance, and and their innocent families ſubjected to diſtreſs. 7. Unconſcionable Lawyers and Court-Officers, who live upon the Peoples ſins, are hereby maintained, encouraged and kept up. 8. Laws and Courts of Juſtice are perverted, to do Men wrong, which were made to right them. 9. And the offender declareth how little ſenſe he hath of the Authority or Love of God, and how little ſenſe of the grace of our Redeemer. And how far he is from being himſelf forgiven through the blood of Chriſt, who can no better forgive another.

§. 3. II. The evil of Falſe Witneſs.

1. By Falſe Witneſs the innocent are injured; Robbery and Murder are committed under pretence of truth and juſtice. 2. The Name of God is horribly abuſed, by the crying ſin of Perjury (of which before.) 3. The preſence and juſtice of God are contemned; When ſinners dare, in his ſight and hearing, appeal to his Tribunal, in the atteſting of a lye. 4. Vengeance is begged or conſented to by the ſinner; who bringeth Gods Curſe upon himſelf, and as it were deſireth God to plague or damn him if he lye. 5. Satan the Prince of malice and injuſtice, and the Father of lies, and murders, and oppreſſion is hereby gratified, and eminently ſerved. 6. God himſelf is openly injured, who is the Father and Patron of the innocent; and the cauſe of every righteous Perſon is more the cauſe of God than of Man. 7. All Government is fruſtrated, and Laws abuſed, and all Mens ſecurity for their Reputations or Eſtates, or Lives is overthrown, by falſe Witneſſes; and conſequently humane converſe is made undeſirable and unſafe. What good can Law or right, innocency, or the honeſty of the Judge do any Man, where falſe Witneſſes combine againſt him? What ſecurity hath the moſt innocent or worthy Perſon for his fame, or liberty, or eſtate, or life, if falſe Witneſſes conſpire to defame him, or deſtroy him? And then how ſhall Men endure to converſe with one another? Either the innocent muſt ſeek out a Wilderneſs, and fly from the face of Men as we do from Lions and Tygers; or elſe Peace will be worſe than War: For in War a Man may fight for his life; but againſt falſe Witneſſes he hath no defence: But God is the avenger of the innocent, and above moſt other ſins, doth ſeldom ſuffer this to go unpuniſhed, even in this preſent World; but often beginneth their Hell on Earth, to ſuch perjured Inſtruments of the Devil.

§. 4. III. The Evil of Unrighteous Judgements.

1. An unrighteous Judge doth condemn the Cauſe of God himſelf: For every righteons Cauſe is his. 2. Yea, he condemneth Chriſt himſelf in his Members: For in that he doth it to one of the leaſt of thoſe whom he calleth Brethren, he doth it to himſelf, Matth. 25. It is a damnable ſin, not to relieve the innocent and impriſoned in their diſtreſs, when we have power: What is it then to oppreſs them, and unrighteouſly condemn? 3. It is a turning of the remedy into a double miſery; and taking away the only help of oppreſſed innocency. What other defence hath innocency, but Law and Juſtice? and when their refuge it ſelf doth fall upon them and oppreſs them, whither ſhall the righteous flie? 4. It ſubverteth Laws and Government, and abuſeth it to deſtroy the ends which it is appointed for. 5. Thereby it turneth human Society into a ſtate of miſery, like the depredations of hoſtility. 6. It is a deliberate reſolved ſin, and not done in paſſion by ſurprize: It is committed in that place, and in that form as acts of greateſt deliberation ſhould be done: As if he ſhould ſay, Upon full diſquiſition, evidence and deliberation, I condemn this Perſon; and his Cauſe. 7. All this is done as in the name of God, and by his own Commiſſion, by one that pretendeth to be his Officer or Miniſter, Rom. 3. 3, 4, 5, 6. For the Judgement is the Lords, 2 Chron. 19. 8, 10. & 19. 5, 6, 7. And how great a wickedneſs is it thus to blaſpheme, and to repreſent him as Satan, an enemy to truth and righteouſneſs, to his Servants and himſelf? As if he had ſaid, God hath ſent me to condemn this Cauſe and Perſon? It falſe Prophets ſin ſo heinouſly who belie the Lord, and ſay, He hath ſent us to ſpeak this (which is untruth;) the ſin of falſe Judges cannot be much leſs. 8. It is ſin againſt the fulleſt and frequenteſt prohibitions of God. Read over Exod. 23. 1, 2, 3, &c. Lev. Deut. 1. 16, 17. and 16, 18. Iſa. 1. 17, 20, 23. Deut. 24. 17. and 27. 19. Curſed be he that perverteth the Judgment of the Stranger, the Fatherleſs and Widow, and all the People ſhall ſay Amen. Ezra 7. 26. Pſal. 33. 5. and 37. 28. and 72. 2. and 94. 15. and 106. 3. 30. Prov. 17. 27. and 19. 28. and 20. 8. and 29. 4. and 31. 5. Eccleſ. 5. 8. Iſa. 5 7. and 10. 2. and 56. 1, 2. and 59. 14, 15. Jer. 5. 1. and 7. 5. and 9. 24. Ezek. 18. 8. and 45. 9. Hoſ. 12. 6. Amos 5. 7, 15, 24. and 6. 12. Mic. 3. 9. Zech. 7. 9. and 8. 16. Gen. 18. 19. Prov. 21. 3, 7, 15. I cite not the words to avoid prolixity. Scarce any ſin is ſo oft and vehemently condemned of God. 9. Falſe Judges cauſe the poor to appeal to God againſt them, and the cries of the afflicted ſhall not be forgotten, Luke 18. 5, 6, 7, 8. 10. They call for Gods Judgement upon themſelves, and devolve the work into his hands: How can that Man expect any other than a judgment of damnation, from the righteous God, who hath deliberately condemned Chriſt himſelf in his cauſe and ſervants, and ſate in Judgment to condemn the innocent? Pſal. 9 7, 8, 9. The Lord hath prepared his throne for judgment, and he ſhall judge the world in righteouſneſs, he ſhall miniſter judgment to the People in uprightneſs; he will be a refuge for the oppreſſed, Pſal. 37. 6. He will bring forth righteouſneſs as the light, and thy judgment as the noon day, Pſal. 89 14. Juſtice and Judgment are the habitation of his Throne, Pſal. 103. 6. The Lord executeth righteouſneſs and judgment for all that are oppreſſed, Pſal. 146. 7 In a word, the ſentence of an unjuſt Judge is paſſed againſt his own Soul, and he calleth to God to condemn him righteouſly, who unrighteouſly condemned others. Of all Men he cannot ſtand in Judgment, nor abide the righteous doom of Chriſt.

§. 5. Direct. 2. When you will underſtand the greatneſs of the ſin, find out and overcome the root and cauſes of it in your ſelves: Eſpecially ſelfiſhneſs, covetouſneſs and paſſion. A ſelfiſh Man careth not what another ſuffereth, ſo that his own ends and intereſt be promoted by it. A covetous Man will contend and injure his Neighbour when ever his own commodity requireth it. He ſo much loveth his Money, that it can prevail with him to ſin againſt God, and caſt away his own Soul; much more to hurt and wrong his Neighbour. A proud and paſſionate Man is ſo thirſty after revenge, to make others ſtoop to him, that he careth not what it coſt him to accompliſh it. Overcome theſe inward Vices, and you may eaſily forbear the outward ſins. Dir. 2.

§ 6. Direct. 3. Love your Neighbours as your ſelves: For that is the univerſal remedy againſt all injurious and uncharitable undertakings. Dir. 3.

§. 7. Direct. 4. Keep a tender Conſcience, which will not make light of ſin. It is thoſe that have ſeared their Conſciences by infidelity or a courſe of ſinning, who dare venture with Judas or Gehazi for the prey, and dare oppreſs the poor and innocent, and feel not, nor fear not, whilſt they caſt themſelves on the revenge of God. Dir. 4.

§. 8. Direct. 5. Remember the day when all theſe Cauſes muſt be heard again, and the righteous God will ſet all ſtreight, and vindicate the cauſe of the oppreſſed. Conſider what a dreadful appearance that Man is like to have at the Bar of Heaven, who hath falſly accuſed, or condemned the juſt, in the Courts of Men. What a terrible indictment, accuſation, conviction and ſentence muſt that Man expect? If the hearing of righteouſneſs and the judgment to come made Dir. 5.

Felix tremble, surely it is infidelity or the plague of a stupified heart, which keepeth contentious Persons, perverters of Justice, false Witnesses and unjust Judges, from trembling.

§. 9. Direct. 6. Remember the presence of that God who must be your final Judge. That he seeth all your Pride and Covetousness, and all your secret contrivances for revenge, and is privy to all your Deceits and Injuries. You commit them in his open sight.

Dir. 7. §. 10. Direct. 7. Meddle not with Law Suits till you have offered an equal arbitration of indifferent Men, or used all possible means of love to prevent them. Law Suits are not the first, but the last Remedy. Try all others before you use them.

Dir. 8. §. 11. Direct. 8. When you must needs go to Law, compose your minds to unfeigned love towards him that you must contend with, and watch over your hearts with suspicion and the strictest care, lest secret disaffection get advantage by it: And go to your Neighbour, and labour to possess his heart also with love, and to demulce his mind; that you may not use the Courts of Justice, as Soldiers do their Weapons to do the worst they can against another, as an Enemy: But as loving friends do use an amicable arbitration; resolving contentedly to stand to what the Judge determineth, without any alienation of mind, or abatement of brotherly love.

Dir. 9. §. 12. Direct. 9. Be not too confident of the righteousness of your own cause: But ask counsel of some understanding, godly, and impartial Men; and hear all that can be said, and patiently consider of the case, and do as you would have others do by you.

Dir. 10. §. 13. Direct. 10. Observe what terrors of Conscience use to haunt awakened sinners, especially on a deathbed, for such sins as false witnessing, and false judging, and oppressing, and injuring the innocent, even above most other sins.

CHAP. XXIII.

Cases of Conscience, and Directions, against Backbiting, Slandering and evil Speaking.

Tit. 1. Cases of Conscience about Backbiting and Evil-speaking.

Quest. 1. Quest. 1. May I not speak evil of that which is evil? and call every one truly as he is?

Answ. You must not speak a known falshood of any Man under pretence of Charity or speaking well. But you are not to speak all the evil of every Man which is true: As opening the faults of the King or your Parents, though never so truly, is a sin against the fifth Commandment, [Honour thy Father and Mother:] So if you do it without a Call, you sin against your Neighbours honour, and many other ways offend.

Quest. 2. Quest. 2. Is it not sinful silence, and a consenting to, or countenancing of the sins of others, to say nothing against them, as tender of their honour?

Answ. It is sinful to be silent when you have a call to speak: If you forbear to admonish the offender in love between him and you, when you have opportunity and just cause, it is sinful to be silent then. But to silence Backbiting is no sin. If you must be guilty of every Mans sin that you talk not against behind his back, your whole discourse must be nothing but backbiting.

Quest. 3. Quest. 3. May I not speak that which honest religious, credible Persons do report?

Answ. Not without both sufficent evidence, and a sufficient call. You must not judge of the action by the Person, but of the Person by the action. Nor must you imitate any Man in evil doing. If a good Man abuse you, are you willing that all Men follow him and abuse you more?

Quest. 4. May I believe the bad report of an honest credible Person? Quest. 4.

Answ. You must first consider whether you may hear it, or meddle with it: For if it be a case that you have nothing to do with, you may not set your judgment to it, either to believe it, or to disbelieve it. And if it be a thing that you are called to judge of, yet every honest Mans word is not presently to be believed: You must first know whether it be a thing that he saw, or is certain of himself, or a thing which he only taketh upon report? And what his evidence and proof is? And whether he be not engaged by interest, passion, or any difference of opinion? Or be not ingaged in some contrary faction, where the interest of a party or cause is his temptation? Or whether he be not used to rash reports and uncharitable Speeches, And what concurrence of testimonies there is, and what is said on the other side: Especially what the Person accused saith in his own defence. If it be so heinous a crime in publick Judgment, to pass Sentence before both parties are heard, and to condemn a Man before he speak for himself; it cannot be justifiable in private Judgment. Would you be willing your selves that all should be believed of you, which is spoken by any honest Man? And how uncertain are we of other Mens honesty, that we should on that account think ill of others?

Quest. 5. May I not speak evil of them that are Enemies to God, to Religion, and Godliness, and are open Persecutors of it; or are Enemies to the King or Church? Quest. 5.

Answ. You may on all meet occasions speak evil of the sin; and of the Persons when you have a just call; but not at your own pleasure.

Quest. 6. What if it be one whose honour and credit countenanceth an ill cause, and his dishonour would disable him to do hurt? Quest. 6.

Answ. You may not belie the Devil, nor wrong the worst Man that is, though under pretence of doing good; God needeth not malice, nor calumnies, nor injustice to his Glory: It is an ill cause that cannot be maintained without such means as these. And when the matter is true, you must have a call to speak it, and you must speak it justly, without unrighteous aggravations, or hiding the better part, which should make the case and person better understood. There is a time and due manner, in which that Mans crimes and just dishonour may be published, whose false reputation injureth the truth. But yet I must say, that a great deal of villany and slander is committed upon this plausible pretence; and that there is scarce a more common cloak for the most inhumane lies and calumnies.

Quest. 7. May I not unlawfully make a true Narration of such matters of fact, as are criminal and dishonourable to offenders? Else no Man may write a true History to posterity of Mens crimes. Quest. 7.

Answ. When you have a just call to do it, you may: But not at your own pleasure. Historians may take much more liberty to speak the truth of the dead, than you may of the living: Though no untruth must be spoken of either: yet the honour of Princes and Magistrates while they are alive is needful to their Government, and therefore must be maintained, oft times by the concealment of their faults: And so proportionably the honour of other Men is needful to a life of love, and peace, and just Society: But when they are dead, they are not subjects capable of a right to any such honour as must be maintained by such silencing of the truth, to the injury of Posterity: And Posterity hath usually a right to historical truth, that good Examples may draw them to imitation, and bad Examples may warn them to take heed of sin. God will have the name of the wicked to rot; and the faults of a Noah, Lot, David, Solomon, Peter, &c. shall be recorded.

corded. Yet nothing unprofitable to posterity may be recorded of the dead, though it be true: nor the faults of Men unnecessarily divulged; much less may the dead be slandered or abused.

Quest. 8. Quest. 8. What if it be one that hath been oft admonished in vain? May not the faults of such a one be mentioned behind his back?

Answ. I confess such a one (the case being proved, and he being notoriously impenitent) hath made a much greater forfeiture of his honour, than other Men: And no Man can save that Mans honour who will cast it away himself. But yet it is not every one that committeth a sin after admonition, who is here to be understood; but such as are impenitent in some mortal or ruling sin: For some may sin oft in a small and controverted point, for want of ability to discern the truth, and some may live in daily infirmities (as the best Men do) which they condemn themselves, and desire to be delivered from. And even the most impenitent Mans sins, must not be medled with, by every one at his pleasure, but only when you have just cause.

Quest. 9. Quest. 9. What if it be one whom I cannot speak to face to face?

Answ. You must let him alone, till you have just cause to speak of him.

Quest. 10. Quest. 10. When hath a Man a just cause and call to open anothers faults?

Answ. Negatively: 1. Not to fill up the time with other idle chat, or table talk. 2. Not to second any Man how good soever who backbiteth others; no, though he pretend to do it to make the sin more odious, or to exercise godly sorrow for other Mens sin. 3. Not when ever interest, passion, faction, or company seemeth to require it. But (Affirmatively) 1. When we may speak it to his face in love and privacy, in due manner and circumstances, as is most hopeful to conduce to his amendment. 2. When after due admonition, we take two or three, and after that tell the Church (in a case that requireth it.) 3. When we have a sufficient cause to accuse him to the Magistrate. 4. When the Magistrate or the Pastors of the Church reprove or punish him. 5. When it is necessary to the preservation of another: As if I see my friend in danger of marrying with a wicked Person, or taking a false Servant, or trading and bargaining with one that is like to over-reach him: or going among cheaters; or going to hear or converse with a dangerous Heretick or Seducer: I must open the faults of those that they are in danger of, so far as their safety and my charity require. 6. When it is any treason or conspiracy against the King or Commonwealth: Where my concealment may be an injury to the King, or damage or danger to the Kingdom. 7. When the Person himself doth by his self-justification force me to it. 8. When his reputation is so built upon the injury of others, and slanders of the just, that the justifying of him is the condemning of the innocent, we may then indirectly, condemn him by vindicating the Just: As if it be in a case of contention between two, if we cannot justifie the right without dishonour to the injurious, there is no remedy but he must bear his blame. 9. When a Mans notorious wickedness hath set him up as a spectacle of warning and lamentation, so that his crimes cannot be hid, and he hath forfeited his reputation, we must give others warning by his fall. (As an Excommunicate Person, or Malefactor at the Gallows, &c.) 10. When we have just occasion to make a bare narrative of some publick matters of fact; as of the Sentence of a Judge, or Punishment of Offenders, &c. 11. When the crime is so heinous, as that all good Persons are obliged to joyn to make it odious, as Phinehas was to execute judgment. As in cases of open Rebellion, Treason, Blasphemy, Atheism, Idolatry, Murders, Perjury, Cruelty: Such as the French Massacre, the Irish far greater Massacre, the murdering of Kings, the Powder-plot, the burning of London, &c. Crimes notorious, should not go about in the months or ears of Men, but with just detestation. 12. When any Persons false reputation is a seducement to Mens Souls, and made by himself or others the instruments of Gods dishonour, and the injury of Church or State, or others, though we may do no unjust thing to blast his reputation, we may tell the truth so far as Justice, or Mercy, or Piety requireth it.

Quest. 11. What if I hear dawbers applauding wicked Men, and speaking well of them, and extenuating their crimes, and praising them for evil doing? Quest. 11.

Answ. You must on all just occasions speak evil of sin: But when that is enough, you need not meddle with the sinner; no not though other Men applaud him, and you know it to be false: For you are not bound to contradict every falshood which you hear. But if in any of the twelve fore-mentioned cases you have a call to do it (as for the preservation of the hearers from a snare thereby; (as if Men commend a Traytor or a wicked Man to draw another to like his way) in such cases you may contradict the false Report.

Quest. 12. Are we bound to reprove every back-biter in this Age, when honest People are grown to make little Conscience of it, but think it their duty to divulge Mens faults? Quest. 12.

Answ. Most of all; that you may stop the Stream of this common sin: Ordinarily when ever we can do it without doing greater hurt, we should rebuke the Tongue that reporteth evil of other Men causelesly behind their backs: For our silence is their encouragement in sin.

Tit. 2. Directions against Backbiting, Slandering and evil Speaking.

Direct. 1. Maintain the life of brotherly Love. Love your Neighbour as your self. Dir. 1.

Direct. 2. Watch narrowly lest interest or passion should prevail upon you. For where these prevail, the Tongue is set on fire of Hell, and will set on fire the course of Nature, Jam. 2. Selfishness and Passion will not only prompt you to speak evil, but also to justifie it, and think you do well; yea, and to be angry with those that will not hearken to you and believe you. Dir. 2.

Direct. 3. Especially involve not your selves in any faction, Religious or Secular. I do not mean, that you should not imitate the best: and hold most intimate communion with them: But that you abhor unlawful divisions and sidings; and when error, or uncharitableness, or carnal interest hath broken the Church into pieces where you live, and one is of Paul, and another of Apollo, and another of Cephas, one of this party, and another of that; take heed of espousing the interest of any party, as it stands cross to the interest of the whole. It would have been hardly credible, if sad experience had not proved it, how commonly and heinously almost every Sect of Christians, do sin in this point against each other. And how far the interest of their Sect, which they account the interest of Christ, will prevail with multitudes, even of zealous People, to belie calumniate, backbite and reproach those that are against their Opinion and their party. Yea, how easily will they proceed beyond Reproaches, to bloody persecutions. He that thinketh that he doth God service by killing Christ or his Disciples, will think that he doth him service by calling him a deceiver, and one that hath a Devil, a Blasphemer, and an enemy to Cæsar, and calling his Disciples pestilent fellows, and movers of Sedition among the People, and accounting them as the filth and off-scouring of the World: That zeal which murdered and destroyed many hundred thousand of the Waldenses and Albigenses, and thirty thousand or forty thousand in one French Massacre, and Dir. 3.

two hundred thousand in one Irish Massacre, and which kindled the Marian Bonefires in England, made the Powder Mine, and burnt the City of London, and keepeth up the Inquisition, I say, that zeal will certainly think it a service to the Church, (that is, their Sect) to write the most odious lies and slanders of Luther, Zuinglius, Calvin, Beza, and any such excellent Servants of the Lord. So full of horrid impudent lies are the Writings of (not one but) many Sects against those that were their chief opposers, that I still admonish all posterity, to see good evidence for it, before they believe the hard Sayings of any factious Historian or Divine, against those that are against his party: It is only Men of eminent conscience, and candour, and veracity, and impartiality, who are to be believed in their bad report of others, except where notoriety or very good evidence doth command belief above their own authority and veracity. A siding factious zeal, which is hotter for any Sect or Party, than for the common Christianity and Catholick Church, is always a railing, a lying, and a slandering zeal, and is notably described, James 3. as earthly, sensual and devilish, causing envy strife, and confusion, and every evil Work.

Dir. 4. Direct. 4. Observe well the Commonness of this sin of Back-biting, that it may make you the more afraid of falling into that which so few do escape. I will not say, among high and low, rich and poor, Court and Countrey, how common is this sin? but among Men professing the greatest Zeal and Strictness in Religion, how few make conscience of it? Mark in all Companies that you come into, how common it is to take liberty to say what they think of all Men, yea, to report what they hear, though they dare not say that they believe it: And how commonly the relating of other Mens faults, and telling what this Man or that Man is, or did, or said, is part of the chat to waste the hour in? And if it be but true, they think they sin not: Nay, nor if they did but hear that it is true. For my part, I must profess, that my conscience having brought me to a custom of rebuking such Backbiters, I am ordinarily censured it, either as one that loveth contradiction, or that defendeth sin and wickedness, by taking part with wicked Men: All because I would stop the course of this common Vice, of evil speaking and backbiting where Men have no call. And I must thankfully profess, that among all other sins in the World, the sins of Selfishness, Pride, and Backbiting, I have been most brought to hate and fear, by the observation of the commonness of them, even in Persons seeming godly: Nothing hath fixed an apprehension of their odiousness so deeply in me, nor engaged my heart against them above all other sins so much, as this lamentable experience of their prevalence in the World, among the more Religious, and not only in the prophane.

Dir. 5. Direct. 5. Take not the honesty of the Person, as a sufficient cause to hear or believe a bad report of others. It is lamentable to hear how far Men otherwise honest, do too often here offend. Suspect evil speakers, and be not over credulous of them. Charity thinketh not evil, nor easily and hastily believeth it. Liars are more used to evil speaking, than Men of truth and credit are. It is no wrong to the best, that you believe him not when he backbiteth without good evidence.

Dir. 6. Direct. 6. Rebuke backbiters, and encourage them not by hearkning to their tales, Prov. 25. 23. The north wind driveth away rain, so doth an angry countenance a backbiting tongue. It may be they think themselves religious Persons, and will take it for an injury to be driven away with an angry countenance: But God himself who loveth his Servants better than we, is more offended at their sin: and that which offendeth him, must offend us: We must not hurt their Souls, and displease God, by drawing upon us the guilt of their sins, for fear of displeasing them. Tell them how God doth hate backbiting, and advise them, if they know any hurt by others, to go to them privately, and tell them of it in a way that tendeth to their repentance.

Direct. 7. Use to make mention of the good which is in others (except it be unseasonable, and will seem to be a promoting of their sin) Gods gifts in every Man deserve commendations; And we have allowance to mention Mens Vertues oftner than to mention their Vices. Indeed when a bad Man is praised in order to the disparagement of the good, or to honour some wicked cause or action against truth and godliness, we must not concur in such malitious praises: But otherwise we must commend that which is truly commendable in all. And this custom will have a double benefit against backbiting: It will use your own Tongues to a contrary course, and it will rebuke the evil Tongues of others, and be an example to them of more charitable language. Dir. 7.

Direct. 8. Understand your selves, and speak often to others, of the sinfulness of evil speaking and backbiting: Shew them the Scriptures which condemn it, and the intrinsecal malignity which is in it: as here followeth. Dir. 8.

Direct. 9. Make conscience of just reproof and exhorting sinners to their faces: Go tell them of it privately and lovingly, and it will have better effects, and bring you more comfort, and cure the sin of backbiting. Dir. 9.

Tit. 3. The evil of backbiting and evil speaking.

§. 1. 1. IT is forbidden of God among the heinous damning sins, and made the Character of a notorious wicked Person, and the avoiding of it is made the mark of such as are accepted of God, and shall be saved, Rom. 1. 29, 30. it is made the mark of a reprobate mind, and joyned with murder and hating God, viz. full of envy, debate, deceit, malignity, whisperers, backbiters: Psal. 15. 2, 3. Lord who shall abide in thy tabernacle? Who shall dwell in thy holy hill? He that backbiteth not with his tongue, nor doth evil to his Neighbour, nor taketh up a reproach against his Neighbour. And when Paul describeth those whom he must sharply rebuke and censure, he just describeth the factious sort of Christians of our times, 2 Cor. 12. 20. For I fear lest when I come, I shall not find you such as I would, and that I shall be found nnto you such as ye would not: Lest there be debates, envyings, wraths, strifes, backbitings, whisperings, swellings, tumults, Eph. 4. 1. Let all bitterness, and wrath, and anger, and clamour, and evil speaking be put away from you, with all malice, and be kind one to another, and tender hearted——

§. 2. 2. It is a sin which gratifieth Satan, and serveth his malice against our Neighbour. He is malicious against all, and speaking evil, and doing hurt, are the Works which are suitable to his malignity? And should a Christian make his tongue the instrument of the accuser of the brethren, to do his work against each other?

§. 3. 3. It signifieth want of Christian love. For love speaketh not evil, nor openeth Mens faults without a cause, but covereth infirmities: Much less will it lie and slander others, and carry about uncertain Reports against them. It is not to do as you would be done by: And how essential Love is to true Christianity, Christ himself hath often told us.

§. 4. 4. It is a sin which directly serveth to destroy the hearers Love, and consequently to destroy their Souls. If the backbiter understood himself, he would confess that it is his very end to cause you to hate (or abate your love to) him whom he speaketh evil of. He that speaketh good of a Man, representeth him amiable: For amiableness and goodness are all one. And he that speaketh evil of a Man representeth him him hateful or unlovely: For hatefulneſs, unlovelineſs and evil are all one. And as it is not the natural way of winning love, to intreat and beg it, and ſay, I pray you love this perſon, or that thing; but to open the goodneſs of the thing or perſon, which will command love. So is it not the natural way to ſtir up hatred, by intreating Men to hate this Man or that; but to tell how bad they are, which will command hatred in them that do believe it. Therefore to ſpeak evil of another, is more than to ſay to the hearers, I pray you hate this Man, or abate your love to him. And that the killing of Love is the killing or deſtroying of Mens Souls, the Apoſtle John doth frequently declare.

§. 5. 5. And it tendeth alſo to deſtroy the Love, and conſequently the Soul of him that you ſpeak evil of. For when it cometh to his hearing (as one way or other it may do) what evil you have reported of him behind his back, it tendeth to make him hate you, and ſo to make him worſe.

§. 6. 6. It is a great make-bate and peace-breaker where ever it is practiſed. It tendeth to ſet People together by the ears; when it is told that ſuch a one ſpake evil of you in ſuch a place; there are then heart-burnings and rehearſals, and ſidings, and ſuch enſuing malice as the Devil intended by this deſign.

§. 7. 7. They that uſe to ſpeak evil of others behind their backs, it is ten to one will ſpeak falſhoods of them when they do not know it. Fame is too ordinarily a lyar, and they ſhall be lyars who will be its meſſengers. How know you whether the thing that you report is true? Is it only becauſe a credible Perſon ſpake it? But how did that Perſon know it to be true? Might he not take it upon truſt as well as you? And might he not take a Perſon to be credible that is not? And how commonly doth Faction, or Intereſt, or Paſſion, or Credulity, make that Perſon incredible in one thing, who is credible in others where he hath no ſuch temptation? If you know it not to be true, or have not ſufficient evidence to prove it, you are guilty of lying and ſlandering interpretatively, though it ſhould prove true: Becauſe it might have been a Lye for ought you knew.

§ 8. 8. It is groſs injuſtice to talk of a Mans faults, before you have heard him ſpeak for himſelf. I know it is uſual with ſuch to ſay, O we have heard it from ſuch, as we are certain will not lye. But he is a fooliſh and unrighteous Judge, that will be peremptory upon hearing one Party only ſpeak, and knoweth not how ordinary it is, for a Man when he ſpeaketh for himſelf, to blow away the moſt confident and plauſible accuſations, and make the caſe appear to be quite another thing. You know not what another Man hath to ſay till you have heard him.

§. 9. 9. Backbiting teacheth others to backbite: Your example inviteth them to do the like: And ſins which are common, are eaſily ſwallowed, and hardly repented of: Men think that the commoneſs juſtifieth or extenuateth the fault.

§. 10. 10. It encourageth ungodly Men to the odious ſin of backbiting and ſlandering the moſt religious righteous perſon. It is ordinary with the Devils family to make Chriſts faithfulleſt Servants their table talk, and the objects of their reproach and ſcorn, and the ſong of drunkards? What abundance of lies go currant among ſuch malignant Perſons, againſt the moſt innocent, which would all be aſhamed, if they had firſt admitted them to ſpeak for themſelves? And ſuch ſlanders and lies are the Devils common means to keep ungodly Men from the love of godlineſs, and ſo from repentance and ſalvation. And backbiting profeſſors of Religion encourage Men to this: For with what meaſure they mete, it ſhall be meaſured to them again. And they that are themſelves evil ſpoken of, will think that they are warranted to requite the backbiters with the like.

§. 11. 11. It is a ſin which commonly excludeth true profitable reproof and exhortation. They that ſpeak moſt behinds Mens backs, do uſually ſay leaſt to the ſinners face, in any way which tendeth to his ſalvation. They will not go lovingly to him in private, and ſet home his ſin upon his Conſcience, and exhort him to repentance: But any thing ſhall ſerve as a ſufficient excuſe againſt this duty; that they may make the ſin of backbiting ſerve inſtead of it: And all is out of carnal ſelf ſaving: They fear Man will be offended if they ſpeak to their faces, and therefore they will whiſper againſt them behind their backs.

§. 12. 12. It is at the leaſt, but idle talk and a miſſpending of your time: What the better are the hearers for hearing of other Mens miſ-doings? And you know that it no whit profiteth the Perſon of whom you ſpeak. A skilful friendly admonition might do him good! But to neglect this, and talk of his faults unprofitably, behind his back, is but to aggravate the ſin of your uncharitableneſs, as being not contented to refuſe your help to a Man in ſin, but you muſt alſo injure him and do him hurt.

CHAP. XXIV.

Caſes and Directions againſt Cenſoriouſneſs and unwarrantable Judging.

Tit. 1. Caſes of Conſcience about Judging of others.

Queſt. 1. AM I not bound to judge truly of every one as he is? Queſt. 1.

Anſw. 1. There are many that you are not bound to meddle with, and to paſs any judgment at all upon. 2. There are many whoſe faults are ſecret, and their virtues open: And of ſuch you cannot judge as they are, becauſe you have no proof or evidence to enable you: You cannot ſee that which is latent in the heart, or done in darkneſs. 3. You neither ought on pretence of charity, nor can believe an evident known untruth of any Man.

Queſt. Doth not Charity bind me to judge Men better than they are?

Anſw. Charity bindeth you, 1. Rather to obſerve the beſt in them, than the worſt: 2. And as I ſaid, to judge of no Mans faults uncalled: 3. Nor to judge of that which is not evident, but out of ſight: And thus conſequently it bindeth you to judge ſome Men to be better than they are: But not directly.

Object. Then a Man is bound to err and believe an untruth.

Anſw. No: You are not bound to believe that it is certainly true, that ſuch a Man is better than he is: Becauſe you have no evidence of its certain truth. But you are bound to believe it a thing probable or veriſimile, likely to be true, by an opinion or fallible humane faith: And this is not a falſhood: For that is likely and probable to you, which hath the more probable evidence, and more for it than againſt it: So that the thing which you are to believe immediately is this propoſition, There is more evidence to me to prove it likely that this Man is ſincere than contrary: And conſequently you believe this, and believe not the contrary, becauſe the contrary hath no evidence But you are not to take it as a certain thing, that the contrary hath no latent reality.

Queſt. 2. How far may I judge ill of one by outward appearances, as by the countenance, geſtures, and other uncertain but ſuſpicious ſigns? Queſt. 2.

Anſw. There are ſome ſigns which are not ſo much as probable, but a little ſuſpicious, and which Men are very ordinarily miſtaken by: As thoſe that will judge of a Man at the firſt look, by his face: And thoſe that will judge a ſtudious, ſerious Perſon (a Lawyer, a Judge, or a Divine) to be moroſe or proud, becauſe they are not complemental; but of few words; or becauſe they have not patience to waſte precious hours in hearing an empty veſſel ſound; found; an ignorant self-conceited Person talk foolishly. Such censures are but the effects of injudiciousness, unrighteousness and rash haste. There are other signs which make it probable to a wise and charitable Person, that the Man is bad (e. g. proud, or covetous, or an hypocrite.) If with these, there are as great sins to make the contrary probable, we must rather incline to the better, than the worse. But if not, we may fear the worst of that Person, but not conclude it as a certainty: And therefore we may not in publick censures, proceed upon such uncertainties, nor venture to divulge them; but only use them to help us for due caution, and pity, and prayer, and endeavour for such a ones recovery and help.

Quest. 3. Quest. 3. How far may I censure upon the report of others?

Answ. According to the degree of the credibility of the Persons, and evidence of the narrative; not simply in themselves, but as compared with all that is to be heard on the contrary part: Else you are partial and unjust.

Quest. 4. Quest. 4. Doth not the fifth Command oblige me in honour to Parents and Princes, to judge them to be better than their lives declare them to be?

Answ. You are gradually to honour them more than others, and therefore to be more afraid of dishonouring them, and must not sit in judgment on them, to believe any harm of them, which evidence doth not compel you to believe: But you are not to judge any sin the less, because it is theirs; nor to judge contrary to evidence, nor to call evil good, nor to be wilfully blind, nor to flatter any in their sin.

Quest. 5. Quest. 5. Whom must we judge for sincere and sanctified Christians?

Answ. 1. All those that profess to be such, whom you cannot disprove. 2. But as there are several degrees of evidence and probability, so must there be several degrees of your good opinion of others. Of some who give you the highest probability, you may have the strongest evidence short of certainty: Of others you may have less; and of some you may have much more fear than hope. 3. And yet in matters of Church-rights and publick communion, your fears will not allow you to use them as no Christians: For their profession of Faith and Repentance is certain: And as long as your fears of their hypocrisie or unsoundness is but uncertain, it must not (on that account) prevail to deprive another of his right.

Quest. 6. Quest. 6. But is not my error my sin, If I prove mistaken, and take that Man for a sincere Christian who is none?

Answ. If you judged it to be certain, your judgment and error was your sin; but if you only judged him a Professor of Christianity, and one that on that account you were bound to have Church-communion with as if he were sincere, because you cannot prove the contrary, this was no error: Or if you erred for want of sufficient evidence to know the truth, this error is not in it self a sin.

Quest. 7. Quest. 7. Whom must I judge a visible member of the Church, with whom I am thus bound to hold communion?

Answ. 1. If you are the Pastor of the Church who are made the Judge, at his admittance by Baptism or afterwards, you must so judge of every one who maketh a credible profession of true Christianity, that is, of his present consent to the Sacramental Covenant: And that profession is credible; which is, 1. Understood by him that maketh it, 2. Deliberate, 3. Voluntary, 4. Seemingly serious, 5. And is not disproved by valid evidence of the contrary. These are the true measures of Church-communion: For every Man, next God, is the Judge of his own heart: And God would have every Man the Chooser or Refuser of his own Mercies.

2. But if you are but a private member of the Church, you are to judge that Person a visible member of the Church, whom the Pastor hath taken in by Baptism, and not cast out again by excommunication: Except the contrary be notorious: And even then you are oft obliged for order sake to carry your self towards him as a visible member, till he be regularly cast out.

Quest. 8. Whom must I judge a true worshipper of God, and whom not? Quest. 8.

Answ. Him that professeth true Christianity, and joineth in true worship with a Christian Church, or privately (when hindered) acknowledgeth the true God in all his Essential Attributes, and heareth his word, and prayeth to him for all things necessary to Salvation; and praiseth him accordingly; not giving the worship proper to God unto any creature: And doth all this as a sinner redeemed by Jesus Christ, trusting in his Merits, Sacrifice and Intercession, and giveth not his Office to any other. And he is a false worshipper who denyeth any essential Attribute of God, or essential part of the Office of Christ, or giveth these to any other! Or refuseth his Word, or excludeth in his Prayers, any thing essential to Christianity, or absolutely necessary to Salvation. But secundum quid, in lesser parts, or in circumstances, or in measures, every Man on earth is a false Worshipper, that is, he offereth God a Worship some way faulty and imperfect: And hath some sin in his Worshipping of God: And sin is a thing that God requireth not, but forbiddeth even in the smallest measures.

Quest. 9. Which must I judge a true Church of Christ, and which a false Church? Quest. 9.

Answ. The Universal Church is but one, and is the whole Society of Christians as united to Christ their only Head: And this cannot be a false Church. But if any other set up an Usurper as the Univer- Head, and so make another Policy and Church, this is a false Church formally, or in its policy: But yet the members of this false Church or Policy may some of them as Christians be also members of the true Church of Christ: And thus the Roman Church as Papal is a false Catholick Church, having the policy of an Usurper: But as Christians they may be members of the true Catholick Church of Christ. But for a particular Church which is but part of the Universal, that is a true Church considered meerly as an ungoverned Community, which is a true part of the Catholick, prepared for a Pastor, but yet being without one: But that only is a true Political Church, which consisteth of professed Christians conjoined under a true Pastor, for Communion in the Profession of true Christianity, and for the true worshipping of God, and orderly walking for their mutual assistance and salvation.

Quest. 10. Whom must we judge true Prophets and Pastors of the Church? Quest. 10.

Answ. He is a true Prophet, who is sent by God, and speaketh truth by immediate supernatural revelation or inspiration. And he is a false Prophet, who either falsly saith, that he hath Divine revelations or inspiration, or propheseth falshood as from God. And he is a true Pastor at the Bar of God, who is, 1. Competently qualified with abilities for the Office. 2. Competently disposed to it, with willingness and desire of success: And hath right ends in undertaking and discharging it. 3. Who hath a just admission, by true Ordination of Pastors, and consent of the flock: And he is to be accounted a true Pastor in foro Ecclesiæ, in the Churches judgment, whom the Church judgeth to have all these qualifications, and thereupon admitteth him into possession of the place, till his incapacity be notoriously or publickly and sufficiently proved, or he be removed or made uncapable.

Tit. 2. Directions for the cure of ſinful Cenſoriouſneſs.

Dir. 1. Direct. 1. MEddle not at all in judging of others without a call. Know firſt whether it be any of your work. If not, be afraid of thoſe words of your Judge, Matth. 7. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5. Judge not, that ye be not judged: For with what judgment you judge, you ſhall be judged, &c. And Rom. 14. 4. Who art thou that judgeſt another mans ſervant? To his own Maſter he ſtandeth or falleth. And verſ. 10. & 13. But why doſt thou judge thy brother? Or why doſt thou ſet at nought thy brother? We ſhall all ſtand before the Judgment Seat of Chriſt ——Every one of us ſhall give account of himſelf to God. Let us not therefore judge one another any more. 1 Cor. 4. 3, 4, 5. But with me it is a very ſmall thing that I ſhould be judged of you, or of mans judgment——Therefore judge nothing before the time till the Lord come, who both will bring to light the hidden things of darkneſs, and will make manifeſt the counſels of the hearts——Col. 2. 16. Let no man judge you in meat or in drink, or in reſpect of any holy day, or of the New Moon, or Sabbath.

Queſt. But when have I a call to judge another?

Anſw. You may take the anſwer to this from the anſwer to Queſt. 10. Chap. 2. 3. Tit. 1. 1. If your Office and Place require it, as a Magiſtrate, Paſtor, Parent, Maſter, Tutor, &c. 2. If the ſafety of the Church, or your Neighbour do require it. 3. If the good of the ſinner require it that you may ſeek his repentance and reformation: 4. If your own preſervation or welfare (or any other duty) require it.

Dir. 2. Direct. 2. Keep up an humble ſenſe of your own faults, and that will make you compaſſionate to others. He that is truly vile in his own eyes is leaſt inclined to vilifie others: And he that judgeth himſelf with the greateſt penitent ſeverity, is the leaſt inclined to be cenſorious to his Brother. Pride is the common cauſe of cenſoriouſneſs: He that ſaith with the Phariſee, I faſt twice a week, and pay tythe of all that I have, I am no Adulterer, &c. will alſo ſay, I am not as other men, nor as this Publican: When the true penitent findeth ſo much of his own to be condemned, that he ſmiteth on his own Breaſt and ſaith, God be merciful to me a ſinner. The prouder ſelf-conceited ſort of Chriſtians are ever the moſt cenſorious of their Neighbours.

Dir. 3. Direct. 3. Be much therefore at home in ſearching, and watching, and amending your own hearts: And then you will find ſo much to do about your ſelves, that you will have no mind or leiſure to be cenſuring others: Whereas the ſuperficial hypocrite whoſe Religion is in externals, and is unacquainted with his Heart and Heaven, is ſo little employed in the true work of a Chriſtian, that he hath leiſure for the work of a cenſorious Phariſee.

Dir. 4. Direct. 4. Labour for a deep experimental inſight into the nature of Religion, and of every duty. For no Men are ſo cenſorious as the ignorant who know not what they ſay: Whilſt experienced Perſons know thoſe difficulties and other reaſons which calm their minds. As in common buſineſs, no Man will ſooner find fault with a workman in his work, than idle praters who leaſt underſtand it. So is it commonly in matters of Religion: Women and young Men that never ſaw into the great myſteries of Divinity, but have been lately changed from a vicious Life, and have neither acquaintance with the hard points of Religion, nor with their own ignorance of them, are the common proud cenſurers of their brethren much wiſer than themſelves, and of all Men that are more moderate and peaceable than themſelves, and are more addicted to Unity, and more averſe to Sects and Separations than they. Study harder, and wait till you grow up to the experience of the aged, and you will be leſs cenſorious, and more peaceable.

Dir. 5. Direct. 5. Think not your ſelves fit Judges of that which you underſtand not: And think not proudly that you are like to underſtand the difficulties in Religion, with your ſhort and lazy ſtudies, than thoſe that in reading, meditation and prayer have ſpent their lives in ſearching after them. Let not Pride make you abuſe the Holy Ghoſt, by pretending that he hath given you more wiſdom in a little time, and with little means and diligence, than your betters have by the holy induſtry of their lives: Say not, God can give more to you in a year, than to others in twenty. For it is a poor argument to prove that God hath done it, becauſe he can do it. He can make you an Angel, but that will not prove you one. Prove your wiſdom before you pretend to it, and over-value it not: Heb. 5. 11, 12. ſheweth that it is Gods ordinary way to give Men wiſdom according to their time and means, unleſs their own negligence deprive them of his bleſſing.

Dir. 6. Direct. 6. Study to keep up Chriſtian Love, and to keep it lively: For Love is not cenſorious, but is inclined to judge the beſt, till evidence conſtrain you to the contrary. Cenſoriouſneſs is a Vermine which crawleth in the carkaſs of Chriſtian Love, when the life of it is gone.

Dir. 7. Direct. 7. Value all Gods graces in his ſervants: And then you will ſee ſomething to love them for, when hypocrites can ſee nothing: Make not too light of ſmall degrees of grace, and then your cenſure will not overlook them.

Dir. 8. Direct. 8. Remember the tenderneſs of Chriſt, Who condemneth not the weak, nor caſteth Infants out of his Family, nor the diſeaſed out of his Hoſpital; but dealeth with them in ſuch a gracious gentleneſs, as beſeemeth a tender hearted Saviour: He will not break the bruiſed Reed: He carrieth his Lambs in his Arms, and gently driveth thoſe with young! He taketh up the wounded Man, when the Prieſt and Levite paſs him by. And have you not need of the tenderneſs of Chriſt your ſelves as well as others? Are you not afraid leſt he ſhould find greater faults with you, than you find in others? And condemn you as you condemn them?

Dir. 9. Direct. 9. Let the ſenſe of the common corruption of the World, and imperfection of the godly moderate your particular cenſures. As Seneca ſaith, To cenſure a Man for that which is common to all Men, is in a ſort to cenſure him for being a Man; which beſeemeth not him that is a Man himſelf. Do you not know the frailty of the beſt, and the common pravity of humane nature? How few are there that muſt not have great allowance, or elſe they will not paſs for currant in the ballance. Elias was a Man ſubject to paſſions: Jonah to pievifhneſs: Job had his impatiency: Paul ſaith even of the Teachers of the Primitive Church They all (that were with him) ſeek their own, and not the things of Jeſus Chriſt. What blots are charged on almoſt all the Churches, and almoſt all the holy Perſons, mentioned throughout all the Scriptures? Learn then of Paul a better leſſon than cenſoriouſneſs, Gal. 6. 1. Brethren if a man be overtaken in a fault; ye which are ſpiritual reſtore ſuch a one in the ſpirit of meekneſs; conſidering thy ſelf, leſt thou alſo be tempted. Bear ye one anothers burdens, and ſo fulfil the Law of Chriſt. Let every man prove his own work, and then he ſhall have rejoicing in himſelf alone, &c.

Dir. 10. Direct. 10. Remember that judgment it Gods prerogative (further than as we are called to it for the performance of ſome duty, either of Office, or of private Charity or Self-preſervation:) And that the Judge is at the door! And that judging unmercifully maketh us lyable to Judgment without mercy. The foreſight of that near univerſal Judgment, which will paſs the doom on us and all Men, will do much to cure us of our raſh cenſoriouſneſs.

Dir. 11. Direct. 11. Peruſe and obſerve all the Directions in the the laſt Chapter againſt evil ſpeaking and backbiting, that I may not need to repeat them: Eſpecially avoid 1. The ſnare of ſelfiſhneſs and intereſt: For moſt Men judge of others principally by their own intereſt: He is the good Man that is good to them, or is on their ſide; that loveth and honoureth them, and anſwereth their deſires: This is the common falſe judgment of the corrupted ſelfiſh World; who vilifie and hate the beſt, becauſe they ſeem unſuitable to them and their carnal intereſt: Therefore take heed of their judgment about any Man that you have a falling out with: For it is two to one but you will wrong him through this ſelfiſhneſs. 2. Avoid Paſſion; which blindeth the judgment. 3. Avoid Faction; which maketh you judge of all Men as they agree or diſagree with your opinions, or your ſide and party. 4. Avoid too haſty belief of cenſures, and rebuke them. 5. Hear every Man ſpeak for himſelf before you cenſure him, if it be poſſible, and the caſe be not notorious.

Dir. 12 Direct. 12. Keep ſtill upon your mind a juſt and deep apprehenſion of the malignity of this ſin, of raſh cenſuring: It is of greateſt conſequence to the mortifying of any ſin, what apprehenſions of it are upon the mind. If religious Perſons apprehended the odiouſneſs of this as much as they do of ſwearing, drunkenneſs, fornication, &c. they would as carefully avoid it: Therefore I ſhall ſhew you the malignity of this ſin.

Tit. 3. The evil of the ſin of Cenſoriouſneſs.

§. 1. 1. IT is an uſurpation of Gods Prerogative, who is the Judge of all the World: It is a ſtepping up into his Judgment Seat, and undertaking his work, as if you ſaid, I will be God as to this action: And if he be called, The Anti-chriſt who uſurpeth the Office of Chriſt, to be the Univerſal Monarch and head of the Church, you may imagine what he doth, who (though but in one point) doth ſet up himſelf in the place of God.

§. 2. 2. They that uſurp not Gods part in judging, yet ordinarily uſurp the part of the Magiſtrate or Paſtors of the Church. As when miſtaken cenſorious Chriſtians refuſe to come to the Sacrament of Communion, becauſe many Perſons are there whom they judge to be ungodly, what do they but uſurp the Office of the Paſtors of the Church? To whom the Keys are committed for admiſſion and excluſion? And ſo are the appointed Judges of that caſe? The duty of private members is but to admoniſh the offender firſt ſecretly, and then, before witneſſes, and to tell the Church if he repent not, and humbly to tell the Paſtors of their duty, if they neglect it: And when this is done, they have diſcharged their part, and muſt no more excommunicate Men themſelves, than they muſt hang Thieves when the Magiſtrate doth neglect to hang them.

§. 3. 3. Cenſoriouſneſs ſignifieth the abſence or decay of Love: Which inclineth Men to think evil, and judge the worſt, and aggravate infirmities, and overlook or extenuate any good that is in others. And there is leaſt grace where there is leaſt love.

§. 4. 4. It ſheweth alſo much want of ſelf-acquaintance, and ſuch heart-employment as the ſincereſt Chriſtians are taken up with. And it ſheweth much want of Chriſtian humility and ſenſe of your own infirmities and badneſs; and much prevalency of Pride and Self-conceitedneſs: If you knew how ignorant you are, you would not be ſo peremptory in judging: And if you knew how bad you are, you would not be ſo forward to condemn your Neighbours. So that here is together the effect of much Self-eſtrangedneſs, Hypocriſie and Pride: Did you ever well conſider the mind of Chriſt, when he bid them that accuſed the adulterous Woman, John 8. 7. He that is without ſin among you, let him firſt caſt a ſtone at her? Certainly Adultery was a heinous ſin, and to be puniſhed with death, and Chriſt was no Patron of uncleanneſs: But he knew that it was an hypocritical ſort of Perſons whom he ſpake to, who were buſie in judging others rather than themſelves. Have you ſtudied his words againſt raſh cenſurers, Matth. 7. 3, 4. And why beholdeſt thou the mote in thy brothers eye, but conſidereſt not the beam that is in thine own eye? Or how wilt thou ſay to thy brother, Let me pull out the mote out of thine eye; and behold a beam is in thine own eye? Thou hypocrite! firſt caſt out the beam out of thine own eye and then ſhalt thou ſee clearly to caſt out the mote which it in thy brothers eye. I know well that impenitent ſinners do uſe to pervert all theſe words of Chriſt, againſt any that would bring them to repentance for their ſin: And account all Men raſh cenſurers, who would make them acquainted with their unſanctified hearts and lives. But it is not their abuſe of Scripture, which will juſtifie our overpaſſing it with neglect: Chriſt ſpake it not for nothing; and it muſt be ſtudied by his Diſciples.

§. 5. 5. Cenſoriouſneſs is injuſtice, in that the cenſurers would not be ſo cenſured themſelves: You will ſay, Yes, if we were as bad, and did deſerve it. But though you have not that ſame fault, have you no other? And are you willing to have it aggravated, and be thus raſhly judged? You do not as you would be done by: Yea, commonly cenſurers are guilty of falſe judging; and whilſt they take things haſtily upon truſt, and ſtay not to hear Men ſpeak for themſelves, or to enquire throughly into the cauſe, they commonly condemn the innocent; and call good evil, and put light for darkneſs; and take away the righteouſneſs of the righteous from him, when God hath curſed ſuch with a woe.

§. 6. 6. And falſe cenſuring is the proper work of the Devil, the accuſer of the brethren, Rev. 12. 10. Who accuſeth them before God, day and night! And Chriſtians ſhould not bear his Image, nor do his work.

§. 7. 7. Cenſoriouſneſs is contrary to the Nature and Office of Jeſus Chriſt: He came to pardon ſin, and cover the infirmities of his Servants, and to caſt them behind his back, and into the depth of the Sea, and to bury them in his grave: And it is the cenſurers work to rake them up, and to make them ſeem more and greater than they are, and to bring them into the open light.

§. 8. 8. Cenſoriouſneſs cauſeth uncharitableneſs and ſinful ſeparations in the cenſurers: When they have conceited their brethren to be worſe than they are, they muſt then reproach them or have no communion with them, and avoid them as too bad for the company of ſuch as they. Or when they have uſurped the Paſtors work in judging, they begin the execution by ſinful ſeparation.

§. 9. 9. Cenſoriouſneſs is an infectious ſin, which eaſily taketh with the younger and prouder ſort of Chriſtians, and ſo ſetteth them on vilifying others: And at this little gap there entereth all uncharitableneſs, backbitings, revilings, Church-diviſions, and Sects, yea, and too often rebellious and bloody Wars at laſt.

§ 10. 10. Cenſoriouſneſs is a ſore temptation to them that are cenſured, either to contemn ſuch as cenſure them and go on the other hand too far from them; or elſe to comply with the errors and ſinful humours of the cenſurers, and to ſtrain their conſciences to keep pace with the cenſorious.

And here I muſt leave it on record to poſterity for their warning, that the great and lamentable actions, changes and calamities of this age have ariſen (next to groſs impiety) from this ſin of cenſoriouſneſs producing theſe two contrary effects, and thereby dividing Men into two contrary parties: The younger ſort of Religious People, and the more ignorant, and many Women, having more zeal than judgment, placed too much of their Religion in a ſharp oppoſition to all all Ceremonies, Formalities and Opinions which they thought unlawful; and were much inclined to Schism and unjust Separations upon that account. And therefore censured such things as Antichristian, and those that used them as superstitious or temporizers: And no Mans Learning, Piety, Wisdom or Laboriousness in the Ministry, could save him from these sharp reproachful Censures. Hereupon one Party had not Humility and Patience enough to endure to be so judged of; nor love and tenderness enough for such peevish Christians, to bear with them in pity, as Parents do with froward Infants; but because these professed holiness and zeal, even holiness and zeal were brought under suspicion for their sakes; and they were taken to be Persons intolerable, as unfit to lie in any building, and unmeet to submit to Christian Government; and therefore meet to be used accordingly. Another sort were so wearied with the prophaneness and ungodliness of the vulgar rabble, and saw so few that were judiciously religious, that they thought it their duty to love and cherish the zeal and piety of their censorious weak ones, and to bear patiently with their frowardness, till ripeness and experience cured them (And so far they were right.) And because they thought that they could do them no good, if they once lost their interest in them (and were also themselves too impatient of their censure) some of them seemed (to please them) to be more of their opinion than they were; and more of them forbore to reprove their petulancy, but silently suffered them to go on; especially when they fell into the Sects of Antinomians, Anabaptists and Separatists, they durst not reprove them as they deserved, lest they should drive them out of the Hive, to some of these late swarms. And thus censoriousness in the ignorant and self-conceited, drove away one part to take them as their Enemies; and silenced or drew on another party to follow them that led the Van in some irregular violent Actions; and the wise and sober moderators were disregarded, and in the noise of these tumults and contentions could not be heard, till the smart of either party in their Suffering forced them to honour such; whom in their exaltation again they despised or abused. This is the true Sum of all the Tragedies in Britain of this Age.

Tit. 4. Directions for those that are rashly censured.

Dir. 1. Direct. 1. REmember when you are injured by Censures, that God is now trying your Humility, Charity and Patience: And therefore be most studious to exercise and preserve these three. 1. Take heed lest Pride make you disdainful to the censurers: A humble Man can bear contempt: Hard Censures hurt Men so far as they are proud. 2. Take heed least imbecillity add to your impatience, and concur with Pride: Cannot you bear greater things than these? Impatience will disclose that badness in your selves, which will make you censured much more: And it will shew you as weak in one respect as the Censurers are in another. 3. Take heed lest their fault do not draw you to overlook or undervalue that serious godliness which is in many of the censorious: And that you do not presently judge them Hypocrites or Schismaticks, and abate your charity to them, or incline to handle them more roughly than the tenderness of Christ alloweth you. Remember that in all Ages it hath been thus: The Church hath had peevish Children within, as well as persecuting Enemies without: Insomuch as Paul, Rom. 14. giveth you the Copy of these times, and giveth them this counsel, which from him I am giving you. The weak in knowledge were censorious and judged the strong. The strong in knowledge were weak in Charity, and contemned the weak: Just as now one party saith, [These are superstitious Persons, and Anti-christian:] The other saith, [What giddy Schismaticks are these? But Paul chideth them both; one sort for censuring, and the other for despising them.

Direct. 2. Take heed lest whilst you are impatient under their Censures, you fall into the same sin your selves: Do they censure you for differing in some Forms or Ceremonies from them. Take heed lest you over censure them for their censoriousness: If you censure them as Hypocrites who censure you as superstitious, you condemn your selves while you are condemning them. For why will not censuring too far, prove you Hypocrites also, if it prove them such? Dir. 2.

Direct. 3. Remember that Christ beareth with their weakness, who is wronged by it more than you, and is more against it. He doth not quit his title to them for their frowardness, nor cease his love, nor turn every Infant out of his Family that will cry and wrangle, nor every Patient out of his Hospital that doth complain and groan: And we must imitate our Lord, and love where he loveth, and pity where he pitieth, and be merciful as our heavenly Father is merciful. Dir. 3.

Direct. 4. Remember how amiable a thing the least degree of Grace is, even when it is clouded and blotted with Infirmities. It is the Divine nature, and the Image of God, and the Seed of Glory: And therefore as an Infant hath the noble nature of a Man, and in all his weakness is much more honourable than the best of Brutes (so that it is death to kill an Infant, but not a beast:) So is the most infirm and froward true Christian more honourable and amiable than the most splendid Infidel. Bear with them in love and honour to the Image and Interest of Christ. Dir. 4.

Direct. 5. Remember that you were once weak in Grace your selves; And if happy Education under peaceable Guides did not prevent it, it is two to one but you were your selves censorious. Bear therefore with others as you bear with crying Childaen, because you were once a Child your self. Not that the sin is ever the better, but you should be the more compassionate. Dir. 5.

Direct. 6. Remember that your own strength and judgment is so great a mercy, that you should the easilier bear with a censorious tongue. The rich and noble can bear with the envious, remembring that it is happy to have that worth or felicity which Men do envy. You suffer fools gladly seeing you your selves are wise. If you are in the right let losers talk. Dir. 6.

Direct. 7. Remember that we shall be shortly together in Heaven, where they will recant their censures, and you will easily forgive them, and perfectly love them. And will not the foresight of such a meeting cause you to bear with them, and forgive and love them now? Dir. 7.

Direct. 8. Remember how inconsiderable a thing it is as to your own interest, to be judged of Man: and that you stand or fall to the judgment of the Lord. 1 Cor. 4. 3, 4. What are you the better or the worse for the thoughts or words of a Man? When your Salvation or damnation lieth upon Gods Judgment. It is too much Hypocrisie, to be too much desirous of Mans esteem and approbation, and too much troubled at his disesteem and censure, and not to be satisfied with the approbation of God. Read what is written against Man-pleasing, Tom. 1. Dir. 8.

Direct. 9. Make some advantage of other Mens censures, for your own proficiency. If good Men censure you, be not too quick in concluding that you are innocent, and justifying your selves: But be suspicious of your selves: lest they should prove the right, and examine your selves with double diligence. If you find that you are clear in the point that you are censured for, suspect and examine lest some other sin hath provoked God to try you by these censures: And if you find not any other notable fault, let it make you the more watchful by way of prevention, seeing the eyes of God and Men are on you; and it may be Gods warning, to bid you take heed for the time to come. If you are thus brought to repent- Dir. 9.

ance, or to the more careful life, by occasion of Mens censures, they will prove so great a benefit to you, that you may bear them the more easily.

CHAP. XXV.

Cases and Directions about Trusts and Secrets.

Tit. 1. Cases of Conscience about Trusts and Secrets.

Quest. 1. Quest. 1. How are we forbidden to put our Trust in Man? And how may it be done?

Answ. 1. You must not trust Man for more than his proportion, and what belongs to Man to do: You must not expect that from him which God alone can do. 2. You must not trust a bad unfaithful Man to do that which is proper to a good and faithful Man to do. 3. You must not trust the best Man being imperfect and fallible, as fully as if you supposed him perfect and infallible: But having to do with a corrupted World we must live in it with some measure of distrust to all Men (For all that Cicero thought this contrary to the Laws of friendship.) But especially ignorant, dishoneſt and fraudulent Men must be most distrusted. As Bucholtzer said to his friend that was going to be a Courtier, Commendo tibi fidem diabolorum, Crede & Contremisce: He that converseth with diabolical Men, must believe them no further than is due to the Children of the Father of lies. But we must trust Men as Men, according to the Principles of Veracity that are left in corrupted nature: And we must trust Men so far as reason sheweth us cause, from their skill, fidelity, honesty or interest: So a Surgeon, a Physician, a Pilot may be trusted with our lives: And the skilfuller and faithfuller any Man is, the more he is to be trusted.

Quest. 2. Quest. 2. Whom should a Man chose for a matter of trust?

Answ. As the matter is: One that hath wisdom, skill and fidelity, through conscience, honesty, friendship or his own apparent interest.

Quest. 3. Quest. 3. In what cases may I commit a secret to another?

Answ. When there is a necessity of his knowing it, or a greater probability of good than hurt by it, in the evidence which a prudent Man may see.

Quest. 4. Quest. 4. What if another commit a thing to me with charge of Secresie, and I say nothing to him, and so promise it not: Am I bound to Secresie in that case?

Ans. If you have cause to believe that he took your silence for consent, And would not else have committed it to you, you are obliged in point of fidelity, as well as friendship: except it be with robbers or such as we are not bound to deal openly with, and on terms of equality.

Quest. 5. Quest. 5. What if it be a secret, but I am under no command or promise at all about it?

Answ. You must then proceed accord to the Laws of Charity and friendship: And not reveal that which is to the injury of another, without a greater cause.

Quest. 6. Quest. 6. What if it be against the King, or State, or common good?

Answ. You are bound to reveal it, so far as the safety of the King, or State, or common good requireth it: Yea, though you swear the contrary.

Quest. 7. Quest. 7. What if it be only against the good of some third ordinary Person?

Answ. You must endeavour to prevent his wrong, either by revealing the thing, or dissuading from it, or by such means as prudence shall tell you is the meetest, by exercising your love to one, without doing wrong to the other.

Quest. 8. Quest. 8. What if a Man secretly entrust his estate to me, for himself or Children, when he is in debt, to defraud his Creditors?

Answ. You ought not to take such a trust: And if you have done it, you ought not to hold it, but resign it to him that did entrust you. Yea, and to disclose the fraud, for the righting of the Creditors, except it be in such a case as that the Creditor is some such vicious or oppressing Person, as you are not obliged to exercise that act of Charity for; or when the consequents of revealing it, will be a greater hurt, than the righting of him will compensate; especially when it is against the publick good.

Quest. 9. What if a delinquent entrust me with his Estate or Person to secure it from penalty? Quest. 9.

Answ. If it be one that is prosecuted by a due course of Justice, cujus pœna debetur reipublicæ, whose punishment the common good requireth, the case must be decided as the former: You must not take, nor keep such a trust. But if it be one whose repentance giveth you reason to believe, that his impunity will be more to the common good than his punishment, and that if the Magistrate knew it, he ought to spare or pardon him, in this case you may conceal his Person or Estate; so be it you do it not by a lie, or any other sinful means, or such as will do more hurt than good.

Quest. 10. What if a friend entrust me with his Estate to secure it from some great Taxes or Tributes to the King? May I keep such a trust or not? Quest. 10.

Answ. No; if they be just and legal Taxes, for the maintenance of the Magistrate or preservation of the Common-wealth: But if it be done by an Usurper that hath no Authority, (or done without or beyond Authority, the oppressing of the subject) you may conceal his Estate or your own by lawful means.

Quest. 11. What if a Man that suffereth for Religion, commit his Person or Estate to my trust? Quest. 11.

Answ. You must be faithful to your trust. 1. If it be true Religion and a good cause for which he suffereth. 2. Or if he be falsly accused of abuses in Religion. 3. Or if he be faulty; but the penalty intended from which you secure him is incomparably beyond his fault and unjust. Supposing still that you save him only by lawful means, and that it be not like to tend to do more hurt than good, to the cause of Religion or the Common-wealth.

Quest. 12. What if a Papist or other erronious Person entrust me (being of the same mind (to educate his Children in that way when he is dead? and afterward I come to see the error, must I perform that trust or no? Quest. 12.

Answ. No: 1. Because no trust can oblige you to do hurt. 2. Because it is contrary to the primary intent of your friend; which was his Childrens good. And you may well suppose that had he seen his error, he would have entrusted you to do accordingly: You are bound therefore to answer his primary intention, and truly to endeavour his Childrens good.

Quest. 13. But what if a Man to whom another hath entrusted his Children, turn Papist or Heretick, and so thinketh error to be truth? what must be do? Quest. 13.

Ans. He is bound to turn back again to the truth, and do accordingly.

Object. But one saith this is the truth and another that; And he thinketh he is right.

Answ. There is but one of the contraries true. Mens thinking themselves to be in the right doth not make it so: And God will not change his Laws, because they misunderstand or break them: Therefore still that which God binded them to is to return unto the truth? And if they think that to be truth which is not, they are bound to think otherwise. If you say, They cannot, It is either not true, or it is long of themselves that they cannot: And they that cannot immediately, yet mediately can do it, in the due use of means.

Quest. 14. What if I foresee that the taking a trust may hazard my Estate, or otherwise hurt me, and yet my dying (or living) friend desireth it? Quest. 14.

Answ.

Answ. How far the Law of Christianity or friendship oblige you to hurt your self for his good, must be discerned by a prudent considering, what your Obligations are to the Person, and whether the good of your granting his desires, or the hurt to your self is like to be the greater, and of more publick consequence: And whether you injure not your own Children or others by gratifying him: And upon such comparison, prudence must determine the case.

Quest. 15. Quest. 15. But what if afterward the trust prove more to my hurt than I foresaw?

Answ. If it was your own fault that you foresaw it not, you must suffer proportionably for that fault: But otherwise you must compare your own hurt with the Orphans, in case you do not perform the trust: And consider whether they may not be relieved another way: And whether you have reason to think that if the Parent were alive and knew your danger, he would expect you should perform your trust, or would discharge you of it. If it be some great and unexpected dangers, which you think upon good grounds the Parent would acquit you from if he were living, you fulfil your trust, if you avoid them, and do that which would have been his will if he had known it. Otherwise you must perform your promise though it be to your loss and suffering.

Quest. 16. Quest. 16. But what if it was only a trust imposed by his desire and will, without my acceptance or promise to perform it?

Answ. You must do as you would be done by, and as the common good, and the Laws of love and friendship do require. Therefore the quality of the Person, and your obligations to him, and especially the comparing of the consequent good and evil together must decide the case.

Quest. 17. Quest. 17. What if the surviving kindred of the Orphan be nearer to him than I am, and they censure me and calumniate me as injurious to the Orphane, may I not ease my self of the trust, and cast it upon them?

Answ. In this case also, the measure of your suffering must first be compared with the measure of the Orphans good: and then your conscience must tell you whether you verily think the Parent who entrusted you, would discharge you if he were alive and knew the case: If he would, though you promised, it is to be supposed, that it was not the meaning of his desire or your promise, to incur such suffering: And if you believe that he would not discharge you if he were alive, then if you promised you must perform; But if you promised not, you must go no farther than the Law of Love requireth.

Quest. 18. Quest. 18. What is a Minister of Christ to do, if a penitent Person confess secretly some heinous or capital crime to him (as Adultery, Theft, Robbery, Murder:) Must it be concealed or not?

Answ. 1. If a purpose of sinning be antecedently confessed, it is unlawful to farther the crime, or give opportunity to it by a concealment: But it must be so far opened as is necessary for the prevention of anothers wrong, or the Persons sin, especially if it be Treason against the King, or Kingdom, or any thing against the common good.

2. When the punishment of the offender is apparently necessary to the good of others, especially to right the King or Countrey, and to preserve them from danger by the offender or any other, it is a duty to open a past fault that is confessed, and to bring the offender to punishment, rather than injure the innocent by their impunity.

3. When Restitution is necessary to a Person injured, you may not by concealment hinder such Restitution; but must procure it to your power where it may be had.

4. It is unlawful to promise Universal secresie absolutely to any penitent. But you must tell him before he confesseth [If your crime be such as that opening it is necessary to the preservation or righting of King, or Countrey, or your Neighbour, or to my own safety, I shall not conceal it.] That so Men may know how far to trust you.

5. Yet in some rare cases, (as the preservation of our Parents, King or Countrey) it may be a duty to promise and perform concealment, when there is no hurt like to follow, but the loss or hazard of our own Lives, or Liberties or Estates: And consequently if no hurt be like to follow but some private loss of another, which I cannot prevent without a greater hurt.

6. If a Man ignorant of the Law and of his own danger, have rashly made a promise of Secresie, and yet be in doubt, he should open the case in hypothesi, only to some honest able Lawyer, enquiring if such a case should be, what the Law requireth of the Pastor, or what danger he is in if he conceal it: that he may be able farther to judge of the case.

7. He that made no promise of Secresie, virtual or actual, may cæteris paribus bring the offender to shame or punishment rather than fall into the like himself for the concealment.

8. He that rashly promised universal Secresie, must compare the penitents danger and his own, and consider whose Suffering is like to be more to the publick detriment all things considered, and that must be first avoided.

9. He that findeth it his duty to reveal the crime to save himself, must yet let the penitent have notice of it, that he may flie and escape; unless as aforesaid, when the Interest of the King or Countrey or others, doth more require his punishment.

10. But when there is no such necessity of the offenders punishment, for the prevention of the hurt or wrong of others, nor any great danger by concealment to the Minister himself, I think that the Crime, though it were capital, should be concealed: My reasons are,

1. Because though every Man be bound to do his best to prevent sin, yet every Man is not bound to bring offenders to punishment: He that is no Magistrate, nor hath a special call so to do, may be in many cases not obliged to it.

2. It is commonly concluded that (in most cases) a capital offender is not bound to bring himself to punishment: And that which you could not know but by his free confession, is confest to you only on your promise of concealment, seemeth to me to put you under no other obligation to bring him to punishment than he is under himself.

3. Christs words and practice, in dismissing the Woman taken in Adultery sheweth that it is not always a duty, for one that is no Magistrate to prosecute a capital offender, but that sometime his repentance and life may be preferred.

4. And Magistrates pardons shew the same.

5. Otherwise no sinner would have the benefit of a Counsellor to open his troubled conscience to: For if it be a duty to detect a great crime in order to a great punishment, Why not a less also in order to a less punishment. And who would confess when it is to bring themselves to punishment.

11. In those Countreys where the Laws allow Pastors to conceal all Crimes that penitents freely confess, it is left to the Pastors Judgment to conceal all that he discerneth may be concealed without the greater injury of others, or of the King or Commonwealth.

12. There is a knowledge of the faults of others, by common fame, especially many years after the committing, which doth not oblige the hearers to prosecute the offender. And yet a crime publickly known is more to be punished (lest impunity emboldén others to the like) than an unknown crime, revealed in confession.

Tit. 2. Directions about Truſts and Secrets.

Dir. 1. Direct. 1. BE not raſh in receiving ſecrets, or any other truſts: But firſt conſider what you are thereby obliged to, and what difficulties may ariſe in the performance; and foreſee all the conſequents as far as is poſſible, before you undertake the truſt; that you caſt not your ſelves into ſnares by meer inconſiderateneſs, and prepare not for perplexities and repentance.

Dir. 2. Direct. 2. Be very careful what Perſons you commit either truſts or ſecrets to: And be ſure they be truſty by their wiſdom, ability and fidelity.

Dir. 3. Quod taciturn eſſe velis nemini dixeris. Si tibi non imperaſti, quomodo ab alio ſilentium ſperas? Martin. Dumienſ. de morib. Direct. 3. Be not too forward in revealing your own ſecrets to anothers truſt: For, 1. You cannot be certain of any ones Secreſie, where you are moſt confident. 2. You oblige your ſelf too much to pleaſe that Perſon, who by revealing your Secrets may do you hurt: And are in fear leſt careleſneſs, or unfaithfulneſs or any accident ſhould diſcloſe it. 3. You burden your friend with the charge and care of Secreſie.

Direct. 4. Be faithful to your friend that doth entruſt you; remembring that perfidiouſneſs or falſeneſs to a friend, is a crime againſt humanity, and all Society, as well as againſt Chriſtianity; and ſtigmatizeth the guilty in the eyes of all Men, with the brand of an odious unſociable Perſon.

Dir. 5. Direct. 5. Be not intimate with too many, nor confident in too many: For he that hath too many intimates, will be opening the Secrets of one to another.

Dir. 6. Direct. 6. Abhor Covetouſneſs and Ambition: Or elſe a bribe or the promiſe of preferment, will tempt you to perfidiouſneſs. There is no truſting a ſelfiſh worldly Man.

Dir. 7. Direct. 7. Remember that God is the avenger of perfidiouſneſs, who will do it ſeverely: And that even they that are pleaſed and ſerved by it, do yet ſecretly diſdain and deteſt the Perſon that doth it: becauſe they would not be ſo uſed themſelves

Dir. 8. Direct. 8. Yet take not friendſhip or fidelity to be an obligation to perfidiouſneſs to God or the King or Commonwealth or to another, or to any ſin whatſoever.

CHAP. XXVI.

Directions againſt Selfiſhneſs as it is contrary to the love of our Neighbour.

§. 1. THE two Tables of the Law, are ſummed up by our Saviour in two comprehenſive Precepts: Thou ſhalt Love the Lord thy God, with all thy heart and ſoul and might, and Thou ſhalt love thy Neighbour as thy ſelf. In the Decalogue the firſt of theſe is the true meaning of the firſt Commandment, put firſt, becauſe it is the principle of all obedience. And the ſecond is the true meaning of the tenth Commandment, which is therefore put laſt, becauſe it is the comprehenſive ſum of other duties to our Neighbour or injuries againſt him, which any other particular inſtances may contain; and alſo the principle of the duty to or ſin againſt our Neighbour. The meaning of the tenth Commandment is variouſly conjectured at by Expoſitors: Some ſay that it ſpeaketh againſt inward concupiſcence, and the ſinful thoughts of the heart: But ſo do all the reſt, in the true meaning of them, and muſt not be ſuppoſed to forbid the outward action only, nor to be any way defective: Some ſay, that it forbiddeth Coveting and commandeth contentment with our ſtate: So doth the eighth Commandment: Yet there is ſome part of the truth in both theſe. And the plain truth is (as far as I can underſtand it) that the ſin forbidden is Selfiſhneſs, as oppoſite to the Love of others, and the duty commanded is to Love our Neighbours; and that it is as is ſaid, the Sum of the ſecond Table, Thou ſhalt love thy Neighbour as thy ſelf: As the Captain leadeth the Van, and the Lieutenant bringeth up the Rear; ſo Thou ſhalt love God above all, is the firſt Commandment, and Thou ſhalt love thy Neighbour as thy ſelf, is the laſt, for the aforeſaid reaſon. I ſhall therefore in theſe following Directions ſpeak to the two parts of the Tenth Commandment.

Direct. 1. The firſt help againſt Selfiſhneſs is to understand well the nature and malignity of the ſin. For want of this it commonly prevaileth, with little ſuſpicion, lamentation, and oppoſition. Let me briefly therefore anatomize it. Dir. 1.

§. 2. 1. It is the Radical poſitive ſin of the Soul, comprehending ſeminally, or cauſally all the reſt. The corruption of Mans nature, or his radical ſin, hath two Parts, the poſitive Part, and the privitive Part: The poſitive Part is Selfiſhneſs, or the inordinate love of Carnal Self: The privitive Part is Ungodlineſs or want of the Love of God. Mans Fall was his turning from God to himſelf: And his Regeneration conſiſteth in the turning of him from Himſelf to God; or the generating of the Love of God (as comprehending Faith and Obedience) and the mortifying of Self-Love. Selfiſhneſs therefore is all poſitive ſin in one, as want of the Love of God is all privitive Sin in One. And Self-denial and the Love of God are all Duties virtually; for the true Love of Man is comprehended in the Love of God. Underſtand this, and you will underſtand what original and actual ſin is, and what Grace and Duty is.

§. 3. 2. Therefore Selfiſhneſs is the cauſe of all ſin in the World both Poſitive and Privitive, and is virtually the breach of every one of Gods Commandments. For even the want of the Love of God is cauſed by the inordinate Love of Self. As the conſuming of other Parts is cauſed by the Dropſies which tumifieth the belly. It is only ſelfiſhneſs which breaketh the fifth Commandment, by cauſing Rulers to oppreſs and perſecute their Subjects, and cauſeth Subjects to be ſeditious and rebellious: and cauſeth all the bitterneſs, and quarrellings, and uncomfortableneſs, which ariſeth among all Relations. It is only Selfiſhneſs which cauſeth the curſed Wars of the earth; and deſolation of Countreys, by plundering and burning; the murders which cry for revenge to Heaven (whether Civil, Military or Religious:) Which cauſeth all the Railings, Fightings, Envyings, Malice; the Schiſms, and proud overvaluings of Mens own Underſtanding and Opinions, and the contending of Paſtors, who ſhall be the greateſt, and who ſhall have his Will in proud uſurpations and tyrannical impoſitions and domination: It is Selfiſhneſs which hath ſet up, and maintaineth the Papacy, and cauſeth all the Diviſions between the Weſtern and the Eaſtern Churches: And all the Cruelties, Lies and Treachery exerciſed upon that account. It is Selfiſhneſs which troubleth Families, and Corporations, Churches and Kingdoms; which violateth Vows, and bonds of Friendſhip and cauſeth all the Tumults, and Strifes and Troubles in the World. It is Selfiſhneſs which cauſeth all Covetouſneſs, All Pride and Ambition, all Luxury and Voluptuouſneſs, all Surfeiting and Drunkenneſs, Chambering and Wantonneſs, Time-waſting, and Heart-corrupting Sports, and all the Riots and Revelling of the Senſual: All the contending for Honours and Preferments, and all the deceit in buying and ſelling, the ſtealing and robbing, the Bribery and Simony, the Law Suits which are unjuſt, the Perjuries, falſe Witneſſing, unrighteous Judging, the Oppreſſions, the Revenge, and in one word, all the uncharitable and unjuſt Actions in the World. This is the true nature of Carnal Selfiſhneſs, and it is no better.

§. 4. 3. Selfiſhneſs is the corruption of all the faculties of the Soul. It is the ſin of the Mind, by ſelf conceitedneſs and pride: It is the ſin of the will and affections, by ſelf-love, and all the ſelfiſh paſſions which which attend it: Selfish desires, angers, sorrows, discontents, jealousies, fears, audacities, &c. It is the corruption of all the inferior faculties, and the whole conversation by self-seeking, and all the forementioned evils.

§. 5. 4. Selfishness is the commonest sin in the World. Every Man is now born with it, and hath it more or less: And therefore every Man should fear it.

§. 6. 5. Selfishness is the hardest sin in the World to overcome. In all the unregenerate it is predominant: For nothing but the sanctifying Spirit of God can overcome it. And in many thousands that seem very zealous in Religion, and very mortified in all other respects, yet in some way or other selfishness doth so lamentably appear, yea, and is so strong in many that are sincere, that it is the greatest dishonour to the Church of Christ, and hath tempted many to infidelity, or to doubt whether there be any such thing as true Sanctification in the World. The Persons that seemed the most mortified Saints, if you do but cross them in their Self-interest, or Opinion, or Will, or seem to slight them, or have a low esteem of them, what swellings, what heart-burnings, what bitter censurings, what proud impatience, if not Schisms and separations will it cause? God hath better servants; but too many which seem to themselves and others, to be the best, are no better. How then should every Christian abhor and watch against this Universal Evil?

Dir. 2. §. 7. Direct. 2. Consider oft how amiable a creature Man would be, and what a blessed condition the World and all societies would be in, if selfishness were but overcome. There would then be no Pride, no Covetousness, no Sensuality, no Tyranny or Oppressing of the poor, no Malice, Cruelty or Persecution: No Church-divisions, no Scandals, nothing to dishonour Religion, or to hinder the saving progress of the Gospel; nor fraud or treacheries, no over-reaching or abusing others; no lying nor deceit, no neglect of our duty to others: In a word, no injustice, or uncharitableness in the World.

Dir. 3. §. 8. Direct. 3. Judge of good and evil by sober Reason, and not by bruitish Sense. And then oft consider, whether really there be not a more excellent end than your selfish interest? Even the publick good of many, and the pleasing and glorifying of God? And whether all mediate good or evil should not be judged of principally by those highest ends. Sense leadeth Men to selfishness or privateness of design: But true Reason leadeth Men to prefer the publick, or any thing that is better than our self-interest.

Dir. 4. §. 9. Direct. 4. Nothing but returning by convert-Grace to the true Love of God, and of Man for his sake will conquer selfishness. Make out therefore by earnest prayer for the Spirit of Sanctification: And be sure that you have a true apprehension of the state of Grace; that is, that it is indeed The Love of God and Man. Love is the fulfilling of the Law, therefore Love is the Holiness of the Soul: Set your whole study upon the exercise and increase of Love, and Selfishness will die as Love reviveth.

Dir. 5. §. 10. Direct. 5. Study much the self-denying example and precepts of your Saviour. His life and doctrine are the liveliest representation of self-denial that ever was given to the World. Learn Christ and you will learn self-denial. He had not sinful selfishness to mortify, yet natural self was so wonderfully denyed by him, for his Fathers Will and our Salvation, that no other Book or Teacher in the World, will teach us this Lesson so perfectly as he. Follow him from the Manger, or rather from the Womb to the Cross and Grave: Behold him in his poverty and contempt; enduring the contradiction and ingratitude of sinners, and making himself of no reputation: Behold him apprehended, accused, condemned, crowned with thorns, cloathed in purple with a Reed in his hand, scourged, and led away to execution, bearing his Cross, and hanged up among Thieves; forsaken by his own Disciples, and all the World, and in part by him who is more than all the World: And consider why all this was done? For whom he did it, and what lesson he purposed hereby to teach us: Consider why he made it one half the condition of our Salvation, and so great a part of the Christian Religion, to deny our selves and take up our Cross and follow him: And will have no other to be his Disciples, Luke 14. 26, 31, 33. Were a Crucified Christ more of our daily study, and did we make it our Religion to learn and follow his holy example, self-denyal would be better known and practised, and Christianity would appear as it is, and not as it is misunderstood, adulterated and abused in the World. But because I have long ago written a Treatise of Self-denial, I shall add no more.

CHAP. XXVII.

Cases and Directions for loving our Neighbours as our selves.

Tit. 1. Cases of Conscience about Loving our Neighbour.

Quest. 1. IN what sense is it that I must love my Neighbour as my self? Whether in the kind of love, or in the degree, or only in the reality? Quest. 1.

Answ. The true meaning of the Text is, You must love him according to his true worth, without the diversion and hinderance of selfishness and partiality. As you must love your self according to that degree of goodness which is in you, and no more; so must you as impartially love your Neighbour according to that degree of goodness which is in him. So that it truly extendeth to the reality, the kind and the degree of love, supposing it in both proportioned to the goodness of the object. But before this can be understood, the true nature of love must be well understood.

Quest. 2. What is the true nature of Love, both as to my self and Neighbour? Quest. 2.

Answ. Love is nothing but the prime motion of the Will to its proper object: Which is called Complacence: The object of it is simple Goodness; or good as such: It ariseth from suitableness between the Object and the Will, as appetite doth from the suitableness of the appetent fancy and food. This Good as it is variously modified, or any way differeth, doth accordingly cause or require a difference in our Love: Therefore that Love which in its prime act and nature is but one, is diversly denominated, as its objects are diversified. To an object as simply Good in it self, it followeth the Understandings Estimation, and is called, as I said, meer Complacence or Adhesion: To an Object as not yet attained, but absent, or distant, and attainable, it is called Desire or Desiring Love: And as expected, Hope, or Hoping Love (which is a conjunction of Desire and Expectation:) To an object nearest and attained, it is called Fruition, or Delight, or Delighting Love. To an an object which by means must be attained, it is called seeking Love, as it exciteth to the use of those means: And to an object missed it is by accident, Mourning Love. But still Love it self in its essential act is one and the same. As it respecteth an object which wanteth something to make it perfect, and desireth the supply of that want, it is called Love of Benevolence; denominated from this occasion, as it desireth to do good to him that is loved. And it is a Love of the same nature which we exercise towards God, who needeth nothing, as we rejoyce in that perfection and happiness which he hath, though it be not to be called properly by the same name. Goodness being the true object of Love, is the true measure of it: And therefore God is infinitely and primitively good, is the prime and only simple object of our absolute total Love. And therefore fore thoſe who underſtand no Goodneſs in any being, but as profitable to them, or to ſome other creature, do know no God, nor love God as God, nor have any Love but ſelfiſh and Idolatrous. By this you may perceive the nature of Love.

Queſt. 3. Queſt. 3. But may none be loved above the meaſure of his Goodneſs? How then did God love us when we were not, or were his Enemies? And how muſt we love the wicked? And how muſt an ungodly perſon love himſelf?

Anſw. If only Good as ſuch, be the object of Love, then certainly none ſhould be loved but in proportion to his goodneſs But you muſt diſtinguiſh between meer natural and ſenſitive Love or Appetite, and Rational Love; and between Love, and the Effects of Love; and between Natural Goodneſs in the object and Moral Goodneſs. And ſo I further anſwer, 1. There is in every Man a natural and ſenſitive love of himſelf and his own pleaſure and felicity, and an averſeneſs to death and pain and ſorrow, as there is in every Bruit: And this God hath planted there for the preſervation of the creature. This falleth not under commands or prohibitions directly, becauſe it is not free but neceſſary: As no Man is commanded or forbidden to be hungry, or thirſty, or weary, or the like: It is not this Love which is meant when we are commanded to Love our Neighbour as our ſelves: For I am not commanded to feel hunger, and thirſt, nor to deſire meat and drink by the ſenſitive appetite for my Neighbour: Nor ſenſitively to feel his pain or pleaſure, nor to have that natural averſation from death and pain, nor ſenſitive deſire of life and pleaſure, for him as for my ſelf. But the Love here ſpoken of, is that Volition with the due affection conjunct, which is our Rational Love; as being the act of our higheſt faculty, and falling under Gods command. As to the ſenſitive Love, it proceedeth not upon the ſenſe or eſtimate of Goodneſs in the Perſon who loveth himſelf or any other (as Beaſts love their young ones without reſpect to their excellency.) But it is Rational Love which is proportioned to the eſtimated Goodneſs of the thing beloved. 2. Phyſical Goodneſs may be in an object which hath no Moral Goodneſs; and this may contain a capacity of Moral Goodneſs: And each of them is amiable according to its nature and degree. 3. Beneficence is ſometimes an effect of Love, and ſometimes an effect of Wiſdom only as to the object, and of Love to ſomething elſe: But it is never Love it ſelf. Uſually benevolence is an act of Love, and beneficence an effect, but not always. I may do good to another without any love to him, for ſome ends of my own, or for the ſake of another. And a Man may be obliged to greater beneficence, where he is not obliged to greater Love.

And now to the inſtances, I further anſwer, 1. When we had no being, God did not properly love us in eſſe reali (unleſs you will go to our coexiſtence in eternity: For we were not in eſſe reali:) But only as we were in eſſe cognito: Which is but to love the Idea in himſelf: But he purpoſed to make us, and to make us lovely, and to do us good, and ſo he had that which is called Amor benevolentiæ to us: Which properly was not Love to us, but a love to himſelf, and the Idea in his own eternal mind, which is called a loving us in eſſe cognito, and a purpoſe to make us good and lovely: That which is not lovely is not an object of Love: Man was not lovely indeed, when he was not: Therefore he was not an object of Love: (but in eſſe cognito.) The ſame we ſay of Gods loving us when we were enemies: He really loved us with complacency ſo far as our Phyſical goodneſs made us lovely: And as morally lovely he did not love us, otherwiſe than in eſſe cognito. But he purpoſed to make us morally lovely, and gave us his mercies to that end; and ſo loved us with a Love of benevolence as it is called: Which ſignifieth no more than out of a complacence (or Love) to himſelf, and to us, as Phyſically good, to purpoſe to make us morally good and happy. As to the incident difficulty of Love beginning de novo in God. I have fully reſolved it elſewhere. Apology againſt Dr. Kendal.

2. So alſo we muſt love a wicked Man with a Love of benevolence: Which properly is but to love him in his Phyſical worth, and his capacity of moral goodneſs and happineſs, and thereupon, (but eſpecially through the Love of God) to deſire his happineſs.

3. And as to the loving of our ſelves, Beſides the ſenſitive Love before mentioned which reſpecteth ſelf as ſelf, and not as Good,) a wicked Man may rationally love himſelf according to his phyſical goodneſs as a Man, which containeth his capacity of moral goodneſs, and ſo of being holy and ſerviceable to God and to good Men, and happy in the fruition of God. But beyond all ſuch Goodneſs (which only is amiableneſs) no Man may rationally love himſelf or any other, with the true formal act of Love, which is complacence: Though he may wiſh good to himſelf or another beyond the preſent goodneſs which is in them; nay, he wiſheth them good, not becauſe they are good, but becauſe they want good.

And though ſome define Loving, to be bene velle alicui ut illi bene ſit, to deſire anothers welfare, yet indeed this may be without any true formal love at all. As I may deſire the welfare of my Horſe, without any proper love to him, even for my ſelf and uſe. When God from eternity willeth to make Paul, and to convert and ſave him, ut illi bene ſit, it is called Love of benevolence: But properly it is only to be called A will to make Paul good and lovely; It being only God himſelf who is the original and ultimate end of that will and purpoſe; and himſelf only which he then loveth, there being nothing but himſelf to love: Till in that inſtant that Paul is exiſtent, and ſo really lovely. For Paul in eſſe cognito is not Paul: Yet no reality doth oriri de novo in God; but a new reſpect and denomination, and in the creature new effects. (Of which elſewhere. But if any be reſolved to call meer benevolence by the name of Love, I will not contend about a name.

Queſt. 4. Muſt I love every one as much as my ſelf in degree, or only ſome?

Anſw. You muſt love every one impartially as your ſelf, according to his goodneſs: And you muſt wiſh as well to every one as your ſelf: But you muſt love no Man complacentially ſo much as your ſelf, who is not or ſeemeth not to have as much lovelineſs, that is, as much goodneſs, or as much of God, as your ſelf. Queſt. 4.

Queſt. 5. Muſt I love any one more than my ſelf?

Anſw. Yes; every one that is and appeareth better than your ſelf. Your ſenſitive Love to another cannot be as much as to your ſelf: And your beneficince (ordinarily) muſt be moſt to your ſelf, becauſe God in nature and his Laws hath ſo appointed it: And your benevolence to your ſelf and to others muſt be alike: But your rational eſtimation, and Love or Complacence (with the honour and praiſe attending it) muſt be more to every one that is better than your ſelf: For that which is beſt is moſt amiable: And that which hath moſt of God. Queſt. 5.

Queſt. 6. Will it not then follow that I muſt love another mans Wife and Children better than my own, when they are really better? Queſt. 6.

Anſw. Yes, no doubt; but it is only with that rational eſtimative Love! But there is beſides a Love to Wife and Children, which is in ſome meaſure ſenſitive, which you are not obliged to give to others: And rationally they are more amiable to you, in their peculiar relations and reſpects, though others are more amiable in other reſpects: And beſides, though you value and rationally love another more, yet the expreſſions muſt not be the ſame: For thoſe muſt follow the Relation according to Gods command. You may not cohabit nor embrace, nor maintain and provide for others as your own, even when you rationally love them more: The common good requires this order in the expreſſive part; as well as Gods Command.

Queſt.

Queſt. 7. Queſt 7. Who is my neighbour that I muſt love as my ſelf?

Anſw. Not Devils nor damned Souls, who are under juſtice and from under mercy, and are none of our ſociety: But, 1. Every natural Man in via, being a member of Gods Kingdom in the ſame world, is to be loved as my natural ſelf: And every ſpiritual Man as a member of the ſame Kingdom of Chriſt, muſt be loved as my ſpiritual ſelf: And every ſpiritual Man as ſuch, above my natural ſelf as ſuch: And no natural Man as ſuch, ſo much as my ſpiritual ſelf as ſuch: So that no Man on earth is excluded from your love, which muſt be impartial to all as to your ſelf, but proportioned to their goodneſs.

Queſt. 8. Queſt. 8. Is not Anti-chriſt and thoſe that ſin againſt the Holy Ghoſt excepted out of this our Love, and out of our prayers and endeavours of their good?

Anſw. Thoſe that (with Zanchy) think Mahomet to be Anti-chriſt, may ſo conclude, becauſe he is dead and out of our communion. Thoſe that take the Papacy to be Anti-chriſt (as moſt Proteſtants do) cannot ſo conclude: Becauſe as there is but one Anti-chriſt, that is, one Papacy, though an hundred Popes be in that ſeat, ſo every one of thoſe Popes is in via and under mercy, and recoverable out of that condition: And therefore is to be loved and prayed for accordingly. And as for thoſe that blaſpheme the Holy Ghoſt, it is a ſin that one Man cannot certainly know in another (ordinarily at leaſt; and therefore cannot characterize a Perſon unfit for our love, and prayers, and endeavours.

Queſt. 9. Queſt. 9. May we not hate the enemies of God? How then muſt we love them as our ſelves?

Anſw. We may and muſt hate ſin in every one: And where it is predominant, as God is ſaid to hate the ſinner for his ſin, ſo muſt we: And yet ſtill love him as our ſelves: For you muſt hate ſin in your ſelves as much or more than in any other: And if you are wicked you muſt hate your ſelves, as ſuch: Yea, if you are Godly, you muſt ſecundum quid, or in that meaſure as you are ſinful, abhor and loath and hate your ſelves as ſuch: And yet you muſt love your ſelves according to the meaſure of all that natural and moral goodneſs which is in you: And you muſt deſire and endeavour all the good to your ſelves that you can. Juſt ſo muſt you hate and love another: Love them and hate them impartially as you muſt do your ſelves.

Queſt. 10. Queſt. 10. May I not wiſh hurt ſometimes to another, more than to my ſelf?

Anſw. You may wiſh a mediate hurt which tendeth to his good, or to the good of others; but you muſt never wiſh any final hurt and miſery to him. You may wiſh your friend a vomit or blood-letting for his cure: And you may wiſh him ſome affliction, when it is needful and apt to humble him and do him good, or to reſtrain him for doing hurt to others: And on the ſame accounts and for the publick good, you may deſire penal Juſtice to be done upon him; yea ſometimes unto death: But ſtill with a deſire of the ſaving of his Soul. And ſuch hurt you may alſo wiſh your ſelf as is neceſſary to your good: But you are not to wiſh the ſame penalties to your ſelf, 1. Becauſe you have ſomewhat elſe firſt to wiſh and do, even to repent and prevent it. 2. Becauſe you are not bound ordinarily to do execution upon your ſelf. It is more in your power to repent your ſelf, and make penalty leſs neceſſary by humble confeſſion and amendment, than to bring another to repentance. Yet I may add alſo, that hypothetically you may wiſh that deſtruction to the enemies of God in this life, which abſolutely you may not wiſh. That is, you muſt deſire firſt that they may repent, and ſecondly that they may be reſtrained from hurting others: But if neither of theſe may be attained, that they may be cut off.

Tit. 2. Directions for loving our Neighbours as our ſelves.

Direct. 1. Take heed of Selfiſhneſs and Covetouſneſs, the two great enemies of Love: Of which I have ſpoken more at large before. Dir. 1.

Direct. 2. Fall out with no Man: or if you do, be ſpeedily reconciled: For paſſions and diſſentions are the extinguiſhers of Love. Dir. 2.

Direct. 3. Love God truly, and you will eaſily love your neighbour: For you will ſee Gods Image on him, or intereſt in him, and feel all his precepts and mercies obliging you hereunto. As 1 John 3. 11, 23. & 4. 7. 12, 20, 21. Dir. 3.

Direct. 4. To this end let Chriſt be your continual ſtudy. He is the full revelation of the Love of God; the lively pattern of love, and the beſt teacher of it that ever was in the World: His Incarnation, Life and Sufferings, his Goſpel and Covenant, his Interceſſion and Preparations for our heavenly felicity, all are the great demonſtrations of condeſcending matchleſs Love. Mark both Gods Love to us in him, and his Love to Man; and you will have the beſt directive and incentive of your Love. Dir. 4.

Direct. 5. Obſerve all the good which is in every Man: Conſider of the good of Humanity in his nature; and the goodneſs of all that truth which he confeſſeth; and of all that moral good which appeareth in his heart and life. And let not overſight, or partiality cauſe you to overlook it, or make light of it. For it is Goodneſs which is the only attractive of Love: And if you overlook Mens goodneſs, you cannot love them. Dir. 5.

Direct. 6. Abhor and beware of a cenſorious diſpoſition, which magnifieth mens faults, and vilifieth their virtues, and maketh Men ſeem worſe than indeed they are. For as this cometh from the want of love, ſo doth it deſtroy that little which is left. Dir. 6.

Direct. 7. Beware of ſuperſtition and an erring judgment, which maketh Men place Religion where God never placed it. For when this hath taught you to make duties and ſins of your own humour and invention, it will quickly teach you to love or hate Men accordingly as they fit or croſs your opinion and humour: Thus many a Papiſt loveth not thoſe that are not Subjects of the Roman Monarch, and that follow not all his irrational fopperies. Many an Anabaptiſt loveth not thoſe that are againſt his opinion of re-baptizing: One loveth not thoſe who are for Liturgies, Forms of Worſhip and Church-muſick; and many love not thoſe who are againſt them: And ſo of other things (of which more anon.) Dir. 7.

Direct. 8. Avoid the company of cenſorious backbiters and proud contemners of their brethren; Hearken not to them that are cauſeleſly vilifying others; aggravating their faults and extenuating their virtues. For ſuch proud ſupercilious Perſons (religious or prophane) are but the meſſengers of Satan, by whom he intreateth you to hate your Neighbour, or abate your love to him. And to hear them ſpeak evil of others, is but to go hear a Sermon againſt Charity; which may take with ſuch hearts as ours before we are aware. Dir. 8.

Direct. 9. Keep ſtill the motives and incentives of Love upon your minds: Which I ſhall here next ſet before you. Dir. 9.

Tit. 3. The Reaſons or Motives of Love to our Neighbour.

Motive 1. Conſider well of the image and intereſt of God in Man. The worſt Man is his Creature, and hath his natural Image, though not his Moral Image: And you ſhould love the work for the workmans ſake. There is ſomething of God upon all humane nature above the bruits: It is intelligent, and capable of knowing him, of loving him and Mot. 1.

and of ſerving him: And poſſibly may be brought to do all this better than you can do it. Undervalue not the noble nature of Man, nor overlook not that of God which is upon them, nor the intereſt which he hath in them.

Mot. 2. Motive 2. Conſider well of Gods own Love to Man: He hateth their ſins more than any of us: And yet he loveth his workmanſhip upon them: And maketh his ſun to ſhine and his rain to fall on the evil and on the good, on the juſt and on the unjuſt. Matth: 5. 45. And what ſhould more ſtir us up to Love, than to be like to God?

Mot. 3. Motive 3. And think oft of the Love of Chriſt unto Mankind; yea even unto his enemies: Can you have a better example? A livelier incentive, or a ſurer guide?

Mot. 4. Motive 4. Conſider of our Unity of Nature with all Men, ſuitableneſs breedeth and maintaineth love. Even Birds and Beaſts do love their kind: And Man ſhould much more have a love to Man, as being of the ſame ſpecifick form.

Mot. 5. Motive 5. Love is the principle of doing good to others. It inclineth Men to beneficence. And all Men call him good who is inclined to do good.

Mot. 6. Motive 6. Love is the bond of Societies: Of Families, Cities, Kingdoms, and Churches, without Love, they will be but enemies conjunct: Who are ſo much the more hurtful and pernicious to each other, by how much they are nearer to each other. The Soul of ſocieties is gone when love is gone.

Mot. 7. Motive 7. Conſider why it is that you love your ſelves (rationally) and why it is that you would be beloved of others: And you will ſee that the ſame reaſons will be of equal force to call for love to others from you.

Mot. 8. Motive 8. What abundance of duty is ſummarily performed in Love? And what abundance of ſin is avoided and prevented by it? If it be the fulfilling of the Law, it avoideth all the violations of the Law (proportionably.) So far as you have Love, you will neither diſhonour ſuperiours, nor oppreſs inferiors, nor injure equals: You will neither covet that which is your Neighbours, nor envy nor malice them, nor defame, nor backbite, nor cenſure them unjuſtly; nor will you rob them, or defraud them, nor with-hold any duty or kindneſs to them.

Mot. 9. Motive 9. Conſider how much Love pleaſeth God? And why it is made ſo great a part of all your duty? And why the Goſpel doth ſo highly commend it, and ſo ſtrictly command it, and ſo terribly condemn the want of it? And alſo how ſuitable a duty it is for you, who are obliged by ſo much love of God? Theſe things well ſtudied will not be without effect.

Mot. 10. Motive 10. Conſider alſo that it is your own intereſt, as well as your great duty. 1. It is the ſoundneſs and honeſty of your hearts. 2. It is pleaſing to that God on whom only you depend. 3. It is a condition of your receiving the ſaving benefits of his love. 4. It is an amiable virtue, and maketh you lovely to all ſober Men: All Men love a loving nature, and hate thoſe that hate and hurt their Neighbours. Love commandeth love, and hurtfulneſs is hatefulneſs. 5. It is a ſweet delightful duty: All Love is eſſentiated with ſome complacence and delight. 6. It tendeth to the eaſe and quietneſs of your lives: What contentions and troubles will love avoid? What peace and pleaſure doth it cauſe in families, neighbourhoods and all ſocieties: And what brawling vexations come where it is wanting? It will make all your neighbours and relations to be a comfort and delight to you; which would be a burthen and trouble, if Love were abſent. 7. It maketh all other mens felicity and comforts to be yours. If you love them as your ſelves, their Riches, their Health, their Honours, their Lordſhips, their Kingdoms, yea more, their Knowledge, and Learning, and Grace, and Happineſs, are partly to you as your own. As the comforts of Wife and Children, and your deareſt friends are: And as our Love to Chriſt, and the bleſſed Angels and Saints in Heaven doth make their joys to be partly ours. How excellent and eaſie, and honeſt a way is this, of making all the world your own, and receiving that benefit and pleaſure from all things both in Heaven and Earth, which no diſtance, no malice of Enemies can deny you? If thoſe whom you truly love have it, you have it. Why then do you complain that you have no more health, or wealth, or honour, or that others are preferred before you? Love your neighbours as your ſelves, and then you will be comforted in his health, his wealth, and his preferment, and ſay, Thoſe have it whom I love as my ſelf, and therefore it is to me as mine own. When you ſee your Neighbours Houſes, Paſtures, Corn, and Cattle, Love will make it as good and pleaſant to you as if it were your own. Why elſe do your rejoice in the portions and eſtates of your Children as if it were your own? The Covetous Man ſaith, Oh how glad ſhould I be if this Houſe, this Land, this Corn were mine: But Love will make you ſay, It is all to me as mine own. What a ſure and cheap way is this of making all the World your own? O what a mercy doth God beſtow on his ſervants ſouls, in the day that he ſanctifieth them with unfeigned Love? How much doth he give us in that one grace? And oh what a world of bleſſing and comforts, do the ungodly, the malicious, the ſelfiſh, and the cenſorious caſt away, when they caſt away or quench the love of their neighbours? And what abundance of calamity do they bring upon themſelves? In this one ſummary inſtance we may ſee, how much Religion and obedience to God doth tend to our own felicity and delight? And how eaſie a work it would be, if a wicked heart did not make it difficult? And how great a plague ſin is unto the ſinner? And how ſore a puniſhment of it ſelf? And by this you may ſee, what it is that all fallings out, diviſions and contentions tend to? And all temptations to the abatement of our love? And who it is that is the greater loſer by it, when love to our Neighbour is loſt? And that backbiters and cenſurers who ſpeak ill of others, come to us as the greateſt enemies and thieves, to rob us of our chiefeſt jewel, and greateſt comfort in this World? And accordingly ſhould they be entertained.

CHAP. XXVIII.

Special Caſes and Directions for Love to Godly Perſons as ſuch.

Tit. 1. Caſes of Conſcience about Love to the Godly.

WHom we muſt take for Godly I anſwered before, Chap. 24. Tit. 1. Queſt. 5.

Queſt. 1. How can we love the Godly, when no Man can certainly know who is ſincerely godly? Queſt. 1.

Anſw. Our love is not the love of God which is guided by infallibility; but the love of Man, which is guided by the dark and fallible diſcerning of a Man? The fruits of piety and charity we infallibly ſee in their lives! But the ſaving truth of that grace which is or ought to be the root, we muſt judge of according to the probability which thoſe ſigns diſcover; and love Men accordingly.

Queſt. 2. Muſt we love thoſe as godly, who can give no ſenſible account of their converſion, for the time, or manner, or evidence of it? Queſt. 2.

Anſw. We muſt take none for godly, who ſhew no credible evidence of true converſion, that is, of true Faith and Repentance: But there is many a one truly godly, who through natural defect of underſtanding or utterance, are not able in good ſenſe to tell you what Converſion is, nor to deſcribe the manner in which it was wrought upon them, much leſs to define exactly the time or Sermon when it was firſt wrought wrought, which few of the beſt Chriſtians are able to do; eſpecially of them who had pious education, and were wrought on in their childhood. But if the Covenant of Grace be wiſely opened to them according to their capacity, and they deliberately, and ſoberly, and voluntarily profeſs their preſent aſſent and conſent thereto, they do thereby give you the credible evidence of a true converſion, till you have ſufficient contrary evidence to diſprove it. For none but a converted Man can truly repent, and believe in God the Creator, Redeemer and Sanctifier, according to the Baptiſmal Covenant.

Queſt. 3. Queſt. 3. But what if he be ſo ignorant that he cannot tell what faith, or repentance, or redemption, or ſanctification, or the Covenant of Grace is?

Anſw. If you have ſufficient evidence that indeed he doth not at all underſtand the eſſentials of the Sacramental Covenant, you may conclude that he is not truly godly: Becauſe he cannot conſent to what he knoweth not: Ignorantis non eſt conſenſus: And if you have no evidence of ſuch knowledge, you have no evidence of his godlineſs, but muſt ſuſpend your judgment. But yet many a one underſtandeth the eſſential of the Covenant, who cannot tell another what they are. Therefore his mind (in caſe of great diſability of utterance,) muſt be fiſhed out by Queſtions, to which his Yea or No, will diſcover what he underſtandeth or conſenteth to: You would not refuſe to do ſo by one of another language, or a dumb Man, who underſtood you, but could anſwer you but by broken words or ſigns: And very ill education may make a great many of the phraſes of Scripture, and Religious language as ſtrange to ſome Men, though ſpoken in their native tongue, as if it were Greek or Latin to them, who yet may poſſibly underſtand the matter: A wiſe Teacher by well compoſed Queſtions may (without fraud or formality) diſcern what a Man underſtandeth; though he ſay but Yea or No; when an indiſcreet unskilful Man, will make his own unskilfulneſs and uncharitableneſs, the occaſion of contemptuous trampling upon ſome that are as honeſt as himſelf. If a Mans deſires and endeavours are to that which is good, and he be willing to be taught and uſe the means, it muſt be very groſs ignorance indeed, and well proved, that muſt diſprove his profeſſion of faith. If he competently underſtand what it is to believe in God the Father, Son and Holy Ghoſt, the Creator, Redeemer and Sanctifier, he underſtandeth all that is abſolutely neceſſary to Salvation. And his Yea or No may ſometime ſignifie his underſtanding it.

Queſt. 4. Queſt. 4. Muſt I take the viſible members of the Church, becauſe ſuch, for truly godly?

Anſw. Yes; except when you have particular ſufficient proof of their hypocriſie. Certainly no Man doth ſincerely enter into the Baptiſmal Covenant, but he that is ſincerely a penitent believer (if at age) For that Covenant giveth actual pardon and adoption to thoſe that ſincerely enter into it: The very conſenting to it (which is repentance and faith) being the very condition of the preſent reception of theſe benefits. And therefore it is that the ancient Writers ſtill affirmed that all the Baptized were regenerated, juſtified and adopted: Whether an adult Perſon be truly fit for Baptiſm, or not, the Paſtor that baptizeth is to judge: And he muſt ſee the credible ſigns of true faith and repentance before he baptize him; which are no other than his underſtanding, voluntary, ſober profeſſion of conſent to the Baptiſmal Covenant; but when he is baptized, and profeſſeth to ſtand to that Covenant once made, he is to be judged a godly Perſon by all the Church-members, who have not ſufficient proof of the contrary: Becauſe if he be ſincere in what he did and ſtill profeſſeth, he is certainly godly: And whether he be ſincere or not, he himſelf is the beſt and regular Judge or diſcerner, ſo far as to put in his claim to Baptiſm, which the Paſtor is obliged not to deny him, without diſproving him: And the Paſtor is judge as to his actual admittance: And therefore the People have nothing neceſſarily to do, but know whether he be baptized and ſtand to his Baptiſm: For which they are to take him as ſincere; unleſs by his notorious diſcovery of the contrary they can diſprove him. Theſe are not only the true terms of Church-communion, but of Love to the godly: And though this goeth hardly down with ſome good Men, who obſerve how few of the baptized ſeem to be ſeriouſly religious, and therefore they think that a viſible Church-member as ſuch, is not at all to be accounted ſincere: that is, to be believed in his profeſſion, and that we owe him not the ſpecial love which is due to the godly, but only a common love due only to profeſſors without reſpect to their ſincerity: Yet this opinion will not hold true: Nor is a profeſſion required without reſpect to the truth or falſhood of it: The credibility of it being the very reaſon that it is requiſite. Nor is it any other faith or conſent to the Covenant below that which is ſincere and ſaving, which muſt be profeſſed by all that will be taken for Church-members. And though thoſe that are of the contrary opinion are afraid leſt this will occaſion too much ſtrictneſs in the Paſtors in judging whoſe Profeſſion is credible, and conſequently will countenance ſeparation in the People, yet God hath provided a ſufficient remedy againſt that fear, by making every Man the opener of his own heart, and tying us by the Law of Nature and of Scripture, to take every Mans Profeſſion for credible, which is ſober, underſtanding and voluntary, unleſs they can diſprove it, or prove him a Lyar, and perfidious, and incredible. And whereas it is a latitude of Charity which bringeth them to the contrary opinion, for fear leſt the incredible Profeſſors of Chriſtianity, ſhould be all excluded from the viſible Church, yet indeed it is but the Image of Charity, to bring Catechumens into the Church, (as to ſet the Boys of the loweſt Form among them that are in their Greek, and to deny all ſpecial Chriſtian Love to all Viſible Members of the Church as ſuch; and to think that we are not bound to take any of them (as ſuch) to be ſincere or in the favour of God, or juſtified, for fear of excluding thoſe that are not. But of this I have largely written in a Treatiſe of this ſubject.

Diſputations of Right to Sacraments.

Queſt. 5. Muſt we take all Viſible Church-members alike to be godly, and love them equally? Queſt. 5.

Anſw. No: There are as many various degrees of credit due to their profeſſion, as there are various degrees of credibility in it: Some manifeſt their ſincerity by ſuch full and excellent evidences in a holy Life, that we are next to certain that they are ſincere: And ſome make a profeſſion ſo ignorantly, ſo coldly, and blot it by ſo many falſe Opinions and Vices, that our fear of them may be greater than our hope: Of whom we can only ſay, that we are not altogether hopeleſs of that ſincerity, and therefore muſt uſe them as godly Men, becauſe we cannot prove the contrary: But yet admoniſh them of their danger, as having much cauſe to fear the worſt: And there may be many notorious wicked Men in ſome Churches, through the Paſtors fault, for want of Diſcipline. And theſe for order ſake we muſt aſſemble with, but not diſſemble with them and our own conſciences; ſo as to take them for godly Men, when the contrary is notorious; nor yet to admit them to our familiarity. The Paſtor hath the keys of the Church, but we have the keys of our own houſes and hearts.

Lege quam plurima veterum teſtimonia in D. Gataker contra Davenantium de Baptiſmo.

Queſt. 6. Muſt we love all equally that ſeem truly godly, the ſtrong and the weak? Queſt. 6.

Anſw. No: He that loveth Men for their holineſs, will love them according to the degrees of their holineſs, as far as he can diſcern it.

Queſt. 7. Queſt. 7. Muſt we love him more who hath much grace (or holineſs) and is little uſeful for want of gifts, or him that hath leſs grace and eminent uſeful gifts?

Anſw. They muſt both be loved according to the diverſity of their goodneſs. He that hath moſt grace is beſt, and therefore moſt to be loved in himſelf: But as a Means to the converſion of Souls and the honour of God in the good of others, the Man that hath the moſt eminent gifts, muſt be moſt loved. The firſt is more loved in and for his own goodneſs: The ſecond is more lovely propter aliud as a means to that which is more loved than either of them.

Queſt. 8. Queſt. 8. Muſt we love him as a godly Man, who liveth in any great or mortal ſin?

Anſw. Every Man muſt be loved as he is: If by a mortal ſin, be meant a ſin inconſiſtent with the love of God, and a ſtate of grace, then the queſtion is no queſtion; it being a contradiction which is in queſtion. But if by a great and mortal ſin, be meant only this or that act of ſinning, and the queſtion be, Whether that act be mortal, that is, inconſiſtent with true grace or not? Then the particular act, with the circumſtances muſt be conſidered, before that queſtion can be anſwered. Murder is one of the moſt heinous ſins; and one Man may be guilty of it, out of deliberate habituate malice; and another through a ſudden paſſion; and another through meer inadvertency, carleſneſs, and negligence: Stealing may be done by one Man preſumptuouſly, and by another meerly to ſave the life of himſelf or his children: Theſe will not equally prove a Man in a ſtate of death, and without true grace. And which is a mortal ſin inconſiſtent with the life of Grace, and which not, is before ſpoken to, and belongeth not to this place. Only I ſhall ſay, that the ſin (be it great or ſmall as to the outward act or matter) which certainly excludeth the habitual devotedneſs of the Soul to God, by Reſignation, Obedience and Love, is mortal or a mark of ſpiritual death: And ſo is all ſin, which conſiſteth not with habitual repentance, and a predominate hatred of ſin as ſin, and of a diſobedient unholy heart and life: And therefore all ſin, which is not repented of, as ſoon as it is known, and the ſinner hath time and opportunity of deliberation: Becauſe in ſuch a caſe, the habit of Repentance will produce the act.

Queſt. 9. Queſt. 9. Muſt an excommunicate Perſon be loved as Godly, or not?

Anſw. You muſt diſtinguiſh, 1. Of Excommunication, 2. Of the Perſon that is to judge: 1. There is an Excommunication which cenſureth not the ſtate of the ſinner, but only ſuſpendeth him from Church-communion as at the preſent actually unfit for it: And there is an Excommunication which habituately or ſtatedly excludeth the ſinner from his Church-relation, as an habituate, impenitent, obſtinate Perſon. 2. Some Perſons have no opportunity to try the cauſe themſelves; being ſtrangers, or not called to it; but muſt take it upon the Paſtors judgment: And ſome have opportunity to know the Perſon and the cauſe, whether he be juſtly excommunicated or not. Now, 1. Thoſe that know by notoriety or proof that the Perſon is juſtly excommunicated with the ſecond ſort of Excommunication, muſt not, nor cannot love him as a Godly Man. 2. Thoſe that know by notoriety or proof that the Perſon is unjuſtly excommunicated, are not therefore to deny him the eſtimation and love which is due to a Godly Man; though for order ſake they may ſometimes be obliged to avoid external Church-communion with him. 3. Thoſe that know nothing of the cauſe themſelves, muſt judge as the Paſtor judgeth who is the legal judge: Yet ſo, as to take it to be but a humane, fallible, and no final judgment.

Queſt. 10. Queſt. 10. Can an unſanctified hypocrite unfeignedly love a Godly Man?

Anſw. There is no doubt but he may materially love him, on ſome other conſideration: As becauſe he is a kinſman, friend, benefactor, or is witty, learned, fair, &c.

Queſt. 11. But can he love a Godly Man becauſe he is Godly? Queſt. 11.

Anſw. He may love a Godly Man (at leaſt) as he may love God: An unholy Perſon cannot love God in all his perfections reſpectively to himſelf: As a God who is moſt holy and juſt in his Government, forbidding all ſin, and condemning the ungodly: For the Love of his ſins is inconſiſtent with this Love: But he may love him as he is moſt great, and wiſe and good in the general, and as he is the maker and benefactor of the World and of the ſinner: Yea and in general as his Governor: And ſo he may verily think that he loveth God as God, becauſe he loveth him for his Eſſentialities: But indeed he doth not (ſpeaking ſtrictly,) becauſe he leaveth out ſome one or more of theſe eſſentialities: Even as he that loveth Man as rational, but not as a Voluntary free agent, loveth not Man as Man: And as a Heretick is no Chriſtian, becauſe he denieth ſome one eſſential part of Chriſtianity: Even ſo as to the Love of Godly Men, an ungodly Man may believe that they are better than others, and therefore love them: But not as Godlineſs is the conſent to that Holineſs and Juſtice of God, which would reſtrain him from his beloved Sins, and condemn him for them. So far as they are ſimply Godly to themſelves, without reſpect to him and his ſins, he may love them.

Queſt. 12. May he love a Godly Man as he would make him godly, and convert him? Queſt. 12.

Anſw. He may love him as a better Man than others, and in general he may wiſh himſelf as good, and may love him becauſe he wiſheth him well: But as he cannot be (or rather is not) willing himſelf to leave his ſins and live in holineſs, ſo another is not grateful to him, who urgently perſwadeth him to this.

Queſt. 13. Doth any ungodly Perſon love the Godly comparatively more than others? Queſt. 13.

Anſw. So far as he doth love them as Godly, ſo far he may love them more than thoſe that are not ſuch: Many a bad Father loveth a religious Child better than the reſt: Becauſe they think that Wiſdom and Godlineſs are good; and they are glad to ſee their Children do well, as long as they do not grate upon them with troubleſome cenſures: For another Mans Godlineſs coſteth a bad Man little or nothing: He may behold it without the parting with his ſins.

Queſt. 14. Doth every ſincere Chriſtian love all the Godly with a ſpecial love? Even thoſe that oppoſe their opinions, or that they think do greatly wrong them? Queſt. 14.

Anſw. 1. Every true Chriſtian loveth a Godly Man as ſuch, and therefore loveth all ſuch, if he take them to be ſuch. 2. No Godly Man doth habitually and impenitently live in ſuch malice or enmity, as will not ſuffer him to ſee the Godlineſs of a diſſenter or adverſary, when it hath ſufficient evidence. 3. But ill education and company, and want of opportunity, may keep a true Chriſtian from diſcerning the Godlineſs of another, and ſo from loving him as a Godly Man. 4. And error and faction and paſſion may in a temptation ſo far prevail as at preſent to pervert his judgment, and make him misjudge a Godly Man to be ungodly; though when he hath opportunity to deliberate and come to himſelf, he will repent of it.

Queſt. 15. What is that Love to the Godly which proveth a Mans ſincerity, and which no Hypocrite or unregenerate Perſon doth attain to? Queſt. 15.

Anſw. It hath in it theſe eſſential parts; 1. He loveth God beſt and his Servants for his ſake. 2. He loveth Godlineſs, and the Perſon as Godly, and therefore would fain be ſuch himſelf; or loveth it for himſelf as well as in others. 3. He loveth not one one only, but all the eſſential parts of Godlineſs (our abſolute reſignation to God our Owner, our abſolute Obedience to God our Ruler, and our higheſt Gratitude and Love to God our Benefactor and our End.) 4. He loveth Godlineſs and Godly Men, above his carnal worldly intereſt, his honour, wealth or pleaſure; and therefore will part with theſe in works of Charity, when he can underſtand that God requireth it. Theſe four ſet together make up that Love which will prove your ſincerity, and which no Hypocrite doth perform. Hypocrites either love the Godly only as their Benefactors with a ſelf-love; or they love them as Godly to themſelves, but would not be like them, and love not Godlineſs it ſelf to make them Godly; or they love them for ſome parts of Godlineſs, and not for all; or they love them but in ſubjection to their worldly love; with ſuch a dry and barren love as James rejecteth, James 2. as will not be at any great coſt upon them, to feed or cloath or viſit or relieve them.

Tit. 1. Directions for loving the Children of God.

Dir. 1. Direct. 1. ONce get the love of God, and you cannot chooſe but love his Children. Therefore firſt ſet your hearts to that, and ſtudy the Directions for it, Tom. 1. God muſt be firſt loved as God, before the Godly can be loved as ſuch; though perhaps this effect may ſometime be more manifeſt than the cauſe: Fortifie the cauſe and the effect will follow.

Dir. 2. Direct. 2. Get Chriſt to dwell in your hearts by faith, Eph. 3. 17. and then you will love his members for his ſake. The ſtudy of the love of God in Chriſt, and the belief of all the benefits of his love and ſufferings, will be the bellows continually to kindle your Love to your Redeemer and to all thoſe that are like him and beloved by him.

Dir. 3. Direct. 3. Cheriſh the motions of Gods ſpirit in your ſelves: For he is a ſpirit of Love: And it is the ſame ſpirit which is in all the Saints: Therefore the more you have of the ſpirit, the more Unity and the more Love you will have to all that are truly ſpiritual: The decays of your own holineſs, containeth a decay of your love to the holy.

Dir. 4. Direct. 4. Obſerve their Graces more than their Infirmities. You cannot love them unleſs you take notice of that goodneſs which is their lovelineſs. Overlooking and extenuating the good that is in others, doth ſhew your want of love to goodneſs; and then no wonder if you want love to thoſe that are good.

Dir. 5. Direct. 5. Be not tempters and provokers of them to any ſin: For that is but to ſtir up the worſer part which is in them, and to make it more apparent; and ſo to hide their amiableneſs, and hinder your own love. They that will be abuſing them, and ſtirring up their paſſions, or oppreſſing wiſe Men to try if they can make them mad, or increaſing their burdens and perſecutions to ſee whether there be any impatiency left in them, are but like the Horſeman who was ſtill ſpurring his Horſe, and then ſold him becauſe he was skittiſh and unquiet: Or like the Gentleman that muſt needs come as a Suitor to a beautiful Lady, juſt when ſhe had taken a Vomit and Purge, and then diſdained her as being unſavoury and loathſome.

Dir. 6. Direct. 6. Stir up their Graces, and converſe much with them in the exerciſes of Grace. If Ariſtotle, or Socrates, Demoſthenes or Cicero, ſtood ſilent by you among other Perſons, you will perceive no difference between them and a fool or a vulgar wit: But when once they open their lips and pour out the ſtreams of wiſdom and eloquence, you will quickly perceive how far they excel the common World, and will admire, love and honour them. So when you converſe with Godly Men about Matters of trading or common employments only, you will ſee no more but their blameleſneſs and juſtice; but if you will join with them in holy Conference or Prayer, or obſerve them in good works, you will ſee that the ſpirit of Chriſt is in them. When you hear the longings of their Souls after God, and their heavenly deſires and hopes and joys, and their love to piety, charity and juſtice, expreſs themſelves in their holy diſcourſe and prayers, and ſee the fruits of them in their lives, you will ſee that they are more than common Men.

Dir. 7. Direct. 7. Foreſee the perfection of their Graces in their beginnings. No Man will love a ſeed or ſtock of thoſe plants or trees which bear the moſt beautiful flowers and fruits, unleſs, in the ſeed he foreſee the fruit or flower which it tendeth to. No Man loveth the egg aright, who doth not foreknow what a bird it will bring forth. Ariſtotle or Cicero were no more amiable in their infancy than others, except to him that could foretell what Men they were like to prove. Think oft of Heaven, and what a thing a Saint will be in Glory, when he ſhall ſhine as the Stars, and be equal to the Angels; and then you will quickly ſee cauſe to love them.

Dir. 8. Direct. 8. Frequently think of the everlaſting union and ſweet agreement which you muſt have with them in Heaven for ever: How perfectly you will love each other in the Love of God? How joyfully will you conſent in the Love and Praiſes of your Creator and Redeemer? The more believingly you foreſee that ſtate, and the more you contemplate thereon, and the more your Converſation is in Heaven; the more will you love your fellow Soldiers and Travellers, with whom you muſt live in bleſſedneſs for ever.

Tit. 3. Motives or Meditative helps to the Godly:

Mot. 1. Motive 1. COnſider what Relation all the Regenerate have to God. They are not only his Creatures, but his Adopted Children: And are they not honourable and amiable who are ſo near to God?

Mot. 2. Motive 2. Think of their near Relation to Jeſus Chriſt: They are his Members, and his Brethren, and the purchaſe of his ſufferings, and coheirs of everlaſting Life? Rom. 8. 16, 17. Epheſ. 5. 26, 27.

Mot. 3. Motive 3. Think of the excellency of that ſpirit and holy Nature which is in them. Regeneration hath made them partakers of the Divine Nature and hath indued them with the ſpirit of Chriſt, and hath by the incorruptible ſeed made them new Creatures, of a Holy and Heavenly Mind and Life; and hath renewed them after the Image of God? And what beſides God himſelf can be ſo amiable as his Image?

Mot. 4. Motive 4. Think of the precious price which was paid for their Redemption: If you will eſtimate things by their price (if the purchaſer be wiſe) how highly muſt you value them?

Mot. 5. Motive 5. Remember how dearly they are beloved of God, their Creator and Redeemer: Read and obſerve Gods tender language towards them; and his tender dealings with them. He calleth them his Children, his beloved, yea dearly beloved, his jewels, the apple of his eye, Deut. 33. 12. Pſal. 60. 5. & 127. 2. Col. 3. 12. Jer. 12. 7. Mal. 3. 17. Zech. 2. 8. Deut. 32. 10. Chriſt calleth the leaſt of them his Brethren, Matth. 25. Judge of his love to them by his incarnation, life and ſufferings! Judge of it by that one heart-melting meſſage after his Reſurrection, John 20. 17. Go to my brethren and ſay unto them, I aſcend to my Father and your Father, to my God and your God. And ſhould we not love them dearly who are ſo dearly beloved of God?

Mot. 6. Motive 6. They are our Brethren begotten by the ſame Father and Spirit, of the ſame holy Seed, the word of God; and have the ſame nature and diſpoſition: And this Unity of nature and nearneſs of relation, is such a suitableness as must needs cause love.

Mot. 7. Motive 7. They are our companions in labour and tribulation: In our duty and sufferings: They are our fellow Soldiers, and Travellers: With whom only we can have sweet and holy converse: And a heavenly conversation; when the carnal savour not the things of God.

Mot. 8. Motive 8. Consider how serviceable their graces render them, for the pleasing of God and the good of Men; they are the work of God, created to good works, Ephes. 2. 10. They are fitted by grace to Love and Praise their Maker and Redeemer: And to obey his Laws, and to honour him in their works, as shining lights in a dark generation: They are the blessings of the place where God hath planted them: They pray for sinners, and exhort them, and give them good examples, and call them from their sins, and lovingly draw them on to conversion and salvation. For their sakes God useth others the better where they live. Ten righteous Persons might have saved Sodom. They are lovely therefore for the service which they do.

Mot. 9. Motive 9. All their graces will be shortly perfected, and all their infirmities done away. They are already pardoned and justified by Christ; and every remaining spot and wrinkle will be shortly taken away, Ephes. 5. 26, 27. and they shall be presented perfect unto God. And they that shall be so perfect then, are amiable now.

Mot. 10. Motive 10. They shall see the glory of God, and live for ever in his Presence: They shall be employed in his perfect Love and Praise, and we shall be their companions therein: And those that must sing Hallelujahs to God in perfect amity and concord, such an harmonious blessed Quire, should live in great endearedness in the way.

Tit. 4. The Hinderances and Enemies of Christian Love.

Enemy 1. Enemy 1 THE first Enemy of Christian Love, is the inward unregeneracy and carnality of the mind: For the carnal mind is enmity to God, and neither is nor can be subject to his Law, Rom. 6. 7. And therefore it is at enmity with holiness and with those that are seriously holy. The excellency of a Christian is seen only by faith, believing what God speaketh of them, and by spiritual discerning of their spiritual worth: But the natural Man discerneth not the things of the spirit, but they are as foolishness to him, because they must be spiritually discerned, 1 Cor. 2. 14. There must be a suitableness of nature before there can be true love: And he that will love them as holy, must first love holiness himself.

Enemy 2. Enemy 2. Another Enemy to Christian Love is, Selfishness or inordinate Self-love: For this will make Men love no one heartily, but as they serve or love or honour them, and according to the measures of their selfish interest; if a Godly Man will not flatter such Persons, and serve their proud or covetous humours, they cannot love him. A selfish Person maketh so great a matter of every infirmity which crosseth his interest, or every mistake which crosseth his opinion, or every little injury that is done him, that he crieth out presently, O what wicked and unconscionable People are these! What Hypocrites are they? Is this their Religion? Is this justice or charity? All Virtues and Vices are estimated by them, according to their own ends and interests chiefly: They can think better of a common Whoremonger, or Swearer, or Atheist, or Infidel that loveth, and honoureth, and serveth them, than of the most holy and upright servant of God, who thinketh meanly or hardly of them, and standeth in their way, and seemeth to be against their interest: It is no commendations to him in this Mans account, that he loveth God and all that are Godly, if he seem to injure or cross a selfish Man: A carnal self-lover can love none but himself and for himself; and maketh all faults which are against himself to be the characters of an odious Person, rather than those which are committed against God.

Enemy 3. Enemy 3. Christian Love is often diminished and marred by Degenerating into a Carnal sort of Love, through the prevalency of some carnal Vice. Thus they that loved a Man for Godliness, turn it into a selfish Love, for some honour, or favour, or benefits to themselves: And young Persons of different Sexes, begin to love each other for Piety, and by undiscreet, and unwary, and sinful familiarities, are drawn before they are aware, to carnal fond and sinful love, and these Persons think that their holy love is stronger than before; when as it is stifled, consumed and languishing, as natural heat by a burning Feaver; and is overcome and turned into another thing.

Enemy 4. Enemy 4. Passion and Impatiency is a great enemy to Christian Love. It is stirring up displeasing words and carriage; and then cannot bear them; it meeteth every where with matter of displeasure and offence; and is still casting water on this sacred fire; and feigning or finding faults in all.

Enemy 5. Enemy 5. Self-ignorance and partiality is a great enemy to love; when it maketh Men over-look their own corruptions, and extenuate all those faults in themselves, which in others they take for heinous crimes; and so they want that compassion to others which would bear with infirmities, because they know not how bad they are themselves, and what need they have of the forbearance of others.

Enemy 6. Enemy 6. Censoriousness is an enemy to brotherly love (as is aforesaid;) a censorious Person will tell you how dearly he loveth all the godly: But he can allow so few the acknowledgment of their godliness, that few are beholden to him for his love. His sinful humour blindeth his mind, that he cannot see anothers godliness: He will love them for their sincerity when he can see it; but that will not be till he hath better eyes. Tymon was a great lover of wisdom; but a hater of all Men, because he took no Man to be wise.

Enemy 7. Enemy 7. Faction and Parties, or siding in Religion, is one of the greatest enemies of Christian Love. For this causeth Censoriousness, and maketh Men so overvalue the Opinions which they have chosen, and the interest of their party, that they hardly see goodness in any that are not of their mind, and quickly find faults (or devise them) in those that are against them.

Enemy 8. Enemy 8. Conversion with malicious wicked or censorious Person, is a great hinderance of the love of godly Men; For he that heareth them daily slandered, and represented as brainsick, seditious, self-conceited, humorous, hypocritical People, will easily take them as odious, but hardly as amiable, unless he come nearer them, and know them better than by a liars words.

Enemy 9. Enemy 9. Too high expectations is a great Enemy to love. When Men either look that Saints on earth, should be like Saints in Heaven, who have no infirmity, or look for greater Parts of Nature, or Art, Ingenuity or Excellency of Speech than is in other Persons, or when Selfishness, and Covetousness, or Pride doth make Men look for great respect, and observance, and esteem, or gifts, or commodity from others; When sin and error raiseth these unreasonable expectations, and the imperfect graces of Christians do not answer them, such Persons think contemptibly of good Men, and call them Hypocrites and as bad as others, because they are not such as they expected.

Enemy 10. Enemy 10. The placing of Mens goodness in lesser matters in which it doth not consist, is also a common Enemy of Love. When a Man is himself so carnal as not to know what spiritual Excellency is, but but prefer ſome common Gifts before it, ſuch a one can never be ſatisfied in the ordinary ſort of upright Men; Thus ſome make a great matter of Compliement and Courtſhip, and handſome deportment, when ſome holy Perſons are ſo taken up with the great matters of God and their Salvation, and ſo retired from the Company of Complementers, that they have neither time, nor mind, nor skill, nor will, for ſuch impertinencies; Some place ſo much in ſome particular Opinions, or Ceremonies, or Forms of Church-Government and Worſhip, that they can think well of no Man that is againſt them. Whereas good Men on earth are ſo imperfect, that they are and will be of ſeveral opinions about ſuch things: And ſo theſe Perſons oblige themſelves by their own opinionativeneſs, to be always againſt one part of the ſincereſt Servants of Chriſt. One Man can think well of none that is not for his Church-party, or way of Government and Worſhip; and another can think well of none that is not for his way. One can think well of none that prayeth not by his Book, and doth not turn, and bend, and look juſt in the ſame manner, garb and poſture with himſelf, and that uſeth not all the Ceremonies which he affecteth; or at leaſt, if his weakneſs make him guilty of any unhanſome tone or geſture, or of any incompt and unapt expreſſions, or needleſs repetitions, or unpleaſing ſtile: (which all we wiſh that all good Men were free from:) Another can think well of no Man, that is for pomp and force in Church-Government, or for Ceremonies, Forms and Books in Prayer, and for preſcribed words in worſhipping God. And thus placing Religion where they ſhould not, cauſeth too many to take up with a miſtaken Religion for themſelves, and to diſlike all that are not of their mind, and certainly deſtroyeth Chriſtian love in one part of Chriſtians towards the other.

Enemy 11. Enemy 11. Pride alſo is a peſtilent extinguiſher of love. For a proud Man is ſo much overwiſe in his own eyes, that he can without remorſe ſtigmatize all that diſſent from him with the names of ignorant or erroneus, Schiſmatical, Heretical, or what other name the humour or advantage of the times ſhall offer him: And he is ſo good in his own eyes, that he meaſureth Mens goodneſs and godlineſs by their agreement with him, or compliance with his will. And he is ſo great in his own eyes, that he thinketh himſelf and his complices only fit to make Laws for others, and to rule them in their Opinions, and in the Worſhip of God; and no Man fit to ſay any thing publickly to God, but what he putteth into their mouths: He can think well of none that will not obey him: Like the Pope of Rome, that ſaith, No Man on earth hath Church communion with him, that is not ſubject to him. A humble Chriſtian thinketh that himſelf and the Goſpel have great and unuſual proſperity in the World, when they have but Liberty; but proud Men think that Religion is ruinated, and they are perſecuted, when they have not their will upon their brethren, and when their Brethren will be but brethren, and deny them obedience. Subjects they can think well of and command, but brethren they cannot love nor tolerate.

Enemy 12. Enemy. 12. Laſtly, The Counterfeits of Chriſtian love deceive abundance, and keep them from that which is Love indeed. They might be brought to it, if they had not thought that they had it already, when they have it not.

Tit. 5. The Counterfeits of Chriſtian Love

Count. 1. Counterfeit 1. IT is but counterfeit Love to Chriſtians, when they are loved only for being of the common Religion of the Countrey, and the ſame that you ſay you are of your ſelves: As one Mahometan loveth another.

Count. 2. Or to love one only Sect or party of Chriſtians, which you eſpouſe as the only party or Church; and not to love a Chriſtian as a Chriſtian, and ſo to love all true Chriſtians whom you can diſcern to be ſuch. Count. 2.

Count. 3. To love only thoſe Chriſtians who are your kindred or relations, or thoſe that have been ſome way Benefactors to you. Count. 3.

Count. 4. To love Chriſtians only for their familiarity, or kind and loving converſation, and civil obliging deportment among Men. Count. 4.

Count. 5. To love them only becauſe they are learned, or have better wits and abilities of Speech, in preaching, prayer or conference than others. Count. 5.

Count. 6. To love them only upon the praiſe which common commendations may ſometimes give them, and for being magnified by fame, and well ſpoken of by all Men. Thus many wicked Men do love the Saints departed, when they hate thoſe that are alive among them. Count. 6.

Count. 7. To love them only for being godly in themſelves at a diſtance, ſo they will not trouble them with their godlineſs; while they love not thoſe that reprove them, and would draw them to be as godly. Count. 7.

Count. 8. To love them only for ſuffering with them in the ſame cauſe. Thus a prophane Perſon taken by the Turks may love his fellow Captives who refuſe to renounce Chriſt. And thus a Sufferer for an ill cauſe, or in an erroneous Sect, may love thoſe that ſuffer with him above others. Count. 8.

Count. 9. To love them only for holding ſtrict and right opinions, while they will not endure to live accordingly: Thus many love the light, that cannot bear the heat and motion; Many love an Orthodox Perſon, of a ſound Judgment, that is againſt looſeneſs and prophaneneſs in his opinion, and do not like the folly of the licentious; who yet like licentious practice beſt. Count. 9.

Count. 10. To love them for ſome parts of Godlineſs only; while ſome other eſſential part will not be endured, (of which before.) Count. 11.

Count. 11. To love them in a kind fit only, as Saul with tears profeſſed to do his Son David; but to have no habitual conſtant Love.

Count. 12. Laſtly, To love godly Men a little, and the World and fleſhly intereſt more; To love them only ſo as will coſt them nothing, To wiſh them fed, but not to feed them, and to wiſh them cloathed, but not to cloath them, and to wiſh them out of Priſon, but not to dare to viſit them for fear of ſuffering themſelves. He that hath this Worlds Goods, and ſeeth his Brother have need, and ſhutteth up the bowels of his compaſſion from him, how dwelleth the love of God in him, 1 John 3. 17. Surely if the love of his Brother were in him, the love of God had been in him. But he hath no true love to his Brother, that will only love him on terms that coſt him little, and cannot give and ſuffer for his love. All theſe are deceiving counterfeits of love to the Children of God. Count. 12.

Tit. 6. Caſes and Directions for intimate ſpecial Friends.

Queſt. 1. IS it lawful to have an earneſt deſire to be Loved by others? Eſpecially by ſome one Perſon above all other? Queſt. 1.

Anſw. There is a deſire of others Love which is lawful, and there is a deſire which is unlawful.

I. It is lawful, 1. When we deſire it as it is their duty, which God himſelf obligeth them to perform, and ſo is part of their integrity, and is their own good, and pleaſeth God; So Parents muſt deſire their Children to love them, and one another, becauſe it is their duty, and elſe they are unnatural and bad; And Husband and Wife may deſire that each other diſcharge that duty of Love which God requireth, and so may all others. 2. It is lawful also to desire for our own sakes to be loved by others; so be it, it be. 1. With a calm and sober desire, which is not eager, peremptory or importunate, nor overvalueth the love of Man; 2. According to the proportion of our own worth; not desiring to be thought Greater, Wiser or Better than indeed we are, nor to be loved erroneously by an overvaluing Love. 3. When we desire it for the benefits to which it tended, more than to be valued and loved our selves; As, 1. That we may receive that edification and good from a friend, which love disposeth them to communicate; 2. That we may do that good to our friends, which love disposeth them to receive. 3. That we may honour and please God, who delighteth in the true love and concord of his Children.

II. But the unlawful desire of others love to us, is much more common, and is a sin of a deeper maligity than is commonly observed. This desire of love is sinful, when it is contrary to that before described; As, 1. When we desire it over eagerly; 2. When we desire it selfishly and proudly, to be set up in the good opinion of others; and not to make a benefit of it to our selves or them, but our own honour is more desired in it, than the honour of God. 3. When we desire to be thought Greater, Wiser or Better than we are, and to be loved with such an overvaluing Love; and have no desire that the bounds of Truth and Usefulness should restrain and limit that love to us which we affect. 4. When it is an erroneous fanciful, carnal or lustful esteem of some one Person, which maketh us desire his love more than others. As because he is higher, richer, fairer, &c.

This eager desire to be overloved by others, hath in it all these aggravations. 1. It is the very sin of Pride, which God hath declared so great a detestation of. For Pride is an overvaluing our selves, for Greatness, Wisdom or Goodness, and a desire to be so over-valued of others. And he that would be overloved, would be over-valued.

2. It is self-idolizing; When we would be loved as better than we are, we rob God of that Love which Men should render to him, who can never be over-loved, and we would fain seem a kind of petty Deities to the World, and draw Mens eyes and hearts unto our selves. When we should be jealous of Gods interest and honour, lest we or any creature should have his due, this proud disposition maketh people set up themselves in the estimation of others, and they scarce care how Good, or Wise they are esteemed; nor how much they are lifted up in the hearts of others.

3. It is an injurious ensnaring the minds of others, and tempting them to erroneous Opinions of us, and affections to us; which will be their sin, and may bring them into many inconveniencies. It is an ordinary thing to do greater hurt to a friend whom we value, by ensnaring him in an inordinate love, than ever we did or can do to an Enemy by hating him.

Quest. 2. Quest. 2. Is it lawful, meet or desirable to entertain that extraordinary affection to any one, which is called special friendship, or to have an endeared intimate friend, whom we love far above all others?

Answ. Intimate special friendship is a thing that hath been so much pleaded for by all sorts of Men, and so much of the felicity of Mans life hath been placed in it, that it beseemeth not me to speak against it. But yet I think it meet to tell you with what cautions and limits it must be received, and how far it is good, and how far sinful; (for there are perils here to be avoided, which neither Cicero, nor his Scipio and Lælius were acquainted with.)

I. 1. It is lawful to choose some one well qualified Person, who is fittest for that use, and to make him the chief companion of our lives; our chiefest counsellor and comforter, and to confine our intimacy and converse to him in a special manner above all others. 2. And it is lawful to love him not only according to his personal worth, but according to his special suitableness to us, and to desire his felicity accordingly, and to exercise our love to him more frequently and sensibly (because of his nearness and presence) than towards some better Men that are further off.

The Reasons of such an intimate friendship are these, 1. No Man is sufficient for himself, and therefore Nature teacheth him to desire an helper. And there is so wonderful a diversity of temperaments and conditions, and so great a disparity and incongruity among good and wise Men, towards each other that one that is more suitable and congruous to us than all the rest, may on that account be much preferred.

2. It is not many that can be so near us as to be ordinary helpers to us: And a wiser Man at a distance or out of reach, may be less useful to us, than one of inferior worth at hand.

3. The very exercise of friendly love and kindness to another is pleasant: And so it is to have one to whom we may confidently reveal our secrets, to bear part of our burden, and to confirm us in our right apprehensions, and to cure us of wrong ones.

4. And it is no small benefit of a present bosom friend, to be instead of all the World to us, that is, of common unprofitable company: For Man is a sociable Creature, and abhorreth utter solitude. And among the common sort, we shall meet with so much evil, and so little that is truly wise or good, as will tempt a Man to think that he is best when he is least conversant with Mankind. But a selected Friend is to us for usefulness instead of many, without these common incumbrances and snares.

5. And it is a great part of the commodity of a faithful friend, to be assisted in the true knowledge of our selves: To have one that will watch over us, and faithfully tell us of the sin, and danger, and duty, which we cannot easily see without help, and which other Men will not faithfully acquaint us with.

II. But yet it is rare to choose and use this friendship rightly: And there are many evils here to be carefully avoided. The instances shall be mentioned anon in the directions, and therefore now passed by.

Quest. 3. Is it meet to have more such bosom friends than one? Quest. 3.

Answ. Usually one only is meetest: 1. Because Love diffused is oft weak, and contracted is more strong. 2. Because Secrets are seldom safe in the hands of many: 3. Because suitable Persons are rare; 4. And though two or three may be suitable to you, yet perhaps they may be unsuitable among themselves. And the calamities of their own disparities will redonud to you; And their fallings out may turn to the bewraying of your Secrets, or to some other greater wrong.

2. But yet sometimes two or three such friends may be better than one alone. 1. In case they be all near and of an approved suitableness and fidelity. 2. In case they be all suitable and endeared to one another. 3. If a Man live per vices in several places, and his friends cannot remove with him, he may have one friend in one place, and another in another, and so many will be but as one that is constant: 4. And in case that many may add to our help, our counsel and comfort, more than to our danger, hurt or trouble. In all these cases many are better than one.

Quest. 4. Is it fit for him to take another bosom friend who hath a pious Wife? and is any other so fit to be a friend, as he and she that are as one flesh? Quest. 4.

Answ. When a Wife hath the understanding, and vertue and fidelity fit for this sort of friendship, then no one else is so fit, because of nearness and united interests. The same I say of a Husband to a Wife.

But

But because that it seldom falls out that there is such a fitness for this office, especially in the Wife, in that case it is lawful and meet to choose a friend that is fit indeed, and to commit those Secrets to him which we commit not to a Wife: For Secrets are not to be committed to the untrusty, nor wise counsel to be expected from the unwise, how near soever. And the great writers about this special friendship, do think that no Woman is fit for it, but Men only: But that conclusion is too injurious to that Sex.

Quest. 5. Quest. 5. Is it agreeable to the nature of true friendship to love our friend not only for himself, but for our own commodity? And whether must he or I be the chief end of my love and friendship?

Answ. 1. Indeed in our Love to God, he that is the object is also our chief and ultimate end, and we must love him more for himself than for our selves. And yet here it is lawful subordinately to intend our selves.

2. And our Love to the Common-wealth, should be greater than our Love to our selves, and therefore we may not Love it chiefly for our selves.

3. And if our bosom Friend be notoriously better than we are, and more serviceable to God and to the common good, we should love him also above our selves, and therefore not chiefly for our selves.

4. But in case of an equality of goodness and usefulness, we are not bound to love our most intimate friend more than our selves; and therefore may at least equally Love him for our selves, as for himself. And if we are really and notoriously better and more useful, we may love him chiefly for our selves, and our selves above him. But still we must love God and the publick Good, above both our selves and him, and must love both our selves and him in order to God, who is the beginning and end of all.

Quest. 6. Quest. 6. Is it contrary to the nature of true friendship, to keep any secret from such a bosom friend, or to retain any suspicion of him, or to suppose that he may possibly prove unfaithful to us and forsake us?

Answ. Cicero and the old Doctors of Friendship say, that all this is inconsistent with true friendship: And it is true, that it is contrary to perfect friendship. But it is as true, that perfect friendship cannot be, nor must not be among imperfect Men: And that the nature of Mankind is so much depraved, that the best are unmeet for perfect Friendship: And certainly few Men, if any in the World, are fit for every Secret of our hearts. Besides that we are so bad, that if all our Secret thoughts were known to one another, it might do much to abate our friendship, and love to each other. And it is certain, that Man is so corrupt a Creature, and good Men so imperfectly cured of their corruption, that there is Selfishness, Uncertainty, and Mutability in the best. And therefore it is not a duty to judge falsly of Men, but contrarily to judge of them as they are. And therefore to suppose that it is possible, the closest friend may reveal our Secrets, one time or other, and that the stedfastest friend may possibly become our Enemy. To think that possible, which is possible (and more) is injurious to none.

Quest. 7. Quest. 7. Is it lawful to change a bosom friend, and to prefer a new one whom we perceive to be more worthy before an old one.

Answ. An old friend ceteris paribus is to be preferred before a new one, and is not to be cast off without desert and necessity. But for all that, 1. If an old friend prove false, or notably unfit; 2. Or if we meet with another that is far more able, fit and worthy, no doubt but we may prefer the latter; and may value, love, and use Men as they are for goodness, worth and usefulness.

Quest. 8. Quest. 8. What Love is due to a Minister that hath been the means of our Conversion? And can such a one be loved too much?

Answ. 1. There is a special Love due to such a one, as the hand by which God did reach out to us his unvaluable medicies: And ingratitude, and Sectarian pride contempt of such, as have been our fathers in Christ, is no small sin.

2. But yet another that never did us good, who is much wiser and better, and more serviceable to the Church, must be better loved, than he by whom we were converted. Because we are to love Men more for the sake of God and his Image and Service, than for our selves.

3. And it is a very common thing, for passionate Women and young People, when they are newly converted, to think that they can never too much value, and honour, and love those that converted them; and to think that all such love is holy and from God; whereas the same love may be of God as to the principle, motives and ends, in the main, and yet may have great mixtures of passionate weakness, and sinful excess, which may tend to their great affliction in the end. Some that have been converted by the Writings of a Minister a hundred or a thousand Miles off, must needs go see the Author; some must needs remove from their lawful Dwellings and Callings, to live under the Ministry of such a one; yea if it may be in the house with him: Some have affections so violent, as proveth a torment to them when they cannot live with those whom they so affect: Some by that affection are ready to follow those that they so value, into any errour. And all this is a sinful love by this mixture of passionate weakness, though pious in the main.

Quest. 9. Quest. 9. Why should we restrain our Love to a bosom friend (contrary to Cicero's Doctrine) and what sin or danger is in loving him too much?

Answ. All these following, 1. It is an errour of Judgment and of will, to suppose any one Better than he is, (yea perhaps than any creature on earth is) and so to love him.

2. It is an irrational act, and therefore not fit for a rational Creature, to love any one farther than reason will allow us, and beyond the true causes of regular love.

3. It is usually a fruit of sinful Selfishness: For this excess of love doth come from a selfish cause either some strong conceit that the Person greatly loveth us, or for some great kindness which he hath shewed us, or for some need we have of him, and fitness appearing in him to be useful to us, &c. Otherwise it would be purely for amiable worth, and then it would be proportioned to the nature and measure of that worth.

4. It very often taketh up Mens Minds, so as to hinder their love to God, and their desires and delights in holy things: While Satan (perhaps upon Religious pretences) turneth our affections too violently to some Person, it diverteth them from higher and better things: For the weak mind of Man can hardly think earnestly of one thing, without being alienated in his thoughts from others; nor can hardly love two things or Persons fervently at once, that stand not in pure subordination one to the other: And we seldom love any fervently in a pure subordination to God; For then we should love God still more fervently.

5. It oft maketh Men ill Members of the Church and Common-wealth. For it contracteth that love to one over-valued Person, which should be diffused abroad among many; and the common good which should be loved above any single Person is by this means neglected (as God himself:) which maketh Wives and Children and bosom Friends, become those gulfs that swallow up the Estates of most rich Men; so that they do little good with them to the publick state, which should be preferred.

6. Overmuch friendship engageth us in more duty than we are well able to perform, without neglecting our duty to God, the Common-wealth and our own own Souls. There is some special duty followeth all special acquaintance; but a bosom friend will expect a great deal. You must allow him much of your Time in conference, upon all occasions; and he looketh that you should be many ways friendly and useful to him, as he is or would be to you. When, alas frail Man can do but little: our Time is short; our strength is small; our Estates and Faculties are narrow and low. And that Time which you must spend with your bosom friend; where friendship is not moderated and wisely managed, is perhaps taken from God and the publick good, to which you first owed it. Especially if you are Magistrates, Ministers, Physicians, Schoolmasters, or such other as are of publick usefulness. Indeed if you have a sober prudent friend, that will look but for your vacant hours, and rather help you in your publick service, you are happy in such a friend. But that is not the excess of love that I am reprehending.

7. This inordinate friendship prepareth for disappointments, yea and for excess of sorrows. Usually experience will tell you that your best friends are but uncertain and imperfect Men, and will not answer your expectation: And perhaps some of them may so grosly fail you, as to set light by you, or prove your Adversaries. I have seen the bonds of extraordinary dearness many ways dissolved: One hath been overcome by the flesh, and turned drunkard and sensual, and so proved unfit for intimate friendship (who yet sometime seemed of extraordinary uprightness and zeal.) Another hath taken up some singular conceits in Religion, and joyned to some Sect where his bosom friend could not follow him. And so it hath seemed his duty to look with strangeness, contempt or pity on his ancient friend, as one that is dark, and low, if not supposed an adversary to the truth, because he espouseth not all his misconceits. Another is suddenly lifted up with some preferment, dignity and success, and so is taken with higher things and higher converse, and thinks it is very fair, to give an embrace to his ancient friend, for what he once was to him, instead of continuing such endearedness. Another hath changed his place and company, and so by degrees grown very indifferent to his ancient friend, when he is out of sight, and converse ceaseth. Another hath himself chosen his friend amiss, in his unexperienced youth, or in a penury of wise and good Men, supposing him much better than he was: and afterward hath had experience of many Persons of far greater wisdom, piety and fidelity, whom therefore reason commanded him to prefer. All these are ordinary dissolvers of these bonds of intimate and special friendship.

And if your love continue as hot as ever, its excess is like to be your excessive sorrow. For 1. You will be the more grieved at every suffering of your friend, as sicknesses, losses, crosses, &c. whereof so many attend Mankind, as is like to make your burden great. 2. Upon every removal, his absence will be the more troublesom to you. 3. All incongruities and fallings out will be the more painful to you, especially his jealousies, discontents and passions, which you cannot command. 4. His death, if he die before you, will be the more grievous, and your own the more unwelcome, because you must part with him. These and abundance of sore afflictions are the ordinary fruits of too strong affections: And it is no rare thing for the best of Gods Servants to profess, that their Sufferings from their Friends who have over-loved them, have been ten times greater than from all the Enemies that ever they had in the World.

And to those that are wavering about this case, Whether only a common friendship with all Men according to their various worth, or a bosom intimacy with some one Man, be more desirable, I shall premise a free confession of my own case, whatever censures for it I incur. When I was first awakened to the regard of things spiritual and eternal; I was exceedingly inclined to a vehement love to those that I thought the most serious Saints, and especially to that intimacy with some one, which is called Friendship. By which I found extraordinary benefit, and it became a special mercy to my Soul. But it was by more than one or two of the fore-mentioned ways, that the strict bond of extraordinary Friendship hath been relaxed, and my own excessive esteem of my most intimate friends confuted. And since then I have learned, to love all Men according to their real worth, and to let out my love more extensively and without respect of Persons, acknowledging all that is good in all; but with a double love and honour to the excellently wise and good: And to value Men more for their publick usefulness, than for their private suitableness to me; and yet to value the ordinary converse of one or a few suitable friends, before a more publick and tumultuary Life, except when God is publickly worshipped, or when publick Service inviteth me to deny the quiet of a private Life; and though I more difference between Man and Man than ever, I do it not upon so slight and insufficient grounds as in the time of my unexperienced credulity: Nor do I expect to find any without the defects, and blots and failings of infirm, imperfect, mutable Man.

Quest. 10. What qualifications should direct us in the choice of a special bosom friend?

Answ. 1. He must be one that is sincere and single hearted, and not given to affectation, or any thing that is much forced in his deportment: Plain, and open hearted to you, and not addicted to a hiding, fraudulent, or reserved carriage.

2. He must be one that is of a suitable temper and disposition; I mean not guilty of all your own infirmities, but not guilty of a crosness or contrariety of disposition. As if one be in love with plainness of Apparel, and frugality in dyet and course of life, and the other be guilty of curiosity, and ostentation and prodigality, if one be for few words and the other for many; if one be for Labour, and the other for idleness, and frequent interruptions; if one be for serving the humours of Men, and the other for a contempt of a humane censure, in the way of certain duty; these disparities make them unfit for this sort of bosom friendship.

3. He must not be a slave to any vice: For that which maketh him false to God, and to betray his own Soul, may make him false to Man, and to betray his friend.

4. He must not be a selfish Person; that is corruptly and partially for himself, and for his own carnal ends and interest. For such a one hath no true love to others, but when you seem cross to his own interest, his pleasure, wealth, or honour he will forsake you: For so he doth by God himself.

5. He must be humble, and not notably proud. For Pride will make him quarrelsome, disdainful, impatient, and quite unsuitable to a humble Person.

6. He must be one that's throughly and resolvedly godly: For you will hardly well center any where but in God; nor will he be useful to all the ends of friendship, if he be not one that loveth God, and holy things, and is of a pious conversation: Nor can you expect that he that is false to God, and will sell his part in him for the pleasure or gain of sin, should long prove truly faithful unto you.

7. He must be one that is judicious in Religion, that is, not of an erroneous heretical wit; nor ignorant of those great and excellent Truths, which you should oft confer about; Bnt rather one that excelleth you in solid Understanding, and true Judgment, and a discerning head, that can teach you somewhat which you know not; and is not addicted, to corrupt you with false opinions of his own.

8. He

8. He must be one that is not Schismatical and embodied in any dividing Sect: For else he will be no longer true to you, than the interest of his party will allow him: And if you will not follow him in his conceits and singularities, he will withdraw his love, and despise you: And if he do not, yet he may endanger your stedfastness, by the temptation of his love.

9. He must be one that hath no other very intimate friend, unless his friend be also as intimate with you as with him; because else he will be no further secret and trusty to you, than the interest or will of his other friend will allow him.

10. He must be one that is Prudent in the management of business, and especially those which your converse is concerned in; else his indiscretion in words or practice, will not suffer your friendship to be long entire.

11. He must be one that is not addicted to loquacity, but can keep your secrets: Otherwise he will be so untrusty as to be uncapable of doing the true office of a friend.

12. He must have a zeal and activity in Religion and in all well-doing: Otherwise he will be unfit to warm your affections, and to provoke you to love and good works, and to do the principal works of friendship; but will rather cool and hinder you in your way.

13. He must be one that is not addicted to levity, unconstancy and change: Or else you can expect no stability in his friendship.

14. He must not much differ from you in Riches, or in Poverty; or in quality in the World. For if he be much Richer, he will be carried away with higher company and converse than yours, and will think you fitter to be his servant, than his friend. And if he be much poorer than you, he will be apt to value your friendship for his own commodity, and you will be still in doubt, whether he be sincere.

15. He must be one that is like to live with you or near you; that you may have the frequent benefit of his converse, counsel, example, and other acts of friendship.

16. He must be one that is not very covetous, or a Lover of Riches or Preferment: For such a one will no longer be true to you, than his Mammon will allow him.

17. He must be one that is not peevish, passionate and impatient; but that can both bear with your infirmities, and also bear much from others for your sake, in the exercise of his friendship.

18. He must be one that hath so good an esteem of your Person, and so true and strong a Love to you, as will suffice to move him, and hold him to all this.

19 He must be yet of a publick Spirit, and a lover of good works, that he may put you on to well doing, and not countenance you in an idle, self-pleasing and unprofitable Life. And he ought to be one that is skilful in the business of your Calling, that may be fit to censure your work, and amend it, and direct you in it, and confer about it. And it is best for you if he be one that excelleth you herein, that he may add something to you (but then you will not be such to him, and so the friendship will be unequal.)

20. Lastly, There must be some suitableness in Age and Sex. The young want experience to make them meet for the bosom friendship of the aged (though yet they may take delight in instructing them, and doing them good). And the young are hardly reconcilable to all the gravity of the aged. And it must not be a Person of a different sex, unless in case of Marriage: Not but that they may be helpful to each other as Christians, and in a state of distant friendship: But this bosom intimacy, they are utterly unfit for, because of unsuitableness, temptation and scandal.

Directions for the right Use of special Bosom Friendship.

Direct. 1. ENgage not your self to any one, as a bosom friend, without great evidence and proof of his fitness for all the foregoing qualifications. By which you may see, that this is not an ordinary way of duty or benefit, but a very unusual case. For it is a hard thing to meet with one among many thousands, that hath all these qualifications: And when that is done, if you have not all the same qualifications to him, you will be unmeet for his friendship, what ever he be for yours. And where in an age will there be two that are suited in all those respects? Therefore our ordinary way of duty is, to love all according to their varions worth, and to make the best use we can of every ones grace and gifts, and of those most that are neerest us; but without the partiality of such extraordinary affection to any one above all the rest. For young Persons usually make their choice rashly, of one that afterwards proveth utterly unmeet for the office of such a friend, or at least, no better than many other Persons: Nay, ten to one, but after experience will acquaint them with many that are much wiser, and better, and fitter for their love. And hasty affections, are guilty of blind partiality, and run Men into sin and sorrow, and often end in unpleasant ruptures. Therefore be not too forward in this friendship. Dir. 1.

Direct. 2. When you do choose a friend, though he must be one that you have no cause to be suspicious of, yet reckon that it is possible that he may be estranged from you, yea, and turn your enemy. Causeless jealousies are contrary to friendship on your part; and if there be cause, it is inconsistent with friendship on his part. But yet no friendship should make you blind, and not to know that Man is a corrupt and mutable creature; especially in such an age as this, wherein we have seen, how personal Changes, State-changes, and changes in Religion, have alienated many seeming friends. Therefore love them, and use them, and trust them, but as Men, that may possibly fail all your expectations, and open all your secrets, and betray you, yea, and turn your enemies. Suspect it not, but judge it possible. Dir. 2.

Direct. 3. Be open with your approved friend, and commit all your secrets to him, still excepting those, the knowledge of which may be hurtful to himself, or the revealing of them hereafter may be intolerably injurious to your self, to the honour of Religion, to the publick good, or to any other. If you be needlesly close, you are neither friendly, nor can you improve your friend enough to your own advantage. But yet if you open all without exception, you may many ways be injurious to your friend and to your self; and the day may come which you did not look for, in which his weakness, passion, interest, or alienation, may trouble you by making all publick to the World. Dir. 3.

Direct. 4. Use as little affectation or ceremony with your friend as may be; but let all your converse with him be with openness of heart, that he may see that you both trust him, and deal with him in plain sincerity. If dissimulation and forced affectation be but once discovered, it tendeth to breed a constant diffidence and suspicion. And if it be an infirmity of your own which you think needeth such a cover, the Cloak will be of worse effect, than the knowledge of your infirmity. Dir. 4.

Direct. 5. Be ever faithful to your friend, for the cure of all his faults; and never turn friendship into flattery: Yet still let all be done in Love, though in a friendly freedom, and closeness of admonition. It is not the least benefit of intimate friendship, that what an enemy speaketh behind our backs, a friend will open plainly to our faces: To watch over one another daily, and be as a glass to shew our faces or faults to one another is the very great benefit of true Dir. 5.

friendship, Eccles. 4. 9, 10, 11. Two are better than one, because they have a good reward for their labour. For if they fall, the one will lift up his fellow: But wo to him that is alone when he falleth, for he hath not another to help him up. It is a flatterer and not a friend, that will please you by concealing or extenuating your sin.

Dir. 6. Direct. 6. Abhor Selfishness as most contrary to real friendship. Let your friend be as your self, and his interest as your own. If we must love our neighbour as our selves, much more our dearest bosom friends.

Dir. 7. Direct. 7. Understand what is most excellent and useful in your friend, and that improve. Much good is lost by a dead hearted companion, that will neither broach the Vessel and draw out that which is ready for their use: Nor yet feed any good discourse, by due questions or answers, but stifle all by barren silence. And a dull silent hearer, will weary and silence the speaker at the last.

Dir. 8. Direct. 8. Resolve to bear with each others infirmities: Be not too high in your expectations from each other: Look not for exactness and innocency, but for humane infirmities, that when they fall out, you may not find your selves disappointed. Patience is necessary in all humane converse.

Dir. 9. Direct. 9. Yet do not suffer friendship to blind you, to own or extenuate the faults of your dearest friend: For that will be sinful partiality, and will be greatly injurious to God, and treachery against the soul and safety of your friend.

Dir. 10. Direct 10. And watch lest the love, estimation or reverence of your friend, should draw you to entertain his errors, or to imitate him in any sinful way. It is no part of true friendship to prefer Men before the truth of Christ, nor to take any heretical, dividing, or sensual infection from our friend, and so to die and perish with him. Nor is it friendly to desire it.

Dir. 11. Direct. 11. Never speak against your friend to a third Person; nor open his dishonourable weakness to another. As no Man can serve two Masters; so no Man can well please two contrary friends: And if you whisper to one the failings of another, it tendeth directly to the dissolution of your friendship.

Dir. 12. Direct. 12. Think not that love will warrant your partial erroneous estimation of your friend: You may judge him fittest for your intimacy: But you must not judge him better than all other Men, unless you have special evidence of it, as the reason of such a judgment.

Dir. 13. Direct. 13. Let not the love of your friend draw you to love all, or any others the less, and below their worth. Let not friendship make you narrow hearted, and confine your charity to one. But give all their due, in your valuation and your conversation, and exercise as large a charity and benignity as possibly you can: Especially to Societies, Churches and Common-wealth, and to all the World: It is a sinful friendship, which robbeth others of your charity: Especially those to whom much more is due than to your friend.

Dir. 14. Direct. 14. Exercise your friendship in Holiness, and well-doing: Kindle in each other the Love of God and Goodness, and provoke each other to a heavenly conversation. The more of God and Heaven is in your friendship, the more holy, safe, and sweet, and durable it will prove. It will not wither, when an everlasting subject is the fewel that maintaineth it. If it will not help you the better to Holiness and to Heaven, it is worth nothing, Eccles. 4. 11. If two lye together, then they have heat; but how can one be warm alone? See that your friendship degenerate not into common carnal love, and evaporate not in a barren converse, instead of prayer and heavenly discourse, and faithful watchfulness and reproof.

Dir. 15. Direct. 15. Prepare each other for suffering and death, and dwell together in the house of mourning, where you may remember your nearer everlasting friendship: And not only in the house of mirth, as if it were your work, to make each other forget your latter end.

CHAP. XXIX.

Cases and Directions for Loving and doing good to Enemies.

MOst which belongeth to this subject is said before Chap. 9. about forgiving enemies, and therefore thither I refer the Reader.

Tit. 1. Cases about loving and doing good to enemies.

Quest. 1. WHom must I account an enemy, and love under that name? Quest. 1.

Answ. 1. Not every one that is angry with you, or that giveth you foul words, or that undervalueth you, or that speaketh against you, or that doth you wrong: But he that hateth you, and seeketh or desireth your destruction or your hurt as such designedly: 2. And no Man must be taken for such, that doth not manifest it, or by whom you cannot prove it. 3. But if you have reasonable suspicion you may carry your self the more warily for your own preservation, lest he should prove your enemy, and his designs should take you unprovided.

Quest. 2. With what kind of Love must an enemy be loved? And on what accounts? Quest. 2.

Answ. Primarily with a love of Complacence, for all the good which is in him, natural or moral: He must be loved as Man for the goodness of his nature and his understanding and virtues must be acknowledged as freely, and loved as fully, as if he were no enemy of ours: Enmity must not blind and pervert our judgment of him, and hinder us from discerning all that is amiable in him; nor must it corrupt our affections, and hinder us from loving it and him. 2. Secondarily we must love him with a love of benevolence, desiring him all that happiness which we desire to our selves, and endeavouring it according to our opportunities.

Quest. 3. Must I desire that God will pardon and save him, while he repenteth not of the wrong he doth me? and being impenitent, is uncapable of pardon? Quest. 3.

Answ. 1. You must desire at once that God will give him repentance and forgiveness. 2. If he be impenitent in a state and life of ungodliness, or in a known and wilful sin, he is indeed uncapable of Gods pardon and salvation in that case: But if you know him not to be ungodly, and if mistake or passion only, or some personal offence or falling out, have made him your enemy; and you are not sure that the enmity is so predominant as to exclude all true charity, or if he think you to be a bad Person, and be your enemy on that account, you must pray for his pardon and salvation, though he should not particularly repent.

Quest. 4. What if he be my enemy upon the account of Religion, and so an enemy to God? Quest. 4.

Answ. There are too many who have too much enmity to each other, upon the account of different Opinions and Parties in Religion, in an erroneous zeal for Godliness; who are not to be taken for enemies to God. What acts of hostility have in this age been used by several Sects of zealous Christians, against each other! 2. If you know them to be enemies of God and Godliness, you must hate their sin, and love their humanity and all that is good in them, and wish their repentance, welfare and salvation.

Quest. 5. What must I do for an enemies good, when my benefits are but like to embolden, encourage and enable him to do hurt, to me or others? Quest. 5.

Answ. 1. Usually kindness tendeth to convince and and melt an enemy, and to hinder him from doing hurt. 2. Such ways of kindneſs muſt be choſen, as do moſt engage an enemy to returns of kindneſs, without giving him ability or opportunity to do miſchief in caſe he prove implacable. You may ſhew him kindneſs, without putting a Sword into his hand Prudence will determine of the way of benefits, upon conſideration of circumſtances.

Queſt. 6. Queſt. 6. May I not defend my ſelf againſt an enemy, and hurt him in my own defence? And may I not wiſh him as much hurt, as I may do him?

Anſw. When you can ſave your ſelf, by fair words, or flight, or ſome tolerable loſs, without reſiſting him to his hurt, you ſhould rather chooſe it, and Reſiſt not evil, Matth. 5. 39. When you cannot do ſo, you muſt defend your ſelf, with as little hurt to your enemy as you can. And if you cannot ſave your ſelf from a leſſer hurt, without doing him a greater, you muſt rather ſuffer it.

Object. But if I hurt him in my own defence, it is his own fault.

Anſw. So it may, and yet be yours too: You are bound to Charity to your enemy, and not to juſtice only.

Object. But if I run away from him, or reſiſt him not, it will be my diſhonour: And I may defend my honour as well as my life.

Anſw. Such objections and reaſonings (which the Jeſuites uſe againſt Jeſus,) were fitter for the mouth of an Atheiſt, than of a Chriſtian. It is Pride which ſetteth ſo much by the eſteem of Men, yea, of bad and fooliſh Men, as to plead Honour for uncharitableneſs: And the voice of Pride is the voice of the Devil, contrary to him who made himſelf of no reputation, Phil. 2. 7, 8. and ſubmitted to be arrayed in a garb of mockery, and led out with ſcorn like a fool, and bowed to, and buffeted and ſpit upon, and crucified; who calleth to us to learn of him to be meek and lowly and to deny our ſelves, and take up the Croſs (which is ſhameful ſuffering) if we will be his Diſciples, Matth. 11. 28, 29. Luke 14. 30, 32, 33. To every Chriſtian it is the greateſt honour to be like Jeſus Chriſt, and to excel in Charity. It is a greater diſhonour to want Love to an enemy, than to fly from him or not reſiſt him. He that teacheth otherwiſe, and maketh ſin honourable, and the imitation and obedience of Chriſt to be more diſhonourable, doth preach up Pride, and preach down Charity, and doth preach for the Devil againſt Jeſus Chriſt: And therefore ſhould neither call himſelf a Jeſuite nor a Chriſtian.

Yea more, if the Perſon that would hurt or kill you, be one that is of more worth and uſefulneſs as to the publick good, you ſhould rather ſuffer by him, or be ſlain by him, than you ſhould equally hurt him, or kill him in your own defence. As if the King of another Kingdom that hath no authority over you (for of your own there is no queſtion) ſhould aſſault you? Or any one whoſe death would be a greater loſs than yours. For the publick good is better than your own.

And it will not always hold, that you may wiſh another as much hurt as you may do him: For in defending your ſelf, you may ſometime blameleſly do more hurt than you were willing to do. And you muſt never wiſh your enemies hurt as ſuch, but only as a neceſſary means of good, as of preſervation of himſelf, or you, or others.

Queſt. 7. Queſt. 7. Muſt Kings and States love their enemies? How then can War be lawful?

Anſw. Kings and States are bound to it as much as private Men: And therefore muſt obſerve the foreſaid Laws of Love as well as others. Therefore they muſt raiſe no War unneceſſarily, nor for any cauſe, be it never ſo juſt in it ſelf, when the benefits of the War are not like to be a greater good, than the War will bring hurt both to friends and foes ſet together. A lawful offenſive War is almoſt like a true General Council: On certain ſuppoſitions ſuch a thing may be: But whether ever the World ſaw ſuch a thing, or whether ever ſuch ſuppoſitions will come to exiſtence, is the queſtion.

Tit. 2. Motives to Love and do good to Enemies.

Motive 1. GOD loveth his enemies, and doth them good: And he is our beſt exemplar: Matth. 5 45, 46. But I ſay unto you, love your enemies; bleſs them that curſe you; do good to them that hate you, and pray for them which deſpitefully uſe you and perſecute you, that ye may be the children of your Father which is in Heaven: For he maketh his Sun to riſe on the evil and on the good, and ſendeth rain on the juſt and on the unjuſt. Mot. 1.

Mot. 2. Jeſus Chriſt was incarnate to ſet us a pattern, eſpecially of this virtue: He ſought the ſalvation of his enemies: He went up and down doing good among them. He died for his enemies: He prayeth for them even in his ſufferings on the Croſs: He wept over them when he foreſaw their ruine. When he was reviled, he reviled not again. This is the pattern which we muſt imitate. Mot. 2.

Mot. 3. God loved even us our ſelves when we were his enemies: Or elſe what had become of us? And Chriſt died even for us, as enemies, to reconcile us by his death to God, Rom. 5. 9, 10. Therefore we are ſpecially obliged to this duty. Mot. 3.

Mot. 4. To be Gods Enemies is to be wicked and unlovely; ſo that in ſuch God could ſee nothing amiable but our nature and thoſe poor remainders of virtue in it; and our capacity of being made better by his grace: And yet he then loved us: But to be an enemy to you or me, is not to be ungodly or wicked as ſuch: It is an enmity but againſt a vile unworthy Worm, and therefore is a ſmaller fault. Mot. 4.

Mot. 5. We do more againſt our ſelves than any Enemy or Devils, and yet we love our ſelves: Why then ſhould we not love another who doth leſs againſt us. Mot. 5.

Mot 6. All that is of God and is good muſt be loved: But there may be much of God, and much natural and moral good in ſome enemies of ours. Mot. 6.

Mot. 7. To love an enemy ſignifieth a mind that is impartial, and loveth purely on Gods account, and for Goodneſs ſake: But the contrary ſheweth a ſelfiſh mind, that loveth only on his own account. Mot. 7.

Mot. 8. If you love only thoſe that love you, you do no more than the worſt Man in the World may do; But Chriſtians muſt do more than others. Mat. 5. 47. or elſe they muſt expect no more than others. Mot. 8.

Mot. 9. Loving and doing good to enemies is the way to win them and to ſave them. If there be any ſpark of true humanity left in them, they will love you when they perceive indeed that you love them. A Man can hardly continue long to hate him whom he perceiveth unfeignedly to love him. And this will draw him to love Religion for your ſake, when he diſcerneth the fruits of it. Mot. 9.

Mot. 10 If he be implacable, it will put you into a condition fit for God to own you in, and to judge you accordingly to your innocency. Theſe two together contain the ſenſe of heaping coals of fire on his head: That is, q. d. If he be not implacable, you will melt and win him: And if he be implacable, you will engage God in your cauſe, who beſt knoweth when and how to revenge. Mot. 10.

Tit. 3. Directions for Loving and doing good to Enemies.

Direct. 1. MAke no Man your enemy, ſo far as you can avoid it: For though you may pretend to love him when he is your enemy, you have done contrary to Love in making him your enemy: For thereby he is deprived of his own Love to Dir. 1.

you: And if his Charity be his beſt commodity, then he that robbeth him (though he be never ſo culpable himſelf) hath done that which belongeth to the worſt of enemies: It is a thouſand times greater hurt and loſs to him, to loſe his own Love to others, than to loſe anothers love to him: And therefore to make him hate you; is more injurious or hurtful to him, than to hate him.

Dir. 2. Direct. 2. Take not thoſe for your enemies that are not; and believe not any one to be your enemy, till cogent evidence conſtrain you: Take heed therefore of ill ſuſpicious and ungrounded cenſures; except defenſively ſo far only as to ſecure your ſelves or others, from a poſſible hurt.

Dir. 3. Direct. 3. Be not deſirous or inquiſitive to know what Men think or ſay of you (unleſs in ſome ſpecial caſe where your duty or ſafety requireth it:) For if they ſay well of you, it is a temptation to pride, and if they ſay ill of you, it may abate your love and tend to enmity: Eccleſ. 7. 21. Alſo take no heed to all words that are ſpoken, leſt thou hear thy ſervant curſe thee: For oft times alſo thy own heart knoweth, that thou thy ſelf likewiſe haſt curſed (or ſpoken evil of) others. It is ſtrange to ſee how the folly of Men is pleaſed with their own temptations.

Dir. 4. Direct. 4. Frown away thoſe flatterers and whiſperers, who would aggravate other Mens enmity to you or injuries againſt you? And think to pleaſe you by telling you needleſly of other Mens wrongs. While they ſeem to ſhew themſelves enemies to your enemies, indeed they ſhew themſelves enemies conſequently to your ſelves: For it is your deſtruction that they endeavour, in the deſtruction of your Love: Prov. 16. 28. If a whiſperer ſeparate chief friends, much more may he abate your love to enemies: Let him therefore be entertained as he deſerveth.

Dir. 5. Direct. Study and ſearch and hearken after all the good which is in your enemies. For nothing will be the object of your Love, but ſome diſcerned good. Hearken not to them that would extenuate and hide the good that is in them.

Dir. 6. Direct. 6. Conſider much how capable your enemy (and Gods Enemy) is of being better. And for ought you know God may make him much better than your ſelves! Remember Paul's caſe: And when ſuch a one is converted, forethink how penitent and humble, how thankful and holy, how uſeful and ſerviceable he may be: And love him as he is capable of becoming ſo lovely to God and Man.

Dir. 7. Direct. 7. Hide not your love to your enemies, and let not your minds be ſatisfied that you are Conſcious that you love them: But manifeſt it to them by all juſt and prudent means: For elſe you are ſo uncharitable as to leave them in their enmity, and not to do your part to cure it. If you could help them againſt hunger and nakedneſs and will not, how can you truly ſay you love them? And if you could help them againſt malice and uncharitableneſs and will not, how can you think but this is worſe? If they knew that you love them unfeignedly as you'l ſay you do, it's two to one but they would abate their enmity.

Dir. 8. Direct. 8. Be not unneceſſarily ſtrange to your enemies; but be as familiar with them as well you can. For diſtance and ſtrangeneſs cheriſh ſuſpicious and falſe reports, and enmity: And converſe in kind familiarity, hath a wonderful power to reconcile.

Dir. 9. Direct. 9. Abhor above all enemies, that pride of heart, which ſcorneth to ſtoop to others for love and peace. It is a Deviliſh Language, to ſay, Shall I ſtoop or crowch to ſuch a fellow? I ſcorn to be ſo baſe. Humility muſt teach you to give place to the pride and wrath of others, and to confeſs it when you have wronged them, and ask them forgiveneſs: And if they have done the wrong to you, yet muſt you not refuſe to be the firſt movers and ſeekers for reconciliation. Though I know that this Rule hath ſome exceptions; as when the enemies of Religion or us are ſo malicious and implacable, that they will but make a ſcorn of our ſubmiſſion, and in other caſes, when it is like to do more harm than good; it is then lawful to retire our ſelves from malice.

Dir. 10. Direct. 10. However let the Enmity be in them alone: Watch your own hearts with a double carefulneſs, as knowing what your temptation is; and ſee that you love them, whether they will love you or not.

Dir. 11. Direct. 11. Do all the good for them that lawfully you can. For benefits melt and reconcile: And hold on though ingratitude diſcourage you.

Dir. 12. Direct. 12. Do them good firſt in thoſe things that they are moſt capable of valuing and reliſhing. That is (ordinarily) in corporal commodities: Or if it be not in your power to do it your ſelves, provoke others to do it (if there be need) and then they will be prepared for greater benefits.

Dir. 13. Direct. 13. But ſtop not in your enemies corporal good, and in his reconciliation to your ſelf: For then it will appear to be all but a ſelfiſh deſign which you are about. But labour to reconcile him to God, and ſave his ſoul, and then it will appear to be the Love of God, and him that moved you.

Dir. 14. Direct. 14. But ſtill remember that you are not bound to love an enemy as a friend, but as a Man ſo qualified as he is; nor to love a wicked Man who is an Enemy to Godlineſs, as if he were a Godly Man: But only as one that is capable of being Godly. This precept of loving enemies was never intended for the levilling all Men in our Love.

CHAP. XXX.

Caſes and Directions about works of Charity.

Tit. 1. Caſes of Conſcience about Works of Charity.

Queſt. 1. WHat are the grounds and reaſons and motives to charitable works?

Anſw. 1. That doing good doth make us likeſt to God: He is the univerſal Father and Benefactor to the World: All good is in him or from him, and he that is beſt and doth moſt good is likeſt to him.

2. It is an honourable employment therefore: It is more honourable to be the beſt Man in the Land, than to be the greateſt: Greatneſs is therefore honourable, becauſe it is an ability to do good: And Wiſdom is honourable, becauſe it is the skill of doing good: So that Goodneſs is that end which maketh them honourable, and without reſpect to which they were as nothing: A power or skill to do miſchief is no commendations.

3. Doing good maketh us pleaſing and amiable to God: becauſe it maketh us like him; and becauſe it is the fulfilling of his will. God can love nothing but himſelf and his own excellencies or image appearing in his works: or his works ſo far as his attributes appear and are glorified in them.

4. Good works are profitable to Men, Tit 3. 8. Our Brethren are the better for them: The bodies of the poor are relieved, and Mens Souls are ſaved by them.

5. In doing good to others, we do good to our ſelves: becauſe we are living Members of Chriſt's body, and by Love and Communion feel their joys, as well as pains: As the hand doth maintain it ſelf, by maintaining and comforting the ſtomach; ſo doth a loving Chriſtian by good works.

6. There is in every good nature a ſingular delight in doing good: It is the pleaſanteſt life in all the World. A Magiſtrate, a Preacher, a Schoolmaſter, a Tutor, a Phyſician, a Judge, a Lawyer, hath ſo much true pleaſure as his life and labours are ſucceſsful in doing good: I know that the Conſcience of honeſt endeavours may afford ſolid comfort

fort to a willing, though unſucceſsful Man: And well-doing may be pleaſant, though it prove not a doing good to others: But it is a double, yea a multiplied comfort to be ſucceſsful: It is much if an honeſt unſucceſsful Man (a Preacher, a Phyſician, &c.) can keep up ſo much peace as to ſupport him under the grief of his unſucceſsfulneſs: But to ſee our honeſt labours proſper and many to be the better for them, is the pleaſanteſt life that Man can here hope for.

7. Good works are a comfortable evidence that faith is ſincere, and that the heart diſſembleth not with God: When as a faith that will not prevail for works of Charity, is dead and uneffectual, and the image or carkaſs of faith indeed, and ſuch as God will not accept, Jam. 2.

8. We have received ſo much our ſelves from God, as doubleth our obligation to do good to others: Obedience and Gratitude do both require it.

9. We are not ſufficient for our ſelves, but need others as well as they need us: And therefore as we expect to receive from others, we muſt accordingly do to them. If the eye will not ſee for the body, nor the hand work for the body, nor the feet go for it, the body will not afford them nutriment, and they ſhall receive as they do.

10. Good works are much to the honour of Religion, and conſequently of God; and much tend to Mens Conviction, Converſion and Salvation. Moſt Men will judge of the Doctrine by the fruits. Mat. 5. 16. Let your light ſo ſhine before Men, that they may ſee your good Works, and glorifie your Father which is in Heaven.

11. Conſider how abundantly they are commanded and commended in the word of God. Chriſt himſelf hath given us the pattern of his own life, which from his firſt moral Actions to his laſt, was nothing but doing good and bearing evil. He made Love the fulfilling of his Law, and the works of Love the genuiue fruits of Chriſtianity, and an acceptable Sacrifice to God. Gal. 6. 10. As we have opportunity, let us do good to all Men, eſpecially to them of the houſhold of Faith. Heb. 13. 16. To do good and communicate forget not: for with ſuch Sacrifices God is well pleaſed: Tit. 3. 8. This is a faithful ſaying, and theſe things I will that thou conſtantly affirm, that they which have believed in God might be careful to maintain good works; Theſe things are good and profitable to Men. Epheſ. 2. 10. For we are his workmanſhip, created in Chriſt Jeſus to good works, which God hath before ordained that we ſhould walk in them. Tit. 2. 14. To purifie to himſelf a peculiar people zealous of good works. Acts 20. 35. That ſo labouring ye ought to ſupport the weak, and to remember the words of the Lord Jeſus, how he ſaid, It is more bleſſed to give, than to receive. Epheſ. 4. 28. Let him that ſtole ſteal no more, but rather let him labour, working with his hands the thing that is good, that he may have to give to him that needeth. You ſee poor labourers are not excepted, from the command of helping others: In ſo much that the firſt Church ſold all their Poſſeſſions, and had all things common; not to teach levelling and condemn propriety, but to ſhew all after them that Chriſtian Love ſhould uſe all to relieve their brethren as themſelves.

12. Conſider that God will in a ſpecial manner judge us at the laſt day according to our works, and eſpecially our works of Charity: As in Matth. 25. Chriſt hath purpoſely and plainly ſhewed; and ſo doth many another Text of Scripture. Theſe are the Motives to works of Love.

Queſt. 2. Queſt. 2. What is a good work, even ſuch as God hath promiſed to reward?

Anſw. 1. The matter muſt be lawful, and not a ſin. 2. It muſt tend to a good effect, for the benefit of Man, and the honour of God. 3. It muſt have a good end; even the pleaſing and glory of God, and the good of our ſelves and others. 4. It muſt come from a right principle, even from the love of God, and of Man for his ſake. 5. It muſt be pure and unmixed: If any ſin be mixt with it, it is ſinful ſo as to need a pardon: And if ſin be predominant in it, it is ſo far ſinful as to be unacceptable to God, in reſpect to the Perſon, and is turned into ſin it ſelf. 6. It muſt be in ſeaſon; or elſe it may ſometimes be mixt with ſin, and ſometimes be evil it ſelf and no good work. 7. It muſt be comparatively good as well as ſimply. It muſt not be a leſſer good inſtead of a greater, or to put off a greater. As to be praying when we ſhould be quenching a fire, or ſaving a Mans life. 8. It muſt be good in a convenient degree. Some degrees are neceſſary to the Moral being, of a good work, and ſome to the well-being. God muſt be loved and worſhipped as God, and Heaven ſought as Heaven, and Mens Souls and Lives muſt be highly prized and ſeriouſly preſerved: Some ſluggiſh doing of good is but undoing it. 9. It muſt be done in confidence of the merits of Chriſt, and preſented to God as by his hands, who is our Mediator and Interceſſor with the Father.

Queſt. 3. What Works of Charity ſhould one chooſe in theſe times, who would improve his Maſters talents to his moſt comfortable account? Queſt. 3.

Anſw. The diverſity of Mens abilities and opportunities, make that to be beſt for one Man which is impoſſible to another. But I ſhall name ſome that are in themſelves moſt beneficial to Mankind, that every Man may chooſe the beſt which he can reach to. See the Preface to my Book called, The Crucifying of the World.

1. The moſt eminent work of Charity, is the promoting of the Converſion of the Heathen and Infidel parts of the World: To this Princes and Men of power and wealth might contribute much if they were willing: eſpecially in thoſe Countries in which they have commerce and ſend Embaſſadors: They might procure the choiceſt Scholars, to go over with their Embaſſadors and learn the Languages, and ſet themſelves to this ſervice according to opportunity: Or they might erect a Colledge for the training up of Students purpoſely for that work, in which they might maintain ſome Natives procured from the ſeveral Infidel Countries (as two or three Perſians, as many Indians of Indoſtan, as many Tartarians, Chineſes, Siamites, &c.) which might poſſibly be obtained: and theſe ſhould teach Students their Countrey Languages. But till the Chriſtian world be ſo happy as to have ſuch Princes, ſomething may be done by Volunteers of lower place and power: As Mr. Wheelock did in tranſlating the New Teſtament, and Mr. Pococke by the Honorable Mr. Robert Boile's procurement and charge, in tranſlating Grotius de Verit. Chriſt. Relig. into Arabick, and ſending it to Indoſtan and Perſia. And what excellent labour hath good Mr. John Eliots (with ſome few aſſiſtants) beſtowed theſe twenty years and more in New England? where now he hath tranſlated and printed the whole Scriptures in their American Tongue, (with a Catechiſm and Call to the Unconverted) by the help of a Preſs maintained from hence.

2. The attempt of reſtoring the Chriſtian Churches to their primitive purity and unity, according to Mens ſeveral opportunities, is a moſt excellent and deſirable work: which though the ignorance and wickedneſs of many, and the implacableneſs and bloodineſs of the carnal proud domineering part, and the too great alienation of ſome others from them, do make it ſo difficult as to be next to deſperate, at the preſent, yet is not to be caſt off as deſperate indeed: For great things have been done by wiſe and valiant attempts. Princes might do very much to this, if they were both wiſe and willing. And who knoweth but an Age may come that may be ſo happy? The means and method I would willingly deſcribe, but that this is no fit place or time.

3. The

3. The planting of a learned, able, holy concordant Miniſtry in a particular Kingdom, and ſetling the primitive Diſcipline thereby, is a work alſo which thoſe Princes may very much promote, whoſe hearts are ſet upon it, and who ſet up no contrary intereſt againſt it: But becauſe theſe lines are never like to be known to Princes (unleſs by way of accuſation) it is private Mens works which we muſt ſpeak to.

4. It is a very good work to procure and maintain a worthy Miniſter in any of the moſt ignorant Pariſhes in theſe Kingdoms: (of which alas, how many are there:) where the skilful preaching of the Goſpel is now wanting: or to maintain an aſſiſtant in populous Pariſhes, where one is not able to do the work; or by other juſt means to promote this ſervice.

5. It is a very good work to ſet up Free-ſchools in populous and in ignorant places; eſpecially in Wales: that all may be taught to read, and ſome may be prepared for the Univerſities?

6. It is an excellent work to cull out ſome of the choiceſt wits, among the poorer ſort in the Countrey Schools, who otherwiſe would wither for want of culture; and to maintain them for Learning in order to the Miniſtry, with ſome able, godly Tutor in the Univerſity, or ſome Countrey Miniſter who is fit and vacant enough thereunto.

7. It is an excellent work to give among poor ignorant people, Bibles and Catechiſms, and ſome plain and godly Books which are moſt fitted to their uſe. But it were more excellent to leave a ſetled revenue for this uſe (naming the Books, and chooſing meet Truſtees) that ſo the Rent might every year furniſh a ſeveral Pariſh; which would in ſhort time be a very extenſive benefit, and go through many Countries.

8. It is a very good work to ſet poor Mens children Apprentices to honeſt religious Maſters, where they may at once get the bleſſing to their Souls of a godly Education, and to their bodies, of an honeſt way of maintenance.

9. It will not be unacceptable to God, to relieve ſome of the Perſons, or poor Children, of thoſe very many hundred faithful Miniſters of Chriſt, who are now ſilenced and deſtitute of maintenance, many having nothing at all, but what charity ſendeth them, to maintain themſelves and deſolate Families, who were wont to exerciſe charity to the bodies and Souls of others. Read Matth. 25. Gal. 6. 5, 6, 7, 8.

10. It is a good work of them who give Stocks of Money, or yearly Rents, to be lent for five, or ſix, or ſeven years to young Tradeſmen, at their ſetting up, upon good Security, chooſing good Truſtees, who may chooſe the fitteſt Perſons: And if it be a Rent, it will ſtill increaſe the Stock, and if any ſhould break, the loſs of it may be born.

11. It would be a very good work for Landlords to improve their intereſt with their Tenants, to further at once their bodily comfort, and Salvation: To hire them by ſome abatement at their Rent days, to learn Catechiſms, and read the Scripture and good Books in their Families, and give the Paſtor an account of their proficience. Whether the Law will enable them to bind them to any ſuch thing in their Leaſes, I cannot tell.

12. And the preſent work of Charity for every one, is to relieve the moſt needy which are next at hand. To know what poor Families are in greateſt want, and to help them as we are able: and to provoke the rich to do that which we cannot do our ſelves; and to beg for others: And ſtill to make uſe of bodily relief, to further the good of their Souls; by ſeconding all with ſpiritual advice and help.

Queſt. 4. Queſt. 4. In what order are works of Charity to be done? And whom muſt we prefer when we are unable to to accommodate all?

Anſw. 1. The moſt publick works muſt be preferred before private: 2. Works for the Soul cæteris paribus before Works for the body; and yet bodily benefits in order of time, muſt oft go firſt as preparations to the other. 3. Greateſt neceſſities cæteris paribus, muſt be ſupplied before leſſer: The ſaving of anothers life, muſt be preferred before your own leſs neceſſary comforts. 4. Your own and families wants muſt cæteris paribus be ſupplied before ſtrangers; even before ſome that you muſt love better: Becauſe God hath in point of proviſion and maintenance, given you a nearer charge of your ſelves and families, than of others. 5. Nature alſo obligeth you to prefer your kindred before ſtrangers, if there be a parity as to other reaſons. 6. And cæteris paribus, a good Man muſt be preferred before a bad. 7. And yet that charity which is like to tend to the good of the Soul as well as of the body, is to be preferred: And in that caſe oft-times a bad Man is to be preferred, when a greater good is like to be the effect. 8. A friend cæteris paribus, is to be preferred before an Enemy: But not when the good is like to be greater which will follow the relieving of an Enemy. Many other rules might be given, but they are laid down already, Tom 1. Cap. where I treat of Good Works; whither I refer you.

Queſt. 6. Should one devote or ſet by a certain part of daily incomes? Queſt. 6.

Queſt. 7. What proportion is a Man bound to give to the poor? Queſt. 7.

Anſw. Theſe two Queſtions having anſwered in a Letter to Mr. Thomas Gouge now printed, and the Book being not in many hands, I will here recite that Letter as it is publiſhed.

Moſt Dear, and very much Honoured Brother,

EVen the Philoſopher hath taught me ſo to eſteem you, who ſaid, that He is likeſt to God, who needeth feweſt things for himſelf, and doth moſt good to others. And Chriſt telleth us, that univerſal Charity (extending even to them that hate and perſecute us) doth make us, as his Children, like our heavenly Father, Matth. 5. 44, 45, 46, 48. As Hating and Hurting their Neighbours, is the mark of the Children of the Devil, (John 8. 44.) ſo Loving and Doing Good, is the mark of the Children of God. And it is obſervable, that no one treateth ſo copiouſly and pathetically of Love (both of Chriſts love to us, and ours to him) as the bleſſed Diſciple, whom Jeſus is ſaid to have eminently Loved (as John 13. 14, 15, 16, and 17. and 1 John ſhew.

It hath often pleaſed me to hear how dearly you were beloved, by that exceeding great and populous Pariſh, where lately you were Preacher, for your eminent Charity to their Souls and Bodies! And to ſee that ſtill you take it for your work and calling, to be a provoker of others to Love and to good Works, Heb. 10. 24. whilſt many that are taken for good Chriſtians, do deal in ſuch works as Rarities or Recreations, only a little now and then upon the by, and whilſt Satans Miniſters are provoking others to Hatred and to Hurtfulneſs.

Your Labour is ſo amiable to me, that it would contribute to my comforts, if I were able to contribute any thing to your aſſiſtance.

You deſire me to give you my Judgment of the quota pars; What proportion it is meet for moſt Men to devote to charitable uſes; whether the tenth part of their increaſe be not ordinarily a fit proportion?

The reaſon why I uſe not to anſwer ſuch Queſtions without much diſtinguiſhing (when lazy impatient Readers would have them anſwered in a word) is, is, because the real difference of particular cases is so great, as maketh it necessary; unless we will deceive Men, or leave the matter as dark and unresolved as we found it.

I. Before I answer your Question, I shall premise, that I much approve of the way which you insist upon, of setting so much constantly apart as is fit for us to give, that it may be taken by us, to be a devoted or consecrated thing. And methinks that there is much of a Divine Direction for the time, in 1 Cor. 16. 1, 2. together with the antient Church, [That upon the first day of the week, every one lay by him in store, as God had prospered him.] And it will do much to cure Pharisaical Sabbatizing, when the Lords day is statedly used in this, with holy works, and will teach Hypocrites to know what this meaneth, I will have mercy and not Sacrifice, Mat. 9. 13. and 12. 7. And that works of Charity are an odour, a sweet smell, a sacrifice, Mat. 9. 13. and 12. 7. And that works of Charity are an odour, a sweet smell, a Sacrifice acceptable and well pleasing to God, who of the riches of his glory in Christ, will supply all the need of such, as bring forth such fruit to abound unto their account, Phil. 4. 17, 18, 19. So it be done without any ensnaring vows, or rash engagements to unnecessary things; this constant setting apart a certain proportion for pious and charitable uses, will have these advantages.

1. Our distribution will be made deliberately and prudently, when beforehand we study a due proportion, and determine accordingly; whereas they that give only occasionally as some object suddenly inviteth them, will do it at random, without due respect to their own accounts, whether the proportion given be answerable to their own Estate and Duty.

2. This stated way will make Mens charity much more extensive: when objects of Charity are not in their sight, they will inquire after them, and they will seek for the needy, if the needy seek not unto them: because they have so much by them to dispose of, which is devoted to God. But those who give but as occasional objects draw it from them, will give to none but those that crave, or will pass by many as needy, whom they see not, while they relieve only these few that they hap to see.

3. And it will make Mens charity also to be more constant, and done obediently as a Christians daily work and duty; when occasional Charity will be more rarely and unconstantly exercised. In a word, as the observation of the Lords Day, which is a stated proportion of time, secureth the holy improvement of our time, much better than if God be served but occasionally, without a stated time; and as a constant stated course of Preaching, excelleth meer occasional Exhortation; even so a constant course of giving, wisely stated, will find out Objects, and overcome temptations, and discharge our Duty with much more integrity and success. And if we can easily perceive that occasional Praying will not so well discharge the duty of Prayer, as a constant stated course will do; Why should we not think the same of occasional Giving, if Men did but perceive that Giving according to our ability, is as sure and great a duty as Praying. Now to your Question of the proportion of our gifts.

II. We must distinguish,

1. Between them that have no more than will supply their own, and their Families true necessities, and those that have more,

2. Between them that have a stock of Money which yieldeth them no increase, and those that have more increase by their labour, but little stock.

3. Between them whose increase is like to be constant, and theirs that is uncertain, sometime more, and sometime less.

4. Between them that have many Children, or near kindred, that nature casteth upon them for relief; and those that have few or no Children, or have a competent provision for them, and have few needy kindred that they are especially obliged to relieve.

5. Between those that live in times and places where the necessities of the poor are very great, or some great works of Piety are in hand: and those that live where the poor are in no great necessity, and no considerable opportunity for any great work of Piety or Charity doth appear. These distinctions premised, I answer as followeth.

1. It is certain that every true Sanctified Christian, hath Devoted himself and all that he hath to God, to be used in obedience to his will, and for his glory, 1 Cor. 6. 19, 20. 1 Cor. 10. 31. Luke 18. 33. The Question therefore is not, Whether the Tenth part of our Estate should be devoted to, and employed in the service of God, one way or other, as he directeth us: For it is out of Question that all is his, and we are but his Stewards; and must give account of our Stewardship, and of all our Receivings, (Matth. 25.) But the Question is only what proportion is best pleasing to God in our giving to others?

2. A Christian being unfeignedly thus resolved in the General, to lay out that he hath or shall have, as God would have him, and to his glory (as near as he can;) his next enquiry must be (for finding out the will of God) to know in the ordinary course of his distribution, where God hath gone before him by any particular prescript, and tied him to one certain way of giving, and where God hath only given him some general Direction, and left him to discern his duty in particulars, by that general Rule, and the further direction of objects and providence. And in this enquiry he will find,

1. That God hath first prescribed to him in Nature, the necessary sustentation of his own life. And,

2. The necessary maintenance of his Children and Family.

3. The necessary maintenance of the Preachers of the Gospel, for the Worship of God, and the Salvation of Men, 1 Cor. 9. Phil 4. 10, 11, 14, 17, 18. Luke 10. 7. 1 Tim. 5. 17, 18.

4. The necessary maintenance of the Commonwealth, and paying Tribute to the higher Powers, who are the Ministers of God to us for good: attending continually upon this very thing, Rom. 13. 4, 6.

5. The saving of the lives of those that are in apparent danger of famine or perishing, within our sight or reach, 1 John 3. 17. Luk. 10. 33. Thus far God hath prescribed to us, how he would have us use our Estates in an ordinary way. In many other things he hath left us to more general Directions.

3. To know among good Works, which is to be preferred, it principally concerneth Us next to know, what works do most contribute to our chiefest ends? which God is most honoured by? which tend to the greatest good? and here we shall find that cæteris paribus,

1. The Souls of Men are to be preferred before their Bodies, in estimation and intention: But in time, the Body is oft to be preferred before the Soul, because if the Body be suffered to perish, the helping of the Soul will be past our power.

2. And so the Church is finally and estimatively to be preferred before the Common-wealth; but the Common-wealth must be first served in time, when it is necessary to the Churches support and welfare: For the Church will else perish with the Common-wealth.

3. The good of many is to be preferred before the Good of few, and publick good to be valued above private, Rom. 9. 3.

4. A continued good is greater than a short and transitory good. And so necessary is it to have chief respect

respect in all our works to our chiefest end (the greatest good) that even when God seemeth to have prescribed to us the way of our expences, yet that is but as to our ordinary course, for if in an extraordinary case it fall out, that another way is more to Gods Glory and the common good, it must be then preferred. For all means are to be judged of by the end, and chosen, and used for it. For example, if the good of Church and Common-wealth, or of the Souls of many do stand up against our corporal provision of our Children or Families, it is to be preferred; which is easily proved a fortiore, because it is to be preferred before our own good, even the saving of our lives. A good Subject will lose his life to save the life of his King: and a good Soldier will die to save his General, or the Army. And a useless Member of the Church should be content to die, if it be necessary to save the life of a Pastor that is greatly useful. If a poor ordinary Christian then had been so put to it, that either Paul or He must famish, no doubt but his ultimate end would have commanded him to prefer the Apostle before himself; so that in extraordinary cases, the end and greatest good must be our guide.

4. Though I may ordinarily prefer my own life before anothers, yet I must not prefer my meer delight nor health, before anothers life: And though Men must provide for the lives of their Children, before the lives of others, yet the life of a poor Neighbour (cæteris paribus) must be preferred and provided for, before the portions of your own Children, and before the supply of their tolerable wants: So that as long as there are poor about you, that are in necessity of food to save their lives, the portions or comliest cloathing of your Children, must rather be neglected than the poor be suffered to perish. How else do I love my Neighbour as my self, If I make so great a difference between my self and him?

5. Even the food and rayment, and other necessaries, which a Christian useth himself, he must use for God, and not for his carnal self at all; not taking it as his own, which he may use at and for his own pleasure, but as part of his Masters Goods, which are all to be used only for his service. As a Steward, that when he giveth every Servant his part, and taketh his own part, it is not as if it were primarily his own, but as a servant on the same account with the rest. So when I devote all that I have to God, I am so far from excepting my own part, even my food and rayment, that I do more confidently intend the serving of God with that, than with the rest, because it is more in my power, and there is in it more of my duty. The same I may say of that which is given to our Children and other Relations.

6. Therefore when more of the service and interest of God, lieth upon your own, or your Childrens using of his talents, than upon other Mens, you are bound (for God, and not for your selves) to retain so much the more to your selves and Children. It is a fond conceit that a Man is bound to give all to others, rather than to himself or Children, when it is most probable, that those others, would do God less service with it, than himself or his Children would do: As suppose such a Man as Mr. Elliot in New England (that devoteth himself to the Conversion of the Indians) had riches, when some Neighbour Ministers were poor, that are engaged in no such work: He that knoweth that God hath given him a heart and an opportunity to do him more service with it than another would do, is not bound to put it out of his own hands into anothers, that is less like to be a faithful improver of it. If you have a Son of your own that is a Preacher of the Gospel, and is more able and serviceable than other Ministers in equal want, no doubt you have then a double obligation to relieve your own Son before another; as he is your Son, and as he is more serviceable to God. If other Men are bound to supply your want for the work and interest of the Gospel, you are not bound to give away your own supplies, to the disabling yon from your work, unless when you see a greater work, or the present absolute necessity of others, doth require it.

7. It is imprudent and unsafe, and therefore unlawful, ordinarily, to tye your self unchangeably for continuance, to any one particular way of using your Estates for God: As to vow that you will give it to Ministers, or to the poor, or to Schools, &c. because the changes, may be such which God will make, as shall make that way to be one year necessary, which before was not, and so change your duty. We cannot prescribe to God what way he shall appoint us for the future, to use his Talents in. His Word bids us prefer the greatest good; but which is the greatest, his providence must tell us.

8. He that hath no more than is necessary to the very Preservation of his own life and his families, is not bound to give to others (unless in some extraordinary case, which calleth him to prefer a greater and more publick good:) And he that hath no more than is needful, to the comfortable support of himself and family, is not bound to relieve those that have no greater wants than himself. And his own necessity is not to be measured meerly by what he hath, but by the use he hath for it: For a Magistrate, or one that is engaged in publick works, may have need of as many hundreds a year, as a private Man of Pounds.

9. Those that have many Children to provide for, or poor kindred that nature casteth on them, cannot give so much (proportionably) to other poor, as those are bound to do that have few or none: For these are bound to give all, except their personal necessaries, to publick, pious, or charitable works, because God calleth not for it any other way.

10. To pamper the flesh, is a sin as well in the Rich, as in the Poor: The Rich therefore are bound not only to give all that the flesh can spare, when its own inordinate desires are satisfied, but deny themselves, and mortifie the Flesh, and be good husbands for God, and studious to retrench all unnecessary expences, and to live laboriously and thriftily, that they may have the more to do good with. It is a great extenuation of the largest Gifts, as to Gods esteem, when they are but the leavings of the flesh, and are given out of Mens abundance, and when we offer that to God, that costeth us nothing: As Christ doth purposely determine the case, Luke 21. 1, 2, 3, 4. comparing the Rich Mans gift with the Widows two mites, he said, Of a truth I say unto you, that this poor Widow hath cast in more than they all: For all these have of their abundance cast in unto the offerings of God; but she of her penury, hath cast in all the living that she had (that is, all the stock she had before-hand, though she had need of it her self.) It is a very considerable thing in our Charity, how much mortification and self-denial is expressed in it, and how much it costeth our own flesh, to give to others. And therefore they that think they are excused from doing good to others, as long as they have any need of it themselves, and will give nothing but what they have no need of (it being not of absolute necessity to their lives) do offer a Sacrifice of no great value in the eyes of God. What then shall we say of them, that will not give even out of their abundance, and that which without any suffering they may spare?

11. The first and principal thing to be done by one, that would give as God would have him, is, to get a truly charitable heart, which containeth all these parts.

1. That we see God in his needy Creatures, and in his cause or work that needs our help.

2. That we be sensible of his abundant love in Christ to us, in giving pardon and eternal life; and that from the sense of this our thankful hearts are moved to do good to others.

3. That

3. That therefore we do it ultimately, as to Christ himself; who taketh that which is done for his cause and Servants, as done to him, Matth. 25. 40.

4. That we conquer the cursed Sin of Selfishness, which makes Men little regard any but themselves.

5. That we love our neighbours as our selves, and love most, where there is most of God and goodness, and not according to self-interest: And that as members of the same Body, we take our Brethrens wants and sufferings as our own; and then we should be as ready to help them as our selves.

6. That we know the vanity of worldly riches, and be not earthly minded, but regard the interest of God and our Souls, above all the treasures of the World.

7. That we unfeignedly believe the promises of God, who hath engaged himself to provide for us, and everlastingly to reward us in glory with himself. If these seven qualifications be wrought upon the Heart, good works will plentifully follow. Make but the Tree good, and the Fruit will be good. But when the Heart is void of the root and life which should produce them, the Judgment will not be perswaded that so much is necessary, and required of us; and the will it self will still hang back, and be delaying to do good, and doing all pinchingly and hypocritically, with unwillingness and distrust.

No wonder if good works are so rare, when it is evident that to do them sincerely and heartily as our Trade and Business, it is necessary that the whole Soul be thus renewed, by faith, and love, and self-denyal, and mortification, and by a heavenly hope and mind. They are the fruits and works of the new creature (which, is alas, too rare in the World:) For we are his workmanship, created in Christ Jesus unto good works, which God hath before ordained, that we should walk in them, Ephes. 2. 10. Therefore our first and chiefest labour should be to be sure that we are furnished with such hearts, and then if we have wherewith to do good, such hearts will be sure to do it; such hearts will best discern the time and measure, as a healthful Mans appetite will in eating: For they will take it for a mercy and happiness to do good, and know, that it is they that give, that are the great receivers. It is but a little mony or alms, that the poor receive of us, but it is Gods acceptance, and favour, and reward that we receive, which is in this life a hundred fold (in value) and in the world to come eternal life, Mat. 19. 29. But if we have but little or nothing to give, such a heart is accepted, as if we had given as much as we desire to give; so that if you have a heart that would give thousands if you had it, God will set down upon your account, so many thousands given (in desire.) Your two mites shall be valued above all the superfluities of sensual worldlings: For if there be first a willing mind, it is accepted according to that a man hath, and not according to that he hath not: 2 Cor. 8. 12. But God taketh not that for a willing mind, which only saith, I would give if I should suffer nothing by it my self, or were I sure I should not want: But that which saith, I will serve God as well as I can with my estate while I have it, and deny my flesh, that I may have to do good with, and trust God for my provision and reward; for if there be a readiness to will, there will be a performance also out of that which you have, 2 Cor. 8. 11.

12. Such a holy Self-denying charitable heart, with the help of prudence, is the best Judge of the due Proportion which we should give: For this willing readiness being supposed, Prudence will discern the fittest objects, and the fittest time, and the fittest measure, and will suit the means unto the end: When once a Mans heart is set upon doing good, it will not be very hard to perceive how much our selves, our families, the poor, and religious uses should have; for if such a Person be Prudent himself, he hath always with him, a constant Counsellor, with a general Rule, and directing Providence: If he want Prudence sufficient to be his own Director, he will take Direction from the Prudence of others.

13. Such a truly willing mind, will not be much wanting in the General, of doing good, but one way or other, will serve God with his estate; and then if in any particulars he should come short, it will comparatively be a very small sin, when it is not for want of willingness, but of skill. The Will is the chief seat of all moral good and evil: There is no more Virtue than there is Will, nor no more Sin nor Vice, than there is Will. He that knoweth not how much he should give, because he is not willing to give it, and therefore not willing to know it, is indeed the miser and sinfully ignorant; but if it be not for want of a willing mind that we mistake the proportion, it will be a very pardonable mistake.

14. Your proportion of the tenth part, is too much for some, and much too little for others, but for the most, I think it as likely a proportion as it is fit for another to prescribe in particular, with these following explications.

1. He that hath a full stock of Mony, and no increase by it, must give proportionably out of his stock; when he that hath little or no stock; but the fruits of his daily industry and labour, may possibly be bound to give less than the other.

2. It is not the Tenth of our increase, deducting first all our families provision, that you mean when you direct to give the Tenth (for it is far more, if not all, that after such provision must be given;) But it is the Tenth without deduction that you mean: Therefore when family necessaries cannot spare the Tenth, it may be too much (else even the Receivers must be all Givers:) But when family necessities can spare much more than the Tenth, then the Tenth is not enough.

3. In those places where Church, and State, and Poor, are all to be maintained by free gift, there the Tenth of our increase is far too little, for those that have any thing considerable to spare, to give to all these uses.

This is apparent in that the Tenths alone were not thought enough even in the time of the Law, to give towards the publick worship of God: For beside the Tenths, there were the first fruits, and oblations, and many sorts of Sacrifices; and yet at the same time, the Poor were to be maintained by liberal gifts besides the Tenths; and though we read not of much given to the maintainance of their Rulers and Magistrates, before they chose to have a King, yet afterwards we read of much; and before, the charges of Wars and publick works lay upon all.

In most places with us, the publick Ministry is maintained by Glebe and Tythes, which are none of the Peoples gifts at all; for he that sold, or leased them their Lands, did suppose that Tythes were to be payed out of it, and therefore they paid a Tenth part less for it, in Purchase, Fines, or Rents, than otherwise they should have done; so that I reckon, that most of them give little or nothing to the Minister at all. Therefore they may the better give so much the more to the needy, and to other charitable uses. But where Minister, and Poor, and all are maintained by the Peoples contribution, there the Tenths are too little for the whole work; but yet to most, or very many, the Tenths to the Poor alone, besides the maintenance of the Ministry and State, may possibly be more than they are able to give. The Tenths even among the Heathens, were given in many places to their Sacrifices, Priests, and to Religious, Publick, Civil Works, besides all their private Charity to the Poor.

I find in Diog. Laertius, lib. 1. (mihi) 32. that Pisistratus the Athenian Tyrant, proving to Solon (in his Epistle to him) that he had nothing against God or Man to blame him for, but for taking the Crown; telling him, that he caused them to keep the same Laws which Solon gave them, and that better than the Popular Government could have done, doth instance thus: Athenienſium ſinguli decimas frugum ſuarum ſeparant, non in uſus noſtros conſumendus, verum Sacrificiis publicis, commodiſque Communibus, & ſi quando bellum contra nos ingruerit, in ſumptus deputandas; that is, Every one of the Athenians do ſeparate the Tythes of their fruits, not to be conſumed to our uſes, but to defray the charge in publick Sacrifices, and in the common profits, and if War at any time invade us. And Plautus ſaith, Ut decimam ſolverit Herculi. Indeed as among the Heathens the Tythes were conjunctly given for Religious and Civil uſes, ſo it ſeems at firſt that the Chriſtian Emperors ſetled them on the Biſhops for the uſe of the Poor, as well as for the Miniſters, and Church-ſervice, and utenſils. For to all theſe they were to be divided, and the Biſhop was as the Guardian of the Poor: And the Glebe or Farms that were given to the Church, were all employed to the ſame uſes: And the Canons required that the Tythes ſhould be thus diſpoſed of by the Clergy; non tanquam propriæ, ſed domino oblatæ: And the Emperor Juſtinian commanded the Biſhops, ne ea quæ eccleſiis relicta ſunt ſibi adſcribant ſed in neceſſarios Eccleſiæ uſus impendant; l. 43. c. de Epiſc. & Cler. vid. Albert. Rantz. Metrop. l. 1. c. 2. & ſax. l. 6. c. 52. And Hierom (ad Damaſ.) ſaith, Quoniam quicquid habent clerici pauperum eſt; & domus illorum omnibus debent eſſe communes; ſuſceptioni peregrinarum & hoſpitum invigilare debent: Maxime curandum eſt illis, ut de decimis & oblationibus, cœnobiis & Xenodochiis qualem voluerint & potuerint ſuſtentationem impendant.

Yet then the paying of Tythes did not excuſe the People from all other Charity to the Poor: Auſtin ſaith, Qui ſibi aut præmium comparat, aut peccatorum deſiderat indulgentiam promereri, reddat decimam, etiam de novem partibus ſtudeat eleemoſynam dare pauperibus. And in our times there is leſs reaſon that Tythes ſhould excuſe the People from their works of Charity, both becauſe the Tythes are now more appropriate to the maintenance of the Clergy, and becauſe (as is aforeſaid) the People give them not out of their own. I confeſs, if we conſider how Decimation was uſed before the Law by Abraham and Jacob, and eſtabliſhed by the Law unto the Jews, and how commonly it was uſed among the Gentiles, and laſt of all by the Church of Chriſt; it will make a conſiderate Man imagine, that as there is ſtill a Divine Direction for one Day in ſeven, as a neceſſary proportion of time, to be ordinarily conſecrated to God, beſide what we can ſpare from our other days; ſo that there is ſomething of a Divine Canon, or direction for the tenth of our revenues or increaſe to be ordinarily conſecrated to God, beſides what may be ſpared from the reſt. And whether thoſe Tythes that are none of your own, and coſt you nothing, be now to be reckoned to private Men, as any of their Tenths, which they themſelves ſhould give, I leave to your conſideration. Amongſt Auguſtines works, we find an opinion that the Devils were the Tenth part of the Angels, and that Man is now to be the Tenth order among the Angels, the Saints filling up the place that the Devils fell from, and there being nine orders of Angels to be above us, and that in this, there is ſome ground of our paying Tenths; and therefore he ſaith, that, Hæc eſt Domini juſtiſſima conſuetudo; ut ſi tu illi decimam non dederis, tu ad decimam revocaberis, id eſt, dæmonibus, qui ſunt decima pars angelorum, aſſociaberis. Though I know not whence he had this opinion, it ſeemeth that the devoting of a tenth part ordinarily to God, is a matter that we have more than a humane Direction for.

15. In times of extraordinary neceſſities of the Church, or State, or Poor, there muſt be extraordinary bounty in our Contributions; as if an enemy be ready to invade the Land, or if ſome extraordinary work of God (as the Converſion of ſome Heathen Nations) do require it, or ſome extraordinary perſecution, and diſtreſs befal the Paſtors, or in a year of famine, plague, or war, when the neceſſities of the poor are extraordinary: The Tenths in ſuch caſes will not ſuffice, from thoſe that have more to give; therefore in ſuch a time, the Primitive Chriſtians ſold their Poſſeſſions, and laid down the price at the feet of the Apoſtles.

In one word, an honeſt charitable heart, being preſuppoſed as the root or fountain, and prudence being the diſcerner of our duty, the Apoſtles general Rule may much ſatisfie a Chriſtian for the proportion, 1 Cor. 16. 2. [Let every one of you lay by him in ſtore, as God hath proſpered him.] And 2 Cor. 8. 12. According to that a man hath; though there be many intimations, that ordinarily a Tenth part at leaſt is requiſite.

III. Having thus reſolved the queſtion of the quota pars, or proportion to be given, I ſhall ſay a little to the queſtion, Whether a Man ſhould give moſt in his life time, or at his Death?

Anſw. 1. It is certain that the beſt work is that which is like to do moſt good.

2. But to make it beſt to us, it is neceſſary that we do it with the moſt ſelf-denying, holy, charitable mind.

3. That cæteris paribus, all things elſe being equal, the preſent doing of a good work, is better than to defer it.

4. That to do good only when you die, becauſe then you can keep your wealth no longer, and becauſe then it coſteth you nothing to part with it, and becauſe then you hope that this ſhall ſerve inſtead of true Repentance and Godlineſs; this is but to deceive your ſelves, and will do nothing to ſave your Souls, though it do never ſo much good to others.

5. That he that ſinfully neglecteth in his life time to do good, if he do it at his death, from true Repentance and Converſion, it is then accepted of God; though the ſin of his delay muſt be lamented.

6. That he that delayeth it till Death, not out of any ſelfiſhneſs, backwardneſs, or unwillingneſs, but that the work may be better, and do more good, doth better than if he haſtened a leſſer good. As if a Man have a deſire to ſet up a Free School for perpetuity, and the Mony which he hath is not ſufficient; if he ſtay till his Death, that ſo the improvement of the Mony may increaſe it; and make it enough for his intended work; that is to do a greater good with greater ſelf-denial: For

1. He receiveth none of the increaſe of the mony for himſelf.

2. And he receiveth in his life time none of the praiſe or thanks of the work: So alſo, if a Man that hath no Children, have ſo much Land only as will maintain him, and deſireth to give it all to charitable uſes when he dieth, this delay is not at all to be blamed, becauſe he could not ſooner give it; and if it be not in vain-glory, but in love to God and to good works that he leaveth it, it is truly acceptable at laſt. So that all good works that are done at death, are not therefore to be undervalued, nor are they rejected of God; but ſometimes it falleth out that they are ſo much the greater and better works, though he that can do the ſame in his life time, ought to do it.

IV. But though I have ſpent all theſe words in anſwering theſe Queſtions, I am fully ſatisfied that its very few that are kept from doing good by any ſuch doubt or difficulty, in the caſe which ſtalls their judgments; but by the power of ſin and want of grace, which leaveth an unwillingneſs, and backwardneſs on their hearts. Could we tell how to remove the impediments in Mens wills, it would do more, than the cleareſt reſolving all the caſes of conſcience, which their judgments ſeem to be unſatisfied in. I'le tell you what are the impediments in your way that are harder to be removed than all theſe difficulties, culties, and yet must be overcome before you can bring Men to be like true Christians, rich in good Works.

1. Most Men are so sensul and selfish, that their own flesh is an insatiable gulf that devoureth all, and they have little or nothing to spare from it to good uses. It is better cheap maintaining a family of temperate, sober Persons, than one fleshly person that hath a whole litter of Vices and Lusts to be maintained: So much a year seemeth necessary to maintain their Pride in needless curiosity and bravery, and so much a year to maintain their sensual sports and pleasures; and so much to please their throats or appetites, and to lay in provision for Feavers, and Dropsies, and Coughs, and Consumptions, and an hundred such Diseases, which are the natural progeny of Gluttony, Drunkenness, and excess; and so much a year to maintain their Idleness; and so of many other Vices. But if one of these Persons have the Pride, and Idleness, and Gluttony, and Sportfulness of Wife and Children, and Family also to maintain, as well as their own, many thousand pounds a year perhaps may be too little: Many a Conquering Army hath been maintained at as cheap a rate, as such an Army of Lusts (or Garison at least) as keep possession of some such Families, when all their Luxury goeth for the honour of their Family, and they glory in wearing the Livery of the Devil, the World and the Flesh, (which they once renounced and pretended to glory in nothing but the Cross of Christ; and when they take care in the Education of their Children, that this entailed honour be not cut off from their Families, no wonder if Gods part be little from these Men, when the Flesh must have so much; and when God must stand to the courtesie of his Enemies, and have but their leavings. I hope the Nobility and Gentry of England that are innocent herein, will not be offended with me if I tell them that are guilty, that when I foresee their accounts I think them to be the miserablest Persons upon earth, that rob God, and rob the King of that which should defray the charges of Government, and rob the Church, and rob the Poor, and rob their Souls of all the benefits of good works, and all to please the devouring flesh: It's a dreadful thing to foresee with what horror they will give up their reckoning, when instead of so much in feeding and cloathing the poor, and promoting the Gospel, and the saving of Mens Souls, there will be found upon their account, so much in vain curiosities and pride, and so much in costly sports and pleasures, and so much in flesh-pleasing Luxury and Excess. The trick that they have got of late, to free themselves from the fears of this account, by believing that there will be no such day, will prove a short and lamentable remedy: and when that day shall come upon them unawares, their unbelief and pleasures will die together, and deliver them up to never-dying horror and despair. I have heard it oft mentioned as the dishonour of France, that the third part of the Revenues of so rich a Kingdom should be devoted and paid to the maintaining of superstition: But if there be not many (and most) Kingdoms in the World, where one half of their wealth is devoted to the flesh, and so to the Devil, I should be glad to find my self herein mistaken: And judge you which is more disgraceful, to have half your Estates given in sensuality to the Devil, or a third part too ignorantly devoted to God! If Men laid out no more than needs upon the flesh, they might have the more for the service of God and of their Souls, You cannot live under so much a year, as would maintain above twice as many frugal, temperate industrious Persons, because your flesh must needs be pleased, and you are strangers to Christian mortification and self-denial. Laertius tells us that Crates Thebanus put all his Money into the Bankers or Usurers hands, with this direction, That if his Sons proved Ideots it should all be paid to them, but if they proved Philosophers, it should be given to the poor: Because Philosophers can live upon a little, and therefore need little. So if we could make Men mortified Christians, they would need so little for themselves, that they would have the more to give to others, and to do good with.

2. Men do not seriously believe Gods promises; that he will recompence them in this life (with better things) an hundred fold, and in the world to come with life eternal! Matth. 19. 29. And that by receiving a Prophet, or Righteous Man, they may have a Prophets or righteous Mans reward: Mat. 10. 24. And that a cup of cold water (when you have no better) given to one of Christs little ones in the name of a Disciple, shall not be unrewarded, Mat. 10. 42. They believe not that Heaven will pay for all, and that there is a life to come in which God will see that they be no losers. They think there is nothing certain but what they have in hand, and therefore they lay up a Treasure upon Earth, and rather trust to their Estates than God: Whereas if they verily believed that there is another life, and that Judgment will pass on them on the terms described, Mat. 25. they would more industriously lay up a Treasure in Heaven, Mat. 6. 20. and make themselves friends of the Mammon of unrighteous, and study how to be rich in good Works, and send their wealth to Heaven before them, and lay up a good foundation against the time to come, that they may lay hold upon eternal life: and then they would be ready to distribute, and willing to communicate, 1 Tim. 6. 17, 18, 19. Luke 16. 9. They would then know how much they are beholden to God, that will not only honour them to be his Stewards, but reward them for distributing his maintenance to his Children, as if they had given so much of their own: They would then see that it is they that are the Receivers, and that giving is the surest way to be rich, when for transitory things (sincerely given) they may receive the everlasting riches. Then they would see that he that saveth his Riches loseth them, and he that loseth them for Christ, doth save them, and lay them up in Heaven: and that it is more blessed to give than to receive; and that we should our selves be laborious that we may have wherewith to support the weak, and to give unto the needy: Read Acts 20. 35. Eph. 4. 28. Prov. 31. 20. &c. Then they would not be weary of well-doing, if they believed that, in due season they shall reap if they faint not; but as they have opportunity, would do good to all Men; but especially to them that are of the houshold of faith, Gal. 6. 9, 10. They would not forget to do good, and communicate, as knowing that with such Sacrifice God is well-pleased, Heb. 13. 16. A true belief of the Reward, would make Men strive who should do most.

3. Another great hinderance is the want of Love to God and our Neighbours, to Christ and his Disciples. If Men loved Christ, they would not deal so niggardly with his Disciples, when he has told them that he taketh all that they do to the least of them (whom he calleth his brethren) as done to himself, Mat. 25. & 10. 39, 40.

If Men loved their Neighbours as themselves, I leave you to judge in what proportion and manner they would relieve them? Whether they would find Money to lay out on Dice and Cards, and gluttonous Feastings, on Plays, and Games, and Pomp, and Pride, while so many round about them are in pinching want.

The destruction of Charity or Christian Love, is the cause that works of Charity are destroyed. Who can look that the seed of the Serpent, that hath an enmity against the Holy Seed, should liberally relieve them! or that the fleshly Mind which is enmity against God, should be ready to do good to the spiritual and holy Servants of God? Gen. 15. Rom. 8. 6, 7, 8. Or that a selfish Man should much care for any body but himself and his own? when Love is turned into the hatred of each other, upon the account of our partial interests, and opinions; and when we are like Men in War, that think he is the braveſt, moſt deſerving Man, that hath killed moſt; when Men have bitter hateful thoughts of one another, and ſet themſelves to make each other odious, and to ruine them, that they may ſtand the faſter, and think that deſtroying them is good ſervice to God, who can look for the fruits of Love from damnable uncharitableneſs and hatred; or that the Devils tree ſhould bring forth holy fruit to God?

4. And then (when Love is well-ſpoken of by all, even its deadly enemies) leſt Men ſhould ſee their wickedneſs and miſery, (and is it not admirable that they ſee it not?) the Devil hath taught them to play the Hypocrites, and make themſelves a Religion which coſts them nothing, without true Chriſtian Love and good works, that they may have ſomething to quiet and cheat their conſciences with. One Man drops now and then an inconſiderable gift, and another oppreſſeth, and hateth and deſtroyeth (and ſlandereth, and cenſureth, that he may not be thought to hate and ruin without cauſe;) and when they have done, they wipe their mouths with a few hypocritical Prayers or good words, and think they are good Chriſtians, and God will not be avenged on them: One thinks that God will ſave him becauſe he is of this Church, and another becauſe he is of another Church: One thinks to be ſaved becauſe he is of this Opinion and Party in Religion, and another becauſe he is of that: One thinks he is Religious, becauſe he ſaith his prayers this way, and another becauſe he prayeth another way. And thus dead Hypocrites, whoſe hearts were never quickned with the powerful Love of God, to love his Servants, their Neighbours, and Enemies, do perſwade themſelves that God will ſave them for mocking and flattering him with the ſervice of their deceitful lips: While they want the Love of Good, which is the root of all good, and are poſſeſſed with the Love of money, which is the root of evil, 1 Tim. 6. 10. and are Lovers of pleaſure more than God, 2 Tim. 3. 4.

They will join themſelves forwardly to the cheap and outſide actions of Religion: But when they hear much leſs than [One thing thou yet wanteſt: ſell all that thou haſt and diſtribute to the poor, and thou ſhalt have a treaſure in Heaven:] they are very ſorrowful, becauſe they are very rich, Luke 18. 22, 23. Such a fruitleſs love as they had to others, Jam. 2. ſuch a fruitleſs Religion they have as to themſelves: For pure Religion and undefiled before God, is to viſit the Fatherleſs and Widows in their adverſity, and to keep your ſelves unſpotted from the World, James 1. 27. See 1 John 2. 15. & 3. 17. Whoſo hath this Worlds Goods, and ſeeth his brother hath need, and ſhutteth up his bowels of compaſſion from him; how dwelleth the love of God in him? There are three Texts that deſcribe the caſe of ſenſual uncharitable Gentlemen.

1. Luke 16. A Rich man cloathed in purple and ſilk (for ſo, as Dr. Hammond noteth, it ſhould rather be tranſlated) and fared ſumptuouſly every day, you know the end of him.

2. Ezek. 16. 49. Sodoms Sin was Pride, fulneſs of bread, and abundance of idleneſs, neither did ſhe ſtrengthen the hand of the poor and needy.

3. James 5. 1, to 7. Go to now, ye rich men, weep and howl for the miſeries that ſhall come upon you ——Ye have lived in pleaſure on earth, and been wanton: ye have nouriſhed your hearts, as in (or for) the day of ſlaughter——Ye have condemned and killed the juſt, and he doth not reſiſt you—— And remember Prov. 21. 13. Whoſo ſtoppeth his ears at the cry of the poor, he alſo ſhall cry himſelf and ſhall not be heard. And Jam. 2. 13. He ſhall have judgment without mercy that ſhewed no mercy, and mercy rejoiceth againſt judgment. Yea in this life it is oft obſervable, Prov. 11. 24. There is that ſcattereth, and yet increaſeth, and there is that withholdeth more than is meet, but it tendeth to poverty.

Tit. 2. Directions for works of Charity.

Direct. 1. LOve God, and be renewed to his image; and then it will be natural to you to do good; and his Love will be in you a fountain of good works. Dir. 1.

Direct. 2. Love your Neighbours, and it will be eaſie to you to do them all the good you can: As it is to do good to your ſelves or Children or deareſt friends. Dir. 2.

Direct. 3. Learn ſelf-denyal, that ſelfiſhneſs may not cauſe you to be all for your ſelves, and be Satans Law of Nature in you, forbidding you to do good to others. Dir. 3.

Direct. 4. Mortifie the fleſh, and the vices of ſenſuality: Pride and Curioſity, Gluttony and Drunkenneſs, are inſatiable gulfs, and will devour all, and leave but little for the poor: Though there be never ſo many poor families which want bread and cloathing, the proud Perſon muſt firſt have the other ſilk Gown, or the other ornaments which may ſet them out with the forwardeſt in the mode and faſhion: And this houſe muſt firſt be handſomer built, and theſe rooms muſt firſt be neatlier furniſhed; and theſe Children muſt firſt have finer cloaths: Let Lazarus lie never ſo miſerable at the door, the ſenſualiſt muſt be cloathed in purple and ſilk, and fare deliciouſly and ſumptuouſly daily, Luke 16. The glutton muſt have the diſh and cup which pleaſeth his appetite, and muſt keep a full Table for the entertainment of his companions that have no need. Theſe inſatiable vices are like Swine and Dogs, that devour all the Childrens bread. Even vain recreations and gaming ſhall have more beſtowed on them, than Church or Poor (as to any voluntary gift) Kill your greedy vices once, and then a little will ſerve your turns, and you may have wherewith to relieve the needy, and do that which will be better to you at your reckoning day. Dir. 4.

Direct. 5. Let not ſelfiſhneſs make your Children the inordinate objects of your charity and proviſion, to take up that which ſhould be otherwiſe employed. Carnal and worldly Perſons would perpetuate their vice; and when they can live no longer themſelves, they ſeem to be half alive in their poſterity, and what they can no longer keep themſelves, they think is beſt laid up for their Children, to feed them as full, and make them as ſenſual and unhappy as themſelves. So that juſt and moderate Proviſions will not ſatisfie them; but their Childrens Portions muſt be as much as they can get, and almoſt all their Eſtates are ſibi & ſuis, for themſelves and theirs: And this pernicious vice is as deſtructive to good works, as almoſt any in the World. That God who hath ſaid that he is worſe than an Infidel who provideth not for his own Family, will judge many thouſands to be worſe than Chriſtians, and than any that will be ſaved muſt be, who make their families the devourers of all which ſhould be expended upon other works of Charity. Dir. 5.

Direct. 6. Take it as the chiefeſt extrinſecal part of your Religion to do good; and make it the trade or buſineſs of your lives; and not as a matter to be done on the by. Jam. 1. 27. Pure Religion and undefiled before God and the Father is this, To viſit the Fatherleſs and Widows in their affliction, and to keep himſelf unſpotted from the world. If we are created for good works, Epheſ. 2. 10. and redeemed and purified to be zealous of good works, Tit. 2. 14. and muſt be judged according to ſuch works, Matth. 25. then certainly it ſhould be our chiefeſt daily care and diligence, to do them with all our hearts and abilities. And as we keep a daily account of our own and our ſervants buſineſs in our particular Callings, ſo ſhould we much more of our employment of our Maſters Talents in his Service: And if a Heathen Prince could ſay with lamentation, Alas, I have loſt a day, if a day had paſt in Dir. 6.

which he had done no one good, how much more ſhould a Chriſtian, who is better inſtructed to know the comforts and rewards of doing good.

Dir. 7. Direct. 7. Give not only out of your ſuperfluities, when the fleſh is glutted with as much as it deſireth, but labour hard in your Callings, and be thrifty and ſaving from all unneceſſary expences, and deny the deſires of eaſe and fulneſs and pride and curioſity that you may have the more to do good with. Thriftineſs for works of Charity is a great and neceſſary duty, though covetous thriftineſs for the love of riches be a great ſin. He that waſteth one half of his Maſters goods through ſlothfulneſs or exceſſes, and then is charitable with the other half, will make but a bad account of his Stewardſhip. Much more he that glutteth his own and his Families and retainers fleſhly deſires firſt, and then giveth to the poor only the leavings of luxury, and ſo much as their fleſhly luſts can ſpare. It is a dearer, a laborious and a thrifty charity, that God doth expect of faithful Stewards.

Dir. 8. Direct. 8. Delay not any good work which you have preſent ability and opportunity to perform. Delay ſignifieth unwillingneſs or negligence. Love and Zeal are active and expeditious. And delay doth frequently fruſtrate good intentions. The Perſons may die that you intend to do good to; or you may die, or your ability and opportunities may ceaſe: That may be done to day which cannot be done to morrow. The Devil is not ignorant of your good intentions, and he will do all that poſſibly he can to make them of no effect: And the more time you give him, the more you enable him to hinder you. You little foreſee what abundance of impediments he may caſt before you: And ſo make that impoſſible which once you might have done with eaſe. Prov. 3. 28. Say not to thy Neighbour, Go and come again, and to morrow I will give, when thou haſt it by thee. Prov. 27. 1. Boaſt not thy ſelf of to morrow, for thou knoweſt not what a day may bring forth.

Dir. 9. Direct. 9. Diſtruſt not Gods providence for thy own proviſion. An unbelieving Man will needs be a God to himſelf, and truſt himſelf only for his proviſions, becauſe indeed he cannot truſt God. But you will find that your labour and care is vain, or worſe than vain without Gods bleſſing. Say not diſtruſtfully, what ſhall I have my ſelf when I am old? Though I am not perſwading you to make no proviſion, or to give away all; yet I muſt tell you, that it is exceeding folly to put off any preſent duty, upon diſtruſt of God, or expectation of living to be old. He that over-night ſaid, I have enough laid up for many years, did quickly hear, Thou fool, this night ſhall thy ſoul be required of thee: and whoſe then ſhall the things be which thou haſt provided? Luke 12. 20. Rather obey that, Eccl. 9. 10. Whatſoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might: For there is no work nor device, nor knowledge, nor wiſdom in the grave whither thou goeſt. Do you think that there is not an hundred thouſand whoſe eſtates are now conſumed in the flames of London, who could wiſh that all that had been given to pious or charitable uſes? Do but believe from the bottom of your hearts, that he that hath pity on the poor, lendeth to the Lord, and that which he layeth out he will pay him again, Prov. 19. 17. And that Matth. 13. 40, 41, 42. He that receiveth you, receiveth me, and he that receiveth me, receiveth him that ſent me: He that receiveth a Prophet in the name of a Prophet, ſhall receive a Prophets reward; and he that receiveth a righteous man in the name of a righteous man, ſhall receive a righteous mans reward: and whoſoever ſhall give to drink to one of theſe little ones a cup of cold water only (i. e. when he hath no better) in the name of a Diſciple, verily I ſay unto you, he ſhall in no wiſe loſe his reward. I ſay, Believe this, and you will make haſte to give while you may, leſt your opportunity ſhould overſlip you.

Dir. 10. Direct. 10. What you cannot do your ſelves, provoke others to do who are more able: Provoke one another to love and good works. Modeſty doth not ſo much forbid you to beg for others as for your ſelves. Some want but information to draw them to good works: And ſome that are unwilling, may be urged to it, to avoid the ſhame of uncharitableneſs: And though ſuch giving do little good to themſelves, it may do good to others. Thus you may have the reward when the coſt is anothers, as long as the Charity is yours.

Dir. 11. Direct. 11. Hearken to no doctrine which is an enemy to Charity or good works; nor yet which teacheth you to truſt in them for more than their proper part. He that aſcribeth to any of his own works, that which is proper to Chriſt, doth turn them into heinous ſin. And he that aſcribeth not to them all that which Chriſt aſcribeth to them, is a ſinner alſo. And whatever ignorant Men may prate, the time is coming, when neither Chriſt without our Charity, nor our Charity without Chriſt (but in ſubordination to him,) will either comfort or ſave our Souls.

CHAP. XXXI.

Caſes and Directions about confeſſing ſins and injuries to others.

Tit. 1. Caſes about confeſſing ſins and injuries to others.

Queſt. 1. IN what caſes is it a duty to confeſs wrongs to thoſe that we have wronged? Queſt. 1.

Anſw. 1. When in real injuries you are unable to make any reſtitution, and therefore muſt deſire forgiveneſs, you cannot well do it without confeſſion. 2. When you have wronged a Man by a lye, or by falſe witneſs, or that he cannot be righted, till you confeſs the truth. 3. When you have wronged a Man in his honour or fame, where the natural remedy is to ſpeak the contrary, and confeſs the wrong. 4. When it is neceſſary to cure the revengeful inclination of him whom you have wronged, or to keep up his charity, and ſo to enable him to love you, and forgive you. 5. Therefore all known wrongs to another, muſt be confeſſed, except when impoſſibility, or ſome ill effect which is greater than the good be like to follow. Becauſe all Men are apt to abate their Love to thoſe that injure them, and therefore all have need of this remedy. And we muſt do our part to be forgiven by all whom we have wronged.

Queſt. 2. What cauſes will excuſe us from confeſſing wrong to others? Queſt. 2.

Anſw. 1. When full recompence may be made without it, and no forgiveneſs of the wrong is neceſſary from the injured, nor any of the foreſaid cauſes require it. 2. When the wrong is ſecret and not known to the injured party, and the confeſſing of it would but trouble his mind, and do him more harm than good. 3. When the injured Party is ſo implacable and inhumane that he would make uſe of the confeſſion to the ruine of the penitent, or to bring upon him greater penalty than he deſerveth. 4. When it would injure a third Perſon who is intereſſed in the buſineſs, or bring them under oppreſſion and undeſerved miſery. 5. When it tendeth to the diſhonour of Religion, and to make it ſcorned becauſe of the fault of the penitent confeſſor. 6. When it tendeth to ſet People together by the ears, and breed diſſention, or otherwiſe injure the Common-wealth or Government. 7. In general, it is no duty to confeſs our ſin to him that we have wronged, when, all things conſidered, it is like in the judgment of the truly wiſe, to do more hurt than good: For it is appointed as a means to good, and not to do evil.

Queſt. 3. If I have had a ſecret thought or purpoſe Queſt. 3.

to wrong another, am I bound to confess it, when it was never executed?

Answ. 1. You are not bound to confess it to the party whom you intended to wrong, as any act of Justice to make him reparation; nor to procure his forgiveness to your self: Because it was no wrong to him indeed, nor do thoughts and things secret come under his Judgment, and therefore need not his pardon. 2. But it is a sin against God, and to him you must confess it. 3. And by accident, finis gratia, you must confess it to Men, in case it be necessary to be a warning to others, or to the increase of their hatred of sin, or their watchfulness, or to exercise your own humiliation, or prevent a relapse, or to quiet your conscience, or in a word, when it is like to do more good than hurt.

Quest. 4. Quest. 4. To whom, and in what cases must I confess to Men, my sins against God, and when not?

Answ. The cases about that confession which belongeth to Church-discipline, belongeth to the second Tome; and therefore shall here be passed by. But briefly and in general, I may answer the question thus: 1. There are conveniences and inconveniences to be compared together, and you must make your choice accordingly. The reasons which may move you to confess your sins to another are these. 1. When another hath sinned with you, or perswaded or drawn you to it, and must be brought to repentance with you. 2. When your conscience hath in vain tried all other fit means for peace or comfort, and cannot obtain it, and there is any probability of such advice from others as may procure it. 3. When you have need of advice to resolve your conscience, whether it be sin or not, or of what degree, or what you are obliged to in order to forgiveness. 4. When you have need of counsel to prevent the sin for the time to come, and mortifie the habit of it.

The inconveniences which may attend it, are such as these; 1. You are not certain of anothers Secresie: His mind may change, or his understanding fail, or he may fall out with you, or some great necessity may befall him to drive him to open what you told him. 2. Then whether your shame or loss will not make you repent it, should be foreseen. 3. And how far others may suffer in it. 4. And how far it will reflect dishonour on Religion. All things being considered on both sides, the preponderating reasons must prevail.

Tit. 2. Directions about confessing sin to others.

Dir. 1. Direct. 1. DO nothing which you are not willing to confess, or which may trouble you much if your confession should be opened. Prevention is the easiest way: And foresight of the consequents should make a wise Man still take heed.

Dir. 2. Direct. 2. When you have sinned or wronged any, weigh well the consequents on both sides before you make your confession: that you may neither do that which you may wish undone again, nor causelessly refuse your duty: And that inconveniences foreseen may be the better undergone when they cannot be avoided.

Dir. 3. Direct. 3. When a well informed conscience telleth you that confession is your duty, let not self-respects detain you from it, but do it whatever it may cost you. Be true to Conscience, and do not wilfully put off your duty: To live in the neglect of a known duty, is to live in a known sin: which will give you cause to question your sincerity, and cause more terrible effects in your Souls, than the inconveniences of confession could ever have been.

Dir. 4. Direct. 4. Look to your repentance that it be deep and absolute, and free from hypocritical exceptions and reserves. For half and hollow repentance will not carry you through hard and costly duties: But that which is sincere, will break over all: It will make you so angry with your selves and sins, that you will be as inclined to take shame to your selves in an honest revenge, as an angry Man is to bring shame upon his Adversary. We are seldom over-tender of a Mans reputation whom we fall out with: And Repentance is a falling out with our selves. We can bear sharp Remedies, when we feel the pain, and perceive the mortal danger of the disease: And Repentance is such a perception of our pain and danger. We will not tenderly hide a mortal Enemy, but bring him to the most open shame: And Repentance causeth us to hate sin as our mortal Enemy. It is want of Repentance that maketh Men so unwilling to make a just confession.

Dir. 5. Direct. 5. Take heed of Pride, which maketh Men so tender of their reputation, that they will venture their Souls to save their honour: Men call it bashfulness, and say they cannot confess for shame: But it is Pride that maketh them so much ashamed to be known by Men, to be offenders, while they less fear the eye and judgment of the Almighty. Impudency is a mark of a profligate sinner: but he that pretendeth shame against his duty, is foolishly proud; and should be more ashamed to neglect his duty, and continue impenitent in his sin. A humble Person can perform a self-abasing humbling duty.

Dir. 6. Direct. 6. Know the true Uses of Confession of sin, and use it accordingly: Do it with an hatred of sin, to express your selves implacable Enemies to it: Do it to repair the wrong which you have done to others; and the dishonour you have done to the Christian Religion, and to warn the hearers to take heed of sin and temptation by your fall: It is worth all your shame, if you save one sinner by it from his sin: Do it to lay the greater obligation upon your selves for the future, to avoid the sin and live more carefully: For it is a double shame to sin after such humbling confessions.

CHAP. XXXII.

Cases and Directions about Satisfaction and Restitution.

Tit. 1. Cases of Conscience about Satisfaction and Restitution.

Quest. 1. WHen is it that proper restitution must be made, and when satisfaction? And what is it?

Answ. Restitution properly is ejusdem, of the same thing, which was detained or taken away: Satisfaction is solutio equivalentis, vel tantidem, alias indebiti; that which is for compensation or reparation of loss, damage, or injury; being something of equal value or use to the receiver. Primarily res ipsa debetur, Restitution is first due, where it is possible: But when that is unavoidably hindered or forbidden by some effectual restraint, satisfaction is due. Whilst Restitution of the same may be made, we cannot put off the Creditor or Owner with that which is equivalent without his own consent; but by his consent we may at any time. And to the Question, What is due satisfaction? I answer, that when Restitution may be made, and he that should restore, doth rather desire the owner to accept some other thing in compensation, there that proportion is due satisfaction which both Parties agree upon. For if it be above the value, it was yet voluntarily given, and the payer might have chosen: And if it be under the value, it was yet voluntarily accepted, and the receiver might have chosen. But if Restitution cannot be made, or not without some greater hurt to the payer than the value of the thing, there due satisfaction is that which is of equal value and use to the receiver. And if he will not be satisfied with it, he is unjust, and it is quoad valorem rei & debitum solventis, full full satisfaction, and he is not (unless by some other accident) bound to give any more: Because it is not anothers unrighteous will that he is obliged to fulfil, but a debt which is to be discharged. But here you must distinguish betwixt satisfaction in Commutative Justice, for a Debt, or injury, and satisfaction in distributive Governing Justice, for a fault or crime: The measure of the former satisfaction, is so much as may compensate the owners loss; not only so much as the thing was worth to another, but what it was worth to him: But the measure of the later satisfaction is, so much as may serve the ends of Government instead of actual obedience; or so much as will suffice as to the Ends of Government, to repair the hurts which the crime hath done, or avoid what it would do.

Q. Why did they restore fourfold?

And here you may see the answer to that Question, Why a Thief was commanded to restore fourfold, by the Law of Moses? For in that restitution there was a conjunction of both these sorts of satisfaction, both in point of Commutative and Distributive Justice: So much as repaired the owners loss was satisfaction to the owner for the injury: The rest was all satisfaction to God and the Common-wealth for the publick injury that came by the crime or violation of the Law. Other answers are given by some, but this is the plain and certain truth.

Quest. 2. Quest. 2. How far is Restitution or Satisfaction necessary?

Answ. As far as acts of obedience to God, and Justice to Man are necessary; that is, 1. As a Man that repenteth truly of sin against God, may be saved without external obedience, if you suppose him cut off by death immediately upon his repenting, before he hath any opportunity to obey: So that the Animus obediendi is absolutely necessary; and the actus obediendi if there be opportunity: So is it here: The animus restituendi, or true resolution or willingness to restore, is ever necessary to the sincerity of Justice and Repentace in the Person, as well as necessary necessitate præcepti: And the act of restitution primarily, and of satisfaction secondarily is necessary, if there be time and power: I say necessary always as a duty, necessitate præcepti: and necessary necessitate medii, as a condition of pardon and salvation, so far as they are necessary acts of true repentance and obedience, as other duties are: that is, as a true penitent may in a temptation omit Prayer or Church-communion, but yet hath always such an habitual inclination to it, as will bring him to it, when he hath opportunity by deliberation to come to himself; and as in the same manner a true penitent may omit a work of charity or mercy; but not give over such works: Even so is it in this case of restitution and satisfaction.

Quest. 3. Quest. 3. Who are they that are bound to make restitution or satisfaction?

Answ. 1. Every one that possesseth and retaineth that which is indeed another Mans, and hath acquired no just title to it himself, must make restitution. Yet so, that if he came lawfully by it (as by finding, buying or the like) he is answerable for it only upon the terms in those Titles before expressed. But if he came unlawfully by it, he must restore it with all damages. The cases of borrowers and finders are before resolved. He that keepeth a borrowed thing longer than his day, must return it with the damage. He that loseth a thing which he borrowed, must make satisfaction, unless in cases where the contract, or common usage, or the quality of the thing, excuseth him. 2. He that either by force, or fraud, or negligence, or any injustice doth wrong to another, is bound to make him a just compensation, according to the proportion of the guilt and the loss compared together: For neither of them is to be considered alone. If a Servant neglect his Masters business, and it fall out that no loss followeth it; he is bound to confess his faults, but not to pay for a loss which might have been, but was not. And if a Servant by some such small and ordinary negligence, which the best Servants are guilty of, should bring an exceeding great damage upon his Master (as by dropping asleep to burn his House, or by an hours delay which seemed not very dangerous, to frustrate some great business) he is obliged to Reparation as well as to Confession; but not to make good all that is lost, but according to the proportion of his fault. But he that by oppression, or robbery taketh that which is anothers, or bringeth any damage to him; or by slander, false witness, or any such unrighteous means, is bound to make a fuller satisfaction. And those that concur in the injury, being accessaries, are bound to satisfie. As. 1. Those that teach or command another to do it. 2. Those who send a Commission, or authorize another to do it. 3. Those who counsel, exhort or perswade another to do it. 4. Who by consenting are the causes of it. 5. Those who co-operate, and assist in the injury knowingly and voluntarily. 6. Those who hinder it not when they could and were obliged to do it. 7. Those who make the act their own, by owning it, or consenting afterward. 1. Those who will not reveal it afterwards, that the injured party may recover his own, when they are obliged to reveal it. But a secret consent which no way furthered the injury, obligeth none to restitution, but only to repentance: because it did no wrong to another, but it was a sin against God.

Quest. 4. To whom must restitution or satisfaction be made. Quest. 4.

Answ. 1. To the true Owner, if he be living and to be found, and it can be done. 2. If that cannot be, then to his heirs, who are the possessors of that which was his. 3. If that cannot be, then to God himself; that is, to the poor, or unto pious uses: For the possessor is no true Owner of it: And therefore where no other Owner is found, he must discharge himself so of it, to the use of the highest and principal Owner, as may be most agreeable to his will and interest. Heb. 5, 23. 1 Sam. 12. 3. Neh. 5. 11 Numb. 5. 8. Luke 19.

Quest. 5. What Restitution should he make who hath dishonoured his Governours or Parents? Quest. 5.

Answ. He is bound to do all that he can to repair their honour, by suitable means: and to confess his fault, and crave their pardon.

Quest. 6. How must satisfaction be made for slanders, lies, and infaming of others? Quest. 6.

Answ. By confessing the sin, and unsaying what was said, not only as openly as it was spoken; but as far as it is since carried on by others, and as far as the reparation of your Neighbours good name requireth, if you are able.

Quest. 7. What reparation must they make who have tempted others to sin, and hurt their Souls? Quest. 7.

Answ. 1. They must do all that is in their power to recover them from sin, and to do good to their Souls: They must go to them, and confess and lament the sin, and tell them the evil and danger of it, and incessantly strive to bring them to repentance. 2. They must make reparation to the Lord of Souls, by doing all the good they can to others, that they may help more than they have hurt.

Quest. 8. What reparation can or must be made for Murder or Man-slaughter? Quest. 8.

Answ. By Murder there is a manifold damage inferred: 1. God is deprived of the life of his Servant. 2. The Person is deprived of his life. 3. The King is deprived of a Subject. 4. The Common-wealth is deprived of a Member. 5. The friends and kindred of the dead are deprived of a friend. 6. And perhaps also damnified in their Estates. All these damages cannot be fully repaired by the offender: but all must be done that can be done. 1. Of God he can only beg pardon, upon the account of the satisfactory Sacrifice of Christ; expressing true repentance as followeth. 2. To the Person murdered no reparation can be made. 3. To the King and Common-wealth, he must patiently yield up his life, if they they sentence him to death, and without repining, and think it not too dear to become a warning to others, that they sin not as he did. 4. To disconsolate friends no reparation can be made; but pardon must be asked. 5. The damage of heirs, kindred and creditor, must be repaired by the offenders Estate, as far as he is able.

Quest. 9. Quest. 9. Is a Murderer bound to offer himself to death, before he is apprehended?

Answ. Yes, in some cases: As, 1. When it is necessary to save another that is falsly accused of the crime. 2. Or when the interest of the Common-wealth requireth it. But otherwise, not; Because an offender may lawfully accept of Mercy, and nature teacheth him to desire his own preservation: But if the question be, When doth the interest of the Common-wealth require it? I think, much ofter than it is done: As the common-interest requireth that Murderers be put to death, when apprehended: So it requireth that they may not frequently and easily be hid, or escape by secresie or flight: For then it would embolden others to murder: whereas when few escape, it will more effectually deter Men: If therefore any Murderers conscience, shall constrain him in true repentance, voluntarily to come forth and confess his sin, and yield up himself to Justice, and exhort others to take heed of sinning as he did, I cannot say that he did any more than his duty in so doing: And indeed I think that it is ordinarily a duty, and that ordinarily the interest of the Common-wealth requireth it; though in some cases it may be otherwise. The Execution of the Laws against Murder, is so necessary to preserve Mens lives, that I do not think that self-preservation alone, will allow Men to defeat the Common-wealth of so necessary a means of preserving the lives of many, to save the life of one, who hath no right to his own life, as having forfeited it. If to shift away other murderers from the hand of Justice be a sin, I cannot see but that it is so ordinarily to do it for ones self: Only I think that if a true penitent Person have just cause to think that he may do the Common-wealth more service by his life than by his death, that then he may conceal his crime or fly; But otherwise not.

Quest. 10. Quest. 10. Is a Murderer bound to do execution on himself, if the Magistrate upon his confession do not?

Answ. No: because it is the Magistrate who is the appointed Judge of the publick interest, and what is necessary to its reparation; and hath power in certain cases to pardon: And though a murderer may not ordinarily strive to defeat Gods Laws, and the Common-wealth, yet he may accept of mercy when it is offered him.

Quest. 11. Quest. 11. What satisfaction is to be made by a Fornicator or Adulterer?

Answ. Chastity cannot be restored, nor corrupted honour repaired. But, 1. If it was a sin by mutual consent, the party that you sinned with, must by all importunity be sollicited to repentance; and the sin must be confessed, and pardon craved for tempting them to sin. 2. Where it can be done without a greater evil than the benefit will amount to, the Fornicators ought to joyn in Marriage. Exodus 22. 16. 3. Where that cannot be, the Man is to put the Woman into as good a case for outward livelyhood, as she would have been in, if she had not been corrupted by him; by allowing her a proportionable dowry; Exod. 22. 17. and the Parents injury to be recompensed, Deut. 22. 28, 29. 3. The Childs maintenance also is to be provided for, by the Fornicator. That is, 1. If the Man by fraud or sollicitation induced the Woman to the sin, he is obliged to all as aforesaid. 2. If they sinned by mutual forwardness and consent, then they must joyntly bear the burden: yet so that the Man must bear the greater part; because he is supposed to be the stronger and wiser to have resisted the temptation. 3. If the Woman importuned the Man, she must bear the more; but yet he is responsible to Parents and others for their damages, and in part to the Woman her self, because he was the stronger Vessel, and should have been more constant: And volenti non fit injuria, is a rule that hath some exceptions.

Quest. 12. Quest. 12. In what case is a Man excused from restitution and satisfaction?

Answ. 1. He that is utterly disabled cannot restore or satisfie. 2. He that is equally damnified by the person to whom he should restore, is excused in point of real equity and conscience, so be it that the reasons of external order and policy oblige him not: For though it may be his sin (of which he is to repent) that he hath equally injured the other, yet it requireth confession rather than restitution or satisfaction, unless he may also expect satisfaction from the other. Therefore if you owe a Man an hundred pound, and he owe you as much and will not pay you, you are not bound to pay him, unless for external order sake, and the Law of the Land. 3. If the Debt or Injury be forgiven, the Person is discharged. 4. If Nature or Common-custom do warrant a Man to believe that no restitution or satisfaction is expected, or that the injury is forgiven, though it be not mentioned, it will excuse him from restitution or satisfaction: As if Children or Friends have taken some trifle, which they may presume the kindness of a Parent or Friend will pass over, though it be not justifiable.

Quest. 13. Quest. 13. What if the Restitution will cost the restorer far more than the thing is worth?

Answ. He is obliged to make Satisfaction, instead of Restitution.

Quest. 14. Quest. 14. What if the confessing of the fault may engage him that I must restore to, so that he will turn it to my infamy or ruine?

Answ. You may then conceal the Person, and send him satisfaction by another hand: or you may also conceal the wrong it self, and cause satisfaction to to be made him, as by gift, or other way of payment.

Tit. 2. Directions about Restitution and Satisfaction.

Dir. 1. Direct. 1. Foresee the trouble of restitution, and prevent it: Take heed of Covetousness, which would draw you into such a snare: What a perplexed case are some Men in, who have injured others so far as that all they have will scarce make them due satisfaction? Especially publick oppressors who injure whole Nations, Countries or Communities: and unjust Judges, who have done more wrong perhaps in one day or week than all their Estates are worth: and unjust Lawyers who plead against a righteous cause: and false witnesses, who contribute to the wrong: and unjust Juries, or any such like: Also oppressing Landlords; and Soldiers that take Mens Goods by violence; and deceitful Tradesmen, who live by injuries. In how sad a case are all these Men?

Dir. 2. Direct. 2. Do nothing which is doubtful, if you can avoid it, lest it should put you upon the trouble of restitution. As in case of any doubtful way of Usury or other gain, consider, that if it should hereafter appear to you to be unlawful, and so you be obliged to restitution (though you thought it lawful at the taking of it) what a snare then would you be in? when all that use must be repayed? And so in other cases.

Dir. 3. Direct. 3. When really you are bound to restitution or satisfaction, stick not at the Cost or Suffering be it never so great, but be sure to deal faithfully with God and Conscience. Else you will keep a thorn in your hearts, which will smart and fester till it be out: And the ease of your Consciences, will bear the charge of your costliest restitution.

Dir. 4. Direct. 4. If you be not able in your life time to make restitution, leave it in your wills as a debt upon your Estates; but never take it for your own.

Dir. 5. Direct. 5. If you are otherwise unable to satisfie, offer your your labour as a Servant to him to whom you are indebted; if at least by your service you can make him a compensation.

Dir. 6. Direct. 6. If you are that way unable also, beg of your friends, to help you, that Charity may enable you to pay the debt.

Dir. 7. Direct. 7. But if you have no means at all of satisfying, confess the injury and crave forgiveness, and cast your self on the mercy of him whom you have injured.

CHAP. XXXIII.

Cases and Directions about our obtaining Pardon from God.

Tit. 1. Cases of Conscience about obtaining pardon of Sin from God.

Quest. 1. Quest. 1. IS there pardon to be had for all sin without exception, or not?

Answ. 1. There is no pardon procured nor offered, for the final non-performance of the conditions of pardon; that is, for final impenitency, unbelief and ungodliness. 2. There is no pardon for any sin, without the conditions of pardon, that is, without true faith and repentance, which is our conversion from sin to God. 3. And if there be any sin which certainly excludeth true Repentance to the last, it excludeth pardon also: which is commonly taken to be the case of Blasphemy against the Holy Ghost: of which I have written at large in my Treatise against Infidelity.

But, 1. All sin, except the final non-performance of the conditions of pardon, is already conditionally pardoned in the Gospel; that is, If the sinner will repent and believe. No sin is excepted from pardon to penitent believers.

2. And all sin is actually pardoned to a true penitent believer.

Quest. 2. Quest. 2. What if a Man do frequently commit the same heinous sin? may he be pardoned!

Answ. Whilst he frequently committeth it, (being a mortal sin) he doth not truly repent of it: And while he is impenitent he is unpardoned: But if he be truly penitent, his heart being habitually and actually turned from the sin, it will be forgiven him: but not till he thus forsake it.

Quest. 3. Quest. 3. Is the day of grace and pardon ever past in this life?

Some speak too ignorantly and dangerously about the day of grace being past in this life.

Answ. The day of grace and pardon to the penitent, is never past in this life: There is no day or hour in which a true penitent Person is not pardoned; or in which the impenitent is not conditionally pardoned, that is, if he will truly repent and believe in Christ: And as for the day of true penitence, it is not past to the impenitent; for it never yet came, that is, They never truly repented. But there is a time, with some provoking, forsaken, Sinners when God who was wont to call them to repentance by outward Preaching and inward motions, will call and move them so no more, but leave them more quietly in the blindness and hardness of their hearts.

Quest. 4. Quest. 4. May we be certain of pardon of sin in this life?

Answ. Yes: every Man that understandeth the Covenant of Grace, may be certain of pardon, so far as he is certain of the sincerity of his faith and repentance, and no further: And if a Man could not be sure of that, the consolatory promises of pardon would be in a sort in vain: And we could not tell how to believe and repent, if we cannot tell when we truly do it.

Quest. 5. Quest. 5. Can any Man pardon sins against God? and how far?

Answ. Pardon is the remitting of a punishment. So far as Man is to punish sinners against God, so far they may pardon, that is, remit that punishment (Whether they do well in so doing? is another question.) Magistrates are to execute corporal Penalties upon Subjects for many sins against God: and they may pardon accordingly. The Pastors of the Church, who are its Guides as to publick Church-communion, may remove offenders from the said Communion, and they may absolve them when they are penitent, and they may (rightfully or wrongfully) remit the penalty which they may inflict. 2. The Pastors of the Church may as Gods Officers, declare the conditional general pardon, which is contained in the Covenant of grace; and that with particular application to the sinner, for the comforting of his mind: q. d. [Having examined your Repentance, I declare to you as the Minister of Christ, that if it be as you express it, without dissembling or mistake, your Repentance is sincere, and your sin is pardoned.] 3. On the same terms a Pastor may as the Minister or Messenger of Christ, deliver this same conditional pardon contained in the Covenant of Grace, as sealed by the Sacraments of Baptism and the Lords-supper; which is an act of Investiture: q. d. [I do as the Minister of Christ, hereby seal and deliver to you in his name, the pardon of all your sins through his blood; supposing your professed faith and repentance be sincere: otherwise it is void and of no such effect.] But this is, 1. But a conditional pardon, though with particular application. 2. And it is but a Ministerial act of Delivery or Investiture, and not the act of the Donor by himself; nor the gift of the first Title: So that it is no whit proper to say, that the Minister pardoneth you; but that the Minister bringeth, and delivereth you the pardon, and sealeth it in his Masters name; or that Christ doth pardon you, and send it you by his Minister. As it is utterly improper to say, that the Kings Messenger pardoneth a Traytor, because he bringeth him a pardon from the King. And though (if we agree of this sense) the Controversie remaining will be but de nomine, yet is it not of small moment; when abused words do tend to abuse the Peoples understandings; he that saith, I forgive your sins; doth teach the people to take him for a God, whatever he meaneth in himself; and blasphemous words will not be sufficiently excused, by saying that you have not a blaspheming sense. So that a Pastor may 1. Declare Christs pardon; 2. And seal and deliver it conditionally in Christs name. But he cannot pardon the internal punishments in this life, nor the eternal punishments of the next. 3. But the punishments of Excommunication he may pardon, who must execute them.

Quest. 6. Doth God forgive sin before it be committed (or justifie the sinner from it?) Quest. 6.

Answ. No, No: for it is a contradiction to forgive that which is not, or to remit a penalty which is not due: But he will indeed justifie the person, not by Christs righteousness, but by his own innocency in tantum, so far as he is no sinner: He that hath not committed a sin, needeth no pardon of it, nor any righteousness but his innocency, to justifie him against the false accusation of doing that which he never did. God doth prepare the sacrifice and remedy before upon the fore-sight of the sin: And he hath made an universal act of pardon before hand; which shall become an actual pardon to him who penitently accepteth it: And he is purposed in himself to pardon all whom he will pardon: so that he hath the decretive nolle punire before. But none of this is proper pardon or the justification of a sinner, in the Gospel sense, as shall be further shewed.

Quest. 7. Is an Elect Person pardoned and justified, before Faith and Repentance? Quest. 7.

Answ. (Laying aside the case of Infants, which dependeth on the faith of others) the former answer will serve for this question.

Quest. 8. Is pardon or justification perfect before death? Quest. 8.

Answ. 1. De re: 1. The pardon which you have this year, extendeth not to the sins which you commit the next year, or hour; but there must be a renewed act of pardon for renewed sins; though not a new Gospel, or covenant or act of Oblivion to do it: But the same Gospel-Covenant, doth morally perform a new act of pardon, according to the Redeemers mind and will. 2. The pardon which we have now, is but constitutive & in jure, and but virtual as to sentential Justification: But the sentence of the Judge is a more perfective act: or if any think that God doth now sentence us just before the Angels in any Cœlestial Court, yet that at Judgment will be a more full perfective act. 3. The executive pardon which we have now, which is opposite to actual punishing, is not perfect, till the day of Judgment: Because all the punishment is not removed, till the last Enemy, Death, be overcome, and the body be raised from the Earth. 2. And now the Controversie de nomine, whether it be proper to call our present justification or pardon perfect is easily decided from what is said de re.

Quest. 9. Quest. 9. Is our pardon perfect as to all the sins that are past?

Answ. 1. As to the number of sins pardoned, it is: For all are pardoned. 2. As to the species of the act, and the plenary effect, it is not. For, 1. All the punishment is not removed. 2. The final absolving sentence is to come. 3. The pardon which we have is as to its continuance, but conditional: And the tenour of the Covenant would cease the pardon even of all sins past, if the sinners faith and repentance should cease: I speak not de eventu whether ever any do fall away, but of the tenour of the Covenant; which may prevent falling away. Now a pardon which hath much yet to be done, as the condition of its continuance, is not so perfect, as it will be when all those things are performed.

Quest. 10. Quest. 10. May Pardon or Justification be reversed or lost?

Answ. Whether God will eventually permit his true Servants, to fall so far as to be unjustified, is a Controversie which I have written of in a fitter place. 2. But quoad robur peccatoris, it is alas, too easie to fall away, and be unjustified. 3. And as to the tenour of the Covenant, it continueth the promise and threatnings conditionally, and supposing the sinner defectible, doth threaten damnation to them that are now justified, if they should not persevere but apostatize, Col. 1. 33. Rom. 11. 22. John 15. 9.

Quest. 11. Quest. 11. Is the pardon of my own sins to be believed fide divina? And is it the meaning of that Article of the Creed, I believe the pardon of my sins?

Answ. I am to believe fide divina, that Christ hath purchased, and enacted a conditional pardon, which is universal, and therefore extendeth to my sins as well as to other Mens: And that he commandeth his Ministers to offer me this, and therein to offer me the actual pardon of all my sins, to be mine if I truly repent and believe: And that if I do so, my sins are actually pardoned. And I am obliged accordingly to believe in Christ, and take him for my Saviour, for the pardon of my sins. But this is all the meaning of the Creed and Scripture, and all that is of Divine Belief. 2. But that I am actually pardoned, is not of Divine Faith, but only on supposition that I first believe: which Scripture telleth not, whether I do or not. In strict sense I must first believe in Christ for pardon: And next in a larger sense I must believe that I am pardoned: that is, I must so conclude by an act of reason, one of the premises being de fide, and the other of internal self-knowledge.

Quest. 12. Quest. 12. May a Man trust in his own faith or repentance for his pardon and justification, in any kind?

Answ. Words must be used with respect to the understanding of the hearers: And perilous expressions must be avoided lest they deceive Men. But de re, 1. You must not trust to your faith or repentance, to do that which is proper to God, or to Christ, or to the Gospel, or for any more than their own part, which Christ hath assigned them. 2. You must trust to your faith and repentance for that which is truly their own part. And should you not trust them at all, you must needs dispair, or trust presumptuously to you know what. For Christ will not be instead of faith or repentance to you.

Quest. 13. What are the several causes and conditions of pardon? Quest. 13.

Answ. 1. God the Father is the principal efficient, giving us Christ, and pardon with and through him. 2. Christs Person by his Sacrifice and Merits is the Meritorious Cause. 2. The Gospel Covenant or Promise is the Instrumental Cause, or Gods pardoning Act or Grant. 4. Repentance is the Condition sine qua non, directly gratia finis, in respect to God, to whom we must turn. 5. Faith in Christ is the Condition sine qua non, directly gratia medii principalis, in respect to the Mediator who is thereby received, 6. The Holy Ghost worketh us to these conditions.

Tit. 2. Directions for obtaining Pardon from God.

Direct. 1. Understand well the Office of Jesus Christ as our Redeemer, and what it is that he hath done for sinners, and what he undertaketh further to do. For if you know not Christs Office and undertaking, you will either be ignorant of your true remedy, or will deceive your selves by a presumptuous trust, that he will do that which is contrary to his Office and Will. Dir. 1.

Direct. 2. Understand well the tenour of the Covenant of Grace; for there it is that you must know, what Christ will give, and to whom, and on what terms? Dir. 2.

Direct. 3. Understand well the nature of true faith and repentance; or else you can neither tell how to obtain pardon, nor to judge of it. Dir. 3.

Direct. 4. Absolutely give up your selves to Christ, in all the Offices of a Mediator, Priest, Prophet and King: And think not to be justified by one act or part of Christianity, by alone believing in Christ as a sacrifice for sin. To be a true Believer, and to be a true Christian is all one: And is the faith in Christ which is the condition of justification and salvation. Study the Baptismal Covenant; for the believing in God the Father, Son and Holy Ghost, there meant, is the true faith, which is the condition of our pardon. Dir. 4.

Direct. 5. Be sure that your Repentance contain in it a Desire to be perfectly holy and free from all sin, and a Resolution against all known and wilful sinning, and particularly that you would not commit the same sins, if you had again the same temptations (supposing that we speak not of such infirmities as good Men live in: Which yet you must heartily desire to forsake.) Dir. 5.

Direct. 6. Pray earnestly and believingly for pardon through Christ: Even for the continuance of your former pardon, and for renewed pardon for renewed sins, for Prayer is Gods appointed means, and included in faith and repentance which are the summary conditions. Dir. 6.

Direct. 7. Set all right between you and your neighbours; by forgiving others, and being reconciled to them, and confessing your injuries against them, and making them restitution and satisfaction: For this also is included in your repentance, and expresly made the condition of your pardon. Dir. 7.

Direct. 8. Despise not the Sacramental delivery of pardon, by the Ministers of Christ: For this belongeth to the full investiture and possession of the benefit: Nor yet the spiritual consolation of a skilful faithful Pastor, nor publick absolution upon publick repentance, if you should fall under the need of such a remedy. Dir. 8.

Direct. 9. Sin no more: I mean, Resolvedly break off all that wilful sin of which you do repent: For repentings, and purposes, and promises of a new and holy life, which are uneffectual, will never prove the pardon of your sins: But shew your Repentance to be deceitful. Dir. 9.

Direct. 10. Set your selves faithfully to the use of all those holy means, which God hath appointed for the overcoming of your sins; and to that life of Holiness, Righteous- Dir. 10.

teousness, Love and Sobriety, which is contrary to them. Otherwise your Repentance is fraudulent and insufficient: These means and no less than all these, must be used by him, that will make sure of the pardon of his sins from God: And he that thinketh all these too much, must look for pardon some other way, than from the Mercy of God, or the Grace of Christ: For Gods pardon is not to be had upon any other terms, than those of Gods appointment. He that will make new Conditions of his own, must pardon himself if he can on those conditions. For God will not to be tyed to the Laws of sinners.

CHAP. XXXIV.

Cases and Directions about Self-judging.

Tit. 1. Cases of Conscience about Self-judging.

BEcause I have said so much of this subject in the third Part of my Saints Rest, and in a Treatise of Self-acquaintance, and in my Directions for Peace of Conscience, and before in this Book, I shall be here the briefer in it.

Quest. 1. Quest. 1. What are the uses and reasons of self-judging, which should move us to it?

Answ. In the three foresaid Treatises I have opened them at large. In a word, without it, we shall be strangers to our selves; we can have no well grounded comfort, no true repentance and humiliation, no just estimation of Christ and Grace, no just observance of the motions of Gods Spirit, no true application of the Promises or Threatnings of the Scripture, yea, we shall pervert them all to our own destruction; no true understanding of the Providence of God, in prosperity or adversity; no just acquaintance with our duty: A Man that knoweth not himself, can know neither God nor any thing aright, nor do any thing aright; he can neither live reasonably, honestly, safely nor comfortably, nor suffer or die with solid Peace.

Quest. 2. Quest. 2. What should ignorant Persons do, whose natural capacity will not reach to so high a work, as to try and judge themselves in matters so sublime?

Answ. 1. There is no one who hath reason and parts sufficient to love God, and hate sin, and live a holy life, and believe in Christ, but he hath reason and parts sufficient to know (by the use of just means) whether he do these things indeed or not. 2. He that cannot reach assurance must take up with the lower degrees of comfort, of which I shall speak in the Directions.

Quest. 3. Quest. 3. How far may a weak Christian take the Judgment of others, whether his Pastor or judicious acquaintance, about his Justification and Sincerity?

Answ. 1. No Mans judgment must be taken as infallible about the sincerity of another; nor must it be so far rested on, as to neglect your fullest search your self: And for the matter of fact, what you have done, or what is in you, no Man can be so well acquainted with it as your selves. 2. But in judging whether those acts of Grace which you describe, be such as God hath promised Salvation to, and in directing you in your self-judging, and in conjecturing at your sincerity by your expressions and your lives, a faithful Friend or Pastor may do that, which may much support you, and relieve you against inordinate doubts and fears, and shew you that your sincerity is very probable. Especially if you are assured that you tell him nothing but the truth your selves; and if he be one that is acquainted with you and your life, and hath known you in temptations, and one that is skilful in the matters of God and conscience, and one that is truly judicious, experienced and faithful, and is not byassed by interest or affection; and especially when he is not singular in his judgment, but the generality of judicious Persons who know you, are of the same mind: In this case you may take much comfort in his Judgment of your Justification, though it cannot give you any proper certainty, nor is to be absolutely rested in.

Tit. 2. Directions for Self-judging as to our Actions.

Dir. 1. Direct. 1. LEt watchfulness over your hearts and lives be your continual work. Never grow careless or neglective of your selves: Keep your hearts with all diligence: As an unfaithful Servant may deceive you, if you look after him but now and then; so may a deceitful heart. Let it be continually under your eye.

Obj. Then I must neglect my Calling, and do nothing else.

Answ. It need not be any hinderance to you at all. As every Man that followeth his Trade and Labour, doth still take heed that he do all things right, and every Traveller taketh heed of falling, and he that eateth taketh heed of poysoning or choking himself, without any hinderance, but to the furtherance of that which he is about. So is it with a Christian about his heart: Vigilant heedfulness must never be laid by, whatever you are doing.

Direct. 2. Live in the light as much as is possible, I mean under a judicious faithful Pastor, and amongst understanding exemplary Christians: For they will be still acquainting you with what you should be and do; and your errors will be easily detected, and in the light you are not so like to be deceived. Dir. 2.

Direct. 3. Discourage not those that would admonish or reprove you, nor neglect not their opinion of you: No not the railings of an enemy: For they may tell you that in anger (much more in fidelity) which it may concern you much to hear, and think of, and may give you some light in judging of your selves. Dir. 3.

Direct. 4. If you have so happy an opportunity, engage some faithful bosom friend to watch over you, and tell you plainly of all that they see amiss in you: But deal not so hypocritically as to do this in the general, and then be angry when he performeth his trust, and discourage him by your pride and impatience. Dir. 4.

Direct. 5. Put your selves in anothers case, and be impartial: When you cannot easily see the faults of others, enquire then whether your own be not as visible, if you were as ready to observe and aggravate them. And surely none more concern you than your own, nor should be so odious and grievous to you; nor are so, if you are truly penitent. Dir. 5.

Direct. 6. Understand your natural temper and inclination, and suspect those sins which you are naturally most inclined to, and there keep up the strictest watch. Dir. 6.

Direct. 7. Understand what temptations your Place, and Calling, and Relations, and Company do most subject you to: and there be most suspicious of your selves. Dir. 7.

Direct. 8. Mark your selves well in the hour of temptation: For then it is that the vices will appear, which before lay covered and unknown. Dir. 8.

Direct. 9. Suspect your selves most heedfully of the most common and most dangerous sins: Especially Unbelief and want of Love to God, and a secret preferring of earthly hopes before the hopes of the Life to come: And selfishness, and pride, and sensual pleasing of the fleshly appetite and fancy: These are the most common, radical and most mortal damning sins. Dir. 9.

Direct. 10. Take certain times to call your selves to a special strict account: As 1. At your preparation for the Lords Day at the end of every Week: 2. In your preparation for the Sacrament of Christs Body and Blood. 3. And before a Day of Humiliation. 4. In a time of sickness or other affliction. 5. Yea, every night review the actions of the foregoing day. He that useth to call his conscience seriously to account, is likest to keep his accounts in order, and to be ready to give them up to Christ. Dir. 10.

Direct. 11. Make not light of any sin which you discover in your self-examination: But humble your selves for it before the Lord, and be affected according to its importance, both in its guilt and evil signification. Dir. 11.

Direct. 12. And let the end of all be the renewed exercise of faith and thankfulness, and resolutions for better obedience hereafter. That you may see more of the need and use of a Saviour, and may thankfully magnifie that Grace which doth abound where sin abounded; and may walk the more watchfully and holily for the time to come. Dir. 12.

Tit. 3. Directions for Self-judging as to our Estates, to know whether we are in a regenerate or justified state, or not.

Direct. 1. IF you would so judge of the state of your souls, as not to be deceived, come not to the tryal with an over-confident prejudice or conceit of your own condition, either as good or bad. He that is already so prepossessed as to resolve what to judge before he tryeth, doth make his tryal, but a means to confirm him in his conceit. Dir. 1.

Direct. 2. Let not self-love, partiality, or pride on the one side, or fear on the other side, pervert your judgment in the tryal, and hinder you from the discerning of the truth. Some Men cannot see the clearest evidences of their unsanctified hearts, because Self-love will give them leave to believe nothing of themselves which is bad or sad. They will believe that which is good and pleasant, be it never so evidently false. As if a Thief could be saved from the Gallows, by a strong conceit that he is a true Man: Or the conceit that one is learned would make him learned: Others through timerousness can believe nothing that is good or comfortable of themselves: Like a Man on the top of a Steeple, who though he know that he standeth fast and safe, yet trembleth when he looketh down and can scarce believe his own understanding. Silence all the Objections of an over-timerous mind, and it will doubt and tremble still. Dir. 2.

Direct. 3. Surprize not your selves on the sudden and unprepared, with the question, whether you are justified or not; but set about it as the most serious business of your life. A great and difficult question must have a well studied answer, and not be answered hastily and rashly. If one should meet you in the Street, and demand some great and long account of you, you would desire him to stay, till you review your memorials, or have time to cast it up. Take some appointed time to do this, when you have no intruding thoughts to hinder you, and think not that it must be resolved easily or quickly upon the first enquiry, but by the most sober and judicious consideration, and patient attendance till it be done. Dir. 3.

Direct. 4. Understand the tenour of the Covenant of Grace, which is the Law that you must judge of your estates by: For if Dir.

you

you miſtake that, you will err in the concluſion. He is an unfit Judge, who is ignorant of the Law.

Dir. 5. Direct. 5. Miſtake not the nature of true faith in Chriſt. Thoſe that think it is a believing that they are actually pardoned, and ſhall be ſaved, do ſome of them preſume, or believe it when it is falſe, and ſome of them deſpair, becauſe they cannot believe it. And thoſe that think that faith is ſuch a recumbency on Chriſt as always quieteth the mind, do think they have no faith, when they have no ſuch quietneſs: And thoſe that think it is only the reſting on the blood of Chriſt for pardon, do take up with that which is no true faith: But he that knoweth that faith in Chriſt, is nothing elſe but Chriſtianity, or conſenting to the Chriſtian Covenant, may know that he Conſenteth, even when he findeth much timerouſneſs and trouble, and taketh not up with a deceitful faith.

Dir. 6. Direct. 6. Remember in your ſelf judging, that the Will is the Man, and what you truly would be that you are, in the ſenſe of the Covenrnt of Grace.

Dir. 7. Direct. 7. But remember alſo that your Endeavours muſt prove the truth of your Deſires. and that idle wiſhes are not the denominating acts of the Will.

Dir. 8. Direct. 8. Alſo your ſucceſſes muſt be the proof of the ſincerity of your Endeavours: For ſuch ſtriving againſt ſin as endeth in yielding to it, and not in victory, is no proof of the uprightneſs of your hearts.

Dir. 9. Direct. 9. Mark what you are in the day of tryal: For at other times it is more eaſie to be deceived: And record what you then diſcover in your ſelf: What a man is in tryal, that he is indeed.

Dir. 10. Direct. 10. Eſpecially try your ſelves in the great point of forſaking all for Chriſt, and for the hopes of the fruition of God in Glory: Know once whether God or the Creature can do more with you, and whether Heaven or Earth be dearer to you, and moſt eſteemed and practically preferred, and tnen you may judge infallibly of your ſtate.

Dir. 11. Direct. 11. Remember that in melancholy and weakneſs of underſtanding, you are not fit for the caſting up of ſo great accounts; but muſt take up with the remembrance of former diſcoveries, and with the judgment of the judicious, and be patient till a fitter ſeaſon, before you can expect, to ſee in your ſelves the clear evidence of your ſtate.

Dir. 12. Direct. 12. Neither forget what former diſcoveries you have made, nor yet wholly reſt in them, without renewing your ſelf-examination. They that have found their ſincerity, and think that the next time they are in doubt, they ſhould fetch no comfort from what is paſt, do deprieve themſelves of much of the means of their peace. And thoſe that truſt all to the former diſcoveries, of their good eſtate, do proceed upon unſafe and negligent principles; and will find that ſuch ſlothful and venturous courſes, will not ſerve turn.

Dir. 13. Direct. 13. Judge not of your ſelves by that which is unuſual and extrordinary with you, but by the tenour and drift of your hearts and lives: A bad man may ſeem good, in ſome good mood; and a good man may ſeem bad in ſome extraordinary fall: To judge of a bad man by his beſt hours, and of a good man by his worſt, is the way to be deceived in them both.

Dir. 14. Direct. 14. Look not unequally at the good or evil that is in you; but conſider them both impartially as they are. If you obſerve all the good only that is in you, and overlook the bad; or ſearch after nothing but your faults and overlook your graces; neither of theſe ways will bring you to true acquaintance with your ſelves.

Dir. 15. Direct. 15. Look not ſo much either at what you ſhould be, or at what others are, as to forget what you are your ſelves. Some look ſo much at the glory of that full perfection which they want, as that their preſent grace ſeemeth nothing to them; like a candle to one that hath been gazing on the Sun. And ſome look ſo much at the debauchery of the worſt, that they think their leſſer wickedneſs to be holineſs.

Dir. 16. Direct. 16. Suffer not your minds to wander in confuſion, when you ſet your ſelves to ſo great a work: But keep it cloſe to the matter in hand, and drive it on till it have come to ſome ſatisfaction and concluſion.

Dir. 17. Direct. 17. If you are not able by meditation to do it of your ſelves, get the help of ſome able Friend or Paſtor; and do it in a way of conference with him: For conference will hold your own thoughts to their task; and your Paſtor may guide them, and tell you in what order to proceed, and confute your miſtakes, beſides confirming you by his judgment of your caſe.

Dir. 18. Direct. 18. If you cannot have ſuch help at hand, write down the ſigns by which you judge either well or ill of your ſelf; and ſend them to ſome judicious Divine for his judgment and counſel thereupon.

Dir. 19. Direct. 19. Expect not that your aſſurance ſhould be perfect in this life: For till all grace be perfect, that cannot be perfect. Unjuſt expectations diſappointed are the cauſe of much diſquietment.

Dir. 20. Direct. 20. Diſtinguiſh between the knowledge of your juſtification, and the comfort of it. Many a one may ſee and be convinced that he is ſincere, and yet have little comfort in it, through a ſad or diſtempered ſtate of mind or body, and unpreparedneſs for joy; or through ſome expectations of enthuſiaſtick comforts.

Dir. 21. Direct. 21. Exerciſe grace when ever you would ſee it: Idle habits are not perceived. Believe and repent till you feel that you do believe and repent, and Love God till you feel that you love him.

Dir. 22. Direct. 22. Labour to increaſe your grace if you would be ſure of it. For a little grace is hardly perceived: when ſtrong and great degrees do eaſily manifeſt themſelves.

Dir. 23. Direct. 23. Record what ſure diſcoveries you have made of your eſtate, upon the beſt enquiry, that it may ſtand you in ſtead at a time of further need: For though it will not warrant you to ſearch no more, it will be very uſeful to you, in your after doubtings.

Dir. 24. Direct. 24. What you cannot do at one time, follow on again and again till you have finiſhed. A buſineſs of that conſequence is not to be laid down through wearineſs or diſcouragement. Happy is he that in all his life, hath got aſſurance of life everlaſting.

Dir. 25. Direct. 25. Let all our diſcoveries lead you up to further duty: If you find any cauſe of doubt, let it quicken you to diligence in removing it: If you find ſincerity, turn it into joyful thanks to your Regenerater: And ſtop not in the bare diſcovery of your preſent ſtate, as if you had no more to do.

Dir. 26. Direct. 26. Conclude not worſe of the effects of a diſcovery of your bad condition, than there is cauſe. Remember that if you ſhould find that you are unjuſtified, it followeth not that you muſt continue ſo: you ſearch not after your diſeaſe or miſery as uncurable, but as one that hath a ſufficient remedy at hand, even brought to your doors, and cometh a begging for your acceptance, and is freely offered and urged on you: And therefore if you find that you are unregenerate, thank God that hath ſhewed you your caſe; for if you had not ſeen it, you had periſhed in it: And preſently give up your ſelves to God in Jeſus Chriſt; and then you may boldly judge better of your ſelves; It is not for deſpair, but for recovery that you are called to try and judge. Nay if you do but find it too hard a queſtion for you, whether you have all this while been ſincere or not, turn from it, and reſolvedly give up your ſelves to God by Chriſt, and place your hopes in the life to come, and turn from this deceitful world and fleſh, and then the caſe will be plain for the time to come: If you doubt of your former repentance, Repent now and put it out of doubt from this time forward

Dir. 27. Direct. 27. When you cannot at the preſent reach aſſurance, undervalue not a true probability or hope of your ſincerity: And ſtill adhere to univerſal Grace, which is the foundation of your ſpecial grace and comfort, I mean, 1. The infinite Goodneſs of God, and his mercifulneſs to Man, 2. The ſufficiency of Jeſus Chriſt our Mediator, 3. The univerſal gift of Pardon and Salvation, which is conditionally made to all men in the Goſpel is glad tydings even to thoſe that are unconverted. Rejoyce in this univerſal mercy which is offered you, and that you are not as the Devils ſhut up in deſpair: And much more rejoice if you have any probability that you are truly penitent and juſtified by faith: Let this ſupport you till you can ſee more.

Dir. 28. Direct. 28. Spend much more time in doing your duty, than in trying your eſtate: Be not ſo much in asking, How ſhall I know that I ſhall be ſaved? As in asking, What ſhall I do to be ſaved? Study the duty of this day of your viſitation, and ſet your ſelves to it with all your might; Seek firſt the things that are above, and mortifie your fleſhly luſts; Give up your ſelves to a Holy Heavenly Life, and do all the good that you are able in the World: Seek after God as revealed in and by our Redeemer: And in thus doing, 1. Grace will become more notable and diſcernable. 2. Conſcience will be leſs accuſing and condemning, and will eaſilier believe the reconciledneſs of God. 3. You may be ſure that ſuch labour ſhall never be loſt; and in well doing you may truſt your ſouls with God. 4. Thus thoſe that are not able in an argumentative way to try their ſtate to any full ſatisfaction, may get that comfort by feeling and experience, which others get by ratiocination: For the very exerciſe of Love to God and man, and of a Heavenly mind, and holy life, hath a ſenſible pleaſure in it ſelf, and delighteth the perſon who is ſo employed; As if a man were to take the comfort of his Learning or Wiſdom, one way is by the diſcerning his learning and wiſdom, and thence inferring his own felicity: But another way is by exerciſing that learning and wiſdom which he hath, in reading and meditating on ſome excellent Books, and making diſcoveries of ſome myſterious excellencies in Arts and Sciences; which delight him more by the very acting, than a bare concluſion of his own Learning in the general, would do: What delight had the inventers of the Sea Chart and Magnetick Traction, and of Printing, and of Guns, in their Inventions? What pleaſure had Galileus in his Teleſcopes in finding out the inequalities and ſhady parts of the Moon, the Medicean Planets, the adjuncts of Saturn, the changes of Venus, the Stars of the Via lactea, &c. Even ſo a ſerious holy perſon, hath more ſenſible pleaſures in the right exerciſe of Faith and Love, and Holineſs, in Prayer and Meditation, and converſe with God and with the Heavenly hoſts, than the bare diſcerning of ſincerity can afford. Therefore though it be a great important duty, to examine our ſelves, and judge our ſelves before God judge us, and keep cloſe acquaintance with our own hearts and affairs, yet is it the addition of the daily practice of a Heavenly life, which muſt be our chiefeſt buſineſs and delight. And he that is faithful in them both, ſhall know by experience the excellencies of Chriſtianity and Holineſs and in his way on Earth, have both a proſpect of Heaven, and a foretaſte of the Everlaſting Reſt and Pleaſures.
